Argum. 3. The celebration of the Paſſeover was a manifeſt type and figure of the celebration of the Euchariſt: but in the Paſſeover there was a ſacrifice: Ergo, there muſt be a ſacrifice in the Euchariſt: cap. 7. This argument is alſo urged by them of Doway: p. 190.

Firſt, Bellarmine proveth the propoſition out of S. Paul: Chriſt our Paſſeover is ſacrificed for us, therefore let us keep the feaſt with the unlevened bread of ſynceritie, &c. 1 Cor. 5 8. Chriſt was not crucified or ſacrificed upon the croſſe to be eaten; he is then ſacrificed to be our Paſſeover, where hee is to bee eaten; and that is no where, but in the Euchariſt: the Euchariſt therefore is the true Paſſeover. Bellarm. ibid.

1 Cor. 5. 8.

Contra. Firſt, S. Paul ſpeaketh not in that place of any Sacramentall eating of Chriſt, but of the reformation of the whole life to be led in ſincerity and truth, as before verſ. 7. Purge out the old leaven: He applyeth this type to his preſent purpoſe, that the Corinthians ſhould expell from amongſt them the inceſtuous perſon: wherefore in this ſenſe Chriſt our Paſſeover was ſacrificed upon the croſſe, ſpiritually to be eaten by faith, and to be followed by vertuous imitation all our life. Secondly, though we grant, that the Paſchall Lambe and the Euchariſt may have ſome reſemblances together, as Bellarmine noteth ſome, as in the ceremonie of eating commanded in them both, alſo in the end, that is to be a remembrance of their corporall deliverance, this of our ſpirituall; and likewiſe, as that was eaten with ſowre hearbs, ſo the other muſt bee received with true ſorrow and repentance: yet was not the Paſſeover appointed directly to be a type of the Euchariſt, but of Chriſt crucified, as the Evangeliſt expoundeth, Iohn 19. 37. theſe things were done, That the Scripture ſhould be fulfilled, Not a bone of him ſhould be broken: if then the type of the Paſſeover were fulfilled in Chriſt crucified upon the Croſſe, we are not to ſeeke for any other accompliſhment of it. Thirdly, if it ſhould bee granted, that the Paſſeover was a type of the Euchariſt, it followeth not, that it ſhould bee in every thing a type, which he muſt prove, or elſe his argument concludeth not: for they differ in many things. 1 The Paſſeover was of fleſh with blood; the Euchariſt is of bread without blood. 2 The Paſſeover was done in remembrance of their deliverance; the Maſſe, they ſay, is a propitiatory ſacrifice, and not a commemoration only. 3 The Paſſeover was eaten at Even, Maſſe is ſaid in the morning. 4 Nothing was left of the Paſſeover, untill the morning; but their conſecrated hoaſt is reſerved. 5 The Paſſeover was eaten in their houſes; Maſſe is ſaid in their Churches: if in theſe and other points the Paſch and Euchariſt differ, why not alſo in this? that the one was a ſacrifice, and ſo is not the other.

Iohn 19. 37.

Secondly, whereas Bellarmine proveth the aſſumption, that the Paſſeover was a ſacrifice, for ſo S. Marke ſaith, Marke 14. 12. When they ſacrificed the Paſſeover: We anſwer, firſt, it was not properly a ſacrifice, becauſe ſacrifices were made by fire, and were brought to the Prieſt, and ſome part laid upon the Altar, as we may reade in the lawes of ſacrifices, Levit. 1, 2, 3. Chap. But the Paſſeover was eaten in the houſe, where neither Prieſt, nor Altar was neceſſary, and the whole Lambe was eaten, nothing reſerved. Secondly, notwithſtanding it was called a ſacrifice, being a religious act, in reſpect of other ſacrifices of ſheep and bullocks, which the Paſſeover was uſed to be ſolemnized with, Deut. 16. 2.

Deut 16. 2.

Argum. 4. The Apoſtle ſaith, Heb. 13. 10. Wee have an Altar, whereof they have no power to eat, which ſerve in the Tabernacle. Ergo, we have not only a common table to eat meere bread upon, but a very Altar in the proper ſenſe to ſacrifice Chriſts body upon. Rhemiſt. annot. Heb. 13. ſect. 6.

Heb. 13. 10.

Anſwer. First, the Apoſtle ſpeaketh of the Sacrifice of Chriſts death, whereof wee are made partakers by faith: which they can reape no benefit by, which remaine in the ceremoniall obſervations of Leviticall ſacrifices. Chriſt therefore is our Prieſt, Altar and Sacrifice: for verſ. 12. the Apoſtle maketh mention of the ſufferings of Chriſt: hee meaneth not then the Common table, which is unproperly called an Altar, or any materiall Altar beſide, but the Altar only of Chriſts death. Secondly, if whereſoever in Scripture this word (Altar) is read, it muſt be taken for a proper materiall Altar, wee ſhall have alſo a materiall Altar in heaven, Apocal. 8. 3. which I am ſure they will not grant. Thirdly, the Apoſtle ſaith, We have an Altar; which is but one, whereas Popiſh Altars are many: it cannot therefore be underſtood of ſuch Altars. Fourthly Bellarmine better adviſed than the Rhemiſts, refuſeth to urge this place, becauſe divers of their owne writers underſtand it of Chriſts croſſe: cap. 14. Irenæus ſaith: Altare noſtrum eſt in cœlis: Our Altar is in heaven, adverſ. hæreſ. c. 34.

Ierem. 33. 18.

Argum. 5. Ierem. 33. 18. Neither ſhall the Prieſts and Levites want a man before me, to offer burnt offrings and meat offrings, and to doe ſacrifice continually: theſe are the Prieſts of the new Teſtament, which doe truly offer ſacrifice in the Maſſe: for it cannot be underſtood of the Miniſters of the Goſpell, becauſe theſe are called Prieſts, and are ſaid to offer burnt offrings: neither of Chriſt, for the Prophet ſpeaketh of many Levites and Prieſts: Bellarm. cap. 9.

Revel. 1. 6.
Rom. 12. 1.

Anſwer. First, this text may very well bee referred to Chriſt, for verſ. 17. the Prophet had ſaid, David ſhall not want a man to ſit upon the throne, &c. This is underſtood of the ſpirituall kingdome of Chriſt, and ſo may the other of his ſpirituall Prieſthood: for the Prophet ſpeaketh of one ſingular man, Non interibit vir, there ſhall not bee wanting a man to offer Sacrifice, &c. Secondly, but wee rather underſtand this place of the Miniſters of the Goſpell, as it may bee expounded by the like place, Iſay 59. 21. I will make this my covenant with them, &c. My words ſhall not depart out of thy mouth, nor the mouth of thy ſeed, nor out of the mouth of the ſeed of thy ſeed, &c. And in the new Teſtament we reade both of ſpirituall Prieſts. Revel. 1. 6. He hath made us Kings and Prieſts to God his Father; and of ſpirituall burnt offerings and ſacrifices, Rom. 12. 1. I beſeech you give up your bodies a living ſacrifice. Thirdly, but this place cannot be underſtood of any ſuch externall Prieſthood for theſe reaſons: firſt, as is the kingdome of David here promiſed, ſo is the Prieſthood: but the firſt is ſpirituall: Ergo, the ſecond. Secondly, as they are called Prieſts, ſo alſo Levites: but their Prieſts offering according to Melchiſedecks order, as they ſay, cannot bee of the Leviticall order. Thirdly, neither have they any, holocauſtomata, burnt offerings in their Maſſe ſacrifice: therefore the literall ſenſe of this place ſerveth not their turne.

Dan. 8. 11. 12. 11.
Dan. 11. 37.

Argum. 6. Daniel 8. 11. & 12. 11. The Prophet fore-telleth how Antichriſt ſhall take away the daily ſacrifice, which is the ſacrifice of the Maſſe: it cannot be underſtood of Antiochus, who worſhipped the God of his Fathers: but Antichriſt ſhall not regard the God of his Fathers, Daniel 11. 37. Bellarm. ibid.

Dan. 8. 14.
1 Macch. 1. 12.
1 Macch. 4. 52.
Dan. 12. 11.
1 Macch. 1. 30.
2 Macch. 11. 33.

Anſwer. First, theſe propheſies were hiſtorically fulfilled in Antiochus Epiphanes: how that the Temple ſhould by him be firſt prophaned, by the ſpace of two thouſand three hundred dayes, Dan. 8. 14. that is ſix yeeres, three moneths and an halfe: for this profanation began in the yeere 142. or thereabout, as may be gathered, 1 Macchab. 1. 11. for he turned againe to ſpoile the Temple in the 143. yeere, ibid. v. 21. So that he began the yeere before: and the Temple was purged in the 148. yeere, the 25. day of the moneth Caſleu. 1 Macc. 4. 52. Againe, the finall deſolation and defiling of the Temple with the ceaſing of the daily ſacrifice was to endure 1290. dayes, Dan. 12. 11. that is, three yeeres, ſeven moneths and odde dayes: ſo it came to paſſe, for in the 125. yeere Antiochus ſent againe to defile the Sanctuary, and to aboliſh the ſacrifice, 1 Macchab. 1. 30. and in the moneth of Caſleu he accompliſhed his purpoſe, and ſet up the abomination of deſolation upon the Altar, verſ. 57. and in the 128. yeere, in the eleventh moneth Zanticus, the King by his letters patents reſtoreth religion againe, 2 Macchab, 11. 33. So that theſe propheſies being ſo evidently fulfilled in Antiochus, cannot bee applied to any other. And concerning the objection of Antiochus idolatrie, though hee openly profeſſed the worſhip of the idols of the heathen; yet in truth, as by his profanenes appeareth, he had no conſcience of any religion at all.

Dan. 8. 14.
1 Macch. 1. 57.
Matth. 24. 15.

Secondly, the place cannot be underſtood, as Bellarmine would enforce. First, their Antichriſt ſhall reigne but three yeeres and an halfe, as they ſay; but the Prophet ſpeaketh of ſix yeeres and three moneths, Dan. 8. 14. Secondly, if their Maſſe ſhall be aboliſhed by Antichriſt, wherein they ſay the eternity of Chriſts Prieſthood conſiſteth; then ſhould Chriſts Prieſthood alſo bee at an end. Thirdly, the abomination of deſolation ſpoken of by Daniel, is interpreted to be the ceaſing of the Jewiſh ſaſacrifice, both in the ſtory of the Macchabees, which is Scripture with them, 1 Macch. 1. 57. and by our Saviour, Matth. 24. 15.

Malach. 1. 11.

Argum. 7. Malach. 1. 11. From the riſing of the Sun, unto the going downe of the ſame, my name is great amongſt the Gentiles, and in every place incenſe ſhall be offered to my name, and a pure offering: This place Bellarmine proveth by theſe reaſons to be underſtood of the ſacrifice of the Maſſe; and not of any ſpirituall ſacrifice. c. 10.

Firſt, by the ſignification of the Hebrew word מנחה, Mincha, that ſignifieth an offering or oblation, which properly betokeneth a kinde of externall ſacrifice, which was made of oyle and incenſe.

Contra. Firſt, if this bee the proper ſignification of the word, it cannot meane the ſacrifice of the Maſſe, which conſiſteth in the formes of bread and wine, not of oyle and incenſe. Secondly, this word doth not onely ſignifie a Sacrifice given unto God, but a gift or preſent offered to man, Gen. 33. 11. So Iacob calleth his preſent ſent to his brother: wherfore the Jeſuits collection faileth him. Thirdly, Pſalm. 141. 2. The Prophet ſaying, Let the lifting up of my hands be an evening ſacrifice, uſeth the ſame word: Where wee ſee that the ſpirituall ſacrifice of Prayer is called by this name, or reſembled to it: and ſo is the Prophet to be underſtood in this place. Gen. 33. 11. Pſal. 141. 2.

Secondly, the Prophet calleth it a pure offering, which cannot be polluted: but prayers may bee polluted; the ſacrifice of the Maſſe onely cannot by the evilneſſe of the Miniſter be defiled. Bellarm. ibid.

Contra. Firſt, though our prayers as they proceed from us have many imperfections, yet they are accepted through Chriſt, 1 Pet. 2. Offer up ſpirituall ſacrifices acceptable to God through Chriſt: in which ſenſe the Apoſtle ſpeaketh, I will that every where men lift up pure hands, &c. 1 Tim. 2. as here the Prophet ſaith, In every place a pure offering ſhall be offered. Secondly, we have ſpirituall ſacrifices and exerciſes of religion, which cannot be by the evilneſſe of the Miniſter defiled: as the preaching of the word, which though it be under a pretenſe preached, is profitable, Philip. 1. 18. The Euchariſt alſo which is a ſacrifice of thankſgiving is effectuall to a worthie receiver, though by the hands of an unworthie Miniſter. Thirdly, your Maſſe is ſo far from being a pure offering, that it is the moſt impure and uncleane ſink, that ever was brought into the Church: and your ſelves alſo require to the conſecration thereof, the intention of the Miniſter, which if it be not devout and religious, the ſacrifice faileth: ſo that an impure intention alſo defileth your Maſſe. 1 Pet. 2. 5. 1 Tim. 2. 8. Philip. 1. 18.

Thirdly, the Prophet ſpeaketh of ſuch an offering as was not in uſe amongſt the Jewes: ſaying, I will not accept an offering at your hands, verſ. 10. but prayer was in uſe amongſt them: Ergo. Againe, the Prophet ſpeaking directly to the Prieſts, verſ. 6. Thus ſaith the Lord of hoſtes unto you, O yee Prieſts, &c. and reproving their ſacrifices, bringeth in a new kind of offering, which a new kind of Prieſts ſhould offer unto God: but ſpirituall ſacrifices are common to all Chriſtians: Ergo, Bellarmin. ibid. Malach. 1. 6. 10.

Contra. Firſt, the Prophet ſpeaketh onely in this place of the abuſe and corruption of their externall ſacrifices, in that they offered the lame and blind, verſ. 8. and chap. 3. 8. Yee have ſpoiled me in tithes and offerings: and he ſaith he will accept no ſuch offerings at their hands: but he will bee ſpiritually worſhipped among the Gentiles. To the ſame effect he ſaith, Pſalm. 50. 9. 14. I will take no bullock out of thy houſe. &c. but offer unto God praiſe: theſe ſacrifices of prayer and thankſgiving, though they were not altogether unknowne to the Jewes, yet they were not ſo frequented and uſed, not relied upon, as the other externall ſacrifices. Malach. 3. 8. Pſal. 50. 9.

Secondly, the Prophet doth not onely reprove the hypocriſie of the Prieſts, but the deceit alſo of all the people, verſ. 14. Curſed bee the deceiver, that hath in his flocke a male and ſacrificeth a corrupt thing: ſo that he propheſieth of the generall ſacrifices of all Chriſtians, not of any peculiar ſort, as S. Peter beſt of all expoundeth this place, 1 Pet. 2. 5. Ye are made a ſpirituall houſe, an holy Prieſthood, to offer up ſpirituall ſacrifices, &c. Malach. 1. 14. 1 Pet. 2. 5.

Argum. 8. Iohn 4. 23. The houre commeth and now is, when the true worſhippers ſhall worſhip my father in ſpirit and truth: By worſhip and adoration here is underſtood the ſolemne worſhipping of God by ſacrifice. Firſt, the ſcope of the place giveth it: for the womans queſtion was of the worſhip of God by ſacrifice, which was tied to Jeruſalem; You ſay that Jeruſalem is the place, where men ought to worſhip, verſ. 20. but it was lawfull for the Jewes to offer ſpirituall ſacrifice in any place: therefore Chriſts anſwer muſt bee of ſuch a ſacrifice which ſhould not be tied to a place, as the Jewes ſacrifice was. Iohn 4. 23.

Secondly, The houre commeth, &c. Chriſt ſpeaketh of a new adoration which was not before: but the time was alwaies to offer ſpirituall ſacrifices of prayer, &c.

Thirdly, Chriſt ſpeaketh of publike and ſolemne adoration, which ſhould anſwer to the publike ſacrifices of the Jewes: but praier and thankſgiving may be done privatly: Ergo, he meaneth the ſolemne ſacrifice of the Maſſe, Bellarm. cap. 11.

Anſwer. To the firſt reaſon. Firſt, though it were lawfull for the Jewes to pray otherwhere; yet prayer made in the Temple, had a more eſpeciall promiſe: and therefore it was called, The houſe of prayer, Iſay. 56. 7. and Salomon prayeth to God at the dedication of the Temple, That whoſoever upon any occaſion ſhould come and make his prayer in that houſe, God would heare in heaven, even if hee were a ſtranger, 1 Reg. 8. 42. Wherefore Chriſts anſwer may include alſo the worſhip of God by prayer. Secondly, it followeth not, the worſhip of God by Sacrifice was tied to a place, or they ſacrificed onely at Jeruſalem: Ergo, now they ſhall ſacrifice every where: for by this reaſon, the ſacrifices of beaſts might continue ſtill with an enlargement onely of the place: but Chriſt oppoſeth the ſpirituall worſhip of God, not limited to any place, againſt their carnall ſacrifices appendant to the Temple. Iſay 56. 7. 1 King 8. 42.

Secondly, though the time was alwaies for ſpirituall Sacrifice, yet neither was it ſo generall under the law, as under Chriſt, whoſe name is called upon amongſt the Gentiles: And againe, they were notwithſtanding bound to the externall ſacrificies, which are now aboliſhed by this ſpirituall worſhip:

which ſeemeth in theſe two reſpects to be a new worſhip. Secondly, Chriſt ſaith, The houre now is: but as yet the Euchariſt was not inſtituted, nor the ſacrifice thereof, and therefore at this time God could not be ſo worſhipped by ſacrifice.

Thirdly, the argument followeth not, prayer may be uſed privately: Ergo, it cannot be the publike ſervice of God: For the houſe of God is called the houſe of prayer: therefore this publike ſpirituall worſhip doth anſwer to the ſolemne carnall ſacrifices. Secondly, neither is your Maſſe alway publike, neither in reſpect of the place, ſeeing you allow it to be ſaid in houſes; nor in reſpect of the perſons, for the Prieſt and his boy may diſpatch a Maſſe.

Laſtly, that this place cannot bee underſtood of the ſacrifice of the Maſſe, it is thus evident. Firſt, Chriſt ſaith, The houre is; but at that time the ſacrifice was not inſtituted. Secondly, this worſhip is in ſpirit, as God is a ſpirit: but in the Maſſe they urge a carnall, not a ſpirituall preſence. Thirdly, God muſt be worſhipped in truth: but the carnall preſence is a monſtrous lie. Fourthly, The Father requireth ſuch to worſhip him, verſ. 23. But God no where in Scripture teacheth any ſuch carnall preſence, nor requireth us ſo to worſhip him.

Argum. 9. That which Chriſt did in his laſt Supper, he commanded his Apoſtles to do the ſame: but Chriſt offered himſelfe up to his Father, under the forme of bread and wine: Ergo, Chriſt is offered up in the ſacrifice of the Maſſe: Bellarm.cap.12. That Chriſt offered up himſelfe in his laſt Supper, he thus laboureth to prove.

Firſt, S. Luke ſaith, This is my bodie which is given, and my blood which is ſhed, not (which ſhall be:) ſo that in that very inſtant Chriſts bodie and blood was offered unto God, and (for you) ſaith Chriſt, Matth.26.28. (not unto you:) and (for many) as S. Matthew hath, Matth. 26. 28. ſo that it was a ſacrifice then offered to God, not for them there preſent, to whom it was miniſtred, but for many beſide.

Anſwer. First, the Scripture doth often ſpeak of that which is to come, as preſent, becauſe it is as Iohn 5.24. certaine before God, as alreadie done: as Iohn 5. 24. He that beleeveth, hath everlaſting life, Iohn 10. Iohn 10.15. Exod.12.11. 15. I lay downe my life for my ſheepe: yet Chriſt had not yet laid it downe: likewiſe Exod 12. 11. It is the Lords Paſſe-over, for I will paſſe, &c. the Lord had not yet paſſed over; yet he ſaith, It is the Lords Paſſe-over, in the preſent tenſe: So, My bodie is given, and my blood is ſhed: that is, it ſhall be as ſurely given, and ſhed, as if it were now done: ſo alſo their owne authors: as Cajetane ſaith, that the Evangeliſts uſed the preſent tenſe, becauſe the ſhedding of Chriſts blood and his paſſion were at hand, commen. in 1 Cor. 11. and Salmeron upon the ſame place to the ſame purpoſe, &c.

Secondly, I doe urge Bellarmines owne words againſt himſelfe, who elſe-where ſaith, that theſe words, Which is ſhed for you for the remiſſion of ſinnes, doe not ſignifie, that his blood is drunke for remiſſion of ſinnes, but that it was ſhed for remiſſion of ſinnes, Et hoc per Euchariſtiam repræſentari: And that this is repreſented in the Euchariſt, lib. 4. de Euchariſt.c. 19. reſponſ.ad argum. 3. If Chriſts blood be not then drunke for remiſſion of ſinnes in the Sacrament, as hee confeſſeth, it is not ſhed; for the ſame thing is drunke, that is ſhed: and if the ſhedding of Chriſts blood bee onely repreſented in the Euchariſt, then it is not there ſhed. Thirdly, it is falſe that Chriſts bodie was not given to the Apoſtles in the Euchariſt, for the text is plaine, Hee gave the bread unto them, and likewiſe the cup, and whereas Matthew ſaith, for many, it is evident that hee ſpeaketh of Chriſts death, for the Sacrament is onely profitable to them that receive it. Fourthly, if theſe words, which is given for you, are ſo materiall to prove the Maſſe a ſacrifice, why are they left out in the Canon of the Maſſe?

Secondly, S. Paul ſaith, Which is broken for you, ſignifying Chriſts bodie, for bread is not broken for them, but to them: and S. Luke ſaith, This cup (is the new teſtament in my blood) which is ſhed for you (which cup) for ſo is the conſtruction in the Greeke: ſo that the blood, as it was in the cup, was then ſhed. Bellarm.ibid.

Anſwer. Firſt, S. Paul maketh evidently againſt them, for Chriſts bodie is not broken in the Sa- 1 Cor.10.16. crament, but bread: the bread which we breake, 1 Cor. 10. 16. ſo that theſe words, which is broken for you, muſt bee referred to the breaking and tormenting of Chriſts bodie upon the Croſſe. Secondly, Vide Bez.in hunc locum. S. Luke muſt be expounded by S. Matthew, who ſaith, τὸ αἷμα ἐκχυνόμενον, The blood which is ſhed, not τὸ ποτήριον ἐκχυνόμενον, The cup which is ſhed, as S. Luke hath it: which ſome think ſhould be read ἐκχυνομένῳ, in the dative caſe, as S. Baſil readeth to anſwer unto blood, in the ſame caſe: And againe, in proper ſpeaking, the cup cannot bee ſaid to be ſhed, and blood in the cup wee acknowledge none to be ſhed but wine only.

Thirdly, Bellarmine thus reaſoneth againſt the Lutherans, who hold a carnall preſence, the blood and fleſh of Chriſt are verily in the Euchariſt, as the blood and fleſh, occiſi & mortui corporis, of a ſlain and dead body, and therefore they are conſecrated apart: the bodie by it ſelfe, and the blood by it ſelfe: Chriſt is then preſent as a ſacrifice killed and ſlaine: Bellarm. ibid.

Anſwer. Let the Lutherans here anſwer for themſelves; this argument doth not force us at all, holding no ſuch carnall preſence: I will onely note the notable contradiction of Bellarmine, who elſewhere affirmeth that the bodie of Chriſt is not in the Euchariſt, as exanimum, exangue, mortuum: as without life, without blood, or dead, becauſe Chriſt now dieth no more: lib.4.de Eucha.c.21.argum. 3. But here hee ſaith, it is preſent as a ſlaine and dead bodie: therefore his owne anſwer ſhall ſuffice for his owne objection.

Argum. 8. Saint Paul ſaith, 1 Cor. 10. 16. *The cup of bleſſing, which we bleſſe, is it not the communion of the blood of Christ? &c. verſ.*18. They which eat of the ſacrifices are partakers of the altar. &c. verſe 20. Thoſe things which the Gentiles ſacrifice, they ſacrifice to devils, verſ. 21. Ye cannot drinke the cup of the Lord, and the cup of devils, you cannot bee partakers of the Lords table, and the table of devils. From this place Bellarmine reaſoneth thus, Such as was the table of devills, ſuch is the Lords table: but that table was the altar of idols, Ergo, the Lords table is an altar. Againe, as the Jewes did eat the ſacrifices, and ſo were made partakers of the altar, and the Gentiles by eating of idolatrous ſacrifices were partakers of devils: ſo wee by eating the fleſh and drinking the blood of Chriſt, are made partakers of him, c. 14.

Verſ.18.20.

Anſwer. Firſt, the table of devils was not the altar of the Idols, but they had beſide their altars, tables in the Idoll temples, whereat they did feaſt. 1 Corinth. 8. 10. If any man ſee thee ſit at table in the Idols temple: therefore as their tables were not their altars, no more is the Lords table an Altar. Secondly, the argument followeth not, they were made partakers of the externall altar by eating externall Sacrifices: Ergo, ſo are wee made partakers of Chriſt by an externall Sacrifice: for as their altar was externall, ſo their ſacrifices were externall; but as our altar is ſpirituall, as the Apoſtle ſaith, *We have an altar, Heb.*13.10. ſo our eating and drinking muſt be ſpirituall: and the Apoſtle himſelfe putteth this difference, verſe 18. Behold Iſrael which is after the fleſh: ſignifying, that they were delighted in fleſhie ſacrifices, becauſe they were after the fleſh; but we being after the ſpirit, muſt be exerciſed in ſpirituall ſacrifices. Thirdly, that we are effectually joyned unto Chriſt, by a ſpirituall conjunction, though wee carnally eat him not, the Apoſtle ſheweth, Hee that is joyned to the Lord is one ſpirit, 1 Cor. 6. 17. And if while the materiall altar ſtood, they might bee partakers of it in heart and deſire, though they did not eat of the ſacrifices, as David being abſent from the temple ſaith, My ſoule fainteth for the Courts of the Lord, &c. even for thine altars, Pſalm. 84. 1. 3. much more may we now in ſpirit and by faith, communicate with the true altar and ſacrifice: And ſo the Apoſtle ſaith, Heb. 13. 10. Wee have an altar, whereof they have no authoritie to eat, which ſerve in the Tabernacle: Ergo, they which ſerve not in the Tabernacle, but have left the ceremonies of the law, may eat thereof, partly by faith and ſpiritually, partly in the Euchariſt ſacramentally, which Chriſt hath commanded to be done in remembrance of him. And thus farre of their arguments for the ſacrifice of the Maſſe.

The Proteſtants.

THat there are ſpirituall ſacrifices remaining yet unto Chriſtians in the exerciſe of religion, we doe verily beleeve, being ſo taught by the Scriptures: ſuch are the ſacrifices of praiſe and thankſgiving, *Heb.*13.15. The ſacrifice of almes and diſtribution, *verſ.*16. the mortifying alſo of the fleſh, is a kind of crucifying, and ſo a ſpirituall ſacrifice, Galath. 6. 14. And in this ſenſe we denie not, but that the Sacrament may be called a ſacrifice, that is, a ſpirituall oblation of praiſe and thankſgiving: but that there is a proper and externall ſacrifice, as in the law of Goats and Bullocks, upon the croſſe of the bodie of Chriſt; ſo in the Euchariſt, of the ſame bodie and fleſh of Chriſt: wee doe hold it for a great blaſphemie, and hereſie.

Argum. 1. The very fleſh, and true naturall bodie of Chriſt, is not, as we have ſhewed before at large, in ſuch carnall and corporall manner preſent in the Sacrament: therefore it cannot in the Sacrament be ſacrificed, and offered up.

Argum. 2. This ſacrificing of the bodie and blood of Chriſt is contrarie to Chriſts inſtitution: for he ſaith onely, Take ye, eat ye, drinke ye: he ſaith not, ſacrifice ye, or lift up, and make an oblation of my bodie. Neither doe thoſe words, hoc facite, doe this, give them any power to ſacrifice, as Bellarmine would have it: for to whom he ſaith, Eat ye, drinke ye, to the ſame alſo he ſaith, Doe ye. Wherefore if doe ye, bee as much as ſacrifice yee: all Chriſtians, for whom it is lawfull to eat and drinke the Sacrament, by this rule have authoritie to ſacrifice. Againe, the words are, Doe this in remembrance. We remember things abſent, and which are already done and paſt: if then there be a preſent ſacrifice in the Sacrament of the bodie of Chriſt, it cannot properly be ſaid to be a memorie of his ſacrifice.

Argum. 3. The Apoſtle ſaith, that Chriſt need not to offer himſelfe often, but that he hath done once in the end of the world, Heb. 9. 26. And with one offering, hath he made perfect for ever them that are ſanctified, 10. 14. Ergo, Chriſt cannot be ſacrificed againe: for that were to make his ſacrifice upon the croſſe imperfect.

Bellarmine anſwereth: that the Apoſtle here ſpeaketh of the bloodie and painfull ſacrifice of Chriſt upon the croſſe, which was ſufficient once to be done: but this taketh not away the unbloodie ſacrifice, which is but an iteration of the former, whereby the fruit and efficacie of that firſt oblation is applied unto us, Bellarm. lib. 1. de miſſ. cap. 25.

Anſwer. Firſt, the Apoſtle excludeth all manner iterations of the ſacrifice of Chriſt; for otherwiſe, if Chriſt ſhould now be often howſoever ſacrificed, the difference would not hold betweene the ſacrifices of the law which were often done, and the ſacrifice of Chriſt, which was once to be performed: as the Apoſtle ſetteth it downe, Heb. 10. 11. Every Prieſt appeareth daily miniſtring, and oft times offereth one manner offering, &c. but this man after he had offered one ſacrifice for ſin, &c. and their ſacrifices were alſo in a manner iterations and commemorations of the ſacrifice of Chriſt. The Apoſtle then thus reaſoneth; They had many iterative and commemorative ſacrifices of Chriſts death: Ergo, wee have not now. Secondly, that is but a fooliſh and falſe diſtinction of the bloodie and unbloodie ſacriſice, as they underſtand it: for there can bee no proper unbloodie ſacrifice of Chriſt, neither could he be offered up otherwiſe than by dying, Heb.9.27,28. Therefore he is not offered up in the Sacrament, becauſe now hee dieth not. Thirdly, neither need we invent a new kind of ſacrifice, for the application of Chriſts death: for to that end Chriſt hath appointed the preaching of the word, and inſtituted the Sacraments; whereby the death of Chriſt, with all the benefits thereof, are moſt fruitfully applied unto us, Galath. 3. 1. S. Paul ſaith, that Chriſt was deſcribed in their ſight, and as crucified: that is, by the preaching of the Goſpell, 1 Cor. 11. 26. As oft as ye eat this bread, and drink this cup, ye ſhew the Lords death till he come.

Bellarmine replieth: firſt, though the death of Chriſt be applied by the preaching of the word and adminiſtration of the Sacrament of the Lords Supper: yet it may bee applied alſo by the ſacrifice of the Maſſe, which in this behalfe is not ſuperfluous, no more than Baptiſme is, by which alſo Chriſts death is applied. Secondly, that the Apoſtle ſpeaketh of the bloodie and painfull ſacrifice of Chriſt upon the croſſe, it appeareth by the words following, verſ.26. for then he muſt have often ſuffered, &c. Bellar.c.25.reſp.ad argum.2.

Contra. Firſt, Baptiſme is not ſuperfluous in applying and ſhewing forth Chriſts death, though to the ſame end wee have the preaching of the word and the other Sacrament, becauſe they are all of Chriſts inſtitution, ſo is not the Maſſe. Againe, they applie Chriſts death diverſly; Baptiſme as the ſeale of our regeneration; the Euchariſt as a ſigne of our ſpirituall feeding upon Chriſts death; the word preached as a worker of our faith: ſo that none of them are ſuperfluous. But the Maſſe is ſuperfluous, becauſe the remembrance and ſhewing forth of Chriſts death is as fully ſet forth in the Sacrament without a ſacrifice.

Secondly, the words of the Apoſtle make againſt their unbloodie ſacrifice: for thus the Apoſtle reaſoneth, Heb.9.25. Not that he ſhould offer himſelfe often, &c. for then muſt he have often ſuffered. Chriſt cannot be offered without ſuffering, but he ſuffered but once: Ergo, he was offered but once.

Luk.22.20.

Argum. 4. Chriſt ſaith, This cup is the new Teſtament in my blood: we reaſon then thus; The ſame thing cannot be both the Teſtament, and the matter teſtamentarie, or which is teſtified; the Euchariſt is the publike inſtrument or teſtament; the ſacrifice of Chriſts death is the thing teſtified: Ergo, the Euchariſt is not the ſacrifice: for a ſacrifice is a thing from us offered to God, a teſtament is a ſeale of Gods promiſe exhibited to us.

Exod.24.8.

Bellarmine anſwereth, the Euchariſt in divers reſpects is both a ſacrifice and a teſtament: a ſacrifice, as it is offered unto God; a teſtament, as it is an authenticall inſtrument of Gods promiſe toward us. So we read, Exod. 24. This is the blood of the teſtament, that God hath appointed. Like as then the ſacrifices of the law were ſignes of Gods covenant and teſtament, and yet true ſacrifices notwithſtanding: ſo the blood of Chriſt is both the ſacrifice, and the ſigne of Gods teſtament and covenant, cap. 24. reſponſ. ad argum. 1.

Heb.9.18.

Contra. Firſt, wee grant, that a teſtament cannot bee ratified without blood, as the Apoſtle ſaith, Heb.9.18. and therfore the blood of the ſacrifice is alſo a ratification of the teſtament: but there the ſacrifice was one thing, the teſtament another: the ſacrifices of the law were of beaſts, the teſtament had relation to Chriſt: So then the ſacrifices of the law were true ſacrifices, and ſignes alſo of the ſacrifice of Chriſt, which was divers from the ſacrifices of the law: But here they make the ſame thing to be both the ſacrifice it ſelfe, and the ratification or teſtament of the ſame ſacrifice, which cannot be.

Secondly, there cannot be ſuch divers reſpects, as to make the ſame thing, at the ſame inſtant, to be both the ſigne, and the thing ſignified: and therefore in the Euchariſt there cannot be both the ſacrifice it ſelfe, and the teſtification thereof, what reſpects ſoever can be pretended: for this were to make a thing abſent, preſent at the ſame time: for that which is ſacrificed muſt be preſent, that which is repreſented and remembred is abſent: Chriſts bodie therefore being repreſented in the Euchariſt, cannot be then and there ſacrificed.

Argum. 5. If there were remaining ſtill in the Church a reall externall ſacrifice, then there muſt bee alſo a reall and externall prieſthood, and ſo a multitude of ſacrificing prieſts: but this is contrarie to the Scripture, that maketh this difference betweene the law and the Goſpell, that then there were many Prieſts, becauſe they were not ſuffered to endure by reaſon of death: but now Chriſt hath an everlaſting Prieſthood, Heb. 7. 23, 24. So that hee is the onely Prieſt of the Goſpell: Ergo, there being no more ſacrificing Prieſts, there is no ſuch ſacrifice: for it were a derogation to the everlaſting Prieſthood of Chriſt, to ordaine other Prieſts beſide.

Bellarmine anſwereth: firſt, it is no more derogation to Chriſts Prieſthood to conſtitute inferiour Prieſts under him, than it is to his paſtorall and propheticall office to ſubſtitute inferiour paſtors, miniſters and teachers under him: and as Aaron while hee lived had other inferiour Prieſts, and a King hath under him inferiour officers and governours; ſo Chriſt may have other inferiour Prieſts, as his vicars and miniſters. Secondly, the Apoſtle excludeth onely the multiplying of Prieſts in the ſame degree and power, not of inferiour Prieſts, that are but Chriſts miniſters, Bellarm. cap.25. reſp. ad argum. 1.

Epheſ.4.11.

Contra. Firſt, the compariſon betweene inferiour ſacrificing Prieſts, and inferiour preaching paſtors under Chriſt, is not like. 1. Becauſe Chriſt hath given commandement for the one, Goe teach and baptize, Math. 28. but no where are they commanded againe to ſacrifice Chriſt. And Epheſ. 4. 11. the Apoſtle ſheweth, that the calling of the Apoſtles, Prophets, Evangeliſts, Paſtors, Teachers, are given of Chriſt: but Prieſts are not there named. 2 Becauſe there is neceſſitie of preaching, Woe is me if I preach not, 1 Cor. 9. 16. and ſuch offices are neceſſarie in the Church, for the gathering together of the Saints, for the work of the miniſterie, and the edification of the bodie of Chriſt, Epheſ. 4. 12. but of ſacrifices and ſacrificing Prieſts there is no neceſſitie at all. 3 There is in Paſtors and Teachers but an outward ſervice and miniſtrie onely, the efficacie is of God: Paul planteth, Apollo watereth, God giveth increaſe, 1 Cor. 3. but Chriſts paſtorall and propheticall office giveth the inward increaſe and vertue, to the which the outward miniſtrie is not derogatorie: but unto the ſacrificing prieſthood they aſcribe an efficacious power to make Chriſts bodie, and to work attonement by it, and ſo joyne them as fellow-workers with Chriſt in the ſpirituall work, which is great impietie.

1 Cor. 9. 16.
Epheſ. 4. 12.
1 Cor. 3. 6.

Secondly, Aaron had other inferiour prieſts for other ſacrifices and ſervices: but he himſelfe onely entred into the holy place with the blood of reconciliation, Exod. 30. 10. This office did reſt in him perſonally: but the Papiſts in this office of ſacrificing the blood of reconciliation joyne in commiſſion their prieſts with Chriſt himſelfe. A King hath other miniſters, becauſe he is a man, and cannot execute every part himſelfe, yet his ſoveraigntie and princely prerogatives he giveth not to any other: but Chriſt is an abſolute prieſt, and is able to execute every part of his prieſthood himſelfe: and this being a prerogative of his perſon to be a prieſt after the order of Melchiſedech, cannot be deputed to another.

Exod. 30. 10.

Thirdly, they bring in a multitude of prieſts in the ſame higheſt degree of prieſthood, to ſacrifice the bodie of Chriſt, and to make reconciliation by it: nay, they make their prieſts ſuperiour to Chriſt: for hee offered but his bodie in earth, they ſacrifice it being in heaven: Chriſt offered his bodie but in one place, they in many places; hee a bodie borne of the Virgin, they make him a bodie out of bread; Chriſt without a miracle offered his bodie to the death, they ſacrifice him miraculouſly without death: and they make their ſacrificing prieſts alſo after the order of Melchiſedech, as Chriſt himſelfe is.

Fourthly, the Apoſtle excludeth all ſucceſſion or multiplying of prieſts, but onely where they are taken away by death: Ergo, ſeeing Chriſt ever liveth and dieth not, there is no other prieſt but he.

Argum. 6. Our Saviour ſaid upon the croſſe, Conſummatum eſt, it is finiſhed, Ioh. 19. 30. Ergo, the ſacrifice of Chriſt upon the croſſe being perfect and ſufficient, all other ſacrifices beſide are ſuperfluous.

Iohn 19. 30.

Bellarmine anſwereth, that theſe words, it is finiſhed, doe ſignifie that all the prophecies of Chriſts paſſion were accompliſhed, not that all things were done neceſſarie to ſalvation: for then the Sacraments, and all doctrine ſhould be ſuperfluous, ibid. cap. 25.

Contra. Firſt, all prophecies of Chriſts paſſion were not finiſhed, when hee ſpake theſe words, for he had not yet given up the ghoſt: after which time the Evangeliſt ſheweth the fulfilling of two prophecies, as touching the piercing of his ſide out of Zacharie, verſ. 37. and of the not breaking of his bones out of Moſes, verſ. 36. Secondly, that Chriſt meaneth the perfection and conſummation of his ſacrifice upon the croſſe, the Apoſtle ſheweth, Heb. 10. 14. with one offering, τετελείωκεν, conſummavit, hee hath conſummated thoſe that are ſanctified: where the very ſame word is uſed both in the Greeke and vulgar Latine, whereby the Evangeliſt expreſſeth the conſummation and perfection of Chriſts croſſe. Thirdly, the perfection of Chriſts ſacrifice taketh not away the uſe of doctrine and Sacraments, which doe but ſet before us the death and ſacrifice of Chriſt: but it is a bar to all other ſacrifices, which if they bee but memorials of Chriſts death are ſuperfluous, doctrine and the Sacraments being ſufficient to that end: if they be more than memorials, as available to forgive ſins, they are blaſphemous, and make Chriſts ſacrifice imperfect.

Heb. 10. 14.

Argum. 7. Saint Paul ſaith, Chriſt dieth now no more, Rom. 6. 9. but hee that is ſacrificed dieth: Ergo, Chriſt is not ſacrificed. The firſt part is thus proved: firſt, from the uſe of the ſacrifices, which were firſt killed before they were offered. Againe, where a ſacrifice is, the teſtament is confirmed, Heb. 9. 20. but where a teſtament is, there is death, ibid. 17. Ergo. Further, there is no remiſſion of ſinnes without blood, verſ. 22. but in the Maſſe there is remiſſion of ſinnes: Ergo, there is blood, and conſequently death.

Rom. 6. 9.
Heb. 9. 17. 22.

Bellarmine anſwereth: firſt, the death of the Sacrifice is not neceſſarie, but where a thing living is offered in the forme of a living thing: but Chriſt is ſacrificed under the forme of bread and wine. Secondly, the Maſſe is not a teſtament, but a repetition of the teſtament confirmed in Chriſts death. Thirdly, the Apoſtle ſpeaketh only of the legall ſacrifices, where there was no remiſſion of ſins without blood: or the Apoſtles meaning only is, that there is no remiſſion of ſins, but in the vertue of the ſhedding of blood; and ſo in the Maſſe there is the vertue of Chriſts blood, though it bee not ſhed reſp. ad argum. 3.

Contra. Firſt, that thing is killed that is ſacrificed: if bread and wine bee ſacrificed, they being dead things need not be killed: but if the ſacrifice be of Chriſt, hee muſt be killed, what forme ſoever you pretend of the ſacrifice. Secondly, if the Maſſe be but a repetition of a teſtament alreadie confirmed, then it is no ſacrifice, but a memoriall only: for where a ſacrifice is, a teſtament is ratified and confirmed, not repeated onely. Thirdly, Saint Paul ſpeaketh not properly of the legall ſacrifices, for they did not ſanctifie the conſcience, verſ. 9. Ergo, they gave no remiſſion of ſinnes: And if the vertue of Chriſts blood bee onely in the Maſſe, it is ſufficient alſo to have the vertue of his ſacrifice : for to expreſſe the vertue of Chriſts blood, a new ſacrifice need not, a Sacrament to that purpoſe is ſufficient.

Argum. 8. In every ſacrifice there is a conſecration of the thing ſacrificed from a prophane to an holy uſe, as the Paſchall Lambe was ſet apart four daies, before it was eaten, Exod. 12. 4. there muſt alſo be an oblation unto God : but in the Maſſe, there is nothing conſecrated but bread and wine, nothing offered but bread and wine : for in the inſtitution after the conſecration in theſe words, this is my bodie, immediatly follow, take ye, eat ye : there is no mention made at all of any oblation to God: Ergo, if there be any ſacrifice, it is of bread and wine only.

Bellormine anſwereth : firſt, that the bread is conſecrated by being turned into the moſt holy body of Chriſt. Secondly, the very placing of that holy thing upon the altar, is an oblation and offering of it to God, Bellarm. c. 27.

Contra. Firſt, if bread be conſecrated, then bread is ſacrificed : for the ſame thing is ſacrificed, that is conſecrated : if the bodie of Chriſt be conſecrated, then was it before prophane and unholy : let him chuſe which part hee will. Secondly, if the very placing upon the Communion table (for Altar wee acknowledge none) be an oblation, then bread and wine are offered : for they onely are there exhibited and placed. Chriſts bodie is placed in heaven, his place is not on the earth.

Ad fratres in Erem ſer.27.

Argum. 9. Auguſtine in a certaine place allegorizing the parable of the prodigall child, thus writeth, Vitulum occidit, quando in ſacramento altaris memoriam paſſionis in mente renovavit : He ſlew the fat calfe, when he renewed in the Sacrament of the altar, the memorie of his paſſion in his mind, &c. Hee calleth it the Sacrament, not the ſacrifice of the altar : and it onely bringeth to our mind the memorie of Chriſts paſſion and ſacrifice : there is then no oblation or ſacrifice in the Sacrament, but only a commemoration of Chriſts ſacrifice, which we denie not.

Bernard alſo witneſſeth here very plentifully for the truth : Sicut Chriſtus adhuc quodammodo immolatur quotidie, donec mortem ejus annunciamus, ſic videtur & naſci, dum fideliter ejus nativitatem repræſentamus : In Vigil.natal.ſer.6. As Chriſt is daily offered up, while we doe ſhew forth his death, ſo he ſeemeth to be borne, when we faithfully repreſent his nativitie, &c. The reaſon is this, as Chriſt is borne daily, ſo is he ſacrificed : but he is borne onely by a godly remembrance of his birth : Ergo, he no otherwiſe dieth or is ſacrificed.

Serm.in cœn. Dom,

Againe, Voluit Chriſtus ut jugiter recoleretur per myſterium, quod ſemel offerebatur in precium, &c. Chriſt his will is, that it ſhould bee daily remembred in myſterie, which was once offered up for our price, and that the everlaſting ſacrifice ſhould live in our godly memorie, and bee preſent alwaies in grace : for Chriſt ought not to be crucified againe, but it is a ſufficient remedie, if by faith and imitation, wee keepe his death in remembrance. Chriſts ſacrifice then is only renewed by a godly remembrance thereof, and a faithfull imitation of his death, and no otherwiſe.

Argum. 10. Let us ſee alſo their owne teſtimonies : Damaſus Epiſtol. 4. Menſa Domini participes, &c. Let them be partakers only of the Lords table. So alſo S. Hierom. lib.de 7.ordinib. Ipſis ſacerdotibus de menſa Domini, &c. It is not lawfull for the Prieſts, without preſumption, to take the cup from the Lords table, unleſſe it be given them of the Deacon, &c. Where a table is then, and not an altar, there can be no ſacrifice.

Gregor. Moral. lib. 1. c. 10. Sine intermiſſione pro nobis holocauſtum redemptor immolat, &c. The Redeemer without ceaſing doth immolate a burnt-offering for us, in demonſtrating or ſhewing unto his Father his incarnation. Innocent. 3. in converſion. S. Pauli : Sanguis ipſius, &c. His blood crieth alwaies to God for us. Gabriel Biel in canam lect. 61. Ad quem pertinet & pro peccatis offerre, &c. repreſentatione ſui ad patrem : It belongeth to him to offer for our ſinnes, &c. by preſenting himſelfe to his Father, &c. If then the preſenting of Chriſt in heaven, bee our burnt-offering, the crying of his blood, an offering for ſinne ; then it is ſuperfluous to ſacrifice him, or to offer and preſent him to God in the earth.

And if they will allow that definition of a ſacrifice in the Decrees : *Par.2. cauſ.*1 .*qu.*1.*c.*84. Sacrificium quaſi ſacrum factum, &c. A ſacrifice, that is, made ſacred or holie, being conſecrate to the memorie of the Lords paſſion. Thus is the Euchariſt a ſacrifice without the Maſſe, for it is an holy action inſtituted for the remembrance of Chriſts paſſion. If it bee then but a repreſentation of Chriſts ſacrifice, it is not the reall and externall ſacrifice it ſelfe. Likewiſe, *Decret.par.*3.*diſt.*2.*c.*51. Quod factum, &c. That which was once done, is done in our memorie every yeere. *C.*53. Quod nos facimus, in commemorationem ſu ejus, &c. That which we doe, is done for the remembrance of him. So then the Euchariſt is not a ſacrifice of a thing preſent, but a commemoration of Chriſt abſent. In diſtinctione membrorum ſemel tantum, &c. In the diſtinction of his members he hanged but once upon the croſſe offering himſelfe, &c. cap. 52. ibid. Chriſt then cannot be ſacrificed without diſtinction of his members ; which diſtinction being not in the Maſſe, when he is imagined to be in a leſſe room than the compaſſe of a ſpan, he cannot be there ſacrificed.

This truth hath the plentifull teſtimonie of the holy Martyrs, whoſe effectuall reaſons and ſubſtantiall arguments againſt the Idolatrous ſacrifice of the Maſſe, we have ſet downe together in the treatiſe annexed to this controverſie : to the which place I referre the reader.

Now concerning the teſtimonie of forren Churches : 1. The ancient Greeke Church acknowledged ged no ſuch ſacrifice of the body of Chriſt. Euſebius citing that place of Malachie: From the riſing of the Sunne to the going downe thereof, &c. in every place incenſe ſhall bee offered to my name, &c. (which place is ſo much urged by the Romaniſts for their Maſſe-ſacrifice) thus inferreth, Sacrificamus igitur Deo altiſſimo ſacrificium laudis, &c. We therefore offer unto God a ſacrifice of praiſe, &c. So alſo Baſil having ſhewed what he would not ſacrifice to God, not a foure footed bullock, or fowles, or oile, and the like: Unde ad tuam laudem tanquam in altari quopiam mentem meam ſacrificabo: Whereupon I will unto thy praiſe, as in a certaine altar ſacrifice my mind, &c. If there had been any other ſacrifice of better account, here Baſil had occaſion to ſpeake of it.

In Pſal. 115.

The moderne Greeke Church is much declined from the puritie of former times: for under Manuel Camnenus Emperour of Conſtantinople it was generally held, that Chriſt was offered up by the hands of the Prieſt: and whoſoever contradicted it, was baniſhed: yet at this day are they not ſo groſſe as the Romaniſts: for the rude Muſcovits doe find fault with the Romaniſts, quod agnum paſchalem una cum corpore Chriſti, in altari conſecrant: becauſe they conſecrate a paſchall Lambe together with the bodie of Chriſt upon the altar.

Whereunto agreeth the Engliſh confeſſion, artic. 2. We know this ſacrifice (namely of Chriſt upon the Croſſe) to be the only ſacrifice, and ſeeke for none other: for as much as it was to be offered but once, wee command it not to bee renewed againe.

4 Peter Lombard moving the queſtion, whether that which the Prieſt doth, bee properly called a ſacrifice, maketh this anſwer, Vocari ſacrificium, quia memoria eſt veri ſacrificii, That it is called a ſacrifice, becauſe it is the memoriall of a true ſacrifice, &c. Ianſenius ſaith, That though this their ſacrifice cannot ſufficiently bee proved out of the Scripture, yet it may bee effectually proved by tradition. And yet Suarez a Jeſuite ſaith, The eſſentiall action of this ſacrifice, ex factis & verbis Chriſti, &c. is to bee gathered out of the words and doings of Chriſt, &c. But thence no ſacrifice can be proved, as Ianſenius before confeſſed: therefore the ſacrifice of the Maſſe is found by their owne confeſſion to bee none at all.

To conclude then this point: whereas there are four kind of ſacrifices: 1 Typicall, ſuch as were the ſacrifices of the Law; 2 Reall, ſuch as was the ſacrifice of Chriſt upon the croſſe; 3 Repreſentative, as is the Euchariſt; 4 Mentall and ſpirituall, as are our praiers: wee acknowledge the Euchariſt to bee a ſacrifice the two latter waies, and not otherwiſe: becauſe there is a commemoration of the true ſacrifice of Chriſt upon the croſſe, and it is joyned alſo with ſpirituall ſacrifices of praiſe and thankſgiving.

An Appendix or third part, of the name and office of Prieſts.

The Papiſts.

As they doe falſly teach and perſwade, that there is yet remaining a proper externall ſacrifice for Chriſtians under the Goſpell, ſo alſo they maintaine a ſacrificing Prieſthood. And further they ſay, that the Leviticall Prieſthood was not tranſlated into the ſacrifice of Chriſt upon the croſſe, but is properly turned into the Prieſthood and ſacrifice in the Church, according to Melchiſedechs rite, in offering up the bodie and blood of Chriſt in the formes of bread and wine, Rhemiſt. annot. Heb. 7. ſect. 7. Wherefore they which miniſter under the Goſpell, are worthily called Prieſts: which word doth ſo certainly implie the authoritie of ſacrificing, that it is by uſe made the only Engliſh of Sacerdos, Rhemiſt. Act. 14. ſect. 3.

32. Error.

Our Doway tranſlators are plentifull in their probation of this point, for their ſacrificing Prieſts and altars.

1 Chriſt ſtill exerciſeth the office of Prieſthood according to the order of Melchiſedech by the miniſterie of Prieſts, pag. 58.

2 Where is no Prieſt, no ſacrifice is required: pag. 198. in the margen: and therefore Proteſtants have no Prieſts, but Miniſters.

3 As Moſes, when he had delivered the people, built an altar for ſacrifice, Exod. 24. 4. ſo altars are erected, and ſacrifice offered, for the application of the fruit of our redemption by Chriſt: pag.227. in the margen.

4 As Core, Dathan and Abiram, ſaid againſt Moſes and Aaron; All the congregation is holie: ſo Luther and his fellowes will have no proper Prieſthood in the Church, becauſe all Chriſtians are called an holy Prieſthood, 1 Pet. 2. 5. 1 Pet.2.

Contra. 1. The inferiour Prieſts cannot be after the order of Melchiſedech: for the Prieſthood of the new Teſtament is but one, and needeth not a ſucceſſion of Prieſts, as in the Law: but this Prieſthood adhereth onely to the perſon of Chriſt: This man becauſe hee endureth ever, hath an everlaſting Prieſthood: They then which doe not endure for ever, are not Prieſts of the new Teſtament. Heb.7.24.

2 As Proteſtants need no externall ſacrifice, ſo neither doe they ſtand upon an externall Prieſthood: their Miniſters ſuffice to offer up the ſpirituall and publike ſacrifices of the people.

3 The argument better followeth: Moſes erected materiall altars, as belonging to the externall ſacrifices and ceremonies of the Law: therefore, theſe ceremonies being abrogated, there is no uſe any longer of ſuch materiall altars.

4 Though we denie any ſuch externall Prieſthood to be in the Church, as Aarons was: yet wee take not away diverſitie of callings, neither doe bring in a confuſion, making all alike, as that rebellious crue did: wee teach obedience to ſpirituall governours, and make diſtinction of degrees and callings: our Miniſters, though not as ſacrificing Prieſts, doe ſerve to edifie the Lords people, by the preaching of the word, and miniſtrie of the Sacraments, and offering up their common prayers.

The Proteſtants.

First, we hold it to be a great blaſphemie to ſay, that the Prieſthood and ſacrifice of Chriſt upon the croſſe, is not that ſacrifice or Prieſthood into the which the old ſacrifice and Prieſthood was tranſlated and changed. The Apoſtle proveth the contrarie: for that ſacrifice, whereby the new Teſtament is eſtabliſhed, is that, whereinto the old ſacrifice and Prieſthood is tranſlated: but this is done by the ſingular ſacrifice of Chriſt, who is the ſuretie of a better teſtament, *Heb.*7. 23. Ergo, his ſingular ſacrifice upon the croſſe, is that whereinto the old Leviticall ſacrifices are changed, and no other. Againe, the Prieſthood after Melchiſedechs order is that, into the which the old Prieſthood is changed: but the Prieſthood of Chriſt upon the croſſe was after that order. Ergo. But here they are not aſhamed to denie, that the ſacrifice of Chriſt upon the croſſe was after Melchiſedechs order; but do moſt impudently and blaſphemouſly affirme, that it was after the order of Aaron: *Heskin.lib.*1.chap. 13. And thus every vile Maſſe-monger ſhall be more properly a Priſt after Melchiſedechs order, than Chriſt himſelfe. Heb.7.23.

Secondly, none but Chriſt is a Prieſt after the order of Melchiſedech: for unto whom the Lord ſaid, Thou art a Prieſt for ever after the order of Melchiſedech, to him the Lord ſaith alſo in the ſame Pſalme, Sit thou at my right hand, *Pſal.*110. But this cannot agree to any Popiſh prieſt: therfore not the other. Againe, the Apoſtle maketh this difference betweene the Priſthood of the Law and the Goſpell: becauſe then there were many Prieſts, they being prohibited by death to continue: but Chriſt is the only Prieſt of the new Teſtament, becauſe he dieth not, Heb. 7. 23, 24. If they anſwer, as they doe, that although there bee many Prieſts, yet there is but one Prieſthood, becauſe Chriſt concurreth with them in the acts of Prieſthood, Rhemiſt. Pſal.110.1. Heb.7.23.24.

We anſwer: firſt, Chriſt concurreth with his faithfull Miniſters in the act of their Miniſterie: but no ſuch Prieſthood doe we acknowledge. Secondly, ſo Chriſt concurred in the acts of the Leviticall Prieſthood, and the ſacrifices of the law that were rightly offered: wherefore this concurrence of Chriſt doth no more take away the multitude of Prieſts in the Goſpell, than it did in the Law.

Thirdly, concerning the name of Prieſts in their ſenſe, as it implieth an authorite of ſacrificing, we utterly abhorre. Secondly, but as it is derived of the Greeke word πρεσβύτερος, which ſignifieth an Elder, we refuſe it not, but wiſh rather, that it had not been abuſed in common ſpeech to ſignifie popiſh ſacrificers. Thirdly, as for the word (ſacerdos) which may bee Engliſhed a ſacrificer, we find it no where in the new Teſtament given to the Miniſters of the Goſpell, and ſo much Bellarmine confeſſeth, cap. 17. And therefore unfitly and unproperly agreeth unto them. If ſome of the fathers have confounded the names of Sacerdos and Presbyter, yet they meane nothing leſſe than a ſacrificing Prieſt. The word Sacerdos, a ſacrificer, being a proper name of the Leviticall Prieſts, cannot properly be attributed to the Miniſters of the Goſpell. To conclude, this word (Prieſt) as it is the Engliſh of Sacerdos, we doe not approve: but as it giveth the ſenſe of (Presbyter) from whence it is derived, wee condemne it not: for ſo it ſignifieth nothing elſe but an Elder. If common uſe of ſpeech have drawne it to a contrarie ſenſe, it would be amended.

Bellarmine anſwereth, the Apoſtles in their writings uſe not the words of prieſt, ſacrifice, temple, altar, and ſuch like; becauſe the Jewiſh ſacrifices and prieſthood were yet inforce, leſt they might bee thought by uſing thoſe words, to renew and confirme the rites of the Jewes: but afterward, when as the temple was deſtroyed, theſe names began to be uſed of the ancient fathers, Bellar. cap. 17.*lib.*1.de Miſſa.

Contra. Firſt, it is untrue that the Apoſtles in the Scripture forbeare at all to uſe the names: for in the new Teſtament every one of theſe names is found, but in a ſpirituall ſenſe, as the Apoſtle taketh the Temple for the Church of God, 1 Cor. 3. 16. 2 Cor. 6. Againe, the Apoſtles ſpeake of ſpirituall ſacrifices, Rom. 12. 1. Heb. 13. and the Apoſtle in the ſame chapter ſaith, we have an altar, &c. meaning the altar of the croſſe. And Revel. 1. 6. He hath made us Kings and Prieſts, that is ſpiritually: wherefore it is a great untruth, that the Apoſtles did of purpoſe ſhun theſe names, for any ſuch cauſe alleaged, ſeeing they every where uſe them.

Secondly, it cannot bee denied, but that this word (ſacerdos) a prieſt, is taken by ſome of the ancient fathers, for an office of the Goſpell: but they underſtand not then a ſacrificing prieſt, but either the ſame, which was called (Presbyter) a teaching Elder, as Damaſus epiſtol. 4. Choropiſcopi miniſterio presbyterorum contenti ſint, &c. Let the countrey Biſhops be contented only with the miniſtery of the Presbyters, and be partakers only of the Lords table: A table is for Miniſters, not for Prieſts: Or elſe they expreſſed it by this word (miniſter) a Miniſter; as Cornelius epiſtol. 2. Epiſcopi & miniſtri, &c. Biſhops and Miniſters muſt not frequent riotous feaſts. Arelatenſ. 1. 2. Miniſtri fœnerantes, That Miniſters ſhould not bee Uſurers: Or elſe they underſtood this word ſpiritually. Ambroſ. lib. 5. in Luc. Omnes filii eccleſiæ ſacerdotes, &c. All the children of the Church are prieſts, offering themſelves ſpirituall ſacrifices to God. So alſo Origen. Hom. 9. in Levitic. Petrus ad omnem dicit eccleſiam, &c. Peter ſaith to the whole Church, yee are a royall prieſthood. But a ſacrificing prieſt by this word (ſacerdos) they underſtood not: for (ſacrificans, or ſacrificulus) a ſacrificer was taken for an Idolatrous prieſt of the Idols of the Gentiles, as Saint Cyprian uſeth it, Epiſt. 3. ad Cornelium: Hi quinque cum paucis vel ſacrificantibus, vel male ſibi conſciis, &c. Theſe five with a few ſacrificers, or men of a guiltie conſcience, did adopt Fortunatus to be their falſe Biſhop.

Auguſtine ſaith, Sacerdotium Iudæorum nemo dubitat, &c. No faithfull man doubteth, but that the Prieſthood of the law was a figure of the royall Prieſthood in the Church, whereby all that pertaine to the body of Chriſt, the chiefe and true prince of prieſts, are conſecrated, &c. Hee acknowledgeth no other Prieſthood abiding in the Church, than that whereby all Chriſtians are made Prieſts, to offer ſpirituall ſacrifices unto God through Chriſt.

Quæſt. Evangelicar. lib. 2. quæſt. 40.

Heare alſo what Bernard ſaith: Non ſolus ſacerdos ſacrificat, non ſolus conſecrat, ſed totus fidelium cœtus, qui adſtat, cum illo conſecrat, cum illo ſacrificat: The Prieſt only doth not ſacrifice or conſecrate, but the whole company of the faithfull, that ſtand by, doe conſecrate and ſacrifice with him: Ergo, in this ſenſe all the people are as well Prieſts as the ſacrificer.

Further, who properly is the Prieſt of the new Teſtament: 1 Euſebius ſheweth: We alſo do ſacrifice and burne incenſe, otherwhile celebrating the memoriall of that great ſacrifice, &c. otherwhile conſecrating our ſelves to him, ejuſq; pontifici, and his prieſt, &c. He giveth the name and title of Prieſthood only unto Chriſt.

Lib. 1. de demonſtrat. Evangelic. c. 10.

2 Tertullian alſo ſaith: We muſt offer a gift unto God, prayer and thankſgiving, per Chriſtum Ieſum catholicum patris ſacerdotem: by Chriſt the univerſall prieſt of his Father, &c. There is not then any other Prieſt of the new Teſtament, Chriſt being the univerſall and generall, and ſo the ſole Prieſt of his Father.

4 Ianſenius: Whereas the Papiſts would proove the vertue of their Prieſthood and ſacrifice by theſe words of Chriſt, Hoc facite, Doe this: he ſheweth, that the ſacrifice cannot be proved out of that place, or any other of Scripture, but by tradition: as is ſhewed before. So that if they faile of proofe for their ſacrifice, they fall ſhort alſo for their prieſthood.

Concord. cap. 131. pag. 904.

The third queſtion, of the vertue and efficacie falſely aſcribed to the ſacrifice of the Maſſe.

The Papiſts.

1 THey blaſphemouſly affirme, that it is a ſacrifice propitiatorie, that is, available to obtaine, ex opere operato, by the very worke wrought, remiſſion and pardon of all their ſins. Triden. Concil, ſeſſ. 22. can. 3.

33. Error.

Argum. 1. There were under the law ſacrifices truly propitiatory, and available to take away ſin, as Iob 1. he ſacrificed for the ſins of his ſons: and Levit. chap. 4. 5. there are deſcribed divers ſacrifices for ſin. If then the ſacrifice of the croſſe, which was ſhadowed forth in theſe ſacrifices, did not hinder them to be propitiatory, much leſſe doth it hinder the ſacrifice of the Maſſe to be ſuch, which is a commemorative alſo of the paſſion of Chriſt: Bellarm. lib. 2. de Miſſ. c. 2.

Anſwer. Firſt, the ſacrifices of the law did not truly purge ſins as concerning the conſcience, as the Apoſtle ſaith, Heb. 9. 10 but were figures only and types of the ſacrifice of the croſſe, which doth only purge our conſcience from dead works: ibid. verſ. 14. And it is untrue, that Bellarmine: to this replieth, that thoſe ſacrifices were figures alſo of the ſacrifice of the Maſſe and of the Euchariſt: for neither doe wee acknowledge any ſuch ſacrifice of the Maſſe; and the Euchariſt hath relation to Chriſts ſacrifice alreadie paſt, as the old ſacrifices did ſhadow it forth then to come: ſo that the Euchariſt is not the ſubſtance of the ſhadow of ſacrifices; but the paſſion of Chriſt is the ſubſtance both of their ſacrifices and our Sacraments. Secondly, Bellarmine himſelfe granteth, that the legall ſacrifices did not juſtifie men before God, as ex opere operato, by the worke wrought, but only ſerved for the expiation of legall faults: therefore the argument followeth not from the ſacrifices of the law to the ſacrifices of the Maſſe, which he affirmeth to be propitiatory, ex opere operato. Thirdly, all this being granted to be true of the ſacrifices of the law, yet he hath proved nothing for the Maſſe, which we deny to bee a ſacrifice.

Heb. 5. 1. Argum. 2. Heb. 5. 1. Every Prieſt is ordained to offer gifts and ſacrifices for ſins: but in the Church now there are Prieſts properly ſo called: Ergo, they offer for ſins: Bellarm. ibid. argum. 3.

1 Pet. 2. 5. Heb. 7. 26. Anſw. I have ſhewed before, that there remaineth now no externall Prieſthood in the Church but only a ſpirituall, to offer up ſpirituall ſacrifices to God through Chriſt, 1 Pet. 2. 5. and that the true Prieſthood in the new Teſtament reſteth only in the perſon of Chriſt: Heb. 7. 26. Such an high Prieſt it became us to have, which is holy, harmleſſe, undefiled, ſeparate from ſinners, higher than the heavens, &c. But theſe properties are only in Chriſt: Ergo, he is the only Prieſt of the new Teſtament. This argument then beggeth the thing in queſtion, and therefore concludeth not.

Argum. 3. Chriſt himſelfe ſaith in the inſtitution, This is my blood ſhed for you for the remiſſion of ſins: Ergo, the ſacrifice of the Maſſe is available for remiſſion of ſins: for it forgiveth ſins either as a ſacrifice, or a Sacrament: but as a Sacrament it is only appointed for our ſpirituall nouriſhment: Ergo, as a ſacrifice, &c. Bellarm. lib. 2. de miſſ. c. 2.

The Proteſtants.

Anſ. First, Chriſt inſtituted no ſacrifice, as wee declared before, but only a Sacrament in remembrance of his death and paſſion. Secondly, the Euchariſt as a ſacrifice neither forgiveth ſin, nor giveth aſſurance thereof; becauſe it is no ſacrifice at all, but as a Sacrament rightly adminiſtred it ſerveth to aſſure our faith of remiſſion of ſins, by the death of Chriſt: which is an effect of our ſpirituall nouriſhment, to aſſure us of our ſpirituall health, which is the remiſſion of our ſins: but it doth not by it own vertue conferre remiſſion of ſins, neither profiteth by the worke wrought: for the Apoſtle ſaith, that without faith it is impoſſible to pleaſe God, Hebr. 11. 6. Wherefore no action is accepted of God not proceeding of faith. Heb. 11. 6.

Argum. 1. The Apoſtle ſaith, Where there is remiſſion of ſins, there is no more ſacrifice for ſin, Heb. 10. 18. Seeing then remiſſion of ſins is fully obtained by the death and ſacrifice of Chriſt, there can be no more ſacrifice for ſin: Ergo, the Maſſe is no ſacrifice for ſin. Heb. 10. 18.

Bellarmine anſwereth: firſt, there are two things required to the remiſſion of ſins: firſt, the finding out, or paying the price of our redemption. Secondly, the application thereof: The firſt is done by the ſacrifice of the croſſe, ſo that there need no more offering for the ſatisfying for ſin: but for the application of that remedy a ſacrifice is yet neceſſary, which is the Maſſe: lib. 1. de Miſſ. c. 25. reſp. ad argum. 2.

Contra. Firſt, the ſacrifices of the law alſo did ſerve to apply the vertue of Chriſts croſſe, and yet the Apoſtle excludeth them by this reaſon, that where there is remiſſion of ſins, there is no more ſacrifice: wherefore if the Apoſtles reaſon bee good, it concludeth againſt ſacrifices applicatory alſo. Secondly, to apply the benefit of Chriſts paſſion, a ſacrifice is not neceſſary; God hath appointed the preaching of the word, and the miniſtration of the Sacraments to that end. Thirdly, the power of Chriſts croſſe is not ſeene only in finding out the price of our redemption, but in giving and conferring the ſame actually upon all beleevers, to whom alſo hee giveth that grace to beleeve by the vertue of his croſſe: Heb. 10. With one offering hath he conſecrated for ever them that are ſanctified. Heb. 10. 14.

Secondly, hee anſwereth, that the Maſſe doth not immediatly give remiſſion of ſins, but obtaineth the gift of repentance for ſinners, whereby they are ſtirred up, to ſeeke for remiſſion of ſins: And if it worke not in them repentance, as it doth not in all, yet it worketh a diſpoſition to repentance, which yet helpeth them not, becauſe they reject the calling of God, Bellarm. lib. 2. de Miſſ. c. 5.

Contra. Firſt, if the ſacrifice of the Maſſe conferre not remiſſion of ſins, and yet you ſay the Sacrament doth conferre grace, then is the Sacrament more available, where Chriſt is not offered, than the ſacrifice wherein hee is offered. Secondly, if the Maſſe purchaſe remiſſion of ſin no otherwiſe but by working repentance, then is it not at all available for the dead, as you ſay it is, to whom repentance is not given. Thirdly, if in the Maſſe Chriſt were offered up verily and indeed, as you ſay, why ſhould not the Maſſe give then remiſſion of ſins? which is the immediate and proper effect of the ſacrifice and croſſe of Chriſt. Fourthly, neither doth the Maſſe give repentance to all thoſe, for whom it is ſaid, for many of them remaine impenitent ſtill: and as for that diſpoſition you ſpeake of, ſeeing it benefiteth them not, they might as good be without it. And thus by your owne grant, the Maſſe is altogether unprofitable, neither available to remit ſins, nor to give repentance to him that is otherwiſe diſpoſed.

Heb. 9. 22. Argum. 2. Heb. 9. 22. Without ſhedding of blood is no remiſſion; but in the Maſſe, there is no ſhedding of blood: Ergo, no remiſſion.

Bellarmine anſwereth, firſt to the propoſition, that the Apoſtles meaning is, not that blood ſhould bee ſhed ſo often as there is remiſſion of ſins, but that there is no remiſſion of ſins, but in the vertue of the ſhedding of blood, lib. 1. de miſſ. c. 25. reſp. 3. ad argum. Secondly, to the aſſumption hee ſaith, that the blood of Chriſt is really ſhed in the oblation of the Maſſe, ibid.

Contra. Firſt, the Apoſtle meaneth not the vertue of blood onely, but the actuall ſhedding of blood, verſ. 22. Almoſt all things are by the Law purged with blood, and without ſhedding of blood is no remiſſion: as the legall purging then was by blood, ſo is the remiſſion of ſinnes by blood; but there was the very actuall ſhedding of the blood of the ſacrifices: Ergo, conſequently there muſt bee ſo in the remiſſion of ſinnes. Secondly, if Chriſts blood be really ſhed in the Maſſe, then is Chriſt ſlaine in the Maſſe: for without death, there is no ſhedding of blood: becauſe that the ſhedding of blood is to confirme a Teſtament, and a Teſtament is not ratified but by death, Heb. 7. 17.

Heb. 7. 17.

Argum. 3. The Maſſe is no ſacrifice at all, as we have ſhewed before: Ergo, it is not a ſacrifice propitiatorie: the firſt alſo may bee thus further proved: The ſacrifice of Chriſt is of infinite vertue. Heb. 10. 14. With one offering hath he conſecrated for ever, them that are ſanctified: but, Valor Miſſæ finitus, the valour or vertue of the Maſſe is finite, Bellarm. c. 4. prop. 4. lib. 2. Ergo, in the Maſſe Chriſt is not ſacrificed. And againe, no finite thing can confer that which is infinite: but remiſſion of ſins is infinite, that is, for ever: Heb. 10. 17. Their ſinnes and iniquities will I remember no more: but the vertue of the Maſſe is finite, and therefore is often iterated: Ergo, it doth not conferre remiſſion of ſinnes. If it ſhall be here objected, that this reaſon alſo may bee urged againſt the often receiving of the Euchariſt; I anſwer, that the Euchariſt doth not as a ſacrifice actually and really conferre remiſſion of ſinnes by the worke wrought, but onely inſtrumentally aſſure us of remiſſion of ſins, by faith in the blood of Chriſt: and therefore the reaſon is not like againſt the ſacrifice of the Maſſe, and the Sacrament of the Euchariſt.

Heb. 10. 14. 17.

Interrelig. cap. 22. Chriſtum incruento & impaſſibili modo ſiſtimus patri, non ut remiſſionem peccatorum promereamur, &c. We doe after an unbloodie and impaſſible manner preſent Chriſt to his Father, not to merit thereby remiſſion of ſinnes, but that calling to mind the memorie of the Lords Paſſion, we give him thanks for our ſalvation purchaſed upon the Croſſe, and by faith apply the ſame unto us: Ergo, the Maſſe in it ſelfe conferreth not remiſſion of ſinnes.

See further evidence out of their owne decrees: part. 2. cauſ. 1. qu. 1. c. 80. Scito, quoniam ſanctum eſt, quod offertur in altari, &c. Know, that it is holy, which is offered upon the Altar: but thou non tam ſanctificaris ex hoſtiis, quàm pollueris ex peccatis; art not ſo much ſanctified by the hoſt, as polluted by thy dead works, &c. If the ſinne of the partie doth hinder the work of the ſacrifice, then doth it not profit ex opere operato, by the very work of the ſacrifice only.

Doctor Taylor holy Martyr witneſſeth the ſame: Chriſts body offered upon the Croſſe was the propitiatorie ſacrifice, full, perfect, and ſufficient unto ſalvation, for all that beleeve in him: Our ſacrifice is onely memorative in the remembrance of Chriſts death and paſſion, a ſacrifice of thankſgiving, and other ſacrifice hath the Church of God none, p. 1521.

Now further touching this point. 1 The ancient Greeke Fathers had no ſuch conceit, that the Maſſe ſacrifice was propitiatorie, and gave remiſſion of ſinnes by the very worke wrought: but as they held Chriſt to be there ſacrificed, ſo alſo was the remiſſion of ſinnes: Chryſoſtome ſaith, Chriſtum in Euchariſtia pati & occidi: That Chriſt ſuffereth in the Euchariſt, and is ſlaine: And Gregorie Nyſſen. giveth the reaſon: Non eſſet idoneum ad edendum corpus victima animatum: The live bodie of a ſacrifice is not fit to be eaten, &c. their meaning was not that Chriſt was truly crucified, or died againe: for that had beene contrarie to the Apoſtle, Chriſt dieth no more: but that it was in miſterie and memorie of his death: no otherwiſe is remiſſion of ſinnes conferred, but by a fruitfull commemoration of Chriſts death: And ſo Euſebius well expreſſeth: Igitur & ſacrificamus, & incendimus, alias memoriam magni illius ſacrificii, &c. celebrantes, &c. Therefore we alſo ſacrifice and burne incenſe, ſometime celebrating the momorie of that great ſacrifice, &c. it is not then the ſacrifice it ſelfe, but the memorie thereof.

If Chriſts blood were onely ſhed by that ſingular ſacrifice upon the croſſe, then that was onely the true propitiatorie ſacrifice: but Proſper yet more evidently writeth: Quæ eſt propitiatio, niſi ſacrificium? & quod ſacrificium niſi occiſio illius agni, qui tulit peccatorum mundi, &c. What propitiation is there, but a ſacrifice, and what ſacrifice, but the ſlaying of the Lambe which tooke away the ſin of the world.

See Gratian's decrees before alleaged: concerning the opinion of the moderne Popiſh writers: it is worth the marking, to ſee how they are here in opinion divided: [a] Ribera denieth that Chriſt dieth in the Maſſe ſacrifice: but [b] Cardinall Allen granteth, that Chriſt dieth, is ſlaine, and crucified: ſome think, that the Maſſe is propitiatorie, for mortall ſinnes, as [c] Suarez: ſome for veniall onely: [d] Melchior Canus: And a doubt there is, whether theſe venialls be remitted immediately, by the work wrought, or mediatly by ſome act firſt wrought in the partie that receiveth pardon: ſome affirme it, as Soto, Carduba, ſome denie it and ſo alſo [e] Suarez: ſome thinke further, that the Maſſe is not available at all for ſins, but for the releaſing of the puniſhment onely: ſome miſlike this opinion, as [f] Gregorius de Valentia: It ſeemeth then to bee a meere device, this conceit of the propitiatorie ſacrifice, wherein they are ſo uncertaine and variable in opinion.

THe ſacrifice of the Maſſe is not onely propitiatorie for ſins, but available to obtaine all other benefits, as peace, tranquillitie, health, and ſuch like, Bellarm.cap.3.

Ezra.6.10.

Argum. 1. The Sacrifices of the law were availeable for obtaining of temporall benefits, as David by his ſacrifice turned away the plague, 2 Sam. 24. and the Iſraelites did offer ſacrifice for the life of Darius and his children, Ezra. 6. 10. Ergo, the Euchariſt is much more available, Bellar. cap. 3.

Heb.9.13.

Anſwer. Firſt, the argument followeth not, for the ſacrifices of the Law being temporall and carnall, might ſerve for temporall bleſſings; as the Apoſtle ſaith, Heb. 9. 13. They did ſanctifie, as touching the purifying of the fleſh: but the everlaſting ſacrifice of Chriſt is to procure eternall bleſſings. Secondly, the plague was ceaſed before David ſacrificed, for the Angell was bid to ſtay his hand, *verſ.*16. ſo that Davids ſacrifice following, verſ. 25. was rather a ſacrifice Euchariſticall, than impetratorie: and the Iſraelites are not commanded to ſacrifice, but to pray for the life of the King, *verſ.*10.

Epiſt.59.

Anſwer. Firſt, the Apoſtle ſpeaketh generally of all praiers, made by whomſoever, as it appeareth, *verſ.*1. Therefore this place is unfitly applyed to the praiers of Prieſts in the Maſſe. Secondly, this place proveth, that temporall benefits are obtained by faithfull praiers, not by the ſacrifice of the Maſſe, which S. Paul never knew. Thirdly, Auguſtine indeed expoundeth this place of the publike praiers of the Church, uſed in the adminiſtration of the Sacrament: for he calleth it, Domini menſam, the Lords table, not the Altar: he meaneth nothing leſſe than your Popiſh Maſſe.

The Proteſtants.

IT is contrarie to the inſtitution of Chriſt, to apply the Sacrament for any ſuch temporall or externall uſe.

Argum. 1. It was ordained to be received in remembrance of Chriſts death, as our Saviour ſaith, Doe this in remembrance of me, to aſſure us by faith, of remiſſion of ſins, and other ſpirituall bleſſings: not to give us aſſurance of health, peace, life, proſperitie; for the obtaining of ſuch bleſſings, according to the will of God, other meanes are appointed. The miniſterie of the Sacraments no more ſerveth for ſuch uſes, than the preaching of the word.

Heb.9.14.

Argum. 2. The Apoſtle maketh this difference betweene the legall ſacrifices, and the ſacrifice of Chriſt: They ſanctified as touching the purifying of the fleſh: but the blood of Chriſt, which through the eternall ſpirit offered up himſelfe, &c. doth purge our conſcience from dead workes, to ſerve the living God: wherefore the end and uſe of Chriſts ſacrifice is, to obtaine eternall redemption for us: temporall bleſſings wee obtaine alſo through him: but all his members have them not, nor alwaies: but eternall redemption by him, all beleevers obtaine: wherefore this onely is the end and uſe of his ſacrifice.

And further the ancient name of this Sacrament, called the Euchariſt, of giving of thanks, ſheweth the uſe therof rather to bee in giving of thanks for benefits received, than in praying for the ſame: and ſo it may bee gathered, that ſacrifices were uſed under the law, to teſtifie their thankfulneſſe after ſome temporall deliverance, as from famine, or captivitie, for the obtaining whereof they uſed publike faſting and prayer, as Ioel. 2. 16. Sanctifie a faſt, call an aſſembly, &c. Let the Prieſts weep betweene the porch and the altar, &c. Theſe were the meanes which they uſed in their diſtreſſe, Prayer and faſting: And againe, verſ. 14. Who knoweth, if he will returne, and leave a bleſſing, a meat offering, and a drinke offering, &c. Theſe ſacrifices were uſed after their deliverance, as teſtifying their thankſgiving.

Let us ſee what antiquitie ſaith, Liberius decret. 1. Si evenerit fames, aut peſtilentia, &c. If there fall out a famine, or the peſtilence, &c. Let them intreat Gods mercie, with faſting, almes, prayers, &c. He ſaith not, Let a Maſſe be ſaid.

*Trullan.can.*26. Ad vivificationem, & peccatorum remiſſionem, &c. For our quickning and the remiſſion of ſins, ſolam oblationem, &c. That they miniſter the oblation onely to the people: the oblation then in the Euchariſt ſerveth only for remiſſion of ſinnes.

1 Chryſoſtome well ſheweth to what purpoſes the Euchariſt is available: Ipſa menſa anima noſtræ vis eſt, nervi mentis, fiduciæ vinculum, ſpes, vita, &c. This table is the ſtrength of the ſoule, the ſinewes of the mind, the bond of our confidence, our hope, our life, &c. theſe are ſpirituall, not temporall benefits. Homil. 24 in 1 ad Corinth.

2 Tertullian ſaith, Sacrificamus pro ſalute imperatoris, &c. ſed quomodo præcepit Deus, pura prece: We ſacrifice for the health of the Emperour, but as God hath commanded, by pure praier, &c. but if the Maſſe had beene ſo available, to obtaine ſuch benefits, it ſhould not have beene omitted. Liber ad Scapul. In the moderne Africane and Æthiopike Church, they never uſe to carrie the Sacrament to the ſick: which ſheweth, that they uſe not to applie it as a remedie for bodily health. Zaga Zabo apud Damianum.

3 Confeſſ. of Wittemberg. c. 9. Another error is, that the Euchariſt is ſuch a ſacrifice, as ought to be offered, for the purging of ſinnes, &c. and for the obtaining of other benefits both corporall and ſpirituall, Harm. ſect. 12. pag. 457. Sweveland c. 19. They have made the Maſſe to bee a good worke, whereby any thing may bee obtained at Gods hands. Ibid. p. 462.

4 See the decrees before produced, which ſhew the ancient judgement of the Latine Church.

The fourth queſtion, for whom the ſacrifice of the Maſſe is availeable.

The Papiſts.

First, they affirme that Maſſe may be ſaid and offered for all the living, yea for Pagans and Infidels, for men abſent as well as preſent, for S. Paul willeth praiers and ſupplications to bee made for all men, 1 Tim. 2.1. Bellarm. cap. 6. 35. Error.

Secondly, the ſacrifice of the Maſſe is available for the dead which are in Purgatorie, Bellarm. cap. 7. Concil. Trident. ſeſſ. 22. can. 3.

Thirdly, Maſſe may bee rightly ſaid in the remembrance and for the honour of Saints, with invocation of them alſo in the praiers of the Church, Bellarm. cap. 8.

Argum. 1. The Apoſtles taught the Church to keepe a memorie or invocation of the Saints in this ſacrifice, and that there ſhould bee ſpeciall praiers for the dead: for theſe and ſuch like were the things (no doubt) that Saint Paul ſaith he would ſet in order when he came, 1 Cor. 11. 34. Rhemiſt. ibid. 1 Cor. 11. 34.

Anſwer. 1. To the place out of Timothie we have anſwered before, that it is underſtood generally of all praiers made by the faithfull: neither doth it follow, it is lawfull to pray for all men, and therefor the Sacrament is availeable for all men: For theſe are two divers things; Prayer is an effect of our faith, which we are commanded one to make for another: the Sacrament is an inſtrumentall or miniſteriall cauſe of our faith; the benefite whereof is to them onely that worthily receive it, becauſe to them onely it is a Sacrament, by preſenting the viſible ſignes to their eyes.

2 It is two great boldneſſe for you, without Scripture, to affirme that theſe ſuperſtitious rites of yours were thoſe very orders, which the Apoſtle promiſed at his comming to eſtabliſh: but either they were ſuch as pertained not to the adminiſtration of the Sacrament, or were but accidentall orders meete for the Church of Corinth, and not neceſſarie for all times and places.

Argum. 2. The ſacrifice of the Croſſe was offered for all; the ſacrifice of the Maſſe is a repreſentation of the Croſſe: Ergo, it may be offered for all Bellarm. c. 6.

Anſwer. First, the ſacrifice of Chriſt was not offered for all men in generall, but onely for the children of God: Iohn 11. 52. Chriſt dyed to gather together in one the children of God which were ſcattered: and if Chriſt prayed not for the world, Iohn 17. 9. much leſſe would hee die for the world. John 11. 52. John 17. 9.

Secondly, we denie any ſuch ſacrifice of the Maſſe to be offered at all in Chriſts Church: thirdly, it followeth not, that ſo many ſhould be partakers of the Sacrament and repreſentation of Chriſts death, as ſhall be partakers of his death: for he died for many yet uncalled and unregenerate, but none but the faithfull are to be admitted to the Sacrament.

Argum. 3. The ſacrifices of the olde teſtament were offered for the dead, as Iudas Machabeus is commended for ſo doing, 2 Macchab. 12. 45. Ergo, the ſacrifices of the new may likewiſe be uſed. If it be here anſwered, that this booke is not canonicall; yet for the matter of ſtorie, it is of as good credite as Ioſeph or Saluſt, and ſheweth, that this hath beene an ancient cuſtome in the Church to ſacrifice, and make prayer for the dead, Bellarm. c. 7. 2 Macch 12. 45.

Anſwer. First, for a matter of fact, we refuſe not this ſtorie, and it may be, that ſuch a thing Iudas did: but this booke erreth in commending it to be well done; as likewiſe, chap. 14. 41. Razis is commended for killing himſelfe. Secondly, the Jewes to this day have no ſuch cuſtome to pray for the dead. Thirdly, here ſacrifice is made for manifeſt idolaters, verſ. 40. whom this author notwithſtanding commendeth for godly men, verſ. 45. and it is contrarie alſo to the practice of the Popiſh Church to pray for the notorious wicked. 2 Macch 14. 41.

The Proteſtants.

First, the Sacrament (for externall ſacrifice therein wee acknowledge none) is onely ordained for their comfort that doe receive it: neither can one receive the Sacrament for another, no more then hee may bee baptized in the ſtead of another : the prayers which are offered up in the Euchariſt, may profit others that are not preſent, but not the ſacramentall action it ſelfe in receiving, eating and drinking.

Secondly, neither doth the celebration of the Sacrament profit the dead, as wee have ſhewed before, that it is in vaine to pray for them.

Thirdly, neither are the Saints either then or at any other time to be prayed unto, or either by this, or any other religious worſhip to be honoured.

Argum. 1. All theſe ſuperſtitious obſervances are cleane contrarie and repugnant to the inſtitution of Chriſt. Firſt, he ſaith, Take ye, eat ye, doe this : wherfore to their comfort only the Sacrament worketh, that doe receive it, and are doers in that action : the benefit thereof then is not extended to the abſent, but only to the partakers. Secondly, the dead can feel no comfort by it, becauſe they can neither eat nor drinke it, nor be doers therein, Thirdly, Chriſt ſaith, Doe this in remembrance of me : he ſaith not, in remembrance of Angels, Apoſtles, Saints : but onely of me. Therefore it is contrarie to the inſtitution to uſe any commemoration of Saints in the Sacrament.

Bellarmine anſwereth, that the Saints are not remembred in the Maſſe, as Chriſt is : for his death is there repreſented and remembred, ſo is not the death and paſſion of the Saints : but they are remembred as our mediators and interceſſors, *Bellarm.c.*8.

Contra. Firſt, there are but two kinds of commemorations ; one is with worſhip and adoration ; the other is Euchariſticall, when wee give thanks in the memoriall of the Martyrs and Saints, for ſuch excellent inſtruments : this commemoration may be made of the Apoſtles and Saints : the other is peculiar to Chriſt in the Sacrament ; and yet they do aſſociate unto him the Virgin Mary, in that kind of commemoration, thus ſaying in the Maſſe ; Worſhipping the memoriall of the Virgin. Secondly, they doe in their Maſſe uſe commemoration even of the death and paſſion alſo of their Saints : as thus,

Tu per Thomæ ſanguinem, quem pro te impendit,
Fac nos Chriſte ſcandere, quò Thomas aſcendit.
By the blood of Thomas, which for thee he did ſpend,
Grant us Chriſt with Thomas to aſcend. This was Thomas of Canturburie.

1 Cor.11.25. Thirdly, the remembrance which is to be made in the Sacrament, is expounded by S. Paul to be a ſhewing of the Lords death, 1 *Cor.*11. 25,26. but the death of none but Chriſt is to be ſhewed forth, and this Bellarmine himſelfe confeſſeth : Ergo, he only is to be remembred.

Heb.10.19. Arg. 2. He only is to be invocated, or we are only to draw neer unto him by praier, by whom we have an entrance unto God, *Heb.*10.19,20. but by the blood of Jeſus we have entrance only, Ergo.

Bellarmine anſwereth, that Chriſt and the Saints are not mediators alike, for Chriſt is a Mediator by himſelfe, the Saints by him : and as we praying one for another, do no injurie to Chriſts mediation ; ſo neither the Saints prayed for us, through Chriſt ; nor wee praying to them to pray for us. Againe, in the Maſſe, we pray not directly unto Saints, as thus ; O Peter pray for me : but indirectly, we pray that God would heare their praier for us. Bellarm.ibid.

Contra. 1. If Chriſt be the Mediator both of the praiers of the Saints and ours, then is the mediation of Saints ſuperfluous ; for ſeeing wee may have acceſſe to the Son himſelfe, it is in vaine to run to the ſervant. Secondly, wee pray not as mediators one for another, but as humble ſuters, not with authoritie, but of charitie ; therfore the compariſon between our praiers and the Saints praiers is not like. Thirdly, though the Saints pray in heaven for us, as fellow members, in reſpect of their inward deſire ; yet it followeth not, that wee ſhould pray unto them, no more than wee pray to men living that pray for us. Fourthly, your indirect invocation of Saints in the Maſſe, when yee pray thus, by whoſe merits and prayers, grant we may be defended, is both blaſphemous in leaving out the Mediation of Chriſt ; and preſumptuous, in making your ſelves mediators of the praiers of the Saints : for they pray, that the praier of the Saints may be heard. Fiftly, yet is not our argument anſwered, that wee muſt draw neer only to him, by whom we have an entrance, which are the Apoſtles direct words : and I thinke they will not ſay, that we have entrance by the blood of Saints.

Auguſtine ſaith, Quis offeret ſacrificium corporis Chriſti, niſi pro iis, qui ſunt membra Chriſti? Who will offer the ſacrifice of the bodie of Chriſt, but for the members of Chriſt ? Lib. 1. de Origin. anim. cap. 9. Therefore the Sacrament cannot bee celebrated for Pagans and Infidels, who are no members of Chriſt.

Againe, he ſaith : Nos Martyribus non conſtituimus templa, ſacerdotia, ſacra aut ſacrificia : Wee doe not erect their temples, Prieſts, ſervice or ſacrifices to Martyrs, De civitate Dei, lib. 8. cap. 27. Ergo, it is not lawfull to uſe the Sacrament for the honour of Saints.

Concil. Carthaginenſ. 3. can. 6. Placuit ut corporibus defunctorum Euchariſtia non detur, dictum eſt enim à Domino, Accipite, edite, cadavera autem non accipere poſſunt, nec edere : Wee thinke good that the Euchariſt be not given to the bodies of the dead, for the Lord ſaid, Take, eat : Now dead bodies cannot take and eat, &c. The Sacrament then is appliable to none, but to thoſe that take and eat ; but neither the dead nor any that are abſent can take and eat : Ergo.

In defence of this truth, that the Maſſe is not a propitiatorie ſacrifice for the quick and dead, many holy and excellent Martyrs willingly rendred their lives : As Rowland Taylor, Iohn Philpot, Iohn Bradford, Biſhop Hooper, with others. Fox p. 1471. col. 1. Pag.1337 1,28.

Their owne decrees thus teſtifie, decr. par. 3. diſt. 1. c. 40. Clemens. Mortuo non obvolvantur veſtimentis altaris: That the dead ſhould not be wrapped in the altar-cloathes, &c. But the ſacrifice of the altar is more than the Altar-cloth, if this muſt not be communicated to the dead, much leſſe the other. Againe, decr. Gregor. lib. 3. tit. 41. c. 6. Innocent. 3. Iniuriam facit martyri, qui orat pro martyre: He doth wrong to a Martyr, that prayeth for a Martyr: But ſo doe the Papiſts, in praying that God would heare the praiers of Martyrs; Ergo, they offer them wrong.

1 Chryſoſtome ſaith: Dum in hac vita ſumus, ut terra nobis cœlum ſit, facit hoc myſterium: As long as wee are in this life, this myſterie maketh the earth to bee as heaven unto us, &c. the uſe of the Eucharist then ſerveth for them that be alive: the moderne Greeke Church is here ſomewhat declined: yet they are not ſo groſſe in this point as the Romane Church: Ieremie Patriarke ſaith, that the Euchariſt ſanctifieth two waies, Ipſo mediatione ſive oblationis actu. Either by the mediation and by the act of oblation, or participatione by the receiving and communicating: the firſt way he confeſſeth it belongeth both to the living and dead, but not the other way, for the dead can no longer eat nor drinke.

The fifth queſtion, of private Maſſes.

The Papiſts.

IF any man ſhall ſay, that private Maſſes, wherein the Prieſt alone by himſelfe doth communicate, are unlawfull, and therefore to be aboliſhed; we pronounce him accurſed, Concil. Trident. ſeſſ. 22. can. 8.

36 Error.

Argum. 1. The reaſon of the Councell is this, becauſe that many doe communicate ſpiritually in the ſacrifice of the Maſſe, that are not preſent, and ſo the fruit thereof being publike, the Maſſe it ſelfe is in this behalfe not private, but publike: Concil. Trident ſeſſ. 22. cap. 6.

Anſwer. Firſt, a ſpirituall communion of the faithfull, wee grant even without a Sacrament, which is not the effect of the Sacrament, but by faith, Epheſ. 4. 4. There is one bodie, one ſpirit: And in the celebration of the Sacrament, there is alſo an exerciſe of this ſpirituall communion, the faithfull doe communicate with us in our prayers, and in the profeſſion of the ſame faith: but they doe not communicate with us in the Sacrament, or the fruit thereof. Secondly, to the ſacramentall communion is required a preſence of many: as the Apoſtle ſaith, 1 Cor. 10. 17. Wee that are many, are one bread and one bodie, becauſe we are partakers of one bread: ſo then the ſpirituall communion is one thing, the ſacramentall another: and we cannot be one body ſacramentally, unleſſe we communicate together in the Sacrament. Thirdly, as private prayer, though it may have a publike fruit, yet it is private ſtill; ſo the Sacrament privatly adminiſtred, though it might have ſome publike effect, is yet private ſtill.

Epheſ. 4. 4.

1 Cor. 10. 17.

Argum. 2. Praier is profitable to him that is prayed for, though he be not preſent; the ſacrifice of the Maſſe is a kind of ſolemne prayer: Ergo, though it bee private, it may bee profitable, Bellarm. lib. 2. de miſſ. c. 9.

Anſw. Firſt, we ſee that they are forſaken of the Scripture, for the proofe of their private Maſſes, and therefore are driven to deviſe reaſons of their owne. Secondly, there is not the ſame reaſon of a Sacrament (for ſacrifice therein we acknowledge none) and of prayer: for a Sacrament is exhibited unto men by the commandement of Chriſt, a praier is exhibited unto God from men, and therefore prayer may be private, becauſe God, to whom we pray, heareth privatly: And againe, we have warrant in Scripture for private prayer, Matth. 6. 6. ſo have wee none for a private Maſſe. Secondly, Bellarm. confeſſeth that a Maſſe cannot be ſo private, Ut uni ſoli applicaretur, To bee applied to one man alone, c. 9. yet private prayer may be made for one man alone: therefore the compariſon is not like betweene them. Thirdly, the prayers which are made in the Euchariſt for the whole congregation of Chriſts Church, may bee profitable to thoſe that are abſent; but it followeth not therefore, that the ſacramentall action of eating and receiving, ſhould be available for them which are abſent.

Matth. 6. 6.

Argum. 3. The ſacrifices of the law were ſacrifices before the people did eat thereof: ſo the ſubſtance and making of a medicine is one thing, the ingredients, or taking of it, another: Ergo, neither is receiving part of the ſubſtance or making of the ſacrifice of Chriſts body, but a conſequence only: therfore there may be a ſacrifice and Sacrament without it, Rhemiſt. 1 Cor. 11. ſect. 14.

Firſt, the argument followeth not from the ſacrifices and ceremonies of the law, to the Sacraments of the Goſpell: for they are much unlike: it was not lawfull but for the Prieſts onely, and the males amongſt them to eat of the ſacrifices, Leviticus 2. 3. 6. 29. they may as well conclude hereupon, that none but Prieſts ſhould eat of the Sacraments of the new Teſtament.

Secondly, the propoſition is alſo falſe, for the Paſchall Lambe, which of all the ſacrifices doth moſt properly reſemble the Euchariſt, was neither ſacrifice nor Sacrament, unleſſe it were eaten.

Thirdly, we denie that there is any ſacrifice in the Euchariſt, but a ſacrament only: and therefore the compariſon holdeth not betweene a ſacrifice, which conſiſted both of oblation to God, and the participation of the people that offered, and the Sacrament which Chriſt in his inſtitution offered not to God, but to his Diſciples.

Laſtly, neither doth the ſimilitude of a medicine conclude: for you cannot prove that the Sacrament not received hath vertue in it, as a medicine hath: for faith is requiſite to the worthie receiving of the Sacrament, which is not neceſſarie to the applying of a medicine: and yet it is not properly called a medicine, unleſſe being made, it be alſo applied, and received: And ſay it is a medicine unreceived, yet it profiteth not, unleſſe it be uſed: ſo you have gained nothing hereby, but that the Euchariſt is alſo an unprofitable medicine, where it is not received.

The Proteſtants.

WE utterly condemne the ſuperſtitious practices of the Popiſh Prieſts, who doe uſe to communicate alone in their Maſſes, the people ſtanding by, gazing and looking upon him: yea, you might have ſeene many Maſſes ſaid in one Church at once, almoſt in every corner one, no perſon being preſent for the moſt part, but the Prieſt and his boy.

Argum. 1. This private receiving of the Sacrament is contrarie to the inſtitution of Chriſt, who ſaith, ſpeaking to many, Take ye, eat ye, and divide this amongſt you: there muſt bee then a diviſion and diſtribution. S. Paul alſo ſaith, We that are many are one bread and one bodie, in as much as wee are partakers of one bread, 1 Cor. 10. 17. Ergo, many muſt communicate together. For the Apoſtle ſpeaketh not of the myſticall communion of the faithfull in this place, which doe all make but one body in Chriſt, (for ſo wee doe communicate with the Church by faith, not onely in the Sacrament, but without it) but of the Sacramentall Communion of as many as receive together: for how elſe can they be ſaid to be partakers of one bread, or loafe, unleſſe they receive together? 1 Cor.10.17.

Bellarmine anſwereth, firſt, all that which Chriſt commanded in the inſtitution to be done, is not of the eſſence of the Sacrament, nor alwaies to be obſerved; but in reſpect of perſon, time, and place: for if there bee none worthie to miniſter the Sacrament to, yet it muſt be celebrate notwithſtanding, c.10. reſponſ. ad argum. 1.

Contra. Firſt, and doe you ſpeake as you thinke, that all which Chriſt commanded concerning the Sacrament, is not of neceſſitie to be obſerved: and yet all which your Church commandeth, muſt be kept: we may then juſtly ſay unto you, as Chriſt ſaid to the Phariſees, You reject the commandement of God, to obſerve your owne tradition, Marke 7. 9. Secondly, all Chriſts precepts in the inſtitution of the Sacrament are of the ſame authoritie: for of them all he ſaith, (this doe ye) &c. then they may as well leave all undone, or any one of them, as another; and ſo they need no more uſe conſecration of the Sacrament, than diſtribution, which in their owne learning is very abſurd. Thirdly, the Apoſtle ſaith, concerning the actions of breaking, taking, eating, &c. That which I received of the Lord, have I delivered to you, 1 Cor. 10. 23. He maketh every one of theſe of and belonging to the tradition and inſtitution of Chriſt. Mark.7.9. 1 Cor.10.23.

Secondly, ſaith he, the Apoſtle concludeth affirmatively, that he which eateth the Euchariſt, is joyned to Chriſt: but not negatively, hee which receiveth not the Euchariſt, is not joyned unto Chriſt: for this may be done in heart and deſire, Bellarm. reſp. ad 3. object.

Contra. The Apoſtle ſpeaketh not of a ſpirituall onely, but of a ſacramentall communion with Chriſt in this place: and therefore he ſaith, The bread which we break is the communion of the body of Chriſt, &c. If the ſacramentall communion of Chriſts bodie bee in the breaking and diſtribution of bread, then where the bread is not broken and diſtributed, there is not that ſacramentall communion. So he ſaith, Wee that are many are one bread, because wee are partakers of one bread. They then which partake not, are not ſacramentally one bread, though ſpiritually we denie not but they are.

Act.2.42. Argum. 2. Act. 2. 42. They continued in the Apoſtles doctrine and fellowſhip, and breaking of bread: It was the uſe then in the Primitive Church to uſe diſtribution in the Sacrament.

Bellarm. It is true, yet it followeth not, that the Sacrament cannot bee celebrate without diſtribution.

Contra. It cannot bee ſhewed that in the Primitive Church, there was any celebration of the Euchariſt without diſtribution: Ergo, the argument followeth. The Apoſtles never celebrated the Euchariſt privately, therefore it is unlawfull ſo to doe.

Argum. 3. The Apoſtle maketh a manifeſt difference betweene the Lords Supper, and other feaſts: for theſe might be private in their owne houſes, 1 Cor. 11. 22. Have ye not houſes to eat and drinke in? but the other ought to be publike, verſ. 33. They muſt one tarrie for another: Ergo, the Lords Supper muſt not be private. 1 Cor.11.22.33.

Bellarmine anſwereth, the Apoſtle ſpeaketh not of the Sacrament, but of other feaſts, than uſed in the Church, which he calleth the Lords Supper: for he ſaith, one is hungrie, another is drunken: but in the Euchariſt, they did all eat alike, &c. Theſe then are the feaſts which the Apoſtle would have common.

Contra. Firſt, it is true, that ſuch feaſts were then kept, which were called feaſts of love: but in the end of thoſe feaſts they uſed to receive the Sacrament: and therefore the Apoſtle reproveth them, becauſe, when they came together to eat the Euchariſt, they did eat their owne Supper afore, verſ.22. Secondly, [illegible] Lords [illegible] immediatly he inferreth the inſtitution of Chriſt, which had been impertinent, if he ſpake not of the Sacrament. And where he ſaith, that ye come not together unto condemnation, it is evident, that hee ſpeaketh of comming together to the Lords table, wherein onely, and not at the common table, they eat and drinke their damnation, that doe it unworthilie.

Argum.4. The word of God is not to be preached but to a congregation, nor Baptiſme to be adminiſtred, where there is none to be baptized: Ergo, neither is the Euchariſt without communicants to be adminiſtred.

Bellarmine anſwereth, the reaſon is not alike: for the word and Sacraments are from God directed to men: but the ſacrifice of the Maſſe is directed unto God, Bellarm.c.9.

Contra. Firſt, we denie any ſacrifice in the Euchariſt, but a Sacrament onely: and therefore as the one Sacrament of Baptiſme requireth ſome to bee baptized, ſo the other of the Euchariſt requireth communicants. Secondly, the Euchariſt is not directed unto God but unto men, no not in the words of conſecration, whereby they ſay it is made a ſacrifice: for their words, This is my bodie, whereby they ſay it is conſecrated to be a ſacrifice, are directed unto men, if they uſe thoſe words, as Chriſt did: for theſe words follow in the Goſpel, This is my bodie, which is given for you: which words are by them left out in the Maſſe, that their craft ſhould not appeare, in perverting the uſe of Chriſts words, which were ſpoken only to his Apoſtles, and not directed unto God.

Auguſtine ſaith, that, Sacramentum benedicitur, ſanctificatur, & ad diſtribuendum comminuitur: That the Sacrament is bleſſed, ſanctified, and broken to bee diſtributed: Ergo, where there is diſtribution, there muſt be many to receive. Epiſtol.59.

Can. Apoſtolor. 10. Fideles qui ingrediuntur eccleſiam, & ſanctam Communionem non percipiunt, communione priventur: The faithfull, which come into the Church, and receive not the Communion, ſhall be excommunicate.

Clement. epiſt. 2. Tanta in altari holocauſta offerantur, quanta populo ſufficere debeant: Let ſo much be offered, as may ſuffice all the people. Proviſion muſt be made for all the companie to communicate: Ergo, private Maſſes were not yet heard of in the Church.

See further teſtimonie out of their owne decrees: Par. 3. diſtinct. 2. c. 10, Anacletus, Peracta conſecratione omnes communicent, &c. After conſecration, all muſt communicate, they which will not, let them be thruſt out of the Church: for thus the Apoſtles have ordained, and the Roman Church ſo holdeth. C. 17. Soter. In cœna Domini à quibuſdam, &c. Some men neglect to receive the Euchariſt in the Lords Supper, which ought to be received, ab omnibus fidelibus, of all the faithfull: Ergo, private Sacraments are againſt their owne Canons.

Maſter Philpot holy Martyr: Chriſt ſaid, and the Miniſter ſaith in Chriſts behalfe to all that are preſent, Take ye, eat ye: wherefore as many as be preſent and doe not communicate, breake Gods commandement in not receiving the ſame: and the Miniſter is no juſt Miniſter, that doth not diſtribute the Sacrament as Chriſt did to all that are preſent: and where Gods word is tranſgreſſed, there is not Chriſt preſent, and conſequently no Sacrament. Fox pag. 1816. col. 1.

And further for the teſtimonie of forren Churches: 1 The Greekes to this day allow not of private Maſſes: and therefore they finde fault with the Roman Prieſts for ſaying three Maſſes in a day, and that the people in ſtead of communicating doe kiſſe the Prieſt. The Armenians ſay the Maſſe in the companie alwaies of two or three. Pag.1648.2.50. Scanga.lib.2. Polonici.c.12. Thevet.lib.8. cap.25.

2 The Æthiopians likewiſe finde fault with the Latine Prieſts, that one alone ſaying Maſſe, without adminiſtring the Communion to thoſe which aſſiſted him: they alſo make a cake in bignes according to the number of the perſons that communicate, &c. Alvares c.30.

3 Confeſſ. of Auſpurg, cap. 1. de Abuſib. The inſtitution doth ordaine, that there be a Communion, that is to ſay, that the Miniſter of the Church doe deliver alſo to the reſt, the bodie and blood of our Saviour. Sweveland, chap. 19. Therefore they rejected private Maſſes, becauſe the Lord did commend this Sacrament to his Diſciples to be uſed in common, &c. Wittemberg, *chap.*9. The ancient Church excommunicated them, which being preſent, while this Sacrament was adminiſtred, would not communicate with others. And to this purpoſe they alleage the decree of Anacletus epiſt. 1 of the Antiochian Councell, c. 2. of Dionyſius de eccleſ. Hierarch. ſee the place. Hereunto agreeth the Engliſh Confeſſion: There was not any Chriſtian at that time, which did communicate alone, while others looked on: for ſo did Calixtus in times paſt decree, that after the conſecration was finiſhed all ſhould communicate &c. Harm.ſect.14. pag.461. An appendix, concerning the name of Sacrament.

The Papiſts.

37. Error. v.20.&.24. THey utterly miſlike theſe names of the Sacrament, that it is called amongſt us the Lords Supper or Communion: belike (ſay they) they will bring it againe to the Supper, or evening ſervice: Rhemiſt, 1 *Cor.*11.*ſect.*6. And the name Communion is as ignorantly uſed of them, thereby making the people beleeve, that many ſhould communicate together, 1 Cor. 11.ſect. 24. they ſhould rather uſe the names of the Euchariſt, Maſſe, or Leiturgie.

The Proteſtants.

1 Cor.11.20 FIrſt, for the name of the Lords Supper, we doe learne of S.Paul ſo to call it: When ye come together (ſaith he) this is not to eat the Lords Supper, 1 *Cor.*11.20.

Rhemiſt. The Apoſtle calleth their feaſts of love, which they were wont to make after the receiving of the Sacrament, the Lords Supper, cœnas dominicas, becauſe they were made in the Lords houſes, which were called Dominica: he meaneth not the Sacrament.

Anſw. Firſt, there were then no ſuch diſtinct places, as Churches, and Oratories for the ſervice of God, which began to be built many yeeres after, but they aſſembled together in their owne houſes. Secondly, the Apoſtle cannot meane any other Supper, but that which was inſtituted by Chriſt, and which he deſcribeth afterward as it followeth, *verſ.*23. Further, the Apoſtle ſpeaketh but of two Suppers; the one, which he calleth their owne Supper, *verſ.*21. the other is the Lords Supper, which is ſo called, becauſe it was inſtituted by the Lord Jeſus, as the Apoſtle ſheweth afterward.

Thus teſtifieth alſo Maſter Latimer holy Martyr: There was cœna Iudaica, the Jewiſh Supper, when Chriſt with his Apoſtles did eat the Paſchall Lambe; the other was called cœna Dominica, the Lords Supper, *Fox pag.*1456.

And though Doctor Weſton cavill in that place againſt this name, (the Lords Supper) yet hath the Communion beene ſo called in former times.

Concil. Cabilonenſ. can. 47. In cœna Domini perceptio Euchariſtia à quibuſdam negligitur: In the Supper of the Lord, ſome neglect to receive the Euchariſt. Auguſtine calleth it the Lords Supper, In Luk.Ser.33. Cœnam manibus ſuis conſecratam diſcipulis ſuis dedit: His Supper being conſecrated, hee gave it with his owne hands to his Diſciples. And although we ſate not downe at the feaſt: Ipſam cœnam tamen fide quotidie manducamus: yet we eat that Supper daily by faith.

Yet their owne decrees allow this name: *Decret. par.*3. diſtinct. 2.*c.*17. Soter; In cœna Domini à quibuſdam perceptio Euchariſtia negligitur, &c. In the Supper of the Lord the receiving of the Euchariſt of ſome is neglected. *Ita & Amb.p.*276.*Tom.5.& Theodoret ſcrib. in* 1 Cor. 11.20.

2 The name Communion, the Apoſtle alſo himſelfe uſeth: he calleth it κοινωνίαν, The Communion of the bodie of Chriſt, 1 Cor. 10.16. ſo doth Auguſtine name it, Communionem corporis Chriſti, de civit.Dei 20.*cap.*9. So alſo is it called in the Councels: 1 Cor.10.16. Nicen. 1.*c.*14. Eliberin. deor. 1.*Toletan.*12.5. and in divers other.

3 As for the names of the Euchariſt, and Leiturgie, wee miſlike them not, being underſtood in their owne ſenſe: but becauſe they are Greeke and not underſtood of the people, wee uſe them not. The horrible ſacrilege of the Maſſe, is the cauſe alſo why we uſe not that terme.

See the teſtimonie and practice of other Churches herein before produced, error 30.

The ſixth Queſtion, of the manner of ſaying and celebrating Maſſe.

The Papiſts.

38. Error. IT is not neceſſarie that the Maſſe (or as we call it, the Sacrament) ſhould be ſaid or done in the vulgar and familiar ſpeech, but for the greater reverence, to be kept in the Latine tongue, they ſay, it is more convenient: and that the words of conſecration ſhould not bee uttered in a loud and audible, but in a ſoft and low voyce, Bellarm. cap. 11.12.

Argum. 1. If Maſſe ſhould be ſaid in the vulgar tongue, two great inconveniences would enſue: one, that the words of conſecration muſt be often changed, becauſe the vulgar ſpeech doth often alter: the other is, that hereby the communion of Churches ſhould be taken away: for an Italian could not ſay Maſſe in France, nor a Frenchman in Italie, *Bellarm.cap.*11.*argum.*5.

Anſw. For the firſt, the vulgar tongue is not ſo ſoone, nor ſo eaſily altered: the vulgar Engliſh tongue doth not differ, ſaving in certaine new words, from the vulgar language uſed three hundred yeeres agoe: but if it ſhould in proceſſe of time bee wholly altered, what would it hurt, if the forme of the Leiturgie were changed withall? as likewiſe the vulgar tranſlation of Scriptures may ſafely be amended, as the vulgar ſpeech is perfited. To the ſecond we anſwer: firſt, the ſame objection may be made againſt Latine Maſſe, for neither can an Italian ſay Maſſe in Greece, nor a Grecian in Italie.

Secondly, the Latine tongue rather taketh away the communion and fellowſhip of the Church, when the ſame congregation underſtandeth not a Latine Maſſe, where it is ordinarily and daily ſaid, which is rather to be reſpected, than any ſuch extraordinarie or unwonted occaſion of ſtrangers and travellers. Thirdly, by the ſame reaſon ſermons alſo ſhould be made in Latine, becauſe otherwiſe ſtrangers cannot underſtand them. Fourthly, where in populous cities there be divers congregations, there ſhould be provided for them Miniſters of their owne: As Innocent.3. decreed, Qui ſecundùm diverſitates linguarum, &c. Which according to the diverſitie of the tongues, ſhould celebrate the divine offices, *Decret.Greg.lib.*1.tit.31.c.14. Their owne decree is evidently againſt them.

Argum.2. Chriſt for the ſpace of three houres, being ſo long upon the croſſe, uttered nothing in the hearing of the ſtanders by, but ſeven ſhort ſentences: Ergo, in the ſacrifice of the Maſſe, it is not neceſſarie to utter all in the hearing of the people, Ibid.

Anſw. Firſt, they have not proved by this example, that the Prieſt ſhould mutter and mumble to himſelfe, but the contrarie rather: that either he muſt altogether hold his peace, or elſe ſpeake aloud; unleſſe they can ſhew that Chriſt ſpake ſome words ſecretly to himſelfe. Secondly, we muſt not fetch the right uſe of the Sacrament of our owne heads, from the example of Chriſts ſacrifice upon the croſſe: but we are commanded to reſort for direction to the inſtitution in his laſt Supper, 1 Cor.11. 23. wherein Chriſt is not read to have ſpoken any thing, but in the hearing of his Apoſtles: neither did Chriſt pronounce any of the words of conſecration upon the croſſe, but in the inſtitution of his laſt Supper.

Argum.3. The Prieſt in the law did enter alone into the holy place, all the people ſtanding without, as we reade of Zacharie, Luk.1.10. Ergo, the ſacrifice of the Maſſe muſt be offered up in ſilence and ſecret, Bellarm.cap.12.argum.3.

Luke 1.10.

Anſw. Firſt, the Prieſt herein was a type of Chriſts entring into the holy place of heaven, as the Apoſtle ſheweth, Heb.9.24. therefore it concludeth not for the Maſſe. Secondly, a ſacrifice might be offered without the preſence of the people, but under the Goſpell we denie any ſuch ſacrifice. Thirdly, the Prieſt while hee burned incenſe, was neither heard, nor ſeene of the people: you may as well inferre, that your Prieſts neither muſt be ſeene of the people ſaying of Maſſe, and ſo ſhould ye loſe the glorie of your ſuperſtitious elevation. Fourthly, the reaſon why the people ſtaied without in the time of the ſacrifice, was in reſpect of the diviſion of the Temple, which conſiſted of three parts; the moſt holy place, whereinto only the high Prieſt entred; the holy place appointed for the inferiour ſacrificing Prieſts; and the court without which was for the people: but the Temple now is diſſolved, and the vaile thereof, which made this diviſion, was rent by the death of Chriſt: ſo that it muſt not bee a paterne neceſſarily of Chriſtian oratories or houſes of prayer.

Heb.9.24.

The Proteſtants.

First, for the Sacrament, or any other part of the ſervice of God to bee miniſtred in an unknowne tongue, is contrarie to S. Pauls rule, who would have all things to be done in the Church to edifying, and in ſuch ſort that the unlearned might ſay, Amen, 1 Cor.14.16. But the people cannot be edified by a language which they underſtand not: nor yet can ſay Amen unto ſtrange prayers. But of this matter we have alreadie elſe were entreated more at large.

1 Cor.14.16.

Secondly, it is alſo contrarie to Saint Pauls rule, that the Prieſt ſhould mutter to himſelfe, and not ſpeake aloud in the hearing of the people: for he ſaith, Ye doe ſhew forth, καταγγέλλετε, annunciatis, preach or declare the death of Chriſt, ſo often as ye receive it, 1 Cor. 11.26. But they doe not annunciare, that is, preach, ſet foorth, and declare the death of Chriſt, that ſpeake only to themſelves.

1 Cor.11.26.

Bellarmine anſwereth; This ſhewing forth of Chriſts death is not done ſo much by the words, as in act and in deed: for how elſe could all the people ſhew forth the death of Chriſt, but by eating and drinking in the Sacrament?

Contra. Firſt, we grant, that by the very action of eating and drinking in the Sacrament, Chriſts death is ſhewed forth, but not thereby onely: for the inſtitution of Chriſt muſt be declared, as the Apoſtle doth, 1 Cor.11.23. I have received of the Lord, that which I have delivered unto you: otherwiſe, if there ſhould be a dumbe action onely, without the word of inſtitution rehearſed in the audience of the people, they ſhould not know, what by their action is repreſented and ſhewed forth. Secondly, if by the action of eating and drinking only the Lords death is ſhewed forth, then in your private Maſſes, where the people neither eat nor drinke, there is no ſhewing forth at all of the Lords death.

Argum.3. A Sacrament conſiſteth of two parts; of the outward element, as the matter, and of the word of inſtitution, as the forme: the element, as water in Baptiſme, bread and wine in the Euchariſt muſt not be concealed: Ergo, neither the word of inſtitution.

Bellarmine anſwereth, that it is ſufficient if the words be uſed, though not pronounced in their hearing, that receive the Sacraments: for infants heare not the words ſpoken in Baptiſme.

Contra. Firſt, the reaſon is not alike betweene infants baptized, and other communicants; they here not, neither underſtand, therefore they profit not by the words: but they which communicate in the other Sacrament can both heare and underſtand. Secondly, though infants heare not, yet they which are preſent at their Baptiſme doe heare and are edified: otherwiſe yee might as well reaſon thus, Infants perceive not the element which is uſed: Ergo, the water alſo may be concealed. Thirdly, yet the argument is not anſwered, drawne from the proportion, betweene the element of the Sacraments, and the word.

1 Cor.14,19.

*Argum.*4. There is the ſame reaſon of uſing words not underſtood in the Church of God, and of words, that are not heard: for by neither is the people edified: but the firſt are not to be uſed; as the Apoſtle ſaith, I had rather in the Church ſpeake five words with mine underſtanding, that I might inſtruct others, than ten thouſand words in a ſtrange tongue, 1 Cor. 14. 19. Ergo, neither are the other: and therefore their five words of conſecration muſt be ſo ſpoken, as that others may be inſtructed thereby.

Bellarmine anſwereth: firſt, the Apoſtle ſpeaketh of preaching, not of prayer. Secondly, ſacrificing is not a ſpeaking, but a doing: and if it be a ſpeaking it is to God, not to the Church.

Contra. Firſt, it is evident that the Apoſtle ſpeaketh of prayer, *verſ.*14. If I pray in a ſtrange tongue my ſpirit prayeth, but my underſtanding is without fruit, that is, to others. Secondly, if their ſacrifice be a doing only, what need they uſe any words at all? Thirdly, prayer is a ſpirituall ſacrifice offered only to God, yet the Apoſtle would not have it without underſtanding and inſtruction.

Contra Parmenian.lib.2. cap.4.

Auguſtine ſaith, Populus cum epiſcopo orat, & quaſi ad ejus verba ſubſcribens reſpondet, Amen: The people prayeth with their paſtor and ſubſcribing to his words, ſay, Amen, &c. But how can the people ſay, Amen, where nothing is heard, or ſubſcribe in their hearts unto it?

Concil. Oxonienſ. ſub Stephano: Verba canonis præſertim in conſecratione corporis Chriſti plenè & integrè proferantur: The words of the Canon, eſpecially at the conſecration of the bodie of Chriſt, muſt be pronounced fully and wholy.

Concil. Baſilienſ. ſeſſ. 21. Abuſum aliquarum eccleſiarum, in quibus Miſſa privatè ſine miniſtro, aut per ſecretas orationes ita ſubmiſſa voce dicitur, quod à circumſtantibus audiri non poteſt, abolemus, &c. The abuſe of certaine Churches, where Maſſe is ſaid privatly without a Miniſter, or with a low voyce the prayers are mumbled, that the ſtanders by cannot heare, we doe aboliſh. This is contrarie to Bellarmines opinion, who would not have the words of conſecration uttered in a loud voyce.

Novell.conſtit.123.

Concerning the practice of other forren Churches: 1 It was the ancient uſe of the Greek Church, to celebrate the Sacrament with an audible voyce that they might bee underſtood of all: as appeareth by that conſtitution of Iuſtinian: Iubemus ut omnes epiſcopi & presbyteri, non tacito modo, ſed clara voce, quo à populo exaudiatur, ſacram oblationem celebrent, &c. We will, that all Biſhops and Presbyters, doe celebrate the ſacred oblation, not in a ſtill manner, but with a loud voyce, that the people may heare, and be ſtirred up to greater devotion, &c. The ſame is the manner of the greeke Church to this day, as Ieremie the Patriarke teſtifieth, that in their Leiturgie the ſacred Scripture is read, ut ad virtutis ſtudium provocemur, that wee might bee provoked to the ſtudie of vertue, &c. But this could not be, unleſſe all were rehearſed both in an audible voyce, and to the peoples underſtanding. The like is the faſhion of the Muſcovites, which follow the Greeke Church: they doe celebrate in the vulgar tongue, the people anſwering alſo in the ſame language, Hoſpidey pomyloy, that is, Have mercie upon us O Lord: and if their Prieſt doe chance to ſtammer in reading, or depreſſe his voyce, that he be not heard, the people chide him, and crie out to have the bookes given to another.

Lib.2.de Miſſ. cap 12. Commentar. in 1 Cor.14. diſput.22. Lib.8.Origen con t.Celſum. [illegible] diſput.cum Herban. Judeo p.4. Pariſiis 1586.

4 Bellarmine himſelfe confeſſeth, that Chriſt in the inſtitution of the Sacrament did ſo ſpeake, ut ab Apoſtolis audiretur, that he might be heard of the Apoſtles. Salmeron the Jeſuite confeſſeth, that in the ancient Maſſes, which goe under the names of S. Iames, Clement, Baſile, and in the judgement of Leo, Auguſtine, Ambroſe, the words of conſecration were to be ſpoken with an audible voyce, that the people might anſwer Amen, &c. Indeed Celſus objecteth, touching the Pagan gods, that if any named them in a barbarous tongue, hee ſhould bee tormented, not, if they called them in the Greeke tongue: and Herban a Jew diſputing with Gregentius, findeth fault with the Septuagint, for tranſlating the Hebrew Scriptures into the Greek tongue: ſo it ſeemeth this inſtance of uſing an unknowne tongue in divine ſervice, is both Heatheniſh and Jewiſh.

The ſeventh queſtion, of the ceremonies which they uſe in the idolatrous ſacrifice of the Maſſe.

The Papiſts.

39.Error.

SOme ceremonies goe before the celebration of the Maſſe, and they are of ſuch things, as they have alwaies in a readines for that impious ſervice: ſuch are the veſtiments and apparell of the Prieſt, the Albe, Cheſill, Stole, Dalmatike,with ſuch other: Altars, Altar-clothes, Corporaſſes, Pixes, Paxes, Diſhes, Candleſticks, Platters, Cenſers, Water-pots; all theſe and the like trumperie ought of right to be uſed in the ſacriffce of the Maſſe,the better to diſcern the bodie of Chriſt, Rhemiſt. *1 Cor. 11.ſect.*18.

Argum. Bellarmine warranteth their maſſing garments by the example of the prieſtly attire preſcribed in the law: and as Magiſtrates in their office uſe a ſpeciall kinde of attire for reverence ſake, ſo alſo it is fit that Prieſts ſhould bee knowne by ſome ſpeciall habit in the publike ſervice of the Church, Bellarm.lib.2.de Miſſ.c.14.

Anſw. First, the Apoſtle ſaith, If the Prieſthood be changed, there muſt be alſo a change of the law, *Heb.*7.12. wherefore the prieſtly garments belonging to the law of the Prieſthood, are changed together with it, and are no warrant for the habit of the Miniſters of the Goſpell. Secondly, be it granted that Miniſters may be diſcerned in their office, by ſome decent habit (though by their life and doctrine they chiefly are to manifeſt themſelves) yet ſuch partly ridiculous, partly ſuperſtitious apparell, as you hang upon your Maſſe-prieſts backe, is not fit: for as the Magiſtrate will not adorne himſelfe with ſtrang and unwonted apparell, but ſuch, as may adde comelines and grace to his perſon; ſo neither are ſuch popiſh ragges ſeemly for a Miniſter of the Goſpell, which onely attend upon their Idolatrous ſacrifice. Thirdly, ſacrificing garments are not meete to be uſed where there is no externall ſacrifice: but under the Goſpell there is no externall ſacrifice: Ergo, the ſacrificing garments of Aaron are not now to be put in uſe. Heb.7 12.

The Proteſtants.

FIrſt, for divers cauſes wee doe condemne and reject theſe ſuperſtitious uſages of the Papiſts: firſt, becauſe of the ſuperfluous and unneceſſarie number of them,fewer by a great deale may ſerve for the Communion to be kept,after Chriſts inſtitution: neither doe we reade, that Chriſt at his laſt ſupper uſed any ſuch, who notwithſtanding would not have left out any thing requiſite and needfull for the Sacrament.

Secondly, the ſuperfluous and exceſſive coſt, in making ſo many Church veſſels of gold and ſilver, ſo many Maſſe garments of ſilke, fine linnen,embroidered with gold, pearle, and precious ſtones, was both an intollerable burthen to the Church, at whoſe charge ſuch things were provided, and a great deale more coſtly, than became the ſimplicitie of the Goſpell.

Thirdly, convenient veſſels and inſtruments, which are neceſſarie for the adminiſtration of the Sacrament, with other ſeemely ornaments: as a decent covering for the Communion table, a cleane and handſome veſſell to keepe the wine, a cup of ſilver for the diſtribution, cleane linnen napkins for the bread; ſuch inſtruments and ornaments of the Lords table wee condemne not, but uſe them our ſelves: yet none of thē for ſuch ends or purpoſes, as they pretend, to diſcerne the body of the Lord by them; as though they were ordained to waite and attend upon the bodily preſence of Chriſt, which they have falſely imagined: but wee doe uſe them for decencie and order ſake, and due reverence, which is to be yeeled to ſo great myſteries. As in their owne decrees, Decr. Gregor. lib. 3.tit.44.c.2. Innocent. 3. Sunt alii, &c. qui veſtimenta tam immunda relinquunt: There be that leave the veſtments ſo uncleane, &c. that they are loathſome unto ſome, &c. wherefore wee will, that they be kept white and cleane. Such comelines and cleanlines in the celebration of the Sacrament we commend, and allow: but their ſuperfluous veſſels and garments the Goſpell hath no need of.

Argum. The Tabernacle, with all things thereto belonging was a figure for the time preſent, untill the time of reformation, Heb. 9.9. The prieſtly garments did belong to the ſervice of the Law: Ergo, they are no more to be uſed now under the time of reformation. Heb.9.9.23.

Againe, as the Apoſtle ſaith, That the ſimilitude of heavenly things, and the heavenly things themſelves, are not purified with the ſame things, Heb. 9.23. ſo neither are they to be adorned, and ſet foorth with the ſame things: the ſimilitude of heavenly things require ſuch ornaments; but the heavenly things themſelves muſt have better ornaments.

In the Apoſtles time they had no conſecrated Altars, but Communion tables, 1 *Cor.*10.21. neither is it like that they uſed veſſels of gold or ſilver in the Lords Supper, when they had neither ſilver nor gold in their purſes, Matth. 10. 9. Bernard ſaith well: Domum Dei decet ſanctitudo, quæ non tam politis marmoribus quàm ornatis moribus delectatur, & puras magis diligit mentes, quàm ſuperauratos parietes: Sanctity becommeth Gods houſe, which is not ſo much delighted with poliſhed marble, as garniſhed manners, and loveth rather a good minde and will, than guilded walles, &c. Churches then are better adorned with devout affections,than coſtly ornaments.

But now ſilke will not ſerve the turne: their Altar-clothes are decked with gold, ſilver, and precious ſtones.

Bonifacius Martyr and Biſhop, being asked, whether it were lawfull to celebrate the Sacrament in wooden veſſels, made anſwer: Quondam ſacerdotes aurei ligneis calicibus utebantur, nunc e contrario lignei ſacerdotes aureis utuntur calicibus: In time paſt golden prieſts uſed wooden cups, now wooden den prieſts uſe golden cups: Decret.par.3.diſtinct.1.c.46. Wherefore it is evident, that in the ſimpler ages of the Church, ſuch ſumptuous ornaments were not requiſite. Firſt they did miniſter in wooden cups; then Zepherinus brought in glaſſe cups: and after that time cups were in uſe; and laſt of all ſilver and golden cups, *ibid.cap.*44.45. And thus by ſteps and degrees, they grew to this ſuperfluitie.

4 See the decree of Euſebius one of their owne Popes before alleaged: and their owne Durand confeſſeth, the ſacred veſtures, à veteri lege videntur aſſumpta, ſeeme to bee taken from the old law, &c. Therefore unfit for the Goſpell.

The Papiſts.

2 THere are other ceremonies, which they obſerve and uſe in the very action it ſelfe and celebration of the Maſſe: as the divers geſtures of the Prieſt, to lift up his eyes, and caſt them downe againe, and to lift them up the ſecond, the third time: ſometime to caſt abroad his hands, to cloſe them againe, to warble with his fingers, to bow, to bend, to ducke, to turne on this ſide and on that, now on the right hand, againe on the left: to ſigh, to ſmite upon his breſt, to lift up the Chalice, and ſhew it to the people, and ſet it downe againe: as alſo the dividing of the hoſt into three parts, which ſignifie three parts of the Church, in Heaven, in Earth, and in Purgatorie: the rinſing of part thereof in wine, and eating part drie, the waſhing of his fingers before conſecration: kiſſing of the Altar, the paten, the booke, the pax, ſprinkling of holy water, cenſing of oders, croſſing the Chalice, the bread, their mouth, breſt and face, which ſigne of the croſſe they make above twentie times in one Maſſe while: Adde alſo unto theſe, their tedious and yrkeſome ſongs, the rude noiſe and unedifying ſound of ſtrange inſtruments, and the whole courſe of their Maſſe-muſicke ſet foorth in a ſtrange language, and endited to the honour of Saints. All theſe ſuperſtitious rites, with divers more, vaine, unfruitfull, abominable, they notwithſtanding with force and maine defend and maintaine, Bellarm.lib. 2. de Miſſa.cap. 14. 15. Concil. Tridentin.ſeſſ. 22. can. 7.

Argum. The lifting up of the hands Bellarmine warranteth by Moſes example, Exod. 17. the bowing of the knees, and the elevating of the eyes by the example of Chriſt, who often lift up his eyes, and prayed kneeling; the elevation of the hoſt, the burning of incenſe, and muſicall inſtruments he deriveth from the ſacrifices of the law: and ſo concludeth the lawfull and neceſſarie uſe of them, *lib.2. de Miſſ.c.*15.

Anſw. Firſt, to lift up the eyes, the hands, to bow the knees, to knocke the breſt, are reverent geſtures, and to be uſed in prayer, and wee willingly retaine them in our ſervices: but they abuſe theſe ſeemely geſtures three waies: firſt, in ſetting forth thereby a falſe and idolatrous ſacrifice; for though it be a comely thing to kneele, yet it is impious to kneele to an Idoll. Secondly, they offend in their mutabilitie and inconſtancie, ſhifting and changing their geſtures, looking ſometime up, ſometime downe, now this way, now that way: as the wiſe man ſaith, *The eyes of the foole are in the corners of the world, Pro.*17.24. but Stephen looked ſtedfaſtly into heaven, *Act.*7.55. ſo they kneele, they duck, they bend, they bow: So did not Moſes, that continued holding up his hands till the evening, and Salomon was upon his knees all the time he prayed, 1 *King.*8. Thirdly, they offend in uſing dumbe and mute geſtures, without any prayer at all, or the ſame in an unknowne tongue: ſo did not the Publicane, who not only ſmote upon his breſt, but ſaid, Lord be mercifull to me a ſinner.

Secondly, if the fleſh of beaſts were now ſacrificed, as under the law, then they might alſo ſhake them and heave them before God, and perfume them with incenſe, as the Levites did: wherefore thoſe ſacrifices being aboliſhed, the rites alſo and ceremonies accompanying them, are alſo extinguiſhed.

Thirdly, a moderate and ſober uſe of Muſicke in the Church wee condemne not, though the practice of the Jewiſh Church doth not warrant it: for their melodious ſound of inſtruments was typicall, ſignifying the ſpirituall melodie and harmonie, which wee ſhould make in our hearts, *Eph.*5.19. And though Muſicke may be well uſed, yet is it by them three waies abuſed: firſt, in adorning a falſe and idolatrous ſervice. Secondly, in playing and ſinging unedifying ſongs. Thirdly, in diſplacing thereby the preaching of Gods word, and fruitfull prayer.

The Proteſtants.

1. THis multitude of human inventions agreeth not with the inſtitution of the Lords Supper: for wee read not of any ſuch kiſſing, kneeling, becking, bowing, or the like ridiculous geſtures to have beene uſed, when our Saviour inſtituted the Supper, nor afterwards by the Apoſtles to have beene practiſed: wherefore we contenting our ſelves with the plaine inſtitution of Chriſt, doe worthily reject all ſuch toyes.

2 Moſt of theſe geſtures are impious, and tend to idolatrie in the adoration of bread and wine, which are but creatures: and they are all frivolous and hypocriticall, ſtealing away true devotion from the heart, and making men to reſt in the outward geſtures of the body. Auguſtine ſaith verie well: Corpus genibus flexis proſternis, collum curvas in oratione, video ubi jaceat corpus, ſed quæro ubi volitet animus? Thou boweſt the knee, bendeſt thy body in prayer, ſtretcheſt out thy necke, I ſee where thy body lieth: but what is become of thy ſoule?

3 Concerning Church ſongs and muſike, Auguſtine thus writeth: Sobriè pſallimus in Eccleſia divina cantica Prophetarum: Wee ſing treatably and ſoberly in the Church the divine ſongs of the Prophets. Two conditions he requireth: firſt, that we ſing holy Pſalmes taken out of the Scriptures. Secondly, that they be ſung treatably and diſtinctly. Etiam illic (ſaith hee) ſi ſonum non ſenſum libido audiendi deſideret, improbatur: Even in good ſongs, if wee follow the ſound, not the ſenſe, it is to be diſcommended: but in Popiſh ſongs neither of theſe conditions is kept: for both the dittie, for the moſt part is idolatrous, ſtuffed with invocation and adoration of Saints, and the note is ſo divided and drawne out in length, that it cannot be underſtood.

Contra Iulian. lib.4.14.

Bernard thus writeth excellently of this matter: *Sæpe ad ſacrum myſterium vocem meam fregi, ut dulcius cantarem: magis delectabar in vocis modulatione, quàm in cordis compunctione: Meditat. cap.*11. Oftentimes in Divine Service I quavered with my voyce to ſing more pleaſantly, and ſo delighted more in tuning my voyce, than in turning my heart. This then is one great fault in ſinging, ſo to regard the note, that we thinke not of that which is ſung: And therefore he ſaith, Sic mulceat aures, ut moveat corda: Let it ſo pleaſe the eares, that it may play upon the heart: Frangis vocem, frange & voluntatem: ſervas conſonantiam vocis: ſerva & concordiam morum: Thou reliſheſt with thy voyce, reliſh alſo with thy heart: thou keepeſt the conſort of the voyce, keepe alſo the harmony of manners: *Meditat.cap.*51. But Popiſh Maſſe ſongs ſet forth with tedious notes, and unknowne ſyllables, doe want this conſort and harmony of the heart, being not underſtood for the moſt part of the ſingers themſelves, much leſſe of thoſe that heare them.

Concerning Organ play: Order hath beene taken by Councels in theſe two points eſpecially. 1 Nolumus quod organicis inſtrumentis reſonet in Eccleſia impudica aut laſciva melodia, ſed ſonus omnino dulcis qui nihil præter hymnos divinos, & cantica ſpiritualia repræſentet: Wee will not have any light, wanton voluntarie melody to be played upon the Organs, but onely ſpirituall and divine hymnes: *Concil. Senonenſ. decret.*17.

2 For the moderating of Organ play, thus alſo it is decreed, *Colonienſ. part.*2. *cap.*12. Illud non rectè fit in quibuſdam Eccleſiis, &c. That is not well done in ſome Churches, when becauſe of the Singers and Organs, better things, as prayer, giving of thanks are ſhortened, are omitted or cleane cut off, &c. Theſe rules in Church muſike are to be kept: which the Popiſh ſort little obſerve in their Maſſe Service.

Let us heare their owne decrees: *Part.*1. *diſtinct.*92. *c.*2. Gregor. In ſancta Romana Eccleſia dudum eſt conſuetudo valde reprehenſibilis extorta, &c. There is of late a verie evill cuſtome riſen up in the holy Church of Rome, &c. That certaine Singers are choſen for the Miniſterie of the altar, &c. and they attend the tuning of the voyce, which ſhould apply themſelves to preaching, and ſo it commeth to paſſe, Dum blanda vox quæritur, quæri congrua vita negligatur: That while they ſtudy for a pleaſing voyce, they neglect a good life: and a ſinging Miniſter pleaſing the people with his voyce, offendeth God with his works: Wherefore I ordaine, Ut altaris Miniſtri cantare non debeant: That the Miniſters of the Altar ſhould not ſing. Likewiſe, *Iohan.*22. *extrav. commun. lib.*3. *tit.*1. *c.*1. reproveth certaine notorious abuſes in the Church muſike: In ſemibreves, & minimas Eccleſiaſtica cantantur, diſcantibus lubricant, triplis, &c. inculcant: They ſing Church ſongs with ſembriefes and minimes, and glide away with triple time and deſcant, &c. This curious kinde of ſinging here reprehended, is notwithſtanding ſtill uſed in the Popiſh Maſſe Service.

The Muſcovites following the Greek Church at this day, in their Leiturgie, In organa nullos ſumptos fecerunt, neque hactenus uſi: Beſtow no coſt upon their Organs, neither hitherto have uſed them. John Faber de religion. Moſcovit.

Tertullian miſliked in his time the extenſion and lifting up of the voyce, Sonos vocis ſubjectos eſſe oportet, &c. Deus non vocis, ſed cordis, ſicut auditor, ſic conſpector eſt, &c. The ſound of the voyce ſhould be ſubmiſſe, &c. God as the hearer, ſo is he the beholder of the heart, not of the voyce. It ſeemeth that in the South Church they uſe not to ſing their Maſſe: for the Debeteros among them a people ſo called, did commend the Roman Maſſe for the muſike, ſaying that they never heard ſuch a Maſſe, but they found fault that one ſang alone without miniſtring the Communion to thoſe which aſſiſted him. Alvares de ſcript. Æthiop. c.30.

Harm. ſect.15. pag.466. The reformed Churches doe thus deliver their opinion : latter confeſſ. of Helvetia. There muſt be a meane and meaſure, as in other things, ſo alſo in publike prayers, that they be not over long and tedious, let therefore the moſt time bee given to the teaching of the Goſpell, &c. Ibid. pag.476. Wittemberg, c.27. Singing becauſe it was uſed in a tongue commonly knowne, it had both a godly uſe, and deſerved great praiſe. Sweveland, c.21. Our Miniſters did firſt of all deteſt this, that many things which were contrarie to the Ibid. pag.478. Scriptures, are mingled with holy prayers and ſongs, as that theſe things are attributed to Saints, which are proper to Chriſt alone, &c. They finde fault with three abuſes in Church muſicke, the tediouſneſſe of them, their unprofitableneſſe being in an unknowne tongue, and the ſuperſtition of them, being indited to the honour of Saints.

As touching other tricks, and toyes, and ceremonies, they thus alſo ſhew their opinion : Confeſſ. Sect.14. p.432. of Belgia, artic.35. Wee doe here worthily reject as a meere prophanation, all the toyes and damnable devices of men, which they have preſumed to adde and mingle with the Sacraments, affirming that all the godly are content, with that onely order and rite, which Chriſt and his Apoſtles have delivered unto Ibid. pag.468. us, &c. Former Confeſſion of Helvetia, artic. 23. As for other unprofitable and innumerable circumſtances of ceremonies, as veſſels, apparrell, veiles, candles, altars, gold, ſilver, ſo farre forth as they ſerve to pervert religion, &c. we doe remove them farre from holy meeting, &c.

Our Doway men ſhall be here alſo witneſſes : who give this note upon thoſe words : Which ſhould 1 Chron.25.1. prophesie on harps : They played on Inſtruments, Pſalmes, and Canticles made by the Prophets, &c. ſo they ſay, that Davids playing on the harp releeved Saul, together with his ſincere devotion : Then Annot. in 1 Sam.16. v.16. in Church ſongs two things are requiſite in their judgement, for the matter, they muſt be propheticall, not ſavouring of human devices, for the manner, they muſt bee ſung and played with devotion, which cannot be where there is no underſtanding.

The eighth Queſtion, Of the forme of the Maſſe, which conſiſteth partly of the Canon, partly of ſuch things as are rehearſed before and after the Canon.

The firſt part, Of the prayers which goe before the Canon of the Maſſe.

WE doe not utterly condemne whatſoever is ſaid or ſung in their Leiturgie or Maſſe : for as they have their introite, ſo wee doe bid the people after due preparation in our Communions to draw neere. We have alſo our Confiteor, a confeſſion of ſinnes to be ſaid before the Communion. Other formes alſo which have beene uſed of ancient time, wee doe not refuſe : as Dominus vobiſcum, The Lord be with you : Kyrie eleyſon, Lord have mercie upon us : Surſum corda, Lift up your hearts : with Alleluia, praiſed be God, and Sanctus, Sanctus, holy, holy ; and Gloria in excelſis, Glorie bee to God on high : the Preface alſo to the Communion, Verè dignum, & juſtum eſt : It is meet, right, and our bounden dutie : And we uſe alſo the Lords Prayer after the diſtribution. Theſe formes we miſlike not, uſing the ſame our ſelves, which notwithſtanding we borrow not from them, but from the ancient and purer ages of the Church. But the corruptions, additions, immutations, which are uſed by them in theſe Prefaces to the Maſſe, we doe utterly condemne, as their Introite and Confiteor, is ſtuft full of idolatrie, and invocation of Saints : their Kyrie eleyſon is nine times repeated in an unknowne tongue. Elevation and adoration was brought in by Pope Honorius, anno 1222. the Agnus was deviſed by Pope Sergius, anno 700. the Pax by Innocentius, plura apud Foxum, pag. 1403.

The ſecond part, Of the Canon of the Maſſe.

The Papiſts.

40. Error. 1. FIrſt, the forme of their Maſſe they have (they ſay) by tradition from the Apoſtles : Rhemiſt. 1 Cor.11. ſect.22. Bellarm. lib.2. de Miſſ. c.19.

Argum. That the Canon of the Maſſe is moſt ancient, and ſo like to take beginning from the Apoſtles time, Bellarmine ſheweth by theſe three conjectures : firſt, becauſe mention is made onely of Martyrs in the Canon, not of the Confeſſors of the Church, who began of later time to be honoured : Secondly, becauſe ſome few words of the Canon have beene added ſince by divers, as by Leo 1. Gregorie 1. with others, whereby it appeareth, that the Canon it ſelfe was before their time. Thirdly, becauſe the author of the Canon is unknowne, and therefore it is like it came by tradition from the Apoſtles, c.20.

Anſwer. Firſt, the adoration and invocation of Martyrs, as alſo of Confeſſors, is but a late ſuperſtitious device, not knowne in the ancient and purer times of the Church : as Origen ſaith, Homil.6. Ioſua. Ioſua non adoraſſet, niſi agnoviſſet Deum : Ioſua would not have worſhipped, if hee had not knowne the Angell to be God : Ambroſ. in 9. 9. ad Roman. Non poteſt genu flecti niſi Deo : The knee cannot be bowed of everie creature but only to God. And againe, lib.4. de interpellat. c.12. upon theſe words in the 73. Pſalme, Whom have I in heaven but thee? Nec ſupereſt in caleſtibus quod amplius quaram,&c. There is nothing in Heaven but Chriſt, which I deſire: Ergo, he needed not, neither deſired the help and aſſiſtance of Saints. S. Hierome alſo ſaith, adverſ. Vigilant. Quis enim ô inſanum caput Martyres unquam adoravit? Who ever (thou fooliſh head) worſhipped or adored Martyrs? Ergo, by this reaſon it appeareth, that the Canon of the Maſſe allowing invocation of Martyrs, is not ſo ancient as Origen, or Ambroſe, and Hieromes time. Neither is it true, that Martyrs only are mentioned in the Canon, for the Virgin Marie and Iohn the Apoſtle were no Martyrs, who are eſpecially remembred: and whereas they conclude thus, after rehearſall made of ſome, Et omnium ſanctorum tuorum: And of all thy Saints under this generall name; not onely Martyrs, but all true confeſſors of Chriſt are contained.

Secondly, the patching together of the Maſſe by divers at ſundrie times doth evidently ſhew that the Canon of the Maſſe, as it now ſtandeth, is not ancient. And whereas hee inferreth that ſome part of the Canon was before Leo and Gregorie, wee grant it, for the Lords Prayer uſed in the Maſſe, and theſe words, This is my body, and the rehearſing of the inſtitution are read in the Goſpell: but this proveth not that the other parts alſo are Apoſtolicall.

Thirdly, the author of the Canon is aſſigned to bee one Scholaſticus by Gregorie, as even now followeth to be ſhewed; Ergo, Bellarmines third conjecture is vaine.

The Proteſtants.

THeir owne authors doe teſtifie, that everie patch of their Maſſe was thruſt in by Popes, later than the Apoſtles: As Sixtus the ſecond brought into the Maſſe, the (Sanctus) Innocentius the firſt, the (Pax) Leo the firſt addeth this clauſe, Sanctum ſacrificium, immaculatam hoſtiam, The holy ſacrifice, the unbloudy Hoſt: Gelaſius the prefaces, collects, graduals: Symmachus, the (Gloria in excelſis) Agapetus the firſt, the proceſſions. Pelagius the ſecond appointed nine prefaces before the Canon. Gregorie the firſt brought in the (Antiphonies, and the Kyrie eleyſon) Sergius the firſt, Agnus Dei: The other parts alſo and members of the Maſſe are aſſigned to their ſeverall authors and inventors: yea, Gregorie the firſt confeſſeth that one Scholaſticus made the moſt part of the Canon. Ergo, it was not deviſed by the Apoſtles. Bellarmine anſwereth, that Gregorie ſetteth not downe any one man by this name Scholaſticus, but meaneth generally ſome notable learned man: and in this ſenſe S. Peter, ſaith hee, which was the author of the Canon, may bee called Scholaſticus, Bellarm. cap.19.

Anſwer. This deviſe of the Jeſuite is rather to bee laughed at, than to bee confuted. Who ever heard before that S. Peter and the other Apoſtles were Scholaſtici, Schoolemen? What is this elſe, but to ſet the ſpirit of God to ſchoole, in ſaying that the Apoſtles being men endued with the Holy Ghoſt, were brought up in ſchooles? Againe, Gregorie findeth fault with the ſaid Scholaſticus, that in compoſing the Canon, hee would put in his owne prayers, and leave out the Lords prayer: but if this Scholaſticus had beene Peter, I thinke Gregorie would not have beene ſo bold, as to have rebuked him: Or elſe, ſaith Bellarmine, this Scholaſticus was not the author of the Canon, but of certaine extraordinarie prayers.

Contra. I will here oppoſe the judgement of Eſpenceus a grave writer among the Papiſts, who calleth Scholaſticum uſitati Canonis authorem: Scholaſticus the author of the uſuall Canon, Comment. in 1 Timoth. p.31.d.

Argum.2. There bee many things contained in the Canon contrarie to the doctrine of the Apoſtles, as invocation of Saints, adoration of bread, prayer for the dead, with many other groſſe errors, as afterward ſhall be ſhewed: Ergo, the Canon was not inſtituted by the Apoſtles.

Argum. 3. S. Hierome findeth fault with ſome in his time, that in their prayers and oblations uſed to ſay, Qui ſedes ſuper Cherubim & Seraphim: Thou that ſitteſt upon the Cherubim and Seraphim: Illorum pius, ſed coarguendus error: Whoſe error, though it may have a ſhew of pietie, is worthy of reproofe, becauſe that no where mention is made in Scripture, that God ſitteth upon the Seraphim, but only upon the Cherubim: tom.4. epiſt. ad Damaſ. From hence I reaſon thus; If they uſe the ſame forme in their Maſſe oblation, then is it an error, and ſo cannot be fathered upon the Apoſtles; if they doe not; then doe they not uſe that forme which was in Hieromes time, and ſo it cannot bee of any great antiquitie, let them chuſe which part they will.

Ieremy Patriarke ſeemeth to ſay, that their Leiturgie was firſt compoſed by Saint Iames and Saint Marke, Sed quia utriuſque volumina fuerunt depravata, But becauſe both their bookes were depraved afterward, ordinata ſunt, they were ordained firſt by Baſil, then by Chryſoſtome, &c. they hold then not the Apoſtles, but thoſe two Fathers to be the authors of the Canon of their Maſſe.

The Æthiopians ſay no Maſſes, pro redemptione animarum, for the redemption of ſoules, [a] Zaga Zabo: neither yet for the [b] dead: but the Canon of the Latine Maſſe is ſaid for both: therefore it is not like the Apoſtles were the authors of it, for then it ſhould generally have beene received.

Confeſſion of Saxony: It is manifeſt that the Greeke and Latine Canons are unlike the one to the other, &c. and it appeareth, that in the Latine Canon many jags and peeces were by little and little patched together of ignorant authors, &c. Harm. ſect.14. pag.450.

Beatus Rhenanus confeſſeth, that the preface to the Canon of the Maſſe, and ſome other parts were added by the Biſhop of Rome. Duedo a Divine of Lovaine was ſo farre from thinking the Canon of the Maſſe to have beene compoſed by the Apoſtles, that hee ſuſpecteth ſome things, ab hereticis conficta, to have beene invented by heretiques: So that it is probable, that as Gilbertus Cognatus, ſometime Eraſmus Scribe and Notarie, reporteth, that the Canon of the Maſſe, as it is now uſed in the Popiſh Church, was firſt compiled by Gratian, then augmented by Gregory the ninth, anno 1227. and afterward by Boniface the eighth, anno 1300.

The Papiſts.

2. THe Canon of the Maſſe (ſay they) is perfect and abſolute, voyd of all error, and therefore not to be changed or abrogated, Concil. Trident. ſeſſ.22. can.6. Bellarm. cap.21.

The Proteſtants.

BUt we on the contrarie ſide, more truly and agreeable to Scripture, doubt not to ſay, that there can be nothing more corrupt, abominable, fuller of all impietie, hereſie, lying, than is their idolatrous ſacrifice of the Maſſe: as it ſhall now more particularly appeare by the collection of the ſeverall errors.

A full halfe hundred of Errors and Blaſphemies that are to be found in the Canon of the Maſſe, as touching the matter.

1. THe Prieſt ſaith, We pray thee accept theſe gifts, theſe holy and unſpotted ſacrifices. Thus he maketh Bread and Wine the ſacrifices of the Goſpell: for theſe words are ſpoken before Conſecration. And whereas Bellarmine ſaith, it is called a ſacrifice, becauſe it is intended and ſet apart to be a ſacrifice: Contra. Yet it is not already a Sacrifice, much leſſe unſpotted, ſeeing it is neither unſpotted in reſpect of it ſelfe, being not yet made the body and bloud of Chriſt, nor in reſpect of the offerer, who is a ſinfull man.

2 The Prieſt ſpeaking of the bread and wine, thus ſaith; Which wee offer unto thee for thy holy Catholique Church. And againe afterward; Which wee offer for the redemption of our ſoules. What great blaſphemie is this, to offer bread and wine for the redemption of the Church, for the which Chriſt in great love offered up himſelfe? and ſo to make his death of no force.

Bellarmine. Bread and wine is not offered for the Church, but the ſacrifice to bee made of bread and wine. Contra. Then the Prieſt ſhould ſay, Which wee ſhall offer, not, which wee doe offer: but that which he offereth is nothing but bread and wine, whatſoever it is which hee offereth afterward.

3 The Rubricke of the Maſſe willeth that the Prieſt ſhould pray for his owne Biſhop onely and for himſelfe, and his ſpeciall friends: But charitie would that hee ſhould pray for all Biſhops, Paſtors and Miniſters: and Chriſt biddeth us not onely to pray for our friends, but alſo for our enemies.

4 The Prieſt firſt prayeth for the Pope, then for his owne Biſhop, laſtly for the King: but S. Paul would have prayers firſt of all made for all men, but eſpecially for Kings, 1 Timoth. 2.2. they ſhould firſt of all be remembred: and S. Peter ſetteth downe the King as the chiefe, 1 Pet. 2.13. Agatho B. of Rome writing to Conſtantine the Emperour, confeſſeth himſelfe Imperii famulum, a ſervant to the Emperour, Action.4. Synod.6. Conſtantin.

5 He ſaith, and with thy ſervant our Pope: hee is their Pope and Biſhop onely, that are under his Dioceſſe and Seigniorie: he hath no juriſdiction over other Churches: Pelagius 2.1. epiſtol. decretal. calleth it profanum vocabulum, a prophane name to bee called univerſall Biſhop: and Gregor. 1. ad Eulog. Patriarke of Conſtantinople findeth fault with him, for giving him the ſtile of univerſall Pope, calling it ſuperbæ appellationis verbum, a proud name. And here alſo let it bee noted, whether our Engliſh Papiſts can bee true ſubjects, that in their Maſſe and other prayers preferre the Pope before their Prince, and acknowledge him to be their Pope and Biſhop.

6 Hoc ſacrificium laudis: This ſacrifice of praiſe: it is onely then a ſpirituall ſacrifice of thankſgiving, not a materiall and externall ſacrifice, as they beare men in hand. Bellarmine anſwereth, that the Sacrifice of Chriſts body is called a Sacrifice of praiſe, becauſe thereby God is praiſed, &c. Contra. Firſt, God thereby is greatly diſhonoured, when they adore a peece of bread, and Chriſts body alſo is diſgraced, being made ſubject to wormes and corruption, and to bee eaten of mice and dogs: all which inconveniences enſue upon the carnall preſence. Secondly, the Apoſtle ſheweth what the ſacrifice of praiſe is, namely, the fruit of the lips, Heb. 13.15. but Chriſts body is not the fruit of the lips: though their Prieſts thinke they can make Chriſts body with five words ſpeaking, yet I thinke they dare not ſay that Chriſts body is the fruit of the Prieſts lips: If they ſhould, the Apoſtle confuteth them, who expoundeth himſelfe, that the fruit of the lips is the confeſſion of the name of God: Ergo, Chriſts body is not the ſacrifice of praiſe.

7 The Prieſt ſaith, Worſhipping the memoriall of the Virgin: But Chriſt inſtituted the Sacrament to to be kept in remembrance of himſelfe, and not for the worſhip of Saints.

1 John 2.2.

8 By whoſe merits and prayers, namely of the Saints, grant we may be defended. But S. John ſaith, If any man ſinne, we have an Advocate with the Father, Ieſus Chriſt the righteous, 1 John 2.2.

9 In the ſecond prayer of the Canon, they pray by vertue of the oblation of bread and wine to bee delivered from eternall damnation: for as yet the elements are not conſecrated. Bellarm. They conclude this prayer, through Chriſt our Lord, by whom, and not by the oblation, they deſire it to bee granted. Contra. They doe for faſhion ſake indeed conclude their prayers, through Chriſt, &c. but they doe alſo aſcribe their petition to the vertue of the oblation: that God being well pleaſed with that oblation, &c. would deliver them from eternall damnation, &c.

10 Wee beſeech thee (ſaith the Prieſt) to receive this oblation, which wee beſeech thee in all things to make bleſſed: Here the Prieſt is made a Mediator betweene Chriſt and his Father; deſiring God to ſanctifie the body and bloud of his Sonne. Thus beginneth the third prayer of the Canon. Bellarmine anſwereth, they pray not here for the Euchariſt now conſecrated, but to bee conſecrated, that it may be made the body and bloud of Chriſt, c.23. Contra. Firſt, they pray for that oblation, whereby they prayed a little before to bee delivered from damnation: Ergo, for an oblation conſecrated. Secondly, after the conſecration they pray alſo in the ſame manner, Which wee beſeech thee vouchſafe to accept.

11 Who the next day afore he ſuffered: But the Scripture ſaith, The ſame night. For this is my body: Here they have put in enim, of their owne, and left out, Quod pro vobis datur. Such is their boldneſſe, that they are not aſhamed to change the words of our Saviour Chriſt.

12 Take yee, &c. Why then doth the Prieſt take it alone? ſeeing Chriſt appointed it to be taken of many.

13 Eat yee, &c. Why then doe they hang it up in a pix? ſeeing Chriſt would have it eaten.

14 Drinke yee all of this: Why then doth the Prieſt drinke it alone? ſeeing by the inſtitution all are to drinke of it.

15 He ſaith further in the fourth prayer: The holy bread of eternall life, which vouchſafe thou with a pleaſant countenance to behold: The bread of eternall life is Chriſt himſelfe, if this be hee, how dare yee preſume to offer him up to his Father? Bellarmine anſwereth, that they pray not in reſpect of the Sacrifice offered, but in reſpect of the Miniſter that offereth. Contra. They deſire God not to behold the Prieſt, but the oblation.

16 As thou didſt vouchſafe to accept the righteous gifts of Abel, and the ſacrifice of Abraham. Here the Sacrifice of Chriſt is compared to the ſacrifice of beaſts: and the Prieſt ſeemeth to attribute as much efficacie to the one, as to the other: he compareth the gifts and ſacrifices together, not the ſacrificers in reſpect of their devotion, as Bellarmine trifleth.

17 And the holy Sacrifice which thy high Prieſt Melchiſedech did offer unto thee. This is a plaine untruth, and a flat lye, as wee have ſhewed already, that Melchiſedech ſacrificed bread and wine.

18 After the words of conſecration rehearſed, the Prieſt is willed in the Rubricke, to rub his fingers, becauſe of the crums: but if it be Chriſts body, it cannot be crummie. And againe, let the fourth croſſe be made upon the bread. Here it is called bread after the conſecration: then is it not Chriſts body: So by their owne Canon they are convinced to be in an error.

19 Command thou theſe to be brought by the hands of thy holy Angell unto the high Altar in Heaven. What an abſurd thing is this, that hee ſhould deſire that to be carried into Heaven, which hee eateth and devoureth? And if this bee the body of Chriſt, what need the help of an Angell to carrie it up to Heaven? Is not Chriſt able to lift up his owne body? Or what need that to bee conveyed to Heaven, which was never from thence? Bellarm. The Angell doth not carrie up Chriſts body into Heaven, but their ſervice and obedience. Contra. He ſaith, Iube hac, &c. Command theſe things, &c. looking toward the Hoſt and the Chalice: Ergo, hee meaneth that Chriſts body and bloud ſhould be carried.

20 As many of us as ſhall receive thy Sons body and bloud: And yet for the moſt part none receive, but the Prieſt; and when the people doe communicate, the wine they have not: how then can he ſay, As many?

21 Remember, O Lord, the ſoules of thy ſervants which reſt in the ſleepe of peace, and grant them a place of refreſhing and reſt: Here is another error contrarie to the Scriptures in praying for the dead, and the prayer alſo is contrarie to it ſelfe: for firſt he ſaith, they reſt in peace, and yet afterward prayeth for their refreſhing: thus beginneth the fifth prayer of the Canon. Bellarmine anſwereth, that they which are in Purgatorie, are at reſt from the works of ſinne, though not from torment, c.25. Contra. They which are dead in Chriſt, *doe reſt from their labours, Apocal.*14.13. Ergo, from all laborious and painfull torments.

Apocal.14.13.

22 In the ſixth prayer, Vouchſafe that they may have a portion with the Saints, ending through Ieſus Chriſt, &c. The Rubricke forbiddeth Amen to bee ſaid, contrarie to the Apoſtle, 1 *Cor.*14.16. that would have Amen to be ſaid to the publike bleſſing and thankſgiving in the Church.

1 Cor.14.16.

23 Deliver us by the bleſſed interceſſion of the Virgin: What then is become of Chriſts mediation and interceſſion? who ever liveth to make interceſſion for us, *Heb.*7.25.

Heb.7.25.

24 Let this mingling together of the body and bloud of our Lord Ieſus Chriſt, be unto me ſalvation of minde and body: Then is not Chriſts bloud ſhed upon the Croſſe the full ſufficient and perfect ſalvation of mankinde, if there be another ſalvation beſide.

25 Againe, if it be the verie body and bloud of Chriſt, how can they be mingled together, ſeeing the verie body and bloud of Chriſt cannot be divided? Bellarmine anſwereth, that they are mingled onely by reaſon of the formes of bread and wine which remaine. Contra. Formes and accidents cannot be mingled without ſubſtances, and therefore if there be no ſubſtance remaining but of Chriſts body and bloud, it followeth that they are mingled. And further, ſeeing they hold by way of their deviſed concomitance, that the fleſh of Chriſt is with the bloud, and the bloud with the fleſh, what need then any ſuch mixture or mingling at all?

26 Grant me ſo worthily to take this body and bloud, that I may merit to receive forgiveneſſe of ſins: O ſinfull man, how canſt thou merit that which is Chriſts onely gift? And in the ſixth prayer of the Canon, the Prieſt prayeth thus, Not weighing our merit, &c. and here he prayeth for merit: So that their Maſſe is contrarie to it ſelfe.

27 Let the Prieſt bow himſelfe to the Hoſt, ſaying, I worſhip thee, I glorifie thee, I praiſe thee: What monſtrous idolatrie is this, thus to worſhip a peece of bread?

28 The Sacrament of thy body and bloud, &c. If it be a Sacrament of Chriſts body, then is it not the body it ſelfe: for the ſame thing cannot be both the Sacrament, and the thing whereof it is a Sacrament: the ſigne, and the thing ſignified; the ſhadow and the body: Sacraments are lively ſhadowes, but Chriſts body is not a ſhadow, Coloſſ.2.17. Coloſſ.2.17.

29 Haile for ever, thou moſt holy fleſh of Chriſt, &c. Haile for ever, thou moſt heavenly drinke: Where doe you finde in Scripture, to ſalute God in this manner? the Angell indeed ſaid to Marie: Ave, Haile: and S. Iohn forbiddeth us to ſay to an heretike, Ave, which the Rhemiſts tranſlate, God ſave you, Epiſt.2.10. Is it not then a ſeemly thing to ſay to Chriſt, All health, haile, or God ſave you ſir? that we ſhould bleſſe him, of whom we looke to be bleſſed.

30 Let not this Sacrament be unto my judgement or condemnation: thus they thinke that Chriſts fleſh may be eaten to condemnation, contrarie to the Scripture: Whoſoever eateth my fleſh hath eternall life, Iohn 6.54. Iohn 6.54.

31 Deliver me by thy precious body from all mine iniquities, &c. and grant that for ever I bee not ſeparated from thee: This is contrarie to their owne doctrine, that a man cannot be ſure to be preſerved from finall falling: for if the Maſſe bee an available ſacrifice, as they hold, then it is available to this end, that they ſhall not be finally ſeparated from God.

32 Out of a temporall gift, let it be to us a remedy everlaſting: Here hee calleth the body and fleſh of Chriſt a temporall gift, which is blaſphemie, unleſſe they will grant that there is bread ſtill.

33 Let this Communion purge us from ſinne: If they meane the principall purging of our ſinne, ſo doth Chriſt onely purge us, Heb.1.3. If they underſtand the inſtrumentall meanes of our purgation, ſo are we purged and juſtified onely by faith, Rom.3.28. I conclude that a man is juſtified by faith, without the workes of the Law. Heb.1.3. Rom.3.28.

34 Reſpect not my ſinnes, but the faith of thy Church: By this reaſon one may bee profited by anothers faith, which is contrarie to the Scriptures: The juſt ſhall live by faith: his owne, and not anothers, Rom.1.17. and belike the Prieſt thus ſaying, hath no faith himſelfe. Rom.1.17.

35 Let us worſhip the ſigne of the Croſſe: What I pray you will not theſe Idolaters worſhip?

36 Let this ſacrifice which I have offered, availe to obtaine remiſſion of ſinnes: If the Maſſe bee available for this end, wherefore then died Chriſt?

37 The Prieſt prayeth, that God would reſtore the land conſecrated by Chriſts bloud to the Chriſtian faith: But where doe they finde that the land was conſecrated by Chriſts bloud, whereas the Scripture ſaith, that the land is defiled with bloud, that is, ſtandeth accurſed, Numb.35.33. And the Apoſtle ſaith, He hath conſecrated, (not the earth, but) them that are ſanctified, Heb.10.14. and, the bloud of Chriſt purgeth our conſcience, Heb.9.14. not the terrene part. Numb.35.33. Heb.9.14.

38 And whereas they pray, that the holy land may be recovered out of the hand of the enemies of the Croſſe: which God hath not done: how is now their Maſſe available for the obtaining of temporall benefits, as Bellarmine wou'd beare us in hand?

39 The Prieſt prayeth alſo, That the vowes of the faithfull may be directed toward the delivering of that land: Theſe were ſuperſtitious and unlawfull vowes: as S. Hierome writeth upon theſe words of the Pſalme, I hope to ſee God in the land of the living: Ergo, Terra Iudaea, quae illius ditionis erat, &c. Therefore the land of the Jewes which was under his regiment, is not that land of the living, but he draweth us to a ſpirituall underſtanding: Hierom. de terra promiſſ. And againe upon theſe words, The Lord loveth the gates of Sion more than all the tabernacles of Iacob: Nunquid iſtas portas diligit Deus, quas videmus in cineres, &c. Doth God love thoſe gates which are turned to aſhes? Ne ſtultis quidem hoc perſuaderi poteſt, Verie fooles will not bee ſo perſwaded. So then all ſuch vowes are fooliſh, that are made in reſpect of the terreſtriall Jeruſalem, and by Hieromes ſentence they are fooles that are ſo perſwaded.

40 In the end of the Maſſe, according to the uſe of Sarum, there is annexed the forme of bleſſing, or conſecrating the Paſchal Lamb, with this prayer, Vouchſafe to ſanctifie this Paſchal Lamb, that as many of thy people as doe eat thereof, may be repleniſhed with all heavenly benediction, &c. What groſſe ſuperſtition is this, that they ſhould ſtill retaine the uſe of the Paſchal Lamb, which cannot be, but to the great derogation of the true Paſchal Lamb Chriſt Jeſus, that the body being come, the ſhadow ſhould be ſtill retained? And I have heard it credibly reported, by one ſometime brought up in Barnwell Abbey by Cambridge, that the Monkes did uſe once a yeere to roſt a Lambe whole, and ſo to eat it with herbes: what greater ſuperſtition can be found among the Jewes.

Other Errors in the manner of celebrating Maſſe.

41 NOw to make up the halfe hundred of errors in the Maſſe, as thoſe before going are found in the matter, ſo theſe following are in the manner: as firſt, all is done and ſaid in the Latine tongue, not underſtood of the people, and often not of the Prieſt himſelfe, contrary to S. Pauls rule, that all things ſhould be done to edifying, 1 Cor. 14. 12. and they that ſpeak words not underſtood, ſpeak in the aire, verſ. 9. 1 Cor. 14. 12.

42 Againe, they uſe many irkſome, tedious, and frivolous repetitions of the ſame words, as Benedicamus Domino, Let us bleſſe the Lord, is ſung ten ſeverall times together, and Ite, miſſa eſt, is ſung thirteene ſeverall times, with long and tedious notes. This is contrary to the precept of Chriſt, that we ſhould not, when we pray, uſe vaine repetitions, Matth. 6. 7. for ſo the word βαττολογεῖν, there uſed ſignifieth, being taken from the Poet Battus, that uſed often to inculcate or repeat the ſame things. Matth. 6. 7.

43 The Prieſt is charged in the Rubrick to ſay divers prayers, privatim, ſecretly to himſelfe: as that prayer, Deliver us Lord from all evill, paſt, preſent, to come, &c. And, Thou Lambe of God, that takeſt away the ſins of the world. Likewiſe, where he ſaith, Forſake not us thy ſervants, but forgive us our ſins, &c. theſe and many other words muſt be pronounced to himſelfe: contrary to S. Paul, who would have prayers ſo ſaid, that they may be underſtood, and thereunto Amen anſwered by the people, 1 Cor. 14. 16. 1 Cor. 14. 16.

44 The Prieſt is taught by the Rubrick to make thirty ſeverall croſſes at the leaſt upon the bread, the cup, the Altar, his forehead: as may appeare in the Canon of the Maſſe, according to the uſe of Sarum, and as it is tranſlated by Maſter Fox in the beginning of the tenth book of the Acts and Monuments: wherein firſt they doe contrary to that which they profeſſe in the Canon, ſaying thus, Divina inſtitutione formati, Being informed by the divine inſtitution. But no ſuch croſſing is to be found in Chriſts inſtitution, which they profeſſe to follow. Secondly, whereas they uſe to croſſe themſelves either againſt the devill and evill ſpirits, they need not feare any ſuch thing, where Chriſts body is: or elſe they uſe it, to bleſſe withall: but they have no reaſon to bleſſe Chriſts body, whereby they receive bleſſing. Thirdly, if the ſigne of the croſſe be ſo effectuall a ſigne, as they make it, once or twice were enough, or too much: but the making of it ſo often, ſheweth it to be a vaine, idle, ſuperſtitious and unprofitable ceremony, as they uſe it.

45 Their geſture in ſaying of Maſſe, is ſo changeable, ſo ridiculous, ſo affected, that a man would think a Player were comming forth upon the ſtage, when the Prieſt addreſſeth him to the Maſſe: nay, Roſcius was not ſo full of action, as the Maſſing Prieſt is of geſture, varying and changing it at the leaſt forty or fifty times in a Maſſe while: firſt hee boweth his body: then he rouſeth himſelfe and kiſſeth the Altar on the right ſide: he boweth againe, and looketh toward the Hoſt, he joyneth his hands, wipeth his fingers, lifteth up the Hoſt: then he lifteth up his eyes, and boweth himſelfe, and lifteth up his eyes againe: he boweth againe, and lifteth up the Hoſt above his forehead, uncovereth the cup, and holdeth it betweene his hands, keeping his thumbe and forefinger together: then hee boweth, and lifteth up the cup a little, then to his breſt, or above his head, he ſetteth it downe againe, and wipeth his fingers for feare of crums: then he ſpreadeth his armes acroſſe: hee boweth his body; then riſing kiſſeth the Altar on the right ſide, after this, he ſmiteth his breſt: then he uncovereth the cup, maketh five croſſes with the Hoſt, beyond the cup twice, on each ſide, under the cup and before it: then he layeth his hands upon the Altar: the Deacon then reacheth the Prieſt the Paten, which he putteth to his right eye, then to his left, and maketh a croſſe beyond his head with it, kiſſeth it, and layeth it downe, then he breaketh the Hoſt in three, holding two peeces in his left hand, one in his right over the cup, which with a croſſe he letteth fall into it: the Prieſt then kiſſeth the Corporal, the Deacon taketh the Pax from the Prieſt, giveth it to the Subdeacon, and hee to the Quire: then humbling himſelfe, he firſt taketh the body, then the bloud; ſo he goeth to the right horne of the Altar: then the Subdeacon powreth in wine, and the Prieſt rinſeth the cup and waſheth his hands, &c. he turneth himſelfe to the people, commeth againe to the Altar, and turneth to the people the ſecond time, then bowing his body, and cloſing his hands he prayeth to himſelfe: he riſeth, againe, making the ſigne of the croſſe, and bowing againe ſo goeth from the Altar. This levity and inconſtancie, in turning this way, and that way, to the right hand, to the left, now up, now downe, backward and forward, caſting the armes acroſſe, warbling the fingers, &c. Moſes uſed it not in his prayer, that continued holding up his hands in prayer againſt Amalek, till he was weary: and Salomon endured kneeling on his knees, and ſtretching out his hands to heaven, till he had made an end of his prayer, 1 King. 8. verſ. 54. 1 King. 8. 54.

Errors

Errors collected out of the Cauteles of the Maſſe, that follow after the Canon.

46 THe eighth Cautele is, that if the Prieſt chance to conſecrate water for wine, hee muſt conſecrate againe. Why maſters, if theſe words, this is my body, be effectuall to make the body of Chriſt, why not ſpoken over water, as well as over wine? If ye urge Chriſts power, he was able to turne water into wine, and ſo likewiſe water into his body: if ye urge Chriſts inſtitution, that conſecrated onely in wine, he uſed no water at all, and therefore ye breake his inſtitution.

47 In the tenth Cautele, A Prieſt excommunicate is willed to proceed. Can he then make Chriſts body, that is not of his body? this were monſtrous: for then not onely Prieſts, but every one may make Chriſts body, even an Heathen or Infidell: for he that is excommunicate is ſuſpended from his office, and is for the time as an Heathen man, Matth. 18.17.

Matth.18.17.

48 Cautele 12. If a Flie or Spider fall into the cup after conſecration, they muſt be firſt waſhed, then burned, and the waſhing and aſhes be kept in the ſacring veſſell: if the blood bee poiſoned, it muſt not bee drunk, but kept in a cleane veſſell. But this Cautele telleth us not, what ſhall become of that which is kept, but there it remaineth ſtill, till it ſowre or ſtink, or putrifie with wormes, which is as bad as the falling in of a flie: and how an abſurd thing is it, that Chriſts bloud may be poiſoned, ſeeing there be many preſervatives againſt poiſon, much inferiour to Chriſts body?

49 Cautele 18. If a drop of bloud fall upon the Altar, or Altar-cloth, table, &c. the Prieſt muſt lick it up with his tongue, and the place muſt be waſhed, and the waſhing laid up, &c.

Contra. Here the Prieſt hath a good office, to lick ſtones and tables, and clothes with his tongue: but I would aske them, whether every drop of the Chalice be Chriſts whole body, or part: if a part, then is he divided: if the whole, then, how many drops in the Chalice, ſo many bodies of Chriſt are there at once: they cannot winde themſelves from theſe abſurdities.

50 Cautele 22. If any man vomit up the Euchariſt, it muſt be burned, and the aſhes laid up by the Altar, &c. What maſters, will ye make Chriſt an heretike, that ye burne his body? And I pray you whence are theſe aſhes? they cannot be of accident: ye muſt either grant that it is bread that is burned; or Chriſts body: if the firſt, then there is no tranſubſtantiation: if the ſecond, it is blaſphemie. And cannot Chriſts body ſtay a vomit, which many a medicine is able to doe?

51 Cautele 23. If the Sacrament be eaten of a mouſe, or if it be loſt, let the Prieſt doe penance, &c. Thus by the popiſh doctrine, mice may devoure Chriſts body, and he that found the loſt ſheepe may be loſt himſelfe.

52 Cautele 24. If by the negligence of the Prieſt the Hoſt doe putrifie, let him doe penance, &c. If the accidents only putrifie, there is no harme done, and this penance may be ſpared: if the Hoſt it ſelfe putrifie, as this Cautele ſaith, then doe they make Chriſts glorious body corruptible.

Thus we ſee with how many and what great and horrible blaſphemies, this popiſh and ſuperſtitious Canon of the Maſſe is ſtuffed: indeed it is an epitome & abridgement of Papiſtry, the marrow, ſinewes, and bones of their idolatrous profeſſion: yea the very darling of the popiſh Church: it is the very proper badge and marke of a Papiſt. He that hateth the Maſſe, hateth the whore of Babylon: he that loveth the Maſſe, cannot love the truth.

If then I ſhould be demanded at once, which of all popiſh blaſphemies and hereſies I think moſt abominable, contrary to the faith, and to be abhorred of all good Chriſtians: (though I know that there are many of this kinde) yet I would readily anſwer, the Maſſe: the invention whereof, I am well aſſured, cannot be aſcribed but to him that is the author of all lies, and blaſphemies.

Laſtly, let us ſee how well the popiſh Maſſe agreeth with their own Canons: concerning the mingling of the bread and wine together, it is contrary to the decree of Iulius: Decret. par. 3. diſt. 2. c. 7. Illud, quod pro complemento communionis intinctam tradunt Euchariſtiam, &c. That for the complement of the Communion, they doe give to the people the Euchariſt ſopped, or dipped, &c. it hath no warrant from the Goſpell.

Bellarmine anſwereth, that this decree forbiddeth onely that commixtion which is given to the people in the Sacrament, not that which is done in the Maſſe, lib. 2. *de Miſſ. c.*27. reſp. ad object. 4.

Contra. The reaſon in the decree uſed, is generall againſt all mingling of the Sacrament: Seorſim panis, ſeorſim calicis, &c. The bread was commended or ſanctified apart, and the cup apart: neither did Chriſt give dipped bread to any of his Diſciples, but to Iudas, to ſignifie his prodition, not any inſtitution of a Sacrament. Wherefore this decree is moſt evident againſt this ſuperſtitious mixtion in the Maſſe.

Concil. Colonienſ. par. 2 c. 11. Videbimur operæpretium facturi, &c. We ſhall doe very well, if we cauſe the Miſſals and Breviaries to be peruſed, that cutting off ſuperſtitious things, & quaſi ſuperſtitioſius, &c. and things ſuperſtitiouſly brought in, &c. How can the Miſſall or Maſſe-ſervice bee void of error, which is ſtuffed with many ſuperfluous and ſuperſtitious things?

Synod. Auguſtenſ. c. 33. Quod ad apocrypha, &c. As touching apocryphall, fooliſh, and unſincere matters, by the corruption of time crept into the Breviaries, the often repetion of Pſalmes, innumerable Suffrages, new Collects, Sequencies, Prefaces, to be amended, and taken out of the Services, &c.

This Canon reprehendeth vaine repetitions, the multitude of Collects in the Maſſe-ſervice, which yet remaine unpurged.

I will laſtly inſert the teſtimony of Lindanus an Arch-papiſt, who reporting the words of Agobertus Biſhop of Lyons: Antiphonarium correximus, &c. We have corrected the Antiphonarie, cutting off what ſeemed to us ſuperfluous, light, falſe, blaſphemous, ridiculous, fantaſticall. He addeth further: Who if he were now alive to ſee our Miſſals, &c. how would he call them? in the which not onely Apocryphall ſtories out of the Goſpell of Nicodemus, and other toyes are inſerted, but ſecret prayers, mendis turpiſſimis conſpurcata, defiled with moſt filthy faults: yea the Canon it ſelfe, variat & redundat, doth vary and exceed, &c. Lindan. lib. 3. de interpret. Scriptur. c. 3. Here is a grave teſtimony of a learned writer of their ſide againſt the errors, faults, and corruptions of the Maſſe: how then are they not aſhamed to juſtifie the ſame as perfect, and without reprehenſion.

I conclude therefore with that ſaying of Gregorie: as he ſaid concerning the word Antichriſtus; ſo may I in as good ſenſe of this word Miſſa, as it is now underſtood of Papiſts: Si ſpectes quantitatem vocis, duæ ſunt ſyllabæ; ſi pondus iniquitatis, eſt univerſa pernicies: If you marke the quantity of the word, it ſtandeth but of two ſyllables: but if we reſpect the weight of iniquity, it containeth all impiety and ungodlineſſe. As one ſometime pleaſantly deſcanting upon the name, ſaid, that the Maſſe was called beyond the Sea (Miſſe:) for that all is amiſſe in it.

John Mailer Fox pag. 1201. col. 2. & edition 1610 p. 1099. 1. 35.

Beſide this opinion, which their owne men have of the Canon of the Popiſh Maſſe: the Grecians to this day refuſe it, diſſenting from the Latines in many materiall points, as hath been before ſhewed in their ſeverall places: as in their private Maſſes, in reſerving of the Sacrament, in miniſtring with unleavened bread, in adoration of the Sacrament, and ſuch other points wherein the difference is ſo great, that the Muſcovite Grecians, if a Latine Prieſt chance to ſay Maſſe upon one of their Altars, they forthwith breake them downe, as defiled and polluted: And they hold the Prieſts of the Latine Church to be no better than heretikes, and vouchſafe not to ſalute them.

Sacranus Elucidar. error. 23 err.

The Æthiopike Church alſo utterly rejecteth the Popiſh Canon of the Maſſe, for they reſerve not the Sacrament, they miniſter in both kindes, they ſay no Maſſes for the dead, or for remiſſion of ſins, neither allow they of Maſſe without a Communion, and other divers points there are, as hath beene before declared in the particular queſtions, wherein they diſſent from the Romane Church.

And for theſe and other ſuch matters, the reformed Churches alſo reject the popiſh Canon: as the confeſſion of Saxonie ſaith, that they have certaine fragments called the Canons of the Maſſe, alleaged againſt the cleare light of truth.

Harm. ſect. 14. pag 450.

Soli Deo immortali Patri, Filio, cum Spiritu ſancto, ſit honor & imperium ſempiternum.

BEfore I leave this place, being a controverſie of ſuch great weight, I thought good to inſert the arguments of the Martyrs againſt the reall preſence, and the contrary reaſons uſed againſt them by the Papiſts in thoſe dayes.

The Papiſts then in time paſt have thus reaſoned for their carnall preſence.

Arg. 1. THe ſame body which was given for us, is truly in the Sacrament: for our Saviour Chriſt ſaid, This is my body, which ſhall be given for you.

But his true body was given for us.

Anſw. Biſhop Cranmer anſwereth: His true body is truly preſent to them that truly receive him, but ſpiritually: ibid. Which anſwer may be further explained thus: Firſt, we grant, that the ſame is preſent, but not after the ſame manner: Chriſts body may be truly preſent, although it be not there carnally: he is preſent ſpiritually by faith, which is his true preſence. Secondly, we turne this argument againſt them: for if the ſame body of Chriſt be preſent in the Sacrament, which he gave for us; then is it not preſent, but onely to thoſe for whom it was given: but it was given onely for the elect and beleevers, therefore to the wicked and Infidels Chriſt is not preſent in the Sacrament, becauſe for ſuch he gave not his body: and ſo it followeth, that wicked men doe not eat Chriſt in the Sacrament, and conſequently Chriſts body is not there carnally preſent: for then the wicked, that communicate, ſhould eat thereof.

Contra. Chriſt, when he ſpake theſe words, this is my body, ſpake of the ſubſtance of his body, not of the efficacie or effect: Chriſts body then is more than ſpiritually, that is, effectually preſent: Chedſey.

Anſw. We grant, that in the Sacrament there is both the efficacie of the bodie of Chriſt, and the ſubſtance thereof, but the ſubſtance ſpiritually applied by faith: for the fleſh profiteth nothing of it ſelfe: My words (ſaith Chriſt) are ſpirit and life, Ioh. 6. ſic Cranmer. It is therefore no good argument, the efficacie of Chriſts body is ſpirituall in the Sacrament: Ergo, the ſubſtance of his body is not there ſpiritually: for the ſubſtance of Chriſts body is there ſpiritually, as the worker; the effect alſo is ſpirituall, as that which is wrought.

Argum. 2. That onely is given to us in the Sacrament, which was given for us upon the croſſe: but bread was not given on the croſſe for us: Ergo, bread is not given in the Sacrament: Chedſey.

Anſw. To the propoſition we anſwer: firſt, the ſame body indeed is given both in the Sacrament, and upon the croſſe, but not after the ſame manner: we have the ſame body, but ſpiritually given us by faith. Secondly, it is not true that that onely is given us in the Sacrament, &c. For there are both the body of Chriſt preſent ſpiritually in the myſterie, and the bread preſent viſibly.

Argum. 3. The ſame fleſh, whereby Chriſt is made our brother and kinſman, is given of Chriſt to us to be eaten.

Chriſt is made our brother and kinſman by his true, naturall, and organicall fleſh.

Ergo, his true, naturall, and organicall fleſh is given us to be eaten: argum. Weſton.

Anſw. Chriſt giveth us indeed his true naturall fleſh to be eaten, yet not after a carnall manner, but ſpiritually by faith: ſic Cranmer.

Contra. Chriſt gave us the ſame fleſh, which he tooke of the Virgin: but he tooke not his true fleſh of the Virgin ſpiritually, or in a figure.

Ergo, he giveth it not us ſpiritually: ſic Weſton, diſput. Oxonienſ.

Anſw. Firſt, the propoſition we grant, that Chriſt tooke the ſame fleſh of his mother, which he giveth us to be eaten, but not after the ſame manner: therefore the aſſumption, which includeth the manner, not the thing is ſophiſtically inferred, and containeth more than is in the propoſition: which ſpeaketh of the ſame fleſh, but not of the ſame manner.

Secondly, this argument may be turned upon themſelves: as thus,

Chriſt giveth us the ſame fleſh which he tooke.

But he tooke not his fleſh of his mother ſpiritually at all, but after an humane manner onely.

Ergo, he giveth not his fleſh to us to be eaten ſpiritually at all.

If this be a good concluſion, (which let them grant, if they will) then is the other brought forth by them.

Argum. 4. ex Chryſoſtomo. That thing is ſhewed in the Sacrament, which is worthy moſt higheſt honour in the earth:

But the body of Chriſt is worthy higheſt honour, not the elements of bread and wine:

Ergo, the body of Chriſt is ſhewed in the Sacrament, argum. Weſton.

Anſw. Firſt, the concluſion we grant if it be rightly underſtood: for the body of Chriſt is ſhewed ſpiritually to the eye of faith in the Sacrament, as the Apoſtle ſaith, Chriſts death is ſhewed forth: for other ſhewing of Chriſts body in the Sacrament there can be none: The Papiſts themſelves cannot demonſtrate unto us Chriſts body, but onely the externall ſhapes of bread and wine.

Secondly, we grant that the body of Chriſt, thus ſpiritually ſhewed in the Sacrament, is worthy higheſt honour: and that the outward ſignes, not as bare elements, but as they are myſticall ſeales of hid and heavenly graces, and the Sacraments inſtituted of Chriſt, are of us to be highly reverenced, as the ordinances of God. So then Chriſts body ſhewed in the Sacrament, is worthy higheſt honour in earth, and the Sacraments, as ſignes of holy things, are highly to be eſteemed.

Argum. 5. The ſoule is fed by that which the body eateth:

But the ſoule is fed by the fleſh of Chriſt;

Ergo, the body eateth the fleſh of Chriſt in the Sacrament, argum. Chedſey.

Anſw. Firſt, the Sacrament is one thing, the matter of the Sacrament another, outwardly the body eateth the Sacrament, inwardly we eat the body of Chriſt: as in Baptiſme the fleſh is waſhed with water, that the ſoule may be purged ſpiritually, ſo our body eateth the outward Sacrament, that the ſoule may be fed of God: ſic Cranmer.

Secondly, to the argument in particular we anſwer thus: firſt to the propoſition: It is not generally true, that whatſoever the body eateth, the ſoule is fed by the ſame: and if it be but particularly propounded, this inſtance onely of eating in the Sacrament, then the argument proveth not, ſtanding wholly of particulars. Againe, the body and the ſoule are fed by the ſame meat in the Sacrament, but not after the ſame manner, the body is nouriſhed by the naturall propertie of the elements, which they have to nouriſh: but the ſoule, by the ſacramentall and ſupernaturall power, as they are ſignes and ſeales of holy things. Secondly, we grant that the ſoule is fed by the body of Chriſt, yet not carnally, but ſpiritually by faith: ſo that this argument may be turned upon them thus: As the ſoule feedeth upon Chriſt, ſo doth the body: the ſoule is fed by faith: Ergo, ſo and no otherwiſe is the bodie. And true it is that the body is nouriſhed both with the Sacrament, and with the body of Chriſt: with the Sacrament (though not as a Sacrament) naturally to temporall life; with the body of Chriſt (ſupernaturally by the gift of faith in the ſoule) to eternall life: ſic Cranmer ad Weſtonum.

Argum. 6. As Chriſt liveth by the Father, ſo live we by his fleſh:

But Chriſt liveth by his Father naturally:

Ergo, we live naturally by the eating of Chriſts fleſh, argum. Treſhami.

Anſw. 1. The firſt part of this argument is not generally true: for Chriſt liveth otherwiſe by the Father in many reſpects: for he is the Son of God by nature from all eternity, but ſo are not we. Secondly, the Papiſts themſelves deny any ſuch naturall eating of Chriſts fleſh: for the naturall food goeth downe into the belly, part whereof is turned into the ſubſtance of the body, part is throwne out into the draught: But neither is true of Chriſts fleſh; for if it were converted into our fleſh, then ſhould our fleſh alſo be immortall, and without ſin, as our food is: and to ſay, that part thereof goeth the common way of meats, were a monſtrous blaſphemy againſt Chriſts glorious body: therefore we cannot ſo naturally eat Chriſts fleſh. Thirdly, we notwithſtanding in a good ſenſe are ſaid naturally to live by Chriſt: firſt, not onely becauſe we are of his nature according to the fleſh, but rather in that we make all one myſticall body, whereof Chriſt is the head: that as the body naturally liveth by the head, ſo we doe naturally, that is verily, and indeed, live by Chriſt. Secondly, in that Chriſt doth communicate unto us his nature of eternity and glory, and will bring us to be where he is, we are ſaid alſo naturally to live by Chriſt: Sic Doctor Cranmer diſputat. Oxonienſ.

Argum. 7. The ſpeech of Chriſt in ſaying, (this is my body) they would thus prove, not to be a figurative, but a proper ſpeech.

Argum. Subſtantia, is not predicated denominatively:

This word (body) which is the prædicatum, is a ſubſtance:

Ergo, it is an eſſentiall predication, not a denominative: ſo it is his true body, not a figure of his body: argum. Oglithorpi.

Anſw. Subſtantia may be predicated denominatively, in an allegorie or metaphor, or a figurative locution: ſic D. Cranmer diſput. Oxonienſ. And ſo is it in this place, where Chriſt ſpeaketh figuratively. Againe, they thus argue.

Argum. A figurative ſpeech worketh not:

But Chriſts ſpeech, this is my body, worketh: the word of Chriſt is of ſtrength, and by the Lords words the heavens were made:

Ergo, it is no figurative ſpeech: argum. Tongi.

Anſw. 1. The words of Chriſt doe not work of themſelves, but Chriſt himſelfe, and he worketh by a figurative ſpeech. 2 Chriſts ſpeech, or rather Chriſt by his ſpeech worketh, in inſtituting a Sacrament, not in converting the ſubſtance of bread. 3 God doth work by his power in the Sacraments, as in Baptiſme, ſo in the Euchariſt: But there is no ſuch converſion in Baptiſme, therfore not in the other. 4 The Sacrament of Chriſts bloud is made: the words make the bloud to them that receive it; not that the bloud is in the cup, but in the receiver: reſp. D. Cranmer diſputat. Oxonienſ. Againe, thus they reaſon.

Argum. My ſheepe (ſaith Chriſt) heare my voyce, and follow me: but all the ſheepe of Chriſt heare this voyce, This is my body, without a figure:

Anſw. Firſt, the ſheepe of Chriſt follow the voyce of Chriſt, unleſſe they be ſeduced and deceived through ignorance: But the ſheepe of Chriſt never underſtood this voyce of Chriſt without a figure: for the fathers doe number this place among figurative and tropicall ſpeeches: reſponſ. D. Ridley diſputat. Oxonienſ.

Argum. 8. Whereas we alleage ſuch places of Scriptures againſt the carnall preſence, as doe make mention of Chriſts aſcenſion into heaven, and his abode there: they on the contrary labour thus to prove, that Chriſts aſcenſion into heaven, and his continuance there, is no let to the reall preſence of his fleſh in the Sacrament,

Chriſt appeared corporally and really on the earth ſince his aſcenſion into heaven: as he was ſeene of Paul, 1 Corinth. 15. and eccleſiaſticall ſtories make mention, that Chriſt appeared corporally unto S. Peter, as he fled from Rome, as Egeſippus writeth, lib. 3. cap. 3.

Ergo, for all Chriſts being in heaven, he may alſo be in earth, and ſo conſequently in the Sacrament: argum. Smithi.

Anſw. Firſt, Chriſt may, when it pleaſeth him, be in heaven, and in earth, and appeare to whom he will: yet it followeth not, that he will doe ſo. Secondly, that Chriſt appeared to Paul and Stephen, Act. 7. we grant, but he was ſeene of them in heaven, not in earth: the ſtory that is reported of Chriſts appearing to Saint Peter, is not certaine, and therefore it proveth not. Thirdly, though we ſhould grant the corporall appearance of Chriſt ſometime upon earth, yet it muſt needs be with ſome intermiſſion of his bodily preſence in heaven: for corporally to be preſent in earth, and corporally to be in heaven at the ſame time, is contrary to the Scriptures, and againſt the nature of an humane bodie: wherefore if Chriſt abide in heaven after the manner of his corporall preſence, as the Scripture ſaith, The heavens muſt containe him; this muſt needs hinder his bodily preſence in the Sacrament: reſponſ. D. Ridley diſput. Oxonienſ.

Argum. 9. Every Sacrament of the new Teſtament hath a promiſe of grace, and ſo conſequently the Euchariſt hath:

But there is no promiſe of grace made to the bread and wine, but to the body and bloud of Chriſt:

Ergo, the bread and wine are not the Sacraments, but the body and bloud of Chriſt: argum. Watſon. diſputat. Oxonienſ.

Anſw. Firſt, there is no promiſe made to bread and wine, as they are common bread and wine; but in as much as they are ſanctified, and made the Sacraments of the body and bloud of the Lord, they have a promiſe of grace annexed unto them. Secondly, and yet to ſpeak properly, this promiſe of the ſpirituall partaking of Chriſts body, is made not to the bread and wine; but to them which worthily doe receive the Sacrament: Reſponſ. D. Ridley.

Argum. 10. ex Chryſoſtomo: That which the woman did hold in her wombe, that ſame thing holdeth the Prieſt: but the Virgin did beare the very fleſh of Chriſt indeed: Ergo: argum. Weſtoni.

Anſw. 1. We grant, the Priſt holdeth the ſame thing, but after another manner: ſhe did hold the naturall body, the Prieſt holdeth the myſterie of the body: Reſponſ. Ridley diſputat. Oxonienſ. And thus farre of our adverſaries arguments.

The Arguments of the Martyrs and holy Confeſſors of Gods truth againſt the carnall preſence.

Arg. 1. If Chriſts body be carnally in the Sacrament, as it is now celebrated in the Church, then ſo was it preſent, at the firſt inſtitution thereof: If Chriſts body were then eaten in the Sacrament; and Chriſt as he did eat the Paſchall Lambe with his Diſciples, ſo likewiſe did he the Euchariſt: then it will follow, that Chriſt did eat his owne body, which were very abſurd.

Anſw. Moreman a Popiſh Doctor granteth this conſequent, that Chriſt did eat his owne body: againſt whom Maſter Philpot framed this argument.

Receiving of Chriſts body hath a promiſe of remiſſion of ſinnes:

Chriſts eating the Sacrament had no ſuch promiſe: for he had no ſinnes, and therefor needed no remiſſion: Ergo, Chriſt in the Sacrament did not eat his owne body.

Anſw. 1. Firſt, Moreman anſwereth to the propoſition, denying that the receiving of the Sacrament hath a promiſe of remiſſion of ſins: whom Maſter Philpot confuteth by the very words of inſtitution; Which is given for you, which is ſhed for you for remiſſion of ſinnes.

Anſw. 2. Doctor Weſton anſwered, that Chriſt did no more eat the Sacrament for remiſſion of ſins, than he was baptized: and by this reaſon may we prove as well, that he was not baptized at all; becauſe Baptiſme is given for remiſſion of ſins.

Contra. Though Chriſt were baptized, not for any need thereof, but to give an example to his Church, yet it is otherwiſe in eating his owne body in the Euchariſt: for the water in Baptiſme of it ſelfe is but a terrene element, but Chriſts body is lively, and cannot be eaten without ſome effect or operation. Againe, let it be obſerved, how they doe here match the Euchariſt and Baptiſme together, which elſewhere they deny; affirming that theſe two Sacraments have no likelihood each to other: If then they will compare theſe Sacraments, they muſt be alike herein: that as the bread in the Euchariſt is become, as they ſay, the body of Chriſt, ſo muſt the water likewiſe in Baptiſme: and ſo conſequently it is as abſurd a thing, for Chriſt to eat his owne body in the Euchariſt, as for his body to be waſhed with his body in Baptiſme: ex diſputat. convocat. act. 3. diei.

Ioh.16.28.

Argum. 2. The Angell ſaid to the woman, He is riſen, he is not here: Matth. 28. Ioh. 16. I came from my Father into the world: againe, I leave the world and goe to my Father: Chriſt ſpeaketh of his naturall body: Ergo, we may conclude, that his body is not now in the world, argum. Philpotti.

Anſw. Chriſt is viſibly departed in his humanity, but inviſibly notwithſtanding he remaineth in the Sacrament.

Ioh.16.29.

Contra. This diſtinction may be taken away by the anſwer of the Diſciples to our Saviour Chriſt in the ſame place, where he ſpeaketh of his departure, Ioh. 16. Now thou ſpeakeſt plainly, and uttereſt forth no proverbe: But if Chriſt had underſtood any ſuch inviſible preſence according to the diſtinction, he had ſpoken obſcurely, and darkly, not plainly: Reſp. Phil. diſp. convoc. act. 4. diei.

Argum. 3. Philpotti: S. Peter ſaith, Act. 3. Whom heaven muſt receive, till the conſummation of all things: this is ſpoken of Chriſts humanity: Ergo, it cannot be preſent upon earth in the Sacrament.

Anſw. Harpſfield anſwereth, 1 Chriſt is not ex neceſſitate, of neceſſity forced to any place. Contra: Chriſt is no otherwiſe forced of neceſſity to any place, than as he hath by his owne decree appointed his body to remaine in heaven, and ſo declared it in his word. The decree therefore of God is immutable, not that God is forced by any to keepe it, but becauſe his will and purpoſe cannot bee changed.

Anſw. 2. Chriſt is omnipotent, and may be in heaven, or in earth at his pleaſure. Contra: of Chriſts omnipotencie, what he can doe, is not our queſtion, but rather what he doth: it is no good argument, he may doe this or that: Ergo, he doth it. So much onely is to be beleeved of Chriſts omnipotencie, as is in the word expreſſed: but that Chriſts body is in heaven, and carnally the Sacrament upon earth, is not expreſſed in the word: Ergo, it is not to be beleeved, ſic Philpot Martyr.

Anſw. 3. This word oportet, uſed by S. Peter, he muſt, doth not include an abſolute neceſſity, as may appeare by other places of Scripture: S. Paul ſaith, Oportet Epiſcopum unius uxoris virum eſſe: A Biſhop muſt be the husband of one wife, yet he may be a Biſhop, that was never married.

Contra. This word oportet, is diverſly taken in Scripture: S. Paul deſcribing a Biſhop, ſheweth his quality, what manner of perſon he ought to be: but S. Peter ſpeaking of Chriſts being in heaven, declareth the place where Chriſt muſt neceſſarily be, untill his ſecond comming: As when I ſay (oportet te hic eſſe) you muſt needs be in this place; here is included an abſolute neceſſitie, that you cannot poſſibly at the ſame inſtant be in another place: but when I ſay, oportet te virum bonum eſſe; you muſt be a good man: it doth not include any ſuch neceſſitie, but that you may be an evill man: Sic Philpot diſputat. convocat, action. 6. As then this word is taken in common ſpeech, ſo alſo in Scripture: ſometime it ſignifieth (it is meet) convenient, ſometime it implieth an abſolute neceſſitie.

Argum. 4. As Chriſt worketh in Baptiſme, ſo he worketh in the other Sacrament.

But in Baptiſme he worketh not by any converſion of ſubſtance:

Ergo, there is no ſuch converſion in the Euchariſt: argum. Cran. diſp. Oxon.

Anſwer. 1. Firſt, D. Young anſwereth, that by this meanes they will make no change at all in the Sacrament.

Contra. Not ſo, but we make a great change: as in them that are baptized there is a great change, when the child of the bond-ſlave of the devill is made the ſonne of God: ſo is it alſo in the Sacrament of the Supper, when he receiveth us into his protection and favour: ſic Cranmer.

Anſwer. 2. There is great difference betweene Baptiſme and the Lords Supper: in the Supper the words are directed to the bread: in Baptiſme, to the ſpirit: he ſaid not the water is the ſpirit, but of the bread he ſaid, This is my bodie: ſic Weſt.

Contra. The Scripture in like manner, as here the bread is called Chriſts bodie, becauſe it repreſented his bodie, ſo it calleth the ſpirit a Dove, when the ſpirit deſcended in likeneſſe of a Dove: as Iohn 1. Upon whom ſoever thou ſhalt ſee the ſpirit deſcending: He calleth that which deſcended, the holy Spirit: the bread then is no more the bodie of Chriſt in the Euchariſt, than the Dove in the Baptiſme of Chriſt lighting upon him, was the ſpirit. Iohn 1.33.

Argum. 5. ex Theodoreto: who thus reaſoneth againſt the heretick Eutyches, who denied two natures of ſubſtance to remaine in Chriſt.

As in the Sacrament of the bodie of Chriſt after the conſecration, there is the ſubſtance of Chriſts humanitie together with the ſubſtance of bread, ſo in the perſon of Chriſt there doe remaine two ſeverall ſubſtances, that is, his divinitie and humanitie united together, &c. But if ſo, that there ſhould not remaine in the Sacrament, which is a repreſentation of Chriſt, the ſubſtance of bread, but ſhould be abſorpt by the preſence of Chriſts fleſh, this would make ſtrongly, not againſt, but for Eutyches, that even ſo in the perſon of Chriſt, his humanitie ſhould bee ſwallowed up of his divine nature annexed thereunto: argum. Philpotti diſputat. convocation.

Argum. 6. To theſe reaſons wee may adjoyne thoſe ſubſtantiall proves and arguments exhibited by that famous Clerke, and moſt conſtant Martyr Biſhop Ridley, in his learned diſputation at Oxford.

1 The reall and carnall preſence varieth from the articles of the faith, He aſcended into heaven, &c. and from thence, and from no other place ſhall he come to judge the quicke and the dead.

2 It deſtroyeth and taketh away the inſtitution of the Lords Supper: firſt, the Lords Supper was commanded onely to be uſed, untill the Lord himſelfe ſhould come: but if he be come alreadie in his fleſh, then muſt the Supper ceaſe. Secondly, we are commanded to uſe it in remembrance of Chriſt: but a remembrance is not of a thing preſent, but of a thing that is paſt, and abſent.

3 This opinion of the reall preſence, admitteth many abſurdities: as that whoremongers, murtherers, wicked and faithleſſe men, yea Mice, Rats, and Dogges alſo may receive the very reall, and corporall bodie of the Lord.

4 It confirmeth and maintaineth that beaſtly kinde of cruelty of the Anthropophagi, that is, the devourers of mans fleſh: for it is a more cruell thing to devoure a quicke man, than to ſlay him.

5 Againe, the bread which Chriſt gave to his Diſciples, he brake: but his bodie could not be broken, for the Scripture ſaith, Exod. 12. Ye ſhall not breake a bone of him. Further, the bread which Chriſt giveth us to eat, came downe from heaven, Iohn 6. But Chriſts bodie came not downe from heaven: Ergo, his bodie is not carnally eaten, and after a fleſhly manner. Exod. 12.46. Iohn 6.32.

Argum. 7. Here we may remember alſo the pithie arguments of that renowned learned man Peter Martyr, propoſed by him in his diſputation at Oxford.

1 The analogie or reſemblance betweene the Sacrament, and the thing ſignified in the Sacrament, muſt alwayes be kept: But ſo is it not, if the reall preſence be affirmed, without the ſubſtance of bread and wine: as it is thus further proved. Firſt, one point of reſemblance is in nouriſhing, that as the bread and wine nouriſh the bodie, ſo the bodie of Chriſt doth ſpiritually nouriſh the ſoule: but the elements of bread and wine without a ſubſtance cannot nouriſh, they cannot therefore reſemble the ſpirituall nouriſhment. Secondly, another reſemblance in the Sacrament is this, that as one loafe of bread, and one cup of wine containeth many cornes and grapes; ſo the myſticall congregation containeth many members, yet maketh but one bodie: but if there be no ſubſtance of bread and wine (which ſhould conſiſt of many corns, and grapes united) remaining, this ſimilitude of the conjunction of the parts and members of the Church, cannot be repreſented: Ergo, there remaineth the ſubſtance of bread and wine, or elſe the analogie of the Sacrament is aboliſhed.

2 The death of Chriſt is not preſent really in the Sacrament, but by ſimilitude: for it is done in remembrance of his death: Chriſt in the Sacrament dieth not verily, or is crucified againe.

The precious bloud of Chriſt is preſent in the Sacrament, as his death is preſent, for Chriſts bloud was ſhed in his death, and without his dying his bloud cannot be ſhed: if his death be verily and indeed, ſo is the ſheding of his bloud: if one be in myſterie, ſo is the other.

Ergo, the precious bloud is not preſent in the Sacrament, but by ſimilitude, and as the death of Chriſt is ſhewed forth.

3 Chriſts bodie cannot be really in the Sacrament, unleſſe it be in many places at once: for out of heaven his bodie muſt not be untill Chriſts ſecond comming:

But his bodie being a true naturall bodie, cannot be at one inſtant preſent in many places: Ergo.

The aſſumption or ſecond part is thus proved: Firſt, Spirits being of a more rare and ſubtill ſubſtance than a bodie is, cannot be in many places at once: as the ſoule of man hath his certaine place, ſo alſo are the Angels limited at one time to one place: much more is a naturall bodie tyed unto a definite and certaine place. Secondly, every quantitie, that is, every bodie having magnitude, length, and other dimenſions, is circumſcribed in one peculiar place: but the bodie of Chriſt hath his dimenſions, and is a quantitie: Ergo.

4 The wicked receive not Chriſts bodie:

But if Chriſt bee really preſent in the Sacrament, and ſo all receive his bodie that communicate in the Sacrament, then ſhould the wicked bee partakers of Chriſts bodie, which is not to bee granted:

Ergo, Chriſts bodie is not really preſent.

That the wicked eat not Chriſts bodie, it is further thus proved:

To eat Chriſt, is for a man to have Chriſt dwelling, and abiding in him, the wicked have not Chriſt dwelling in them.

Ergo, the wicked eat not the bodie of Chriſt. Againe,

Chriſts bodie is eaten by faith.

But the wicked have no faith.

Ergo, they cannot eat the bodie of Chriſt: that Chriſts bodie is eaten onely by faith, it thus appeareth:

John 6.47. 50. That bread, the eating whereof giveth eternall life, is eaten by faith: as Iohn 6.47. He that beleeveth in me hath everlaſting life, and verſ. 50. He which eateth of this bread ſhall not die. Here to beleeve, and to eat of the heavenly bread, are all one, becauſe they bring forth the ſame effect, namely everlaſting life: But Chriſts bodie is this heavenly bread, that giveth everlaſting life, verſ. 53.

Ergo, his bodie is onely eaten by faith. And further thus:

Chriſts bodie is either eaten by ſenſe, reaſon, or faith:

But the wicked eat him not by any of theſe meanes: Ergo, not at all.

Not by ſenſe: for they ſay, that Chriſts bodie in the Sacrament is not ſenſible: they are the ſhapes onely and accidents of bread and wine that are ſeene, felt, and taſted, (as they ſay) in the Sacrament:

Not by reaſon, for the Sacrament exceedeth all reaſon. Nec fides habet meritum, ubi ratio prabet experimentum: Faith is nothing worth where reaſon maketh experience: And faith wicked men and unbeleevers cannot have: Ergo, they cannot eat Chriſts bodie at all.

John 16.7. 5 The holy Ghoſt could not come, if the bodie of Chriſt were really preſent, as it is proved, Iohn 16. Unleſſe I goe from you, the holy Ghoſt cannot come.

That the holy Ghoſt is come it is moſt certaine: Ergo, Chriſt cannot be carnally preſent, for this were to deprive us of the preſence of Gods ſpirit.

6 If Chriſt had given his bodie ſubſtantially and carnally in the ſupper, then was that bodie either paſſible, or impaſſible:

But you cannot ſay that it was either paſſible, or impaſſible: Ergo, Chriſts paſſible bodie is not now given to bee eaten, for Chriſt dieth no more, his bodie is now glorified, and can bee no more paſſible.

Neither did he give an impaſſible bodie to be eaten: for he ſaith, This is my bodie, which ſhall bee given for you: that is, which ſhould ſuffer and be crucified for them: If it be then neither paſſible, nor impaſſible, it is no bodie at all. And thus farre alſo of theſe arguments, who liſt at large further to know the ſure and ſubſtantiall grounds of the faith of the holy Martyrs in this matter, may ſupplie what is here wanting, which for want of ſufficient leyſure, and the neceſſitie of finiſhing and haſtening this worke, I could not at large collect together, may make a ſupplie thereof by his owne obſervation out of the ſtorie of their acts and doings. Againſt the carnall preſence we have the full conſent of antiquitie.

S. Cyprian Serm. de cœna Domini. Panem Angelorum ſub Sacramento manducamus, &c. We eat the bread of Angels under a Sacrament in earth, wee ſhall eat the ſame without a Sacrament more manifeſtly in heaven: The ſame bodie ſhall bee eaten in heaven, which is eaten in earth, though not after the ſame manner: but Chriſts fleſh ſhall not bee eaten in heaven, therefore it is not eaten in earth.

Againe in the ſame Sermon, Eſus carnis hujus, &c. The eating of this fleſh, is a certaine deſire of abiding in him: That which food is to the fleſh, that is faith to the ſoule: that which meat is to the bodie, that is the word to the ſpirit.

Origen. homil. 16. in Numer. Bibere dicimur ſanguinem Chriſti, &c. Wee are ſaid to drinke the bloud of Chriſt, not onely in the ſacramentall rites, but when we receive his word. If Chriſt be eaten in his word, as in the Sacrament, then is he onely eaten ſpiritually.

Chryſoſtome alſo, hom. 51. in Matth. Tangamus nos fimbriam veſtimenti, &c. Let us touch the hem of Chriſts garment, whoſe not veſture onely, but his bodie is ſet before us. As Chriſts garment is ſet before us, ſo is his bodie; but the one is ſpiritually done, therefore the other. Againe, Ne agnum comedentes, in lupos convertamur, &c. Let us not after we have eaten the Lambe, be turned into Wolves: As men are turned into Wolves; ſo they eat the Lambe; but they are ſo ſpiritually onely turned: Ergo, they doe ſpiritually eat the Lambe; Non eſt opus, &c. We have no need of golden veſſels, but of golden ſoules, ibid. Chriſts bodie then is food for the ſoule.

Auguſtine in Pſalm. 14. Donec ſeculum finiatur, ſurſum eſt Dominus; ſed etiam hic nobiſcum eſt veritas Domini: corpus enim in quo reſurrexit, in uno loco eſſe oportet, veritas ejus ubique diffuſa eſt: While the world ſhall laſt, the Lord is above, and the veritie of the Lord is with us: for his bodie, wherewith he roſe, muſt be in one place, but the veritie thereof is every where diſperſed.

Hierom. ad Marcellum: Stultum eſt in parvo loco vel abſcondito quærere, qui totius mundi eſt lumen: It is great fooliſhneſſe to ſeeke him in a corner (as the popiſh Prieſt doth, that putteth him into the pix) who lighteneth the whole world.

Ambroſius: Qui diſcordat à Chriſto, non manducat carnem ejus, nec bibit ſanguinem, etſi tantæ rei ſacramentum accipiat: He that diſſenteth from Chriſt, doth neither eat his fleſh, nor drinke his bloud, though he receive the Sacrament thereof. If wicked men eat not Chriſts bodie, and yet eat the Sacrament, then is not the bodie of Chriſt the Sacrament.

Againe, S. Ambroſe lib. 1. c. offic. c. 48. Nunc Chriſtus offertur, ſed hic in imagine, &c. Now Chriſt is offered, but here in an image or ſimilitude, but there in truth, where he as our advocate maketh interceſſion for us with his Father: if Chriſts bodie then bee onely in veritie in heaven, then is not his true bodie carnally preſent in the earth.

Likewiſe Tertullian contra Marcion. lib. 4. Auguſt. in Pſal. 3. cont. Adimant. cap. 12. In this ſpeech of Chriſt, This is my bodie, doe underſtand the figure of his bodie. Likewiſe Origen. hom. 7. Levitic. Eſt in Evangeliis litera, quæ occidit: There is a killing letter in the Goſpell, as well as in the old Teſtament, for if according to the letter we follow that which is ſaid, Unleſſe ye eat my fleſh, &c. this letter killeth. And many teſtimonies wee have beſide, but theſe here ſhall ſuffice, and ſo I conclude this place.

Lib. 4. cont. Marcion.

Tertullian ſaith directly, Hoc eſt corpus meum, id eſt, figura corporis mei: This is my bodie, that is, a figure of my bodie; and how Chriſts fleſh is to be eaten, he further ſheweth: Quia durum & intolerabilem exiſtimaverunt ſermonem ejus, quaſi vere carnem ſuam illis edendum determinaſſet, ut in ſpiritu diſponeret ſtatum ſalutis, præmiſit, ſpiritus eſt qui vivificat, &c. Becauſe they thought it an hard and intolerable ſpeech, as though he had determined his fleſh truly to be eaten of them, he premiſeth, it is the ſpirit which quickneth, &c. Here he denieth that Chriſts fleſh is verily, that is, carnally eaten: but how he is to be eaten, he ſheweth a little after, Auditu devorandus, ruminandus intellectu fide dirigendus: he muſt be devoured by hearing, ruminated by underſtanding, and digeſted by faith, &c. And whereas the pagan Idolaters objected unto the Chriſtians, infanticidium & pabulum cruda, the killing of infants in their aſſemblies, and eating of raw fleſh: he returneth this accuſation upon themſelves, ſhewing that they doe uſe to drinke human bloud, and not the Chriſtians: as they uſed in Rome, when any were initiated, unto the ſervice of Bellona, to take of their bloud, and the reſt to drinke it, and in their ſword plaies the people uſed to drinke of their bloud that were ſlaine for a remedie againſt the falling ſickeneſſe, &c. But if Chriſtians had in deed in their ſacrifices eaten Chriſts fleſh, and drunk his bloud, they would not in defence of their fact, have put it upon the Gentiles, being themſelves guilty of it.

Tertullian Apologet.

Many ſuch teſtimonies may be produced, but theſe may ſuffice, and ſo I conclude this place.

HERE FOLLOWETH A SHORT TREATISE, CONSISTING of three parts: the firſt containeth the reaſons of the holy Martyrs, againſt the Maſſe: the ſecond, a confutation of Maſſe-goſpellers arguments, in defence of their going to Maſſe: the third dealeth againſt Popiſh Recuſants.

THE FIRST PART.

Arguments in generall againſt the idolatrous ſacrifice of the Maſſe.

B. Ridley Martyr. Epiſt. ad Bradford. pag. 47, 45.

THere are two moſt perilous engines, whereby Antichriſt doth chiefly impugne the veritie and faith of the Goſpell, which ſeeme to be the moſt maſſie poſtes, and mightie pillers, whereby he upholdeth, and maintaineth his Kingdome: the one is the idolatrous uſe of the Lords Supper, which they have turned into the Idoll of the Maſſe: the other is the proud and arrogant uſurpation of the primacie of the See of Rome. Of this latter wee have entreated before at large: this other pillar, as we have hitherto in this place laid particular aſſault unto it, ſo now, we will by Gods grace ſhake the foundation of it all at once: by ſetting forth ſuch valiant arguments, wherewith the faithfull and ſtout ſouldiers of Chriſt, the holy Martyrs and Confeſſors of the truth, have armed themſelves againſt this raging beaſt, that hath devoured the precious lives of ſo many of Gods Saints.

Argum. 1. The Popiſh Maſſe is not onely divers from the inſtitution of the Lords Supper, but contrarie to it, not diſſenting onely from it, but quite and cleane overthwarting, and overthrowing it: Ergo, it is abominable.

The anteecedent or firſt part of the argument thus appeareth to be true, by theſe particulars. Firſt, Chriſt commanded it to be done in his remembrance: the Prieſt ſaith Maſſe in remembrance of dead men. Secondly, Chriſt tooke bread, and left bread: the Prieſt taketh bread and conjureth it away. Thirdly, Chriſt tooke bread and brake it: the Prieſt taketh bread and hangeth it up. Fourthly, Chriſt tooke bread and gave it to his Apoſtles: the Prieſt eateth every whit alone. Fifthly, Chriſt gave a Sacrament to ſtrengthen mens faith: the Prieſt giveth a ſacrifice to redeeme mens ſoules. Sixthly, Chriſt gave it to bee eaten; the Prieſt giveth it to be worſhipped. Chriſt gave bread; the Prieſt ſaith he giveth a God, Ergo, the Maſſe is contrarie and oppoſite to Chriſts inſtitution, ex dialog. conſuetud. verit. p. 1392.

Argum. 2. Whatſoever commandeth and practiſeth things contrarie to the word, will, and commandements of God, is to be abhorred and deteſted: but ſo doth the Maſſe: it maintaineth invocation of Angels and ſaints, prayer for the dead, adoration of creatures, yea even of bakers bread, opinion of merits, with ſuch like, as wee have proved before ſeverally in every one of theſe queſtions: Ergo.

Argum. 3. The ſacrifice of the Maſſe, which they ſay is a propitiatorie ſacrifice for the quicke and the dead, is injurious and derogatorie to the death and paſſion of Chriſt: Ergo, it is abominable.

The firſt is thus proved: to reiterate a thing once done for the ſame end wherefore it was begun, declareth the imperfection of the ſame thing before: but in the Maſſe is reiterated the ſacrifice of Chriſt for the ſame end, for the which it was firſt offered, namely for propitiation and remiſſion of ſins: Ergo, it maketh Chriſts ſacrifice unperfect. Argum. M. Bradford. Fox pag. 1397. col. 2.

Argum. 4. The Maſſe alſo is blaſphemous to the Prieſthood of Chriſt, which is eternall and perpetuall; but by that Popiſh ſacrifice it is made not eternall: That thing is not eternall or perpetuall, which admitteth ſucceſſion of other to doe the ſame thing that was done before, Heb. 7. 23. But the

Heb. 7. 23.

Maſſe Prieſts ſucceed after Chriſt, doing the ſame ſacrifice, as they ſay, which he did before: Ergo, they make Chriſts Prieſthood not to be perpetuall, argum. Bradford.

Argum. 5. The Popiſh Prieſthood is idolatrous and abhominable: Ergo, ſo is their ſacrifice; Probatur antecedens.

No ſacrifice ought to be done, but by a Prieſt meet for the ſame, and appointed thereunto.

But all Prieſts are unmeet to offer ſacrifice for ſinne, ſaving Chriſt; becauſe they are ſinners, Heb. 7.27. And onely Chriſt is called to that honour, to ſacrifice for ſins, hee being the onely Prieſt after the order of Melchiſedech, Heb. 5.6. Ergo, Popiſh Prieſts have no authoritie to ſacrifice for ſins, but in ſo doing commit ſacriledge and idolatry, argum. B. Ridley, Fox pag. 1448.

Heb. 7.27.

Heb. 5.6.

Argum. 6. The Maſſe is a vaine, needleſſe, and fruitleſſe action: Ergo, to be aboliſhed. It is thus proved.

After eternall redemption found and obtained; there needeth no more dayly offering for the ſame.

But Chriſt hath for us obtained eternall redemption, Heb. 9.12. and is able perfectly to ſave us, Heb. 7.25. Ergo, all ſacrifice and oblation for the ſame is needleſſe and in vaine, argum. D. Ridley.

Heb. 9.12.
Heb. 7.25.

Argum. 7. As the matter, end, and the Miniſter of the Maſſe are, as we have ſeene, all idolatrous and unlawfull; ſo alſo is the manner thereof. All things according to S. Pauls rule, ought to be done in the Church in a knowne and edifying tongue, 1 Cor. 14. But the Maſſe is celebrate in a ſtrange and unknowne tongue: Ergo, it ought not to be done or uſed in the Church.

Argum. 8. The Maſſe hindreth the right ſervice of God: Ergo, Whatſoever cauſeth a man to reſt in the outward ſerving of God, whoſe ſervice ſhould be inward, in ſpirit and truth; that hindreth the true ſervice of God. But this doth the Maſſe, requiring nothing but externall ſervice; in hearing, ſeeing, gazing, peeping, ſtouping, kneeling, knocking: yea and they make theſe things meritorious, Ex opere operato, etiam ſine bono motu intentionis: By the very worke wrought, without any good motion or intention: Ergo, the Maſſe deſtroyeth the true ſervice of God.

Argum. 9. The Maſſe is an enemy to preaching, praying, and all other godly Chriſtian exerciſes: Ergo.

Where one thing is made and thought to bee alone ſufficient, there all other helps are needleſſe. But the Maſſe, as they ſay, ſerveth for all, to pardon ſins, to deliver from hell and purgatorie: to give health both of bodie and ſoule; Ergo, it maketh all other helps needleſſe, hearing of Gods word praying, repenting, &c. and other helps to good life, argumentum Magiſtri Foxi.

Argum. 10. As the Maſſe overthroweth the true ſervice of God, and doth oppoſe it ſelfe to all Chriſtian exerciſes, ſo doth it alſo hinder a good life.

Whatſoever maketh men preſumptuous, and miniſtreth falſe hope of forgiveneſſe to the wicked, maketh them more prone and readie to ſinne, and hindreth good life.

But this doth the Maſſe, promiſing ſufficient redemption to the wicked, that have ſpend their life in drunkenneſſe, adulteries, wantonneſſe, ſwearing, riot, exceſſe, and in all uncleanneſſe, if they will but come to the Church and heare a Maſſe, and take holy bread, and holy water, or finde a ſoule Prieſt, or give ſomewhat to the Prieſt to doe penance for him; though they neither pray, nor repent, nor heare the word preached.

This is proved by the confeſſion of Roger Holland, who was at the firſt an obſtinate Papiſt, yet afterward (God having mercie upon him) he was converted to the faith of the Goſpell, and dyed a conſtant Martyr. It is not unknowne (ſaith he) that I was of this your blind religion, and therein continued obſtinately all King Edwards dayes: and having libertie under your auricular confeſſion, I made no conſcience of ſin at all; truſting to the Prieſts abſolution, he for money alſo doing ſome penance for me: which after I had given, I cared no further what offences I did, ſo that lecherie, ſwearing, and all other vices I accounted no offence or danger, ſo long as I might have them abſolved for money. Hæc Roger Holland. Martyr. coram Bonero, vid. plur. Fox. pag. 2040. col. 1. Ergo, The Maſſe bringeth wicked men into a fooles paradiſe, and maketh them preſumptuous and more bold to ſin, and ſo hindreth good life. Wherefore, ſeeing the Popiſh Maſſe is ſo contrary to the inſtitution of Chriſt, ſo full of errors and blaſphemies, ſo derogatorie to the eternall Prieſthood, and onely ſufficient ſacrifice of Chriſt, a perverting of ſound doctrine, and a deſtruction of good life and manners: we conclude, that it is an abominable invention, and ſay with Doctor Taylor, that it is one of Antichriſts daughters, Epiſtol. ad uxorem p. 1588. with Biſhop Ridley, that it is one of the maſſie poſts, and migtie pillars of Sathans Synagogue, pag. 1725. with William Tims Martyr, that in the Sacrament of the Altar, Chriſt is not preſent neither ſpiritually, nor corporally, but as they uſe it, it is an abominable Idoll, pag. 1897. with Thomas Hudſon Martyr, that it is a patched monſter, a diſguiſed puppet, more longer a peecing than ever was Salomons Temple, pag. 2035. And therefore to bee abhorred and deteſted of every good Chriſtian.

See this place objected againſt by a popiſh caviller, and anſwered, Retection.p.17

Here follow other reaſons, why it is not lawfull to reſort to the Popiſh Maſſe, or any part of their Idolatrous ſervice.

Arg. 1. FOraſmuch as there have beene ſome of opinion, (whether carried away with a ſelf-love, and ſingularitie in themſelves, or thereunto driven by reaſon of their weakneſſe, in time of perſecution) that a man keeping his heart and conſcience to himſelfe, might preſent himſelfe, for ſafegard of his life, at the Popiſh idolatrous and maſſing ſervice: How dangerous this opinion is, and how unlawfull a thing it is ſo to doe, we will by theſe reaſons make it plaine. Firſt, the Maſſe, and the whole Popiſh ſervice, (though the firſt we grant, is fuller of abominations, and therefore more dangerous; yet both of them wicked and abominable;) doth repugne manifeſtly againſt Gods word. In the Maſſe, theſe things are offenſive, and intolerable; the want of ſhewing the Lords death, in making it private, whereas it ſhould be a Communion: the Sacrament is not communicated under both kinds: the ſigne is ſervilely worſhipped, for the thing ſignified: Chriſts paſſion is injuried, ſeeing they make the Maſſe a propitiatory ſacrifice: Ergo, for theſe abominations, we ought neither to heare, nor ſee a Maſſe, Argum. Ridlei, p. 1718.

In the Popiſh Service or Leiturgie, theſe notorious abuſes and ſuperſtitions are common: In their Mattens and Evenſong, there is Idolatry maintained, invocation of Saints, kneeling to the Rood, creeping to the Croſſe, reading fables in ſtead of Scripture, prayer for the dead, and all is done in an unknowne tongue, which is forbidden in Gods word. Wherefore ſeeing they are manifeſtly oppoſite to the word of God, we ought not to vouchſafe our preſence, leſt thereby we ſhould ſeeme to give conſent unto them, Argum. Bradford in Epiſtol. quad. p. 1647.

Argum. 2. We cannot be partakers of Gods Religion, and Antichriſts ſervice, whereof the Maſſe is moſt principall: and the Latine ſervice is a plaine marke of Antichriſts Synagogue: a man cannot be a member of Chriſts Church, and of the Popes Church: But he that frequenteth their Idolatrous aſſemblies, maketh himſelfe a member thereof: Ergo, hee cutteth himſelfe off from the Church of Chriſt, Argum. Bradford.

Argum. 3. To diſſemble, and to halt in matters belonging to Gods glorie, is a thing impious and ungodly: but they which are preſent at Maſſe, both hearing the name of God blaſphemed, and ſeeing many abominations, and yet holding their peace, doe notably diſſemble: for as the Jewes were wont to rend their clothes, when they heard or ſaw any thing done or ſpoken blaſphemouſly againſt God: and Paul and Barnabas did ſo likewiſe, when they ſaw the people of Lycaonia readie to offer ſacrifice unto them; ſo ought wee to open our mouths againſt the blaſphemie and abominations of the Maſſe: but this the Maſſe-goſpellers doe not: Ergo, they are diſſemblers, and to be condemned in ſo doing, Argum. Bradford epiſtol. quad. p. 1652.

Argum. 4. Frequenting of Maſſe impugneth divers petitions in the Lords prayer, and ſo the practice of ſuch is contrarie to the daily prayer they uſe: How can wee ſay, Let thy Kingdome come, and goe to Maſſe, when as nothing in the earth more deſtroyeth the preaching and Kingdome of Chriſt, than the Maſſe? how can we pray, Thy will be done, when we will doe our owne will, and the will of our parents and friends, and not Gods will? How pray we, Deliver us from evill, which knowing the Maſſe to be evill, doe come to it? Ergo, if wee meane as we pray, going to Maſſe is to bee avoided: Argum. Bradford, ibid.

Argum. 5. The Maſſe and Latine ſervice, and the ſetters forth of it, condemne the Engliſh reformed ſervice, as hereſie, and ſo doe they which communicate with their aſſemblies, thus condemning that in practice, which they allow in judgement: contrarie to S. Pauls rule, Bleſſed is he that condemneth not himſelfe in that thing which he alloweth, Rom. 14. 22. Ergo, in going to Maſſe, they ſinne againſt their owne conſcience: Argum. Bradford, p. 1647. col. 1.

Argum. 6. All things which give occaſion to the wicked to bee more obfirmed, to the weake to ſtumble and fall, are to be abhorred: But Goſpellers going to Maſſe, and by their preſence giving allowance of it, doe occaſion the obſtinate to be more intractable, the weake Papiſts to be more obſtinate, the ſtrong Goſpellers to be ſore weakened, the weake Goſpellers to be utterly overthrowne: Ergo, argum. Bradford, ibid.

Dan. 1. 8.

Argum. 7. Daniel refuſed to be filled with the Kings meats, Dan. 1. 8. which were polluted by idolatrie, and ſo Iudith likewiſe, Iud. 12. The Machabees manfully gave their lives in defence of the ceremonies of the Law: Ergo, wee ought much more to endure and ſuffer all things for the maintenance of the word of God, and Sacraments: argum. D. Ridlei. pag. 1722.

Amos 5.5.
H b.10. 38.
Apoc. 13. 7.

Argum. 8. God commanded his people by the mouth of his Prophet Amos, not to ſeeke Bethel, neither to enter into Gilgall, where Idolatry was uſed: *My ſoule hath no pleaſure in theſe, ſaith the Lord, that withdraw themſelves, Heb.*10. 38. If any man prophane the Temple of God, him will God deſtroy, 1 Cor. 3. 17. All ſtrange religion is counted whoredome, with the Prophets, and they that follow the ſame goe a whoring: onely they whoſe names are not written in the booke of life, doe receive the marke of the beaſt, Apocal. 13.

But they that go to Maſſe, enter into Bethel, and Gilgall, that is, places of Idolatry: they withdraw themſelves from the faith, in their outward behaviour: they prophane their bodies, which are Gods temples, being preſent at idolatrous ſervice: they goe a whoring after a ſtrange worſhip: yea and they carrie the marke of Antichriſt in their externall obedience: Ergo, the Maſſe is abominable, and they in ſo doing are in danger of Gods curſe. Argum. M. Philpots Martyr, epiſtol. quart. pag. 18[illegible].

Argum. 9. Abraham, becauſe he would not be partaker of their Idolatry, fled from the people of Chaldea, his native countrey: Lot departed from the Sodomites, leſt he ſhould be conſumed with them: Sara would not ſuffer Iſmael, who was given to mocking, to keepe companie with her ſon Iſaac, leſt he alſo ſhould become a mocker. Moſes at Gods appointment commanded the people to depart from the tents of Chore, Dathan, and Abiram, leſt they ſhould bee all wrapped in their ſins, and ſo periſh among them: And the Scripture ſaith, Goe out of her my people, that you be not partakers of her ſins, and receive not of her plagues, Apocal. 18. 4. Ergo, we muſt not keepe companie with Idolaters and Maſſe-mongers, in their idolatrous and Maſſing temples: for ſo communicating with them in their ſins, we doe entangle our ſelves in their puniſhment. arg. Gulielmi Tynd. epiſt. Fox p. 1[illegible]. Apoc. 18.4.

Argum. 10. Laſtly, what better proofe can we have, than the wofull experience of thoſe who profeſſing the Goſpell, were entiſed through their infirmitie to come to Maſſe, and afterwards either judged themſelves, feeling inwardly an horror of conſcience, and ſo repented them, or continuing in that ſinne, were judged of God.

Examples of the firſt wee have one Cicelie Ormes, who for the ſpace of a twelve moneth after ſhee had recanted, could not be quiet in conſcience, untill ſhe had utterly forſaken all Poperie, and at the laſt gave her life for the faith of Chriſt, pag. 2013. Alſo one William Sparrow, who having yeelded to be confeſſed and heare Maſſe, had ſuch trouble in conſcience, that he could not be at reſt, till hee had renued the confeſſion of his former faith, and died for the ſame, Fox pag. 2026. Many ſuch examples are occurrent every where to ſuch as are converſant in the ſtories of the Martyrs; and all theſe judged themſelves, and found mercie.

I will ſet downe one notable example of a backſlider, who not judging himſelfe, was judged of God: One Robert Edgore ſerving in the place of the Clarke, in the Church of Mendleſham in Suffolke, but ſore againſt his conſcience, was at the length ſo deprived of his wits, that many yeeres after his poore wife was conſtrained to keepe him bound in chaines. Notwithſtanding this ſo good a warning, one George Revet, that had beene a talkative Goſpeller, for lucres ſake, ſet his ſonne into the ſame roome; and being therefore reproved of ſome good Chriſtians his neighbours, hee wiſhed of God, that if it were not Gods will his ſonne ſhould ſerve in that place, God would ſhew ſome ſtrange token, which came even ſo to paſſe: for the Lord ſent upon him a ſtrange ſwelling in his legs, which riſing up to his bodie did ſo torment him, that hee died moſt miſerably and impatiently, Fox pag. 1918. col. 1.

Thus I truſt it appeareth how dangerous and unlawfull a thing it is for Chriſtians to aſſociate themſelves to idolatrous aſſemblies, and to be preſent at Maſſe, or other Popiſh ſervice. Now becauſe it is the propertie of fleſh and blood to ſeeke ſtarting holes, and to ſearch every corner, to finde ſome excuſe to ſalve their weakneſſe, and infirmitie thereof, and with Adam as with fig leaves to hide our nakedneſſe, I will therefore ſet downe certaine objections with their anſwers: which ſome have invented in defence, or at the leaſt to excuſe their going to Maſſe.

Certaine objections with their anſwers made by Maſſe-goſpellers, in defence of their going to Maſſe.

Object. 1. IT is not materiall, though my bodie bee preſent, if my heart doe not conſent to their wicked doings.

Anſw. 1. Saint Paul ſaith, Glorifie God in your bodie, and in your ſpirit, 1 Cor. 6. 20. It is not enough then, to reſerve our ſoule onely for God; but as he hath made both bodie and ſoule, ſo we muſt honour him in both, Reſponſ. M. Philpotts, pag. 1832. col. 1. 1 Cor. 6, 20.

2 In Helias time God counted none to be his ſervants and people, but ſuch as had not bowed their knees to Baal, 1 King. 19. even ſo now he is Gods faithfull ſervant, that hath not bowed his knee to the filthie Idoll of the Maſſe, or any other abomination. Wee muſt not thinke that God requireth leſſe of us, than the husband of his wife: will the husband admit his wives excuſe, finding her in bed with another, that her heart notwithſtanding is her husbands? No more will Chriſt allow the preſence of your bodie at Maſſe, though your heart be not conſenting to it, Reſp. Bradford, p. 1652. col. 1. 1 King. 19.18.

Object. 2. It is a great crime to divide and ſeparate our ſelves from the communion and fellowſhip of the Church, which is the common practice of the Anabaptiſts in our dayes, and of the Novatians, and the hereticks called (Cathari) in times paſt: therefore wee thinke it beſt to retaine the fellowſhip of the Church, and to come to the ordinarie and uſuall aſſemblies.

Anſw. The ſect of the Anabaptiſts, Novatians, and other hereticks is to be condemned, who upon no juſt or neceſſarie occaſion doe ſeparate and divide themſelves from the Church: alſo wee grant that the unitie of the Church is to be retained by all meanes, as a thing neceſſarie to ſalvation: but the Popiſh Maſſe, as it is now uſed, is not the communion of the Church, but a monſtrous Idoll, and grievous prophanation of the Lords Supper: So that they which abſtaine from it, doe not breake themſelves off from the fellowſhip of the Church, but indeed they depart from Babylon, and the abominations thereof, Reſponſ. D. Ridley, pag. 1718. Unitie therefore and concord, is to be ſought for by all meanes, and embraced, but unitie, as S. Paul ſaith, Secundum Ieſum Chriſtum, According to Ieſus Chriſt: Sic beat. Latimer. ibid.

Obiect. 3. Admit there bee ſome fault in the Maſſe, and ſomewhat that may be mended, and made better: if you doe not conſent thereunto, what need you further trouble your ſelfe? Auguſtine ſaith, that communion of the Sacraments defile not a man, but conſent of deeds.

Anſ. If there were but ſome ſmall faults, and indifferent matters, or tolerable abuſes in the Maſſe, rather ſhewing ſome imperfection, than tending to open impiety; they might for common quietneſſe ſake bee ſomewhat borne withall. But now ſeeing it is ſtuffed full of blaſphemies, and ſpotted with foule idolatry, manifeſtly impugning the holy Inſtitution of the Lords Supper; no man can with good conſcience either in word or deed, give conſent thereunto. Auguſtines meaning is, that the badneſſe of the Miniſter, or of the receivers, pollute not the Sacraments nor the commers thereunto, where the Sacraments are rightly adminiſtred: he ſaith not, that men abhorring ſuperſtition, and the traditions of men, thruſt upon the Church in ſtead of Gods word, ought not to refraine from them for feare of pollution, Reſp. beat. Ridley, Martyr. p. 1719.

Obiect. 4. Unto this your fact in abſtaining from the Church by reaſon of the Maſſe, the examples of the Prophets, of Chriſt, of the Apoſtles is contrarie: for we doe not read, that any of them, no not in moſt ſuperſtitious times, refuſed to communicate in the Temple with the people, in their ſacrifices, and other Sacraments of the Law. Our Saviour Chriſt and his Apoſtles, making no doubt or ſcruple, haunted the Temple: Ergo, you alſo may ſafely come to the Popiſh Churches.

Anſw. That the Prophets, Apoſtles, yea our Saviour Chriſt himſelfe, reſorted to the Jewiſh Temple, we grant: but we read not that they did communicate with them in their idolatrie, or ſuperſtitious worſhips, but reproved them: onely in the lawfull ceremonies and rites of the Law, they aſſociated themſelves to their aſſemblies: So neither are we angry with the Churches, or the men there congregated, but would willingly reſort to them, to heare Gods word, and if we might have the Sacraments rightly adminiſtred: but not to communicate with them in their idolatrous ſervices, we are taught by the examples aforeſaid, Reſp. beat. Ridl. ad Antonii obiect. p. 1722.

Obiect. 5. You condemne the Maſſe, becauſe it is ſaid in an unknowne tongue, and therefore refuſe to come unto it. So is Baptiſme alſo miniſtred in the Latine tongue: and yet, you will not ſay, that a child having received it, is to be baptized againe.

Anſw. There is great difference betweene the Popiſh Maſſe, and Baptiſme uſed in Popery: firſt, I denie not Baptiſme to be a Sacrament in their Church, nor ſay it ought to be reiterated; becauſe the ſubſtance of the inſtitution is kept, to baptize in the name of the Father, the Sonne, and the holy Ghoſt. But the Maſſe is neither ſacrifice, nor Sacrament at all, becauſe many ſubſtantials of the inſtitution are wanting, as we have ſhewed before. 2 Though Baptiſme and all other publike exerciſes ought to bee celebrat in the vulgar tongue, yet there is not the like neceſſitie in Baptiſme, becauſe the children are not able to underſtand what is ſpoken, in what language ſoever: but to the other Sacrament, none but ſuch as are of diſcretion, are admitted. 3 Though children baptized in Popery, are not to be baptized againe, yet when they come to yeeres of diſcretion, they muſt bee taught and inſtructed in the Chriſtian faith: and for ſuch children, as are not yet baptized, the parents might doe better to deferre their Baptiſme, than to receive it in the Popiſh Church, till ſome convenient time, when they may get one to miniſter Baptiſme, not in ſubſtance onely, but in rites and ceremonies agreeable to Chriſts inſtitution, wherein the Baptiſme of the Popiſh Church faileth, Reſponſ. beat. Ridley, Fox. p. 1722.

Obiect. 6. Some will ſay, excuſing themſelves for their going to Maſſe, God is mercifull, and his mercie over all, and I truſt he will forgive us.

Anſw. True it is, God is mercifull, but we muſt not ſinne upon hope of forgiveneſſe; Gods mercie is above all his works, and yet but upon ſuch as feare him: as wee read in the Pſalmes, The mercy of God is on them that feare him, Pſal. 103. 17. And to feare God is to turne from evill, and doe that which is good. So that they which looke to bee partakers of Gods mercy, muſt not abide in any knowne and manifeſt evill, Reſponſ. beat. Philpot. Fox, pag. 1832. Pſal. 103.17.

Obiect. 7. Wee are commanded to obey our Magiſtrats, though they bee wicked: and therefore ſeeing they command and enjoyne us to come to Maſſe, wee ſee not how wee can doe otherwiſe, for feare of contempt and diſobedience.

Anſw. We are bound indeed to obey wicked governours, but ſo long onely, as they command nothing contrarie to Gods word: if they doe, we muſt herein follow the Apoſtles example, who not obeying the Magiſtrats wicked precepts, anſwered: that it was better to obey God, than men, Act. 4. And our Saviour Chriſt teacheth us to give unto Caeſar, the things that are Caeſars, and to God, the things that are Gods, Reſponſ. Philpot. Act. 4.19.

Obiect. 8. Some other there be, that for an extreme refuge in their evill doing, doe run unto Gods predeſtination, and election, ſaying, if I be elected of God to ſalvation, I ſhall bee ſaved, whatſoever I doe.

Anſw. Theſe men bee great tempters of God: they will at the divels bidding caſt themſelves downe from the pinnacle of the temple, by preſumption, that God may preſerve them by his Angels, through predeſtination. Wee muſt not doe evill, that good may come thereof, whoſe damnation is juſt, ſaith S. Paul, Rom. 3. 8. Wee muſt alſo conſider, that God hath choſen us to this end, that wee ſhould be holy, Epheſ. 1. 4. And Saint Peter willeth us to make our election ſure through good works, 2 Pet. 1. 10. The conſideration of our election then, is ſo farre off from making us careleſſe of good works, that it will rather ſtirre us up to all godlineſſe of life. So that he which conformeth not himſelfe to all obedience of life, hath good cauſe to doubt, that he is none of Gods elect, Reſponſ. Philpot. ibid.

Rom. 3. 8.
2 Pet. 1. 10.

Object. 9. Some doe object the example of Naaman the Syrian: who being newly converted to the worſhip of the God of Iſrael, deſired to be diſpenſed with, when he ſhould goe in with the King into the houſe of his Idoll Rimmon, and there bow himſelfe together with the King; that herein God would be mercifull unto him: unto whom the Prophet anſwered; Goe in peace, as liking of his motion, and yeelding to it.

Anſw. This example is ſo farre from being any warrant for Chriſtians to preſent themſelves in idolatrous temples, that it rather maketh againſt it: for the Prophets anſwer, Goe in peace, doth inſinuate no grant made of his petition, but rather a prohibition, not to trouble himſelfe about thoſe matters: as if he ſhould have ſaid, content thy ſelfe, requeſt no ſuch thing, it would trouble thy conſcience, but goe in peace, keepe a good conſcience, and labour for the peace thereof. That the Prophet is thus to be underſtood, it ſhall appeare by theſe two arguments.

Firſt, the circumſtance of this place ſheweth it: Naaman made two requeſts, one for a toleration to goe into Rimmons Temple: the other, for two Mules load of earth to carrie home with him, to ſacriſice upon unto the Lord. Now the Prophet made the ſame anſwer to both: hee then either granted both, or denieth both: but grant them both he did not: for the one was cleane contrarie to the Law, to give Naaman leave to ſacrifice in Syria, whereas Jeruſalem was onely appointed to bee the place of ſacrifice: neither did Naaman aske to have any Prieſt or Levit with him, to whom it onely pertained to offer ſacrifice: ſo this had beene another tranſgreſſion of the Law. This requeſt therefore the Prophet in no wiſe is to be thought to have granted: Ergo, not the other.

Secondly the uſe of this phraſe in Scripture, Goe in peace, may teach us how it is to be taken here: it is twice uſed in one Chapter, 2 King. 4. 23. 26. In the 23. verſe the Shunamite, ſo ſoone as her child was departed, which God had given unto her, according to the word of Eliſha, made haſte to goe to the Prophet: her husband not knowing the cauſe, ſeemed to be unwilling: Wherefore wilt thou goe to him to day, ſaith he, ſeeing it is neither new moone, nor Sabbath day? Shee anſwered, Peace be unto thee, and ſo went on her journey: In ſo ſaying, ſhee condeſcendeth not to her husbands minde, but willeth him onely to content himſelfe, and not to be too inquiſitive. Likewiſe in the 26. verſe, as ſhe was comming toward the Prophet, Gehezi met her and ſaid, Art thou in health? is thy husband and the child in health? Shee anſwered, Peace be unto thee: which was not in affirmation of his queſtion, but a watch-word, that hee ſhould deſiſt from further enquiring of her. As this forme of ſalutation is taken in theſe places, in the ſame ſenſe did the Prophet uſe it, when he ſaid to Naaman, Peace be unto thee: wiſhing him to content, and quiet his minde, and not to trouble himſelfe with ſuch curious matters, which might diſturbe the peace of his conſcience. And thus I thinke this place is anſwered.

2 King. 4. 23. 26.

Whether Naaman were allowed by the Prophet to bow the knee before the Idoll.

Some thinke that the Prophet doth anſwer thus, declarando, by declaring that it was lawfull for Naaman to goe in with his Maſter, to doe his office, and attend upon him, whether it were in the Idoll temple, or without. Lyranus upon this place, that hee thus anſwered: diſpenſando, diſpenſing with Naaman, not generally but in this caſe onely, to goe into the Idols Temple: Paulus Burgenſis: and ſome againe, that the Prophet doth it deprecando, promiſing to pray for him, that this infirmitie may be forgiven him. But becauſe the Prophet was farre from either allowing the leaſt ſhew of idolatry, ſuch as this was, as lawfull, or from diſpenſing with that which was evill, or in promiſing to pray for the forgiveneſſe of a ſinne, which hee purpoſed to continue in, I reſolve rather with learned Iunius upon the firſt ſenſe. Indeed Tertullian approveth certaine cauſes, which may give allowance to bee preſent at idolatrous ſacrifices: Licebit adeſſe in quibuſdam, quæ nec homini, non idolo officioſos habent: It is lawfull to bee preſent upon ſome occaſion, to performe ſome office unto men, not to the Idoll: Si propter ſacrificium vocatus adſiſtam, ero particeps idolatriæ, ſi me alia cauſa conjungit ſacrificanti, ero tantum ſpectator ſacrificii: If I be called for the ſacrifice ſake, I ſhall be partaker of idolatry, if any other cauſe joyne me to the ſacrifice, I ſhall be onely a beholder of the ſacrifice, otherwiſe what ſhould ſervants and officers doe which attend upon their maſters and governours, &c. But yet Tertullian putteth in this caution, that ſuch an one being preſent muſt, Ab omni ſpecie idololatriæ ſe intactum præſtare, See that he be not touched with any ſhew of idolatry: and he ſaith further, Si vinum ſacrificanti tribuerit, immo ſi verbo aliquo ſacrificio neceſſario adjuverit miniſter habebitur idololatriæ: If hee doe but miniſter wine to the ſacrifice, or helpe him with any word neceſſarie for the ſacrifice, hee ſhall bee counted a Miniſter of idolatry, &c. So then Tertullian alloweth one to be preſent by reaſon of his civill office, but ſo as he yeeld not to the leaſt ſhew of idolatry: but to bow the knee is a pregnant ſhew and ſuſpition of idolatry upon what occaſion ſoever: for both are equally forbidden, to honour an Idoll with the kiſſe of the mouth, or bowing of the knee, 1 King. 19. 18. As then it had not beene lawfull for Naaman to have kiſſed the Idoll with his mouth, if it had beene the faſhion, when the King had done it, for all his ſervants to follow, ſo neither was it to bow the knee: It was lawfull for Sadrach, Meſach, and Abednago to bee preſent at the dedication of Nebuchadnezzars Idols, becauſe they were governours, and by reaſon of their office were to attend the King, but by colour of their office they were not to bow the knee, neither did they, and therefore were they caſt into the fierie oven. So Nehemiah by occaſion of his ſervice and attendance might bee preſent in the temple of Rimmon: but upon no pretext was he to bow the knee before the Idoll.

1 Cor. 8. 10.

Object. 10. Laſt of all, it may be thus objected out of the 8. of the firſt to the Corinthians, verſ. 10. where the Apoſtle writeth thus: If any man ſee thee which haſt knowledge ſit downe in the Idols temple, ſhall not the conſcience of him that is weake, be bold to eat things ſacrificed to Idols? Here the Apoſtle reproveth not the ſitting downe in, or reſorting to the Temples of Idols, but onely the eating of things offered to Idols, whereby the weake might be offended: wherefore it ſeemeth not by the Apoſtle to be condemned.

1 Cor. 10. 20, 21.

Anſw. 1. This queſtion whether it be lawfull to eat things ſacrificed to Idols, the Apoſtle handleth at large, in the tenth Chapter from the 19. verſe to the end: where the whole queſtion is divided into three members or parts. Firſt, whether it be lawfull to eat them before the Idols in the idolatrous Temples. Secondly, whether they may buy ſuch meat in the ſhambles: for that which was left of the ſacrifices, the idolatrous Prieſts put to ſale for their advantage. Thirdly, whether they might eat ſuch things, if they were invited by the Infidels home to their owne houſes: theſe two laſt caſes the Apoſtle alloweth in themſelves, as matters lawfull and indifferent, unleſſe the weake brother be thereby offended: but the firſt he maketh abſolutely unlawfull, without any reſpect had to the offence: Ye cannot, ſaith he, be partakers of the Lords table, and the table of devils: that is, they which communicate in Chriſtian aſſemblies, thereby making themſelves members of Chriſt, ought not to aſſociate themſelves to the companie of the idolatrous Infidels, who in their filthie Idols worſhipped devils, verſ. 20. 21.

Secondly, this being then the Apoſtles judgement in that place, no doubt he is of the ſame minde and meaning here, that it is utterly unlawfull to ſit downe at the ſacrificers feaſts in the Idoll Temples: yet he ſpeaketh onely of the offence, that may ariſe to the weake, about the eating of things ſacrificed, becauſe this is the matter onely here in queſtion, ſimply for the lawfulneſſe of eating or not eating, without any relation had unto the place, as it may appeare verſ. 4. And therefore the Apoſtle, who doth alwayes keepe himſelfe to the very point of the queſtion, leaveth the part leſſe pertinent to his purpoſe, and ſtandeth wholly upon the other, deciding the reſt in the tenth Chapter. This place then is ſo farre off from giving allowance, either of Chriſtians reſorting then to idolatrous Temples, or now to Popiſh ſervices: that by comparing this place, in the eighth Chapter, and the other in the tenth, verſ. 20. we doe gather a ſtrong argument againſt ſuch practices: for as the Apoſtle there reaſoneth againſt idoll ſacrifices, that they ſacrificed them to devils, becauſe Idolatry is the invention of the devill: ſo we may ſay that Maſſe-ſervice is the ſervice of the devill, that monſtrous Idoll being of his invention and deviſing; and they therefore that are partakers of it, doe worſhip the invention of the devill, and ſo in like manner are partakers of the table of devils.

I will end now this treatiſe with a notable ſaying of Saint Auguſtine: Conteſtor vos omnes coram Deo & Angelis ejus, ac denuntio, ut nec ad diabolica illa convivia, quæ aut ad fanum, ad fontes, aut arbores fiant, veniatis: etſi vobis forte inde aliquid tranſmiſſum fuerit, tanquam ſi ipſum diabolum videatis perhorreſcite, ut nec in domum veſtram permittatis, de illo ſacrilego convivio quicquam exhiberi, propter illud Apoſtoli, Non poteſtis calicem Domini bibere, & calicem dæmoniorum: I doe charge you all before God and his Angels, and denounce unto you, that ye neither go your ſelves unto thoſe deviliſh feaſts, which are made in their temples, by fountaines, or under trees: and if any thing chance to be ſent unto you from thoſe feaſts, to bee afraid to touch it, as if yee ſaw the devill himſelfe, neither ſuffer any part of ſuch ſacrilegious feaſts to come within your houſe, becauſe the Apoſtle hath ſaid, Yee cannot be partakers of the Lords cup, and the cup of devils, Serm. de tempor. 241.

Thus (I truſt) it hath beene ſufficiently declared, how horrible and dangerous a thing it is, for good Chriſtians and wellwillers of the Goſpell, though not conſenting in heart, yet in bodie to be preſent at idolatrous ſervices, ſuch as we are perſwaded the Maſſe-worſhip is. We have alſo ſeene their weake grounds and ſimple excuſes, which goe about to maintaine and uphold their weakneſſe and imbecilitie herein. And here an end of this matter.

As wee have hitherto declared, how unlawfull a thing it is, for Profeſſors of the Goſpell to reſort to Maſſe, or Maſſe-ſervice; and anſwered, what on the contrarie part may bee objected: ſo now in the next place, wee will deale againſt our Recuſants, that refuſe to come to the Engliſh Leiturgie, as it is now uſed in the Church of England: who being of two ſorts, either Popiſh or ſchiſmaticall Recuſants, wee are not here to deale with the latter, but with the former onely, the other being without the compaſſe and ſcope of this worke. And ſeeing theſe alſo are not all of one ſort, for ſome will frequent our prayers, but not abide to heare Sermons; others will reſort to both theſe, but to the Communion in no wiſe. A third ſort more ſlaviſhly addicted to Popery than the reſt, refuſe to bee preſent at any of them, either prayers, preaching craments: wee will put them all together, and joyntly deale with them: firſt confuting their arguments, which they bring in defenſe of their recuſancie, and then convincing them by contrarie arguments.

Popiſh arguments confuted, commonly alleaged in defence of Recuſants.

Arg. 1. THeir firſt argument is drawne from the matter of our Communion and ſervice: they moſt blaſphemouſly call our Communion the cup and table of devils, wherein the devill (ſay they moſt wickedly) is properly ſerved, Rhemiſt. 1 Cor. 10. annot. in verſ. 9. and that our Communion will come at length to the ſacrifice of Ceres and Bacchus, Rhemiſt. Ioh. 4. 4. And as for our ſervice, they ſay, it is the ſervice of Baal, and plaine Idolatrie, Rhemiſt. 2 *Cor.*6. verſ. 14. And therefore they will none of our Communion or ſervice.

Anſw. Firſt, this new upſtart generation of Papiſts, in theſe their lies and blaſphemies, filleth up the meaſure of their forefathers: for as they blaſphemed, ſo doe theſe. One, ſometime a Biſhop in their Church, unreverently calleth the Communion table, an oyſter table; Biſhop White, Fox p. 1765. Another ſaith, an hovell is good enough for our Communion: they get them a tankard (ſaith he) and one ſaith, I drinke and am thankfull: the more joy of thee, ſaith another, Weſton. Fox pag. 1459. Theſe lies and blaſphemies they caſt not at us, but even againſt Chriſts inſtitution: for they ſhall never bee able to ſhew, as long as the world ſtandeth, that any thing is uſed in our Communion beſide or contrarie to Chriſts inſtitution: Chriſt tooke bread and wine and bleſſed it, ſo doe we: he ſaid, Take, eat, drinke ye all of this; ſo both the bread and cup is diſtributed in the Communion: he bade us doe it in remembrance of him; ſo wee doe celebrate the Communion, as a commemoration of Chriſts death and paſſion: and in all things, as neere as we can, wee obſerve and keepe the firſt inſtitution. Wherefore, if our Communion be the table of devils; if it be the feaſt of Ceres and Bacchus, then was Chriſts even ſo, which to thinke, what horrible and inexpiable blaſphemie is it?

Secondly, they doe but prevent us: for the Idoll of the Maſſe is, as they ſay falſely of our Communion; and as a notable Martyr ſaid, It is Antichriſts daughter, in which the devill is rather preſent and received, than Chriſt: Doctor Taylor, pag. 1528. For in how many points doe they ſwarve from the inſtitution? Chriſt ſaid, Take yee, eat yee, miniſtring to many; they make it private onely to the Prieſt: Chriſt appointed it to be eat and drunke; they hang it up in pixes and make an Idoll of it: Chriſt celebrated in both kindes; they take away the cup from the people: Chriſt calleth it the fruit of the vine, and Paul bread after conſecration: they ſay, there is neither bread nor wine, but only the bodie and bloud of Chriſt. See more of this matter, argum. 1. general. cont, Miſſam.

Beſide theſe contradictions to Chriſts inſtitution: One denieth that the Sacrament hath a promiſe of remiſſion of ſins: and yet Chriſt ſpeaking of his bloud, as it is repreſented in the Sacrament, ſaith, which is ſhed for you, and for many, for remiſſion of ſins. The ſame partie alſo granted another great abſurditie, that Chriſt eat his owne bodie, Moreman. in diſput. convocat. pag. 1412. Another denieth the Euchariſt to bee a Sacrament of the bodie of Chriſt, ſaving onely of his myſticall bodie, which is the Church, D. Coole diſput. Oxonienſ. pag. 1434. col. 1. Another ſtout champion of theirs, denied that Chriſt commanded the Sacrament, or the uſe of it: and that Take yee, eat yee, was no commandement, B. Wincheſt. p. 1611. col. 1.

Let any indifferent man now judge, whether of us are departed from the inſtitution of Chriſt: and whether wee may not more juſtly call their Maſſe-ſervice, the ſervice of the devill, than they can ſo terme ours, being in every reſpect anſwerable to Chriſts inſtitution.

Thirdly, but are they not aſhamed to charge us with Idolatrie? What dare they not now ſay, ſeeing they herein, againſt all ſhew of truth, will not ſtick to belie us? I pray you where be our Idols of ſilver or gold? can you ſee your ſelves, or ſhew others any in our Churches? There are but two things requiſite to Idolatrie; To have and ſet up Images, and then to bow downe unto them and adore them. The Lutherans have Images, but adore them not; wee neither have them, nor adore them: Papiſts doe both: the Lutherans come neerer Idolatrie than Proteſtants: if they bee not Idolaters, much leſſe are we.

I pray you this: if a Jew or Turke, which both of them hate Images, ſhould come firſt into a popiſh Church, and ſee in every corner an Image, beautified and garniſhed, and the people kneeling before them, knocking upon their breaſts: afterward let him be brought into a Church of the Proteſtants, where there is neither Image to be ſeene, nor any crouching or bowing unto them; whether of theſe two now would he count Idolatrous Churches? or whether people would hee call Idolaters? But thus blind are the Papiſts, that they take bitter for ſweet, and ſweet for bitter, they call good evill, and evill good, as the Prophet ſaith. They would have us to bee counted Idolaters, which neither have Images, nor yet doe worſhip them: and themſelves to be none, which doe both. We worſhip not Ceres and Bacchus, that is, Bread and Wine, as the Manichees ſometime objected againſt the Chriſtians, and the Papiſts doe now againſt Proteſtants. We uſe bread and wine in the Sacrament, and reverence them as holy ſignes, but we bow not downe unto them, nor worſhip them. Our adverſaries indeed doe make an Idoll of a piece of bread, when the Prieſt boweth himſelfe to the hoſt in the Maſſe, ſaying, I worſhip thee, I glorifie thee: what monſtrous Idolatrie is this, ſo to adore a cake made of flower? Who are now the worſhippers of Ceres and Bacchus but Papiſts? For that which they doe ſuch homage unto, in ſhew is bread, in taſte and feeling bread; in the eye, the mouth, and hand, bread: what is it elſe then but bread, whatſoever they ſay? Like unto the old idolatrous Iſraelites, who, as the Septuagint tranſlate, and as Auguſtine readeth; Elegerunt novos Deos, ὡς ἄρτον κρίθινον*, ut panem hordeaceum*: They choſe new Gods, as barlie bread: that is, they changed their Gods, as men doe change their bread, as Auguſtine expoundeth it, qu. 30. in lib. Iudicum. So the Papiſts have choſen a new God, even panem triticeum, wheaten bread. We may put out ὡς ἄρτον, as bread; for they doe worſhip, not barlie, (for that is the onely difference) but wheaten bread indeed. Wherefore, ſeeing our Communion is the ſervice of Chriſt, not the ſervice of the devill, as they blaſpheme, and it is as farre off from idolatrie, as that which hath the leaſt agreement with it; in this reſpect they have no cauſe to refraine our Churches: and thus is their firſt reaſon anſwered.

Argum. 2. Another fault they finde with our congregations and aſſemblies; calling our Temples and people, ſchiſmaticall: and therefore they will not come at them, Rhemiſt. annot. 2 Cor. 6, 14. Thus then they reaſon: It is not lawfull to aſſemble, or pray with ſchiſmaticks; you are ſchiſmaticks; Ergo.

Anſw. Firſt, the propoſition is not true, that it is not lawfull to pray with ſchiſmaticks: for if Schiſma, be nothing elſe, as it is defined in Auguſtine contra Fauſt. lib. 20. cap. 2. Quam eadem opinantem atque eodem ritu colentem, quo cæteri, ſolo congregationis delectari diſſidio: For a man holding the ſame judgement in religion, and the ſame manner of worſhip, onely to ſeparate himſelfe from the reſt of the congregation: I ſee no reaſon, why it is not lawfull to pray with ſuch, who faile not in any point of faith, though they breake the bond of charitie; but both have the word of God, and Sacraments truly taught and adminiſtred: ſo that by our comming to them, we ſeeme not to approve their ſchiſme. Did not S. Paul joyne himſelfe to the Jewiſh Synagogues, which were more than ſchiſmatically divided from the true Church, both enduring to heare the lectures of the law read, as alſo himſelfe to preach amongſt them, yea and to pray (for their preaching was not without prayer?) read Acts chap. 13. and 15.

Secondly, the aſſumption or ſecond part of their reaſon, is more falſe and untrue than the firſt: for be it knowne unto them, we are no ſchiſmaticks, theirs is the ſchiſmaticall Church. Firſt, Saint Paul ſheweth who are ſchiſmaticks: namely, They which depart, and play the apoſtaes from the faith, giving eare to the doctrine of devils, as forbidding of marriage, and teaching to abſtaine from meats, 1 Timoth. 4. verſ. 1. 3. But they, not we, teach theſe doctrines: Ergo, they, not we, are the ſchiſmaticks and apoſtataes. Secondly, every departure maketh not a ſchiſme. We are commanded to depart from Babylon, Apocal. 18. 4. that is, not to communicate with their ſinnes and errors: ſo wee in leaving the Church of Rome have not forſaken the fellowſhip of the true Church, but onely ſhaken hands with their filthie and abominable doctrine.

Thirdly, every abſolute Kingdome and Church may meaſure themſelves by themſelves: and may eaſily know who they are that divide themſelves from the ſocietie of that Church, where they live, without compariſon and reſpect had to other Churches: As to know who are ſchiſmaticks in England, we need not run to Rome, but they are ſuch, as ſeparate themſelves from the lawfull congregations in England, which have the right uſe of the Word and Sacraments: to trie out this matter by their owne rules; who are the ſchiſmaticks in our Church? they that ſteale their Maſſes in corners, or they that heare divine ſervice, according to Gods word, publikly in Churches? Is the whole congregation ſchiſmaticall, or a few ſingular fellowes rather, that doe divide themſelves from the reſt?

S. Auguſtine ſpeaking of the Gentiles in his time, ſaith, Si non conſentiant veritati veſtræ, erubeſcant paucitati ſuæ: If they will not agree to your veritie, let them bee aſhamed of their paucitie: in Matth. ſerm. 6. So may I ſay of popiſh Recuſants in England, that although their number is not ſo ſmall, as might be wiſhed, and I truſt in time may be, yet God be thanked it is not ſo great, as that it is able to countervaile by many parts the Lords royall hoſt of Proteſtants: whoſe number daily let us beſeech God to encreaſe: Ergo, we are no ſchiſmaticks, and ſo have they loſt alſo this argument.

Argum. 3. Catholikes muſt have nothing to doe with hereticks, ſpecially in prayers: Ergo, they refuſe to aſſemble with us in our Churches, holding us to be hereticks, Rhemiſt. annot. 2 Cor. 6. 14.

Anſw. 1. It is not indeed lawfull to pray with hereticks, becauſe their prayers alſo are hereticall: but ſo are not our prayers, which moſt of them, I thinke, they themſelves will not refuſe to ſay Amen unto: for many of them are the very ſame which they alſo uſe in their ſervice, as the Gloria in excelſis, the Epiſtle and Goſpell, the Creed, the Lords prayer, and many Collects and ſhort prayers beſide: (for what is good in their ſervice and Leiturgie, and may bee uſed without ſuperſtition, wee thinke not much to retaine:) An heretick (ſaith Saint Paul) after two or three admonitions, avoid, Tit. 3. But what if prayers uſed by thoſe, whom you count hereticks, have not any thing worthie of admonition or reproofe? why then ſhould ſuch prayers be ſhunned, and avoided? but ſuch are ours: Ergo.

Tit. 3. 10.

2 The accuſation of hereſie, wee doe with much better right, and juſter title returne upon your head, which you ſhall never be able to faſten upon us. Firſt, if they will bee tried by Saint Pauls rule, he ſaith, He that loveth not the Lord Ieſus, let him be accurſed, 1 Cor. 16. 21. Who is hee now, that loveth veth not the Lord Jeſus? Is it hee that aſcribeth his ſalvation onely to Chriſt Jeſus, in whole and in part, the beginning, continuing, and end: or hee rather who hopeth to bee ſaved partly by the death of Chriſt, partly by his owne merits? who ſaith, the beginning of his juſtification, which they call the firſt juſtification, is of grace: the ſecond (which indeed is nothing elſe but ſanctification, the fruits of juſtification) ſay they, is merited. I thinke the firſt loveth Chriſt: ſuch I truſt, are wee: the ſecond, I am afraid, loveth him not: for Chriſt will not part ſtakes, nor give his honour to another: of this ſort I would our adverſaries were not. They therefore, if any, are the heretikes, and to bee holden accurſed.

1 Cor. 16. 21.

3 Or will they ſtand to Auguſtines definition of an heretike: Hæreticus eſt, qui alicujus temporalis commodi, & maximè gloriæ & principatus cauſa, falſas & novas opiniones, aut gignit, aut ſequitur: He is an heretike, who for ſome temporall commoditie, or glorie and chiefedome ſake, doth either invent and begin falſe & new opinions, or doth follow them: De utilitat. credend. c. 1. Now we neither invent no follow falſe or new opinions: not falſe, for our deſire is to be tried with our opinions by the touchſtone of Gods word in Scripture revealed, the only rule of faith: and therefore we love not the errors of darkneſſe, ſeeing we hate not the light: not new, for our faith is the ancient Catholike Apoſtolike faith, revealed by Chriſt, preached by the Apoſtles, profeſſed in the Church many hundreds after, ſealed with the bloud of Martyrs: and this ancient freehold of our faith, they ſhall be never able to drive us from. Againe, as we are free from the falſe and ſtrange opinions of heretikes, ſo alſo wee defie their covetous and ambitious minde. What temporall commoditie (I pray you) did the Proteſtants looke for, in the late dayes of perſecution in England, when as for their conſcience and faith ſake, ſome loſt their livings and dignities in the Church, Biſhopricks, Archbiſhopricks, Deanries, Archdeaconries, yea and their Countrey withall? And as for vaineglorie, it was farre from them, as it appeareth by their deepe proteſtations being charged therewith, as you may read in Maſter Bradfords ſtorie, Fox. pag. 1606. And Maſter Philpot doth in great vehemencie of ſpirit in this manner diſcharge himſelfe: I proteſt here before God, and his eternall Sonne Ieſus Chriſt my Saviour, and the Holy Ghoſt and his Angels, that I doe not ſtand in any opinion of wilfulneſſe or ſingularitie, &c. pag. 1800. And who would not beleeve them, both for their earneſt proteſtation ſake, but much more for that they declared in deed? for what liſt, thinke wee, or leiſure had thoſe holy men to ſeeke for the fame of this world, when they looked everie day when their lives ſhould be taken from them? Fame and eſtimation is much deſired in the world, but hardly will a man purchaſe it by the loſſe of his life.

But what ſhall we think of our adverſaries? Is not the hope or rather having of gaine a great pillar of their profeſſion, and the faireſt white that they aime at? Let their Pilgrimages, Maſſes, Dirges, Trentals, Suffrages for the dead, Purgatorie doctrine, Pardons, Indulgences, and the like trumperie, ſpeake in this caſe if lucre were not the mother that bare them, and the nurſe that fed and nouriſhed them. There was never any ſuch gainfull religion to the profeſſors thereof ſince the world began, as Poperie hath been to Popes, Cardinals, Abbots, Monks, Friers, and the like. And what for principalitie? doe they contemne and deſpiſe it? I thinke no. What elſe made Popes in times paſt ſo proud, as to make Emperours and Kings their ſlaves and vaſſals, to tread on their necks, to make them dance attendance in froſt and cold, barefoot and barelegged at their gates, to cauſe them to kiſſe their feet, to hold their ſtirrop, and lead their horſe by the bridle, and ſuch like ſervices they put them to? Is not this the Prince of pride? Why doth the Pope challenge to bee head of Chriſts Church, to bee the Lord of the whole world, above Kings and Princes, and propoſeth it to bee beleeved as an article of faith to all his ſubjects: if hee were not poſſeſſed with pride? Eraſmus that famous learned Clerke well perceived the pride and covetouſneſſe of this generation, when hee being asked by the Duke of Saxony, what hee thought of Luthers proceedings, wittily anſwered, that hee dealt with two things which were in no wiſe to bee touched, the Popes crowne, and the Monks belly: meaning the pride of the one, and the covetous deſire of the other. Wherefore if the holding of falſe and ſtrange opinions on the one ſide, with hope and deſire of gaine or glorie on the other, doe make an heretike, who ſeeth not that this definition better agreeth to the members of the Church of Rome, than unto Proteſtants? Wee are then no heretikes, much leſſe are our prayers and ſervice hereticall: and therefore our Recuſants in this reſpect have no cauſe to abſent themſelves from our Congregations.

Argum. 4. Another reaſon of their Recuſancie is drawn from the Miniſters of the word & Sacraments amongſt us: Heretikes, ſay they, are not to be heard, though they pray and preach the truth, Rhemiſt. annot. Mark. 3. vers. 1. Ergo, they will not heare our Miniſters either preach or pray.

Anſ. 1. That the truth is not to be heard or received at heretikes hands, it hath neither warrant of Scripture, nor good ground of reaſon: Firſt, Auguſtine ſaith, reaſoning thus out of Scripture, Evangelium Iudas ſine detrimento fidelium prædicavit: Iudas preached the Goſpell, without any hindrance or loſſe to the faithfull: Numquid Paulus gauderet de talium prædicatione, qui contentioſi erant, niſi ſciret quod illis pernicioſum eſſet rem caſtam non caſtè annunciare, illis ſalubre qui per illos proficiebant ad ſalutem. Or would Paul have rejoyced of their preaching, which were contentious, as hee doth, Philip. 1. 18. Philip 1.18. but that hee knew that it was hurtfull to them that preached the chaſte truth not chaſtly, but holeſome to them that profited thereby to ſalvation? Lib. 2. cont. Epiſt. Parmeni. ca. 11. Here bee two examples out of Scripture, which ſhew that the truth by whomſoever may ſafely bee preached: our Saviour Chriſt neither condemned Iudas preaching of the Goſpell, that childe of perdition, nor yet Paul the contentious preaching of falſe diſciples.

Auguſtine addeth alſo a third example out of the Goſpell: Botrum carpe, ſpinam cave: Cathedra Moſis, vitis eſt: Phariſæorum mores & doctrina ſpina: Take the grape, but beware the thorne: the vine is the chaire of Moſes; the thorne is the corrupt doctrine and manners of the Phariſies, Tract. in Iohan. 46. The Phariſies had many erroneous doctrines, and therefore our Saviour Chriſt giveth his Apoſtles warning to take heed of their leaven; yet ſo long as they taught the truth ſitting in Moſes chaire, our Saviour biddeth to heare them, *Mat.*23.2. Secondly, beſides thoſe examples out of Scripture, it is thus confirmed by reaſon: Auguſtine denieth that heretikes are worſe than Ethnikes and Infidels: his reaſon is, becauſe Chriſt ſaith, If a man heare not the Church, let him be unto thee as an Infidell: making that the extremeſt and moſt dangerous caſe of all: but ſaith he, In ipſis Ethnicis quod rectum erat approbarunt Apoſtoli: the Apoſtles in the verie heathen allowed that was right, as *Act.*17. S. Paul citeth a place out of an Athenian Poet: Ergo, that which is right wee may heare and allow, even in heretikes.

2 Yet though this were granted that heretikes are not to bee heard, no not ſpeaking the truth; that our Miniſters are heretikes, or favourers or followers of heretikes, or that they draw neere unto hereſie, they ſhall never be able to prove: So that they are ſatisfied for this, and need not therefore be ſo ſcrupulous in this behalfe, in not comming to our prayers.

*Argum.*5. A Catholike man, ſay the Rhemiſts, is bound to confeſſe his faith, *Rhemiſt. Luk.*10. *ver.*8. And, *Annot. Iohan.*12. *ver.*42. they doe ſharply rebuke and reprehend ſuch Catholikes, as dare not freely confeſſe their faith: hereupon it followeth, that a Pope-Catholike profeſſor ought in no wiſe to reſort to the Churches of Proteſtants: which cannot be done without diſſimulation of their faith, which they ſhould openly and boldly profeſſe.

Anſ. 1. The Rhemiſts judgement in this place concerning the open profeſſion of faith, we do willingly approve and allow: and wee could wiſh that all the Pope-Catholikes in England at this day were of this minde, and herein would follow the counſell and advice of their ghoſtly Fathers of Rhemes: that is, that all Engliſh Papiſts were become Recuſants, and would openly ſhew what lieth hid in their breſts, that we might better take heed of them. But it is to be feared, that we have many hollow-hearted Countrey-men, that doe openly reſort to our Congregations in body, but in heart communicate not with us, who have Engliſh faces, but Rhomiſh hearts: Theſe are our moſt dangerous enemies, and chiefly to be feared: unto whom we may uſe that good old ſaying, Aut appare quod es, aut eſto quod appares: Either appeare as thou art, or bee that which thou appeareſt. So it were to be wiſhed, that theſe cunning fellowes would either appeare outwardly to be Papiſts if they be ſo in heart, or elſe be Goſpellers indeed, as they ſhew by their outward behaviour.

In Pſalm.50.

2 Faith indeed is publikely to be confeſſed: diſſimulation in all matters is to be miſliked, but it is worſt in religion: yet he that will make publike confeſſion of his faith, had need be ſure he is in a right faith, leſt afterward hee be aſhamed of his faith: And ſo I would that Popiſh Recuſants did confeſſe their faith, that is, to abide and indure the examining, ſifting and triall of their faith by the Scriptures, and not to refuſe our Sermons, bookes, conferences, admonitions, whereby we declare unto them the errors of their faith: For this is to confeſſe our faith, as S. Peter defineth it: To give an anſwer to everie one that asketh us a reaſon, &c. 1 Peter 3.15. Theſe Recuſants then are no open confeſſors of their faith, for as much as they are not ready to give an account thereof: which courſe if they would take, I doubt not but in the end they ſhould ſee the errors whereunto they had beene nuzzled, and ſo confeſſe, and ſet before their face their faith, as Auguſtine ſaith of ſin: Tu peccatum tuum ante faciem tuam converte, ſi vis ut inde faciem Deus avertat: ſi peccatum tuum in dorſo tuo ponis, Deus ibi faciem ponit: Set then thy ſin before thy face, if thou wilt have God therefrom to turne his face, but if thou place thy ſin behinde, as on thy backe, that is, hide it, thither alſo God turneth his face: that is, God will hide his face from thee, as thou hideſt thy ſin from him. Thus let theſe ſelfe-wild Recuſants confeſſe and acknowledge their faith, that is, ſet before their eyes their errors and falſe opinions, ſo would God forgive them their ignorances and errors, and thus they ſhould bee right confeſſors of the Popiſh faith, confeſſors not to maintaine, but to forſake it and to be aſhamed of it.

3 A man wee grant is in no caſe to diſſemble his faith: that is no right faith or profeſſion which alloweth diſſimulation, nor yet he a good profeſſor, or faithfull man that will diſſemble: for wee are not ignorant what our Saviour Chriſt ſaith: that whoſo denyeth him before men, him will he deny before his father in Heaven. To this purpoſe may be remembred what Auguſtine reporteth of the converſion of one Victorinus a Rhetorician of Rome: who after he was become a Chriſtian, yet frequented not the Chriſtian aſſemblies: unto whom Simplicianus a godly Prieſt was wont to ſay, Ego te non deputabo inter Chriſtianos, niſi in Eccleſia te videro: I will not for my part count you a Chriſtian, unleſſe I ſee you in the Church of Chriſtians. But he at the firſt ſcoffed, ſaying: Ergo ne parietes faciunt Chriſtianos? then belike the wals of the Church make Chriſtians? Afterward being better adviſed, he reſorted to the Church, was baptized, and openly (ſtanding in an high place) confeſſed his faith before the congregation, whereas he might have done it more ſecretly: and this reaſon is given of his ſo doing: Non erat ſalus (inquit) quam docebat in Rhetorica, & eam tamen publice profeſſus erat: That tended not to ſalvation which he taught in Rhetorike, and yet he publikely profeſſed it: meaning that much more faith, whereby we are led unto life, ought boldly and publikely to be profeſſed, Auguſt.lib.conf.ſ.8. cap.2.

This then being fully determined and concluded, that faith is not to bee cloked or diſſembled: let us ſee how much our adverſaries come ſhort and faile in this point, and ſo offend againſt their owne rules; amongſt whom it is an uſuall and common trade in the moſt, to cloke their Popiſh profeſſion with an outward countenance and ſemblance of the Goſpell. And with Papiſts it is no rare thing to diſſemble both in religion and other affaires of life. Was it not ſaid openly in the Councell of Conſtance, when they brake the Emperours ſafe conduct granted to Iohn Huſſe, that fides non eſt ſervanda hæreticis, that faith is not to bee kept with heretikes? The like anſwer was made ann. 1526. by Hawnart the Emperours Ambaſſadour, that whereas the Lady Katherine the Emperours younger ſiſter was promiſed to Iohn Fredericke Duke of Saxony in marriage, and writings were made thereupon, yet after the reformation of Religion in Saxony, the covenant was broken: for with heretikes, ſaid Hawnart, promiſe is not to be kept, Fox, p.884. col.1.

It is not long ſince here in England ſolemne promiſe was made, that the religion eſtabliſhed in King Edwards dayes ſhould not be altered, and it was made by one that then ruled the helme, yet was it not performed, vid.Fox, p.1407. If they can thus diſſemble, and breake their troth and faith in human matters, who doubteth thereof, but that they will bee changlings in Religion: for as S. Iames ſaith, A wavering minded man is unſtable in all his wayes, Iam. 1.8. that is, both toward God and men. He that knoweth the vertue of the Popes diſpenſations, which can diſſolve oaths and vowes, may eaſily thinke that Pope Catholikes may be diſpenſed withall to diſſemble in Religion: How elſe came it about, that ſo many Proteſtants in ſhew, in King Edwards dayes, were ſo ſoone transformed into Papiſts in Queene Maries: and ſo many Papiſts then had ſo ſoone put on the face of Proteſtants in Queene Elizabeths gracious reigne? I could wiſh with all my heart, that all the Papiſts at this preſent day in England were Recuſants, that wee might the better take heed of them. But it is to bee feared, that there be many cloſe Papiſts in England, that are content for a while to temporize, watching for an houre, which I truſt they ſhall never ſee: like unto the heretikes called Priſcillianiſts, of whom Auguſtine reporteth, that their manner was, Vt ſua venena non prodant, noſtros ſe eſſe mentiuntur, That they ſhould not bewray their poiſon, they faine themſelves to be ours, *lib.*1. *cont. mend. c.*3. Mendacio occultare hæreſin, & ſe catholicos fingere: To cloke their hereſie by a lye, and to faine themſelves good Catholikes, *Lib.cont. mendacium, cap.*1. I would we had no ſuch Romaniſts now in England, which faine themſelves to be true Catholike Proteſtants.

Thus then are our adverſaries anſwered for this matter, whom firſt we deſire to follow their owne rules, that is, to deale plainly with us, and to ſhew themſelves outwardly, as they are in heart: And then we doe wiſh, that they would glorifie God, and confeſſe their errors, and ſo bee reformed both in heart, and changed alſo in their outward profeſſion: ſo may they ſafely reſort to our Chriſtian aſſemblies, without diſſembling their conſcience.

Argum. 6. Another reaſon of their Recuſancie is drawne from the ſequell or event of their comming to our Churches, if they ſhould yeeld thereunto: that is, they thinke that their preſence would grace and countenance, and bring credit to our aſſemblies, which by all meanes they labour to diſcredit, and bring into contempt: for thus the Rhemiſts open their blaſphemous mouth, It muſt needs be an honour to Calvins Communion, when Catholikes are ſeene in the Idols temple, ſitting at the abominable table, Annot. 1 *Cor.*8. *ver.*10.

Anſwer. Firſt, wee acknowledge no ſuch Calvins communion amongſt us: that which we have is Chriſts communion: and of his name both it and we are called: wee depend not upon men, though wee praiſe God for ſuch excellent inſtruments, as Calvin and Luther were, ſtirred up of God to ſet forth his truth. It is your guiſe, and not ours, to call your profeſſions and Maſſes after the names of men: you have Saint Gregories Maſſe, Saint Baſils Maſſe, Saint Iames his Maſſe, which you doe falſly father upon him. And in England you had the uſe of Sarum, and the uſes of other Churches: divers formes of your Maſſe: Contrarie to the decree of the fifth Councell, Toletan.can. 2. Vnum modum in Miſſarum ſolennitatibus, unus in veſpertinis officiis, nec diverſa ſit ultrà in nobis eccleſiaſtica conſuetudo, quia in una fide continemur & regno: Let one and the ſame way bee obſerved at Maſſe and Evening prayer, neither let there be any longer a divers uſe in the Church, ſeeing wee belong to one faith and Kingdome.

Though Luther had ſome private opinion not generally received of Proteſtants, yet notwithſtanding wee acknowledge him to have been an excellent inſtrument of the truth: here then is no contradiction. See this cavill further anſwered, Retect. pag.72.

Secondly, ye are ſhameleſſe men to call our Churches, Idols temples. We have no Images or Idols at all to be ſeene in our Churches, much leſſe doe we worſhip them: And as for the bread and wine in the Sacrament, though wee reverence them as holy ſignes, yet wee adore them not, neither make idols of them as you doe. If our Communion table be an abominable table, then ſo is Chriſts: for we ſay all that Chriſt ſaid, and doe all that he did in the inſtitution of his laſt Supper: yee are not able to ſhew that in any one jot we have ſwerved from the firſt inſtitution, as you have done divers wayes: as in taking away the cup, whereas Chriſt ſaid, Drinke yee, as well as eat yee; and making the Communion private, whereas Chriſt ſaith, Drinke ye all of this; in reſerving the Sacrament, whereas Chriſt would have it eaten and drunke, and in many ſuch things: your Maſſe altar therefore is that abominable table, not our Communion table. And you are thoſe worſhippers of the Idols of ſilver and gold, *Apoc.*9.20. for you have ſuch Images in your Churches, you fall downe and pray before them, and offer incenſe to them, and ſo are moſt groſſe Idolaters: but wee follow the rule of your owne Councels, *Synod. Moguntin. cap.*42. Nos prava ſuperſtitioni viam precludere volentes, omnibus locorum Ordinariis injungimus, ut ſi forte in territoriis ſuis concurſus ad imaginem fieri, & homines ad ipſius imaginis figuram reſpectum habere, & quaſi quandam divinitatis opinionem illi tribuere animadverterint, ipſam imaginem pro cauſa qualitate tollant, aut mutent: Wee willing to ſtop all way againſt ſuperſtition, doe enjoyne the Ordinaries, that if they ſee in their territories the people to run to images, and to attribute unto them a divine power, having reſpect to the figure of the image, that they either take away, or change the image. If they be idolaters that have taken away idols, and aboliſhed them, then will we alſo be idolaters.

Pſal.4.2.

Thirdly, now to anſwer to their argument: Firſt, they ſhew of what making they are, and whoſe children they be, in that they are afraid, that the truth by them ſhould be graced, and Chriſts inſtitution honoured. They will not come to Church, becauſe they thinke it would bee an honour, not to Calvins, but to Chriſts Communion: to whom we may ſay, as S. Stephen to the perverſe Jewes, *Act.*7.51. You ſtiffe-necked and of uncircumciſed hearts and eares, you have alwayes reſiſted the Holy Ghoſt, as your fathers did, ſo doe you: And as the Pſalmiſt ſaith, *O yee ſons of men, how long will yee turne my glorie into ſhame? Pſalm.*4.2. Doth it grieve you that Chriſt ſhould be honoured and his inſtitution reverenced? O enemies to God and all godlineſſe! Secondly, though they doe come to our Churches, if their hearts bee not reformed, but doe cloake the ſuperſtition of their darke mindes, with the ſhew of outward conformitie and obedience, they are ſo farre from gracing our aſſemblies, that they are a diſgrace and a diſhonour to them. And as Iude ſaith of ſuch, They are ſpots in your feaſts of charitie, verſ. 12. ſo theſe are foule blemiſhes in our holy meetings, when as hypocrites doe joyne themſelves to the aſſemblies of the Saints. They need not feare, leſt thus comming they ſhould honour our Communion, nay rather as much as in them lyeth, they prophane and pollute it: when holy things are thus caſt unto dogs, and pearles before ſwine. Thirdly, but if they would reſort to our aſſemblies dutifully, as it becommeth good Chriſtians, to receive inſtruction and comfort by the word of God and the Sacraments, they ſhould not for all this bring grace or win credit to theſe publike exerciſes, but ſhould themſelves be graced, and receive honour thereby. The Pſalmiſt ſaith, *Pſalm.*149.9. Such honour God vouchſafeth his Saints, that is, in giving unto them his word: ſo ſaith Moſes, *Deut.*4.8. What nation is ſo great that hath ordinances and lawes ſo righteous? &c. The Law of God maketh a people great, that is, honourable: and thus alſo have we anſwered this argument. Wherefore ſeeing they can now pretend no honeſt excuſe for their Recuſancie, for neither is our Service in it ſelfe hereticall, neither yet our people that profeſſe it, or Miniſters that preach it, Heretikes or Schiſmatikes: ſeeing alſo they may bee freed from diſſimulation, when their hearts ſhall truly bee converted unto God, and ſo yeeld obedience to our publike aſſemblies, and that by their comming God may bee honoured, I pray God give them grace to acknowledge their wilfulneſſe, and forſake their errors, into the which their blinde guides have led them, that they may now at length joyne themſelves unto the true Church of Chriſt, in the profeſſion of the right faith, to the ſalvation of their ſoules.

Here now I thought to have inſerted a Treatiſe againſt the Browniſts, wherein I have at large confuted the arguments which they uſe againſt our Church, and likewiſe propounded our reaſons in defence thereof, with a diſcoverie of divers erroneous opinions by them held and maintained: but I altered my purpoſe upon theſe reaſons. Firſt, the Treatiſe was not fully finiſhed, and the Printer called upon me earneſtly to make haſte. Secondly, becauſe I intended to deale onely againſt the Papiſts in this worke. Thirdly, though they bee peeviſhly ſet, yet I judged them the leſſe dangerous enemies, ſeeing they diſſent not from us in the fundamentall points of our faith. Fourthly, many of their aſſertions are ſo abſurd, that they are rather to be laughed at, than worthy of any confutation. Therefore not ſtaying the Reader further in theſe digreſſions, I proceed to the reſt of the Controverſies that follow.

THE SECOND PART OF THIS CENTVRIE, OF THE FIVE POPISH SACRAMENTS.

HERE ENSUE THE CONTROVERSIES OF THE five other Popiſh Sacraments: Penance, Matrimony, Confirmation, Orders, Extreme Unction.

The fourteenth generall Controverſie, Of Popiſh Penance.

VNto this Controverſie belong theſe queſtions following:

1 Of the name Penance, whether it be rightly given.

2 Whether that which they call Penance, but wee much better, Repentance, be a Sacrament.

3 Whether there bee any other Sacrament of Repentance beſide Baptiſme.

4 Of the eſſentiall parts of Penance, as the matter and forme, and of the three materiall parts, Contrition, Confeſſion, Satisfaction: with an appendix, whether Repentance goe before Faith.

5 Of Contrition, 1 The cauſe thereof, 2 The quantitie thereof, 3 Whether it be joyned with faith, 4 Whether it be ſatisfactorie, 5 Whether Contrition bee neceſſarie for veniall ſinnes, 6 Of Contrition which proceedeth onely of feare.

6 Of Auricular Confeſſion, 1 Whether it bee neceſſarie, 2 Whether it bee a divine ordinance, 3 To whom it is to be made, 4 Of the time.

7 Of Satisfaction, with the ſeverall branches of this queſtion.

8 Firſt, of penall injunctions, 1 Whether neceſſarie, 2 By whom to bee impoſed. Secondly, of Indulgences, 1 Whether there be any ſuch, 2 The ground of them, 3 In whoſe power they be.

9 The circumſtances of Penance, 1 Their habit, 2 Their works, 3 Of the time of their Penance.

The firſt Queſtion, Of the name of Penance.

The Papiſts.

THe Latine word Pænitentia, which they tranſlate Penance, being derived of pæna, doth ſignifie (ſay they) not onely confeſſion and amendment of life, but contrition and ſorrow for the offence, and painfull ſatisfaction, Bellarm, lib.1. cap.7. 42. Error.

Argum. *Matth.*11.21. The word muſt needs ſignifie ſorrowfull, painfull, and ſatisfactorie Penance, *Rhemiſt. Matth.*3.2. for no man doth ſit downe in ſackcloth and aſhes, which hath not repented before: this therefore is a penall action that followeth the inward ſorrow. So the Ninivites are ſaid to have repented, *Luk.*11.32. which was in ſackcloth and aſhes, and prayers: Ergo, Penance conſiſteth in an outward penall action, Bellarm. ibid. Matth.11.21. Luke 11.32.

Anſwer. The places quoted out of S. Matthew and S. Luke prove no ſuch thing: where our Saviour ſaith, that Tyre and Sidon would have repented in ſackcloth and aſhes, and Ninive had repented: which is no ſatisfaction for ſinne, but an outward ſigne of true ſorrow for ſinne, inwardly conceived: for repentance is begun inwardly, and continued and finiſhed outwardly: ſo then aſhes, ſackcloth, was no part of repentance, but an outward teſtification of their inward griefe.

*Argum.*2. S. Paul ſaith, I ſhall bewaile many of them which have ſinned, and not done penance for their uncleanneſſe, 2 *Corinth.*12.21. It cannot be ſaid, which have not repented, for, or becauſe of their uncleanneſſe: for then ſinne ſhould bee the cauſe of repentance, which it is not: for inward repentance commeth of ſome good inſpiration: but ſinne is properly ſaid to bee the cauſe of outward penance, Bellarm. ibid.

Anſwer. Firſt, ſinne is not the cauſe of inward repentance, but the occaſion, no more is it of outward penance or puniſhment: for as the inward repentance proceedeth from a good inſpiration, ſo the outward puniſhment is procured by the inward ſorrow, as the aſhes and ſackcloth of the Ninivites were outwardly uſed, becauſe they firſt inwardly ſorrowed. Secondly, that the Apoſtle ſpeaketh here of inward repentance, it is evident: becauſe 1 he ſaith, he ſhall bewaile: that is, becauſe they have not mourned for themſelves, hee will: as Ambroſe in the like caſe; Si Saul defleſſet peccata: If Saul had mourned for his ſinne, Samuel had not wept: lib.5. [illegible] And it was in the Apoſtles power to have inflicted an outward puniſhment, as hee did upon the inceſtuous young man: but to cauſe them to repent was not in his power: the Apoſtle then would not have complained of that which was in his power to have enjoyned them. 3 And he ſaith, I ſhall bewaile many: There was a great multitude of them, in which caſe no ſuch penance could be inflicted, the diſeaſe being ſo generall; and thus Auguſtine expoundeth this place: Cum idem morbus plurimos occupavit, nihil reſtat præter gemitum: When as the ſame diſeaſe hath occupied many, there remaineth nothing but mourning: the Apoſtle doth not now bid them not to eat meat with ſuch, as hee gave a charge concerning the young man, &c. lib.3. cont. Parmen. cap.3. So that in Auguſtines judgement no ſuch externall penance is here ſignified; a great part of the flocke being with this diſeaſe invaded.

The Proteſtants.

That this word (μετανοία) uſed in the new Teſtament, is more fitly tranſlated repentance, to ſignifie a change of the minde, than by them, penance, to betoken ſome outward penall ſatisfactorie act, thus it is proved.

Arg. 1. The Greek word everie where uſed is μετανοία, which ſignifieth as Laurentius Valla noteth, emendationem mentis, the change or amendment of the minde; and no ſuch outward ſatisfactorie Penance as they pretend. Wherefore it is more fitly Engliſhed, Repentance. And although the Latine word pœnitentia, doe not properly expreſſe the Greek word, to the which reſipiſcere, and reſipiſcentia, repentance, and to repent doe better anſwer: yet agere pœnitentiam, in Latine, is not to do penance, as the Rhemiſts tranſlate it, but is all one, as to ſay, repent: yea and ſo the Rhemiſts themſelves read, be penitent, Mark. 1.15. and not, doe penance. And Act. 11.18. they tranſlate, pœnitentiam, repentance.

Argum. 2. Matth. 3.2. Iohn Baptiſt preached and ſaid, repent, &c. not as the Rhemiſts tranſlate, doe penance: that inward repentance is here ſignified, it appeareth by theſe reaſons. 1 Iohn is ſaid, To preach the Baptiſme of repentance for the remiſſion of ſinnes, Luk. 3.3. That which hee preached, the people practiſed: but wee read not of any outward penall works they did, but onely of contrition and confeſſion for their ſinnes, Matth. 3.6. 2 Againe, Baptiſme is in the name of Chriſt: Penance is a worke of man, whereby ſatiſfaction is made unto God, as they teach: how then can it be the baptiſme of penance: for Chriſt to ſatisfie, and man to ſatisfie, are two contrarie things. 3 Iohn alſo ſaith, Bring forth fruits of repentance: worthy or meet for repentance: outward penall acts then are the fruits of repentance, they are not repentance it ſelfe.

Argum. 3. Act. 2.38. Repent and be baptized, not doe penance and be baptized: for 1 they were immediatly the ſame day baptized, verſ. 41. What time was there here for any doing of penance? 2 And ſeeing you make penance a Sacrament, how could they doe penance before they had received Baptiſme, the firſt Sacrament? 3 Thus their owne Gloſſe expoundeth, Cauſ. 33. diſtinct. 1. *de pœnit. c.*87. gloſſ. Petrus legitur dixiſſe, &c. Peter ſaith in the Acts, doe penance, &c. Quod de interiori, &c. Which is underſtood of the inward, not outward penance: ſo the ſame Gloſſe, *c.*34. Converſio eſt cordis verſio: Converſion is the verſion or turning of the heart.

Auguſtine thus taketh this word pœnitentia, [a] Recte pœnitens quicquid ſordium contraxit, oportet ut abluat ſaltem mentis lachrymis: The true penitent man muſt at the leaſt waſh away his ſinnes with the teares of the minde, &c. If then repentance bee in the ſoule, what is become of this outward ſatiſfactorie penance?

Colonienſ. part. 7. cap. 31. Pœnitentia tum recte prædicatur, [b] cum arguuntur ſcelera ac flagitia per verbum Dei, & incutitur populo timor iræ, indignationiſque, ac juſti judicii Dei: Then Penance or Repentance is rightly preached, when mens ſins are reproved by the word of God, and a feare of Gods wrath and juſt judgement is ſtriken into the people, &c. This Councell calleth that Penance, when the people begin inwardly to feele Gods wrath, and ſo lament for their ſins: they ſpeake of no ſuch outward ſatiſfactorie Penance.

1 The ancient writers of the Greeke Church take repentance for a change of the minde, not for any externall penall worke; as Iuſtinus Martyr ſaith, that God will rather have repentance, than puniſhment, that is penance: And againe, ſpeaking of the repentance of the Ninivites, he calleth it, true repentance from the heart.

2 So alſo Tertullian defineth, Pœnitentiam animi paſſionem, repentance to be a paſſion of the minde: and hee maketh three parts of repentance, Satisfactio confeſſione diſponitur, confeſſione pœnitentia naſcitur: Satiſfaction, confeſſion, and penitence, that is, contrition of the heart. Athanaſius ſaith, therefore penance is called repentance, Quod mentem à malo ad bonum transferat, Becauſe it turneth the minde from evill to good.

[b] This place is excepted againſt, as though this Popiſh Councell were miſalleaged, which maketh three parts of Penance as other Romaniſts doe: but the queſtion is not here of the three parts of Penance, but of the ſignification of the word Penance: ſee this objection fully anſwered, Retect. p. 115.

3 Confeſſion of Saxonie, artic. 16. Neither doe we goe about to make any brawling: about the word (repentance) if any man like it better, let him uſe the word (converſion). They take repentance for the converſion of the heart. Harm.ſect.8. pag.230.

4 See their owne Councell of Collen before produced.

The ſecond Queſtion, VVhether there be any Sacrament of Penance.

The Papiſts.

CHriſt (they ſay) inſtituted the Sacrament of Penance, when he breathed upon his Apoſtles after his reſurrection, and ſaid unto them: Receive ye the holy Ghoſt: whoſe ſinnes ye remit, they are remitted: whoſe ſinnes ye retaine, they are retained, Iohn 20. 22. The facultie of the Prieſthood conſiſting in remitting of ſinnes, is here beſtowed upon the Apoſtles, Rhemiſt. annot. Ioh. 20. ſect. 5. Hereupon they are bold to conclude, that Penance is truly and properly a Sacrament: Concil. Trident. ſeſſ. 14. can. 1. 43. Error. Ioh.20.22.

Bellarmine addeth further, that here is externum ſymbolum, an externall ſenſible ſigne, the words of abſolution, and a promiſe of grace, namely, remiſſion of ſinnes: Ergo, a Sacrament of Penance: Lib. 1. de pœnitentia, cap. 10.

Anſw. Firſt, If the power of remiſſion of ſinnes were here firſt inſtituted, how could the Apoſtles have baptized before, without power to remit ſinnes to the penitent? Chriſt therefore in this place doth but renew and confirme the authority of their Apoſtleſhip, which was granted to them before: Matth. 18. 18. Matth.18.18.

Neither is there here any externall viſible ſigne to make a Sacrament, as even now ſhall be ſeene: and as for the promiſe of remiſſion of ſins, it is not here annexed to an externall ſigne: but generally made to the Apoſtles to be executed as well without as with a Sacrament: as the Councell of Cabilon ſaith: Deus ſalutis & ſanitatis author plerunque hanc prabet ſua potentia inviſibili adminiſtratione, plerunque medicorum operatione: God the Author of ſalvation ſometime giveth forgiveneſſe of ſins by his inviſible power, ſometime by the working of his Miniſters, our Phyſicians, Can. 33.

Secondly, this power here given, is principally exerciſed by preaching of the word of God, and denouncing publikely or privately the promiſes of God, for remiſſion of ſinnes to the penitent, or the threats and judgement of God, in binding the ſinnes of the obſtinate and impenitent: So Luke 20. 24. Chriſt commandeth his Apoſtles to preach repentance and remiſſion of ſinnes in his name. Luke 20.24.

Thirdly, we confeſſe alſo a judiciarie power of the keyes, in binding and looſing, which is exerciſed in Eccleſiaſticall diſcipline, in puniſhing and abſolving according to the word of God: as the inceſtuous perſon was bound, when he was delivered up to Satan, 1 Cor. 5. 5. he was looſed againe, when he was reſtored to the Church, 2 Cor. 2. 7. But neither this nor the other was commended to the Church as a Sacrament. 1 Cor.5.5. 2 Cor.2.7.

Argum. 2. Bellarmine affirmeth, the Montaniſts and Novatians were the firſt that denied penance to be a Sacrament; for they did not, as ſome think, deny forgiveneſſe before God to thoſe that fell, but onely penance and reconciliation in the Church, Bellarm. cap 9.

Anſw. As Bellarmine is to be truſted in this, ſo let him be credited in the reſt: but in this place he hath deviſed a notable forgerie: firſt, thoſe forenamed heretikes did not only exclude thoſe that fell in time of perſecution from reconciliation to the Church by penance, but even deprived them of all hope of remiſſion of ſinnes before God. Cyprian deſerveth rather to bee credited herein, than this Sophiſter: lib. 3. epiſt. 23. Puto his indulgentiam Domini non defuturam, &c. I doe think that mercy with God will not be wanting to thoſe, who once ſtood in the battell, though they afterward fell: thus he pleadeth againſt the Novatians, in the behalfe of thoſe that were fallen. And Ambroſe likewiſe, lib. de pœnitent. lib. 1. cap. 9. thus witneſſeth, alleaging theſe words of our Saviour: Every one that beleeveth in him, ſhall not periſh, but have life everlaſting: if thou deſireſt to call againe any that is fallen, doeſt thou exhort him to beleeve, or not to beleeve? ſurely to beleeve: he then that hath faith, hath eternall life; he that hath life, is not excluded from forgiveneſſe: Athanaſius. Theſe Fathers are evident witneſſes, that the Novatians did ſhut out grievous ſinners from forgiveneſſe before God.

Secondly, it is one thing to take away penance altogether, another to deny it to be a Sacrament: the firſt theſe heretikes were guilty of, the ſecond we affirme, but not the firſt.

Thirdly, if to deny penance be all one, as to deny it to be a Sacrament, then the Fathers are further off (then we) from making it a Sacrament; for they did not grant publike penance twice: Auguſtine epiſtol. 54. Pœnitentia in eccleſia non iteratur: Penance or publike repentance is not iterated in the Church: but we are not ſo ſtrict, but that to the truly penitent, though they have fallen againe, we admit a ſecond reconciliation to the Church.

Argum. 3. Bellarmine, to prove penance a Sacrament, alleageth the teſtimony of the Fathers: hee produceth the witneſſe of ten of them: Tertullian, Cyprian, Ambroſe, Hierome, Auguſtine, with others: and yet not one of them affirmeth penance a Sacrament: but ſome doe call it aliud lavacrum, another Laver, and that it doth imitate Baptiſme, Medicinam pœnitentia, the medicine of penitencie, and ſuch like, but none of them calleth it a Sacrament: but onely one Viller Cartemenſ. who is brought forth in the eleventh place, but he is not ancient enough to be credited for this matter, nor of weight to ſway againſt the reſt.

The Proteſtants.

Rom. 6.4. TRue repentance wee doe acknowledge, which is a dying to ſin, and a walking in newneſſe of life, Rom. 6.4. But a Sacrament of repentance we finde none in Scripture, and therefore wee deny it.

Argum. 1. In every Sacrament there is an externall ſenſible element, as Water in Baptiſme, Bread and Wine in the Lords Supper: but there is none in their penance: Ergo, no Sacrament.

Bellarmine anſwereth, that the words of abſolution and confeſſion, are the outward ſignes in penance: it is not neceſſary it ſhould be a viſible ſigne: it is a ſenſible ſigne being audible, cap. 11.

Anſw. 1. There muſt be the word beſide the element: as Auguſtine ſaith, Accedat verbum ad elementum: Let the word be joyned to the element; and it maketh a Sacrament: the word it ſelfe cannot be the element: for the ſame thing cannot both ſanctifie and be ſanctified. And if the audible word be the element, by this reaſon the preaching of the word alſo ſhall be a Sacrament.

Bellarmine replieth: 1 That whether the outward ſigne be viſible, or audible, it skilleth not, ſo it be apt to expreſſe the ſpirituall effect: as the ſigne in penance is, which conſiſteth in the words of the Prieſt abſolving, and the confeſſion of the penitent party: and S. Auguſtine ſpeaketh onely of the Sacrament of Baptiſme, when he ſaith, Let the word be joyned to the element,&c. Bellarm. cap. 11. reſp. ad 7. argum. Kemnitii.

Anſw. If 1 An audible ſigne ſufficed, what needeth water in Baptiſme? for there the Miniſter ſaith, I baptize thee, as in the other, I abſolve thee. 2 The Apoſtle ſaith, Every thing is ſanctified by the word and prayer, 1 Tim. 4. 5. 1 Timoth. 4.5. If the word doe ſanctifie, then is it not the thing ſanctified. 3 It cannot bee ſhewed, that any of the Sacraments of the law, which did reſemble ours, had any ſuch audible ſigne. 4 Auguſtine, though in that place, ſpeaketh chiefly of Baptiſme, yet elſewhere ſheweth this to be the generall condition of all Sacraments, to have a viſible ſigne: as ſpeaking of the anointing of Aaron: Quod in genere viſibilium ſignaculorum ſacroſanctum eſt, ſicut ipſe Baptiſmus,&c. Which in the kinde of viſible ſignes is holy, as Baptiſme is: So then he accounteth all holy ſignes, viſible, cont. Petilian. lib. 2. cap. 104.

Likewiſe, lib. 3. de doctrin. Chriſtian. c. 7. Deus nobis ſigna pauca pro multis dedit, factu facilia,&c. God hath given us few ſignes for many, eaſie to be done, excellent in ſignification, moſt chaſte in obſervation, ſuch as is Baptiſme and the celebration of the Body and Bloud of the Lord, &c. the ſignes of the Sacraments are eaſie to be done, not eaſie to be ſaid: and as they are in Baptiſme and the Euchariſt, but there they are viſible.

Argum. 2. There was repentance and abſolution of ſinnes, both in the old Teſtament: for both David confeſſed and was ſorry for his ſinne, and the Prophet Nathan pronounced forgiveneſſe from God, 2 Sam. 12. 13. 2 Sam. 12.13. So likewiſe Iohn preached repentance for remiſſion of ſinnes, and the people came and confeſſed their ſinnes: here were all things neceſſarie for true repentance, yet was it no Sacrament all this while, as they themſelves confeſſe, which they hold to be inſtituted after Chriſts reſurrection, Trident. Concil. ſeſſ. 14. cap. 1. Why then ſhould it bee rather a Sacrament now, than before?

Bellarmine anſwereth. 1 That the power of remitting ſins was not given to any in the old law: And that Nathan did not remit unto David his ſins, but only ſhew that God had remitted them: And if Nathan did obſolve David, it was but one ſingular example, which maketh no law.

Contra. 1. If Nathan did declare unto David, that God had forgiven him, it was ſufficient: for the Apoſtles themſelves had no further power, than to declare on Gods behalfe remiſſion of ſins to the penitent, and to ſhew the way how they ſhall be forgiven. Synod. Cabilonenſ. ſub Carolo 33. Confeſſio qua Deo fit, purgat peccata, qua Sacerdoti fit, docet, qualiter ipſa purgentur peccata: The confeſſion which is made to God, purgeth ſin, that which is made to the Prieſt, ſheweth how ſin ſhould bee purged, &c. So the people being pricked in heart at the Sermon of S. Peter, cryed, ſaying, Men and brethren what ſhall we doe? Act. 2. 37. then Peter himſelfe abſolveth them not, but only ſheweth what courſe they ſhould take to have their ſins forgiven. 2 The pronouncing remiſſion of ſins, is no extraordinarie thing in the old Teſtament: Iſay 1.18. Iſay 1. 18. Though your ſins were as crimſon, Chap. 6. 7. Iſay 6.7. thy ſin ſhall be purged: and more plainly, Ezech. 18.22. Ezech. 18. 22. Hoſh. 14. 3. Hoſh. 14.3. Take unto you words. And be it that Nathan did it but once, yet have we once in the old Teſtament abſolution of ſins, which the Jeſuite denieth.

Bellarmine. 2. That Penance, which Iohn Baptiſt and our Saviour Chriſt preached, was no Sacrament, becauſe the words of abſolution were wanting in Iohns penance; and confeſſion, in that which Chriſt preached: lib. 1. de pœnitent. cap. 11.

Contra. 1. The people confeſſed their ſins before Iohn, this they willingly grant: it is manifeſt alſo that hee declared to them remiſſion of ſins, for hee preached the Baptiſme of repentance to the remiſſion of ſins, Luke 3. 3. And to what end ſhould, or would the people have confeſſed their ſins, Luke 3.3. if they had not expected forgiveneſſe of the ſame at Iohns hands? 2 Concerning the repentance which our Saviour preached, there was both the words of abſolution, Luke 7. 48. Thy ſinnes are forgiven thee; and the womans abundant teares, therewith waſhing Chriſts feet, ſtood for confeſſion: and yet more plainly, Luke 19. Zacheus confeſſeth, verſ. 8. Chriſt abſolveth, verſ. 9. This day is ſalvation come to thy houſe. Here therefore was as much a Sacrament of penance, as was after miniſtred by the Apoſtles. Luke 7.48. Luke 19.8.9.

Argum. 3. Act. 26. 20. S. Paul having ſet downe the ſumme of repentance: To repent, and turne to God, and to doe works worthy of repentance: afterward teſtifieth thus, verſ. 22. Saying none other things, than Moſes and the Prophets did ſay ſhould come: Paul preached no other repentance, than the Prophets; but they preached no Sacrament of repentance; which they themſelves confeſſe: Ergo. Acts 26.20.

Bellarmine 1. Paul doth not recite the ſumme of the doctrine of penance, but it is an exhortation onely to penance. 2 And hee ſpeaketh of penance before Baptiſme, which is no Sacrament. 3 And the things which the Apoſtle ſaith agreeable to the Prophets, are not concerning penance, but as touching the Paſſion, and Reſurrection of Chriſt, as it followeth, verſ. 23. reſponſ. ad 4. argum. Kemnitii.

Anſw. First, 1 The ſumme of the doctrine of repentance, is to turne in heart to God, and to bring forth good fruits: as Auguſtine; Fructus eſt dignus pœnitentiæ tranſacta flere peccata, & eadem iterum non agere: It is a worthy fruit of repentance, to lament ſinnes paſt, and not to doe the ſame againe: Serm. de tempor. 66. This ſumme of the doctrine of repentance, the Apoſtle here ſetteth downe, not by way of exhortation onely, but he ſaith, he ſhewed, Annunciavit, he preached or declared it unto them, by way of inſtruction. Secondly, there is one and the ſame kinde of repentance, both before and after Baptiſme, as followeth in the next argument. Thirdly, not the preaching onely of Chriſts ſuffering is the doctrine agreeable to the Prophets, but of remiſſion of ſinnes, in his name, and ſo conſequently of repentance, as S. Peter ſheweth, Act. 10. 43. To him all the Prophets witneſſe, that through his name all that beleeve ſhall have remiſſion of ſinnes.

Argum. 4. There is one and the ſame kinde of repentance before Baptiſme and after: but the firſt is not a Sacrament, as they confeſſe: Ergo, no more is the latter.

Bellarmine. Penance after Baptiſme requireth particular confeſſion of ſinnes, and laborious works, ſo doth not penance before Baptiſme, Bellarm. cap. 11.

Anſw. First, particular confeſſion is not requiſite at all, as afterward ſhall be ſhewed: but both confeſſion, and bringing forth of good fruit are neceſſarie in repentance before Baptiſme, as may appeare, Matth. 3. 6. they confeſſed their ſinnes, verſ. 8. Bring forth fruits, &c. Secondly, Auguſtine ſetteth forth Zacheus as an example of true repentance, ſerm. 116. de tempore: who both confeſſed his ſinnes and made reſtitution, Luke 19. 8. being not yet baptized. Matth. 3.6.

Auguſtine thus writeth: Sacramentum ideo dicitur, quia aliud videtur, aliud intelligitur: It is called a Sacrament, becauſe one thing is ſeene, another underſtood. And then he ſaith, Quid vel ipſi vident, aut aliis queunt oſtendere in eo quod Sacramentum pœnitentiæ vocant? But neither doe they ſee, or can ſhew to others, any ſuch viſible ſigne in that which they call the Sacrament of repentance. Here Auguſtine denieth repentance to be a Sacrament, becauſe it hath no viſible ſigne. Serm. de Baptiſmo ad Infantes, & lib. 3. quæſt. veter. Teſtam.

Bellarmine anſwereth here very ſimply, that Auguſtine by a viſible ſigne underſtandeth, that which is ſenſible to any of the ſenſes, though it be to the hearing, cap. 11. reſponſ. ad 3. argum. Calvini. Thus that which is onely heard, ſhall be ſaid to be viſible, which is moſt abſurd, and needeth no other confutation.

The Maſter of the Sentences propoundeth two reaſons againſt the Sacrament of penance, which require a further anſwer: firſt, if outward penance be a Sacrament, then it would follow, that, Non omne Sacramentum Evangelicum id efficit, quod figurat: That every Sacrament of the Goſpell doth not effect that, which it figureth: but inward repentance doth effect the outward, not contrariwiſe: The anſwer there is this, that the propoſition is true onely of thoſe Sacraments, that were inſtituted in the Goſpell, but Penance and Matrimonie had their beginning before: but ſeeing theſe new Sophiſters make Penance a Sacrament of the Goſpell, they muſt finde out another anſwer: Lombard. lib. 4. diſt. 22. c.

The other reaſon objected is this; if externall Penance be a Sacrament, it will follow, that res Sacramenti, the ſacramentall thing or work ſhould goe before the Sacrament, as inward repentance is the ſacramentall thing, and goeth before outward penance: the Maſter ſaith this may well be ſo, but we ſee not how, it would have a better anſwer, I would have them demurre further upon it.

This truth alſo is ſealed: Agnes Smith burned denying the Sacrament of penance. Fox p. 1659.

1 It ſeemeth, that of ancient time penance was not held for a Sacrament in the Greeke Church: for Nectarius the Patriark, upon a certaine abuſe which happened in the Church by reaſon of private confeſſion, a certaine noble woman and a Deacon having company together, aboliſhed this rite of penance, leaving every one to his owne conſcience, when they come to the Communion: but he would not have aboliſhed one of the Sacraments. Socrates lib. 5. cap. 9.

2 Tertullian nameth onely two Sacraments in uſe in his time: for thus he ſpeaketh to the Marcionite heretike concerning the admitting of ſuch as are married to the Sacraments: [illegible] ad Sacramentum Euchariſtiæ & Baptiſmatis admittens: Not being otherwiſe joyned together, admitteſt Lib. 4. cont. Marcion.

mitteth them to the Sacrament of Baptiſme and the Euchariſt,&c. Upon the which words, Beatus Rhenanus, one of their owne writers, giveth this marginall note: Baptiſmum & Euchariſtia duo Sacramenta Primitivæ Eccleſiæ: Baptiſme and the Euchariſt two Sacraments of the Primitive Church.

3 See before the confeſſion of the reformed Churches concerning the number of the Sacraments, which they acknowledge only to be but two: *Centur.2.err.*104.

Coſter. Enchiridion. 4 Their owne Coſterus defineth a Sacrament, to be externum & viſibile ſignum, an externall and viſible ſigne of a divine and inviſible grace,&c. By this definition, Penance which hath no viſible ſigne, cannot be a Sacrament. Conſult. artic.13. Caſſander one of their owne confeſſeth, that untill Peter Lombard, they ſhall not readily finde any writer, qui certum numerum Sacramentorum ſtatuit, which appointeth a certaine number of the Sacraments.

The third Queſtion, VVhether there be any other Sacrament of repentance, beſide Baptiſme.

The Papiſts.

44. Error. BAptiſme ſerveth onely, they ſay, for remiſſion of ſinnes done before: for ſinnes committed after Baptiſme, the Sacrament of Penance, which is a diſtinct Sacrament from Baptiſme, is appointed for a remedy: and therefore is fitly called, *The ſecond table of refuge after ſhipwrack: Concil. Trident. ſeſſ.*14.*can.*2. Secunda tabula poſt naufragium.

1 Ioh.1.9. Argum. 1. S. Iohn ſaith, If wee confeſſe our ſinnes, he is faithfull to forgive us: he ſaith not, that by the memorie of Baptiſme, but by confeſſion, which is a part of penance, our ſinnes are forgiven: *Bellarm.cap.*13.

Anſw. Firſt, we ſay not, that by the bare memorie or remembrance of Baptiſme, ſins after committed are done away: but that the ſacramentall force of Baptiſme doth extend it ſelfe to our whole life, that is, to be a ſeale unto us of remiſſion of all our ſins in the bloud of Chriſt. Secondly, the confeſſion of our ſins is not a taking away of the force of Baptiſme, but a more effectuall applying therof, as the people which were baptized by Iohn confeſſed alſo their ſins. Thirdly, it is no good argument, we muſt confeſſe our ſins after Baptiſme: Ergo, Penance is another Sacrament beſide Baptiſme: for confeſſion of ſins is a fruit of the Sacrament of Baptiſme.

Argum. 2. In the old Law Circumciſion was not appointed as a remedy for ſins committed afterward, but they had ſacrifices and other expiations,&c. ſo in the new Teſtament Baptiſme is not appointed to purge ſinne after Baptiſme, but we have the ſacrifice of the new Teſtament, and abſolution,&c. *Bellarm.cap.*13.

Act.7.51. Anſw. Firſt, the force and efficacie of Circumciſion was ſeene in the reformation of the whole life: why elſe doth Stephen thus charge the Jewes, Act. 7.51. that they were of uncircumciſed hearts and eares? ſignifying thereby, that they did not expreſſe the force and vertue of their firſt Circumciſion in the renewing of their hearts, reforming of their eares: if then to circumciſe the eares, be an effect of Circumciſion, but infants cannot be circumciſed, becauſe they neither heare, nor underſtand; then it followeth, that the effect of Circumciſion was not limited only to that time, but was to be exerciſed and applied thorow the whole life. Againe, Circumciſion being *the ſeale of the righteouſneſſe of faith, Rom.*4.11. and faith being the life of the ſoule, *Rom.*1.17. it followeth that the whole righteouſneſſe and ſpirituall life of man, not the beginning only was then ſealed in Circumciſion, and now in Baptiſme. Rom.4.11. Rom.1.17.

Secondly, as then they had ſacrifices and Sacraments, not to beget a new faith, or to obtaine new remiſſion of ſins, but to confirme them in their firſt faith, and to apply the remiſſion of ſins ſealed in Circumciſion: ſo now beſide Baptiſme we have the Euchariſt, no ſacrifice, but a Sacrament, to cheriſh and revive in us our firſt life in Baptiſme: like as food doth not give a new life to the body, but onely ſuſtaineth the firſt life received in the birth,&c.

Heb.6.6. Argum. 3. The Apoſtle ſaith, *Hebr.*6.6 that they which have beene once lightned, (that is, baptized) if they fall away ſhould be renewed by penance: they cannot be renewed againe by that penance, which is by Baptiſme: Ergo, by another penance they may; unleſſe yee will ſay that the Apoſtle excludeth ſuch as fall after Baptiſme altogether from Penance, which was the hereſie of the Novatians: Bellarm.ibid.

Anſw. Firſt, to be lightned is not to be baptized: the Apoſtle addeth further, verſ. 5. They that have taſted of the good word of God: but infants have no taſte of the word; therefore they are not illuminate in Baptiſme. Secondly, if by penance you underſtand Baptiſme, then you have made a good reaſon for us, that hold no other Sacrament of penance but Baptiſme. Thirdly, S. Paul ſpeaketh not of every falling after Baptiſme, but of manifeſt apoſtaſie, and utter renouncing of the grace received, for whom there was no more hope at all: which was not the error of the Novatians, that denied reconciliation to thoſe that fell of infirmity: but the Apoſtles owne poſition, Heb. 10.26. That there remaineth no more ſacrifice for ſinne at all for thoſe, which after the knowledge of the truth ſinne willingly, that is, obſtinatly and with a malicious and perverſe minde, as the Apoſtle expoundeth himſelfe, verſ. 29. They tread under foot the Sonne of God,&c. and deſpight the ſpirit of grace: of ſuch the Apoſtle Heb.10.26.29.

ſpeaketh in this place, that they doe crucifie to themſelves the Son of God. Fourthly, if your expoſition be admitted, you have gained nothing but this, that there is repentance after Baptiſme, which you call penance, and this we deny not: but any other Sacrament of repentance, we acknowledge not, which you ſhould have proved.

The Proteſtants.

WE acknowledge no other Sacrament of repentance, but Baptiſme.

Arg. 1. The Scripture ſo calleth it, The Baptiſme of repentance for remiſſion of ſins, Mat. 1. 4. Marke 1. 4.

Bellarmine anſwereth, that the Baptiſme of Iohn was called the Baptiſme of repentance, not the Baptiſme of Chriſt, cap. 14.

Anſw. 1. We have proved before, Contro. 12. queſt. 7. that the Baptiſme of Iohn, and of our Saviour Chriſt was all one, and therefore this diſtinction faileth. 2 That Chriſts Baptiſme was a Baptiſme of repentance, S. Paul ſheweth, Rom. 6. 4. We are buried by Baptiſme into his death, &c. that we ſhould walk in newneſſe of life. Chriſts Baptiſme then teacheth us to die unto ſin, and to riſe up to newneſſe of life: but this is repentance, Hebr. 6. 1. Repentance from dead works: Ergo, Chriſts Baptiſme preacheth repentance. Rom. 6. 4. Heb. 6. 1.

So Auguſtine calleth Baptiſme, Sacramentum fidei, & pœnitentia, the Sacrament of faith, and repentance: what need we then ſeeke for a new Sacrament of repentance, which cannot any where be found in Scripture? De fide ad Petrum cap. 29.

Bellarm. Firſt, Auguſtine calleth Baptiſme the Sacrament of faith, and Penance which goeth before Baptiſme, not of that, which followeth after. Secondly, Iohns Baptiſme is called the Baptiſme of repentance to remiſſion of ſins, not that it gave remiſſion of ſins, but it wrought repentance, and repentance remiſſion of ſins: but Chriſts Baptiſme worketh not repentance, but repentance goeth before, cap. 14. reſp. ad argum. 3.

Anſw. Firſt, How 1 Can Baptiſme be the Sacrament of faith and Penance before going, ſeeing children, that have Baptiſme, have as yet neither faith nor repentance? 2 And you contradict your ſelves: for you hold Penance before Baptiſme to be no Sacrament, and yet you ſay that Auguſtine calleth Baptiſme the Sacrament of Penance before going. Secondly, 1 Repentance went before Iohns Baptiſme: for they confeſſed their ſins before they were baptized, Matth. 3. 6. but without repentance, there can be no confeſſion. 2 And that Iohns Baptiſme ſealed remiſſion of ſins unto them, it is evident, becauſe they did thereby eſcape the wrath to come, Luke 3. 7. But Gods judgements cannot bee avoided, where ſin is not firſt remitted. Matth 3. 6. Luke 3. 7.

Argum. 2. If Baptiſme and the vertue thereof cannot be aboliſhed by ſin, then there is no need of another Sacrament of repentance: but the firſt is true, Ergo, the ſecond.

Bellarmine. The grace of regeneration had in Baptiſme, may afterward bee loſt and caſt out by ſinne.

Anſw. Firſt, as touching the grace of election, whereby infants are ſaved in Baptiſme, being taken away in their infancie, it is devilliſh doctrine to ſay it may be loſt: for whom Chriſt loveth, he loveth to the end, Ioh. 13. 1. Secondly, the grace of regeneration, which is not conferred in Baptiſme, but onely ſealed, and afterward by the work of the ſpirit effected in the hearts of the faithfull, cannot be loſt where once it is wrought: for the gifts and calling of God are without repentance, Rom. 11. 2. And your owne Canons confirme the ſame: Divina clementia dimiſſa peccata ulterius redire in ultionem non patitur: The divine clemencie doth not ſuffer ſins once remitted to returne againe unto puniſhment, Gelaſius cauſ. 33. qu. 3. diſtinct. 4. c. 24. Ioh. 13. 1. Rom. 11. 2.

Argum. 3. Baptiſme is of no leſſe force and efficacie, than Circumciſion: but that was a durable and permanent Sacrament, effectuall thorow the whole life, being the ſeale of the righteouſneſſe of faith, Rom. 4. 11. But 1 Faith ſanctifieth both the firſt and latter repentance: For without faith it is impoſſible to pleaſe God, Heb. 11. 6. Ergo, even repentance following depended as then upon Circumciſion, ſo now upon Baptiſme. 2 And if Baptiſme be the ſeale of righteouſneſſe; but without finall and continuall repentance there is no righteouſneſſe, it is therefore the ſeale and Sacrament of all and every repentance. Rom. 4. 11. Heb. 11. 6.

Decret. par. 2. cauſ. 23. qu. 1. c. 40. in the title thus: In extremo poſitus etiam ab haeretico pœnitentiam accipere valet: At the point of death a man may receive penance of an heretike. And in the Canon it ſelfe: Sine ſancti Baptiſmi Sacramento: Without the holy Sacrament of Baptiſme he would not goe out of his life. Here Baptiſme is interpreted to be the ſame thing that is called before Penance.

Synod. Colonienſ. Docendus eſt populus, quod in Baptiſmo aboleatur vetus homo, remiſſo omni peccato, atque novus exoriatur, &c. The people muſt be taught, that in Baptiſme the old man is aboliſhed, all ſin being taken away, and the new man beginneth, &c. But to put off the old man with his works, Coloſſ. 3. 9. is nothing elſe but repentance, which is from dead works: Ergo, Baptiſme is the Sacrament of repentance. Coloſſ. 3. 9.

So alſo Chryſoſtome defineth Baptiſme: Nihil aliud eſt quam interitus ejus qui baptiſatur & reſurrectio: It is nothing elſe but the dying or periſhing of him that is baptized, and his riſing againe, &c. but this is repentance. In 6. caput ad Hebræos.

To the ſame purpoſe alſo Maſter Calvin: Of this opinion then (as we ſee) are the chiefe Writers of the reformed Churches.

The fourth Queſtion, Of the eſſentiall parts of Penance.

The firſt part, Of the matter and forme of Popiſh penance.

The Papiſts.

45. Error.

THe forme of this Sacrament, ſay they, conſiſteth in the words of abſolution, pronounced by the Miniſter, the matter thereof is the contrition, confeſſion, and ſatisfaction of the party penitent: Concil. Tridentin. ſeſſ. 14. cap. 3. Bellarm. lib. 1. cap. 15.

Argum. Bellarmine here hath no argument out of Scripture: and as for the Popiſh Councels of Florence and Trent alleaged by him, we hold them not worth the anſwering. He only obtrudeth this reaſon: A ſenſible ſigne of juſtifying grace inſtituted of God is a part of the Sacrament: but the action of the penitent party, weeping, and confeſſing his ſins, is a ſenſible ſigne that he is juſtified: Ergo, Bellarm. cap. 14.

Anſw. Firſt, a ſenſible ſigne ſufficeth not, it muſt be a viſible element, that is the matter of the Sacrament, as water in Baptiſme, bread and wine in the Euchariſt: but the action of the penitent is no viſible element. 2 Againe, no humane action, ſuch as this of the penitent is, can be a part of a divine Sacrament. 3 It is no ſigne of grace, for an hypocrite may doe all this, as Ahab did, and not be juſtified.

The Proteſtants.

NEither is their penance a Sacrament, neither can theſe be parts of a Sacrament.

Argum. 1. In everie Sacrament there are two things required: res terrena, and actio externa, the earthly thing or element, as is water in Baptiſme; and the externall action: neither doth the element alone, nor the action alone make a Sacrament: as in Baptiſme there is both water, which is the matter; and the waſhing, that is the action. Wherefore ſeeing in their penance there is nothing but the action of the Miniſter, and the action of the receiver, it can be no Sacrament.

Argum. 2. The parts of everie Sacrament, as the forme, the matter, muſt bee inſtituted of Chriſt: but this are they not able to ſhew for the forme and matter of penance, namely, the inſtitution of Chriſt: Ergo, it is no Sacrament. For in theſe words of our Saviour Chriſt, Whoſe ſins yee remit, &c. which is the only place of inſtitution, which they are able to alleage for this their deviſed Sacrament, though we ſhould grant that the words of abſolution may be picked out of this place, which they ſay containe the forme; yet there is no mention of contrition, confeſſion, ſatisfaction in the partie abſolved, wherein conſiſteth the matter. If Bellarmine anſwer, as elſewhere hee ſaith, that theſe alſo may bee gathered out of this place, becauſe ſinnes muſt not bee forgiven, but to thoſe that confeſſe them; Bellarm. cap. 10. We reply againe: 1 That in the inſtitution of a Sacrament there muſt be expreſſe mention of the materiall parts thereof, as it was in the inſtitution of Baptiſme, and the Lords Supper. 2 By the ſame reaſon we will conclude againſt the Jeſuite, that our Saviour Chriſt abſolved not, but upon confeſſion going before: for it is not like that he would forgive ſinnes, where ſinnes were not acknowledged: and thus there being confeſſion and abſolution in the penance that Chriſt preached, it muſt needs be a Sacrament after their definition, which Bellarmine inſtantly denieth.

Argum. 3. Some of the principall Schoolemen are of a contrarie judgement to Bellarmine: one thinketh, namely Gropperus, that the action of the Prieſt is the materiall part of this Sacrament, and not the action of the penitent partie, Enchirid. Colon. Other, as Scotus, in 4. ſentent. diſtinct. 14. qu. 4. and Ockam, Ioannes Major doe thinke, that the abſolution of the Prieſt is the onely eſſentiall part of penance. They reaſon thus:

Firſt, that is a Sacrament which is conferred by the Miniſter: but onely abſolution is conferred by the Miniſter, not the confeſſion of the penitent: Ergo.

Bellarmine anſwereth; that the penitent partie is cooperator miniſtri, is the helper of the Miniſter.

Contra. 1. Yet dare hee not ſay hee is the Miniſter: 2 Hee may as well ſay, that the people which eateth and drinketh and communicateth in the Euchariſt, is the Miniſters fellow-worker in the Sacrament.

Secondly, that only is of the eſſence of the Sacrament, which is cauſe of the Sacramentall effect: but abſolution only is the cauſe of remiſſion: Ergo, it is only of the eſſence.

Bellarmine anſwereth, that as a man conſiſteth of two parts, the ſoule and body, yet hee underſtandeth onely by the ſoule: ſo the Sacrament conſiſting of two parts, may worke onely by one of them.

Contra. Firſt, if the Sacrament have two parts, and worke onely by one of them, then is the other ſuperfluous. Secondly, the ſpirit or ſoule of man only underſtandeth formally; but the matter and object of the underſtanding is delivered by the outward ſenſes: ſo likewiſe to the ſacramentall worke muſt concurre as well the matter as the forme thereof. Thus the Papiſts diſagree among themſelves, and each doe confute another: which ſheweth that their Sacrament of Penance is but a new device, ſeeing they know not themſelves what certainly to hold.

See the judgement of other Churches before, Err. 43. for they which hold not Penance to be a Sacrament, will not acknowledge theſe to be the eſſentiall parts thereof.

The ſecond part of this Queſtion, Of the three materiall parts of Popiſh Penance, Contrition, Confeſſion, Satisfaction.

The Papiſts.

THeſe three (ſay they) are the true and proper parts of Penance, Contrition, and painfull ſorrow of the heart, Confeſſion to the Prieſt, and Satisfaction to God for our ſins, Concil. Trident. ſeſſ. 14. can. 4. Rhemiſt. Matth. 3. ſect. 2.

46. Error.

Argum. 1. Contrition is proved, Pſalm. 51. 17. A contrite heart is a ſacrifice to God. Confeſſion, Matth. 3. They were baptized in Jordane confeſſing their ſins. Satisfaction, Matth. 11. 21. They would have repented long agoe in ſackcloth and aſhes, Bellarm. cap. 19.

Pſalm 51. 17.
Matth. 11. 21.

Anſw. Firſt, that godly ſorrow and contition of the heart is neceſſarie to true repentance, we never will deny: but that this ſorrow is any ſatisfaction to Gods juſtice, wee abhorre it as a monſtrous blaſphemy. Secondly, Confeſſion and acknowledgement of our ſins unto God; and in ſome caſes, where the conſcience is not ſatisfied to the Miniſter, or ſome other faithfull man, wee doe willingly grant: but that it is neceſſarie to make generall confeſſion of ſins to the Prieſt, that place proveth it not: for Iohn had had ſhriving worke enough for many yeeres, to heare everie mans particular confeſsion. Thirdly, that ſitting in ſackcloth and aſhes was no ſatisfaction for ſin, but an outward ſigne of true ſorrow for ſin.

Argum. 2. In Davids repentance there was contrition: his heart ſmote him; when he had numbred the people, 2 Sam. 24. 10. Confeſsion, I have ſinned exceedingly. Satisfaction, by his prayer and offering of ſacrifice, &c. In the Publican, Luk. 18. there was contrition in that he durſt not lift his eyes to Heaven: Confeſsion, Lord be mercifull to me a ſinner: Satisfaction, in ſmiting upon his breſt, Bellarm. cap. 19.

Luke 18.

Anſw. Firſt, Contrition we grant in both theſe, as a preparation to further repentance, not as any part of ſatisfaction to Gods juſtice. Secondly, here is alſo confeſsion, but not auricular, by particular enumeration of ſins. David maketh confeſsion but of that one ſin at that time committed, the Publican confeſſeth in generall, and both confeſſe unto God; what is this to auricular confeſsion to the Prieſt? Thirdly, David offereth ſacrifice onely, 1 as a teſtimony of thankfulneſſe unto God, not by way of ſatisfaction: 2 and it was a ſmall ſatisfaction in the Publican for all his notorious ſins to ſmite upon his breſt: 3 Doe you thinke that oppreſsion, forgerie, extortion, ſuch as the ſins of the Publicans were, Luke 19. 8. are of ſo ſmall waight, that they may bee done with a knocke upon the breſt? 4 This ſmiting upon the breſt was a ſigne of contrition, no part of any ſatisfaction: And Auguſtine ſaith, Tundere pectus quid aliud eſt, quam arguere, quod latet in pectore? &c. To knocke upon the breſt, what is it elſe, but to reprove that which lieth hid in the breſt? in Matth. ſerm. 8.

The Proteſtants.

WE doe make two parts onely of true repentance, according to the Scriptures, that is, the mortifying of the old man with his works, by dying unto ſin: unto the which belongeth true ſorrow and contrition of heart for our ſins, 2 Corinth. 7. 11. acknowledgement and confeſsion thereof before God, 2 Sam. 12. 13. and a perfect hatred and deteſtation of ſin, and indignation with our ſelves for the ſame, 2 Corinth. 7. 11. The other part is the renewing and quickning of the new man in us, which conſiſteth partly in ſetting our conſciences at peace with God, our ſins being forgiven us, Rom. 5. 1. and working in us zeale, ſtudy, care, and deſire of newneſſe of life, 2 Cor. 7. 11. Theſe two parts onely we finde in Scripture.

2 Cor. 7. 11.
2 Sam. 12. 13.
2 Cor. 7. 11.
Rom. 5. 1.
2 Cor. 7. 11.

Argum. 1. Iſai. 1. 17. Ceaſe to doe evill: Learne to doe good: wee muſt dye unto ſin, and walke in newneſſe of life, Rom. 6. 4. Put off the old man, put on the new, Coloſſ. 3. 9.

Iſai. 1. 17.
Coloſſ. 3. 9.

Bellarmine anſwereth, 1 Partes ſunt juſtitiæ, non pœnitentiæ: Theſe are parts of righteouſneſſe, not of repentance: namely, to ceaſe to doe evill, and learne to doe good, cap. 20. 2 And againe, cap. 19. propoſ. 4. Penance is onely from dead works, and all men need not repentance, Luk. 15. 7. but the mortifying of the fleſh, and to be renewed in the ſpirit, appertaineth to all. 3 Neither can it bee ſhewed any where in Scripture that it is called repentance to decline from evill, and to doe good.

Luke 15. 7.

Luke 19.8. Rom.6.8. Heb.6.1.

Contra. Firſt, it followeth not they are parts of juſtice or righteouſneſſe, therefore not of repentance: To make ſatisfaction is a part of repentance, by their owne confeſſion, yet is it alſo a worke of righteouſneſſe; as Zaccheus, Luk. 19.8. reſtoreth what he had wrongfully gotten: And the Apoſtle ſaith, Being made free from ſin, ye are made the ſervants of righteouſnes, *Rom.*6.8. Freedome from ſin, which is nothing elſe *but repentance from dead works, Heb.*6.1. is the ſervice of righteouſneſſe, which is our ſanctification: for here we ſpeake not of our juſtice before God in Chriſt, but of juſtice which is wrought in us.

1 Iohn 1.8. Math.9.12.

Secondly, it is an hereticall poſition, that any are ſo juſt which need no repentance: 1 For if they need no repentance, they ſhould have no ſin: and whoſoever ſaith he hath no ſin is a liar, 1 Iohn 1.8. then it followeth, if we acknowledge our ſins, he is faithfull to forgive us our ſins. The Apoſtle excludeth not any (no not himſelfe) that have ſins from confeſſion of ſins, which is a part of repentance. 2 Our Saviour ſpeaketh of ſuch juſt perſons, as in their owne preſumptuous opinion were ſuch: ſo he ſaith, I came not to call the righteous, but ſinners to repentance, *Matth.*9.12. Thinke you that any were ſo juſt, that Chriſt needed not to have come into the world for their ſakes? as here he ſaith, I came not; then needed he not alſo to have died for them. 3 Againe, heare what was decreed, *Concil. Milevitan. can.*8. where Auguſtine was preſent: Placuit, ut quicunque verba ipſa, &c. They which hold, that they which ſay thoſe words of the Lords Prayer, forgive us, &c. doe rather ſay them in humilitie than in truth, let them be accurſed. If everie man truly craveth in the Lords Prayer forgiveneſſe of his ſins, then everie man is truly a ſinner, and ſo hath need of repentance.

Lib. de divin. inſtituend. c.4.

Lactantius ſaith, Nemo eſſe tam juſtus poteſt, ut nunquam ei ſit pœnitentia neceſſaria, &c. No man can be ſo juſt that repentance ſhould never be needfull unto him.

Iſay 58.7.

Thirdly, it is more boldly than truly, or wiſely ſaid, the Scripture no where doth call it repentance to ceaſe to doe evill, &c. Iſay 58. Is not this faſting, to looſe the bands of wickednes, &c. verſ.7. to deale thy bread to the hungrie? By faſting here is underſtood repentance, as *verſ.*3. Wherefore have we faſted, &c. and puniſhed our ſelves? but puniſhment belongeth, even in their owne ſenſe, to repentance.

Act.3.19.

Argum. 2. Remiſſion of ſins doth alwayes follow true repentance. *Act.*3.19. Repent and turne, that your ſins may be put away, when the time of refreſhing ſhall come from the preſence of the Lord: but remiſſion of ſins doe not alwayes follow contrition, confeſſion, ſatisfaction: as all theſe three were in Iudas, and yet he hanged himſelfe: therefore theſe three, contrition, confeſſion, ſatisfaction, are not the parts of true repentance.

Bellarmine anſwereth: firſt Iudas was baptized, and received the Euchariſt, and hanged himſelfe, yet were they the right Sacraments. Secondly, Iudas had not true contrition, which alwayes is joyned with hope, neither did hee make particular confeſſion of all his ſins, nor yet was ſatisfaction enjoyned him by the Prieſt.

Anſw. Firſt, there is difference between the Sacraments and repentance: for the Sacrament is one thing, res Sacramenti, the vertue of the Sacrament another: the firſt may be received to death, or to life: for they that receive unworthily, are guiltie of the body and bloud of Chriſt, 1 *Corinth.*11,27. but the other is omni homini ad vitam, nulli ad exitium, is to life unto all, not to deſtruction, *Auguſtin. tract.*26. in Ioann. So is true repentance, not unto death unto any, but unto life. Secondly, you make contrition a part of repentance, Non ut in corde ſedem habet: Not as it is in the heart, but as it is maniſeſted by ſignes, *Bellarm. cap.*17. therefore hope is no part of popiſh contrition being in the heart. 2 Iudas alſo confeſſed his ſin in particular, I have ſinned in betraying the innocent bloud: hee made not a particular confeſſion of all, no more did David or the Publican, alleaged before as examples of repentance. 3 His ſatisfaction was not enjoyned by the Prieſt: if hee ſhould have expected their ſentence, they would have enjoyned none at all: and who I pray you enjoyned David his ſatisfaction, when hee offered ſacrifice to God? or the Publican, when hee ſmote upon his breſt; for theſe (you ſay) were their ſatisfactions?

Argum. 3. Durand (one of their owne writers) denieth contrition and ſatisfaction to be parts of penance: the firſt, becauſe contrition is not ſenſible, but everie part of a Sacrament ſhould bee ſenſible. The ſecond, becauſe ſatisfaction in act is not neceſſarie, but it ſufficeth if it be in vow and deſire, Durand in 4. *diſtinct.*16. *qu.*1. Thus we ſee how well they agree together.

Bellarmine thus anſwereth: firſt, contrition is a part of penance, not as it is in the heart, but as it is maniſeſted by ſignes. Secondly, penance may be without ſatisfaction: but then it is as it were maimed and imperfect.

Contra. Firſt, contrition by ſignes may be in hypocrites, and ſo diſſembled: ſuch as the Prophet ſpeaketh of, to bow themſelves like bulruſhes, Iſay 58. which the Lord denieth to be repentance: Is this a faſt that I have choſen? &c. They ſhewed their contrition by faſting and humbling themſelves, yet the Lord refuſeth it: wherefore ſuch contrition is no part of true repentance, which is acceptable to God.

Secondly, if penance may bee without ſatisfaction, then is it no part of a Sacrament: for a Sacrament can want none of the materiall parts: take water from Baptiſme, or bread and wine from the Euchariſt, and they are no Sacraments at all. Againe, repentance may be perfect without actuall ſatisfaction, as was the repentance of the theefe upon the Croſſe. But I need not labour to ſtrengthen or fortifie Durands arguments, it is ſufficient that the truth hath evidence from the adverſaries thereof.

Likewiſe for the parts of true repentance, their owne Canons doe witneſſe: Decret. p.2. cauſ. 33. diſtinct. 1. de pœnitent. c.39. Pœnitentia eſt mala præterita plangere, & plangenda iterum non committere: It is repentance to bewaile the ſins paſt, and not to commit the ſame againe.

Auguſtine ſaith, Fructus eſt dignus pœnitentiæ, tranſacta deflere peccata, & ea iterum non agere: This is true repentance, to lament for ſinnes paſt, and not to commit the ſame againe: Though this bee no perfect definition of repentance, yet wee ſee that both confeſſion and ſatisfaction are excluded.

De tempor. Serm. 66.

Colonienſ. part. 7. cap. 39. Sacerdos movebit confitentem, ut quod admiſſum eſt deteſtetur, & ſic deinceps vitam inſtituat, ne in ullum lethale crimen poſtea incidat: The Prieſt muſt move him that confeſſeth, to deteſt that which is committed, and ſo afterward to frame his life, that hee fall into no deadly ſinne. Here alſo are theſe two things required to repentance, to hate ſinne, and embrace righteouſneſſe.

This truth alſo is ſealed: Iohn Lambert Martyr, I know none other penance, except it be renovation of living, by caſting away old vice, and taking them to new vertue: ad artic. 10. pag. 1106.

Further, 1 Of the Greeke Church here ſhall ſpeake Euſebius Emiſſenus: Declinet homo à malo & faciat bonum, inquirat pacem & ſequatur eam, hæc eſt enim vera pœnitentia: Let a man decline from evill and doe good, let him ſeeke peace and enſue it, this is true repentance, &c.

Feria. 6. poſt invocavit.

2 Auguſtine ſaith, Quid eſt pœnitere, niſi dolere præterita, & de cætero ab his temperare, quæ admiſerat? What is it to repent, but to bee ſorrie for the ſinnes paſt, and afterward to abſtaine from thoſe things which he committed? &c.

An Appendix, Whether repentance goe before faith.

The Papiſts.

THeir opinion is, that repentance goeth before juſtification by faith, and that it is a way rather unto faith and juſtification in the remiſſion of ſins: Pœnitentia eſt via ad remiſſionem peccatorum: & prior juſtificatione, Bellarm. cap. 19.

47. Error.

Argum. Act. 2.38. Repent and be baptized in the name of Chriſt for the remiſſion of ſins: Remiſsion of ſins followeth repentance: Ergo, juſtification and faith follow repentance. Act. 8. 22. Repent of this thy wickedneſſe, and pray God, if it be poſſible, the thoughts of thy heart may bee forgiven thee. Here forgiveneſſe followeth repentance.

Act. 2. 38.
Act. 8. 22.

The Proteſtants.

Anſ. FIrſt, this place proveth not that remiſſion of ſins followeth repentance, becauſe Baptiſme was given after repentance: for Baptiſme doth not give remiſſion of ſins, but it is a ſeale onely and confirmation of our faith in the remiſſion of ſins. Secondly, neither is remiſſion of ſins obtained before God by the act of our repentance: but we are already being once called, juſtified before God by the remiſſion of our ſins, and imputation of the righteouſneſſe of Chriſt, Rom. 8, 30. Whom he called, he juſtified: Juſtification immediately followeth our calling: by repentance and other works that follow, our calling is made ſure, 2 Pet. 1. 10. our ſalvation finiſhed, that is, aſſured to our ſelves: Philip. 2. 12. Make an end of your ſalvation by feare and trembling. So then feare and trembling which worketh repentance, beginneth not our ſalvation, but onely doth aſſure us of the ſame. So wee muſt diſtinguiſh, as the Apoſtle ſaith, betweene the beginning of faith and juſtification before God: and the perfection and aſſurance thereof to our ſelves: faith is firſt whereby we are juſtified, and our ſins remitted before God, then followeth repentance whereby our hearts are aſſured to our ſelves of this remiſſion.

Rom. 8. 30.
2 Pet. 1. 10.
Philip. 2. 12.

Thirdly, 1 Saint Peter ſo ſaith to Simon that hypocrite, not that hee doubted of remiſſion of ſins upon true repentance, but that he doubted of Simons true repentance, as it followeth, verſ. 23. I ſee thou art in the gall of bitterneſſe. 2 Or hee ſo ſaith, to ſhew unto Simon how difficult or hard a thing remiſſion of ſins was. 3 And though remiſsion of ſins bee already decreed before God, yet is it not felt in the heart, nor the conſcience aſſured thereof, till after effectuall repentance, as Nathan preſently when David had ſaid, I have ſinned, ſaith, the Lord alſo hath put away thy ſins, 2 Sam. 12. 13. This notwithſtanding David yet felt not the comfort thereof in his ſoule, for the which he prayeth, Pſal. 51. 12. therefore when remiſsion of ſins is placed after repentance, it ſheweth the aſſurance thereof made unto our hearts after repentance, not the firſt decree or grant thereof with God, which goeth before repentance.

2 Sam. 12. 13.
Pſalm. 51. 12.

Rom.6.4.
Hebr.11.6.
Lib. de patientia.

Argum. 1. Iuſtification goeth before ſanctification: for this is the fruit of the other: but repentance is part of our ſanctification, renovation, or regeneration, being called by S. Paul, A walking in newneſſe of life, *Rom.*6.4. Ergo, it followeth and commeth after our iuſtification. And ſeeing without faith it is impoſſible to pleaſe God, *Heb.*11.6. how ſhould our repentance be acceptable to God, unleſſe it proceeded of faith? Faith then is initiate and begun in us before repentance, which we deny not, by true repentance and other fruits of ſanctification, to be daily ſtrengthened and increaſed, as Tertullian ſaith of patience, Ipſa eſt quæ fidem ſubſequitur & antecedit, It both goeth before faith, and followeth.

Ionas.3.5.

Argum. 2. Bellarmine himſelfe forgetting belike his owne poſitions, proveth that faith goeth before repentance, by the example of the Ninivites, *Ioh.*3.5. They beleeved God and proclaimed a faſt: Whereupon hee concludeth that faith is the cauſe of repentance, *Bellarm. cap.*19. *propoſ.*2. And hee underſtandeth juſtifying faith, *propoſ.*4. Mortification, fructus fidei juſtificantis, is the fruit of juſtifying faith, Ergo, juſtifying faith goeth before repentance. The Maiſter of the Sentences affirmeth the ſame out of S. Auguſtine, Non ſatis ſit, quod doleat, ſed ex fide doleat: Let it not ſuffice that he is grieved, but let his griefe be of faith, *Lib.*4. *diſtinct.*14.a. And *Diſtinct.*15. cap. Immundi ſunt omnes, &c. They are all uncleane whom faith cleanſeth not, by faith purifying their hearts: Acts 15.9. And in the ſame Diſtinction, d. Sine charitate non poteſt eſſe vera pænitentia: Without charitie there can bee no true repentance, and without faith there can bee no charitie: Galath. 5. 6. Faith working by love.

Epiſtol.105.

Auguſtine ſaith, No man is juſtified but by the grace of Jeſus Chriſt: Non ſolum remiſſione peccatorum, ſed prius ipſius inſpiratione fidei & timoris Dei, donec ſanet omnes langueres noſtros: Not onely by remiſſion of ſins; but firſt, by inſpiring into us faith and the feare of God, till hee have cured all our maladies, &c. He ſaith (as we heare) that faith is inſpired before we have remiſſion of ſins and the feare of God, without the which there is no true repentance.

Iulius. 1. *decret.*11. Fides omnes actus hominis præcedere debet, Faith muſt goe before all the works or doings of man: Ergo, before repentance.

Homil domin. 3. poſt Epiph.

So alſo Euſebius Emiſſenus: Hic eſt certus pœnitentiæ ordo, ut quicunque ad Deum mundandus venit, prius ſeipſum totum offerat, fidem & charitatem—promittat This is the right order of penitencie, that he which commeth to be cleanſed firſt ſhould offer up himſelfe, his faith & charitie, and perſeverance in good works, &c. Faith then goeth before the cleanſing of the ſoule, and remiſſion of ſins: Ieremy the Greeke Patriarke ſaith, This is the Catholike faith, that everie one then obtaineth remiſſion of his ſins, cum per veram pœnitentiam fidemque vivam—ad Deum converſus fuerit, when he is converted to God by true repentance and a lively faith, ſhewing it ſelfe by good works, &c. faith ſtill goeth before remiſſion of ſins.

Lib.4. contra Marcionem.

2 Tertullian ſaith directly: Si pœnitentia ſtimulus ex fide acciderit, per pœnitentiam ex fide juſtificatam, ab eo audiit, &c. If the pricke of repentance happened by faith, through repentance juſtified by faith, then ſhee heard of Chriſt, thy faith hath ſaved thee, &c. Repentance then proceedeth by faith, Auguſtine yet ſpeaketh more evidently; A good tree cannot bring forth evill fruit: Pœnitentia ergo, quæ non procedit ex fide, utilis non eſt: Repentance then which proceedeth not of faith, is not profitable.

3 So the reformed Churches doe joyne faith and repentance together: Confeſſ. of Bohemia, c. 20. the people muſt bee admoniſhed, that they would truly repent—and ſtir up their conſcience by faith in Chriſt, &c. Auſpurg, artic.3. Though theſe ſorrowes be requiſite,—yet wee muſt joyne faith with them, that is, a truſt and confidence of mercie promiſed for Chriſts ſake.

The fifth Queſtion, of Contrition: the firſt part of their Penance.

THere are certaine points which we doe agree upon.

2 Cor.7.10.

1 We grant: that true contrition and ſorrow of the heart is neceſſarie unto repentance, and that it ſtandeth verie well with the libertie of the Goſpell, and is profitable for Chriſtians, 2 *Corin.*7. 10. Godly ſorrow cauſeth repentance to ſalvation.

2 That true contrition is joyned both with a full hatred and deteſtation of ſin committed, 1 Cor. 11.31. We muſt judge and condemne our ſelves, as alſo with a full purpoſe to amend our lives, *Act.*11. 23. This point is handled by Bellarmine againſt other Papiſts, which denied a formall purpoſe of amendment of life to be requiſite in contrition, *Lib.*2. *cap.*6,7.

3 That true contrition before God is ſufficient, before the abſolution of the Miniſter, ſo that the partie have a purpoſe afterward to be reconciled to the Congregation: which point Bellarm. handleth alſo againſt ſome other of his ſect.

Let us then now ſee what difference of opinion there is betweene us concerning contrition.

The Papiſts.

48. Error.

1. THey hold that contrition is neither wholly of mans free will, nor yet wholly of God: but that man by his free will, holpen of God, is able to repent: ſo that hee doth onely, Deo adjuvante

juvante

Iuvante, pœnitere, He is brought to repentance, God only helping and aſſiſting him, Bellarm. de pœnitent. lib.2.cap.3.

*Argum. Ioel.*2. Rent your hearts: Matth.3. Agite pœnitentiam: Repent ye: To what end ſhould God command thoſe things that are not in our owne power: Ergo, contrition is in mans power and free will: Bellarm.cap.2.propoſ.2. Ioel.2. Matth.3.2.

Anſw. Firſt, it is no rare thing in Scripture to find, that God commandeth us impoſſible things: as S. Paul ſaith, Rom. 8.3. that the precepts of the law are impoſſible: the reaſon thereof is rendred, Galath. 3.24. The law was a ſchoolmaſter to bring us to Chriſt: So God commandeth hard things, that wee finding no ſtrength in our ſelves to doe them, wee ſhould ſeeke for helpe at his hands: as Bernard ſaith well, Non latuit præceptorem præcepti pondus hominum vires excedere, ſed judicavit utile ex hoc ipſo ſua illos inſufficientia admonere, &c. Our maſter was not ignorant, that his commandements did exceed our ſtrength, but he thought it good hereby to admoniſh us of our inſufficiencie. Secondly, another reaſon of theſe precepts, is this: to let us know, that although the will of man hath of it ſelfe by nature no inclination to that which is good, yet is otherwiſe than a peece of clay, and God ſpeaketh to men otherwiſe than unto beaſts, Conſenſus voluntarius nos diſcernit à beſtiis as Bernard ſaith, Our voluntarie or free conſent doth diſcerne us from beaſts. So it is in the power of man, velle, to will, that is, ſomewhat; but velle bonum, to will that which is good, is of God. Thirdly, though God give repentance, and all other good gifts, yet he worketh them by meanes, as by the preaching of his word, by precepts, exhortations, and ſuch like: whereby we are ſtirred up to ſeek that at Gods hand, which we find not to be in our ſelves. Fourthly, thoſe places doe as well conclude, that it is wholly in mans power to repent, as in part: for to what end ſhould God command that which is not wholly and fully in mans power to performe, as the Jeſuite objecteth? Rom.8.3. Galath.3.24. Super cantic. Serm.50.

Argum. 2. Contrition is an acceptable ſacrifice to God, Pſalm 51.17. but that which is coact, not voluntarie, is not acceptable: Ergo, contrition is voluntarie. Bellarm. ibid. Pſal 51.17.

Anſw. We denie not but that contrition is a voluntarie and free offiring unto God, as the Prophet ſaith, *Pſal.*119.108. Accept the free offerings of my mouth, But as Auguſtine ſaith, Deus ex nolentibus volentes facit: God of nilling maketh us willing: ſo then it is made a voluntarie ſacrifice, not by the power of mans will, but by the worke of Gods grace. Pſal.119.108.

The Proteſtants.

TRue contrition of heart, as all other good thoughts in us, as they are good, come onely of God: our cogitations indeed are our owne, but all the goodneſſe of them is the meere gift of God, Iames 1.17. Iam.1 17.

Argum. 1. 2 *Tim.*2.25. If at any time God will give them repentance: Repentance then is the gift of God. And Auguſtine writing upon theſe very words, ſaith, Quantumlibet præbeat pœnitentiam, niſi ipſe dederit quis agit pœnitentiam? Although he never ſo much give occaſion of repentance, yet unleſſe he beſtow upon us the full gift of repentance, no man is able to repent, &c. Thus he plainly diſtinguiſheth betweene præbere pœnitentiam, to offer occaſion to repent: as hee proveth out of Sant Paul, Romans 2.4. the bountifulneſſe of God calleth thee to repentance: and dare pœnitentiam, to give or grant repentance. But if God ſhould onely helpe our free will, and worke together with us to repentance, and not doe all alone himſelfe, he ſhould rather præbere, than dare pœnitentiam: offer occaſion by ſtirring of us up to repentance, than grant us repentance it ſelfe, which were contrarie to the Apoſtle. 2 Tim.2.25. Cont. Iulian. lib.5.3. Rom.2.4.

Argum. 2. The Prophet David ſaith, Create in me a cleane heart, Pſal. 51.10. Like as then God in the creation of the world, had no helper or aſſiſtant, but all was his work: ſo in the renewing of the heart, to create is only Gods worke, to inſpire good thoughts, and to make a new heart, is to create, or make a new creature, as S. Paul calleth it, 2 Cor. 5.17. Ergo, it is onely and wholly the worke of God: as S. Ambroſe ſaith, Gratia tota repellitur, ſi non tota ſuſcipitur: Grace is wholly refuſed, if it bee not wholly received: Epiſtol. 84. Hierome Quodcunque in ſuo rivulo fluit ad fontem refert: Whatſoever floweth in the river muſt be referred to the fountaine, ad Cteſiphont. Pſal.51.10. 2 Cor.5.17.

Bernard ſaith: Non partim gratia, partim liberum arbitrium, ſed totum ſingula peragunt, totum hoc, totum illa, ſed ut totum in illo, ſic totum ex illa: Not partly grace, partly free will, but each of them wholly worketh, this wholly, and that wholly; wholly indeed in free will, but wholly of grace, &c. ſo he maketh the will onely to bee as the paſſive matter, wherein grace worketh: they worke not both together actively. Lib. de libero arbitrio.

The Maiſter of the ſentences agreeth, Lib. 4. diſtinct. 20. a. Opus eſt non hominis, ſed Dei fructifera pœnitentia, inſpirare eam poteſt, quandocunque vult ſua miſericordia: Fruitfull repentance is not the worke of man, but of God, which he can inſpire when he will, of his mercie, &c. Repentance then proceedeth altogether from the mercy of God.

*Concil. Arauſican.*2.*can.*7. Si quis per naturæ vigorem, bonum aliquod, quod ad ſalutem pertinet vitæ æternæ, cogitare, eligere, &c. If any man ſay that by the ſtrength of nature man can thinke or chuſe any good thing belonging to eternall life, or give conſent to wholeſome preaching, he is deceived by the ſpirit of hereſie, ſeeing the Lord ſaith, you can doe nothing without me. This Councell leaveth not any ſtrength at all in mans free will.

In defence of this truth died Thomas Spicer, Iohn Devie, Edmund Poole, that man hath no free wil of himſelfe to doe any good thing, pag. 1912. articul. 7.

In Sermon. prim. dominic. advent.

1 Chryſoſtome, though in other places, he ſeemeth to be a patrone of free will, yet he thus writeth: before ſinne, we had free will to doe well, not after: quia non noſtra virtute poſt peccatum evadere poſſumus de manu diaboli, ſed ſicut navis fracto gubernaculo illuc ducimur, ubi tempeſtas voluerit, ſic a diabolo a peccato in peccatum ducimur. Becauſe we cannot by our owne power after ſinne eſcape out of the hand of the Devill, but as a ſhip, the routher being broken, we are carried whither the tempeſt will, ſo we are carried of the Devill from ſin to ſin, &c.

Epiſt 46. De fide ad Petrum. c. 31.

2 Auguſtine ſaith: Gratia & miſericordia Dei convertit hominem, the grace and mercie of God converteth a man, &c. Againe, hold this firmely, neminem hic poſſe pœnitentiam agere, niſi quem Deus illumenaverit, & gratuita ſua miſericordia converterit: that no man can here repent, but whom God illuminateth and converteth by his meere mercie, &c.

Harmon. ſect. 8. p. 212. Ibid. p. 217.

3 Latter confeſſion of Helvetia. c. 14. Now doe we expreſly ſay that this repentance is the meer gift of God, and not the worke of our ſtrength. Bohemia. c. 5. This repentance and ſaving converſion doth our mercifull God by his peculiar gift offer and beſtow.

Lib. 4. de liber. arbit. c. 14. Opuſcul. de concurſu. lib. 1. c. 5.

4 Bellarmine alleageth one Almanus a ſchoolman, who affirmeth, Deum ſuo concurſu determinare voluntatem: that God by his concurring doth determine the will of man unto good. Suarez the Jeſuit alleageth divers of that ſide, who affirme the ſame: In their opinion then, the will of man is determined and directed by God unto contrition and true repentance.

The Papiſts.

49. Error.

2. THey affirme, that contrition, which is joyned with an inward terror of the mind, and proceedeth from the ſight and conſideration of our ſins, doth not appertaine to the law, but to the Goſpell, Bellarm. lib. 2. c. 2. propoſ. 3.

Math. 4. 17.

Argum. 1. Chriſt preached repentance, to the which contrition belongeth, Math. 4. 17. Repent, for the kingdome of God is at hand: but Chriſt was a Miniſter of the Goſpell, not of the Law, Bellar. ibidem.

Anſw. Firſt, repentance hath part from the Law, part from the Goſpell: from the Law it hath the ſight of ſin and terror of mind for the ſame; from the Goſpell it hath hope and comfort, ſpringing of faith in Chriſt: wherefore this reaſon ſheweth not, that repentance in every part thereof is of the Goſpell. Secondly, though the Law and Goſpell are in nature and propertie diſtinguiſhed, yet they may be joyned in uſe: ſo Moſes the Miniſter of the Law may preach Chriſt, and Chriſt the Miniſter of the Goſpell doth alſo eſtabliſh the Law, and by the terrors of the Law call men to the knowledge of their ſin, where repentance beginneth.

Iſay. 66. 2.

Argum. 2. The Law hath no promiſe of grace, contrition hath a promiſe of grace, as Iſay 66. 2. To whom will I looke, but to him that is poore and of a contrite ſpirit: Ergo, contrition is not of the Law. Bellarm. ibid.

Iohn 1. 17.

Anſw. Firſt, it is true, that the law hath not in it ſelfe, the promiſe of grace annexed, For grace and truth commeth by Ieſus Chriſt, Iohn, 1. 17. Yet by grace the law is made as a ready way and inſtrument to bring us to Chriſt, in whom wee find grace, and ſo contrition wrought by the terrors of the law, doth prepare a way unto grace. Secondly, contrition, as it is a worke of the law, being but yet begun in terror and feare, obtaineth not the promiſe, but being perfected by faith in Chriſt, and in the comforts of the Goſpell, it findeth grace and mercie: as here in the Prophet, to contrition of heart is joyned poorneſſe of ſpirit, which is a deniall of our ſelves, and an apprehenſion of Chriſt by faith.

The Proteſtants.

THat the terrors of a contrite heart, and the ſight of ſin, where contrition beginneth, commeth by the knowledge of the law, the Scripture is plaine.

Rom. 7. 7.

Argum. 1. Rom. 7. 7. I know not ſinne but by the Law, I had not knowne luſt, Unleſſe the Law had ſaid thou ſhalt not luſt: therefere by the Law commeth the revelation of ſinne, which is the beginning of true contrition.

2 Cor. 3. 6. 9.

Argum. 2. S. Paul calleth the law, the killing letter, and the miniſtery of condemnation, 2 Cor. 3. 6. 9. But the Goſpell is the meniſterie of righteouſneſſe and life: Wherefore contrition, as therein is ſet before us our damnable ſtate by ſinne, and miniſtreth to us a ſight of condemnation, is of the law. So likewiſe, Galath. 4. 3. We are in bondage and feare under the Law, but by the Goſpell wee are made ſons, and ſo receive the ſpirit of the Sonne: Ibid ver. 6. Ergo, the feare, terrors, and as it were bondage of the ſoule, is of the Law. Ambroſe ſaith, Lex iram operatur, fides gaudium: The law worketh wrath, faith bringeth joy: In 3. ad Roman. Ad hoc data lex ut terrori eſſet, &c. Therefore was the law given to be a terror to men, to provoke them to good life.

Theodoret ſaith, lex eos, qui peccabant, condemnabat, gratia autem eos ſuſcipiens per fidem juſtificat, &c. The Law condemneth thoſe that ſinne, but grace receiving them doth juſtifie them by faith.

Lib. 1. in Ioan. c. 21.

Cyrillus of Alexandria ſaith, lex ſervitutis ſpiritum ad formidinem dabat, Chriſtus ſpiritum adoptionis

onis ad libertatem. The law of ſervitude did give a ſpirit of feare, but Chriſt the ſpirit of adoption unto liberty.

Latter Confeſſion of Helvetia. c. 13. the Goſpell is indeed oppoſed to the law, for the law worketh wrath, and doth denounce a curſe, but the Goſpell doth preach grace and a bleſſing.

Harm. ſec. 7 p. 201.

Ferus a Popiſh writer ſaith: lex convincit nos peccatores eſſe, ſemper enim plus contra legem, quam pro lege facimus : the law convinceth, that we are ſinners, for we doe alwaies more againſt the law, than for it, &c. The ſight of ſinne then commeth by the law.

Commentar. in Act. 15.

The Papiſts.

3 SOme of the Papiſts affirme, that in Contrition it is not neceſſary to have a formall, that is, a reſolute and expreſſe purpoſe of newnes of life, but that this is alwaies included in the deteſting of ſinne; which implicite or incluſive purpoſe is ſufficient : So Iohan. Major. in 4. ſententiar. diſtinct. 14. qu. 1. Veg. lib. 13. in concil. Trident. c. 13.

50. Error.

Argum. David only confeſſed his ſinne, ſaying; Lord I have ſinned : ſo the Publican : Lord be mercifull to me a ſinner: there is no expreſſe purpoſe of amendment of life mentioned. Likewiſe, the theefe upon the Croſſe had no ſuch expreſſe purpoſe : Ergo, it is not neceſſary.

Anſw. Firſt, that David had a full purpoſe of the heart, even in that inſtant to turne unto God, it is evident, Pſal. 51. 13. Then ſhall I teach thy waies to the wicked : this Pſalme was made by the Prophet, as a teſtimonie of his repentance, for that ſinne, for the which Nathan reproved him : and here he profeſſeth, that he will become a new man.

Pſalme 51. 13.

Secondly, the Publican finding mercy and departing juſtified, no doubt had alſo an expreſſe purpoſe in himſelfe for ever to forſake his ſinne, for otherwiſe hee could not have beene juſtifyed, nor found remiſſion of ſinnes: for this is the law and perpetuall rule of forgiveneſſe, Ezech. 18. 21. If the wicked turne from his ſinnes, &c. and keepe all my ſtatutes : his tranſgreſſion ſhall not be mentioned : to find remiſſion then, theſe two things are required, forſaking of ſinne, and doing that which is right: and this is ſignified in the Publicans ſmiting upon his breaſt : as Auguſtine ſaith, Pectora tundamus, non ut ſuper peccata noſtra pavimentum ſolidemus, &c. Let us knocke upon our breaſts, not to make a pavement, as it were, and beaten floore upon our ſinnes, &c. For hee that beateth upon his breaſt and is not corrected, doth harden his ſinnes, hee taketh them not away : ſo then the Publican in this ſmiting upon his breaſt, was amended and corrected, and thought with himſelfe, never to doe the like againe.

Ezece. 18. 21.
De Diſciplin. Chriſtian. cap. 1. Tom. 9.

Thirdly, 1 The theefe upon the croſſe, being in the very agonie of death, and not expecting life, could not in that ſhort time expreſſe every part of his unfained repentance. 2 Yet there appeareth in him, as that ſhort moment could affoord, both a deteſtation of ſinne in condemning himſelfe and his fellow, and a love of righteouſneſſe, and deſire thereunto, if hee had lived, in commending the innocencie of our Saviour.

The Proteſtants.

WE hold, that as in true Contrition, there muſt be perfect hatred of ſinne ; ſo alſo there is joyned with it a determinate purpoſe of amendment of life.

Argum. 1. The place before cited out of Ezechiel proveth it : Ezech. 18. 21. Likewiſe Iſay. 1. 16. Waſh you, make you cleane, ceaſe to doe evill, learne to doe well : Act. 11. 23. They exhorted all, that with purpoſe of heart, they would turne to the Lord, Eph. 4. 22. Caſt off the old man, put on the new, &c. All theſe places doe evidently prove, that in true contrition and repentance, there is required a forſaking or dying unto ſinne and living unto righteouſneſſe.

Iſay. 1. 16.
Epheſ. 4. 22.

Argum. 2. Bellarmine is a notable witneſſe for us againſt this error, which hee laboureth to confute, lib. 2. de pœnit, ca. 6. 7. in two whole Chapters : and herein he is alſo a witneſſe againſt himſelfe, for lib. 1. c. 20. he confuteth the contrary opinion, that to ceaſe to doe evill, and learne to doe well, are not two parts requiſite to repentance, and anſwereth that place by us alleaged, Iſay 1. 16. Ceaſe to doe evill, &c. But now much forgetting himſelfe, but the truth prevailing more with him, hee produceth this very place, to prove, that in true contrition or repentance, there muſt bee a purpoſe of amendment, which is the ſame thing, that we defend, both before qu. 4 part. 2. and in this place. Auguſtine upon theſe words of the Prophet Iſay, Lavamini, be ye waſhed, &c. Lavatur itaque & mundus eſt, qui & preterita plangit, & iterum non admittit : He is waſhed, and is cleane, which doth bewaile his ſinnes paſt, and doth not commit them againe : de tempor. ſerm. 66.

See the further probation and ratifying of this point by the teſtimonie of other Churches before. Error. 46.

The Papiſts.

4 THey teach, that Contrition ought to be perfect becauſe it muſt proceed from the love of God, which is the moſt perfect kinde of love, Catechiſ. Roman. pag. 439. and that the greatneſſe of the griefe ought to be anſwerable to the quantity of the ſinne: ſo they conclude, that a man ſhall never know when he is ſufficiently contrite, Thomas Aquinas : for hee muſt be contrite for every great ſin he hath committed, Tileman. Heſhuſ. loc. 9. de pœnitent. error. 25. 27. 28. 32.

51. Error.

Argum. 1. That perfect Contrition is required, Bellarmine pretendeth to prove by theſe Scriptures, 1 King. 8. 48. If they turne againe unto thee with all their heart, &c. Ioel. 2. Turne unto mee with all your heart, &c. Bellarm. c. 10.

1 King. 8. 48.

Anſ. 1. Thoſe places doe well prove, that our ſorrow ought to be unfeigned, and that wee ſhould neither diſſemble, nor be indifferent in our ſorrow : but we muſt give our whole heart unto God, that is, not to have a double heart, and as the words are ; a heart and a heart, Pſalm. 12. 2. 2. So then in our Contrition a godly endevour and a diligent care is required, a ſufficiency in our ſorrow cannot bee performed ; No, though our eies were as fountaines of teares ; as the Prophet wiſheth, *Ierem.*9.1.

Ierem.9.1.

The Proteſtants.

WHat is this elſe but a plaine doctrine of deſperation ? for when is a man able ſo perfectlie to bee contrite, as his love toward God ought to bee perfect ? or how can his ſorrow be equivalent to the waight of his ſinnes ? or can a man remember all his ſinnes, that he ſhould bee ſory for ?

Argum. 1. The ſorrow of Chriſtians is not infinite or uncertaine, but it is determined and limited. Saint Paul ſaith, That he ſhould not be ſwallowed up of two much heavineſſe, 2 Corinthians 2.7. And againe, My Epiſtle made you ſory, though for a ſeaſon, 2 Corinth. 7.8.

2 Cor 2.7.
2 [illegible]or.7.8.
Iob.9.2.

Argum. 2. Iob. 9.2. We cannot anſwer God one thing of a thouſand : our greateſt ſorrow is not ſufficient for our leaſt ſinne : therefore there can be no proportion betweene the greatneſſe of our ſinne and the quantity of our ſorrow: Peter committed a great ſinne in denying of his Maſter, and yet upon his bitter weeping he was received to mercie, as Hierome ſaith, Petrum ter negantem amare in ſuum locum reſtituere lachryma: Peters bitter teares after thrice denial reſtored him to his place: was Peters ſorrow any way anſwerable in meaſure or quantity to his ſinne ? We muſt indeed weepe bitterly as Peter did, and after we are thoroughly humbled, we are certaine, that God will looke upon us, as he did upon Peter : and the inward feeling of Gods favour will ſet the bounds and limits of our ſorrow.

Their owne Canons are more equall, which doe not enjoyne ſo ſtrict penance, and ſuch immeaſurable contrition, as theſe new maſters require : as decret. Gregor. lib. 5. tit. 38. c. 5. Alexander 3. concerning certaine that in their confeſſion ſay, that they cannot abſtaine from thoſe ſinnes : hee decreeth, Eorum confeſſionem recipere debes, &c. You muſt receive their confeſſion, for though it bee no true repentance, yet it is a true confeſſion.

Auguſtine ſaith, Iſta eſt vera pœnitentia, quando quis ſic convertitur, ut non revertatur : This is true repentance, when a man doth ſo turne unto God, that he returne not unto ſinne. When a man therefore hath in this manner repented, he may be ſure that he hath mourned ſufficiently. It is therefore untrue, that a man is uncertaine when he hath ſorrowed enough.

Synod Colonienſ. part. 7. cap. 19. Quamvis quis peccato mordeatur, ſi tamen pœniteat, ut de cætero, peccandi voluntatem nullam habeat, confidens de Domini miſericordia accedat ad Euchariſtiam intrepidus, &c. Although a man bee greeved in conſcience for his ſinne, yet if hee repent him, ſo that hee have a purpoſe not to ſinne againe, truſting to Gods mercy, let him come without feare to the Communion, &c. If he thus ſorrowing be without feare, it followeth, that God in Chriſt accepteth his ſorrow as ſufficient.

In Iſaiam.

So alſo Chryſoſtome ſaith, ab ipſa Domini erga nos benignitate, non ex tua pœnitentia mihi ſumo fiduciam: pœnitentia enim tua non prævalet tantam abſtergere malorum eluviem : I have good truſt (of forgivenes) from Gods mercie, not thy repentance, for thy repentance is not able to waſh away ſuch an heape of ſins ; &c. the efficacy then of our repentance dependeth not upon the greatnes thereof, but of Gods mercie.

Athanaſius ſaith, Pœnitentia eſt a peccatis deſinere, &c. It is repentance to leave off to ſinne, &c. by this then ſhall one know, whether his repentance be ſufficient by the forſaking of his ſinne.

Confeſſ. of Auſpurg. artic. 3. they taught that abſolution was nought worth without ſufficient contrition, what elſe was this but quite to take away from all conſciences the comfort of the Goſpell, &c. Saxonic artic. 16. Here we reprove our adverſaries, who feigne that contrition muſt be ſufficient.

The Papiſts.

2 Error.

BEllarmine hath here a certaine fond conceite of his owne, bringing in this diſtinction of ſorrow in contrition : that there is Dolor ſummus intenſivè, appreciative : The greateſt and higheſt ſorrow, intenſively, and by way of eſtimation : of this ſort he giveth an example, as a good man may weepe more for the loſſe of his children, than for his ſinnes, yet in his choyce hee had rather loſe his children, than offend God : this is that kinde of griefe by way of eſtimation, though intenſively hee grieve more for his children, yet, when hee maketh an eſtimate of the one and the other, hee preferreth that in his judgement, which is the leaſt in his affection : this kinde of griefe when as the affection goeth before the judgement, hee thinketh is ſufficient for contrition. Bellarm. cap. 11.

Argum. Ioel 2. Turne unto God with all your heart : this muſt be underſtood of this greateſt kinde of griefe, by way of eſtimation, &c.

1 King.8.49.

Anſ. Whereas it is ſaid, 1 King. 8.49. If they turne unto thee with all their heart and ſoule, &c. how can they turne with the whole heart and affection, when as they in their affection can ſorrow more for other things ? wherefore as God will have the whole and entire ſoule, that is, the judgement, ſo the whole heart alſo and affection. As Auguſtine ſaith, Inveni triſtem, &c. I finde one very heavy, I aſke him, Friend, why art thou heavie? ſaith he, I have loſt my money: Locus immundus fructus nullus: This is an uncleane place, there can be no fruit: *De tempor. ſerm.*151.

The Proteſtants.

THough I deny not but a right good man may ſometime breake out more into affection for ſome temporall loſſe, than for the committing of ſin, as *Matth.*2.18. The women mourne for their children, and would not bee comforted: yet this is not a vertue to bee commended, but an infirmitie to bee amended, as it was commendable in Eli, who hearing patiently the heavie newes of the death of his ſons, when mention was made of the taking of the Arke, could hold no longer, but through feebleneſſe cauſed by ſudden griefe, fell backwards and brake his necke, 1 *Sam.*4.17.

1 Sam.4.17.

Argum. This hath beene the continuall practice of the Saints to lament more for ſin, than for any other temporall loſſe whatſoever: as David ſaith, *Pſal.6.6. I cauſe my bed everie night to ſwim, and water my couch with teares: Pſal.*119.136. Mine eyes guſht out with rivers of water, becauſe they kept not thy Law. Matth. 26. 75. Peter went out, and wept bitterly: No earthly matter could have drawne from them ſuch plentifull ſtore of teares: wherefore the Saints did even weepe moſt intenſively, that is, earneſtly and effectually for ſin.

Your owne canons are cleere in this point: *Decr.par.*2.*cauſ.*33. *diſtinct.*3.*c.*42. Satis durus eſt cujus mentis dolorem, &c. He is verie hard whoſe griefe of minde the teares of his body cannot declare: but let him know, ſe culpabiliter durum, that he is verie culpable in his hardneſſe, which doth lament the loſſes of time, the death of his friend, &c. and doth not ſhew the griefe for ſin with teares: Let none therefore excuſe themſelves, that they have not a fountaine of teares, who with teares doe ſhew the griefe of temporall things, &c. This ſentence is rehearſed out of Auguſtines and approved by the Maſter of ſentences, *Lib.*4. *diſt.*15.f. whereby they are defined to be culpable, which doe more expreſſe the loſſe of things temporall, by their teares, than of ſpirituall: which is that which Bellarmine alloweth as good and commendable.

Chryſoſtome ſaith: Quod eſt illius maculæ balneum? calidi lachrymarum fontes, gemitus è profundo cordis aſcendentes, compunctio perpetua, preces continua: What bath is there for that blot? fountaines of warme teares, deepe ſighes from the heart, a perpetuall compunction, continuall prayers, &c. hee that thus writeth, requireth a greater griefe for ſin, than for any worldly thing.

Confeſſ. of Saxony, artic.16. There muſt needs be ſome ſuch great feare and griefes in thoſe that are convicted—and theſe true griefes are a feeling of the wrath of God, &c. But what greater griefe can there bee, than that which proceedeth from a feeling of the wrath of God, ſee Auguſtine and the decrees before alleaged.

GOdly ſorrow and contrition bringeth joy and comfort to the ſoule in the end, with undoubted aſſurance of the forgiveneſſe and remiſſion of ſins.

Argum. 1. Godly ſorrow worketh in the true penitent perſon a cleering of the minde, 2 Corinth 7.*verſ.*11. but the ſoule and conſcience cannot be cleered and ſet at reſt, unleſſe we be perſwaded that our ſins are forgiven us: Ergo.

2 Cor.7.11.

*Argum.*2. All hope is certaine, and bringeth undoubted aſſurance, and therefore it is called the anchor of the ſoule, *Hebr.*6.19. Wherefore either contrition is void of hope altogether, (which they will not grant) or if it have any hope, it is ſure and ſtable, and worketh a full perſwaſion and aſſurance of the mercie of God.

Heb.6.19.

Auguſtine ſaith, Petrus mox à Domino indulgentiam accepit, qui amariſſimè flevit trinæ negationis culpam: Peter ſtraightway received pardon and indulgence, when he had moſt bitterly bewailed the ſin of his three-fold deniall of Chriſt, &c. How could Peter immediately have felt and received the remiſſion of that great ſin, if the Lord had not aſſured his conſcience thereof?

De tempor. ſerm.66.

The former Canon of the Collin Councell ſaith, that when a man hath ſorrowed for his ſin, purpoſing not to doe the like, Securus & intrepidus accedat: Let him draw neere without feare, and be ſecure. He that is ſecure and without feare doubteth not: Ergo, he is aſſured of the forgiveneſſe of his ſin.

Bernard alſo ſaith: Animam pœnitentia lachrymis afflictam ſpiritus paracletus libenter conſolatur, frequenter viſitat, & ad veniæ fiduciam plenè reformat: A ſoule afflicted with penitent ſorrow, the ſpirit of comfort doth comfort, often viſit, and fully bring it to the truſt of pardon: *de interior. domo. cap.*37: The ſoule then may have a full and aſſured truſt of forgiveneſſe.

Their owne Canons are cleere for us: Decr.par. 2. cauſ. 33. diſtinct. 1. cap. 50. Nemo poteſt bene agere pœnitentiam, niſi qui ſperaverit indulgentiam: No man can truly doe repentance, if hee doe not hope for indulgence.

*Ibid. diſtinct.*3.*c.*39. Leo. Iudam non pœnitentia revocavit ad Dominum, ſed deſperatio traxit ad laqueum: Repentance did not recall Iudas to the Lord, but deſperation brought him to the ſnare.

That repentance then is not good nor acceptable,which is not full of aſſurance,and in hope comfortable.

Iohn Huſſe holy Martyr: Unto a true abſolution,firſt,there is required contrition. Secondly,a purpoſe and intent to ſin no more. Thirdly, true confeſſion. Fourthly, ſtedfaſt hope of forgiveneſſe: as Chriſt ſaith, My ſon,beleeve,and thy ſins are forgiven thee, pag.616. artic.5.

Hypomnem. In Iſaiam. And for further evidence, Chryſoſtome ſaith: ſome men will ſay, may a man by repentance hope for ſalvation? prorſus licet, id unde liquet? ab ipſa Domini tui erga nos benignitate, non ex tua pœnitentia mihi ſumo fiduciam, &c. yea, thou mayeſt, and how doth that appeare? I receive aſſured truſt, by the mercy of God toward us,not by thy repentance,&c.

Lib.1.D. Doctrin. Chriſtian. c.18. 2 Auguſtine ſaith: quiſquis non credit dimitti ſibi poſſe peccata fit deterior deſperando: he that beleeveth not,his ſins may be forgiven him,in deſparing becommeth worſe.

54.Error. 6 THey affirme that contrition is a neceſſary meane unto juſtification,and that a man cannot be juſtified,till he have beene truly contrite for his ſins,Bellarm.lib.2.de pænitent.c.8.

Luk.13.3. Act.3.19. Argum.Luke 13.3. *Except ye repent, ye ſhall likewiſe periſh. Act.3.19. Repent,and turne,that your ſins may be put away,when the time of refreſhing ſhall come: Ergo,*contrition is neceſſary to juſtification,Bellarm.ibid.

Anſw. Firſt, it followeth not, without repentance and true contrition there is no juſtification: Ergo, repentance is a meane unto juſtification: for faith cannot be without works,yet works are no meane unto faith: ſo repentance and contrition are the fruits of juſtification,not a meane thereunto. Secondly, there is a difference betweene juſtification, and ſalvation, or glorification; contrition is a meane and way to ſalvation: by repentance through the mercie of God in Chriſt wee are preſerved from periſhing and everlaſting deſtruction: and repentance goeth before our conſummation, and perfect abolition of our ſins in the day of refreſhing at the comming of Chriſt: But it followeth not, that contrition therefore is a meane unto juſtification; for firſt wee are juſtified, then afterward glorified: our ſalvation is accompliſhed,*Rom.*8.30. Thirdly, contrition is a meane to aſſure us of our juſtification,but not to juſtifie us: as the Apoſtle ſaith,Philip.2.12.With feare and trembling finiſh your ſalvation. Rom.8.30. Phil.2.12.

The Proteſtants.

THat true contrition is neceſſary,we willingly grant: and that without it remiſſion of ſins cannot be had; but we deny that it is a neceſſary meane unto juſtification: a neceſſary ſigne, fruit, or work of juſtification it is,but not a meane or cauſe.

Rom.4.5. Argum. 1. We are juſtified by faith, Rom.4.5. To him that beleeveth in him that juſtifieth the ungodly, faith is counted for righteouſneſſe: But faith goeth before repentance, as Bellarmine himſelfe before confeſſed by the example of the Ninivites, who firſt beleeved, and afterward repented, Bellarm. lib.1.cap.19.propoſ.2. Ergo, juſtification is before repentance,and ſo conſequently repentance is no meane unto it.

Argum. 2. Good works are no meane to juſtification, for then they ſhould goe before juſtification: but as Auguſtine ſaith, Bona opera non præcedunt juſtificandum, ſed ſequuntur juſtificatum: Good works doe not goe before him that is to bee juſtified, but they follow him that is already juſtified.

But contrition is a good work: confeſſed and proved by *Bellar.lib.2.cap.2.Ergo,*it is no meane unto juſtification.

Auguſtine ſaith, Noli præſumere de operibus ante fidem,noveris quia peccatorem te fides invenit: Preſume not of works before faith, (as if by the merit of works thou hadſt received faith)know that faith hath found thee a ſinner: in Pſalm. 31. If then good works goe not before faith, and faith and juſtification come together,as I have ſhewed, then contrition being a good action precedeth not juſtification. See before error 47.where it is ſhewed that faith goeth before repentance,by the which faith we are juſtified,then repentance cannot be the cauſe of juſtification comming after it.

The Papiſts.

55.Error. 7 THey make contrition a part of ſatisfaction for our ſins,and to be a cauſe of juſtification and remiſſion of ſins, not onely in diſpoſing and preparing of us thereunto, but in that thereby we verily obtaine and deſerve remiſſion of our ſins,Bellarm.lib.2.de pænitent.cap.12.

Luke7.47. Argum. 1. Luke 7.47. Many ſins are forgiven her becauſe ſhe loved: Not onely faith,but love or charity obtaineth remiſſion of ſins,Bellarm.ibid.Rhemiſt.in hunc locum.

Anſ. The argument is 1 not from the cauſe to the effect,but from the effect to the cauſe: for Chriſt doth not reaſon thus, ſhe loved much, therefore many ſins are forgiven her, but contrariwiſe, Many ſins are forgiven her, therefore ſhe loveth much: As the next words declare: *to whom little is remitted,he loveth little.*2 And our Saviour ſaith in plain words in the laſt verſe,that her faith had ſaved her; whereof her love was an effect. 3 And further as the Apoſtle ſaith, Wee know that wee are tranſlated from death to life, becauſe we love the brethren, 1 Iohn 3. 14. he ſaith not, we are tranſlated, but wee know we are: ſo this woman by her love might know or be aſſured that her ſins were remitted her. 1 Iohn 3.14. And Bellarmine hath a ſaying not much unlike, that theſe words of Chriſt, many ſins are forgiven her, confirmant abſolutionem inviſibiliter datam, doe confirme the abſolution inviſibly given before, lib. 2. c. 14. reſp. ad object. 1. Her love was a meanes then to confirme her abſolution, which was inviſibly given before.

Argum. 2. Ezech. 18. 27. When the wicked turneth away from his wickedneſſe he ſhall ſave his ſoule, &c. verſ. 31. Make you a new heart and a new ſpirit, and caſt away from you all your tranſgreſſions. Ezec. 18. 27, 31. The turning then away from ſin is the cauſe of life, and of newneſſe of ſoule: Ergo, of juſtification; Dan. 4. verſ. 24. Redeeme thy ſins by thine almes, &c. Ergo, good charitable works are the cauſe of the forgiveneſſe of ſins, Bellar. c. 12. Dan. 4. 24.

Anſw. Firſt, the places 1 in Ezechiel if they be taken in this ſenſe, would prove, that it is in a mans power to convert his ſoule, or to renew his owne heart, whereas the Prophet acknowledgeth it wholly to be the Lords work, Pſalm. 51. 12. Create in me a new heart: and Iere. 31. Convert thou me, O Lord, and I ſhall be converted. Pſalm. 51. 12. Ierem. 31. 18. 2 But why the Lord thus ſpeaketh to man, in bidding him convert, S. Auguſtine rendereth the reaſon: Quia non ſicut in lapidibus inſenſatis Deus ſalutem noſtram operatur: Becauſe God worketh our ſalvation in us, not as in ſenſleſſe ſtones: cont. Pelag. lib. 1. c. 5. Man therfore ſaveth his ſoule, or maketh his heart new, but as Gods inſtrument; as the axe in the workmans hand: it is Gods Spirit that maketh man to make his heart new. 3 Bellarmine himſelfe helpeth us with a ſufficient anſwer, that remiſſion of ſins is firſt inviſibly given; and then by our earneſt repentance, it is confirmed and aſſured unto us: ſo then repentance is a meane to the aſſurance of forgiveneſſe, as theſe places prove; but not to the inviſible grace or gift of remiſſion.

Secondly, 1 The word in Daniel ſignifieth not to redeeme, but to break off: for ſo is this word פרק pharak uſed, Gen. 27. 40. Thou ſhalt break his yoak from thy neck. Geneſ. 27. 40. 2 By (redeeming) admitting that reading, may be underſtood not redemption to be made before God, but recompence to be made unto men, whom he had injured. 3 Neither doth the Prophet ſpeak of the forgiveneſſe of his ſins, but of the prolonging of his peace and proſperity: for theſe words, Forſitan ignoſcet Deus: God perhaps may forgive your ſins, are not read in the Hebrew. 4 And how could the almes of an unbeleever, ſuch an one as Nebuchadnezzar was, be a cauſe of forgiveneſſe, ſeeing without faith nothing is acceptable to God? 5 Laſtly, the Kings righteous and mercifull dealing ſhould be onely a teſtimony to his conſcience, that his ſins were forgiven. 6 Concil. Cabilonenſ. c. 36. It is denied that ſins, de induſtria, committed willingly, or wittingly, are redeemed by almes: Sic enim viderentur Deum mercede conducere: So they ſhould ſeeme to hire God with a reward.

The Proteſtants.

THat contrition of heart meriteth not, neither is any cauſe of the forgiveneſſe of ſins, which doth iſſue only out of the fountaine of Gods mercy by faith in Chriſt, the Scriptures doe teſtifie.

Argum. 1. Rom. 3. 24. We are juſtified freely by grace. If freely, then is not our juſtification merited, or cauſed by any work of ours. Rom. 3. 24.

Bellarmine anſwereth: firſt, that we are juſtified freely, though it be by the merit of contrition, becauſe contrition is the gift of God. Secondly, contrition meriteth not, ex condigno, of condignity or worthineſſe, but ex congruo, of congruity: which kinde of merit is founded not in Gods juſtice, but in his benignity and bounty, Bellarm. cap. 12.

Contra. Firſt, this is the very anſwer 1 of the old Pelagians, who did in like manner affirme, that the good will of man was of God, becauſe it could not be in a man, unleſſe man were, ut homo autem ſit, à Deo habet, but for a man to be, is of God: for if therefore remiſſion of ſins be of grace, and the gift of God, becauſe contrition, whereby it is merited, is the gift of God; then ſay alſo, that we may be ſaved by nature, and yet by the gift of God, becauſe the nature of man is the work and gift of God. 2 But the Apoſtle confuteth this gloſſe, in ſaying further, We are juſtified freely, &c. through redemption in Chriſt Ieſus: if through redemption, then not through contrition. 3 And againe, men firſt muſt be reconciled unto God, and of enemies be made friends, before he give them gifts: as the Apoſtle ſaith, Chriſt firſt led captivity captive, that is, ſubdueth and removeth ſin that led us captive, and then gave gifts unto men, Epheſ. 4. 8. Then muſt we firſt be reconciled unto God, which conſiſteth in the forgiveneſſe of our ſins, Rom. 3. 25. before we can have the gift of contrition. Eph. 4. 8. Rom. 3. 25. Wherfore if reconciliation aod forgiveneſſe of ſins goe before contrition, it can be no meritorious cauſe of the remiſſion of ſins.

Secondly, 1 No merit, or work of mercy, but of juſtice, as the Apoſtle ſaith, Rom. 4. 4. To him that worketh, the wages is not counted by favour, but by debt: Rom. 4. 4. wherefore the merit of congruity is no merit, being founded in Gods mercy. 2 Neither is there any congruity or conſequence at all, that God ſhould reſpect us being his enemies: but enemies we are before we are reconciled by the remiſſion of our ſins: wherefore contrition going before remiſſion of ſins, and ſo reconciliation, cannot deſerve ſo much as of congruity, if there were any ſuch merit.

Argum. 2. That the contrition of the heart is no cauſe of our juſtification, neither doth merit, or deſerve remiſſion of ſins: S. Paul ſheweth, Rom. 4. 5. 6. To him that beleeweth faith is counted for Rom. 4. 5. 6.

righteouſneſſe: And David declareth the bleſſedneſſe of that man,to whom God imputeth righteouſneſſe without works. It is faith then only that obtaineth remiſſion of ſins:and a man is juſtified without any reſpect had to his works. Therefore neither contrition, nor any other work inward or outward,procureth remiſſion of ſins,but faith only is the meane.

So Auguſtine ſaith, Opera ſequuntur juſtificatum, non precedunt juſtificandum: Works follow a man already juſtified, they goe not before to juſtification, *De fide & operibus, cap.*14. Therefore the work of contrition is not availeable to juſtification.

And againe : nec quiſquam dicat meritis orationum ſuarum—traditam Dei gratiam—ſed gratia & miſericordia Dei convertit hominem, &c. Neither let any man ſay that grace is given by the merit of his prayers,but the grace and mercy of God converteth a man.

Cenſur. Oriental.p.21.

2 Ieremie the Patriark ſaith : quod gratis per Chriſtum peccata, & non propter aliqua merita noſtra—remittuntur, confiteri debemus: We muſt confeſſe, that our ſins are forgiven freely by Chriſt, not for any merits of ours,&c.

4 Interrelig. Cæſarea. cap. 17. Illa ſatisfactio, quæ culpam & æternam pœnam expiat, ſoli Chriſto tribuenda eſt: That ſatisfaction which taketh away the fault and eternall puniſhment, is onely to be attributed to Chriſt : *Ergo,*contrition doth not ſatisfie for ſin.

Laſtly, Iulius 1. Decret. 11. thus teſtifieth, Fides omnes actus hominis præcedere debet: Faith muſt goe before all the acts of men. Cyril. Alexand. expoſit. Nicen.ſymbol. Sicut fides abſque operibus mortua,&c. As faith is dead without works, ſo we may turne it and ſay, works are dead without faith. Contrition then is either before faith or after; if before, being without faith, it is a dead work, as is here ſpecified, and ſo cannot merit: if after faith, then it commeth after juſtification and remiſſion of ſins: for by faith we are juſtified: *Rom.*3.26. That he might be a juſtifier of him,that is of the faith of Ieſus.

We want not the evidence of ſome of their owne ſide: Capreolus in ſecund. ſenten. diſt. 40. *Dominicus à Soto lib.*2.*de natur.& grat.cap.*4.doe deny that contrition any way either of congruity,or condignity meriteth remiſſion.

8 THere is a kinde of contrition that proceedeth onely from the feare of puniſhment, when a man doth leave ſinning, not for any love or delight he hath in God, but onely for feare of damnation: Even this contrition alſo is good and profitable: yet this ſervile feare is at length cleane driven out by charity. But there remaineth ſtill in the godly an awe and feare of God and his judgements, with miſtruſt, and feare of hell and damnation: as Matth. 10. Feare him that can caſt body and ſoule into hell: Rhemiſt. Ioh. 4. ſect. 6. And Bellarmine ſaith, that if a ſinner ſolius pœna fugiendæ cauſa,&c. only to avoid puniſhment, doe take heed of ſin, this is a good and profitable feare, lib. 2. 17.

Anſwer. Firſt, the Lord in theſe places by his Prophets ſpeaketh unto the prophane wicked of thoſe times: as Ierem. verſ. 21. Heare O fooliſh people, and without underſtanding: and Malach. 1. 8. it followeth in the ſame verſe, O yee Prieſts that deſpiſe my name: Theſe prophane perſons had need to bee terrified with the feare of Gods judgements: but it followeth not, that this feare is neceſſary for the ſervants of God. Secondly, the Prophet Malachie joyning the honour of ſons, and feare of ſervants together; underſtandeth not a ſervile, miſerable, and ſlaviſh feare, but ſuch as dutifull and obedient ſervants yeeld unto their maſters as fathers, which is a commendable feare, and fit alwayes to bee retained. Thirdly, our Saviour ſpeaketh by way of compariſon: that they ſhould not feare them which kill the body, &c. Hee preferreth a ſervile feare of God, before this worldly feare of men: yet ſo that he would not have them ſtay here, or reſt in this feare, for the which hee divers times reproveth them: as Luk. 12. 32. Feare not little flocke, it is your fathers will to give you a kingdome. Fourthly, wee confeſſe that this ſervile feare is profitable to make a beginning and further entrance: as Prov. 1. 7. The feare of God is the beginning of wiſdome: but afterward love muſt ſucceed in the place thereof.

Luk. 12. 32.
Prov. 1. 7.

The Proteſtants.

FIrſt, wee acknowledge that the feare of puniſhment is neceſſary in the beginning, to make a way for true love to enter, as the briſtle or needle (as Auguſtine ſaith) maketh roome for the threed to enter. Wee alſo confeſſe, that there is a continuall feare and reverence of God in the godly, ſuch as children have of their parents: but as for any miſtruſt or feare of hell and damnation, after love bee once entred, and made the children of God, which breedeth terror and anxietie of conſcience, it is cleane expelled, and thruſt out of the doores by love.

Argum. 1. So ſaith the Apoſtle, There is no feare in love: but perfect love caſteth out feare, and maketh us to have confidence in the day of judgement: But hee that feareth damnation, and is afraid of the day of judgement, cannot have confidence in that day. So Auguſtine: Quid dicimus de illo, qui capit timere diem judicii? ſi perfecta in illo eſſet charitas, non timeret: What ſay wee to him, that feareth the day of judgement? if love were perfect in him, he would not feare it.

1 Iohn 4. 17.

Argum. 2. Matth. 25. 25. The ſlothfull ſervant ſaith to his maſter, I knew thou waſt a hard man, &c. and therefore I was afraid. This ſervant was not commended for this feare, but blamed and reproved, and caſt into utter darkneſſe: for his maſter ſaid, Thou evill and ſlothfull ſervant. And Origen hereof writeth well: Nec eſt bonus hujuſmodi timor, nec liberat nos talis timor à tenebris exterioribus: Neither is this feare good, neither doth it deliver from utter darkneſſe: Tract. 33. in Matth.

Matth. 25. 25.

Bellarmine replieth: that to feare God cannot be evill; but they that have this ſervile feare, do notwithſtanding feare God: Ergo, c. 18.

Contra. Firſt, the divels feare God and tremble, Iam. 2. 19. doth he thinke there is any good feare in devils? Secondly, neither doe thoſe feare God, but hell, for if there were no hell, they would not feare God at all.

Iames 2. 19.

Argum. 3. God is not to be loved for hope of reward: Ergo, neither to be ſerved for feare of puniſhment.

Bellarmine anſwereth, that the reaſon is not alike: for the object of love is good, the object of feare is evill: God is good, and therefore to bee loved for himſelfe: but hee is not evill, and therefore to be feared for another, cap. 18. reſp. ad argum. 6.

Contra. Firſt, the object indeed of ſervile feare is evill, but the object of a godly feare is good; as Eccleſ. 12. 13. Feare God and keep his commandements: will he ſay that the object of this feare is evill? Secondly, if God be only to be feared for another thing, then all feare ſhall bee ſervile, and the filiall feare is aboliſhed, when God is feared and reverenced as a father for himſelfe. Thirdly, Hierome ſheweth the reaſon to be alike: Qui diligit, &c. He that loveth, keepeth the commandement, not becauſe hee is compelled with feare of puniſhment, or greedineſſe of reward; but becauſe, that which is commanded is good: Tom. 4. de filio prodigo.

Eccleſ. 12. 13.

7 1 Chryſoſtome ſaith, Idcirco nec terreat tuorum conſcientia peccatorum, cum pœnitentia deleantur, &c. Therefore let not the conſcience of thy ſinnes terrifie thee, when they are by repentance blotted out, &c.

Homil. de Ieya Propheta.

De Correction. Donatiſt, c. 15. 2 Auguſtine ſaith thus ſpeaking of S. Paul: Agnoſcant in eo Chriſtum prius ferientem, deinde conſolantem—& quem major timor compulit ad charitatem, ejus perfecta charitas foras miſit timorem: Let them acknowledge Chriſt in him firſt ſmitting, then comforting: and whom great feare compelled unto charity, his perfect charity expelled feare.

Harm. ſect. 8. pag. 218. 3 Confeſſion of Bohemia, c. 5. This ſaving repentance—hath this in order firſt, it is a feare and terrour of the ſecret heart before God,—ſuch a terrour and true ſenſe of ſin, doth worke in the faithfull an inward change of the minde:—hereunto is ſtraightway added, that ſuch men ought by faith in Chriſt Jeſus conceive a ſure and undoubted truſt in his mercie, &c. Wee ſee then that true repentance though it begin with feare, yet it endeth in peace, confidence and comfort.

Synod. Moguntin. cap. 10. Libertatem Chriſtianam intelligimus, &c. non ut alii homines pœnarum metu & imperio legis compellantur, &c. We underſtand Chriſtian libertie, not that wee ſhould not doe thoſe things which are commanded, but that wee ſhould not as others are, bee drawne or enforced to keep through feare of puniſhment, &c. Ergo, there remaineth no feare of puniſhment in the righteous.

We have moſt cleere teſtimonies beſide: Ambroſ. epiſt. 84. Timoris, quo Deus metuitur nulla diſtinctio, &c. There is no difference in name of that feare, wherewith God is feared, &c. there is feare of puniſhment, here is carefulneſſe for the reward: Of the ſervile feare it is ſaid, perfect love expelleth feare, but of the liberall feare; The feare of the Lord is holy and remaineth for ever. And againe, epiſtol. 7. Velle ſapientis, ſervire inſipientis: To bee willing, is the part of a wiſe man; to ſerve of a foole: in the Law there is ſervitude, in the Goſpell libertie, &c. Servit peccator formidini: A ſinner is a ſlave to his feare.

Hieron. de 42. Manſionib. Duplicia ſunt in ſcripturis vincula, &c. There are two ſorts of bands in Scripture, &c. but Chriſts bands are voluntary, Et vertuntur in amplexum, and are turned into embracings.

Decret. Gregor. lib. 5. tit. 41. c. 8. Qui ex timore facit preceptum, aliter quam debeat facit, & ideo jam non facit: He that of feare doth the commandement, doth it otherwiſe than he ſhould, and therefore doth it not at all, &c. By all theſe teſtimonies it is evident, that this ſervile feare of puniſhment hath no place where the love of God is.

The Papiſts.

58. Error. NOne can rightly ſeeke for abſolution at the Prieſts hands, unleſſe they confeſſe particularly at the leaſt all their mortall ſins, whether they bee committed in minde, heart, will, and cogitation onely, or in word, and worke, with all the neceſſarie circumſtances and differences of the ſame, Rhemiſt. Ioh. 20. ſect. 5. And this ſacramentall confeſſion, as they call it, muſt bee made ſecretly to the Prieſt, Concil. Trident. ſeſſ. 14. can. 6.

John 20. 22. Argum. 1. This wonderfull power of remitting and retaining of ſins, which was given to the Apoſtles and their ſucceſſors, Ioh. 20. 22. were given them in vaine, if no man were bound to ſeeke for abſolution at their hands: which cannot be had of them without diſtinct utterance to them of our ſins: for they cannot rule the caſes of conſcience, unleſſe they have exact knowledge and cogitation of their ſins, Rhemiſt. ibid.

Anſw. 1. God hath not made his Miniſters in Chriſts ſtead Judges of caſes of conſcience, as though there were in them an actuall power to remit and abſolve ſins: but their office is onely to declare and ſet forth unto all penitent perſons, the promiſes of God for remiſſion of ſins, and the ſeverity of Gods judgement againſt impenitent perſons: which is eſpecially performed in the preaching and applying of the word either publikely or privately: as S. Paul calleth the Goſpell committed unto him, the word of reconciliation, 2 Cor. 5. 16. 2 Cor. 5. 16.

2 A man therefore may by their miniſtery, which are the Preachers of reconciliation, find remiſſion of ſins, without a particular declaration thereof: neither it is neceſſary for them to have ſo exact a knowledge of our ſins, ſeeing they are not abſolute Judges of the conſcience, but the miniſters and ambaſſadors of reconciliation, 2 Cor. 5. 20. 2 Cor. 5. 20.

3 And Miniſters are not to ſtay while ſuit is made unto them for their help, but they ought to exhort and deſire men to be reconciled to God by their miniſterie.

Bellarmine anſwereth, that the Prieſts are truly and properly Judges of mens ſinnes, and have a judiciarie power not to declare or teſtifie the forgiveneſſe of ſins, but truly to bind, or looſe them. Firſt, they are called the keyes: which doe verily open and ſhut the doore, not ſignifie the opening and ſhutting: as Chriſt is ſaid to have the key of David to open and ſhut, which power Chriſt communicateth to the Apoſtles and their ſucceſſors. Secondly, to bind and looſe doe not ſignifie, to denounce and declare, but indeed to put on, or take off the bonds; ſo are they ſaid to retaine ſinnes: and what is it elſe to retaine, but nolle remittere, not to bee minded to remit? Thirdly, the words are, whoſe ſins, not all mens ſins are remitted, but whom the Prieſt ſhall judge meet: but the word is preached to all, remiſſion of ſins is not given to all: therefore this is not underſtood of the preaching of the word, but of the judiciary power of the keyes. Fourthly, in that Chriſt breathed upon them, it ſheweth, that as a blaſt doth extinguiſh the fire, and chaſe the clouds, ſo they had power verily to extinguiſh ſins, and not to declare only Bellar. lib. 3. c. 2.

Contra. Firſt, the keyes 1 of the Church doe truly open and ſhut, being executed according to the will and minde of the maſter of the houſe: the ſervant to whom the keyes are committed, doth open and ſhut, yet but as a ſervant, and according to his maſters direction: ſo the keyes of the Church are committed to men, but as miniſters of the keyes, not to open and ſhut at their pleaſure, but as Chriſt preſcribeth. 2 But it is not farre from blaſphemie to ſay that the ſame power of the keyes, which Chriſt hath, is communicated to the miniſters of the Church: for hee openeth, and no man ſhutteth, &c. Revel. 3. 8. but man may open to ſome, to whom Chriſt may ſhut, and hee ſhut the doore againſt others, to whom Chriſt may open: yea and when the Phariſees had ſaid, Who can forgive ſins but God onely? Mark. 2. 7. Chriſt reproveth them not, but ſheweth, that hee (being both God and man) had authority alſo to forgive ſins. Chriſt therefore only properly forgiveth, the Apoſtles forgive as his miniſters. 3 And that theſe keyes are diſpenſed in preaching the word, and not only in the diſcipline of the Church; it is evident. Acts 14. 27. a doore of faith is opened by the preaching of the Apoſtles, Matth. 23. 13. The Phariſees by not preaching true doctrine are ſaid to ſhut up the kingdome of heaven. Thus their owne canons teſtifie, epiſt. 1. Clemen. Per ipſum, per verbum Dei, & ſalubre conſilium curetur: He that is troubled with his ſin, and confeſſeth to the miniſter, &c. that by him through the word of God, and holeſome counſell he may be cured. Sins then are cured and healed by the word of God.

Mark. 2. 7.
Act. 14. 27.
Matth. 23. 13.

Secondly, the Apoſtles and they which ſucceed them, doe truly bind and looſe, remit and retaine ſins, but as miniſters, and ſo long as they execute this authority according to Chriſts will: as Peter hath the keyes, but hee is firſt built upon the rocke, Matth. 16. 18. the Apoſtles have power to bind and looſe, Matth. 18. 8. but they muſt doe it in Chriſts name, verſ. 20. otherwiſe, a curſe cauſeleſſe ſhall not come, Prov. 26. 2. And, though men curſe, God will bleſſe, Pſalm. 109. 28. The blind man was caſt out by the Phariſees, but he was received in by Chriſt, John 9. 35. S. Ambroſe ſaith, Dei munus, miniſterium ſacerdotis eſt, &c. Quis tantus eſt, &c. In giving the ſpirit, the gift is Gods, the miniſtery the Prieſts, &c. who is ſo great, as to arrogate to himſelfe the beſtowing of this gift? Lib. 1. de ſpirit. ſanct. cap. 7.

Matth. 16. 18.
Matth. 18. 18.
Prov. 26. 2.
Pſalm. 109. 28.
Iohn 9. 35.

Thirdly, 1 As the word of God is not to bee denied to any, that will receive it; ſo neither is remiſſion of ſins to bee withheld from any by the will of man, that doe deſire it: the word is not to be caſt before ſwine and dogs, Matth. 7. 6. no more is remiſſion of ſins to be granted to the impenitent. 2 If the Miniſter ſhall at his pleaſure deny remiſſion to the penitent, his ſentence bindeth not before God: as Origen well ſaith: Si aliquis non recto judicio, &c. If any man by the erroneous judgement of thoſe which governe the Church be caſt out, if he have not deſerved to be caſt out, is not any thing hurt by this error of judgement, &c. Hom. 14. in Levitic.

Matth. 7. 6.

Fourthly, the breathing which Chriſt uſed, betokened the giving of the holy Ghoſt, which truly and properly doth remit and retaine ſins, as the wind chaſeth away the clouds. This then ſheweth not a judiciall authoritie in men, that are but the miniſters of the ſpirit, but an abſolute power in the ſpirit: as Ambroſe excellently ſaith, Per ſpiritum ſanctum peccata donantur, &c. Sins are forgiven by the holy ſpirit: but men to the remiſſion of ſins doe exhibite their miniſtery: Non jus alicujus poteſtatis exercent: They doe not exerciſe any right of power, &c. they pray, God forgiveth; the ſervice is mans, the munificence is from a ſupreme power; lib. 3. de ſpirit. c. 19.

Argum. 2. As the Prieſts in the law had only authority to diſcerne the leproſie of the people, and therefore Chriſt ſendeth the lepers to the Prieſt, Luk. 17. 14. ſo men muſt reveale the ſpirituall leproſie of ſin to the Prieſt, Rhemiſt. ibid.

Luk. 17. 14.

The Doway ſtudents do further thus enforce this argument: out of that place. Num. 5. 7. they ſhall confeſſe their ſin, and reſtore the principall, where they give this marginall note, particular confeſſion of ſins, and ſatisfaction required by the law of God.

Numb. 5. 7.

Anſw. Firſt the leproſie was not healed by the prieſt, but onely declared to bee healed: ſo ſins are declared to bee forgiven by the Prieſt, not properly forgiven. Secondly, the Prieſt received not knowledge of all diſeaſes, but of this that was contagious: therefore it would not follow hereupon, that all ſins are to bee confeſſed to the Prieſt; but ſuch as are notorious, where publique Confeſſion is by Church diſcipline injoyned: and ſuch confeſſion wee denie not. Thirdly, the argument followeth not from the Prieſts of the law, to the Miniſters of the Goſpell: for the Prieſthood of the law is tranſlated wholly unto Chriſt, who hath all knowledge to diſcerne, and power to heale our ſpirituall diſeaſes.

Fourthly, I will oppoſe to our Doway Romaniſts the judgement of Lyranus, who upon that place ſaith: Lex iſta loquitur in caſu, &c. This law ſpeaketh of ſuch a caſe, wherein a man being ſtriken with remorſe, is willing to make ſatisfaction to his neighbour. This proveth not a generall confeſſion of all ſins, nor yet made neceſſarily to the Prieſt, but of ſuch wrongs, which doe clogge the conſcience, which muſt be confeſſed and ſatisfied for, to the partie wronged: yet Lyranus in another place ſaith directly, upon theſe words, Levit. 16. 21. Aaron ſhall confeſſe (over the goat) all the iniquities of the children of Iſrael: In veteri lege non omnia peccata in particulari explicabant, &c. They did not in the old law confeſſe all their ſins in particular: For that was impoſſible, both for the ſhortneſſe of time, and becauſe the Prieſt knew not all the ſins of the people: but in generall, as we doe in the beginning of Maſſe. Tolet alſo their Cardinall ſaith, That the purpoſe of confeſſing was not neceſſarie in the old law. Inſtruct. ſacerd. de confeſſion.

Act. 19. 18. Argum. 3. Act. 19. 18. Many that beleeved, came and confeſſed, and ſhewed their works: Hence the Jeſuite would inferre the neceſſitie of auricular confeſſion, Lib. 3. de pœnitent. cap. 4. Bellarm.

Anſw. This place ſerveth nothing at all for his purpoſe: Firſt, all that beleeved came not to confeſſe, but ſuch as were pricked in conſcience, with remembrance of ſome eſpeciall ſins, as it followeth, verſ. 19. thy that uſed curious Arts brought their books: but the Papiſts enjoyne auricular confeſſion of neceſſitie to all. 2 It is not ſaid they made particular rehearſall of all their ſins, but generally confeſſed themſelves to be ſinners: as Daniel confeſſeth, cap. 9. 5. We have ſinned and done wickedly, &c. Dan. 9. 5. 3 It was no confeſſion made in the eare, but publike before all the multitude: but auricular confeſſion is made only in the eare of the Prieſt. Fourthly, theſe beleevers came but once, that we reade of, in the beginning of their converſion to confeſſe, and they came willingly without conſtraint: But they exact a yeerely confeſſion of the people, and enforce them to it. They muſt ſeeke better grounds for their eare-confeſſion than this, or elſe they are like to miſſe of it.

Bellarmine replieth, 1 That they confeſſed all their ſins: for when the Scripture ſpeaketh abſolutely of ſins, all muſt be underſtood: as Matth. 9. 2. Thy ſins are forgiven thee: that is, all thy ſins. 2 The Epheſians might confeſſe oftner than this once, though it bee not mentioned; for wee may ſay as well, they were not baptized, becauſe it is not expreſſed. 3 Neither are all with us bound to confeſſe, but they which are touched in conſcience. 4 Neither is it expreſſed, whether they confeſſed privately or publikely. 5 They came willingly to confeſſion, becauſe there was yet no law to enjoyne them. Bellarm. cap. 4. Matth. 9. 2.

Cont. Firſt, where 1, mention is made of forgiveneſſe of ſins, all muſt be underſtood, becauſe there is a neceſſitie, that all be forgiven: but of confeſſing all ſins there is no neceſſitie. 2 And they confeſſed their works, πράξεις, but the Papiſts exact confeſſion of thoughts and words. 3 Neither confeſſed they all their works, but ſuch as were notorious and offenſive, as it followeth verſ. 19. ſuch were the works of them that exerciſed curious arts.

Secondly, 1 There is no queſtion but they were baptized, becauſe it is Chriſts generall ordinance; ſo is not auricular confeſſion. 2 Neither could they confeſſe, as they did, to S. Paul yeerely, becauſe he was not alwayes with them. 3 Neither afterward could the beleevers confeſſe ſuch words, as they did in their infidelity.

Thirdly, it is untrue, that you ſay; for you require confeſſion of all whatſoever, neither doe you give abſolution, but upon ſuch confeſſion: but all that ſin have need of abſolution: therefore all muſt confeſſe.

Fouthly, it is evident, that this confeſſion of their works was publike, as it is expreſſed veſ. 19. They which uſed curious arts, burned their books: In conſpectu omnium, in the ſight of all.

Fifthly, if the Scriptures authorize not any law to enjoyne confeſſion, it is great preſumption for you, to lay ſuch a yoke upon the Lords people.

6 Cajetane their Cardinall thinketh that this place is not to be underſtood of particular and ſacramentall confeſſion, but only of a generall and publike confeſſion, ſuch as they made, that came to Iohn: but Baronius diſſenteth, affirming certainly the contrary: Lorinus their Jeſuite, dare neither encline to the one or the other. Lorinus in Act. 19 18.

2 Cor. 5. 19. Argum. 4. 2 Cor. 5. 19. He hath committed to us the word of reconciliation, now we are embaſſadors for Chriſt, &c. But how can men be reconciled, unleſſe they make their caſe knowne, and confeſſe their ſins? Bellarm. cap. 4. loc. 2.

Anſw. 1. If thoſe Embaſſadors reconciled to themſelves, it were fit confeſſion ſhould bee made to them, but ſeeing they pray to be reconciled to God, it ſufficeth to confeſſe to God. 2 The word of reconciliation is committed unto them: Ergo, by the preaching of the word men are reconciled: but confeſſion of ſins is not requiſite at every preaching of the word.

Iam. 5. 16. Argum. 5. Iam. 5. 16. Confeſſe your ſins one to another, and pray one for another: that is, the Elders and Prieſts ſpoken of verſ. 14. muſt pray for them, and to them they muſt confeſſe: Bellarm. ibid.

Anſw. This place is very direct againſt them. 1 If to confeſſe one to another, bee underſtood of the people and the Prieſt, then muſt the Prieſt confeſſe to the people, as the people doth to him: for ſo the word ἀλλήλων ſignifieth, as 1 Theſſ. 4. 18. Comfort your ſelves one another, &c. 1 Theſſ. 4. 18. 2 The Apoſtle addeth, The prayer of a righteous man availeth much; he ſaith not, the prayer of a righteous Prieſt, but of any righteous: ſo verſ. 19. If any of you hath erred, and ſome man hath converted him, &c. James 5. 19. Hee ſpeaketh not only of the Miniſter, but of any other faithfull man.

1 Iohn 1. 9. Argum. 6. 1 Iohn 1. 9. If we acknowledge our ſins, hee is faithfull and juſt to forgive us our ſins, and to cleanſe us from all unrighteouſneſſe; this is not underſtood of confeſſion made to God. 1 For Gods faithfulneſſe is in keeping his promiſe; but there is no promiſe extant in Scripture, of forgiveneſſe to thoſe, that confeſſe to God, but to thoſe, that confeſſe to the Miniſters, &c. 2 And if it ſufficed to confeſſe to God; men would not care to ſeeke for forgiveneſſe at mans hands, and ſo Chriſt had ſaid in vaine, Whoſe ſins yee remit, &c. Bellarm. c. 4.

Anſwer. Firſt, it is boldly and untruly affirmed, that there is no promiſe, &c. to them that confeſſe to God: there is 1. nothing more evident in Scripture, as 1 King. 8.47. If they ſin againſt thee, &c. and returne and pray, ſaying, Wee have ſinned and done wickedly, then heare thou in heaven, and bee mercifull: here is a direct promiſe of mercy to thoſe that confeſſe to God. 2 Neither is the Miniſtery to bee deſpiſed, but there is great uſe thereof: 1 Both by the preaching of the word, in calling upon the people to repent, and confeſſe their ſins to God: 2 And where the griefe of ſin is ſuch, as the ſoule of the penitent cannot wraſtle againſt it, in this caſe hee is to reſort to the Miniſter. 3 And it is the Miniſters part, where hee ſeeth evident ſignes of repentance, to declare the mercie of God, and looſing of ſins unto ſuch, though not confeſſed unto him: Peter confeſſed not to Chriſt, but onely wept, and was forgiven: the inceſtuous partie confeſſed not to Paul, but by his great ſorrow ſhewed his repentance, yet the Apoſtle forgave him, 2 Cor. 2. 10. 4. Like as then the Leper being firſt cured of Chriſt, was bid to ſhew himſelfe to the Prieſt, Matth. 8.4. according to the law: ſo they, which confeſſing unto God, doe find remiſſion, muſt notwithſtanding by the miniſterie of the word labour to be confirmed therein. 1 King. 8.47. 2 Cor. 2. 10. Matth. 8.4.

Secondly, this place is chiefly to be underſtood of confeſſing unto God. 1 The Apoſtle ſpeaketh generally of all, excluding not himſelfe: but to whom ſhould the Apoſtles confeſſe but unto God. 2 The Apoſtle ſaith, to cleanſe us: but man cannot cleanſe us, this is onely Gods worke. 3 And God onely cleanſeth from all unrighteouſneſſe: for all our ſins cannot bee made manifeſt to men, no, not to our owne conſcience; and if our owne heart condemne us; God is greater than our heart, and knoweth all things. 1 Iohn 3. 20. God is much more able to find out our ſin than our owne conſcience. 1 Iohn 3. 20.

Argum. 7. In the laſt place Bellarmine produceth many teſtimonies out of the Councels and fathers, to prove auricular and particular confeſſion, making them to ſpeake that, which they never knew: the places alleaged, I purpoſe not particularly to anſwer, for theſe reaſons. 1 Becauſe my purpoſe is to deale chiefly with places of Scripture. 2 For that I intending chiefly the good and profit of the unlearned, I would not diſtract them, or hinder them from more profitable knowledge by the curious diſcuſſing of the fathers. 3 This worke would by this meanes have growne to a greater volume, than was fit for every mans uſe. 4 I thought it not needfull to handle at large theſe teſtimonies, writing in our owne language, which the adverſarie, that firſt gave occaſion underſtandeth not. 5 Becauſe other learned men, ſome of this our Church, ſome abroad in other nations, with a godly zeale and good ſucceſſe, have alreadie undertaken the through confutation of all Popiſh allegations: to whom I wiſh both all divine aſſiſtance, and humane encouragement, to proceed in ſo excellent an enterpriſe.

Yet thus much ſhall ſuffice for a generall anſwer at this time: that none of the teſtimonies alleaged, till we come to the yeere 600. and after, when ſuperſtition begane to encreaſe (and the teſtimonies of the times following we much regard not) doe witneſſe for auricular confeſſion: but all of them if a ſurvey be taken of them, doe ſpeake of one of theſe five confeſſions: either 1 of confeſſion to be made to God: as Tertullian; Exomologeſis eſt, qua delictum Domino confitemur: That is confeſſion, whereby we doe confeſſe our ſin unto God, Apologet. cap. 4. Or elſe 2 of publike confeſſion made before the whole Church, for ſome publike ſin; as the ſame Tertullian: Ergo, cùm te ad fratrum genua protendis, Chriſtum exoras: When thou boweſt thy ſelfe to thy brethrens feet, thou entreateſt Chriſt. Thirdly, they ſpeak of a confeſſion, which they made each to other, Beda in 5. Iacob. Quotidiana leviaq; peccata alterutrum coaequalibus confiteamur, &c. Our daily ſins let us confeſſe to our equals, one to another. Fourthly, they commend confeſſion made to the Prieſt, when the conſcience otherwiſe cannot be ſetled: ſo Origen. hom. 2. in Pſal. 37. Sicut ii qui habent intus incluſam eſcam indigeſtam, &c. As they, which have meat undigeſted in the ſtomacke, if they doe vomite, are eaſed; ſo they that ſin, while they conceale it, are in a manner choaked, but vomiting of it up by confeſſion, &c. Fifthly, a generall confeſſion to be made, with reconciliation before the receiving of the Communion, Cyprian maketh mention of: Nec ad communicationem venire quis poſſit: But none might come to the Communion, before he had confeſſed, &c. lib. 3. epiſt. 16. All theſe kindes of confeſſions we acknowledge to have been well knowne to the fathers, neither doe we miſlike them: but none of the ancient writers for 600. yeeres after Chriſt doe witneſſe for auricular confeſſion, and particular enumeration of ſins.

The Proteſtants.

Confeſſion of ſins, ſuch as the Scripture alloweth, wee doe acknowledge: as namely theſe foure kinds: There are private confeſſions, either to God alone, as Daniel confeſſeth, 9. 4. or for the eaſing of our conſcience, to man alſo, as to him whom we have offended, Matth. 5. 24. or to any other faithfull man, the Miniſter or ſome other, that we may be holpen and comforted by our mutuall prayers, Iam. 5. 16. Dan. 9.4. Matth. 5.24. Iam. 5.16.

And herein we thinke and ſay with Biſhop Ridley holy Martyr: Confeſſion to the Miniſter, which is able to inſtruct, correct, comfort, and enforme the weake, wounded, and ignorant conſcience, indeed I ever thought might doe much good in Chriſts congregation, and ſo I aſſure you I thinke even at this day pag. 1728. Epiſtol. ad Weſt.

There are alſo two kindes of publique confeſſion, either of the whole congregation together, Nehem. 9. 3. 2 Cor. 2. 6. Nehe. 9. 3. or of ſome one or more, that make publike confeſſion of their ſin, for the ſatisfying of the congregation, whom they have offended: which belongeth to Eccleſiaſticall diſcipline, 2 Cor. 2. 6. Beſide theſe kindes of confeſſion, it is commendable alſo, which is practized in ſome reformed Churches, that before the receiving of the Sacrament, particular examination ſhould bee had of ſuch as are to communicate, not ſo much to confeſſe ſuch ſins to the Miniſter, as doe grieve their conſcience, and ſo to find eaſe for their griefe; as it is uſed to be done to this day in the reformed Churches of Bohemia. Harm. ſect. 8. c. 5. confeſſ. Bohem. And of Auſpurge, ſect. 8. artic. 3. and of Saxonie, ſect. 14. confeſſ. Saxon. Neither are any admitted to the Communion, except they be firſt heard and abſolved of the paſtor: but chiefly that every one may be particularly examined, tried and made fit concerning their faith, and ſo prepared to come worthily to the Lords table: this uſe Kemnitius thus writeth of, in 2. part. exam. c. 5. de confeſſ. Confeſſionis uſus apud nos ſervatur, &c. The uſe of confeſſion is retained with us, &c. In this private colloquie, the paſtors doe make triall of their auditors, whether they underſtand the doctrine of ſin, of the degrees of ſin, of the wages thereof, and of faith in Chriſt, they are brought to a conſideration of their ſins, and asked if they doe earneſtly repent for the ſame, if they have a purpoſe to amend their life, and whether they do not continue in certaine ſins, &c. Maſter Calvin alſo approoveth this uſe: Lib. 3. inſtitut. cap. 4. ſect. 13. Interim quia ſiſtant ſe oves paſtori, &c. That the ſheep ſhould preſent themſelves to the Paſtor, as often as they receive the Communion, I am ſo farre from reclaming againſt it, that I would have it every where obſerved. And Epiſtol. 302. hee ſheweth, that the like uſe is retained in Geneva. That no man may come to the holy table, before it be knowne to the Miniſter, that hee hath profited in religion in ſome meaſure, and once a yeere the Miniſter in every quarter goeth to every houſe, to make triall both of their life and faith. Such confeſſion, triall, and examination, as theſe Churches have received, I hold very convenient and profitable, and the like to bee deſired and much wiſhed for in our Church. But this particular confeſſion, yea 1 of all ſins, even of them which are 2 ſecret, 3 and upon paine of damnation, 4 and to none but the Prieſt, how unfit ſo ever; is an Antichriſtian yoake.

Pſal. 51. 4. Lib. 10. 3. Argum. 1. It is not neceſſary to make confeſſion at all unto men: the Prophet David confeſſeth only unto God. Againſt thee O Lord only have I ſinned, Pſal. 51. 4. Auguſtine alſo ſaith, Quid mihi cum hominibus ut audiant confeſſiones meas, quaſi ipſi ſanaturi ſint languores meos? What have men to doe to heare my confeſſions, as though they were able to heale my ſores? Confeſſion lib. 10. 3.

Iam. 5. 16. Argum. 2. If a man otherwiſe cannot find eaſe of conſcience, but will open his ſins to men: it is not alwayes neceſſary hee ſhould ſeeke to the Miniſter, though it bee moſt convenient, if hee bee a fit man; any other faithfull godly man may ſerve: for ſo the Apoſtle biddeth us, Acknowledge our faults, not to the Prieſt, but one to another, Iam. 5. 16. Whereupon Auguſtine writeth, Peccata noſtra debemus non ſolum Deo, ſed etiam ſanctis & Deum timentibus confiteri: Wee muſt confeſſe our ſins not onely to God, but to men alſo that feare God: Hee ſaith not, Sacerdotibus, onely to the Prieſts Homil. 12.

Pſal. 19. 12. Argum. 3. Such a particular enumeration of ſins is not neceſſarie, neither is it poſſible: It ſufficeth, where our ſins are kept from our ſight, to ſay with the Prophet, Cleanſe mee from my ſecret ſins, Pſalm. 19. 12. Auguſtine ſaith, Quod habes in corde compunctiones facinorum, tot habe illic punctiones confeſſionum: Looke how many ſins doe pricke thy conſcience, ſo muſt thy confeſſion bee. It is an uncomfortable doctrine to teach men to labour to remember all their ſins, and to make a particular catalogue of them: they have worke enough to bee eaſed of thoſe ſins that lie heavie on the heart.

Bellarmine anſwereth, that if the enumeration of ſins to men bee impoſſible, and uncomfortable, ſo is it in our confeſſion to God, to whom alſo wee are to confeſſe, whatſoever ſins wee know, and remember, and otherwiſe men are not enjoyned to confeſſe to the Prieſt. Bellarmin. lib. 3. cap. 16.

Pſal. 50. 21. Contra. Firſt, the Lord himſelfe doth not exact ſuch a particular enumeration, as the Popiſh law doth: for Chriſt teaching his Diſciples to pray, taught them to ſay thus, Forgive us our treſpaſſes, &c. not willing them to make a particular rehearſall of their ſins; but the Popiſh Prieſts will accept no confeſſion, if it be not particular. Secondly, in making confeſſion to God, the Lord may bring our ſins to remembrance, Pſalm. 50. 21. I will ſet them in order before thee, which the Prieſt cannot doe. Thirdly, there is more comfort in confeſſing to God, becauſe he hath power only to forgive, the other is but as Gods miniſter, and it is more comfortable to goe to the maſter, than to the ſervant: and we may more boldly open our infirmities to God, which we often are aſhamed to ſhew to men.

Argum. 4. Chriſt ſaith, As my father ſent me, ſo ſend I you; and then hee ſaid, receive yee the holy Ghoſt; whoſe ſins yee remit, &c. Here our Saviour Chriſt giveth authority and power to remit ſins, to his Apoſtles, as he himſelfe executed the ſame in earth: But Chriſt forgave ſins without any ſuch particular confeſſion, as to the woman, Luk. 7. that waſhed his feet with her teares: Ergo, remiſſion of ſins may be pronounced without auricular confeſſion, whereas by other ſignes the ſorrow of the heart may be made knowne.

Bellarm. The Apoſtles had not the like power to remit ſins, as Chriſt himſelfe had: for Chriſt was able to juſtifie and forgive ſins without a Sacrament: But the Apoſtles did it by meanes: Bellarm. cap. 18. Neither as yet was the Sacrament of confeſſion inſtituted. cap. 17.

Anſw. 1. The difference betweene Chriſts and his Apoſtles working is this, that Chriſt by his owne power did forgive ſins, the Apoſtles in Chriſts name only, as his Miniſters and inſtruments: But concerning the outward meanes of ſalvation, Chriſt uſed the ſame which his Apoſtles did: he preached the Goſpell, called for faith, and repentance, as his Apoſtles afterward did: and as Chriſt then forgave ſins without a Sacrament, ſo did he by the miniſterie of his Apoſtles: Paul hath the word of reconciliation committed to him, 2 Cor. 5. 19. he reconcileth to God by the preaching of the Goſpell, which was 2 Cor. 5. 19. no Sacrament, Concil. Cabilonenſ. can. 33. Deus ſalutis & ſanitatis author plerunque hanc prebet ſua potentia inviſibili adminiſtratione, plerunque medicorum operatione: God the author of health and ſalvation, often giveth remiſſion of ſins by his inviſible power, often by the miniſterie of the ſpirituall Phytian, &c. Sins are even now forgiven without the miniſtery of man, and without auricular confeſſion, and conſequently without your popiſh Sacrament of Penance: this therefore maketh no difference betweene Chriſts working, and his Apoſtles working.

2 But be it granted that Chriſts power herein was greater than his Apoſtles to forgive ſins without confeſſion: was alſo the power of the Prophets greater than theirs? I thinke they will not ſay ſo: yet Nathan pronounced abſolution of Davids ſins, without particular confeſſion, hee only ſaid in generall, I have ſinned: therefore the Apoſtles did, and ſo the Miniſters of the Goſpell may remit ſins without auricular confeſſion.

3 If your Sacrament of confeſſion were not inſtituted by Chriſt (which is the reaſon that you give, why hee uſed it not) then is there no ſuch Sacrament at all: for Chriſt onely inſtituted Sacraments; the Apoſtles inſtituted none, but delivered to the Church, as they had received from Chriſt: 1 Cor. 11. 23. 1 Cor. 11. 23.

Argum. 5. A notable evidence againſt auricular and private confeſſion wee have out of Sozomen his hiſtorie, lib. 7. c. 16. who thus reporteth, that Nectarius Patriarke of Conſtantinople, by reaſon of an adulterous act committed betweene a Deacon of the Church, and a noble Matron, that came to confeſſe to the Penitentiarie Prieſt, depoſed the ſaid Prieſt, and aboliſhed that kinde of confeſſion, And permitted, that every man ſhould doe according to his owne conſcience in comming to the ſacred myſteries.

Bellarmine anſwereth, that Nectarius. 1 diſcontinued publique, not private confeſſion, becauſe the woman publikely confeſſing her fault, there followed a tumult among the people: 2 and after Nectarius time, private confeſſion was uſed in the Greeke Church: Bellarm. lib. 3. cap. 14. 3 Yea, they themſelves allow private confeſſion. Ibid.

Anſw. Firſt, Nectarius aboliſhed private not publike confeſſion: 1 For the office of the Penitentiary, was to receive their confeſſion ſecretly: Quia grave viſum eſt Epiſcopis in media plebe, velut in theatro, &c. It ſeemed hard to the Biſhops, that in the middeſt of the people, as in a theater, they ſhould confeſſe their ſins: Nicephor. lib. 12. c. 28. Futher, 2 Socrates ſaith, that the woman comming to the Penitentiarie, did particulatim, particularly confeſſe her ſins: lib. 5. cap. 19. 3 The tumult might ariſe not upon her publike confeſſion, but the publike notice afterward.

Secondly, private confeſſion was not after this uſed in the Greeke Church: 1 Chryſoſtome hom. 2. in Pſalm. 50. Si confunderis alicui dicere, &c. If thou be aſhamed to confeſſe to another, confeſſe thy ſins in thine owne ſoule, I ſay not, thou ſhouldeſt confeſſe to thy fellow ſervant, to caſt thee in the teeth, but to God, &c. 2 Decret. p. 2. cauſ. 33. diſt. 1. c. 90. Some doe ſay that wee muſt confeſſe only to God, ut Graci, as the Grecians. Bellarmine ſaith, that theſe words, ut Graci, are like to have been thruſt into the text. Anſw. So hee ſaith, that Sozomen the reporter of this ſtory, telleth many lies. Theſe are but ſillie ſhifts. 3 Thom. Waldenſ. a Popiſh writer granteth, that Nectarius did ſimply abrogate Tom. 2. c. 141. confeſſion.

Thirdly, private confeſſion with examination and triall of every mans faith, wee acknowlege in ſuch manner, as I have before expreſſed, but a particular enumeration of ſins, with a neceſſitie of conſcience, which breedeth ſuperſtition, rather than inſtruction, without any godly conſolation or exhortation at all miniſtred, we refuſe and condemne as Antichriſtian.

We want not here the teſtimonie of antiquitie: Alexander epiſt. 1. Confeſſio non extorqueri debet ſed ſponte potius profiteri: Confeſſion muſt not bee violently extorted, but voluntarily confeſſed: but now in the Popiſh Church every man is bound of neceſſitie to profeſſe.

Concil. Cabilonenſ. can. 33. Et peccata confiteamur Deo, &c. Let us both confeſſe our ſins unto God, and ſay with David, againſt thee have I ſinned, or confeſſed my ſin, and according to the inſtitution of the Apoſtle, let us confeſſe one to another, that we may pray one for another to bee ſaved, &c. As we muſt pray one for another, ſo we muſt confeſſe our ſins one to another: Now the Prieſt only prayeth not for the people, but the people alſo for the Prieſt: Ergo, neither muſt they confeſſe their ſins onely to the Prieſt.

Interrelig. Cæſar. cap. 17. Quæ in mentem non veniunt generali confeſſioni recte includuntur, & nihilominus ea remittuntur, quam ſi ea confitendo enumeraſſes: Thoſe ſins which come not to thy mind, muſt be included in a generall confeſſion, and they ſhall notwithſtanding as fully be remitted as if they were particularly numbred, &c. A particular enumeration therefore of ſins is not neceſſary; as now in the popiſh Church is required.

Wee have ſufficient evidence out of their owne decrees. Decret. part. 2. cauſ. 33. diſt. 1. cap. 1. 2.

Non invenio, quid dixerit Petrus; invenio quod fluerit, &c. I find not what Peter ſaid, I find hee did weep, &c. Lachryma lavent delictum, &c. Let teares waſh away the ſin, which it is a ſhame to confeſſe.

Ibid. c. 34. gloſſ. Antequam ſacerdotibus ora noſtra oſtendamus: Before wee ſhew our face to the Prieſt, that is, confeſſe our ſins, we are cleanſed from the leproſie of ſin. Cap. 37. gloſſ. Sicut circumciſio data eſt Abrahamo: As circumciſion was given to Abraham as a ſigne of juſtice, not as a cauſe of juſtification, ſo confeſſion is offered to the Prieſt, in token of pardon received, not as a cauſe of remiſſion to be obtained.

Magiſt. lib. 4. diſtinct. 17. a. Ore tacente interdum veniam conſequimur: Sometime wee obtaine pardon, the mouth being ſilent, &c. If therefore remiſſion of ſins may be had, where there is no confeſſion at all; and, where confeſſion is uſed, it is a ſigne of remiſſion already had, not a cauſe of remiſſion afterward to be obtained, then is not ſuch confeſſion neceſſary to obtaine remiſſion of ſins, as is by the Papiſts affirmed.

This truth alſo hath the ſeale of the holy Martyrs: Leonard Keyſer of Bavaria burned for denying auricular confeſſion: yet three kinds of confeſſions be granted: the firſt of faith; which is alwaies neceſſarie: the ſecond of charitie; when a man hath offended his neighbour: the third not to be deſpiſed, which is to aske counſell of the ancient Miniſters of the Church, pag. 885.

Iohn Bradford holy Martyr, ſetteth downe theſe reaſons againſt auricular confeſſion: firſt, they make it meritorious. Secondly, they make it of neceſſitie, taking him for no good Chriſtian, that uſeth it not. Thirdly, it requireth an impoſſibilitie, that is, the numbring and telling of all our ſins. Fourthly, it alloweth praying to Saints: Precor ſanctam Mariam, you muſt ſay, or the Prieſt for you. Fifthly, it is injurious to the libertie of the Goſpell, &c. pag. 1653.

In Pſal. 44.

1 The ancient uſe of the Greeke Fathers was to confeſſe their ſins unto God: as Baſil ſaith: Non ut multis manifeſtus fiam, ore tantum fateor, ſed corde ipſo, clauſis oculis tibi ſoli reſpicienti arcana, mecum ipſe lugens oſtendo gemitus meos: I do not confeſſe only with my mouth to be made manifeſt to many, but with my heart, mine eyes ſhut to thee only, ſeeing ſecrets, mourning by my ſelfe, doe I ſhew my gronings, &c. See Chryſoſtome before alleaged: the Grecians at this day uſe a particular confeſſion, but they hold it not neceſſarie: as Ieremie their Patriarke ſaith: Thoſe ſins, which a man leaveth unconfeſſed, either by forgetfulnes, or becauſe he is aſhamed to utter them, wee beſeech the mercifull God to pardon them, &c. The Moſcovites ſay, that confeſſion belongeth unto Lords, and that it is ſufficient for them to beleeve in Jeſus Chriſt.

4 Beatus Rhenanus ſaith of private confeſſion, Nuſquam eam praceptam legimus: Wee find it no where commanded: and he affirmeth Tertullian, de clancularia iſta admiſſorum confeſſione, nihil locutum, &c. to have ſaid nothing of the ſecret confeſſion of ſins committed: he further produceth the ſentence of Beda to this effect, that as not they which had every diſeaſe, but only the lepers were ſent to the Prieſt, ſo now in the new teſtament, they which are infected with hereſie, ſuperſtition, or any grievous crime, neceſſe eſt veniant and eccleſiam, muſt needs come unto the Church to bee confeſſed: cetera vero vitia tanquam valetudines, per ſemetipſum Deus ſanat in conſcientia, &c. but other vices as common infirmities of the body, the Lord alone healeth in the conſcience, &c. Hee maketh mention alſo of one Geilerius, a grave Divine of Strausburge, who being acquainted with many, that were troubled in conſcience, about this point of particular confeſſion, and ſpecially a Carthuſian, that was ſo perplexed in minde about it, that he was ready to make away himſelfe, ſet foorth a booke of that argument for the comfort of ſuch as were troubled in minde about confeſſion, and affirmed, that it was impoſſible for any to confeſſe according to their rules.

Summ. qu. 20. artic.

Maldonate a Jeſuite ſaith, that confeſſion in the Church of long time was, publice facta, made publikely.

An appendix of other circumſtances of Auricular confeſſion.

The Papiſts.

1 THis order and cuſtome of Confeſſion, they hold to be a divine ordinance, no humane tradition, Concil. Trid. ſeſſ. 14. can. 6. 8. 59. Error.

Argum. 1. The antiquitie of confeſſion ſheweth it to bee a divine ordinance, ſeeing it hath been alway uſed in the Church, even from the beginning, Bellarmin. lib. 3. 12.

Anſw. Firſt, it is untrue, that Auricular confeſſion hath been of ancient time uſed in the Church: In Chryſoſtomes time it was not: who ſaith, I require thee not, that thou ſhouldeſt confeſſe thy ſinnes to thy fellow ſervant: in Pſal. 30. Homil. 1. Your owne gloſſe ſaith, This inſtitution of penance began rather of ſome tradition of the univerſall Church, than of any authority of the old or new Teſtament: De pœnitent. diſtinct. 5. in principio. Eraſmus ſaith, apparet tempore Hieronimi inſtitutam non fuiſſe: It appeareth, that in the time of Hierome, this ſecret confeſſion of ſins was not ordained, &c. But herein our Divines not adviſedly conſidering, what the old Doctors doe ſay, are deceived: that which they ſay of generall and open confeſſion, they wreſt by and by to this ſecret and privie kinde of confeſſion. Eraſm. in ſchol. in epitaphium Fabiolæ. Secondly, it is apparant, that there was no publike conſtitution of Auricular confeſſion before the Laterane Councell, anno 1215. held by Innocentius 3. ſo that from thence it ſeemeth to take beginning.

Argum. 2. Auricular confeſſion ſeemeth ſo hard and difficult a thing, that it is like the people would never have endured it, if it had not been by ſome divine authority eſtabliſhed. And againe, ſuch is the utilitie and profit that ariſeth thereby, that God muſt needs bee the author thereof: Bellarm. lib. 3. cap. 12.

The commodities that confeſſion bringeth, he rehearſeth to bee theſe: Firſt, Gods mercie appeareth, not in condemning upon confeſſion (as the Judges of this world doe) but in forgiving: his juſtice, in that firſt men are humbled by confeſſion. Secondly, the Paſtors themſelves are benefited, in knowing by this meanes the diſeaſes of their ſheep, that they may miniſter the remedies the better, and apply the words againſt ſuch ſins. Thirdly, the Common-wealth is profited, when as by this meanes men are reconciled, things are reſtored, &c. which things by the earthly Courts cannot bee amended. Fourthly, the parties themſelves doe find mercie for ſins paſt, and ſtrength to reſiſt the like afterward. Bellar. ibid.

Anſw. Auricular confeſſion indeed is a grievous and hard yoke, which becauſe the people have borne, it followeth not, it ſhould be of Gods inſtitution: It was 1 an hard thing, that the idolatrous Iſraelites ſhould ſacrifice their children to their Idols; that Baals Prieſts ſhould launce their fleſh with knives. The Phariſies 2 alſo did lay heavy burthens and grievous to bee borne upon the people, Matth. 23. 3. yet none of all theſe were of God. Many things beſide were hard in poperie: as that Math. 23. 3. the Pope ſhould 3 tread upon Emperours necks, and make them his vaſſals and ſlaves, that hee ſhould with his taxes, annates, Peter-pence, rob and pill the people, all theſe were hard yokes: to the which the people were made ſubject, not wittingly, nor by the working of any divine power; but as S. Paul prophecied, God ſent them ſtrong deluſions to beleeve lies, 2 Theſſal. 2. 11. they were beſotted with a ſuperſtitious feare, and ſo became ſlaves to this yoke of confeſſion, and other obſervances: as upon the 2 Theſſ. 2. 11. like ſuperſtitious feare, the Indian Paganes had auricular confeſſion in uſe, as alſo to doe penance for their ſins, in enduring to be whipped of yong men for the expiation of their ſins: as Acoſta the Jeſuite witneſſeth, lib. 6. de Indorum ſalut. cap. 12. And 4 againe, in that the Jeſuite ſaith, it is an hard yoke, he hath made an argument againſt himſelfe, for Chriſt ſaith, my yoke is eaſie: therefore this yoke being hard, is none of Chriſts.

2 Concerning the fruit and utility, that commeth by auricular confeſſion, you ſhall ſee what it is. Concil. Lateranenſ. part. 50. ca. 21. Significaſti nobis quendam Presbyterum cum alterius conjuge diabolico inſtinctu in eccleſia frequenter dormiſſe: You ſignified to us that a certaine Prieſt of a deviliſh motion did often lie with another mans wife in the Church. Here we ſee adulterie is one fruit of ſuch confeſſion. Further ſaith Robert Smith holy Martyr, it hath been a bewrayer of Kings ſecrets, and the ſecrets of other mens conſciences: and it hath been uſed as a meane to pick-mens purſes: as he reporteth a ſtorie of his own knowledge, how a Gentleman his Maſter, confeſſed to a Prieſt, was bound by the Prieſt to forgive a great ſumme of money to one Maſter Greſham, whereof the Prieſt had a good ſhare, and ſo robbed his wife and children: and how afterward a great part of that debt by the gentlemans brother, ſome two or three hundred pounds was recovered: Fox pag. 1692. Here bee other fruits of auricular confeſſion, treaſon, couſenage, robberie: And therefore it was well ſaid of one Richard Boſtocke (who was perſecuted for it) that auricular confeſſion had killed more ſoules, than all the billes, clubbes, and halters have done, ſithence King Henry was King of England, pag. 1205. col. 1.

3 As for thoſe particular commodities rehearſed, they ariſe not of auricular confeſſion. Firſt, Gods mercie is more ſeene in forgivenes without confeſſion made to men, when as wee confeſſe only to God, Pſal. 32. 5. I confeſſed my wickednes to the Lord, and thou forgaveſt me, &c. His juſtice alſo, in Pſal. 32. 5.

that hee forgiveth not, but where men are firſt humbled by true ſorrow and contrition: as Peter wept bitterly before he found mercie, and yet confeſſed not.

Secondly, it is not any way profitable to the Paſtor to know mens particular faults, a generall confeſſion, with ſome rehearſall of the manifeſt and greateſt ſins ſufficeth for the knowledge of the Paſtor: neither ſhould the Miniſter be ſo undiſcreet, as to bring mens ſecret infirmities into the pulpit: this maketh nothing for auricular confeſſion.

Thirdly, I ſhewed before, that this auricular confeſſion was the occaſion of adulteries, treaſons, revealing of ſecrets, of couſenage, and ſuch like: therefore the Common-wealth was hindred thereby, not benefited any thing at all.

Fourthly, the parties confeſſing, did neither find true remiſſion for their ſins paſt, (being taught rather by their owne ſatisfactory works to merit their forgivenes, than to depend upon Gods mercie:) neither were they armed againſt ſin afterwards, but rather emboldned to commit the like; ſeeing by confeſſion in the eares of the Prieſt, and by procuring his favour, they might yeerely bee cleered from their offences.

Fifthly, all theſe aforeſaid benefits the Church enjoyed in the Apoſtles time: Gods mercy and juſtice appeared in forgivenes of ſins: the paſtors and teachers tooke knowledge of the diſeaſes of their flocke; many notorious ſinners were corrected and amended; the penitent perſons found comfort and ſtrength againſt ſin; yet was there then no auricular confeſſion heard of, nor many yeeres after.

Sixthly, for the profit and utilitie that commeth by auricular confeſſion, their owne Canons witneſſe: Cauſ. 30. qu. 1. c. 10. Non debet Epiſcopus aut Presbyter commiſceri, &c. The Biſhop or Presbyter muſt not company with the women that come to confeſſe: Such tricks as theſe, were very common, when popiſh confeſſion was uſed. Cauſ. 33. diſt. 6. c. 2. Deponatur, &c. Let him be depoſed, that revealeth the ſins of the penitent perſon: This was another of the fruits, to reveale the ſecrets of them which confeſſed.

The Proteſtants.

THey are never able to ſhew that it had any divine inſtitution: but it was a meere device and invention of men. Firſt, wee read that Nectarius a good Biſhop of Conſtantinople, did abrogate this cuſtome of confeſſion, upon this occaſion which had before time been uſed in that Church: for it was found out that a certaine woman of the citie, under this pretence of confeſſion, had unlawfull company with a Deacon in the Church: whereupon the good man aboliſhed that cuſtome, ſeeing more harme than good to come by it. And this act of his was approved by that famous preacher Chryſoſtome, who ſucceeded him in that See: but if it had been the ordinance of God, it ought not for ſome abuſe to have been aboliſhed.

Beza Antith. pap. cap. 7.

Bellarmine anſwereth: Firſt, that Sozomen the reporter of this ſtory, Multa eſſe mentitum, hath forged many things therein. Secondly, hee denieth, that Nectarius the author of this act, was, Vir ſanctitate, & eruditione clarus: a man famous for his holineſſe and learning, as Calvin ſpeaketh of him. But theſe are but ſillie ſhifts: to blame the author and the reporter: hee anſwereth therefore in the third place, that Nectarius onely aboliſhed publike confeſſion, becauſe the woman publiquely acknowledging her adultery, cauſed a tumult and uprore among the people. Bellarmine cap. 14.

Nicephor. lib. 12. cap. 28.

Anſwer. It appeareth rather that Nectarius aboliſhed private confeſſion, than publike. 1 Hee did remove the Prieſt from his office, that was appointed to take the confeſſions: which Prieſt was elected from the reſt, Probata vita, taciturnus & prudens: Such an one as was of an honeſt life, and could keep counſell. But what need hee keep counſell in publike confeſſions, made in the hearing of all? Bellarmine anſwereth: that ſome ſins hee heard publikely, ſome privately, which required ſecrecrie. Anſwer: But Nectarius abrogavit Presbyterium pœnitentiarium, did abrogate the whole office of the penitentiary Prieſt, as the Jeſuite confeſſeth, ſo that hee had no power, no not to heare private confeſſions. 2 Publike confeſſion could not be any cauſe of the womans adultery, but was a meanes rather to reſtraine it, and therefore Nectarius ſhould not have done well, to have removed that which was a bridle to ſin; neither would Chryſoſtome his ſucceſſor have conſented thereto: but private confeſſion hath given very fit opportunity to the committing of uncleannes, as wee heard before out of the Laterane Councell: this therefore was abrogate, not the other. 3 Publike confeſſion remained a long time after Nectarius dayes in the Church: as Auguſtine reporteth of one Victorinus a Rhetorician, who being converted to the faith, fidem ex edito loco profeſſus eſt, did profeſſe the Chriſtian faith ſolemnly out of an high place in the Church: lib. 8. confeſſion. c. 2. Againe, afterward in the time of Leo. 1. Biſhop of Rome, anno. 462. this cuſtome of publik confeſſion was in uſe: which although he ſomewhat reſtraine, leſt ſome for feare, à pœnitentiæ remediis arcerentur, ſhould be driven from uſing the remedy of penance: yet hee concludeth thus: Plenitudo tamen fidei videtur laudabilis, quæ propter Dei timorem apud homines erubeſcere non veretur. Yet the fulneſſe of faith is commendable, which for the feare of God, refuſeth not to be aſhamed among men: hee commendeth publike confeſſion. It was not then by Nectarius abrogated, but continued long after in uſe in the Church: It was * therefore private confeſſion which hee remooved, whereunto Chryſoſtome afterward agreed: Ergo, it was no divine conſtitution. The more full anſwer to this, ſee before. queſt. 6. argum. proteſtant. 5.

* Here it is objected by a certaine caviller, that private confeſſion was in uſe of ancient time, becauſe Nectarius took it away: I anſwer ſome kinde of private confeſſion might be uſed, as of the greater ſins, and yet the particular confeſſion of all, which they call auricular, was not required: of what kinde ſoever it was, it was abrogated as inconvenient. See further. Retec. p. 74.

But concerning thoſe two anſwerers of Bellarmine, with whom concurreth alſo Baronius: who take exception to the report of the author, giving him the plaine lie, and further ſay, that Nectarius abrogated publike not private confeſſion; Suarez the Jeſuite doth reject them both as unſufficient: and thinketh that Chryſoſtome, Nectarius ſucceſſor, ſpake againſt not publike but private confeſſion.

Suarez in Thom. part. 3. tom. 4. diſp. 17. ſect. 2.

Argum. 2. Our Saviour Chriſt neither by precept nor example, ordained auricular confeſſion, nor yet the Apoſtles afterward required of the people any ſuch particular enumeration of their ſins: Ergo, it is no divine ordinance.

Bellarmine anſwereth, that Chriſt as yet (that is, while hee lived) had not inſtituted the Sacrament of confeſſion: inſinuating thereby, that afterward hee did: their Maſter ſaith, Multa facta ſunt, quæ ſcripta non ſunt: Many things were done, that are not written: Lib. 4. diſtinct. 17. f. Bellarm. lib. 3. cap. 17.

Contra. Firſt, if Chriſt inſtituted not the Sacrament of confeſſion, then is it no Sacrament at all: for 1 he only had power to inſtitute Sacraments. And 2 it is evident that Chriſt, while hee lived upon the earth, ordained no ſuch thing: as it may appeare by Peters repentance, who wept for his ſins, but confeſſed not: and 3 their Maſter granteth, that Nondum facta erat inſtitutio confeſſionis: That confeſſion was not yet inſtituted: Lib. 4. diſtinct. 17. f. 4. If they ſay that Chriſt inſtituted it afterward, Ioh. 20. when he breathed upon his Apoſtles, &c. Firſt, that is but a renewing of the power of binding and looſing, and opening and ſhutting, given before, Matth. 16. 19. 18. 18. For to remit and retaine ſins, is the ſame that binding and looſing is. Againe, Chriſt ſaid, Conſummatum eſt. That all was finiſhed upon the croſſe, that was neceſſary for the ſalvation of man: Therefore confeſſion, if it bee neceſſary, as they affirme, was inſtituted before: how elſe was all finiſhed:

Ioh. 20. 23.
Matth. 18. 18.

Secondly, though many particular acts of the Apoſtles were done, that are not written; yet nothing concerning the doctrine of the Church, is unwritten: and I thinke they are not ſo abſurd, as to build Sacraments upon unwritten traditions: they muſt find expreſſe Scripture for Sacraments, which they are never able to doe for confeſſion.

Laſtly, what the Apoſtolike inſtitution is for confeſſion, their owne Canons teſtifie: Diſtinct. 1. de pœnitent. c. 90. Apoſtoli inſtitutio nobis ſequenda eſt, ut confiteamur alterutrùm peccata noſtra: The Apoſtles inſtitution muſt be followed, to confeſſe our ſins one to another.

1 If auricular confeſſion had been of divine inſtitution, Nectarius Patriarke of Conſtantinople, and Chryſoſtome, (as is ſhewed before) would never have abrogated it.

2 Neither would Auguſtine thus have written: Quid mihi cum hominibus, ut audiant, confeſſiones meas, quaſi ipſi ſanaturi ſint omnes languores meos? &c. What have I to doe with men, that they ſhould heare my confeſſions, as though they could heale all my infirmities? &c. Et unde ſciunt, cum à meipſo de meipſo audium? &c. And how know they, when they heare of me concerning my ſelfe, whether I ſay the truth, ſeeing God only is the ſearcher of the heart? &c.

Regul. contract. qu. 229. Baſil ſaith: Quemadmodum corporis morbos, &c. As the diſeaſes of the body men reveale not to every one, but to thoſe which know how to heale them, Ita & peccatorum revelatio iis fieri debet, qui mederi noverint: So the revealing of ſins muſt be made to thoſe, which can tell how to heale them.

Auguſtine in the place laſt before recited, thus further ſaith: What have I to doe with men to heare my confeſſions? addeth further: Curioſum genus ad cognoſcendam vitam alienam, & deſidioſum ad corrigendam ſuam: A curious ſort of men to enquire of anothers life, and ſlouthfull to correct their owne: Quid à me quærunt audire qui ſim, cum à te audire nolint qui ſint? Why would they heare of me who I am, refuſing to heare of thee who they are? I will ſhew my ſelfe to them, qui mihi congratulari cupiunt, cum audierunt, quantum ad te accedam munere tuo, which will rejoyce with me when they heare how neere I come unto thee, by thy gift: & orare pro me, quando audierunt, quantum retarder pondere meo, and pray with me, when they heare how much I am hindred by mine owne heavineſſe. Hence it is evident, that a man is not of neceſſitie bound to confeſſe unto his owne pariſh prieſt, being ignorant, and unfit to adviſe or comfort a penitent ſinner.

That the acts of penance, as contrition, confeſſion, are meritorious; is both contrary to the Scripture: for after David had confeſſed his ſin in the preſence of the Prophet Nathan, 2 Sam. 12. 13. yet hee prayeth unto God in this manner, Have mercie upon me according to the multitude of thy mercies: he aſcribeth all to Gods mercie, nothing to the merit of his confeſſion.

Saint Ambroſe witneſſeth the ſame, in 1 ad Epheſ. Homines ſic benedicit Deus, &c. God ſo bleſſeth men, that he beſtoweth the gift of grace upon them, not according to their merits, but according to his mercie.

The Gloſſe upon their own Canons, diſtinct 1. de pœnitent. c. 37. thus teſtifieth, Fit confeſſio ad oſtenſionem pœnitentiæ, non ad impetrationem veniæ: Confeſſion is made to ſhew repentance, not to obtaine pardon.

This truth alſo is ſealed: Richard Colins troubled for ſaying, That in all things wherein he offended God, hee ſhould onely ſhrive himſelfe to God; and in which things he offended man, hee ſhould ſhrive himſelfe to man, Fox pag. 832. Ergo, not neceſſary alwaies to be confeſſed to a Prieſt. The ſeventh queſtion, of ſatisfaction.

THis queſtion containeth theſe parts: Firſt, whether the ſin being forgiven, there remaine any puniſhment.

2 Whether the temporall puniſhment of this life may be redeemed by good works.

3 Whether the wrath of God may be ſatisfied for ſin, and the puniſhment due unto the ſame.

4 Whether one man may ſatisfie for another: of theſe now in their order.

The firſt part, whether the puniſhment remaine, the ſin being once pardoned.

Argum. The Lord forgave unto David the ſin of adulterie and murder, which he had committed, yet he puniſhed him in the death of his childe, 2 Sam.,12, 13, 14. *Bellarm. lib.*4.cap. 2.

2 Sam. 12. 13, 14.

Anſwer. That Croſſe was laid upon David, not as a puniſhment of his ſin, but as a fatherly correction or chaſtiſement, to exerciſe him and make him more carefull for the time following: as Auguſtine ſaith, writing upon the ſame example: Subſecutus eſt illius comminationis effectus, ut pietas hominis in illa humilitate exerceretur, atque probaretur; The effect of the threatning immediatly followed, that Davids godlineſſe might thereby be tried and proved: He ſaith not, that David might thereby be puniſhed.

De peccat. merit. & remiſſ. lib. 2. 34.

Bellarmine anſwereth: Firſt, but the Scripture ſaith, that Davids ſin was the cauſe of the death of his childe, becauſe by this deed thou haſt cauſed the enemies of God to blaſpheme, the childe that is borne, ſhall die, 2 Sam. 12. 14.

2 Sam. 12. 14.

Anſwer. This place rather maketh againſt the Jeſuite: for David is not here puniſhed in his childe for the deed which he had done, but becauſe in the deed doing he had given offence to the enemies of God, both to ſtop their mouths, that they ſhould not accuſe Gods juſtice in ſparing David; and to make him more carefull afterward, the Lord ſent this Croſſe: as Chryſoſtome ſaith, Hom. de pœnitent. Propter hoc imponit nobis pœnam non de peccatis ſumens ſupplicium, ſed ad futura nos corrigens: For this cauſe God laieth puniſhment upon us, not to revenge our ſins, but to correct us for afterward.

Bellarm. 2. Death is the puniſhment of originall ſin, and yet although that ſin be forgiven us, death notwithſtanding followeth: Ergo, the puniſhment remaineth after the ſin remitted.

Anſw. 1. Though death came in firſt by ſin, yet is it not now unto the children of God ſo much a puniſhment of ſin, as an end of their miſerie, and an entrance to a better life: ſin indeed is a ſting of death, but our ſins being forgiven us in Chriſt, death hath loſt his ſting, 1 Cor. 15. 55. So death remaineth, but without a ſting, it is no more a puniſhment of ſin to the children of God: ſo then, as the guilt of ſin is taken away, but not the blot or ſtaine thereof, ſo the ſting of death, which is the guilt of ſin, is gone, though corruption and mortalitie remaine. Secondly, the cogitation alſo and remembrance of death, is a notable meane to withdraw our minds from earthly things, and to prepare us for the Lord: for this cauſe alſo death remaineth, ſo it is not unto us a puniſhment of ſin.

1 Cor. 15. 55.

Thus Auguſtine excellently ſaith: Mortem corporis Deus homini, &c. God inflicted upon man the death of the bodie for ſin: but after the remiſſion of ſin, propter exercendam juſtitiam; he hath not taken it away for the exerciſe of juſtice, *de peccator. remiſſion. lib.*2.*c.*34.

Argum. 2. 1 The Iſraelites were puniſhed for the golden Calfe, and yet God at Moſes requeſt had pardoned their ſin, Exod. 32. 2 Likewiſe when the people murmured, *Numb.*14. God at the prayer of Moſes forgave their ſin, *verſ.*20. I have forgiven it according to thy requeſt: yet they all for this ſin died in the wilderneſſe. 3 So Moſes and Aaron becauſe they did not glorifie God at the waters of ſtrife, receive this puniſhment, that they ſhould not enter into the land of promiſe, Numb. 20. 12. and yet no man will ſay, but that Moſes and Aaron after this were reconciled to God. 4 Amongſt the Corinthians divers were puniſhed with death, for unworthie receiving the Sacrament, yet were they reconciled to God: therefore the puniſhment of ſin oftentimes remaineth, even after the ſin is forgiven, Bellarm. lib. 4. de pœnitent. c. 2.

Anſwer. Firſt, the two firſt examples have the ſame anſwer: 1 That in ſome of them who periſhed through unbeleefe, neither their ſin was remitted, nor yet the puniſhment: but the temporall plagues were beginnings and fore-runners of eternall: as Auguſtine ſaith, Vindicta Dei hic incipiet, & ardebit uſque ad extremam damnationem; The Lords revenge beginneth here, and burneth to extreme condemnation. Your owne Canons affirme the ſame: Moſes pro peccatis populi, &c. Moſes entreated for the ſins of the people, but yet obtained no pardon, decr. par. 1. diſt. 50. c. 27. 2 Againe, God at Moſes requeſt did only pardon that great puniſhment, which he had determined in the utter overthrow, and deſtruction of that nation, Numb. 14. 12. I will ſmite them, and make thee a greater nation

Pſal. 106. 23. than they. And thus the Pſalmiſt expoundeth this place, Pſal. 106.23. Therefore he minded to deſtroy them, had not Moſes his choſen ſtood in the breach, to turne away his wrath, leſt he ſhould deſtroy them. 3 And thoſe judgements were not ſo much puniſhments to that nation, as examples unto others, both to acknowledge Gods juſtice and to glorifie him: Numb. 14. verſ. 20. I have forgiven it according to thy requeſt, notwithſtanding all the earth ſhall be filled with the glorie of the Lord: as alſo to take

1 Cor. 10. 6. heed to offend in the like, 1 Cor. 10.6. Theſe are enſamples to us, to the intent that we ſhould not luſt after the evill things, as they luſted.

Secondly, concerning the examples of Moſes and Aaron, and of the Corinthians, I doe anſwer, that theſe were not puniſhments of their ſins (for there is no proportion betweene temporall puniſhment, and the greatneſſe of ſin) but as Auguſtine well ſaith, as he is alſo cited in the Decrees, diſtinct. 3. de pœnitent. c. 7. Vel ad demonſtrationem debitæ miſeriæ, vel ad emendationem labilis vitæ, vel ad exercitationem neceſſariæ patientiæ, &c. Either to demonſtrate the deſerved miſerie, or for the amendment of our uncertaine life, or the exerciſing of neceſſarie patience, the puniſhment abideth a man temporally, whom the ſin condemneth not eternally. So God doth chaſtiſe his children temporally, either to make them more heedfull, and to draw them more effectually to repentance, or to exerciſe their patience, or for the good example of others: but that their corrections are properly puniſhments for ſins, it is not to be thought; neither doe theſe examples prove it. Thus Moſes was corrected, not puniſhed, both that others might take warning by his example, and that he himſelfe ſhould bee more carefull not to offend in the like, and that he might thereby be the better prepared, being deprived of the earthly Canaan, to ſeeke for the heavenly.

2 Sam. 24. 16. Our Popiſh Divines of Doway doe here alſo helpe out with their arguments. 1 They give this

2 King. 23. 26. marginall note upon that place, 2 Sam. 24. 16. where David entreated the Lord to ſtay his hand: Temporall puniſhment inflicted, after the guilt of ſin was remitted. 2 Againe, they further note thus, 2 King. 23. 26. albeit Manaſſes repented, and was reſtored to Gods favour, —yet his ſins were temporally puniſhed both in himſelfe and his poſteritie, &c.

Contra. I anſwer here, as to the like objections before, that theſe afflictions came not for the revenge or puniſhment of ſin, but for manifeſtation of Gods juſtice, the example of others, and their Annot. in 6. c. Johan. v. 19. pag. 480. owne admonition: as they themſelves doe thus obſerve in a marginall annotation: Or elſe they ſuffer temporall affliction for their warning to abhorre ſin.

Mich.* 7. 19. He will caſt all their ſins into the bottome of the ſea, Pſal. 32.1. Their ſin is covered: but the ſins of the righteous being once forgiven, are not covered, no more remembred, caſt into the bottome of the ſea, if they be againe revived by puniſhments: Ergo, where ſin is once freely forgiven before God, there remaineth no more puniſhment, arg. Calvin.

Bellarmine anſwereth, that God is ſaid, not to remember ſin, to cover it, to blot it out, though he doth temporally puniſh for it, becauſe he doth not remember it unto everlaſting puniſhment.

Contra. Firſt, the Lord ſaith, I will remember their iniquities, not for ever, but no more: If then our ſins ſhould be remembred againe, how can it be true, they are remembred no more? to remember no more, and not to remember for ever, are two divers things. Secondly, Ezech. 18. 22. it followeth, but in his righteouſneſſe, that he hath done, ſhall he live: The righteous after his ſins are forgiven, and no more mentioned, liveth in his righteouſneſſe: but to be puniſhed for ſin, is not to live in his righteouſneſſe: for ſin yet liveth, and is revived by the puniſhment: Ergo, the righteous after forgiveneſſe obtained, is not puniſhed for ſin. Thirdly, Iſay 44. 22. As a miſt or cloud is chaſed of the ſunne, ſo are our ſins: but the miſt is wholly diſperſed and diſſolved that nothing of it remaineth: Ergo, ſo are our ſins. Fourthly, like as that which caſt into the ſea, and deſcendeth to the bottome, riſeth not Exod. 15. 5. Jerem. 51. 63. againe; as the Egyptians are ſaid to have ſunke downe to the bottome like a ſtone, Exod. 15. 5. And Ierem. 51. 63. The Prophet uſeth this ſigne to ſignifie the finall deſtruction of Babel; hee bindeth a ſtone to the booke of the curſes againſt Babel, and throweth it into the midſt of Euphrates, ſaying, Thus ſhall Babel be drowned, and ſhall not riſe, &c. Wherefore our ſins in this ſenſe being caſt into the bottome of the ſea, when they are freely forgiven us in Chriſt, ſhall riſe no more to judge us either in this world or the next.

Coloſſ. 1. 21, 22. Argum. 3. The Prophet Iſay ſaith, The chaſtiſement of our peace was upon him, 53. 5. And he hath reconciled us in the bodie of his fleſh, to make us unblameable, &c. Coloſſ. 1. 21, 22. Therefore Chriſt hath borne all puniſhment due to our ſin, not onely eternall, but temporall. He hath borne our infirmities, Iſay 53. 5. Galath. 3. 13. Iſay 53. 5. even all of them, and hath delivered us from the curſe of the law, Gal. 3. 13. Ergo, from temporall puniſhments, which are part of our infirmities, and belonging to the curſe.

Bellarmine anſwereth, that Chriſt hath immediatly ſatisfied for our ſin and eternall death: but for temporall puniſhment mediatly onely, giving us power by his death to ſatisfie for them, Lib. 4. de pœnitent. cap.* 15. reſponſ. ad argum. 4.

Anſw. Chriſt hath immediately in his owne bodie ſatisfied for the whole puniſhment of ſin. 1 Chriſt hath immediatly taken away the curſe of the law, becauſe he was made a curſe for us: but temporall puniſhments for ſin are part of the curſe, which if they remaine ſtill, then are we yet under the curſe. 2 Chriſt alſo hath borne our infirmities; but if hee give power onely to us to beare, then wee beare them, and not he. 3 Againe, if any puniſhment for ſin yet remaine, then are we not yet at perfect peace with God, becauſe his wrath is not yet fully ſatisfied: But Chriſt hath upon the Croſſe ſet us at peace with God, Coloſſ.* 1. 20. *Ergo. Coloſſ. 1. 20.

The afflictions of this life are the loving corrections of God to admoniſh us, not plagues to puniſh us: as Auguſtine ſaith well, Tota miſeria generis humani dolor -- medicinalis, non ſententia pœnalis: The miſerie of man is but a medicinall griefe, not a ſentence of puniſhment: in Pſal. 138. And againe, Homines cum iſta patiuntur, &c. Men when they ſuffer theſe things, either as in Iob their merits are examined; or as in Herod, their ſins puniſhed, epiſt. ad Hieron. Not the righteous then as Iob; but the wicked as Herod are puniſhed for their ſins.

Let us ſee what further evidence wee have even from the lawes of men. Firſt; the Civill law thus teſtifieth, Cod. lib.* 4. tit. 14. leg. 6. Servus liber factus non tenetur, &c. A ſervant being made free, cannot be challenged for any thing committed againſt his maſter before his freedome, Cod. lib. 9. tit. 51. leg. 1. Antonin. Reſtitutio à principe conceſſa, &c. Reſtitution granted by the Prince, in integrum reſtituit, doth reſtore a man fully and wholly, Leg. 4. *Ex indulgentia reverſus ab exilio, &c. He that by the Princes pardon is returned from exile, is not bound to his former creditors. If then the making free of a ſervant, doth exempt him from all former dangers and penalties; if the indulgence of the Prince doth reſtore a man fully, and freeth him from all debts and creditors, if this equitie bee in the law of man; how much more ſhall not the true libertie, which we have in Chriſt, and the moſt bountifull indulgence of God, together with our reſtitution in Chriſt, diſcharge us from all debts and puniſhments whatſoever belonging to our ſins?

The Canon law is a witneſſe alſo for us, Diſtinct.* 3. de pœnitent. c. 83. *Subſecutus illius comminationis effectum, &c. That which God threatned to David, came to paſſe after his ſin was forgiven him, Ut pietas hominis in illa humilitate exerceretur, &c. That the mans godlineſſe might by humilitie be exerciſed and tried, &c. It remained not then as a puniſhment, but as a triall and advertiſement.

The Maſter of the Sentences to the ſame purpoſe, Lib.* 4. diſt. 4. f. Soluto reatu peccati pœna temporalis manet, &c. The guilt of ſin being diſſolved, the temporall puniſhment remaineth, that that life ſhould more ſtudiouſly bee ſought for, which is free from all paine. And yet more evidently: Diſtinct. 15. a. Quinque modis flagella contingunt, &c. The Lord layeth his ſcourges five manner of wayes, that by patience their (merit) or vertue may be encreaſed, as in Iob: Ad cuſtodiam virtutum, To be a ſafegard to their vertue, that pride tempt them not, as in Paul; to correct their ſins, as Marie became leprous, Moſes ſiſter; or to the glorie of God, as in the man borne blind, Iohn 9. or for the judgement of puniſhment, as in Herod. None of all theſe reaſons wee refuſe: ſo then corrections or chaſtiſements the righteous taſte of, judgements and puniſhments for ſin are proper to the wicked.

1 Further Chryſoſtome ſaith: I doe teſtifie, that if any man depart from his former ſins, and vow from his heart unto God, Se nunquam ad illa rediturum, nihil aliud Deus requiret ad ſatisfactionem ulteriorem, That he will never returne to them, that God will require no other ſatisfaction, &c. There then remaineth no puniſhment to be ſatisfied for after the ſin is remitted. De beat. Philogon.

2 So alſo Auguſtine: Chriſtus ſuſcipiendo pœnam, & non ſuſcipiendo culpam, & culpam delevit & pœnam; Chriſt in taking upon him the puniſhment and not the fault, hath blotted out both the puniſhment and fault. Serm. 13. de verbis Domini, &c.

3 Latter confeſſ. of Helvetia, c. 15. To juſtifie in the Apoſtles diſputation, doth ſignifie to remit ſins, to abſolve from the fault, and the puniſhment thereof, to receive into favour, but in remiſſion of ſins we are juſtified, therefore the fault is alſo pardoned. Harm. ſect. 9. pag. 242.

4 Their owne Divine Canus ſaith: Non eſt plene remiſſa culpa, quamdiu peccator eſt reus ſolvendæ pœna; The fault is not fully remitted, as long as the ſinner is guiltie of paying the puniſhment. Loc. Theolog. lib 12. ſect. ex quo.

The ſecond part, whether the temporall puniſhment of this life may bee redeemed by good works.

The Papiſts.

That wee may redeeme and buy out as is were the puniſhments due to ſin in this life by our good works, ſaving whereas God hath certainly determined to puniſh, as in Davids caſe it is their 63. Error.

their generall ſentence. They hold alſo that the temporall paines of Purgatorie may be in like manner redeemed.

Jerem. 18.7. Argum. 1. God purpoſed to deſtroy the Citie of Ninivie: but that, being pleaſed with their faſting, ſackcloth and prayers, he ſaved the Citie, Ierem. 18.7. I will ſpeake ſuddenly againſt a nation to deſtroy it, &c. but if the nation repent of their wickedneſſe, I alſo will repent of the plague. Wherefore temporall puniſhments may be by good works redeemed, Bellarm. lib. 4. c. 3.

Rom. 2.4. Pſal. 51.1. Anſw. Firſt, the argument followeth not: God ſheweth mercie upon our repentance: Ergo, repentance redeemeth the puniſhment due, &c. for if it be of mercie that God ſpareth us, as the Apoſtle ſaith, The bountifulneſſe of God calleth thee to repentance, Rom. 2.4. then is it not of our works. Secondly, prayer and faſting are but effectuall ſignes of repentance, they are not meritorious cauſes of forgiveneſſe. David faſted and prayed, yet he ſueth unto Gods mercie, Pſal. 51.1. According to the multitude of thy mercies doe away mine offences.

Dan. 4.24. Argum. 2. Daniel ſaid to Nabuchadnezzar the King, Redeeme thy ſins by righteouſneſſe, and thine iniquities by ſhewing mercie to the poore, chap. 4.24. Bellarm. cap. 3.

Gen. 27.40. Anſw. The text is rather thus to be read: 1 Breake off thy ſins by righteouſneſſe: that is, leave off to do evill: as it is by Iunius tranſlated more agreeable to the Hebrew: ſo is the word פרח parach, interpreted, Geneſ. 27.40. Thou ſhalt breake his yoke from thy necke: 2 For if redemption be here properly underſtood, it would follow that men may redeeme not onely the puniſhment of their ſins, but the ſins themſelves: for Daniel ſaith, redeeme thy ſins, not the puniſhment of thy ſins: and ſo take Chriſts office out of his hand. 3 By true and faithfull repentance, and other good works proceeding of faith, we may avoid Gods heavie judgement due to our ſins, yet not for the merit or ſatisfaction of any worke, but through the merits onely of Chriſt. See this argument anſwered more fully before, queſt. 5. part. 6.

The Proteſtants.

CONcerning the paines in Purgatorie to be redeemed in this life, we have proved before ſufficiently, that this Purgatorie place is but a Popiſh dreame, and therefore no ſuch paines there to be feared: And for the chaſtiſements of this life, where God ſeeth they are neceſſarie, hee inflicteth them upon his children; when as he ſeeth other cauſe, he ſpareth us for his mercie, his juſtice is not bought out with the price of our works.

Jerem. 31.34. Rom. 3.24. Argum. 1. As our ſins are forgiven, ſo is the puniſhment due unto them: but our ſins are forgiven us freely in Chriſt, Ierem. 31.34. Ergo, ſo is the puniſhment.

S. Paul alſo ſaith, We are freely juſtified by grace, Rom. 3.24. by the forgiveneſſe of our ſins, through the redemption that is in Chriſt: Ergo, not by the redemption of our owne works, argum. Melancth. Calvin. lib. 3. inſtitut. c. 4. ſect. 25.

Bellarmine anſwereth, that it is of grace, that our works doe redeeme the temporall puniſhment, becauſe they have this grace and power in Chriſts death: ſo then Chriſt doth freely forgive our ſin, and the everlaſting puniſhment due unto it, he doth freely forgive alſo the temporall puniſhment, in giving us grace freely to ſatisfie for it, cap. 13. reſponſ. ad 5. argum. c. 14. reſp. ad lib. 4. de pœnitent.

Rom. 3.25. Rom. 11.6. Contra. This is an impious diſtinction, and contrarie to the Scriptures. 1 The Apoſtle ſaith freely, through the redemption of Chriſt, verſ. 24. Ergo, not by the redemption of our works. 2 Againe, the puniſhment of ſin is taken away in our reconciliation unto God: for God puniſheth the wicked and his enemies, not thoſe which are reconciled: But our reconciliation is by faith in Chriſts bloud, Rom. 3.25. Ergo, not by works. 3 Further, the forgiveneſſe of our ſins (ſaith the Apoſtle) through the patience of God: but Gods patience is ſeene in the forbearing the puniſhment of ſin: So then Gods righteouſneſſe in forgiving our ſins, and his patience in forbearing or doing away the puniſhment, are here by S. Paul aſcribed to faith in Chriſts bloud: Ergo, ſatisfaction is no more made for the puniſhment, than for the ſin it ſelfe. 4 Laſtly, grace and works cannot ſatisfie or worke together, Rom. 11.6. If it be worke, it is no more of grace; if of grace, it is no more of worke: How then is it poſſible that wee ſhould ſatisfie both by grace and worke together?

Matth. 3.8.10. Argum. 2. That purgatorie paines are not redeemed by any works of this life, that place ſheweth, Matth. 3.8. Bring forth worthie fruits of repentance: By theſe works, teſtifying repentance, men doe flye from the wrath to come, verſ. 7. and the tree that bringeth not forth theſe fruits, is caſt into the fire, verſ. 10. This is the everlaſting wrath of God and fire, which we doe not ſatisfie for, but prevent by theſe fruits: ſo theſe are works to be performed by the living, they pertaine not to the dead: they prevent everlaſting deſtruction through faith in Chriſt, for the which, they themſelves confeſſe, our works doe not ſatisfie.

Job 9.3. Againe, there muſt be ſome proportion betweene the price of redemption, and the thing redeemed: but ſo is there not betweene our good works, and the puniſhments due to our ſins: for as Iob ſaith, We cannot anſwer him one thing of a thouſand, Iob. 9.3. Bernard alſo ſaith, Quis amplius grunniet dicens, nimium laboramus, nimium jejunamus, cum nec milleſima, immo nec minima parti debitorum ſuorum valet reſpondere? ſerm. de quadrup. debit. Who will now murmure and ſay, we labour too much, faſt too much, when as wee are not able to anſwer the thouſanth part, no not the leaſt part of our debt? But how can we redeeme our puniſhments by our works, unleſſe our works were in waight and number anſwerable unto them? Ergo, we cannot redeeme them by any ſuch meanes.

Further, 1. Heſychius ſaith, Chriſtus nobis propitiatio factus, ergo in ipſo omnino pœnitentia ſacrificium miniſtratur & agitur, &c. Chriſt is our propitiation, therefore in him altogether the ſacrifice of repentance is adminiſtred and performed, &c. There is nothing then remaining to be bought out by our ſelves: and S. Chryſoſtome, Pœnitentia tua non valet tantam abſtergere malorum luem: Thy repentance is not able to wipe away ſuch a company of evils.

Levit. 7. lib. 2.

De beato Philogon.

2 S. Auguſtine ſaith, Omnium piorum, &c. in hujus vita infirmitate gementium ſpes una eſt, quod advocatum habemus: This is the onely hope of all that doe grone under the infirmitie of this life, that wee have an Advocate, &c. our owne works cannot then eaſe our groanings, or deliver us from puniſhment.

Cont. 2 epiſt. Pelag. lib. 3. c. 5.

3 Confeſſ. of Wittemberg, c. 15. As touching prayer, faſting, giving of almes, and ſuch like works, we thinke that they are diligently to be performed, yet that they have a farre other uſe, than that they ſhould by their merits either ſatisfie God for our ſins, or apply unto us the merit of Chriſt.

Harm. ſect. 2. p. 240.

4 S. Gregorie ſaith: Ipſa noſtra perfectio culpa non caret, niſi hoc ſeverus judex — miſericorditer penſet: Even our perfection is not without fault, unleſſe the ſevere Judge doe weigh it in mercie, &c. if then in our beſt works we have need of mercie, there is no merit to buy out or ſatisfie.

Moral. lib. 5. c. 8.

The third part, whether a man may truly ſatisfie the wrath of God; for the puniſhment due unto ſinne.

The Papiſts.

IT is not a ſufficient ſatisfaction, to beleeve that Chriſt hath aboundantly ſatisfied for us; neither yet is it enough to amend and correct our lives: but God alſo muſt be ſatisfied for our ſins, by the puniſhment and chaſtiſement of our ſelves, as by affliction laid upon us by God, or penance enjoyned by the Prieſt, or by prayer, faſting, almes-deeds, which we doe take up our ſelves, Concil. Trid. ſeſſ. 14. can. 13. Rhemiſt. Matth. 11. 21.

64. Error.

Bellarmine alſo affirmeth, that Gods grace aſſiſting us, wee may ſatisfie God for the temporall puniſhment of ſin, ex propriis, of our owne, ad æqualitatem, to an equalitie, ex condigno, condignly, or worthily, cap. 8.

Argum. 1. Matth. 3. 8. Bring forth fruits worthie repentance: he preacheth ſatisfaction by doing worthie fruits of penance, as faſting, prayer, almes, and the like, Rhemiſt. Bellar. c. 8.

Matth. 3. 8.

Anſwer. 1. Fruits worthie of repentance, are no ſatisfaction for ſin, or the puniſhment thereof, but arguments of true repentance, effects, not any part thereof. 2 Againe, in this place mention is made of everlaſting deſtruction, verſ. 10. Every tree that bringeth not forth good fruit, is hewen downe and caſt into the fire: wherefore if by worthie works, they underſtand ſatisfactorie works, then will it follow that ſatisfaction may bee made not onely for temporall, but eternall puniſhment. 3 Further, worthie works, are expounded to bee good works, verſ. 10. And Bellarmine expoundeth thus, To doe works worthie repentance, is ſo to worke, as it beſeemeth him that is penitent: Bellarm. ibid. This therefore is nothing elſe, but newneſſe and holineſſe of life, whereby wee doe ſhew our effectuall repentance. 4 This place proveth neither equalitie, nor condignitie, nor a propertie of our owne in ſatisfaction; which all three are againſt the Scripture: there is no equalitie, we cannot anſwer God one of a thouſand, Iob 9. 3. No propertie, 1 Cor. 4. 7. If thou haſt received it, why rejoyceſt thou, as though thou haddeſt not received it? No condignitie, Luke 17. 10. When we have done all that is commanded, we are but unprofitable ſervants. 5 Neither will this evaſion ſerve, that by grace our works ſatisfie: for grace and works are ſo divers, that they cannot concurre together: Rom. 11. 6. If it be of works, it is no more of grace, &c. grace taketh away works; and works take away grace, if they be joyned as working cauſes together.

Job 9. 3.
1 Cor. 4. 7.
Luk. 17. 10.
Rom. 11. 6.

Argum. 2. Judge your ſelves, that you be not judged, 1 Cor. 11. 31. We muſt puniſh our ſelves according to the waight of the ſins paſt, Rhemiſt. And againe, ſaith the Apoſtle, What great puniſhment hath it wrought in you? 2 Cor. 7. 11. This is nothing elſe but the ſatisfactorie puniſhment for our ſins, Bellarm. lib. 4. cap. 8.

1 Cor. 11. 31.

2 Cor. 7. 11.

Anſwer. The Apoſtle meaneth nothing elſe, but an heartie and earneſt ſorrow for our ſins, whereby we doe judge and condemne, and as it were puniſh our ſelves, yet we are farre from making any ſatisfaction hereby for our ſins: as Auguſtine ſaith, Omnis iniquitas puniatur neceſſe eſt, aut à pœnitente homine, aut vindicante Deo: -- vis non puniat? puni tu: -- antequam ipſe intendat ut puniat, tu confitendo præveni & puni; All ſin muſt needs bee puniſhed either of man himſelfe repenting, or God revenging: if thou wilt not have him puniſh, puniſh thou: before he intend to puniſh, prevent him by thy confeſſion, and puniſh thy ſelfe, &c. So then this puniſhment of our ſelves is nothing elſe, but true repentance and confeſſion of our ſins.

In Pſal. 58.

2 Againe, this puniſhment, of which the Apoſtle ſpeaketh, was wrought in them, it was not enjoyned them by the Prieſt. 3 Beſide, this repentance, whereof this puniſhment was an effect, was to ſalvation, verſ. 10. which was the eſcaping of everlaſting death: but for everlaſting puniſhment they themſelves dare preſcribe no ſatisfaction but in Chriſt. 4 The Apoſtle ſheweth the end and uſe of this puniſhment, which was to cleare themſelves, and to worke in them a zeale and deſire : not to ſatisfie.

Matth. 20. 8. 2 Timoth. 4. 8. Argum. 3. If good works may merit or deſerve eternall life, much more may they avert and turne away temporall puniſhment : but the firſt is true, Matth. 20. 8. the Kingdome of God is called wages or reward : 2 Timoth.4.8. it is called the crowne of juſtice, which God the juſt Iudge ſhall give. So it is a reward juſtly given to mens deſerts : Ergo, good works may much more redeeme temporall puniſhment, Bellarm. cap. 8. lib. 4. de pœnitent.

Rom. 6. 23. Anſw. Wee utterly denie, that heaven can be merited with good works. Firſt, S. Paul having firſt ſaid, the wages of ſinne is death, addeth further, the gift of God is eternall life, Rom. 6. 23. he calleth it a gift, and not wages.

Secondly, it is called in the parable, a reward, or wages ; but not in reſpect of the workmans labour, but of Gods covenant and promiſe. For 1 if it were by deſert, then he that laboured twelve houres, had deſerved more, than he that wrought but one. As S. Ambroſe ſaith, de vocat. Gentium, lib. 1. 3. Hora undecima intromiſſos in vineam, &c. They which were ſent into the vineyard at the eleventh houre, the divine indulgence made equall to the labourers of the whole day, not paying the wages of their labour, but powring out the riches of his goodneſſe, &c. that they which endured much labour, and received no more than the laſt, ſhould underſtand, Se demum gratia non operis accepiſſe mercedem : that they received a gift of grace, not a reward of the worke. 2 And the Lord ſaith, verſ. 15. Is it not lawfull for mee to doe as I will with mine owne ? but if they had deſerved it, it had beene their owne. Rom. 4. 4. 3 S. Paul alſo directly affirmeth, that wages is not counted of favour, but by debt : let them ſay then if they dare, that to obtaine heaven is not of Gods favour.

Thirdly, 1. It is a crowne of juſtice, but not of ours, but of the juſtice of faith in Chriſt : as the Apo- 2 Timoth. 4. 7. ſtle ſaith, verſ. 7. I have kept the faith. 2 And it is Gods juſtice to give it in reſpect of his promiſe, not of our deſert, as Auguſtine ſaith, Ex miſericordia promiſſam, ſed jam ex juſtitia ſolvendam : Promiſed of mercie, but now in juſtice to be payed : ſerm. 2. de verb. Apoſtoli.

Argum. 4. Bellarmine bringeth in a great troupe of ancient writers to ſpeake for ſatisfaction, but they are not ſo pregnant to ſerve his turne : our generall anſwer to them all is this :

Firſt, that the moſt of his witneſſes are partiall, and not old enough to be credited, ſuch as lived in the latter ages of the Church, as Rabanus, Rodulphus, Damianus, with other.

Secondly, many writings paſſe under the names of Cyprian, Ambroſe, Hierome, Auguſtine, which were not theirs : as there goeth under Cyprians name, a booke De inventionis capitis Baptiſta, &c. Of the invention of Iohn Baptiſts head : In which treatiſe mention is made of Athanaſius, and Theophilus of Alexandria, and Pipinus, that were long after Cyprians time. The like exception may be made againſt ſome of the reſt.

Thirdly, the authentike fathers ſpeake of three ſatisfactions : firſt, of ſatisfaction made unto men, as unto the whole Church, or to any other that are offended : and in this ſenſe ſpeaketh Cyprian, Epiſtol. 3. ad Cornelium, ſpeaking of Schiſmaticks, Si cum precibus & ſatisfactionibus veniant, audiantur, &c. If they come with entreating and ſatisfactions, let them be heard : Si minas & maledicta ingerunt : If they threaten or curſe, let them be refuſed : the ſatisfaction is to be made to them, whom they threaten, but they threaten not God, but men : in this ſenſe alſo, the old tranſlation readeth, Act. 24. 10. 1 Pet. 3. 18. Act. 24. 10. That Paul ſatisfied, that is, anſwered for himſelfe : and 1 Pet. 3. 18. Be readie to ſatisfie every man, that asketh a reaſon, &c. this ſatisfaction then is made unto men.

2 Cor. 7. 11. Secondly, there is a ſatisfaction made unto a mans owne conſcience, as 2 Cor. 7. 11. What clearing of your ſelves, defence, or ſatisfaction, (as Eraſmus readeth, and the old interpreter in other places tranſlateth the word ἀπολογίαν,) hath it wrought : ſo Ambroſe ad virgin, lapſam, c. 8. cited by Bellarm. Grande, grandem ſatisfactionem : a great ſinne, requireth great ſatisfaction, that is, great ſorrow, to ſatisfie and ſettle the conſcience.

Thirdly, they ſpeake of ſatisfying God, but either in hyperbolicall ſpeech, commending thereby the neceſſitie of repentance, whereby God is, as it were, ſatisfied, the better to ſtirre up men thereunto : or elſe, they underſtand a ſatisfaction, not of Gods juſtice, but of Gods commandement and will, in obeying his voyce, by comming to repentance, which God in mercie accepteth of : ſo Tertullian ſaith, Habes cui ſatisfacias, & quidem volenti : You have one, who is willing to be ſatisfied : lib. de pœnitent.

Numb. 5. 7. Our Doway diſputers doe here thus put in their verdite. 1 Upon that place, Numb. 5. 7. They ſhall confeſſe their ſinne, and reſtore the principall, and the fifth part : They thus obſerve : that the partie which had offended was bound to make reſtitution, and for further ſatisfaction to God, they muſt offer ſacrifice, &c.

Numb. 29. 7. 2 Likewiſe Numb. 29. 7. The tenth day of the moneth, you ſhall afflict your ſoules : whereupon they give this marginall note : for the remiſſion of ſins, the penitents did cooperate by penall works of faſting and abſtinence, &c.

Contra. 1. Satisfaction by reſtitution to be made to men, we hold neceſſarie unto true repentance : ſatisfaction to God cannot be made by any but Chriſt : of whoſe all-ſufficient ſacrifice, the legall ſacrifices were types and figures : wherein the faithfull ſhewed their obedience, in ſatisfying the will and commandement of God : but it was not the ſacrificers or offerers act, that appeaſed the wrath of God: their ſacrificing ſheweth the contrarie, for therein they declared their faith, in the onely ſatisfactorie ſacrifice of Chriſt, ſhadowed forth and repreſented by thoſe ſacrifices.

2 Faſting and prayer ſerveth to humble the ſoule, which is required, not as a cauſe of remiſſion, which is freely granted in Chriſt, but as a meanes, way or condition, which is by the penitent to bee performed, and of God in Chriſt graciouſly accepted: and they, in ſaying, that theſe things cooperate to the remiſſion of ſinnes, doe manifeſtly contradict the Apoſtle, who ſaith: We are juſtified freely by his grace, through the redemption that is in Chriſt Ieſus. Rom. 3. 24.

The Proteſtants.

THat ſatisfaction ought to bee made unto men, either by reſtitution, as Zacheus reſtored that which he had wrongfully gotten; or by reconciling our ſelves to thoſe, whom we have offended, as Matth. 5. 24. we doe willingly grant; but that the wrath of God may be appeaſed and ſatisfied for our ſins, or the puniſhment due unto the ſame by any worke of ours, it is a great blaſphemie, and cleane contrarie to the courſe of Scripture. Matth. 5. 24.

Argum. 1. That it is ſufficient to returne unto God by true repentance and amendment of life, without any ſatisfaction, either for our ſin, or the puniſhment of ſin: the Prophet Ezechiel ſheweth, where ſpeaking of the converſion of a wicked man, hee ſaith, His iniquities ſhall no more bee mentioned, or laid to his charge, chap. 18. 22. But if after the ſin remitted, there ſhould remaine ſome puniſhment behind, his ſins ſhould ſtill be remembred and mentioned: there is therefore no ſatisfaction for the puniſhment of ſin, becauſe none remaineth. Ezech. 18. 22.

Bellarmine anſwereth, God remembreth no more their ſins, in that he doth not puniſh them by eternall death, cap. 15. reſponſ. ad argum. 1.

Anſw. When the righteous ſuffer temporall chaſtiſements, hath God their ſins then in remembrance, or hath he not? If he have, then the Prophet ſhould ſpeake untruly, who ſaith, Their iniquities are not mentioned: if he have not, it commeth to our ſaying, that God doth chaſtiſe his children without reſpect had to their ſins, or remembrance thereof. I ſuppoſe this Dilemma will put the Jeſuite to ſome buſineſſe before it be well anſwered.

2 Againe, verſ. 20. the Prophet ſaith, The righteouſneſſe of the righteous ſhall be upon him, and the wickedneſſe of the wicked ſhall be upon him; but now if the righteous be puniſhed for his ſin paſt, the wickedneſſe ſhall be upon the righteous man, which is contrarie to the ſaying of the Prophet.

3 Further, Ezech. 33. 12. Impietas impii non nocebit ei; The wickedneſſe of the wicked ſhall not hurt him, in that day he turneth from his wickedneſſe: but if he be puniſhed for his wickedneſſe, after he bee returned, then doth his wickedneſſe hurt him. Bellarmine anſwereth as before, that his wickedneſſe doth not hurt him, or hinder him from everlaſting life, lib. 4. c. 11. Cont. 1. Chaſtiſements and corrections, which God laieth upon his children, to make them more carefull and circumſpect, are profitable, and not hurtfull at all, as the Prophet David ſaith, Pſalme 119. verſ. 71. It is good for me, that I have beene afflicted: But puniſhments and judgements for ſin, how are they not hurtfull, and a wound unto the ſoule? 2 So then, as the righteouſneſſe of the righteous ſhall not deliver him in the day of his tranſgreſſion; ſo the wickedneſſe of the wicked ſhall not hurt him, verſ. 12. but the former righteouſneſſe ſhall not deliver a man, no not from temporall judgements: Ergo, the former wickedneſſe of a man ſhall not hurt him, but by his converſion he ſhall be delivered from temporall puniſhments. 3 Further, verſ. 17. The way of the Lord is equall, the way of man unequall: man many times puniſheth, where he forgiveth; but Gods way is not like unto mans: wherefore God puniſheth not after forgiveneſſe. See a further anſwer to Bellarmines exception before, in the ſecond argument of the firſt part of this Queſtion. Ezech. 33. 12. Pſal. 119. 71.

Argum. 2. Our Saviour Chriſt required no ſatisfaction to be made unto God, for her ſins that was accuſed of adulterie; but ſaith onely to her, Goe, ſinne no more, Ioh. 8. 11. Ergo, no ſatisfaction for ſinne is required by the Scripture, argum. Lutheri. Joh. 8. 11.

Bellarmine anſwereth: 1 That Chriſt doth not abſolve her from her ſinne, but onely from the puniſhment, which was to be ſtoned to death. 2 Or he might ſee ſo great contrition in her, that it was a ſufficient ſatisfaction; as we read of Mary Magdalene. 3 And Chriſt might by his authoritie at once pardon the fault and the puniſhment, but Miniſters muſt keepe themſelves to the law, &c. Bellarm. cap. 11. reſp. ad 2. argum.

Contra. Firſt, that Chriſt did pardon her ſin, it 1 appeareth, in that he ſaith, Goe, ſinne no more: for though ſhee ſinned no more, if this were not pardoned, it was ſufficient to condemne her before God. 2 As for the outward puniſhment of death, Chriſt doth not deale in it, it belonging to worldly governours: he refuſed to be Judge of an inheritance, Luke 12. 14. which is leſſe than to be Judge of life and death. Luke 12. 14.

Secondly, 1 It is like there was not ſuch an extraordinarie contrition in this woman, being immediatly before deprehended in adulterie. 2 And if there had beene ſuch a perfect change, which cannot be without a full purpoſe of amendment; why doth our Saviour ſay unto her, Goe, ſinne no more? Maries teares did not ſatisfie for her ſin, ſhee was ſaved by her faith: her teares declared her love, Luke 7. 47. 50. Luke 7. 47. 50.

Thirdly, though Chriſt had all power in himſelfe, and was above his law, yet he came to fulfill all righteouſneſſe, Matth. 3. 15. and as he ſent the Leper being cleanſed to the Prieſt, to offer according to Matth. 3. 15.

the Law, Matth. 8. ſo healing the ſpirituall leproſie of this woman, he would not have omitted the law of ſatisfaction, being as neceſſarie in this ſpirituall caſe (if any ſuch thing were required) as the reſorting of the Leper to the Prieſt.

Iſay 43.25. Argum. 3. Iſay 43.25. I am he that putteth away thine iniquities for mine owne ſake. Likewiſe 53. verſ. 4. He hath borne our infirmities, and carried our ſorrowes: the chaſtiſement of our peace was upon him, and with his ſtripes are we healed. God of his free mercie doth forgive our ſin: Chriſt alſo hath fully ſatisfied for us: Ergo, there is no ſatisfaction in us: we are made whole by his ſtripes, and not our owne.

Likewiſe the Apoſtle ſaith, that Chriſt is the propitiation for our ſins, 1 *Ioh.*2.2. Behold the Lambe of God, that taketh away the ſins of the world, Iohn 1.29. Chriſt his owne ſelfe bare our ſins in his bodie
1 Pet. 2.24. on the tree, 1 Pet. 2.24. Ergo, Chriſts death fully and wholly redeemeth us, there need no other ſatiſfaction.

Bellarm. First, we grant, that Chriſts death is ſufficient to redeeme all the ſins of the world, but Chriſts death profiteth not, unleſſe it bee applied by faith, the Sacraments, and other applicatory meanes and inſtruments, among the which ſatisfaction is one, for the expiation of temporall puniſhment. Secondly, it is true, that by Chriſts merit we are onely juſtified and reconciled, yet this letteth not, but that we may ſatisfie alſo by the vertue of Chriſts death for temporall puniſhment, Bellarmine cap. 14.

Contra. Firſt, there 1 is no other meanes appointed for the application of the fruits of Chriſts death, but faith, *Rom.*3.26. *He is a juſtifier of him, that is, of the faith of Ieſus: verſ.*22. *The righteouſneſſe of God by the faith of Ieſus: verſ.*25. To be a reconciliation through faith in his bloud: If through faith we are reconciled, juſtified, we have righteouſneſſe; all other meanes of application are unneceſſarie and ſuperfluous. 2 Againe, no works of ours can applie Chriſts death, no, not good works,
Epheſ. 2. 8.9. *Epheſ.*2. 8,9. *Ye are ſaved by grace through faith, not of works, yea of good works. verſ.*10. Which God hath ordained. 3 That which applieth Chriſts death, *applieth his righteouſneſſe for remiſſion of ſins, Rom.*3.25. but ſatisfaction applieth not Chriſts death for remiſſion of ſins, but onely to remove the puniſhment, as they ſay: Ergo, it applieth it not at all.

Secondly, 1 If wee bee reconciled and juſtified by Chriſts death, then are wee at peace with God,
Rom. 5. 1. Rom. 5. 1. but God doth not puniſh thoſe for their ſins, with whom he is at peace. 2 Againe, Rom.
Rom. 8.33. 8.33. God with Chriſt hath given us all things beſide: Ergo, not remiſſion of ſin onely, but of the puniſhment alſo. 3 Verſ. 33. Who ſhall accuſe the choſen of God, it is God that juſtifieth: Ergo, ſin is not laid to the charge of them that are juſtified, and ſo conſequently, they are not for the ſame judged or puniſhed, ſeeing they are not for the ſame accuſed.

*Argum.*4. If men ſhould ſatisfie by their owne works, both Chriſts honour is 1 empaired, ſeeing the whole worke is not left to him; our conſcience 2 cannot be quieted, depending upon our owne ſatisfaction. 3 And beſide it is impoſſible, ſeeing that man ſinneth every day, and every houre, and how can hee ſatisfie for ſins paſt, continually multiplying new? argum. Calvin. lib. 3. Inſtit. c. 4. *ſect.*27.

Bellarmine anſwereth: 1 Chriſts honour is more encreaſed, in that he himſelfe doth not onely ſatisfie for our ſins, but giveth power to his members in ſome ſort to ſatisfie likewiſe. 2 The conſcience may be ſecure and at peace being aſſured of the remiſſion of ſins, though ſome temporall puniſhment remaine. 3 One act of contrition even in a moment of time may ſatisfie for many mortall ſins, how much more one houre, one day of contrition, &c. Bellarm. cap. 14.

Contra. Firſt, he may as well ſay, it had beene for Chriſts honour, to have taken up to him upon the croſſe ſome one of his members, and to have given him power by his death to ſatisfie: but the Scripture ſaith contrarie, Iſay 48.11. *I will not give my glorie to another: Pſal.*115.1. Not unto us, but unto thy Name give the praiſe. Secondly, the Prophet ſaith, *There is no reſt in my bones becauſe of thine anger, and of my ſin, and I roare for the griefe of my heart, Pſal.*38.3. 8. As long as he was chaſtiſed for his ſin, he could find no reſt, neither in bodie, nor ſoule: how then can the conſcience be at quiet, being under the puniſhment of ſin? Thirdly, it 1 ſeemeth, you thinke it an eaſie matter to ſatisfie for ſin, being not aſhamed to ſay, that it may be done in a moment: yee know not what true repentance or true contrition is: it worketh in us, 1 care, 2 cleering of our ſelves, 3 indignation, 4 feare, 5 deſire, 6 zeale, 7 puniſhment, 2 *Cor.*7.11. Can all theſe be wrought in a moment? 2 And ſeeing that continually a righteous man falleth, even ſeven times a day, and riſeth againe, by repentance, *Prov.*24.16. he hath enough to doe ſtill to wreſtle againſt preſent ſins: and being alwayes in tranſgreſſion, how can he ſatisfie God for his tranſgreſſion? for if thou ſtreightly markeſt iniquities, ſaith the Pſalme, quis ſuſtinebit? who is able to ſuſtaine it? Pſal. 130. 3. Therefore man being compaſſed alwaies with ſin, cannot ſuſtaine Gods wrath, much leſſe ſatisfie or appeaſe it.

Argum. 5. The Prophet Iſay ſaith, *chap.*1.17,18. Ceaſe to doe evill, learne to doe well, &c. Though your ſins be as crimſin, I will make them white as ſnow. Here is no ſatisfaction required. Likewiſe, Ieremie 50. verſ. 20. In thoſe dayes the iniquitie of Iacob ſhall be ſought for, and there ſhall none be found, Ezech. 36.22. I doe not this for your ſakes, O houſe of Iſrael, but for mine owne holy name ſake, &c. The people did not ſatisfie God for their temporall deliverance out of captivitie, but it proceeded of Gods mercie, arg. Calvin.

Bellarm. Firſt, the Prophet Iſay promiſeth the perfect remiſſion of ſin to thoſe that did cleanſe and waſh themſelves by contrition, repentance, and other good deeds, which are their ſatisfaction: this place rather maketh for ſatisfaction, than againſt it. Secondly, the Prophet Ezechiel ſpeaketh there of the grace of the new Teſtament, which is not aſcribed to the merits of the Iſraelites: and if it bee underſtood of their temporall deliverance, we grant that the temporall puniſhments of the next world is alwayes redeemed by ſatisfaction, but not the temporall puniſhment of this life: this maketh not therefore againſt ſatisfaction, Bellarm. cap. 15. reſp. ad arg. 3. & 6.

Contra. Firſt, by making of their ſins as white as ſnow or wooll, is underſtood the perfect remiſſion of ſin: and the condition required before, is to ceaſe to doe evill, to learne to doe well, to waſh them, &c. If theſe be ſatisfactorie works, and goe before remiſſion, then will it follow, that not the puniſhment onely, but the ſin it ſelfe is by theſe works redeemed: if they come after, what puniſhment can remaine to be ſatisfied for, ſeeing there is no redneſſe, or bloudineſſe remaining, (whereby the puniſhment of ſin is ſignified) but all is as white as ſnow?

Secondly, 1 It is evident, that the Prophet ſpeaketh directly of their temporall deliverance, verſ. 24. I will take you from among the heathen, though under this temporall benefit is included alſo the promiſe of ſpirituall grace. 2 Neither is the queſtion, whether the temporall puniſhment of this life bee alwayes redeemed, but whether, when it is removed, it be by ſatisfactorie works redeemed. This place evidently ſheweth, that this deliverance of the Iſraelites (though they endured ſeventie yeeres captivitie, with much affliction, which were as like to ſatisfie, as any painfull works that can be ſuffered) is not attributed to their merits, but to the bountifull mercie of God. 3 And if ſatisfaction may bee made for Purgatorie penance, much more ſhould it be availeable againſt the judgement of this life: But ſeeing your ſatisfaction faileth in the leſſe, which wee dayly have experience of, and you ſend us to find the force thereof, in a greater puniſhment, which no man ever did ſee, you give juſt occaſion to them, which are not wilfully blind, both to ſuſpect your device of Purgatorie, and to reject your ſandie foundation of ſatisfaction.

Argum. 6. In the Law there were no ſatisfactorie 1 works appointed for the expiation of ſin, but onely the ſacrifice, 2 which were not counted as the 3 works of men, but did depend of the onely ſacrifice of Chriſt, whereof they were ſhadowes: 4 yet in the Law all rites of expiation were diligently preſcribed, argum. Calvin.

Bellarmine anſwereth: firſt, the ſacrifices of the Law were appointed as ſatisfactions for the temporall puniſhments of ſin: for they did neither take away the ſin it ſelfe, nor the eternall puniſhment, Pſal. 51. 16. Thou deſireſt no ſacrifice, the ſacrifice of God is a contrite heart. Secondly, neither did the ſacrifice ſerve for all ſins: for blaſphemie, homicide, adulterie, idolatrie, no ſacrifices were appointed, but aſhes and ſackcloth, &c. Thirdly, God hath not in the Law exactly ſet downe all the rites of expiation. Fourthly, the ſacrifices, as they were divine works being inſtituted of God, ſo were they alſo the laborious works of men, and conſequently ſatisfactorie, in that they were an hindrance to their ſubſtance, and depended upon the faith of the offerers, cap. 15. reſponſ. ad argum. 5.

Contra. Firſt, the ſacrifices of the Law were appointed for the forgiveneſſe of the ſin it ſelfe, Levit. 6. 7. The Prieſt ſhall make attonement for him, and it ſhall be forgiven him. 1 How could attonement or reconciliation bee made, without remiſſion of ſin? 2 If ſacrifices were not to that end, then had they no meanes at all to aſſure them of remiſſion of ſin. 3 Yet in themſelves thoſe ſacrifices could not purge the conſcience, Heb. 9. 9. but did onely purifie as touching the fleſh, verſ. 13. that is, take away the legall and outward uncleanneſſe: but they did alſo ſanctifie inwardly, being offered by faith, as they were types and ſhadowes of Chriſts ſacrifice, which is that David affirmeth, Pſal. 51. 16.

Secondly, 1 The ſins of homicide, adulterie, idolatrie, blaſphemie, were ſins puniſhable by death, and therefore no ſuch expiation by ſacrifice was appointed for them, as for other ſins: Bloud could not be expiated, or purged, but by bloud. 2 David notwithſtanding after he had committed two of thoſe ſins, having firſt ſacrificed a contrite heart unto God, did afterward finde comfort and further aſſurance of remiſſion, in offering the ſacrifices of righteouſneſſe, Pſal. 51. 19. that is, right and lawfull ſacrifices applied to the right end, which is to teſtifie their faith and repentance. Pſal. 51. 19. 3 But aſhes and ſackcloth were no ſatisfactions for ſuch ſins. 1 For Bellarmine himſelfe ſaith, that ſin cannot be ſatisfied for, but the puniſhment only. 2 And David having repented throughly for his ſin, yet pretendeth no ſatisfaction, but ſueth for mercie, Pſal. 51. 4. Pſal. 51. 4. 3 Wherefore either the ſacrifices of righteouſneſſe and faith, were the propitiation for ſuch ſins, as they were Sacraments of Chriſts death, or elſe they had no meanes of expiation at all, which is not to be admitted.

Thirdly, it is a great untruth, that the Lord by Moſes did not exactly ſet downe all manner of expiations fit for that time, ſeeing the Scripture ſaith, that Moſes was faithfull in all the Lords houſe, Heb. 3. 2.

Fourthly, ſeeing he granteth that the ſacrifices depended of the faith in the offerer, and faith is the gift of God, and is founded in Chriſts death; he hath made a good argument againſt himſelfe, that the ſacrifices were not ſatisfactions, but works of faith, applying the vertue of Chriſts death: the ſacrifices then of the Law were applicatorie, not ſatisfactorie.

Argum. 7. Hoſh. 14. 2. Take away all iniquitie, and receive us graciouſly, ſo will wee render the calves of our lips. If all iniquitie be taken away, then none remaineth to bee ſatisfied for: if after forgiveneſſe, nothing but thankſgiving be required, then no ſatisfaction is to be performed, argum. Calvin, ibid.

Bellarmine anſwereth: firſt, iniquitie may be removed, though the puniſhment doe remaine. Secondly, after forgiveneſſe, though we be not acquited of the temporall puniſhment, wee are to give thanks. Thirdly, if God ſometime doe ſo forgive, that he require no ſatisfaction but of praiſe, it followeth not that he ſhould doe ſo alwayes, Bellarm. c.15. reſp. ad argum.6.

Contra. Firſt, how 1 can all iniquitie be removed, when as the puniſhment yet remaineth? there muſt be ſome ſin to be puniſhed, or elſe God puniſhing without ſin ſhould be unjuſt. 2 Againe, the Prophet ſpeaketh directly of removing the puniſhment alſo, verſ. 1. They ſhall fall by the ſword, verſ. 1. Thou haſt fallen by thine iniquitie: But now verſ.3. upon their repentance the Prophet ſheweth, that they ſhall fall ſo no more: all iniquitie, both the ſin and the paine ſhall be removed. 4 Againe, verſ.5. Mine anger is turned away: but when God puniſheth for ſin, he is angrie.

Secondly, thankſgiving followeth after 1 full remiſſion had, and all iniquitie removed: but where ſatisfaction is to be done, there is not yet full remiſſion: for Bellarmine confeſſeth, that Plena remiſſio quoad omnem pœna reatum; Full remiſſion is in reſpect the guilt of all puniſhment removed, cap. 15. reſp. ad loc. 3. Therefore the calves of the lips could not yet be offered, when as ſomewhat remaineth to be ſatisfied. 2 Rejoycing and giving of thanks cannot be without comfort and perfect aſſurance of remiſſion: but where God yet judgeth for ſin, and the puniſhment remaineth to be ſatisfied for, there can be no ſuch aſſurance.

Thirdly, this courſe here preſcribed by the Prophet, is perpetuall, and generall for all the faithfull of God: he ſpeaketh to all Iſrael, verſ.2. yea unto all the faithfull ſervants of God, verſ.10. Who is wiſe, and he ſhall underſtand theſe things. And the Prophet David ſaying, *What ſhall I render to the Lord for all his benefits to me? I will take the cup of ſalvation, and call upon the name of the Lord, Pſal.*116.13,14. ſheweth, that God requireth no other ſatisfaction at our hands but giving of thanks.

Argum.8. The Publicane upon his repentance was juſtified, and no ſatisfaction required: ſo likewiſe Peter was forgiven without any ſatisfaction: So to the man ſicke of the palſie, Chriſt ſaid, Ariſe, thy ſins are forgiven thee, Marke 2.9. Neither is the contrarie to be ſeene in the reſt of the examples in Scripture of remiſſion of ſins, but they were forgiven freely without any ſatisfaction required, argum. Calvin. ibid.

Bellarm. Firſt, the Publicane was not juſtified without ſatisfaction, as ſmiting upon his breſt, confeſſing his ſin. Secondly, Peter alſo ſatisfied by his teares. Thirdly, 1 Chriſt forgiveth to the ſicke man his ſin, but not the temporall puniſhment. 2 His long ſickneſſe might ſatisfie God for his ſins. 3 Chriſt might at his pleaſure together pardon both the ſin and the puniſhment; but his Miniſters cannot doe ſo, cap.16. reſp. ad argum. 2.

Contra. Firſt, the 1 ſmiting of the breaſt in the Publicane was a ſigne of his contrition, no part of ſatisfaction. 2 He ſaith, God be mercifull to me a ſinner: here he could not ſatisfie, becauſe he crieth onely for mercie. 3 And was the Publicanes ſin ſo ſmall, thinke you, that he could ſatisfie for it, with knocking upon the breſt? 4 But this contrition went before, he was juſtified afterward: but ſatisfaction goeth not before juſtification, no not in the Popiſh doctrine: for they ſay ſins are firſt remitted, and then afterward the puniſhment is ſatisfied for.

Secondly, 1 Doe you thinke, that Peters deniall of Chriſt, was ſo ſmal an offence, that hee could ſatisfie with his teares? 2 Peter wept before hee found forgiveneſſe, as Ambroſe ſaith: Verecundæ lachrymæ ſine horrore culpam loquuntur; Shamefaſt teares without horror doe confeſſe the fault. But ſatisfaction followeth forgiveneſſe, wherefore Peter did not ſatisfie by his teares. Ambroſe ſaith, Lachrymæ veniam non poſtulant, ſed merentur; Teares doe not aske pardon, but they are worthie or fit to bee pardoned, &c. Peter then was not as yet pardoned, weeping for his ſins; *Ambroſe in Luc.*22.

Thirdly, 1 The ſicke man had not onely his ſin forgiven, but his temporall puniſhment releaſed: for Chriſt ſaid to him, Ariſe, take up thy bed and walke. 2 Neither did his ſickneſſe ſatisfie for his ſin, it was then faith that healed him, verſ.5. neither was there any place for ſatisfaction, his ſin being not yet forgiven. 3 And that Chriſt did not this by his extraordinarie authoritie, but by the ſame power which he hath committed to his Apoſtles and their ſucceſſors, the Rhemiſts directly affirme, in their annotations upon this place: neither was this extraordinarie: for in all the examples alleaged, Chriſt tooke the ſame courſe in forgiving ſin without any ſatisfaction.

Laſtly, we have plentifull evidence from the Fathers, Councels, and their owne decrees, againſt this ſuperſtitious doctrine of ſatisfaction.

Mark.9.

Cyprian. lib.3. ad Quirinum, cap.42. Fidem tantum prodeſſe, & tantum nos poſſe, quantum credimus, Marc.9. Omnia poſſibilia credenti; That faith onely profiteth, and we are able to doe as much as we beleeve: as Mark. 9. All things are poſſible to him that beleeveth. If faith onely profiteth, what need is there of ſatisfaction?

Ambroſ. lib. 2. de pœnitent. cap. 8. Veniam tanquam ex fide ſperemus, non tanquam ex debito; Let us hope forgiveneſſe, as of faith, not of debt. But ſatisfaction is of debt.

Hieronym. ad Marcellam. Tantam in nobis fidei ſtabilitatem eſſe Dominus deſiderat, &c. God requireth ſuch ſtabilitie of faith in us, ut certius eſſe, quod credimus, quam quod patimur judicemus; That we ſhould judge that more certaine, which we beleeve, than that which wee ſuffer, &c. But the Papiſts contrarie, do hold no certaintie of remiſſion of ſins by faith, without ſuffering by ſatisfactorie works.

Concil. Arauſican. 1. decret. ex Gratian. Authoritate Dei, &c. By the authoritie of God, and the judgement of his ſpirit, we doe thruſt them out of the boſome of the Church: Quouſque reſipiſcunt & Eccleſiæ Dei ſatisfaciunt: Till they repent and ſatisfie the Church of God. Here are two things required, repentance toward God, and ſatisfaction to his Church, not to God.

Diſtinct. de pœnitent. 1. c. 1. Non invenio quid dixerit, &c. I find not what Peter ſaid, I find that he wept: Lachrymas lego, ſatisfactionem non lego: I read his teares, I read no ſatisfaction.

Bellarmine anſwereth, that by ſatisfaction, here is underſtood excuſe or defence of his ſin, as it followeth, Quod defendi non poteſt, &c. That which cannot be defended, may be waſhed.

Cont. Firſt, the Maſter of the Sentences underſtandeth it otherwiſe for true ſatisfaction, and maketh this anſwer, That Peter might ſatisfie, though it be not expreſſed, or that confeſſion was not yet inſtituted, lib. 4. diſt. 17. f. Secondly Gratian alſo doth ſo underſtand it, alleaging to the like purpoſe a ſaying of Chryſoſtome, ibid. c. 2. Lachrymæ lavent delictum, &c. Let teares waſh away the ſins, which it is a ſhame to confeſſe: And proveth hereby, that contrition may ſuffice without confeſſion: to ſpeake of excuſe or defence had beene impertinent. Thirdly, S. Ambroſe expoundeth himſelfe: Invenio cur tacuit, &c. I ſee the reaſon why Peter held his peace, leſt that the craving of pardon ſo ſoone might offend. Peter was farre from excuſing his ſin, or Ambroſe from ſo imagining.

Auguſtine ſaith, Peccaſti in fratrem? fac ſatis, & ſanatus es; Haſt thou offended thy brother? ſatiſfie him, and thou art healed. Theſe kinds of ſatisfaction both publikely and privatly we acknowledge: but ſatisfaction to God, neither he, nor we acknowledge. In Matt. ſer. 16.

Interrelig. cap. 3. Qui precioſo Chriſti ſanguine redimitur, & cui meritum paſſionis Chriſti applicatur, is continuo juſtificatur, &c. Hee that is redeemed by the precious bloud of Chriſt, and to whom the merit of Chriſts paſſion is applied, he is ſtraightway juſtified. And S. Paul ſaith, Whom he juſtifieth, he glorifieth, Rom. 8. 30. Satisfaction therefore to bee performed by man is ſuperfluous, ſeeing Chriſts death bringeth juſtification, and glorification.

This truth is ſealed: Maſter Tindall holy Martyr thus witneſſeth: Satisfaction is a full recompence or amends making to him, whom we have offended, which recompence we are able to make one to another, and are bound ſo to doe: but to God none can make any mends or recompence, but onely Gods owne Son Chriſt Jeſus our Saviour, Fox pag. 1249. col. 2. artic. 1.

And yet for further evidence. 1 Chryſoſtome, as he is before alleaged, ſaith, Nihil aliud Deus requirit ad ulteriorem ſatisfactionem, &c. God requireth nothing elſe for further ſatisfaction, than that we promiſe unto God from our heart, never to returne unto our former ſins: Ieremie the Pattiarke of Conſtantinople ſaith: We muſt confeſſe, quod gratis per Chriſtum peccata, & non propter aliqua merita nobis remittuntur, &c. That our ſins are freely forgiven us by Chriſt, and not for any merits of ours, &c. our works then doe not ſatisfie. De beat. Philogon. Cenſur. oriental. c. 21.

2 Auguſtine further ſaith: Nec quiſquam dicat meritis orationum, vel meritis fidei gratiam Dei traditam: Let not any ſay, that favour and grace is given by the merit of prayer or of faith, &c. Prayers then and other like works are not ſatisfactorie, ſeeing they merit not. Epiſt. 46.

3 Confeſſ. of Bohemia, c. 4. Yet muſt they not be perſwaded, as though they deſerved any thing by ſuffering this puniſhment, or ſhould receive any grace or reward in recompence for the merit of theſe puniſhments: ſeeing that Paul of a much more worthie croſſe--ſaith that they bee not comparable to the glorie, wich ſhall bee ſhewed unto us. -- Wittemberg, c. 15. As touching prayer, giving of almes, faſting, and ſuch like works, we thinke that they are diligently to be performed, and yet that they have a farre other uſe, than that they ſhould by their merits, either ſatisfie God for our ſins, &c. Harm. ſect. 4. pag. 69. Sect. 8. p. 240.

4 The Divines of Lovaine did hold, Solius Chriſti ſatisfactionibus remiſſam pœnam temporalem, That the temporall puniſhment is onely remitted by the ſatisfactions of Chriſt, &c. as Bellarmine reporteth: then not by the ſatisfaction of our works. Lib 1. de indulgent. c. 4.

The fourth part, whether one man may ſatisfie for another.

The Papiſts.

Satisfactorie works are not onely profitable to the ſufferers themſelves, but alſo for other their fellow members in Chriſt, and one may beare the burthen, and diſcharge the debt of another, Rhemiſt. Coloſſ. 1. ſect. 4. 65. Ibid.

Argum. The paſſions of the Saints are ſuffered for the common good of the whole bodie, as S. Paul ſaith, Now I rejoyce in my ſufferings for you, and fulfill that which is behind of the afflictions of Chriſt for his bodies ſake, which is the Church, Coloſſ. 1. 24. Here S. Pauls afflictions are meritorious and ſatisfactorie for the Coloſſians, Rhemiſt. Coloſſ. 1. 24.

Anſwer. 1. The Apoſtles ſufferings were for the glorie of God, and the confirmation of their faith; and in this ſenſe he ſaith, his afflictions were for Chriſts bodie, that is, his Church ſake: but therefore it followeth not, that they were meritorious, either for himſelfe, or others. 2 His ſufferings are ſaid to be Chriſts, who ſuffereth in his members, not that they receive any force from Chriſt to be ſatisfactorie, but becauſe hee was made like and conformable by his ſuffering unto Chriſt, Rom. 8. 17. Auguſtine alſo thus expoundeth the place : Hee ſheweth that what hee ſuffered belonged to the ſufferings of Chriſt, quod non poteſt intelligi ſervus dum caput, quod nihil tale patitur, ſed ſervus dum corpus, id eſt ecclesia, which cannot bee underſtood in regard of the head, which ſuffereth no ſuch thing, but of the bodie, that is, the Church: which bodie with the head is one Church, &c. They are not then the ſufferings of Chriſt, as though they received a ſatisfactorie power from Chriſt : but becauſe he was a member of Chriſt, who ſuffered together in and with his members. Thus alſo anſwereth Sir Iohn Borthwick holy confeſſor : That where S. Paul ſaith, (for the Church) he doth not underſtand thereby, the redemption, ſatisfaction, or expiation of the Church, but for the edifying and profiting of the ſame : and by the afflictions of Chriſt, he underſtandeth thoſe which hee now ſuffereth in his members : And ſo he concludeth, and ſealeth this doctrine, that if the Scripture teach us, that no man can worke his owne ſalvation, but when we have done all that is commanded, we ſhall be found but unprofitable ſervants : much leſſe can any man worke anothers ſalvation : Fox pag. 1261.

Exod. 32. v. 13.

The Doway Students doe give this note upon thoſe words of Moſes prayer, Remember Abraham, &c. God ſheweth mercie for the merit of his ſervants.

Contra. Moſes deſireth God to remember the promiſe made to Abraham, Iſaak and Iſrael, as it followeth in the ſame place, to whom thou ſwareſt by thine owne ſelfe : he thinketh not to be heard for their merit.

Tract. 102. in Joan.

None can merit or ſatisfie for themſelves, much leſſe for others : neither can one man beare the burthen, or pay the debt of an other mans ſin.

Argum. 1. The Scripture ſaith, The ſoule that ſinneth, the ſame ſhall die, Ezech. 18. 20. Every man ſhall beare his owne burthen, Galath. 6. 5. None can redeeme his brother, or give a price to God for him, Pſal. 49. 8.

Auguſtine upon thoſe words, Ioh. 16. 23. Whatſoever ye ſhall aske in my name, he will give it you : Exandiuntur quippe omnes ſancti pro ſeipſis : non autem exandiuntur pro omnibus, vel amicis, vel inimicis, &c. The Saints are heard praying for themſelves : but they are not heard praying for all their friends or enemies, becauſe it is not ſaid ſimply, he will give, but, he will give to you : Ergo, much leſſe can they ſatisfie for others, if their prayers be not heard alwaies for others.

Leo Epiſtol. 81. De fortitudine fidelium exempla nata ſunt patientia, &c. From the fortitude of the faithfull we have examples of patience, not gifts of righteouſneſſe, &c. their deaths were only for themſelves, neither did they thereby pay any others debt, Chriſt our Lord onely is he, in whom all men are dead and crucified.

Luke 17. 10.

Argum. 2. We cannot doe for our ſelves all that which is required at our hands : But when we have done all, wee muſt ſay, wee are unprofitable ſervants, wee have done that which was our dutie to doe, Luke 17. 10. Ergo, it is not in apy mans power to ſatisfie for another. So Ambroſe writeth upon this place: Quis tanta ſalutis beneficia, digne poſſit aquare ſervitio? Who can with his ſervice anſwer in equalitie ſo great benefits of ſalvation ? Quis poteſt ſolvere, quod accepit ? Who can pay that he hath received ? ſerm. 16. in Pſal. 119.

Ezech. 14. 16.

Bernard alſo ſaith, writing upon theſe words of the five fooliſh virgins: Give us of your oyle : Stulta petitio, vix juſtus ſalvabitur, &c. A fooliſh requeſt, the juſt man ſhall hardly be ſaved : the oyle of the Saints doth ſcant ſuffice themſelves, how much leſſe ſufficeth it themſelves and others : Noe, Daniel, Iob, ſhall not deliver, no not their children, but as the ſoule that hath ſinned ſhall die ; ſo the ſoule that hath done righteouſly ſhall onely live, &c. Here are three notable arguments included : firſt, mens righteouſneſſe ſufficeth not themſelves, much leſſe others. Secondly, by the teſtimonie of the Prophet, that thoſe holy men there named, ſhould but ſave themſelves. Thirdly, from the like : as wicked men doe only by their owne ſin condemne themſelves, ſo the righteous only live by their owne righteouſneſſe.

But here they will come in with a ſtale diſtinction, that, Si juſtitia rigorem ſpectamus ; If we reſpect the rigor of Gods juſtice, no mans juſtice is ſufficient for himſelfe, ſed ex Dei miſericordia & liberalitate, &c. But of Gods mercie and liberalitie, they may profit themſelves and others : *Interrelig. The Pſalme alſo ſaith, that no man can redeeme his brother, Pſal. 49. 7. And Chriſt onely hath works to ſupererogate to others, Of his fulneſſe we have all received, &c. Ioh. 1. 16.

Diſtinct. 1. de pœnitent. Non alium ſtatuatis nuntium, &c. Appoint not another meſſenger, who ſhould offer your gift for you : Per vos peccaſtis, per vos erubeſcatis ; Yee have ſinned by your ſelves, by your ſelves be aſhamed. Every man muſt repent for himſelfe.

For the Greeke Church, Ieremie Patriarke ſaith, having alleaged that ſaying in the Goſpell: when we have done all,—we muſt confeſſe our ſelves unprofitable ſervants: Id, quod ipſi conferimus parvum quid, aut plane, ſi cum divina munificentia conferatur, nihil ſit: That, which wee doe, is a very little, or if it be compared with the divine bountie it is nothing, &c. and to the ſame purpoſe he alleageth Chryſoſtome, Non quiſquam mortalium poteſt—ante Deum conſiſtere, &c. No mortall man, if all his life ſhould be laid together, can ſtand before God, nor be found worthy of pardon, &c. NOt only amendment, and ceaſing to ſin, or repentance in heart before God is alwaies enough to obtaine full reconcilement, but there muſt be outward penaltie, correction, and chaſtiſement beſide, Rhemiſt. 2. Corinth. 2. ſect. 2.

Argum. The inceſtuous perſon was rebuked of many, 2 Cor. 2. 6. which word implieth, beſide his inward repentance, outward correction and chaſtiſement.

2 Cor. 2. 6.

The Proteſtants.

Anſw. WE acknowledge, that in notorious ſins, and offenſive to the Church, as this, of the young man was, inward repentance is not ſufficient, but that after ſharp diſcipline by the outward teſtification of ſorrow, and publike confeſſion, ſatisfaction muſt bee made to the Church: but it followeth not that this courſe ſhould bee taken for all ſinnes, which a man repenteth him of. And yet wee grant that outward ſignes of our ſorrow are alwayes neceſſarie in true repentance, not as ſatisfactorie meanes to redeeme our ſinnes, but only as infallible tokens and effects of our repentance. As Auguſtine ſaith, Satis durus eſt, cujus mentis dolorem oculi carnis nequeunt declarare: Hee is hard hearted, the griefe of whoſe minde, the eyes of his fleſh doe not ſhew forth: de pœnitent. cap. 9.

Argum. 1. There are but two eſſentiall parts of repentance and true converſion unto God: To turne from our ſins, and lead an holy life. So ſaith the Lord by the Prophet, If the wicked will returne from his ſins and keep all my ſtatutes, Ezech. 18. 21. This is all God requireth, without any other penall works: wherefore ceaſing from ſin and amendment of life, which neceſſarily include the true ſorrow and converſion of the heart, are ſufficient for repentance.

Ezech. 18. 21.

Argum. 2. Peter was received to mercie without any ſatisfaction; ſo was the Publican, Luc. 18. Likewiſe Chriſt ſaid to the ſicke of the palſie, Ariſe, thy ſins are forgiven thee, without any penall injunction: Ergo, ſuch penall works are not neceſſarie. See more of this argument before, qu. 7. part. 3. argum. proteſtant. 8. and all the other arguments concluding againſt ſatisfaction, may be applied againſt the neceſſitie of penall and ſatisfactory works.

Pœnitentia vera eſt pœnitenda non admittere, & admiſſa deflere, ſatisfactio pœnitentiæ eſt, cauſas peccatorum excidere, nec earum ſuggeſtionib. aditum indulgere: It is true repentance, not to commit things to bee repented of and being committed to bewaile them: ſatisfaction of repentance is to cut off the cauſes of ſin, and not to give way to their tentations: De eccleſiaſtic. dogmat. c. 54.

Here ſatisfaction is nothing elſe but true repentance, and no other works of ſatisfaction but to ceaſe from evill, and doe good, which are the parts of true repentance. See to the ſame purpoſe before Error 64. at the end the conſent of other Churches.

An appendix to this part, which bee the Penall Satisfactorie works.

The Papiſts.

PRayer, faſting, almes, are thoſe ſatisfactorie works, whereby wee doe ſatisfie God for the temporall puniſhment due unto ſin: and beſide theſe, there are other, opera indebita: works which wee are not bound unto, as whipping and beating of the body, and ſuch like: Bellarm. lib. 4. de pœnitent. cap. 6.

68. Error. Pſal. 50. 15. Ioel. 2. 17. Argum. Firſt, that prayer, faſting, and ſuch other works commanded are ſatisfactions, the Scripture teſtifieth, Pſalm. 50. 15. Call upon me in the day of trouble, I will deliver thee, &c. Ioel. 2. 17. Turne unto me with all your heart, with faſting, weeping, and mourning: who knoweth if hee will returne and repent, &c. Ergo, with prayer and faſting God is ſatisfied: Bellarm. c. 6.

Rom. 10. 14. Contra. Firſt, prayer is a fruit of faith, Rom. 10. 14. How ſhall they call on him, upon whom they have not beleeved: and faſting is a meanes to make our repentance more effectuall, being joyned with weeping and mourning: all theſe are fruits and effects of faith, by the which God is reconciled to us, and Rom. 3. 24. his wrath appeaſed, and we at peace with God, Rom. 3. 24. & 5. 1. Secondly, it is not then the prayer which ſatisfieth or is availeable before God, but faith, Iam . 5. 15. The prayer of faith ſhall ſave the ſicke. Thirdly, and this is evident by the circumſtance of theſe places, Pſalm. 50. 15. And thou ſhalt glorifie me: if God have the glorie of our deliverance, it is to be aſcribed to his mercie, not to our ſatisfaction: Ioel. 2. 13. and Ioel. 2. 13. The Lord is mercifull, gracious, &c. but if faſting doe ſatisfie Gods juſtice, what need they flee to his mercy?

69 Error. 1 Cor. 9. 27. Argum. 2. Saint Paul whipped and beat himſelfe, 1 Cor. 9. 27. I beat downe my body: for ſo the word ſignifieth, to beat till the body be blew. The Publican beat upon his breſt: Iohn Baptiſt was apparelled in Camels haire, &c. Ergo, painefull and laborious works not preſcribed or commanded, are acceptable to God, and ſatisfactorie: Bellar. ibid.

Contra. Firſt, it is a vaine ſurmiſe, that S. Paul ſcourged or beat his owne body, as your Friers Flagellants uſe to doe: 1 the Apoſtle taketh his ſimilitude from champions that to fight, and one beat another, which the word ὑπωπιάζω ſignifieth; and ſo continuing the metaphore ſaith, I doe beat downe, Luk. 18. 5. &c. 2 The ſame word is uſed, Luc. 18. 5. I will doe her right, leſt ſhe come and make me wearie. Obtundat me, it were abſurd to ſay, leſt ſhe beat me. 3 The Apoſtle ſheweth, how hee doth beat his body, by bringing it into ſubjection, which may be done otherwiſe than by beating: 4 the Apoſtles doctrine Epheſ. 5. 29. is contrarie, Epheſ. 5. 29. No man hateth his owne fleſh, but nouriſheth and cheriſheth it.

Secondly, the beating upon the Publicans breſt, was a ſigne of his great ſorrow, and of the diſpleaſure taken againſt his ſin; he did not in ſo doing wound or offer violence to his body. Auguſtine ſaith, Tundere pectus, quid aliud eſt, quam arguere quod latet in pectore? &c. To knocke upon the breſt, what is it elſe, but to checke or to reprove ſin lying hid in the breſt? In Matth. Serm. 8.

Coloſſ. 4. 5. Nahum. 2. 10. Matth. 3. 2. Matth. 11. 7. Thirdly, all theſe works are commended in Scripture: as to mortifie and ſubdue the fleſh, which S. Paul did, Coloſſ. 4. 5. Mortifie your earthly members: to teſtifie ſorrow by the ſmiting of the joynts and parts together, as the Publican did, is warranted, Nahum. 2. 10. The heart melteth, the knees ſmite together. Iohns auſtere life and converſation was agreeable to his calling, which was to be a cryer in the wilderneſſe, Matth. 3. 2. and our Saviour commendeth him for his ſtrict life, Matth. 11. 7. 18. Wherfore theſe examples ſerve not at all to warrant laborious works, not preſcribed nor commanded.

Fourthly, admit theſe works to be laborious and painefull, yet were they not ſatisfactorie, S. Paul ſaith, he was crucified with Chriſt, hee had mortified and ſubdued his fleſh; yet hee challengeth no ſatisfaction thereby, but ſaith, Galath. 2. 20. I live by faith in the Sonne of God, Galath. 2. 20. The Publican maketh ſuit for mercie, Lord be mercifull to me a ſinner, therefore intended no ſatisfaction: and Iohn was ſo farre from ſeeking any merit or ſatisfaction by his life, that hee confeſſeth, hee was not worthie to beare Matth. 3. 11. Chriſts ſhooes, Matth. 3. 11. Wherefore by theſe places, no ſatisfactory penall works can be warranted or perſwaded.

The Proteſtants.

FIrſt, prayer, faſting, almes, are the lively fruits and effects of faith, neceſſary to be done, and through Chriſt acceptable unto God, but there is no merit or ſatisfaction in them.

Argum. No works which are commanded, and wherein we are indebted unto God, are able to Luke 17. 20. ſatisfie, becauſe wee have done no more, than was our dutie to doe, Luk. 17. 10. S. Ambroſe ſaith, Nemo in operibus glorietur, &c. Let no man glory in his works, becauſe of right wee owe obedience to the Lord, &c. Nec in te patitur dominus unius uſum eſſe operis aut laboris, &c. God doth not ſuffer thee to have the uſe of any one worke or labour, becauſe while wee live, wee muſt bee alwayes working, Ambroſ. in 17. Luc. But prayer, faſting, almes are commanded, and ſo our due debt unto God: Ergo, they are not ſatisfactory.

Hierome ſaith, Cave ne ſi jejunare caperis, te putes eſſe jam ſanctam, &c. Take heed leſt thou thinke thy ſelfe holy, when thou beginneſt to faſt; for this vertue is but an help, it is not the perfection of holineſſe, ad Celant: but ſatisfaction is the very perfection of works.

This is alſo the opinion of ſome of the popiſh writers, Non ſatisfieri per opera alias debita: That we cannot ſatisfie by works that are due, or debted: Thomas, Durandus, Paludanus in 4. diſt. 15. Wherefore prayer, almes, and other works being commanded, and ſo our due dept unto God, cannot ſatisfie.

Secondly, neither is God ſo much as pleaſed with voluntary puniſhments inflicted upon the bodie, much leſſe doe they worke any ſatisfaction.

Argum. Coloſſ. 2. The Apoſtle calleth it, a ſhew of wiſdome in voluntary religion, in not ſparing the body, &c. it is no true wiſdome, but a ſhew of wiſdome; not religion preſcribed, but voluntary: like as Baals Prieſts did lance and cut themſelves with knives, being therefore derided of the Prophet, 1 Reg. 18. Such are the painefull works which Monks and Hermites doe afflict their bodies with: God requireth no ſuch things at their hands. Coloſſ. 2. 23.

Bellarm. S. Paul reproveth thoſe, that of ſuperſtition afflict their body, not for the health of their ſoule: lib. 14. de pœnitent. c. 4.

Contra. Firſt, thoſe alſo pretended by afflicting of the body to humble the ſoule, in humbleneſſe of minde, and not ſparing the body: Secondly, all voluntary or will-worſhip, ἐθελοθρησκεία (which Hierome tranſlateth, falſa religio, falſe religion, or falſe worſhip, Algaſia. qu. 10. tom. 4.) is ſuperſtitious; wherefore the Papiſts that offer unto God works not commanded, even of their owne deviſing, to bee ſatisfactions for them, are alſo guiltie of ſuperſtition.

Bellarmine alſo is a witneſſe for us againſt himſelfe: Satisfactoria opera non in obſervationibus ab hominibus excogitatis, &c. We doe not place ſatisfactorie works in obſervations invented of men, but in faſting, almes, prayer, which in the Scriptures have precepts, examples, and large promiſes, lib. 4. c. 13, reſp. ad arg. 7. a more evident teſtimonie againſt voluntarie ſatisfactions cannot be produced.

Laſtly, Auguſtine ſaith, Qui tundit pectus, & non corrigitur, ſolidat peccata; non tollit: He that beateth his breaſt, and is not corrected, doth harden or conſolidate his ſinnes; he taketh them not away: Tom. 9. de diſciplin. Chriſtian. c. 1. Ergo, beating of the fleſh, being not a mollifying of the heart, doth worke no ſatisfaction.

And further. 1 Chryſoſtome ſheweth what are the penall works required of penitent perſons: Poſt humilitatem oratione intenta opus eſt, lachrymis, &c. After humilitie, there is need of earneſt prayer, of teares, of almes, &c. Opus eſt iraſci, &c. We have need not to bee angrie, to convert our brethren from error, &c. to help them that are wronged, &c. Theſe are not voluntarie works, deviſed of men, but ſuch as God hath commanded. In c. 6. ad Hebræos.

Tertullian alſo ſheweth what be the exerciſes of the penitent: Corpus ſordib. obſcurare, animum mærorib. dejicere, jejunio preces alere, ingemiſcere, lachrymari, &c. To abaſe the body, to humble the minde with ſorrow, to nouriſh prayer with faſting, to mourne, to weep, &c. Theſe things are required of God: they are not mens devices, the ſubjecting and obſcuring of the body, is a thing indifferent, if it bee uſed onely as a meane to worke upon the affection, not with an opinion of merit and ſatisfaction. Lib. ad pœnitent.

Helvetia latter confeſſ. c. 14. The penitent perſon, thinketh ſeriouſly of amendment, and of a continuall care of innocencie and vertues, wherein to exerciſe himſelfe holily all the reſt of his life: but theſe vertuous acts are duties preſcribed of God. Harm. ſect. 8. pag. 212.

The ſecond part, by whom penall works are to bee inflicted.

THree waies, they ſay, God is ſatisfied: 1 by bearing patiently the puniſhment that God layeth upon us: 2 by aſſuming voluntarily the laborious and painefull works of penance: 3 and in willing undergoing the ſentence of the Prieſt in his penall injunctions. Of the firſt, there is no queſtion between us, that we are patiently to endure the Lords croſſe, though thereby we neither merit, nor ſatisfie: the other two they would prove thus.

Firſt, that penall works may voluntarily be undertaken, theſe examples ſhew it: Iob ſaith, I doe reprehend my ſelfe, and repent in duſt and aſhes: Iob 42. 6. David, of himſelfe faſted and prayed, 2 Sam. 12. hee was not enjoyned to doe it. So likewiſe Ahab humbled himſelfe with faſting and ſackcloth, 1 King. 21. he was not bid ſo to doe; yet God was well pleaſed with it: Bellarm. lib. 4. c. 4. 70. Error. Iob 42. 6.

Contra. Firſt, thoſe were not voluntary works, to humble themſelves with faſting and ſackcloth, but ſuch as God called for, and were by the Prophets preſcribed to the people, when they by repentance did turne unto God: Ioel. 2. 12. Turne unto the Lord with faſting and weeping, &c. Wherefore by theſe examples they have not proved, that voluntary and unbidden puniſhments, as whipping and ſcourging of the body, and ſuch like, are of our ſelves to bee inflicted. Secondly, none of theſe were penall or ſatisfactorie works of penance, but lively and evident ſignes of true repentance. Thirdly, it is very abſurd, that Ahab a wicked hypocrite, is matched here with Iob and David, the faithfull ſervants of God, in the exerciſe of true repentance: that God ſpared Ahab, it was not of his ſatisfaction, but of Gods mercy, remitting temporall puniſhment for temporall repentance: for how could Ahab ſatisfie God, that did ſell himſelfe to worke wickedneſſe? And they themſelves grant, that a man being in deadly ſin, cannot ſatisfie: Bellarm. c. 13. reſp. ad argum. 7. Ioel. 2. 12.

71. Error. Secondly, the Prieſts have power to enjoyne works of penance, as affliction of body, mulct, penaltie, correction, by almes-deeds, faſting, abſtinence, and ſuch like, Concil. Trid. ſeſſ. 14. can. 15. Rhemiſt. 2. Corinth. 2. ſect. 2.

Argum. To them is given authority to bind and looſe: Ergo, to enjoyne penance: As they looſe their ſins, ſo they bind them unto the penall works of penance: and as they have power to remit ſins, in reſpect of the fault and everlaſting puniſhment; ſo to retaine ſinnes, for the temporall puniſhment: Bellarm. l. 4. c. 5.

Anſwer. 1. Some kinde of mulcts, Church diſcipline is not to deale withall: as bodily puniſhment, and pecuniary fines, which are to be impoſed at the diſcretion of the Magiſtrate: Synod. Mogunt. cap. 77. Archidiaconus mulcta pecuniaria punire non praſumat, The Archdeacon ſhall not preſume to puniſh with pecuniarie mulct. Secondly, wee grant an holſome uſe of the keyes in Church diſcipline, in puniſhing and cleanſing of notorious offenders in the open face of the congregation: but privatly to enjoyne men penance for their ſecret ſins, is an Antichriſtian yoke. Thirdly, yet publike penance enjoyned notorious offenders, is no part of their ſatisfaction to Godward, but a ſigne of their reconciliation to the Church, which they have offended; and it is profitable for the example of others, that they by ſuch publike ſhame may be terrified from the like offending. Fourthly, binding and looſing are contrary acts, when the Miniſters by the word of God bind, they looſe not; when they looſe they bind not: but the popiſh Prieſt doth both looſe and bind together; looſe the ſin, bind the puniſhment: and the authority which Chriſt giveth, is to remit and retaine ſin: And for remitting or retaining of the puniſhment, it belongeth to the judge of the world, Chriſt himſelfe.

The Proteſtants.

First, for a man to lay any voluntary or deviſed puniſhment upon himſelfe to be a ſatisfaction for his ſin; it is contrary to the Scripture.

Mark. 7. 7. Argum. 1. Mark. 7. 7. In vaine doe they worſhip me, teaching for doctrines the commandements of men: but the inflicting upon the body ſuch puniſhments, as in whipping, ſcourging, beating of the fleſh, is the doctrine and commandement of men: Ergo, it is a vaine worſhip. Bellarmine.

Anſwer. 1. Obedience to men diſpleaſeth not God, but when they command things contrary to God. 2 It is the commandement of God, that wee ſhould repent with faſting, ſackcloth, &c. lib. 4. cap. 4.

Contra. First, nothing can be more contrary to Gods word, than to teach men by their owne puniſhment, to ſatisfie the wrath of God: for the Scripture teacheth, that Chriſt is our peace; that hee hath reconciled us to God by his croſſe, and ſlaine hatred thereby, that was before betweene God and us, Epheſ. 2. 14. 16. there remaineth therefore nothing to bee ſatisfied for, by us. Epheſ. 2. 14 Secondly, to repent with faſting; to make our ſorrow more effectuall, which they alſo ſhewed in thoſe times by aſhes and ſackcloth, was the commandement of God, and the practiſe of the Saints: but to make bald the head, to cut and afflict the fleſh, was the uſe of idolatrous Prieſts, 1 King. 18. neither liked nor allowed of God.

Heb. 12. 9. Argum. 2. The Apoſtle ſaith, Heb. 12. 9. Wee have had the fathers of our bodies, which corrected us, &c. ſhould we not much rather bee in ſubjection to the Father of ſpirits, that we might live? And verſ. 10. They chaſtened us after their owne pleaſure, but he for our profit, &c. Here the Apoſtle maketh two ſorts of Correctors, man for the body, God for the ſoule: and two kinds of corrections, inflicted either by earthly parents, or by the Father of ſpirits: From whence I conclude, that all corrections tending to the life of the ſoule, are applied by the Father of ſpirits: therefore as children are chaſtened of their father for offences toward them, they doe not chaſtiſe themſelves; ſo our heavenly Father correcteth his children, they doe not puniſh themſelves.

Origen ſaith in 14. Matth. Si quando, &c. If at any time wee fall into the neceſſitie of temptation, let us remember, Quòd Ieſus nos compulit ingredi navem illam: That Jeſus conſtrained us to goe into the ſhip: as the Apoſtles went not into the ſhip of themſelves to ſaile on the troubleſome ſea, but Jeſus compelled them, Matth. 14. 22. ſo no man is willingly to run into any affliction, but when hee is thereto appointed of God. Matth. 14. 22.

Secondly penall injunctions impoſed for ſatisfaction by Prieſts, are not warranted by the word of God.

Argum. 1. Such works as God requireth neceſſary to repentance, cannot be refuſed without ſin, as ſuch, whereof the Prophet ſpeaketh, Iſay 1. 17. Learne to doe well, ſeeke judgement, &c. Iſay 1. 17. But the injunctions of the Prieſts may bee refuſed without ſin, as ſome of their Popiſh divines hold: as Scotus, Gabriel, and this Bellarmine denieth not, though the reſt hee ſaith be of another minde, lib. 4. cap. 13. therefore the Prieſts penall injunctions are not thoſe which the Lord requireth in his word. argum. Philipp. apolog. confeſſ. Auguſtin.

Argum. 2. The Indulgences of men may diſpenſe with the ſatisfactions enjoyned by the Prieſt, but they cannot free them from thoſe precepts, Bring forth fruits worthy of repentance: Ergo, ſuch ſatisfactions are not preſcribed or commanded of God.

Bellarmine anſwereth, that the Indulgences of men, doe not free any from Gods precepts, but onely from the paines, and puniſhments: as it is the Apoſtles precept, to pay tribute to whom tribute belongeth: Rom. 13. Yet the Prince may pardon the tribute, but for all this hee freeth not any from the Apoſtles precept. Bellarm. lib. 4. c. 13.

Rom. 13.

Contra. Firſt, the reaſon is not alike, man may remit a debt or dutie unto man: Ergo, man may diſpenſe with a debt due unto God: nay, ſeeing one man cannot remit the debt of another, how unreaſonable is it, that any ſhould preſume to remit any thing due unto God? Secondly, the argument is not anſwered, neither doe I thinke that father Robert doth well underſtand himſelfe in his anſwer: for if penall ſatisfactions be comprehended in this commandement, Bring forth worthie fruits, &c. as they pretend they are; this being a precept of Scripture, if they can diſpenſe with this, then doe they diſpenſe with Gods precepts: wherefore they muſt either confeſſe, that their ſatisfactions are not theſe worthy fruits; and ſo they have no ground in Scripture: or if they be, they have no power to diſpenſe with them.

Argum. 3. True repentance is a free worke, not of compulſion, or coaction: Saint Paul exhorteth men to judge themſelves, that they be not judged, 1 Cor. 11. 31. But now when penance is layd upon a man, and not voluntarily taken of himſelfe, he is judged rather of another, he doth not judge himſelfe. Auguſtine ſaith, Quem pœnitet, punit ſeipſum, prorſus aut punis, aut punit Deus, ut ille non puniat, puni tu: Hee that repenteth, puniſheth himſelfe: either thou puniſheſt, or God: if thou wilt not have God to doe it, puniſh thy ſelfe, &c. A man therefore muſt puniſh himſelfe, hee muſt not bee puniſhed of another in his repentance to Godward: for of outward chaſtiſement to the world, now is not the queſtion.

Auguſtine ſaith, de temp. ſerm. 181. c. 16. Nunquam ſpernit pœnitentiam, &c. God never deſpiſeth repentance, if it be ſimply and ſincerely offered unto him: Etiamſi quis explere non poterit omnem ſatisfaciendi ordinem: Though a man cannot fulfill all the order of ſatisfaction: Here we ſee repentance, without ſatisfaction preſcribed and enjoyned, is ſufficient. Likewiſe ad fratres in eremo, ſermon. 11. O Monache, fac ut mens tua ſit liber, quem vidit, &c. O thou ſolitarie fellow (Monke) let thy minde be that booke, which Ezechiel ſaw, wherein were written Lamentations: Ad has Lamentationes te convertas: Turne thee to theſe Lamentations, &c. Here are no outward Satisfactions enjoyned, but inward Lamentations.

Tertullian ſheweth, that this manner of whipping & ſcourging the owne body, was firſt taken up by the Lacedemonians, among whom there was a certaine ſolemnity called διαμαστιγώσις, a whipping: wherein, Nobiles adoleſcentes ante aram flagellis affliguntur, aſtantib. parentibus, &c. Noble young men were afflicted with whips before the altar, their parents ſtanding by, and exhorting them to perſevere, &c. whereupon Rhenanus giveth this note: Iſtius veteris diamaſtigoſeos veſtigium aliquod videas apud Italos in Litaniis: Of this ancient kinde of whipping, you may ſee ſome footſteps among the Italians, in their Letanies, &c. who uſe in proceſſion to whip themſelves: ſo it is evident, that this faſhion was firſt taken up by Pagans.

Lib. ad Martyres.

In the Greeke Church it was a cuſtome, that the Presbyter did preſcribe lawes of ſatisfaction to the penitent, and did abſolve them: which cuſtome was aboliſhed by Nectarius: he thought it an unreaſonable cuſtome, that the Prieſt ſhould enjoyne ſuch penall ſatisfactions.

Socrates lib. 5. c. 19.

Confeſſ. of Bohem. c. 4. They muſt not be perſwaded, as though they deſerved any thing by ſuffering puniſhment, or ſhould receive from God any grace or reward in recompence for the merit of theſe puniſhments, &c. Confeſſ. of Auſpurg. They condemne thoſe, which teach that canonicall ſatisfactions are neceſſarie to redeeme eternall paine, or the paines of purgatory, &c. Then it followeth, that it is a ſuperfluous thing for the Prieſt to enjoyne works of ſatisfaction.

Harm. ſect. 4. pag. 48.

Sect. 8. p. [illegible]

Decret. Gregor. lib. 5. tit. 38. c. 1. Manifeſta peccata non ſunt occulta correctione purganda: Manifeſt ſins muſt not be purged with ſecret correction, &c. But Popiſh Prieſts many times enjoyne ſecret penance for great ſins, wherein they doe contrary to their owne Canons.

The third part, of Pardons and Indulgences.

The Papiſts.

1 THe principall Magiſtrats of the Church are no leſſe authorized to pardon, than to puniſh, and to remit the temporall puniſhment due to ſinners, the offence being firſt forgiven, which we call an Indulgence or pardon, Rhemiſt, 2. Cor. 2. 4. Concil. Trid. ſeſſ. 25.

72. Error.

Argum. To whom you forgive any thing, I forgive alſo, 2 Cor. 2. 10. Here the Apoſtle forgiveth the young man a piece of his puniſhment, when he might have kept him longer in penance for his offence, Rhemiſt. ibid.

2 Cor. 2. 10.

Anſwer. 1. Wee denie not, but that the Church may releaſe ſuch publike exerciſe of humiliation, which is enjoyned offenders for triall of their repentance, and ſome ſatisfaction of the Church, when it ſeeth that they are ſufficiently humbled. But it followeth not, that the Church therefore may diſpence with any neceſſary part of repentance towards God. 2 Whereas you ſay, the Apoſtle, notwithſtanding his rebuke was ſufficient, might have kept the young man ſtill in temporall puniſhment: it is cleane contrary to the Apoſtles owne rule, who perſwadeth the Corinthians to forgive him, leſt he ſhould be overcome of too much heavineſſe, verſ. 7. The Apoſtle therefore would neither forgive nor releaſe him, before they had forgiven him, and he had ſatisfied the whole Church, verſ. 10. Neither would he keep him longer in puniſhment, having once ſorrowed ſufficiently, verſ. 6. The Apoſtle therefore did neither bind nor releaſe him at his owne pleaſure, but as hee ſaw repentance to be wrought in the offender.

The Proteſtants.

THe power which the Pope and popiſh Biſhops doe challenge unto themſelves, in giving Pardons and Indulgences, is moſt blaſphemous.

1 They doe take upon them to releaſe both the puniſhment of this life, and the paines of Purgatory alſo: and ſay, that their pardons profit both the dead and the living, Bull. Leon. 10.

1 Contrarie to their owne Canons, par. 2. cauſ. 24. qu. 2. c. 2. Gelaſius: Eccleſia viventes poteſt ligare, vel ſolvere, non mortuos: The Church may looſe or bind thoſe which are living, but not the dead. And it is grounded upon that ſaying of our Saviour, Whatſoever you bind in earth, &c. Super terram (inquit) He ſaith upon the earth: for he that dieth being bound, nuſquam dicit abſolvi, hee ſaith no where, is abſolved. And Clemens 5. reproveth certaine pardoners, and decreeth againſt them, which made them beleeve, that gave them almes, Quòd animas eorum (ut mendaciter aſſerunt) de purgatorio extrahant: That they drew out of Purgatory their friends ſoules, as they lyingly ſaid: Clement. lib. 5. tit. 9. c. 2.

2 They pardon not only the puniſhment, but the ſin, both paſt, and to come, for dayes, yeeres, hundreds, thouſands of yeeres: howſoever the Rhemiſts would beare us in hand, that an indulgence is a releaſe but of the puniſhment. Such was the firſt Jubile pardon granted by Boniface 8. anno 1300. And another by Leo the 10. anno 1513.

Clemens 6. in his bull of the Jubile yeere, ſaith thus, Mandamus Angelis quatenus animam omnium accedentium, &c. Wee command the Angels, to carrie all the ſoules of thoſe that come to Rome this yeere, out of Purgatory into Paradiſe: Et concedimus cruce ſignatis, ut ad eorum vota, duas vel tres animas, quas vellent, è Purgatorio liberarent: And wee grant to all thoſe, that have taken upon them the holy Croſſe, to deliver two or three ſoules at their pleaſure out of Purgatory. See what monſtrous blaſphemies here are. See alſo the Boſton pardons granted by Pope Innocent, Pope Iulie, Pope Clement, which gave them releaſe of all their ſins for five hundred yeeres, Fox p. 1178.

2 Contrary to their owne Canons: Clem. lib. 5. tit. 9. c. 2. Certaine Pardoners, and Queſtors are condemned, quia à pœna & culpa abſolvant: which tooke upon them to abſolve both from the fault and puniſhment.

2 They give indulgences for temporall ſervices: as for giving toward Subſidies for the maintenanc of warre, for building of bridges, and ſuch like: for the which the Councell of Baſil is reprehended, epiſtol. ſynod. 7. But the Apoſtle granteth indulgence to the inceſtuous perſon only becauſe of his true ſorrow, which teſtified his repentance, 2 Cor. 2. 7.

2 Cor. 2. 7.

4 They tooke upon them to grant plenarie and generall indulgences, as to all that doe ſuch and ſuch things: as in the yeere of Jubile, to all, that viſite Rome. So the Councell of Baſil gave plenarie indulgence to all reſiant in the Councell, ſeſſ. 45. Thus did not Iohn Baptiſt, who miniſtred Baptiſme of repentance and remiſſion of ſins, (which is the true indulgence) not to all indifferently, but to thoſe which confeſſed their ſins, Matth. 3. 6. the reſt he rebuked, and threatned with Gods judgements. Yea their own Decrees teſtifie: Diſtinct. 50. 27. Satis temerarius eſt, qui cunctis remiſſionem peccatorum ſe dare poſſe putet: He is very raſh, that thinketh he is able to give remiſſion of ſins to all.

Matth. 3. 6.

5 They grant indulgences to many that are abſent, and unknowne, not examining their contrition and repentance: ſo did not our Saviour, who uſed to heale thoſe only in whom he ſaw faith, Mark. 5. 34. Thy faith hath made thee whole, Mark. 9. 23. Luke 7. 50. Yea and their owne Canons ſay, Peccati venia non datur niſi correcto: Pardon of ſin is not granted, but to thoſe which are amended: ſext. decretal. regul. jur. 5.

Mark. 5. 34.
Luk. 7. 50.

6 Their indulgences were reſtrained to ſeverall limits and circuites: Decret. Greg. lib. 5. tit. 38. c. 4. Indulgentiæ non proſunt non ſubditis: Indulgences doe not profit thoſe which are not ſubjects to the Biſhop, that is, of his dioceſſe. But Chriſts indulgence is generall to all, Ioh. 3. 15. Whoſoever beleeveth in him, ſhall not periſh.

Iohn 3. 15.

7 They give indulgence not for the time paſt only, but for the time to come, giving as it were thereby a libertie to ſin. Chriſt doth otherwiſe: after he had freed the adulterous woman, Iohn 8. hee ſaith, Goe and ſin no more: he doth not abſolve her for the time to come, but only giveth her an admonition: See the Canon of Gelaſius following.

Iohn 8. 11.

8 Their indulgences did flye in every corner like flyes in the ayre, or moates in the Sun: whereof there hath been an ancient complaint: Fiunt hodie tot indulgentiæ, &c. There are ſo many indulgences now adaies, that they grow into contempt, opuſc. tripart. lib. 3. c. 9. But the Scriptures make not ſalvation ſo eaſie or common a thing, but that even the righteous doe find it through much difficultie obtained, 1 Pet. 4. 18.

1 Pet. 4. 18.

9 By their indulgences they could give power to other to deliver ſoules, as before in the bull of Clemens 6. but Chriſt gave power only unto the Apoſtles and Miniſters to remit or retaine ſinnes, to bind, or looſe: they can have no committies on this behalfe.

10 And that which filled up the meaſure of iniquity, they ſet their pardons to ſale: as in Pope Leo his time, his pardoners for ten ſhillings would give to any man power, to deliver one ſoule at his pleaſure out of Purgatory.

Fox p. 854.

Argum. The Scripture ſaith, that * God only forgiveth ſins, Mark. 2.7. And that Chriſt no otherwiſe, than as God, forgave ſins, verſ. 10. His Apoſtles only as his Miniſters and Ambaſſadors, in his name, declare and pronounce remiſſion of ſins, 2 Corinth. 5.19. Wherefore there is no ſuch power given unto men, at their pleaſure to bind or looſe.

* Which ſentence though it were uttered by the Scribes and Phariſees yet is it allowed by our bleſſed Saviour, and is agreeable to other places of Scripture. Iſai. 43. 25.

1 Auguſtine ſaith, pax Eccleſiæ dimittit peccata: Non ſecundum arbitrium hominum, ſed ad arbitrium Dei, & orationes ſanctorum: the peace of the Church looſeth ſins, not at the pleaſure of men, but according to the will of God, and prayers of Saints.

See our further anſwer to this cavill. Retec. p. 224.

Tertullian thus taxeth the forwardnes of ſome to grant indulgences: quod ſi diſciplina ſolius officia ſortitus es, nec imperio præſidere, ſed miniſterio, quis aut quantus es indulgere? quum neq; prophetam neque Apoſtolum exhibeas, cares ea virtute, cujus eſt indulgere: If thou only haſt obtained the office of Diſcipline, not to bee ſet over others by an authority, but a miniſtery, who and what manner of one, art thou to grant indulgences? ſeeing thou neither ſheweſt to bee a Prophet nor Apoſtle, thou wanteſt the power, which giveth indulgence, &c. In the Æthiopike Church, the patriarke granteth no indulgences nor pardons, as Zaga Zabo their Biſhop confeſſeth.

2 Neither was there of ancient time any indulgences in the Greeke Church: as Alphonſus confeſſeth: de indulgentiis nulla apud priſcos mentio, &c. there is no mention of indulgences in the ancient writers: and at this day the Muſcovites following the faſhion of the Greeke Church, allow of no indulgences.

Oſtienſ. in ſumm. lib. 5.
Byel lect. 37. in can. Miſſ.

Gelaſius epiſtol. ad Sanct. Auditum ſub iſto cœlo non legitur, quod eorum voce depromitur: date nobis veniam, dum tamen nos in errore duremus: Neſcio inter quæ mundi prodigia hoc poſſit admitti: Remitti culpa de præterito poteſt, correctione ſine dubio ſubſequente, &c. It was never heard of in the world (as they ſay,) give us pardon, but let us continue in error ſtill: this may bee well counted a monſtrous thing: the fault that is paſt, may be forgiven, if amendment of life follow after. This learned Biſhop counteth it a monſtrous thing, to forgive ſinnes to come, men ſtill continuing in ſinne: but this is an uſuall practiſe in the Popes Conſiſtory at Rome, to forgive ſinnes for many yeeres to come.

This doctrine alſo hath been ſealed: Thomas Clarke perſecuted for ſaying the Pope hath no authoritie to give pardon, and to releaſe any mans ſoule from ſinne, and ſo from paine, Fox p. 830.

Iohn Fortune Martyr, being asked if he did not beleeve, that the Pope had power to forgive ſins, anſwered; The Pope is but a man, and the Prophet David ſaith, No man can deliver his brother, nor make agreement for him unto God, Pſal. 49. Fox pag. 1918.

Pſalm. 49. 7.

Here alſo may bee remembred, how one William Button apposed a pardoner with this queſtion: Whether the holy father the Pope could deliver ſoules out of Purgatory? There is no doubt of that ſaid the other: Why doth he not then (quoth Button) of charity deliver all ſoules from thence? For this ſpeech the good man was troubled, Fox pag. 1230.

This alſo was Maſter Latimers queſtion: Why the Pope, who could with a word of his mouth (as they ſay) have ſpoiled all Purgatory; doth ſuffer notwithſtanding ſo much money to be beſtowed that way, and to deprive us of ſo many Patrons in heaven, as he might deliver out of Purgatory, pag. 1748. col. 1.

The Papiſts.

2 THe ſatisfactorie and meritorious works of the Saints which doe abound, being communicable, and applicable to the faithfull that want, are the very ground of the indulgences, and pardons of the Church, and the very treaſure thereof, and to be diſpenſed according to every mans need by the paſtors of the Church, 2 Corinth. 2. ſect. 5. Coloſ. 1. ſect. 4. Rhemiſt.

73. Error.

The Doway ſtudents would prove this point, by that text, Iob. 6. 1. 2. would God my ſins were weighed, &c. As the ſand of the Sea this would appeare heavy, whence they infer thus: which ſuperabundance of paines patiently ſuffer by holy Iob and other Saints, more than their ſins deſerved, ſpecially of our bleſſed Saviour, who could not ſin, and of our bleſſed Lady who never ſinned, remaine an infinite treaſure of ſatisfactory works appliable by the ſupreme ſtuard of the Church Chriſts Vircar, &c. and in the margent thus: pardons doe apply the ſufferings of ſome for the ſatiſfaction of others.

Iob 6. 1. 2.

The Proteſtants.

HEre are many blaſphemies and untruths couched together.

1 That a mans penalties may exceed and bee greater than his ſinnes, and ſo his abounding may ſupply another mans want. For thus the Rhemiſts ſay: Which cannot ſtand with the juſtice of God, to puniſh a man more than he hath deſerved. And it is contrary to the Sciptures: Enter not into judgement with thy ſervant: for in thy ſight ſhall none that liveth be juſtified, Pſalm. 143. 2. And Iob ſaith, If

Iob 9.3. the Lord ſhould call him to account, hee ſhould not anſwer one to a thouſand, 9. 3.

2 How can the Church-governours diſpenſe the merits of one to another? Who made them ſtewards of another mans good? Yee ſay alſo the contrary your ſelves, That the abounding paſſions of the Saints are applicable to others by the ſufferers intention, Rhem. 1. Coloſſ. 2.2. Then not by the Churches diſpenſation.

3 It is a great blaſphemie, that one may bee holpen by another mans merits, and it doth derogate from the death of Chriſt, whoſe only merits are the treaſure and ſtore-houſe of the Church: The moſt Ezech. 14. 14. righteous man that ever was, can but ſave his owne ſoule, Ezech. 14. 14. And that only by Chriſt.

And what a preſumption is this, that they dare to match the ſufferings of our bleſſed Saviour, and of the Saints together? and ſo make them, to bee cooperators and joint-workers with their maſter, whereas the ſcripture ſaith that Chriſt had trode alone the wine-preſſe of his Fathers wrath.

Iſay 63.3. 4 That place in Iob is by them corrupted: there is no word, that ſignifieth ſin: as the Latine tranſlator readeth, the word is כעש Caghas, which ſignifieth griefe, anger, as the ſeptuagint expreſſe it by the word ὀργὴ, and ſo it is taken, Eccleſ. 7. 5. anger is better than laughter: it were very unfit, to ſay, ſin is better than laughter: ſo then Iob doth not compare his ſins and afflictions together, as though theſe exceeded the other: but hee deſcribeth the greatneſſe of his griefe, by an hyperbolicall ſpeech without compariſon.

See the judgement of ſome of the Greeke and South Church, againſt the applying of works of ſome to others: before, err. 65.

In Matth. ſerm. 22. Auguſtine ſaith: Unuſquiſque pro ſe rationem reddit, nec alieno teſtimonio quiſquam adjuvatur apud Deum,—& vix ſibi quiſque ſufficit, &c. Every man ſhall give account for himſelfe, before God no man is holpen by the teſtimony of another: the teſtimony of his owne conſcience doth hardly ſuffice for himſelfe.

Confeſſ. of Saxonie artic. 17. they call this applying of indulgences, whereby the Pope doth apply the merits of Saints unto others, counterfeit, &c. Two of their owne writers, Major and Durandus, by Bellarmines own confeſſion doe doubt of the truth of this treaſure, which they ſay is mixed of the paſſions of Chriſt, and of the Saints, &c.

Bellar. lib. 1. de indulgent. c. 2.

The Papiſts.

74. Error. 3 THe diſpenſing of pardons & indulgences, is only committed, they ſay, to the chiefe Magiſtrates the Popes and Biſhops: and as the Biſhops in their Dioceſſe have eſpeciall caſes reſerved to themſelves, wherein inferiour Prieſts are not to deale; ſo the Pope hath alſo his proper reſervations, wherein other Prelates are not to meddle, Concil. Trident. ſeſſ. 14. cap. 7. The caſes reſerved to the Pope are 51. in number, Fox pag. 785. The Biſhop of Paris, an. 1515. reſerved theſe caſes to himſelfe, to diſpenſe in murther, witchcraft, ſacrilege, hereſie, ſimonie, adultery; ex Tileman. Heſhuſ. loc. 9. de pœnitent. err. 63. Likewiſe the yeeres of their pardons are limited: Biſhops may not exceed 40. dayes pardon: the Pope may be laviſh in his hundreds and thouſands: yea, and this reſervation of caſes, ſtandeth not only with the externall policie of the Church, but is of force even before God, Concil. Trident. ſeſſ. 14. cap. 7.

The Proteſtants.

WE will not much contend with them about reſervation of caſes, for we acknowledge no ſuch power to give pardons, or indulgences, either in ſuperiour or inferiour Prieſts: yet wee will ſhew how this device of theirs ſtandeth not with their own doctrine.

Argum. 1. It is a greater power to remit the ſin, than to releaſe the puniſhment: but every Prieſt hath the greater power, as they ſay, to remit ſins, yea as fully as hath the Pope himſelfe: Allen in his booke of pardons, cap. 2. Ergo, why have they not the leſſe power, which is by indulgence to diſpenſe with the puniſhment? And that of theſe two, the remiſſion of ſins is the greater, it is confeſſed by the Rhemiſt. 2 Cor. 2. ſect. 6.

Argum. 2. In the point of death, the reſervation of caſes hath no place: but at that time every Prieſt may abſolve from all manner ſins and puniſhment, Concil. Trident. ſeſſ. 14. cap. 7. But every houre is with ſome, and ought to be with all, the point of death: becauſe we are uncertaine when it commeth, and therefore ought alwayes to be in a readines. Therefore even by their owne rule every Prieſt hath at all times authority to abſolve in all caſes.

Iohn. 20. 23. Againe, if theſe words of Chriſt be ſpoken to all Miniſters and preachers of the Goſpell, Iohn. 20. 22. Whoſe ſins yee retaine, &c. (which cannot be denied) to them all then is committed equally that power of binding and looſing, which is exerciſed by the preaching of the word.

Their owne Canons doe give authority to every Prieſt to enjoyne penance: Decr. Greg. lib. 5. tit. 38. cap. 12. and they doe bind every man, injunctam ſibi pœnitentiam adimplere, to fulfill the penance injoyned; or elſe, vivens ab eccleſia ingreſſu arceatur: He that refuſeth muſt be kept out of the Church as long as he liveth, and want Chriſtian buriall when he is dead, &c. If every Prieſt then by their law hath power to enjoyne penance; why not alſo to releaſe penance? wherefore herein they doe their Prieſts wrong.

And ſeeing we are entred to ſpeake of the abuſe and uſurpation of the keyes in the popiſh Church, as in reſervation of caſes, and ſuch like, I will briefly touch other notable abuſes and corruptions among mong them in the diſpenſation of the keyes, and ſpecially concerning excommunicating: wherein they apparently tranſgreſſe their owne canons.

Tertullian in his time knew of no ſuch reſervation of caſes but only unto Chriſt: as ſpeaking of repentance he ſaith: qua aut leviorib. delictis veniam ab Epiſcopo conſequi poterit, aut majorib. & irremiſſibilib. a ſolo Deo: which either may obtaine pardon for ſmall faults of the Biſhop, or of great and irremiſſible of God, &c. And againe, repentance in deed is due, De venia Deo, reſervamus, but pardon wee reſerve for God: the Æthiopike Church thus profeſſeth by the penne of Zaga Zabo there Biſhop: the confeſſors doe give unto us abſolution of all our ſins by the power of the Church, Nullo caſu epiſcopo aut patriarcha reſervato quamvis graviſſimo, no caſe beeing reſerved to the Biſhop or Patriarke, though never ſo great.

Damianus à Goes de morib. Æthiop.

2 Baſil of the Greeke Church ſaith: illud vero in quib. delictis, &c. But that is not to be asked, in what ſins every one ſhould remit: cum novum teſtamentum nihil hic ſtatuat differentia, &c. whenas the new Teſtament here appointeth no difference, but doth promiſe remiſſion of ſins of every ſin, to thoſe that truely repent, &c.

Regul. cōtract. queſt. 15.

3 Confeſſ. of Auſpurg. artic. 7. From hence are theſe burthens—that a ſin in a caſe reſerved can not be pardoned but by the authority of him that reſerved it, whereas the canons ſpeake only of reſerving of canonicall puniſhments and not of reſerving the fault, &c.

Harm. ſect. 17. pag. 526.

4 Franciſcus de Victoria their profeſſor of Salamanca ſaith, that the Pope may graviter errare, ſin grievouſly in diſpenſing with the decrees of councels, &c. and he complaineth of ſuch a company of diſſolute indulgences, as hee calleth them from the Court of Rome, ut orbis ferre non poſſet, that the world cannot endure them, &c. Wee ſee then the fruit, which commeth, even by the judgement of their owne men, by the reſervation of caſes.

Retec. 17. propoſ. 5.

Abuſes in the Popiſh Church in the adminiſtration of the Keyes, and namely about Excommunication.

1 THe ancient Canons forbid, that the dead ſhould be anathematized, or excommunicate: Anaſt. decr. 2. Monente nos Apoſtolo, &c. The Apoſtle admoniſhing us, &c. leſt any offence might riſe in the Church, while we goe about to judge of them, which are paſſed out of this life, &c. Whether we live or die, we are the Lords: Why doſt thou judge another mans ſervant? And to the ſame effect Paulinus thus anſwereth Iuſtinian the Emperor: Quibus recitabitur ſententia damnationis noſtra, &c. To whom ſhall the ſentence of our condemnation be recited? To what end ſhould we warre with the dead? &c. But nothing is more common with Papiſts, than to excommunicate the dead.

2 excommunication in time paſt in the purer ages of the Church, was not uſed to bee denounced againſt Kings: Epiſtol. Leodinenſ. cont. Paſchal. 2. Si quis vetus & novum teſtamentum, &c. If any man turne over the old and new teſtament, hee ſhall evidently find, quod aut minimè, aut difficile poſſunt, that Kings and Princes may hardly or not at all be excommunicate; they may be admoniſhed, reprooved, &c. Behold Pope Hildebrand was the firſt, qui levavit ſacerdotalem lanceam contra diadema regum, that lift up the Prieſtly weapon againſt the crowne of Princes. But now they take upon them at their pleaſure to excommunicate princes, and it hath been the practiſe of the Popes a long time.

3 They did not uſe of ancient time to excommunicate upon diſpleaſure, but for ſome notable ſin: Origen. tract. 24. in Matth. Eſt videre multos doctores, &c. Wee may ſee many doctors and teachers, that ſuffer not to enter into the Church, &c. Non propter peccata, &c. They doe not excommunicate for ſinne, but of pleaſure and contention; and they are better many times than themſelves, &c. But this was uſuall in Popery, to excommunicate men upon diſpleaſure, as Arundel Archbiſhop of Canterbury ſuſpended all the Churches in London, that did not ring their bels at his comming: Fox pag. 554.

4 The uſe hath been, that none for light or ſmall offences ſhould be excommunicate. Concil. Aurel. 5. can. 2. Nullus ſacerdotum quenquam recta fidei hominem, &c. That no Prieſt for light cauſes or matters ſuſpend any man from the communion: But the contrary is practiſed among them; as Courtney Archbiſhop of Canturbury ſuſpended certaine poore men, becauſe they brought litter for his horſe in ſacks. Fox p. 555.

5 It hath been decreed, Diem peremptorium ad primam citationem non ſtatuendum, maxime cum de rebus Eccleſiaſticis agitur: That a peremptory day ſhould not bee ſet upon the firſt citation, eſpecially in Eccleſiaſticall matters, but that the partie ſhould be further expected: Lateranenſ. ſub Alexand. 3. part. 2. cap. 19. The contrary is with them practiſed, upon the firſt citation to excommunicate.

6 Likewiſe it was decreed, Penitùs interdicimus, ut cauſa cupiditatis nullus, &c. Wee doe inhibite, that none upon covetouſneſſe doe excommunicate, or abſolve, eſpecially where the cuſtome is, that the excommunicate party when hee is abſolved, ſhould pay money. Lateranen. ſub Innocent. 3. c. 49. But they uſe to excommunicate for want of their fees.

7 Another fault before this time complained of, quod tot hodie fiunt excommunicationes per officia-

les. That there are now ſo many excommunications by officials, that they are contemned & turned to laughter: Opuſc. tripart. lib. 3. c. 9. Senonenſ. concil. decret. mor. 31. We ſtraightly charge, ut caveant ab earum multiplicatione, &c. That they take heed of multiplying excommunications, ne in vilipendium deducantur, that they be not made nought worth. But nothing is more common with them, than for popiſh curſes and excommunications to flye abroad.

8 Lateranenſ. ſub Alexand. 3. part. 1. c. 3. Niſi admonitione canonica præmiſſa, &c. That the prelates ſhould not pronounce the ſentence of excommunication, but upon canonicall admonition going before; ſo alſo was it decreed, Concil. Oxonienſ. ſub Stephano: But it is their uſe, to excommunicate at the firſt, without any other admonition.

9 It hath been the uſe, that for publike and notorious ſinnes, men ſhould bee excommunicate: Concil. Cabilon. ſub Carol. c. 25. Si quis publicè peccat, &c. If any man ſin publikely, ſecundùm ordinem canonum pro merito ſuo excommunicetur, &c. let him according to the canons bee excommunicated for his demerite, and ſo bee reconciled: but it is a rare thing with them to excommunicate for adulterie, blaſphemie, uſurie, and ſuch like, but to enjoyne a little popiſh penance, and ſo to reconcile them.

10 Carthag. 4. c. 84. Epiſcopus nullum prohibeat ingredi Eccleſiam, &c. Let the Biſhop forbid none to enter into the Church, and to heare the word, whether a Gentile, Jew, or heretike, untill the Maſſe, &c. which was then nothing elſe, but the communion: but with them excommunicate perſons are excluded from hearing the word at all, whereby they might bee brought to repentance for their ſin.

11 None in the purer times of the Church were excommunicate, before their cauſe was heard: Epiſtol. Leodienſ. Nec à Papa Romano nos excommunicatos credimus, &c. Neither doe we beleeve, that wee are excommunicate of the Pope, for wee know hee is not ignorant, what Nicodemus ſaith; our law condemneth no man, unleſſe it heare him firſt: But they uſe to excommunicate without preſence of the partie, or hearing of the cauſe.

12 It is their law, that excommunicatus non poteſt excommunicare, that they which are excommunicate, cannot excommunicate others. Cauſ. 24. q. c. 4. But the Papiſts ſtand ipſo facto excommunicate, as all heretiks and idolaters doe: and Maſter Beza ſaith, he told them to their face at Piſſiacum, that there was none of the popiſh hierarchie, which by the pure and ancient canons of the Church is not ipſo facto to be pronounced excommunicate. Epiſtol. 1. p. 18.

13 Their owne canons make two kinds of excommunications: the greater, which is à communione fidelium, from the communion of the faithfull; and the leſſe, à perceptione ſacramentorum, from the receiving of the Sacraments: Decr. Greg. lib. 5. tit. 39. c. 59. And the greater excommunication is not to be uſed, but upon great offences: Synod. Colonienſ. part. 13. cap. 5. Cum excommunicatio pœna ſit, qua nulla major in Eccleſia: Seeing excommunication is a puniſhment, than the which there is no greater in the Church, let no man be excommunicate, niſi pro peccato lethali, but for deadly ſin. Now the contrary is practiſed with them, which draw out even the greater excommunication upon every ſmall occaſion, never uſing the leſſe at all: And that it is the greater excommunication, both their practiſe ſheweth, in ſeparating not from the communion onely, but from the entrance into the Church; and the Canon likewiſe witneſſeth, excommunicatio ſimpliciter lata: an excommunication ſimply pronounced, without any condition, is underſtood of the greater: Decr. Greg. lib. 5. tit. 39. c. 39.

14 By the ancient Canons, it is not lawfull to have any fellowſhip with excommunicate perſons: they all ſtand excommunicate, qui cibo, potu, oſculo, &c. which doe communicate with them in meat or drinke, &c. Cauſ. 11. q. 3. c. 3. Nicolaus. Sine ſpe ſit reconciliationis, He is without hope to be reconciled, that doth company with the excommunicate. C. 7. Martin. Non palam vel ſecretè cum eis loquendum: They muſt not openly or ſecretly talke with them. C. 18. Iſidor. It is not lawfull to goe to the houſe of one excommunicate, C. 26. Communicare non licet iis: It is not lawfull to communicate with thoſe that keep company with the excommunicate. C. 25. Greg. Now then the Canons being thus ſtrict, that not only they that keep company with the excommunicate, but they which communicate with the companions of the excommunicate, that doe eat drinke and talke with them, do ſtand alſo excommunicate: by this meanes, thouſands of people (excommunications being ſo common as they are) ſhall ſtand ſubject at once to the ſentence of excommunication.

15 Becauſe excommunication was counted ſo heavy a ſentence: anathema, æterna mortis damnatio: It is the damnation of eternall death, to be anathematized or excommunicate. Cauſ. 11. q. 3. c. 41. In the ſame place it is decreed, that the ſentence of excommunication, non ferenda ſine conſcientia Epiſcopi, ſhould not be given without the knowledge of the Biſhop or Archbiſhop himſelfe. But the contrary is practiſed amongſt them; every officiall, deputie, or ſurrogate, hath as great power to excommunicate as the Biſhop himſelfe.

16 Beſide, excommunicate perſons (by the Canons of Imperiall conſtitutions) are deprived of civill privileges and immunities: Excommunicandus non audiendus in judicio: An excommunicate perſon is not to be heard in Judgement, decret. Greg. lib. 1. tit. 29. c. 21. Non ſunt homicidæ, &c. They are not guilty of murder, that take armes againſt the excommunicate: Cauſ. 23. qu. 5. c. 47. Urban. In nullum teſtimonium recipiendi: They muſt not bee received as witneſſes in any cauſe: Calixt. epiſt. 2.

They are ſubject Banno imperiali, to the imperiall outlawrie, if they ſtand one yeere excommunicate: Cod. lib. 1. Tit. 6. leg. 13. Frederic. Who ſeeth not what inconveniences will enſue, that thouſands being wrapped in the ſentence of excommunication at once, as I ſhewed artic. 14. ſhall alſo incur the penalty and danger of the Princes lawes.

17 It is prohibited by the Canons, that any man ſhould excommunicate in his owne cauſe, Pro vindicta propria injuria, quod ſacris regulis prohibetur, to be revenged for any injury done to himſelfe, which is forbidden by the ſacred rules: cauſ. 23. qu. 4. c. 27. Gregor. The contrary is practiſed by popiſh Prelates: as ſee an example before artic. 4.

18 Nicen. 2. can. 4. It is decreed that no man, Propter auri exactionem vel alicujus alius ſpeciei, venerandum templum claudere: Should for the exacting of gold or ſilver, or ſuch like, ſhut up the Church doores, that is, interdict it, that the divine myſteries be not ſolemnized in it: The popiſh practice is contrary, who for the omiſſion of the leaſt duty, or fee belonging to them, and upon other ſmall occaſions, do interdict Churches; an example hereof ſee in Arundell, artic. 3.

19 By the old Canons hee that was excommunicate, was ſolemnly reconciled to the Church, Terra proſtratus veniam poſtulat: Falling downe to the ground, hee muſt aske forgiveneſſe: and publique prayer was to be made for him in this manner: Praſta quæſumus Domine huic famulo tuo, &c. Grant Lord, wee pray thee, to this thy ſervant worthy fruit of repentance, that he may be reſtored to the holy Church, from whoſe integrity hee hath erred by ſinning, cauſ. 11. qu. 3. cap. 108. But now among them abſolution is done in ſecret, without any notice given, or ſubmiſſion made before the congregation.

20 Laſtly, to end where I began, in time paſt the Presbyters were joyned with the Biſhop, in the adminiſtration of the keyes of the Church, as in binding and looſing: but the Pope and popiſh prelates were the firſt that brought in reſervation of caſes, and appropriated all to themſelves, excluding the reſt, as it may appeare by this reſervation of caſes, and for the truth of antiquity in this behalfe, theſe authorities I had at hand.

1 Cauſ. 11. qu. 3. c. 106. Debent. 12. ſacerdotes epiſcopum circumſtare, &c. Twelve other Prieſts muſt ſtand by the Biſhop, when he pronounceth excommunication, &c. C. 108. Likewiſe, when the penitent party was to be reconciled, the Biſhop muſt be aſſiſted with as many.

2 Cauſ. 12. q. 2. c. 51. Nec epiſcopi ſine presbyteris, nec presbyteri ſine epiſcopo res eccleſiæ vendant, &c. Neither the Biſhop without the Presbyters, nor the Presbyters without the Biſhop muſt ſell the goods of the Church. If they were joyned together in diſpenſing of the temporall goods of the Church, much more in the ſpirituall.

3 They were joyned together in deciding and ending of controverſies of the Church. Cauſ. 15. quæſt. 7. cap. 2. Præſentibus ſenioribus epiſcopus, &c. The Biſhop ſhall heare the cauſes of the Clergie, the Seniors or Elders being preſent. C. 6. Nullius cauſam audiat epiſcopus, &c. Let the Biſhop heare no mans cauſe without the preſence of the Clergie. Decret. Gregor. lib. 5. tit. 7. cap. 9. Lucius 3. Epiſcopi cum conſilio Clericorum, &c. The Biſhops with the counſell of the Clergie muſt judge of heretiks.

4 Innocentius 3. decreed, that omnis utriuſq; ſexus, &c. that every one of both ſexes upon paine of excommunication, ſhould confeſſe proprio ſacerdoti, to their owne Prieſt, and ſhould fulfill injunctam pœnitentiam, penance enjoyned by him, decret. Greg. lib. tit. 38. c. 12.

5 Synod. Auguſt. cap. 19. Poteſt quilibet confeſſor pro peccatorum magnitudine, ex cauſa, quæ ſibi juſta videbitur, ad tempus communione interdicere: Every confeſſor may according to the greatneſſe of the ſinnes, as hee ſhall ſee juſt cauſe, for a time to interdict from the Communion. If then the Prieſt have power to bind, why hath he not power to looſe? and if to looſe, then alſo to bind? Their owne Canons allow them to injoyne penance, to interdict the Communion, why not alſo to give indulgence?

6 Origen ſaith: Epiſcopi & presbyteri, quibus ſunt credita cathedræ, qui tradunt eccleſias, quibus non oportet, &c. Biſhops and Presbyters, to whom the chaires or ſeats of the Church are committed, which doe deliver Churches to thoſe whom they ſhould not, are they that ſell Doves, &c. Hee ſaith, that to both of them the chaire of the Church is committed: Origen. tract. 15. in Matth.

7 Ambroſe thus witneſſeth: Lib. 2. de Cain & Abel. c. 4. Remittuntur peccata per Dei verbum, cujus Levites interpres & executor eſt, Levites igitur miniſter remiſſionis eſt: Sinnes are remitted by the word of God, whereof the Levite is the interpreter, and executor, the Levite then is the Miniſter of remiſſion.

8 To this agreeth our Engliſh confeſſion, Harm. ſect. 11. Seeing one manner of word is given to all, and one only key belongeth to all, we ſay, there is but one only power of all Miniſters, as concerning opening and ſhutting.

9 To this accordeth a reverent learned man of our Church, writing thus: After Biſhops were appointed, &c. at length by cuſtome Presbyters were utterly excluded from all advice and counſell, whereof Ambroſe complaineth, and Biſhops only entermedled with the regiment of the Church. This manner of ſubjection in Presbyters, and prelation in Biſhops, grew only in continuance of time, and not by any ordinance of Chriſt or his Apoſtles: B. Bilſon. Of the regiment of the Church pag. 237. Whereby this reverend author, inſinuateth, as the truth is, that at the beginning Presbyters were Joyned with the Biſhops in the regiment of the Church and diſpenſation of the keyes, howſoever it is come to paſſe, that they are now utterly excluded.

We have the teſtimonie of the holy Martyrs: Richard Feurus holy Martyr, in preaching of the word is all the power contained of binding and looſing, Fox p. 913. col. 2.

Iames Bainebam Martyr: Hee that preacheth the word of God, and liveth thereafter, hath the key that bindeth and looſeth both in heaven and earth: the which key is the ſame Scripture that is preached, and the Pope hath no other key to bind or looſe, but the key of Scripture, Fox pag. 1029. col. 2.

The ninth queſtion, of the ceremonies and circumſtances of penance.

The Papiſts.

75. Error.

1 THey injoyne their penitent Clients to poll their heads, and their women to weare a vaile, to goe in blacke, to put on ſackcloth, to looke ſowrely: and ſuch like preſumptions they have concerning the habite of thoſe that doe penance, Bellarm. lib. 1. de pœnitent. cap. 22.

The Proteſtants.

OVr Saviour cleane contrary biddeth his Diſciples, not to looke ſowrely, nor to disfigure themſelves, when they faſt and repent, or to ſhew any other outward token of their ſorrow, but to do it ſecretly betweene themſelves and God, to waſh their face, to annoint themſelves with oyle, that it appeare not to men that they faſt. Math. 6. 16. 17. Math. 6. 16. 17.

De tempor. ſerm. 67.

Auguſtine alſo anſwering a certaine objection, that young men newly married might make: How can I ſhave my head or change my habit? ſaith thus, Vera converſio ſufficit tibi, ſine veſtimentorum commutatione: The true converſion of the heart may ſuffice thee without changing of thy veſture: See further the judgement and practiſe of other Churches before. Centur. 1. Error. 103.

2 THey enjoyned them to faſt bread and water certaine dayes in the weeke, to lie hard, to abſtaine from marriage, or to doe ſome great almes-deeds to ſatisfie for their ſin. Bellarmine ibid. to goe a pilgrimage, and ſuch like works of penance were preſcribed them.

The Proteſtants.

TRue repentance conſiſteth not in ſuch outward exerciſe of the body, but is a converſion rather of the heart. It was the manner of hypocrites, idolaters and ſuperſtitious men, to ſeeke to appeaſe their gods with afflicting of their fleſh, as the Gentiles did cut their haire, Deut. 14. 1. Baals prieſts did launce their fleſh 1 King. 18. 28.

Deut. 14. 1.
Coloſſ. 2. 23.

Argum. What is to bee thought of ſuch puniſhing of the carkaſſe, Saint Paul ſheweth, Coloſſ. 2. 23. He calleth it voluntary religion or ſuperſtition in not ſparing the body: when men doe not uſe ſuch outward exerciſes of faſting and abſtinence from the chaſtiſement of the fleſh, to ſubdue it to the ſpirit, but with an opinion of meriting thereby, preferring them before the faith and converſion of the heart, as the Papiſts doe.

De ver. & falſ. pœnit. cap. 13. tom. 4.

Auguſtine ſaith, Non ſit ſatis, quòd doleat, ſed ex fide doleat, & non ſemper doluiſſe, doleat: Let it not ſuffice to be ſorrowfull, but let his ſorrow proceed of faith, and let it grieve him, that hee is not alwayes grieved for his ſin. So then true repentance is eſpecially an inward worke of faith, rather than an exerciſe of the body, and it ought alwaies to continue. Wherfore it conſiſteth not in ſuch laborious works, which if a man ſhould long endure, he ſhould end his life ſooner than repentance.

Their owne Canons thus teſtifie: Cauſ. 33. queſt. 2. c. 13. 14. Leo, Conjugia poſt pœnitentiam legitimam non negentur: Let not marriage bee denied after due penance. Concerning the interdicting of meat, the Councell of Cabilon. c. 35. Quidam, quibus in pœnitentia vini & carnium uſus, &c. Some, to whom in penance the uſe of wine and fleſh is interdicted, they not changing their minde but their meat, doe live more delicately of other things. Spiritualis autem pœnitentia maxime in pœnitentibus vigere debet: But ſpirituall repentance ought moſt of all to flouriſh in penitent perſons.

And againſt this heavie yoake of penance in preſcribing ſo many ſuperſtitious obſervations, thus it ſtandeth in the Canon: Cauſ. 26. queſt. 7. cap. 12. Homini cui gra[illegible] pondus pœnitentia imponis, &c. neceſſe eſt, &c. The man, upon whom you impoſe ſo heavie a yoake of penance, muſt either of neceſſity reject your penance, or receiving it, and being not able to beare it, hee muſt bee more ſcandalized or offended.

In 1 Cor. 7. upon theſe words a woman is bound to the law, &c.

Chryſoſtome ſheweth, what cauſe was preſcribed the penitent in his time: ſeeke ſo to be purified, as that the blot may be waſhed away, quod autem eſt illius maculæ balneum, calidi lachrymarum fontes, gemitus è profundo cordis aſcendentes, &c. and what is the bath for ſuch a blot, the fountaines of warme teares, groanings from the bottome of the heart, perpetuall remorſe, not againe to attempt the like, &c. See further before, error. 69. in the end.

The Papiſts.

3. THey meaſure their penance by number of yeeres and dayes: They have their quadragenas, fortie dayes penance: ſeptenas, ſeven yeeres penance: Ex Tileman. Huſhuſ. loc. 9. de pœnitent. Err. 83. And they lengthen or cut ſhort the time of penance at their pleaſure, to continue three, ſeven, or ten yeeres, yea ſometime more, Bellarm. lib. 1. de pœnitent. c. 22.

78. Error.

The Proteſtants.

THat true repentance is not to be meaſured by the time, but by the right ſorrow and contrition of the offender, S. Paul teacheth us, who writeth for the young man to bee releaſed, becauſe of his great and ſufficient heavineſſe for his fault, 2 Cor. 2.7.

2 Cor. 2.7.

1 Auguſtine alſo ſaith, Pœnitentia vera, non annorum numero, ſed amaritudine animi cenſetur: —pœnitentia quamvis ſit exigui temporis, &c. True repentance is not meaſured by number of yeeres, but by the bitterneſſe of the ſoule: though it bee but for a ſhort time, yet it is not deſpiſed before that Judge which regardeth the heart.

De tempor. ſerm. 66.

2 Chryſoſtome ſaith: Ea demum eſt pœnitentia, ne amplius peccemus, That is true repentance, that we ſinne no more, &c. when one then hath forſaken his ſinne, whether hee have fulfilled his time of penance or not, hee is to be reſtored. Our adverſaries object againſt us the hereſie of Audiani, who, as Theodoret ſaith, Confeſſis donant remiſſionem, non tempus ad pœnitentiam: Did give remiſſion unto thoſe which were confeſſed, not time for their penance, as the Eccleſiaſticall Lawes preſcribe, &c. But, 1 Neither were the Audiani counted heretikes for tranſgreſſing an order of the Church. 2 Neither doe the Proteſtants deny, but that ſome time ſhould be taken for the triall of true repentance in the offenders. 3 And the Papiſts come nearer the Audiani, who doe give abſolution to the offenders, before they have ſet them a time for the probation of their repentance.

Homil. 33. in 4. caput Jerom.

Lib. 3. hæreſ. titulo de Audianis.

3 The writers and confeſſours of the reformed Churches doe not gaine-ſay, but that offenders ſhould have ſome time ſet them, that their unfained repentance may appeare: for both Calvin and Kemnitius, with other of our Profeſſours, doe not reject laborious works, as ſignes and fruits of repentance: and then it muſt follow, that a time be ſuppoſed, wherein they ſhould ſhew theſe fruits of their repentance. But three things we miſlike in their preſcript times of penance. 1 Their ſuperſtition, in aſcribing a ſatisfactorie vertue to the keeping of thoſe times. 2 Their diſorder, firſt in giving abſolution before they enjoyne penance, whereas in ancient time, they firſt tooke triall of the offenders repentance in ſome competent ſpace of time, as their owne Caſſander noteth. 3 Their indiſcretion, in reconciling all at the ſame time once in the yeere upon Maundie Thurſday as it is called, as Bellarmine confeſſeth: whereas in one and the ſame time, repentance cannot be wrought alike in all: and ſeeing there is inequalitie and difference in ſins, ſo ſhould the time of penance be limited.

THE FIFTEENTH GENERALL CONTROVERSIE, OF MATRIMONIE.

The ſeverall queſtions belonging to this Controverſie are theſe:

1 Whether Matrimony be a Sacrament properly ſo called.

2 Of Polygamy, that is, the marrying of many wives, either ſucceſſively, or at once.

3 Of the cauſes of divorce, and whether it bee lawfull to marrie after divorce.

4 Of the degrees in marriage: Firſt, the manner of ſupputation, or accounting of degrees. Secondly, whether the degrees forbidden, *Levit.*18. may bee diſpenſed with. Thirdly, whether any other degrees may bee by humane Law prohibited.

5 Of the impediments of marriage, of two ſorts: Firſt, of thoſe that may hinder the contract of marriage onely. Secondly, of ſuch impediments as may both diſſolve the contract and the marriage alſo conſummate.

6 The compariſon of marriage and virginitie, whether either bee preferred before the other before God.

Wherefore all ſignificative and myſticall ſignes are not Sacraments.

1 Tim.3.16.
Apoc.17.5.
Hebr.4.8.

Bellarmine replyeth, that this myſterie whereof the Apoſtle ſpeaketh, is to be applyed unto marriage, as it is a ſigne of the conjunction of Chriſt and his Church. Firſt, Hierome and Chryſoſtome ſo expound it, and Nazianzene likewiſe. Secondly, this Pronoune demonſtrative, hoc, muſt bee referred to that which went before, where he ſpake of marriage. Thirdly, the argument of the whole chapter ſheweth it, for by the example of Chriſt and his Church, the Apoſtle exhorteth men to love their wives; but if this myſterie appertained nothing at all to marriage, the Apoſtles argument faileth. Fourthly, the Apoſtle ſaith, I ſpeake εἰς Χριστὸν, not ἐν Χριστῷ: not in Chriſt, but to Chriſt: ſhewing hereby, that the myſterie in marriage is referred to Chriſt, Bellarm. de Matrim. c.*2.

Contra. Firſt, Hierome ſpeaketh only of the marriage of Adam and Eve. Adam Chriſtum.&c. Adam prefigured Chriſt, Eve the Church: this maketh nothing for marriage now: for that marriage was before ſin in the ſtate of innocencie, and before the time of grace: it followeth not it was a figure then, and therefore a ſigne now. Chryſoſtome onely ſaith, Magnum myſterium, relicto eo, qui genuit, &c. This is a great myſterie, that a woman forſaking him that begate her, ſhould cleave to her husband, &c. he ſpeaketh not of any myſterie in marriage referred to Chriſt. Nazianzene rather maketh againſt them: Scio, quia locus iſte, &c. I know that this place is full of Sacraments; but I thinke it to bee underſtood of Chriſt and his Church: hee ſaith no more than the Apoſtle doth, making no mention of marriage.

Secondly, this demonſtrative τοῦτο, is in Scripture referred to that which followeth, as well as to that which goeth before: as Mark.16.17. Theſe ſignes, ταῦτα, ſhall follow them that beleeve: and then the ſignes are rehearſed.

Thirdly, it followeth not becauſe the Apoſtle draweth his exhortation from the love of Chriſt to his Church, that whatſoever hee ſpeaketh of Chriſt and his Church, ſhould bee repreſented in marriage; as verſ.26. He gave himſelfe for it, that he might ſanctifie it, and cleanſe it, &c. Can he ſhew any ſuch myſterie in marriage? Epheſ.5.26.

Fourthly, hee ſheweth his ignorance in the Greeke tongue: for εἰς is oftentimes taken for ἐν, in: as εἰς τὴν Εκκλησίαν καθίζομαι, To ſit in the Church: Æſchin. εἰς στήλην γράφειν, To write in a pillar, Demoſt. So that in this place, εἰς, to, may verie well be taken for, ἐν, in, and Bellarmine here controlleth their owne Latine Text, which readeth in Chriſto, in Chriſt, not in Chriſtum to or toward Chriſt.

Laſtly, Ambroſe upon this place, Myſterium Sacramentum grande, &c. This myſterie is a great Sacrament in the unitie of the man and woman: nec hoc prodit, &c. yet he ſetteth not forth this, but rendreth another cauſe of the Church and the Saviour.

Argum. 2. Matrimony giveth grace of ſanctification to the parties married. Shee ſhall bee ſaved in bearing of children, if they continue in faith and love, 1 *Timoth.*2.15. Theſe are the graces given by matrimony: Ergo, a Sacrament: This argument is urged by the Doway Gloſſemen, *Annot. in Tobie, p.*1003. 1 Tim.2.15.

Anſwer. Firſt, wee deny that any Sacraments give or conferre grace, they are inſtruments onely of grace. Secondly, wee alſo grant that by matrimony God giveth to the faithfull this ſpeciall grace, To live in holineſſe and pureneſſe from the filthy pollution of the fleſh: but the Sacraments are ſeales of ſpirituall graces, and ſerve for the increaſe of faith: it is not ſufficient to be a meanes of any common gift, but of the ſpirituall and juſtifying grace to make a Sacrament. Thirdly, wherefore if by faith and love here they underſtand onely the fidelitie and dutie of wedlocke, they are not thoſe ſpirituall graces whereof Sacraments are ſeales: if we take them for the true faith and love which are the common graces of the faithfull, as the verie meaning is, they are as well to bee had out of wedlocke as in it. Laſtly, if they will receive Hieromes expoſition of this place (which I doe not greatly urge) they can have no colour at all out of this place: for this ſentence Si permanſerint, If they continue, hee referreth to the children: Si illos erudierint in fide, &c. If they bring them up in faith and love, &c. And this ſeemeth to be more agreeable to the letter, becauſe here the Apoſtle changeth the number, ſpeaking in the plurall, If they continue: but before in the ſingular, Shee ſhall be ſaved, &c. And where it is objected, That then the ſalvation of the mothers ſhould depend upon the faith of their children: the anſwer is, That the Apoſtle ſpeaketh not of the cauſes of ſalvation, but of removing the impediments, that women notwithſtanding bearing of children in ſorrow, which was laid upon them for a puniſhment, ſhall bee ſaved: their bearing of children ſhall bee no impediment unto their ſalvation, if they have a care to bring them up well. If therefore Hieromes interpretation beare any credit with them, adverſ. Iovinian. the graces here named doe appertaine to the children, not to the women.

The Proteſtants.

THat Matrimony is no Sacrament of the Goſpell, ſpeaking now properly, and underſtanding a Sacrament for the ſeale of the grace of God in the remiſſion of our ſinnes by Chriſt, it is thus proved.

Argum. 1. Matrimony was inſtituted by God before ſin in Paradiſe, therefore it can be no Sacrament of the Goſpell.

Matrimony alſo may be betweene Infidels, who are not capable of the Sacraments of the Church: Ergo, Argum. Luther. Calvin.

Bellarmine anſwereth: 1 The joyning together of Adam and Eve, had no promiſe of grace, or ſpirituall benediction, but onely a corporall: Increaſe and multiply: and therefore there is great difference betweene that marriage and ours now; Bellarm.

Contra. 1. Looke what promiſe of grace the marriage of Chriſtians now hath, the ſame had matrimony in Paradiſe: as marriage hath now a promiſe of fœcunditie and mutuall comfort, and to be a remedy againſt uncleanneſſe: the two firſt were promiſed in Paradiſe: *Fœcunditie, Gen.*1.28. mutuall help and comfort, 2.20. the third was not then needfull, ſinne as yet not being knowne in the world. Secondly, S. Paul ſpeaking of the marriage of the faithfull, *Epheſ.*5.31. uſeth the ſame forme of words which Adam did at the very firſt inſtitution, Therfore ſhal a man leave father and mother, &c. hereby ſhewing the inſtitution and ſubſtance of that matrimony and ours to bee all one. Thirdly, the Maſter of the ſentences ſaith, Lib.4.diſt.2.b. Conjugium ante peccatum inſtitutum eſt ad ſacramentum: Marriage was inſtituted before ſin to be a Sacrament. Diſtinct.22.c. Sacramentum pœnitentiæ, ſicut & conjugii ante tempus gratiæ à primordio humani generis fuit: The Sacrament of Penance, as likewiſe the Sacrament of marriage, were from the beginning of mankinde before the time of grace: then it followeth that matrimony is no Sacrament of the Goſpell, being inſtituted before.

Epheſ.5.31.

Bellarm. 2. The matrimony betweene Infidels is but a civill contract to performe the dutie of nature: but the marriage of Chriſtians is more, Bellar. lib. 1. de Matrimon. cap. 5.

Contra. Though Chriſtians know how better to uſe marriage than Infidels; yet the end and ſcope of them both is all one, as for mutuall comfort, for propagation, and to avoid fornication: theſe bee the chiefe ends of marriage, which in ſome ſort are to be found among Infidels: and therefore it is no Sacrament.

Argum. 2. Our adverſaries are contrarie to themſelves: for they call matrimony a prophanation of Orders, Martin. ſect. 15. cap. 11. And they ſay it is more tolerable for a Prieſt to keepe many concubines than to marrie: Pighius ex Tileman. Heſhuſ. loc. 21. Err. 2. Doe theſe fellowes meane in good ſooth that Matrimony is a Sacrament, which they make ſo vile, polluted, and uncleane a thing?

Pope Siricius alſo applyeth this ſaying of S. Paul againſt the marriage of Miniſters, They that are in the fleſh cannot pleaſe God, Epiſt. ad Himerium Tarraconenſ. But if Matrimony were a Sacrament, why ſhould it not agree with Orders, one Sacrament with another?

Bellar. anſwereth, that Siricius condemneth not marriage, but ſacrilege, that is, the unlawfull marriage of Miniſters. Secondly, it cannot be denied, but that in the act of matrimony there is uncleanneſſe, & turpitudo, filthineſſe: for why elſe ſhould the Prieſt ſay to David, Are yee cleane from women? 1 Sam. 21. And what elſe is the cauſe why men are aſhamed to exerciſe this act before others? and the Apoſtle ſaith, That the virgin careth for the things of the Lord, &c. that ſhee may bee holy both in body and ſpirit, 1 Cor. 7.34. Ergo, they have an holineſſe in body, which the married have not: and therefore in ſome ſenſe it may be ſaid of marriage: They that are in the fleſh cannot pleaſe God: reſp. ad arg. 4.

1 Cor. 7.34.

Contra. First, 1 the marriage of Miniſters is commendable and allowable by the word of God, as I have ſhewed before in that controverſie: and the Scripture ſaith, Heb. 13.4. Marriage is honourable among all men: 2 Againe, that place Rom. 8.8. They that are in the fleſh is egregiouſly abuſed: for the Apoſtle ſpeaketh not there of marriage, but of the ſinfull works of the fleſh: 3 They that are in the fleſh are not ſubject to the law of God, neither can be, v. 7. they are not Chriſts, v. 9. ſay thus if ye dare of married perſons: 4 The Apoſtle alſo ſpeaking to ſuch as were married men, as to Aquila and Priſcilla, whom he greeteth by name, Rom. 16.3. ſaith, v. 9. Yee are not in the fleſh but in the ſpirit.

Heb. 13.4.
Rom. 8.8.
Rom. 16.3.

Secondly, 1 How far is this fellow from the hereſie of the Marcionites and Tatianites; they counted marriage unlawfull, and he calleth it uncleane: 2 The Prieſt ſpeaketh of a legall kinde of cleanlineſſe, as in that reſpect the Virgin Marie was to be purified, Luc. 2. 22. will yee therefore judge her uncleane? 3 Neither is everie thing done in ſecret, uncleane: Chriſt biddeth us to pray in ſecret, Mat. 6. and a man is oft aſhamed, that his humble behaviour ſhould bee ſeene in prayer; is it therefore uncleane? modeſtie alſo teacheth man to cover the uncomely parts, 1 Cor. 12.23. will yee ſay therefore, that any of the parts of the body are uncleane? Auguſtine ſaith, Nuptiæ ſinuntur exercere quod decet, ut non negligant occultare, quod dedecet: Marriage is ſuffered to exerciſe that which is lawfull, ſo that it hide that which is uncomely; hee ſaith not, uncleane: Lib. 2. de grat. c. 7. 4 The Virgin is ſaid to take care to pleaſe God, and to be holy, &c. not becauſe the married are unholy: for the Apoſtle ſaith the contrarie, If their children be holy, 1 Cor. 7.14. how are they unholy: but it is ſpoken comparatively, becauſe the unmarried have better helps, and are voyd of thoſe impediments which accompany marriage. 5 Laſtly, the Apoſtle ſaith, the marriage bed is undefiled: Heb. 13.2. how dare hee ſay it is defiled? we ſpeake not of the abuſe, but of the right uſe of marriage. Ambroſe ſaith, Copula nuptialis, non quaſi culpa vitanda, &c. The marriage copulation is not to be ſhunned as a fault. Auguſtine ſaith, Libidinis voluptas non propter nuptias cadit in culpam, ſed propter nuptias accipit veniam: The pleaſure of luſt is not culpable becauſe of marriage, but pardonable: De nupt. & concup. lib. 1. c. 14.

Luk. 2.22.
1 Cor. 12.23.
1 Cor. 7.14.
Heb. 13.2.

Secondly, Bellarmine anſwereth, that Matrimony is forbidden thoſe that take Orders, not as it is a Sacrament, but becauſe it bringeth worldly cares and other impediments.

Contra. Nay, they prohibit marriage to ſuch, as it is a Sacrament: for a principall part of this their Sacrament conſiſteth in the matrimoniall act and copulation: which although Bellarmine inſtantly deny, is proved thus even by his owne confeſſion: hee granteth that matrimony is a myſticall ſigne of the ſpirituall conjunction of Chriſt and his Church, cap. 2. but this is repreſented in the matrimoniall conjunction: They two ſhall be one fleſh, this is a great ſecret: Ergo, herein conſiſteth the Sacrament; and this act of matrimony (they ſay) is a pollution of orders: and thus one Sacrament is polluted by another.

Bellarmine replyeth, that the act of copulation, or carnall act in Matrimony, is no eſſentiall part of the Sacrament. Secondly, it is not abſurd, that they which have one Sacrament ſhould bee without another; as the Apoſtles refuſed the miniſterie of Deacons: Acts 6. Bellarm. reſponſ. ad argum. 6.

Whether carnall copulation be an eſſentiall part of marriage.

First, the Canon of Leo is directly contrarie: Cum ſocietas nuptiarum à principio ita ſit inſtituta, &c. Seeing the ſocietie of marriage was ſo inſtituted at the firſt, Vt præter conjunctionem ſexuum, non habeant in ſe nuptiæ: That beſide the conjunction of ſex, Marriage hath not the Sacrament of conjunction of Chriſt and his Church, it is not to be doubted, but that the woman doth not appertaine to marriage, with the which there hath beene no matrimoniall act or miniſterie, &c. This Canon ſaith directly, that the Sacrament of marriage is in the matrimoniall copulation.

Bellarmine anſwereth, that the Canon muſt be read without the negative, Vt præter, &c. habeant, &c. that beſide the conjunction, marriage hath the Sacrament, &c.

Contra. Firſt, if the negative be taken away, there is no ſenſe in the Canon: for a woman not carnally knowne, is proved to be no wife, becauſe the Sacrament of marriage onely conſiſteth in the carnall act. Secondly, the Maſter of ſentences rehearſeth this Canon with a negative, lib.4. diſtinct. 26. g. Bellarmine thinketh moſt abſurdly, that the Maſter muſt be read without a negative, whereas hee alleageth the Canon to prove Illam mulierem, &c. That a woman pertaineth not to marriage that is not carnally knowne, which this Canon proveth not, if the negative be omitted. Thirdly, other Canons doe agree, ibid. c. 18, Benedict. Non poſſe fieri unam carnem, &c. They cannot bee one fleſh, but by carnall copulation: but the myſterie is in being made one fleſh, as S. Ambroſe calleth it Myſterium unitatis, the Myſterie of unitie. Fouthly, Bellarmine himſelfe granteth, that when the contract is made only per verba de futuro, by words of the future time, then the carnall copulation is an eſſentiall part, and that then ex opere operato, by the worke wrought, the conjugall act doth conferre grace: Bellarm. ibid. Where by the way let it be remembred, that the carnall act which before he proved to be uncleane, is now affirmed to be ſo holy, that it doth conferre grace.

Secondly, 1 He is never able to prove, that hee which hath one Sacrament of Chriſtian religion, is ſimply to be denied the other, as they deny Miniſters that have orders to be married, which both are Sacraments in their religion: but the true Sacraments of the Church, as Baptiſme and the Euchariſt, are generall and free for all that are fit for them. 2 The Apoſtles refuſed not the office of Deacons as unlawfull, but as inconvenient: neither is this any Sacrament, and the Apoſtles did execute the office of Deacons at the firſt themſelves. 3 Though it ſhould bee granted that the Sacraments may bee divided in reſpect of perſons, that ſome may have one and not another; yet it is not to bee endured, that one Sacrament polluteth another, as they ſay, Matrimony is a defiling of Orders: wherefore they themſelves deny it to be a Sacrament: for Sacraments to all are holy, but marriage in Miniſters they make unholy and uncleane.

Argum. 3. In everie Sacrament there ought to be an externall ſenſible element, as the matter, and a ſanctifying word, as the forme: But in Matrimony there is neither: Ergo, it is no Sacrament. Argum. Kemnitii. Calvin.

Bellarm. The forme are the words pronounced by the parties themſelves, when they contract Matrimony: I doe take thee, &c. They alſo themſelves are the matter; yea, and the Miniſters of the Sacraments too: For the Jeſuite holdeth, that it is a Sacrament in the verie contract and giving of mutuall conſent, before it be ſolemnized in the Church, De matrim. cap. 6.

Anſw. First, the Sacrament is one thing, and the receivers another: therefore the married parties cannot be the ſacramentall matters being the receivers. Secondly, it is not everie word that ſanctifieth, but the word of God, 1 Tim.4.5. but theſe words, I take thee, are no part of the word: Ergo, they want alſo the forme of a Sacrament. Thirdly, the Miniſters of Chriſt and Preachers of the word are onely the diſpenſers of the myſteries and Sacraments of the Church, 1 Cor.4.1. Wherefore the parties themſelves could not be miniſters of Matrimony, if it were a Sacrament.

1 Corinth.4.1.

Fourthly, I will adjoyne the reaſons of ſome of the Papiſts: Eſpencæus de clandeſtin. matrim. c.14. Ad hujus Sacramenti rationem, patres verbum fidei requiſiverunt in lege, &c. The fathers in the law required the word of faith to this Sacrament, how much more in the Goſpell? but this, I take thee, is not the word of faith: cap.15. ex Groppero: Vt venerabilem Euchariſtiam idem & porrigat & capiat, cæteræ non item Sacramenta: The Euchariſt one and the ſame man may give and receive, but it is not ſo in other Sacraments: no man doth baptize or confirme himſelfe: and ſo conſequently, if private Matrimony were a Sacrament, no man could marrie himſelfe.

Arg.4. We have plentifull teſtimony of the Papiſts themſelves, ſome affirme Matrimony a Sacrament of the old Teſtament, not of the new: as Alphonſus à Caſtro, lib.11. cont. hæreſes, hæreſ.3. Petrus à Soto, lect.2. de Matrim. Some hold it no Sacrament at all, as Durandus, whoſe reaſons doe here follow: other deny private Matrimony to be a Sacrament, being contracted onely, not ſolemnized, as Canus, whom Bellarmine confuteth, cap.8. Of the ſame opinion is Gropperus before alleaged: Catharinus alſo affirmeth, private contract of marriage without the conſent of the parents to be no Sacrament, becauſe it is no marriage: ex Eſpenc. de clandeſtin. matrim. c.15.

Now Durand his reaſons, to prove Marriage properly no Sacrament, are theſe.

First, in everie Sacrament there is ſome ſpirituall thing ſignified, that exceedeth naturall reaſon; as in Baptiſme by the waſhing of water, the remiſſion of ſins is ſhewed forth: but in marriage when two are preſented to be joyned together, a natural man may comprehend why they are coupled together. It may be anſwered that the ſpirituall thing in marriage, is the conjunction of Chriſt and his Church, Contra. Sacraments doe effect that which they ſignifie; but matrimony doth not effect the union of Chriſt and his Church, but onely the union of the male and female: Ergo, that is not the principall ſignification of marriage.

Bellarmine anſwereth, that not the union onely, but ſuch an union as is inſoluble; and as well the union of their ſoules and bodies is ſignified in marriage, which exceedeth naturall reaſon.

Contra. Firſt, the union of the married parties to be inſoluble, is naturall; for both among the Gentiles, as the Romans a long time, there was no divorce in marriage knowne or heard of: the Turtle Doves by nature are taught to keepe themſelves inſeparably one to the other: therefore this exceedeth not human reaſon. Secondly, the union of the minde is no eſſentiall part of marriage, for the marriage holdeth in the union of the body, though there be no uniting of the affections: they two ſhall be one fleſh, it is not ſaid, one ſoule.

Secondly, Durand. in a Sacrament there muſt bee ſome holy thing applyed to the receiver by the Miniſter: as in Baptiſme, water; in matrimony it is not ſo: there is neither any outward holy ſigne, nor no Miniſter neceſſarie beſide the parties, nor yet any receiver need be preſent, for matrimony may be ſolemnized by a Proctor betweene parties that are abſent: Ergo, it is no Sacrament.

Bellarmine anſwereth: The reaſon why matrimony is unlike other Sacraments in theſe points, is, for that it is of the nature of a contract: now in a contract the parties themſelves ſuffice; and it may be done in their abſence, Bellarm. c.5. reſp. ad argum. 11.

Contra. In human contracts it is ſo, as hee affirmeth, no ſuch things are required; but in divine contracts it is otherwiſe; of which nature all Sacraments are: for as it is ſaid of circumciſion, it was a ſigne of the covenant, or contract betweene God and his people, Geneſ. 17.11. ſo all Sacraments are badges of our profeſſion, and the cogniſance of our obedience promiſed unto God: ſo that in this behalfe there is no difference betweene one Sacrament and another; they being all ſolemne contracts and covenants made betweene God and us.

Thirdly, Sacraments give grace, as the Papiſts affirme; they are ſeales and pledges of grace, as the Proteſtants hold: but matrimony neither conferreth nor ſealeth grace; not the firſt grace, which is remiſſion of ſins; nor the ſecond, which is encreaſe of grace. The Maſter of the Sentences ſaith, that ſome Sacraments doe confer grace as Baptiſme, ſome in remedium tantum ſunt, are only appointed for a remedy, as matrimony: Lib.4. diſt.2. a Durand.

Bellarmine anſwereth, that the meaning of the Maſter is, that matrimony was not principally ordained to this end, for remiſſion of ſins; and yet it doth after a ſort remit ſins, as the Euchariſt and the Sacrament of order: Reſp. ad argum. 12.

Contra. Firſt, the Maſter ſaith, that matrimony is tantum in remedium, is only for a remedy: if only, then it ſerveth not chiefly, but altogether to that end. Secondly, wee deny any Sacrament of order: the Euchariſt properly ſerveth to aſſure our faith of the remiſſion of ſins, becauſe it is a ſhewing forth of the Lords death: and our Saviour ſaith, which was ſhed for you for remiſſion of ſins: but there is no ſuch promiſe of remiſion of ſins annexed to matrimony. Thirdly, Bellarmine affirmed before, reſp. ad arg. 7. that ſome Sacraments (as Matrimony) are not inſtituted for remiſion of ſins; and now (forgetting himſelfe) hee ſaith, it ſerveth for remiſion of ſins: ſo well hee agreeth with himſelfe. Fourthly, the Church cannot alter or appoint the eſſentials of any Sacrament, the Church doth appoint the eſſentials of matrimony, as in determining what perſons are to be married, and in what degrees: Ergo, it is no Sacrament, Durand.

Bellarmine anſwereth: firſt, that the ordinance of the Church is of the neceſſitie of the Sacrament, as in penance it is no abſolution that is given to one of another Dioceſſe. Secondly, the materiall part of Matrimony is not ſimply the joyning together of man and woman, but of ſuch perſons as are lawfull: for otherwiſe the Sacrament of Matrimony might be between the father and the daughter, and ſuch like neere degrees.

1 Cor.11.23.

Contra. Firſt, as for penance, this ſheweth ſufficiently that it is no Sacrament, becauſe it dependeth of the ordination of the Church: ſo doe not true Sacraments which only depend of Chriſts inſtitution: as the Apoſtle delivered no other thing as touching the Sacraments, but that which hee had received of the Lord, 1 Corinth. 11.23. Secondly, ſuch degrees in marriage as the Scripture prohibiteth, are neceſſarie to be obſerved, as betweene the father and daughter, &c. But the Church of Rome preſuming to forbid other degrees, and to make more perſons illegitimate for marriage than the Scripture doth, taketh upon her to alter and change the materiall part of Matrimony: which no Church hath power to doe in true Sacraments.

Fifthly, without Baptiſme none are capable of any Sacrament: but a man before Baptiſme is capable of Matrimony: Ergo, it is no Sacrament, Durand.

Bellarm. Though it be Matrimony after Baptiſme, it is no Sacrament: but after they are converted to the faith, it beginneth to be a Sacrament.

Math.19.6.
1 Cor.7.14.

Contra. The Matrimony before Baptiſme muſt either be contracted a new, or elſe it remaineth the ſame ſtill: but a new contract is not to bee made: for if God have joyned them together before, no man muſt put them aſunder, Math. 19.6. to bee contracted and conjoyned againe: if they were not joyned of God, then was it no Matrimony. Againe, what if but one of the parties bee converted, the other remaineth an Infidell, and ſo refuſeth to bee contracted againe: yet is this Matrimony holy, and the iſſue thereof holy, 1 Cor. 7.14. though there bee no new contract. If the ſame Matrimony remaine ſtill without alteration, how is it more a Sacrament after Baptiſme than before, ſeeing the ſame eſſentials, both the matter and forme were in the Matrimony before? Of the firſt opinion are Capreolus, Eckius, that a new contract is needfull: of the other, Thomas de Argentine, Paludanus: ſo well they agree together. And thus are Durands arguments fortified againſt this Sacrament.

Auguſtine thus writeth: Ne quis iſtam magnitudinem ſacramenti in ſingulis quibuſque hominibus uxores habentibus intelligeret, ego autem dico, inquit, &c. Leſt any man ſhould think when the Apoſtle had ſaid, this is a great Sacrament, that this great Sacrament is to be underſtood of all married perſons, the Apoſtle addeth, but I ſpeak of Chriſt and his Church. But if ſo be Matrimonie were a Sacrament, why is it not to be found in all married folk?

Tract. Ioh. 9. tom. 9.

Concil. Florentin. in fine: Sacramenta tribus perficiuntur rebus tanquam materia, verbis ut forma, & perſona miniſtri conferentis Sacramentum: quarum ſi aliquid deſit, non perficitur Sacramentum: The Sacraments are perfected of three things, the things or elements as the matter, the words as the forme, and the perſon of the Miniſter conferring the Sacrament; if any of theſe be wanting, the Sacraments are not perfect, &c. According to this rule Matrimonie is no Sacrament: for in the contract, when it ſhould begin to be a Sacrament, there want both the matter and the element, which cannot be the parties themſelves, and the Miniſter which ſhould conferre the Sacrament: neither have they words of inſtitution to be found in Scripture.

The holy Martyrs have ſealed this truth: Richard Woodman: There need not be a ſigne of an holy thing, where the holy thing is it ſelfe: Matrimonie is an holy thing it ſelfe, and is ended outwardly: Ergo, it is no Sacrament, Fox pag. 1990. col. 2.

Maſter Benbridge Martyr, he denieth Matrimonie to be a Sacrament, but confeſſeth it to be a ſacred order, &c. and gave his life in defence hereof, pag. 2046. artic. 10.

And yet further: 1 Eraſmus thinketh, that of ancient time Matrimonie was not taken for one of the Sacraments of the Church: for thus he noteth upon the Epiſtle of Hierome to Gerontia: Haud ſcio an illa ætate eccleſia numerarit Matrimonium inter Sacramenta: I cannot tell whether the Church did then count Matrimonie among the Sacraments, certainly Dyoniſius profeſſedly handling them, Matrimonii nullam facit mentionem, maketh no mention of Matrimonie.

2 Tertullian proving againſt Marcion the lawfulneſſe and dignity of marriage, urgeth theſe words, Epheſ. 5. 32. But I ſpeak of Chriſt and his Church: Habet interpretationem, non ſeparationem Sacramenti: oſtendit figuram Sacramenti ab eo præminiſtratam, cujus erat utiq; Sacramentum: It hath the interpretation, not the ſeparation of a Sacrament: he ſheweth that he miniſtred afore of the figure of the Sacrament, whoſe the Sacrament was, &c. He calleth Matrimonie a figure of the Sacrament and myſterie betweene Chriſt and his Church, and therefore to be honoured: he maketh it a figure of a Sacrament, not a Sacrament it ſelfe, at the leaſt, not in proper ſpeaking: for ſo he acknowledgeth onely two Sacraments. See before Centur. 2. err. 104.

Lib. 4. adverſ. Marcion. in fine.

3 There alſo is ſet downe the judgement of the reformed Churches, concerning the Sacraments of the Church, which they acknowledge onely to be two, and ſo exclude Matrimonie among the reſt.

4 Durandus, as hath beene ſhewed before holdeth Matrimonie to be no Sacrament: and the Maſter denieth, that it conferreth grace.

The ſecond Queſtion, Of Polygamie, of the marriage of divers ſucceſſively. Part. 1.

The Papiſts.

THeir decrees ſeeme utterly to condemne and exclude ſecond marriage, Cauſ. 31. c. 8. Penance is enjoyned ſecond marriage, and a Miniſter is forbidden to be preſent at the celebration of them. Can. 9. Second marriage is called, honeſta fornicatio, honeſt fornication. Theſe Canons Bellarmine is aſhamed of, and refuſeth them: why then doe they ſuffer them to ſtand among the reſt of the decrees collected by Gratian? But yet Bellarmine cannot ſo ſhift off the matter: for it appeareth that they have a very baſe conceit of ſecond marriage, ſeeing they barre all ſuch from orders, as have been twice married: as in their owne decrees, C. 31. c. 10 this reaſon is given: Quam ſancta ſit digamia hinc oſtenditur, &c. How holy a thing it is to be twice married, it appeareth by this, that ſuch are not choſen to the Clergie. And againe, they deny publike bleſſing unto the ſecond marriage. Bellarmine would ſalve up the matter thus, becauſe the bleſſing given in the firſt marriage continueth ſtill, cap. 9.

80. Error.

The Proteſtants.

COncerning the denying of orders to them that are twice married, I have entreated elſewhere in the generall Controverſie of the Clergie: that publike benediction is to be uſed in ſecond marriage as well as in the firſt, we prove thus:

Firſt, I reaſon thus from their owne principles: Every Sacrament at the celebration thereof muſt be bleſſed: for, Every thing is ſanctified by the word and prayer. 1 Timoth. 4. 5. But ſecond marriage with them is a Sacrament: Ergo, publikely to be bleſſed. And whereas it is alleaged, that the former bleſſing remaineth: I anſwer: firſt, the firſt Matrimonie remaineth not: Ergo, neither the benediction. For the firſt couples being parted by death, and ſo the marriage knot diſſolved, how can that bleſſing remaine, which was pronounced over them but while they lived? Againe, Matrimoniall benediction is no more effectuall, than the benediction in the Euchariſt : but that is often renewed : Ergo, ſo may the other.

Secondly, Raguel bleſſed the marriage of young Tobie and Sara, which was given in marriage to ſeven men before, Tobie 7.11.13. Ergo, ſecond marriage may be bleſſed. This booke is Scripture with them, and therefore concludeth againſt them ſtrongly. Tobie 7.11.

Further, where God bleſſeth, there man ought to bleſſe much more : but Gods bleſſing is upon the married couple being fit for procreation, though it be in their ſecond or third marriage, Increaſe and multiply : Ergo, the Miniſters bleſſing is to be adjoyned.

So alſo Tertullian ſpeaking of that conſtitution of Moſes of marrying the brothers wife, giveth this reaſon thereof: Quia adhuc vetus illa benedictio dominica habebat, creſcite & multiplicamini, &c. Becauſe that ancient bleſſing was yet to runne along, Increaſe and multiply, &c. Wherein then parties are joyned in marriage for procreation, the ſaid bleſſing muſt be renewed, and ſo runne downe along.

Laſtly, Leo ſaith, Epiſtol. 9. c. 4. Ancillam à toro abjicere, & uxorem certæ ingenuitatis accipere, non duplicatio conjugii, ſed profectus honeſtatis eſt : For a man to reject his maid, or concubine from his bed, and to marry a wife that is a free woman, is not a doubling of marriage, but a profiting in honeſtie. I reaſon thus : Marriage after fornication doth receive publike benediction, becauſe it is not the ſecond, but the firſt marriage : Ergo, much more ſhall marriage after lawfull marriage be publikely bleſſed : unleſſe they will make marriage worſe than fornication.

The ſecond part of Polygamie, which is the marriage of divers wives at once.

The Papiſts.

81. Error. IT is their opinion, that it was lawfull not only for the Patriarks of the Hebrewes, but for the Gentiles alſo by way of diſpenſation to have many wives.

Argum. 1. Sara gave conſent to Abraham to take him another wife, which ſhe would not have done, if it had beene unlawfull : ſo Iacobs wives offered unto him two other wives : Bellarm. cap. 11. propoſ. 4.

Contra. Firſt, from the infirmities of holy men, or women, the argument followeth not, to prove the thing lawfull. Sara twice diſſembled, and in affirming to be Abrahams ſiſter, conſequently denied to be his wife : ſo did Rebecca once : it followeth not, that it is therefore lawfull. Secondly, thoſe were Abrahams and Iacobs concubines, not their wives : they may as well inferre, that they had a diſpenſation alſo to have concubines beſide their wives : that Hagar was not Abrahams wife, while Geneſ.16.6. Sara lived, whatſoever ſhe was afterward, (for ſome think, that Keturah his ſecond wife was Hagar) it appeareth : 1 Becauſe ſhe is ſtill called Saraes maid, and under her correction, Gen. 16.6. 2 And the Angell biddeth her humble her ſelfe to her dame, verſ. 9. 3 At the length, ſhe is caſt out with her ſon, Geneſ. 21. 4 She is alſo ſtill called a bond-woman, Gen. 21. 10. But if ſhe had beene Abrahams wife, ſhe ſhould have beene free.

Argum. 2. That it was lawfull alſo for the Gentiles by diſpenſation to have many wives, he proveth by the example of Laban, who was an idolater, and gave to Iacob two wives : Eſau alſo, who belonged not to the people of God, had many wives, imitating therein, as it is like, the example of Abraham : Bellarm. c.11. propoſ.5.

Anſw. Firſt, neither Laban, nor Eſau were altogether ſtrangers from the people of God, and therefore are not well brought forth, as example of the Gentiles : for if Laban had beene a meere Gentile, Iacob had not beene ſent to take a wife from thence : and Eſau when he tooke his two wives, was Gen.26.35. yet in his fathers houſe, Geneſ. 26. 35. and ſo one of the family. Secondly, the fact of theſe proveth no more the lawfulneſſe of many wives, than Labans images doe warrant the worſhip of many gods. Thirdly, it is not like that Eſau herein imitated Abraham : 1 For Sara was dead before Eſau was borne, and therefore in Eſaus remembrance he had not two wives. 2 And his father Iſaacks example was neerer to him to be imitated, who had but one wife. 3 If he had reſpected the imitation of Abraham, he would not have married of the Hittites, to grieve his parents. Laſtly, Auguſtine ſaith of the Patriarks, Conjugio uſi ſunt propter Dei populum propagandum : They uſed marriage for the propagation of the people of God : Their Polygamie he thinketh was tolerated for the increaſing of the Church. But the Church among the Gentiles was not increaſed : Ergo, there was no reaſon of any ſuch toleration amongſt them, Auguſt. de Virginit. cap.20.

The Proteſtants.

COncerning Polygamie, or the having of divers wives at once, our ſentence is this : firſt, that it was never lawfull, being either a tranſgreſſion, of, or at the leaſt a digreſſion from the firſt inſtitution in the creation. Secondly, yet in the Patriarks we deny not, before there was yet any Law written, in reſpect of the neceſſity of thoſe times, it was by uſe and cuſtome tolerated, though not by any diſpenſation authorized. Thirdly, among the Gentiles, where there was not the like reaſon or occaſion, it was neither lawfull, nor tolerable. Fourthly, after Moſes Law written, and the Church in them increaſed, we doubt not but that the multitude of wives was a ſin and corruption.

Firſt,

4 Lyranus upon theſe words, from the beginning it was not ſo, giveth this note : that is, in the ſtate of nature newly inſtituted, but in men fallen by ſin, it was permitted for avoiding a greater evill, non tanquam licitum, ſed ſicut minus malum, not as a thing lawfull, but leſſe evill, &c.

Laſtly, thus their owne decrees teſtifie : Cauſ. 31. c. 10. Primus Lamech homicida unam carnem diviſit in duas uxores ; fratricidium & digamiam eadem cataclyſmi delevit pœna, &c. Lamech the murderer was the firſt that divided one fleſh into two wives : fratricide and digamie, the ſame puniſhment of the floud taken away : Quantum diſtas in numero, tantum in crimine : As thou exceedeſt in number, ſo likewiſe in ſin.

The third Queſtion, Of the cauſe of divorce in marriage, and Whether it be lawfull to marry after divorce.

The firſt Part, Whether there may be more cauſes of divorce, than fornication onely.

The Papiſts.

82. Error. DIvorce, as Bellarmine defineth it, is either from the duties of marriage, as from bed and board, as we ſay, which is properly called divortium, or it is a diſſolving of the knot and bond of marriage, which is called repudium.

Firſt then, they affirme, that the very bond and knot may be diſſolved in the marriage of Infidels, if one of them after marriage become a Chriſtian : his reaſon is, becauſe marriage contracted in infidelity is no Sacrament, and therefore may be diſſolved, Bellarm. cap. 12. So he affirmeth theſe three things : firſt, that if the Infidell refuſe to dwell with the beleeving partie, the party refuſed and forſaken, may marry againe. Secondly, that though the Infidell be content to dwell together, the other is at his or her liberty to refuſe, and may marry againe. Thirdly, if the Infidell be content to dwell with the beleever, but yet ſo, that he is alwayes intiſing and provoking to idolatry and infidelity, the beleeving party may depart. The firſt of theſe is not by us gainſaid ; the other two Bellarmine proveth thus.

1 Cor.7.15. Argum. S. Paul ſaith, If the Infidell party will depart, let him depart, a brother or ſiſter is not in ſubjection in ſuch a caſe, 1 Cor.7.15.

Anſw. Firſt, S. Paul giveth not liberty to the one party at their pleaſure utterly to renounce the other, as though they were no longer man and wife : for S. Paul had ſaid before, that if the Infidell party be content to dwell with the other, he or ſhe is not to be put away. But his meaning is, that if one party wilfully depart, the other is no longer bound, nor in ſubjection for the performance of the mutuall duties of marriage. Secondly, though the Infidell party be yet froward and obſtinate, if he be content to dwell with the other, let her not forſake him, ſaith the Apoſtle : and hee giveth a reaſon thereof, verſ.16. What knoweſt thou, O wife, whether thou ſhalt ſave thy husband ? &c. Though hee or ſhe be yet froward, or obſtinate, yet in time they may be converted.

Secondly, ſeparation from bed and board may be admitted, they ſay, for divers cauſes, Concil. Trident. ſeſſ.24.can.8. Bellarmine nameth three : Fornication, according to Chriſts rule, Matth.5. Hereſie, Tit.3. An heretike muſt be avoided. Thirdly, when one is a continuall offence to another, and a provocation to ſin : If thine eye offend thee, pull it out, Matth.5.29. Bellar. cap.14.

Anſw. 1. Fornication we admit is a juſt cauſe of ſeparation and divorce, but not hereſie : for Saint Paul would not have a woman to forſake an Infidell, 1 Cor. 7. 13. therefore not an heretike. 2 We muſt avoid ſuch, that is, take heed of their poiſoned opinions, and ſhun their company alſo, where we are not otherwiſe bound. 3 Neither is the eye to be cut off, where there is any hope : but who knoweth whether the offenſive party may returne to grace ? 4 And this place proveth as well a finall cutting off of marriage, as a ſeparation or diſtinction.

The Proteſtants.

FIrſt, that there is no cauſe of utter diſſolution of marriage by way of divorce, neither that it is lawfull to diſmiſſe or put away the wife, but only for adultery and fornication : it is plaine by our Saviour Chriſts words, Matth.5.32. and 19.9. where neither infidelity nor any cauſe beſide is excepted, but only fornication : Whoſoever ſhall put away his wife (ſaith our Saviour) except it be for fornication, &c.

Bellarmine anſwereth : firſt, our Saviour ſpeaketh of marriage 1 betweene the faithfull : ſo that this rule bindeth not, if either party be an Infidell. 2 And againe, ſuch ſeparation is here ſpoken of, as is by way of ſome crime, not when it tendeth to greater perfection, and where there is 3 feare of adultery ; as in the ſeparation of Infidels there is not, when the party forſaken may marry againe. Secondly, he anſwereth, our Saviour only mentioneth the proper cauſe of ſeparation in marriage, which is fornication ; the other for hereſie, and inducement to ſin he leaveth as generall to all ſocieties : for theſe cauſes the ſon may leave the father, the ſervant the maſter, and the wife likewiſe the husband.

Thirdly, hee anſwereth, that Chriſt in this place ſpeaketh of ſuch a dimiſſion onely, or putting away, as is to continue for ever during their lives : but the other dimiſſions are to indure but for a time :

Firſt, the Prophet Malachie ſaith, chap.2.15. Did he not make one, yet had he abundance of ſpirit? and wherefore one? becauſe he ſought a godly ſeed. Here the Prophet ſheweth, that the firſt inſtitution in the creation, was of one wife: So our Saviour, Mat.19.8. doth ſend us to the firſt inſtitution, From the beginning it was not ſo, verſ.4. At the beginning God made them male and female: one male, and one female: and they two ſhall be one fleſh, not three, or foure, but only two are made in one: therefore Polygamie is a breach and tranſgreſſion of the firſt inſtitution. Matth.2.15. Matth.19.8.

Secondly, that there was never any diſpenſation granted to make it lawfull, it is evident. 1 Chriſt ſaith, Moſes for the hardneſſe of your hearts, &c. verſ.8. we reade of no diſpenſation, but a toleration in Moſes, and by reaſon of the hardneſſe of the Jewes hearts. 2 A diſpenſation muſt be of as high a nature as the inſtitution: but the firſt inſtitution was given in the creation, and delivered by tradition, though it were not written, not only by inſpiration (as he ſuppoſeth) the like tradition muſt be ſhewed for the diſpenſation. 3 If there had beene any ſuch diſpenſation, why did not the righteous firſt take benefit of it, to whom it was ſpecially granted? but wicked Lamech was the firſt that tooke two wives. 4 And the diſpenſation being generall, for the procreation of the righteous ſeed, they ſhould have offended, that uſed not that liberty being for a common good: as Iſaack, that had only Rebecca, and by her but one birth. 5 Auguſtine ſaith, Nullam legitur Iacob petiiſſe præter unam, &c. neque hoc faceret, niſi uxores flagitaſſent: Iacob deſired but one,—neither would hee have uſed more, if his wives had not requeſted it: lib.16. de Civitat. cap.38. If there had beene any ſuch diſpenſation, why ſhould he have deſired one rather than two? and what needed he to have the conſent of his wives? it was then a permiſſion only, not a diſpenſation.

Thirdly, Polygamie among the Gentiles was altogether unlawfull: firſt, they ſerved not for the propagation of the Church, for the which Polygamie was tolerated. Secondly, the Fathers are excuſed, Quia caſtius habebant plures, quam nunc unam: Becauſe they uſed many wives more chaſtely, than men doe now one, as Auguſtine ſaith: But the Gentiles had no knowledge, how to poſſeſſe their veſſels in holineſſe, but in the luſt of concupiſcence, 1 Theſſ.4.5. They could not uſe one wife chaſtely, much leſſe many. De bon. conjugal.c.13. 1 Theſ.4.5.

Fourthly, after the Law of Moſes written, Polygamie was a corruption and tranſgreſſion: firſt, there was then no neceſſity of propagation, as Auguſtine ſaith: Cum copia ſpiritualis cognationis exuberet: When there was plenty of the ſpirituall kindred: de Virgin. cap.10. Secondly, it was contrary to the Law: Deut.25.17. The King ſhall not take many wives, leſt his heart turne away. The author of the queſtions upon Deuteron. under Auguſtines name, cap.27. ſaith, that David did not tranſgreſſe this Law, but Salomon, Quia habuit paucas, non multas: David, had a few wives, not many: The very ſame note is inſerted in the Doway tranſlation, that David offended not againſt that Law, but Salomon, and that not plurality of wives is not forbidden, but to multiply many: Annot. in Deut.17. verſ.17.& 3 King.11.3. Deut.25.17.

Anſw. 1. David had not ſo many as Salomon, and therefore was not ſo deepe in tranſgreſſion: but yet he had with Michol and Bathſheba eight wives, 2 Sam.3. which are many: yea any number above two with the Hebrewes maketh a plurality. 2 The reaſon of the Law is, leſt his heart turne away. This fruit of Polygamie was in David; for his heart was turned away from juſtice by the love of women, as appeareth in the ſtory of Vriah. 3 The Prophet Malachie calleth it godly ſeed, which commeth of ſingle marriage after Gods inſtitution: and therefore David tranſgreſſing herein, was chaſtiſed with ungodly children.

1 Iuſtinus Martyr, though he excuſed the Polygamie of the Fathers by the myſticall ſignification thereof: yet he condemneth it in David, ſpeaking againſt the liberty of the Jewes in taking to themſelves many wives, he ſaith: this ſhould have beene rather (permitted) in David. Dialog. cum Tryphon. in fine. τῶν μᾶλλον Συγχωρεῖτο.

2 Tertullian is here very direct: Unum habendum confirmatur, quia quod à Domino permiſſum non invenitur, agnoſcitur interdictum: One Matrimonie is confirmed, for that which is not found to be permitted, is confeſſed to be forbidden: then he urgeth the inſtance of the creation: God made but one woman, cum nec artifex, nec materia defeciſſet, plures coſtæ in Adamo, & indefatigabiles manus in Deo, ſed non plures uxores apud Deum: when as neither matter wanted, or a maker: Adam had more ribs, and Gods hands were not weary, yet there were not more wives with God, &c. Numerus Matrimonii à maledicto viro capit, &c. The number of Matrimonie began from a curſed man, Lamech was the firſt, that being married unto two, made three into one fleſh, &c. Theſe three arguments taken, 1 From the ſilence of Scripture, 2 From the creation, 3 From the example of Lamech, though Tertullian doe urge them in generall againſt all ſecond marriage, yet they moſt fitly are applyed againſt Polygamie, that is, the marriage of divers wives at once. Indeed Tertullian in the ſame place, unto the objection of the Patriarks, which had divers wives, maketh this anſwer: Sane & licebit, ſi aliqui adhuc typi ſunt, &c. It ſhall be alſo lawfull for thee, if any types yet remaine of any Sacrament, which thy marriage ſhould prefigure, &c. But he afterward expoundeth himſelfe: In primordio ſementem generis emiſit indultis conjugii habenis, &c. In the beginning God ſent forth the generation of mankinde, by an indulgence of the bridle of marriage, till the world ſhould be filled: It was then no conceſſion or diſpenſation, but an indulgence connivence, permiſſion or toleration. Tertullian. exhortation. ad caſtitat.

3 Our Proteſtant Writers held Polygamie to be conjugii corruptela, a corruption of marriage, Calvin, Martyr, Sarcerius with others. In 1 Cor.7.1. Et Epheſ.5.31.

4 Lyranus

time: of the firſt kinde of dimiſſion there can be no cauſe but fornication, Bellarm. cap.14. reſp. ad object.2.

Contra. Firſt, 1 The words of our Saviour are generall: Whoſoever ſhall put away his wife, &c. And 2 He ſpeaketh to the Jewes, that were not baptized, therefore he meaneth even marriage before Baptiſme. 3 And our Saviour reaſoneth from the firſt inſtitution of marriage in the creation: but the law of the creation bindeth all both Infidels and beleevers. 2 Againe, when any departeth for hereſie, or infidelity, it is a departure for a crime. 3 And when the beleeving party departeth not being forſaken, but voluntarily (for where there is deſertion, the caſe is otherwiſe, as ſhall be afterward ſhewed) how can it be without feare of adultery, when in this caſe, the marriage is not diſſolved betweene them?

Secondly, 1 It is a falſe poſition, that a ſon is to forſake his father, or a ſervant to deny ſervice to his maſter for hereſie, or infidelity, the Apoſtle teacheth the contrary: 1 Timoth.6.1. Let as many ſervants, as are under the yoke, count their maſters (he meaneth Infidels) worthy all honour. 2 And againe, if any other cauſes of dimiſſion might be pretended, though generall, then were not the rule given here by Chriſt ſufficient, not univerſally true: except for fornication, &c. if for other things, they might be diſmiſſed. 1 Timoth.6.1.

Thirdly, it ſhall ſoone appeare how inſufficient his third anſwer is: firſt, Bellarmine is contrary to himſelfe: for here he maketh fornication the onely cauſe of perpetuall dimiſſion, much forgetting himſelfe: for he affirmeth likewiſe, that the married parties by mutuall conſent may ſeparate themſelves, and vow continencie: and after their vow thus made, it is not lawfull for them to come together againe: here then is another kinde of perpetuall ſeparation. Secondly, neither is divorce or ſeparation for fornication neceſſarily to continue, during their life time: they may be reconciled as both Bellarmine and the Rhemiſts think, expounding that place, 1 Cor.7. Let her remaine unmarried, or be reconciled: of ſuch as are divorced for fornication. So Leo epiſtol.77. cap.1. determineth thus: Quod debent fœminæ, quæ captis viris nupſerant aliis, regreſſis de captivitate viris, prioribus reputari: That women, which marry to others, their husbands being taken captives, ſhould be reſtored to their husbands after their returne. Here women falling into adultery muſt returne to their husbands. Againe, the Scripture ſpeaketh for us: that as God after ſpirituall fornication is ready upon their repentance to receive his people againe, Ierem.3.1. Thou haſt played the harlot, yet returne unto me (ſaith the Lord:) ſo Chriſtian charity requireth, that if it be poſſible, reconciliation ſhould be made betweene man and wife, upon humble ſubmiſſion for the fault committed. Thus we ſee, that even in caſe of fornication the way is not ſhut up againſt compaſſion: therefore the Jeſuite hath anſwered nothing.

Argum. What God hath joyned together, let no man put aſunder, Matth.19.6. But the Papiſts, in deviſing ſo many ſeparations from bed and board, doe put aſunder thoſe, whom God hath coupled: for where the duties of marriage are broken off, there marriage it ſelfe is alſo diſſolved: if the man and wife be no longer bound to render the carnall debt one to another, and other ſervices of love, the bond of marriage it ſelfe is looſed betweene them: this then is but a frivolous diſtinction, that there are two ſeparations of marriage: Quoad thorum, quoad vinculum: One from the bed, another from the bond of marriage: they then making ſo many ſeparations from the one, doe alſo diſſolve the other: and ſo man divideth where God hath coupled, argum. Kemnitii. Matth.19.6.

Bellarmine anſwereth, that the bond of marriage is one thing, the debt or duty of marriage another: for otherwiſe, when the married parties are abſent by ſome diſtance of place, and ſo the debt not payed, the bond alſo ſhould preſently be diſſolved, and they ceaſe to be man and wife, cap.14. reſp. ad object.5.

Contra. Firſt, Bellarmine granteth, that theſe words, Whom God hath coupled, &c. are underſtood of the bond of marriage, not of the carnall debt, communion of bed and board: ex conceſſis, I reaſon thus: That whereby they are coupled and made one fleſh, is the bond of marriage, but the carnall debt maketh them one fleſh; They twaine ſhall be one fleſh, Matth.19.5. therefore the carnall debt is the very bond of marriage: the propoſition is proved by the words of our Saviour, verſ.6. wherefore they are no more twaine, but one fleſh: Let no man therefore put aſunder, that which God hath coupled together: here the making of two one fleſh, is ſaid to be the very coupling, wherewith God joyneth them together.

Secondly, S. Paul uſeth all theſe words indifferently, for one and the ſame thing, debt or duty, 1 Cor.7.3. to be in ſervice or ſubjection, verſ.15. to be bound to a wife, verſ.27. So then ὀφειλή, debt, δουλεία, ſervice, [illegible], bond: are with the Apoſtles all one: where then the debt of the fleſh is not due, nor the ſervice of the body, there alſo the bond is looſed.

Thirdly, that in marriage the debitum, debt, and vinculum, bond, are all one: and that relaxatio debiti, the releaſing of the debt, is ſolutio vinculi, the diſſolving of the bond: beſide that the Apoſtle ſaith, 1 Cor.7.27. Art thou bound to a wife, ſeeke not to be looſed; where he ſpeaketh unto beleevers of the diſſolving of marriage: but they allow no diſſolution of marriage, but only in the caſe of infidelity: Saint Ambroſe alſo ſaith, ſpeaking of the diſſolving of marriage, Non debetur reverentia conjugii ei, &c. The reverence of marriage is not due to him, which abhorreth the Author of marriage: in 7.1. ad Corinth. The diſſolving of marriage, and not paying the debt, with him are all one: Cauſ.28.q.2.c.2. 1 Cor.7.27.

Non

Nec eſt ei fides ſervanda conjugii,&c. The faith of marriage is not to be kept to him which departeth, becauſe he would not heare Chriſt: not to keepe the faith or debt of marriage, and to diſſolve marriage are the ſame.

Cauſ.32. qu.7.c.18. Si mulier non valeat debitum reddere: If the woman be not able to render her debt, or due to her husband, he may marry another: Ergo, where the debt is not payed, the marriage bond is diſſolved.

Fourthly, when the parties are abſent upon neceſſary occaſion, or by conſent, here is neither refuſall, nor acquitall of the carnall debt, as there is in forced ſeparations; but in affection and deſire, they remaine ſtill ſubject one to the other: therefore the reaſon is not alike: ſo then I conclude, that they ſeparating, where God alloweth no ſeparation, doe contrary to the Scripture, put aſunder, where God hath joyned together.

We have alſo the full conſent of antiquity, that no dimiſſion of marriage is to be admitted, but for fornication: Concil. Anglican. ann.670. can.10. Nullus conjugem propriam niſi ut ſanctum Evangelium docet, fornicationis cauſa relinquat: That no man put away his wife, but as the Goſpell teacheth, for fornication.

Toletan.12.can.8. Præceptum Domini eſt, ut excepta cauſa fornicationis uxor à viro dimitti non debeat,&c. It is the commandement of the Lord, that except for fornication, the wife ſhould not be diſmiſſed from her husband: and therefore whoſoever upon any other occaſion, except the former crime, doth diſmiſſe his wife; becauſe he ſeparateth that which God hath joyned, let him be put from the Communion, ſo long, till he receive his wife againe.

Nicholaus 1. de matrimon. can.6. Quicquid mulier contra te cogitaverit, non eſt excepta cauſa fornicationis rejicienda: Whatſoever thy woman doth practiſe againſt thee, ſhe muſt not be caſt off but for fornication. What greater evidence of antiquity can any man require? This Canon is rehearſed, Cauſ.33.qu.5.c.22.

We have further evidence: Cod.lib.3.tit.38. leg.11. Conſtant. Quis ferat, liberos à parentibus, à viris conjuges ſeparari? Who can endure, that children from parents, wives ſhould be ſeparated from their husbands, &c. Yet I deny not, but that ſome Imperiall lawes allow other cauſes of ſeparation, beſide adultery, as homicide, ſacrilege, robbery, man-ſtealing, Cod.lib.5.tit.17.leg.8. and impotencie or imbecillitie of nature, ibid. leg.10. yet the Canons of the Church have otherwiſe decreed: as here I have ſet them downe.

Cauſ.29. qu.7.c.19. Gregor. Excepta cauſa fornicationis: It is not lawfull for any man to diſmiſſe his wife, except it be for fornication: ſo likewiſe Zachar. cauſ.29.qu.2.c.2. Cauſ.32.q.5.c.18 Quicquid excepta cauſa fornicationis cogitari poteſt horribile, ſuſtineat maritus: What horrible thing ſoever may be imagined, except the cauſe of fornication, the husband muſt ſuſtaine, c.21. Communione privetur,&c. Let him be deprived of the Communion, qui citra culpam fornicationis uxorem quacunque occaſione demiſerit, which beſide the fault of fornication upon any occaſion doth diſmiſſe his wife.

Apolog.1.pro Chriſtianis ſub initio.

What was the practice of the Greek Church, Iuſtinus Martyr ſheweth, how a woman being converted to Chriſtianity, having a licentious husband that lived an uncleane and libidinous life, when ſhe could by no meanes reclaime him, ſent him a libell of divorce, &c. It ſeemeth the manner then was to be ſeparated for no other cauſe but for fornication.

Lib.de Monogamia.

Tertullian ſheweth the like in the Africane Church: Repudiata, quæ per iram odium, & cauſas eorum injuriam & calumniam & quamlibet querelam, & anima & corpore ſeparata eſt, tenetur inimico, ne dicam, marito: A woman repudiated, which is ſeparate in minde and body through wrath, hatred, and reproach and injurie the cauſes thereof, or any other complaint, yet is tied to her enemy, that I ſay not, her husband, &c. There could not then be a diſſolution of marriage for any of theſe cauſes or quarrels, though the parties were ſeparated in diſcontent for a while: fornication is not here named, for then the woman ſhould have beene no longer tied.

Harmon.18. ſect.p.565.

Confeſſion of Saxonie, artic.18. Touching divorcements, this rule is moſt firmely held, that they doe ſin, who either by adultery, or by forſaking, be the firſt cauſe of diſtraction: they allow them no diſtraction of marriage, but in theſe two caſes of adultery or defection.

Plutar.quæſt. Roman.9.14.

In the ancient Romane ſtate of long time, there was no divorce but for adultery: for Sp. Carbilius was the firſt, that renounced his wife for barrenneſſe: Sulpitius Gallus the next, becauſe he ſaw his wife with her garment cover her head: Sempronius the third, becauſe his wife was preſent at certaine playes.

Now concerning the marriage of Infidels, Auguſtine was ſometime of opinion, that the wife might be diſmiſſed for infidelity, or ſpirituall fornication: but he revoketh and retracteth that opinion, Lib. retract.1.cap.19. For elſewhere he flatly concludeth thus: Apoſtolus non permittit mulierem à viro non fornicante diſcedere: The Apoſtle permitteth not a woman at all to depart from her husband, if he commit not fornication: De adult. conjug.1.7.

And yet further, to make this matter more plaine, we acknowledge no other cauſe of lawfull divorce in marriage but that onely, which is preſcribed in the Goſpell, namely, for adultery or fornication, Matth.5.32. and 19.9. There is notwithſtanding another cauſe whereby the marriage knot may bee diſſolved, though not for fornication: as when one of the parties doth wilfully renounce, leave and forſake the other upon no juſt cauſe, but either of lightneſſe or for divers religion, as when an Infidell forſaketh a Chriſtian; a Papiſt, a Proteſtant; an heretike, a true profeſſor; or upon any other unlawfull or unjuſt cauſe: for the Apoſtle ſaith plainly, A brother or ſiſter is not in ſubjection in ſuch things, 1 *Cor.*7.15. that is, is freed from the yoke or bond of marriage.

1 Cor.7.15.

Firſt, it is plaine that the Apoſtle is ſo to be underſtood in this place: for the word which he uſeth is, οὐ δεδούλωται, is no longer a ſervant, or in ſubjection: which is to be taken in the ſame ſenſe, as if hee ſhould ſay, οὐ δέδεται, he or ſhe is no longer bound or tied: which word the Apoſtle uſeth *verſ.*39. And againe, the Apoſtle hath relation here to the fourth verſe, where he ſaith, The wife, οὐκ ἐξουσιάζει, hath no power of her owne body, and the husband likewiſe: But now, ſaith hee, the Infidell partie having wilfully ſeparated himſelfe, οὐ δεδούλωται, the innocent partie is no longer in ſubjection, that is, ἐξουσιάζει, hath now power over his owne body: and is now become, ἐλευθέρα, free, exempt from the marriage knot or bond, in which ſenſe the Apoſtle uſed the word, verſ. 39.

Whether in caſe of deſertion, the partie forſaken be free.

Secondly, wee muſt know what kinde of deſertion it is, that cauſeth a diſſolution of marriage, and in what manner. Firſt, it muſt bee malitioſa deſertio, a malicious departure without any juſt cauſe: But when as the husband is abſent by conſent about neceſſarie affaires, as the Merchant beyond the ſeas: or is imployed in ſome weightie buſineſſe, as in warfare, in ambaſſage, or ſuch like: or is violently detained in priſon or captivitie amongſt the Turks, or elſewhere: In theſe and the like caſes the wife is bound to wait and expect the returne of her husband, unleſſe ſhee be otherwiſe advertiſed of his death: According to the decree of the Trullane Synod, can. 93. Militum uxores quæ non expectant viri peregrinantis reditum, ſed alteri nupſerint, antequam certa ſint de morte, mœchantur: Souldiours wives which doe not expect their husbands returne, being in travell, but doe marrie others, before they be certaine of their death, doe commit adulterie. Secondly, the innocent partie muſt uſe all meanes to reconcile, reclaime, and bring home againe the wilfull and obſtinate partie ſo departing, if it be poſſible. Thirdly, if hee continue in his obſtinacie, and depart, having no purpoſe to returne, the matter muſt be brought before the Judge or Magiſtrate in ſuch caſes: who after publike citation of the obſtinate partie, and certaine knowledge that hee refuſeth wilfully to appeare being cited, and is not otherwiſe letted to come, may with mature deliberation pronounce the innocent partie free and at libertie to marrie, according to S. Pauls rule, A brother or ſiſter is not bound in ſuch things.

Thirdly, neither is S. Paul contrarie to our Saviour Chriſt, who alloweth no divorce but onely for fornication: for that is a divers caſe from this, whereof S. Paul treateth: And there is great difference betweene lawfull divorce, and unlawfull and wilfull deſertion: for there the innocent partie firſt claimeth the privilege of ſeparation: here the guiltie partie firſt ſeparateth himſelfe; there divorce is ſued and required: here the innocent partie ſeeketh no divorce, but ſeeketh all meanes of reconciliation: ſo that properly the ſetting free the innocent partie in this caſe, cannot bee called a divorce. Chriſt therefore ſpeaketh of lawfull divorce, not of everie diſſolution of marriage: for then mention ſhould have beene made in that place of naturall death and departure, which is confeſſed by all to be a diſſolution and breaking off of marriage.

Thus have I ſhewed mine opinion with Beza and others concerning this point: herein further as in all the reſt, referring my ſelfe to the determination of our Church, and the judgement of our learned brethren, Beza. 1 *Cor.*7. *verſ.*15. Hemingius. Tileman. Heſhuſ. Luther. de captiv. Babylon. cap. de Matrimon. Melanct. loc. theolog. tit. de conjug. Calvin. in 19. Matth. So alſo the confeſſion of Saxony, artic. 18. And Paul ſpeaketh after the ſame manner in the caſe of forſaking: that is, that the partie forſaken is ſet free.

We have alſo the conſent of a Councell: *Concil. Lateranenſ. part.*50. *cap.*23. wee finde this decree: A certaine man for the ſpace of ten yeeres was abſent from his wife, the woman came and complained that ſhe could no longer expect his returne, then it followeth thus: Epiſcopus ſicut vir providus, parentibus ſuis mandavit, ut pro eo mitterent, & ipſum ad propria revocarent. Cumque elapſo longo temporis ſpatio, vir ad propria non remearet: Epiſcopus in conſpectu Eccleſiæ inter eos divortii ſententiam promulgavit, & mulieri, ut alium virum duceret plenariam facultatem indulſit: The Biſhop as a provident man did enjoyne their parents to ſend for him and call him home: And after a long time, when he came not, the Biſhop in the ſight of the Congregation did pronounce the ſentence of divorce betweene them, and gave the woman libertie to marrie another. Which ſentence of the Biſhop was approved of the whole Councell. The ſame Canon, ſee *Decret. Gregor. lib.*4. *tit.*17. *c.*8.

Further evidence alſo wee have for marriage in the caſe of wilfull deſertion: Ambroſ. in 7. 1. ad Corinth. upon theſe words, a brother or ſiſter is not in ſubjection, &c. Non debetur reverentia conjugii ei, qui horret authorem conjugii, &c. The reverence of marriage is not due to him, which abhorreth the author of marriage, &c. Ac per hoc non eſt peccatum ei qui dimittitur propter Deum, &c. And ſo it is no ſinne unto him, which is diſmiſſed for Gods cauſe, if he marrie another.

*Cod. lib.*5. *tit.*1. *leg.*2. Conſtant. Sponſa poſt biennium, &c. The ſpouſe after two yeere expecting the returne of her husband may marrie another: *Tit.*27. *leg.*2. Poſt triennium, after three yeeres ſhee may marrie: *Leg.*7. Poſt quadriennium, after foure yeeres, if ſhee heare no newes of her husband. If the Law give the libertie, when the husband is abſent upon other occaſion, and ſuppoſed to be dead, much more in the caſe of voluntarie deſertion.

Likewiſe decreeth the Canon Law, Cauſ.28.q.1.c.4. Vxor ſine ulla culpa relinquitur, &c. The wife is left without any fault at all, if ſhe refuſe to dwell with a Chriſtian husband.

Ibid. qu.2.c.2.Greg. Infidelis diſcedens, &c. An Infidell departing ſinneth againſt God, and the faith of matrimony is not to be kept with him.

Decret. Greg. lib.4. tit.19.c.7. Qui relinquitur ad ſecunda ſi voluerit, vota tranſibit: He or ſhe that is forſaken, may if ſhe will, goe unto ſecond marriage.

1 Cor.7.13. 1 Tim.5.8. The Papiſts themſelves allow the partie forſaken to marrie againe; but the difference betweene us is this: firſt, they affirme that where the one partie is an Infidell, the marriage is diſſolved, whether the unbeleeving partie will remaine or not, contrarie to the Apoſtle, 1 *Cor.*7.13. If hee bee content to dwell with her, let her not forſake him. Secondly, they hold this to bee deſertion onely, where the one partie is an Infidell: and in this caſe of infidelitie onely matrimony upon deſertion to bee diſſolved: whereas if there be a wilfull deſertion of the one partie, the caſe is all one, whether hee be a profeſſed Infidell or not: for he that is careleſſe of his wife and family, by S. Pauls rule, is worſe than an Infidell, 1 *Timoth.*5.8.

The ſecond part, Whether it be lawfull to marrie after divorcement for adulterie.

The Papiſts.

84. Error. FOr adulterie one may diſmiſſe another, but neither partie can marrie againe for any cauſe during life, *Rhemiſt. Matth.*19.*ſect.*4. So the Doway Collegials. *Annot. Deuter.*24.*v.*1. no, not the innocent partie may marrie againe: for the marriage knot is not diſſolved becauſe of adulterie, *Concil. Trident. ſeſſ.*24. *can.*7.

Mark.10.11. Luk.16.18. Argum. 1. Mark. 10.11. Whoſoever ſhall put away his wife and marrie another, committeth adulterie againſt her. Likewiſe, *Luk.*16.18. Ergo, it is not lawfull to marrie againe at all after the wife bee put away, *Bellarm. c.*16. *argum.*2.

Anſw. Saint Marke and Luke muſt be expounded by Saint Matthew, who ſaith, Whoſoever ſhall put away his wife, except it be for fornication, and marrie another, committeth adulterie: whereupon it followeth, that not everie one which putteth away his wife and marrieth another, committeth adulterie; wherefore the other Evangeliſts muſt be underſtood to ſpeake of their ordinarie and common occaſions, ſuch as were uſuall among the Jewes, for the which men did uſe to put away their wives, and not to include in their generall ſentence, this exception of fornication; for then the Evangeliſts ſhould be contrarie each to other.

Bellar. 1 When Marke did write his Goſpell at Rome, is it like that hee would ſend the Romans to Matthew for an expoſition thereof? 2 It followeth not, Whoſoever putteth away, &c. except for fornication, and marrieth againe, committeth adulterie: Ergo, he that putteth his wife away for fornication, &c. doth not commit adulterie: and that for divers reaſons, Bellar. ibid.

Luk.17.18. Matth.5.20. Contra. Firſt, the Apoſtles and Evangeliſts living, who did write and preach the Goſpell, they needed not to ſend one to another to know the ſenſe, themſelves being directed of the Spirit: but now the beſt direction we have, is to expound the Scripture by it ſelfe, and to make it accord together. Secondly, this exception εἰ μὴ, unleſſe, or except, doth alwayes inferre the contrarie to that which is affirmed: as Luk. 17.18. There are none found to returne to give God praiſe, ſave this ſtranger: Ergo, this ſtranger did returne to praiſe God: Likewiſe *Matth.*5.20. Except your righteouſneſſe exceed the righteouſneſſe of the Scribes, &c. ye ſhall not enter into the kingdome of heaven: Ergo, if it did exceed, &c. they ſhould enter: After the ſame manner, If whoſoever doe put away his wife, &c. except for fornication, doe commit adulterie: then hee that for fornication doth put away and marrie againe, doth not, &c. As for the reaſons alleaged to the contrarie, they ſhall be examined in the anſwers to our arguments. Thirdly, if they underſtand Marke and Luke thus generally without exception, then it ſhall not be lawfull at all to diſmiſſe for fornication. Bellarm. anſwereth, that this may be proved out of Saint *Matth.c.*5.*v.*32. Whoſoever ſhall put away his wife, except for fornication: Ergo, for fornication it is lawfull to diſmiſſe, Contra. 1. Doth not hee now ſend us for the underſtanding of Marke and Luke, to Matthew? 2 And doth not he himſelfe conclude the contrarie upon the exception? thus he offendeth againſt his owne rules, and alloweth that in his owne argument, which he miſliketh in ours.

Matth.5.32. Argum. 2. *Matth.*5.32. Whoſoever ſhall marrie her that is divorced, committeth adulterie: This muſt be underſtood generally, without the exception of fornication; for if it be lawfull to marrie an adultereſſe that is divorced for adulterie, and not the innocent partie that is diſmiſſed, but not for adulterie, then ſhould the caſe of the adultereſſe be better than of the other: *Bellar. c.*16. *arg.*1.

r.7.11. Anſ. The adultereſſe is not ſtraightway to be admitted to ſecond marriage, but it is fit that ſome reſtraint ſhould be made in the diſcretion of the Magiſtrate, leſt it might be made an uſuall practice for incontinent perſons to get them new mates: therefore in this behalfe the adultereſſe caſe is not ſo good. 2 The innocent perſons caſe is much better, becauſe ſhee is free from ſo great a ſinne as the adultereſſe is guiltie of. 3 The innocent partie may be reconciled to her firſt husband: 1 *Cor.*7.11. which is better than to have a new husband. 4 If ſhee cannot bee reconciled, if the froward partie fall into the ſinne of incontinencie, as hee is moſt like in this caſe (refuſing the company of an honeſt wife) wife) to be given over, then hath the innocent partie the ſame remedy, with much better conditions than the other. 5 Neither doth the argument follow, as it may appeare by this inſtance: Your penance you call the ſecond table after ſhipwracke: ſhe that ſinneth not needs not this remedy, the adultereſſe is admitted to it; is the adultereſſe therefore the better becauſe of this ſecond table? no more is ſhe for her ſecond husband. 6 Wherefore the exception in the firſt clauſe of the ſentence, except it be for fornication, muſt be ſupplyed alſo in the latter, as it is evident *Matth.*19.5. where the exception is joyned to both members of the ſentence, both of diſmiſſion, and marrying againe. Matth.19.5.

Argum. 3. *Rom.*7.2. The woman is bound by the law to her husband, ſo long as hee liveth: nothing but death diſſolveth the bond betweene man and wife: therefore not lawfull to marrie againe after divorce, Rhemiſt. ibid. This place is alſo urged by the Doway Collegials: Annot. Deutr. 24. verſ. 1. Rom.7.2.

Anſw. 1. Saint Paul muſt be expounded by our Saviour Chriſt, who maketh exception of fornication, *Matth.*5. Matth.5.32.

2 Neither doth S. Paul deny, that marriage may be diſſolved while they live, without breaking of wedlocke: but that although the knot hold during their life, yet by death it is diſſolved. Againe, S. Paul having no occaſion to intreat of divorce, ſpeaketh of marriage as it ſtandeth whole and ſound by the ordinance of God, that if a woman joyne her ſelfe to another man, her former wedlocke being not lawfully diſſolved, ſhe is a wedlocke breaker.

3 Therefore the Apoſtle ſaith, Que ſub viro eſt mulier, the woman that is in ſubjection to the man: But ſo is not a woman divorced and ſeparated, any longer in ſubjection to her husband: therefore of ſuch an one the Apoſtle ſpeaketh not.

4 Laſtly, we muſt conſider the ſcope of the place, and how the Apoſtle applyeth this ſimilitude: As verſ. 4. hee ſaith, that the Law being dead by the comming of Chriſt, wee are freed from it, from henceforth to live unto him; as the woman is free after the death of her husband to marrie to another: ſo that the Apoſtle ſpeaketh not of the continuance of the bond of wedlocke untill death, but of the diſſolution thereof after death: which onely ſerveth for his preſent purpoſe. And thus alſo is that other place to be expounded, 1 *Cor.*7.39. where the Apoſtle ſheweth, that although marriage remaine firme and ſure untill death, yet then it is diſſolved: To this effect alſo anſwereth Cajetanus a learned Papiſt. 1 Cor.7.39.

Argum. 4. 1 *Cor.*7.11. If ſhe depart, let her remaine unmarried, or be reconciled: Ergo, the parties ſeparated for fornication may not marrie againe, Rhemiſt. 1 Cor.7.11.

Anſw. S. Paul ſpeaketh of other ſeparations which are cauſed by diſſentions in marriage, and not of divorce for adulterie: for he ſaith, 1 If ſhe depart; not, If ſhe be put away: 2 Neither was it ſo uſuall a thing for reconciliation to be ſought after ſolemne divorce. 3 Againe, hee ſaith, Let not the woman depart, as being in her choice, whether ſhe would depart or not: but in the caſe of fornication ſhe was to depart, or rather be put away, whether ſhe would or not. Neither would S. Paul have ſaid in caſe of divoce, let her not depart, ſeeing the Goſpell granteth a ſeparation to bee made betweene the man and the wife in ſuch caſes.

Bellarmine anſwereth, 1 That the Apoſtle in the firſt place, v. 10. Let not the wife depart from her husband, ſpeaketh of unlawfull and unjuſt departure. In the next v. 11. But if ſhee depart, let her remaine unmarried, or be reconciled, hee ſpeaketh of lawfull departure for fornication. 2 If the Apoſtle had ſpoken of any unlawfull or unjuſt departure, he would not have put it to the womans choice, whether to bee reconciled or not; but ſimply have enjoyned her to bee reconciled: *c.*16. reſp. ad arg. 4.

Contra. Firſt, the ſame kinde of departure is underſtood in both places: 1 Becauſe they make but one full ſentence, and theſe words, ἐὰν δὲ, quod ſi, but if, have relation to the other, and ſhew a coherence of the ſenſe: 2 And againe, the ſame word χωρίζω is uſed in both verſes, ſhewing one and the ſame kinde of ſeparation.

Secondly, 1 The Apoſtle doth put it to the womans choice to bee reconciled or not, but by this meanes denying libertie of marriage doth drive her to ſeeke reconciliation, and ſaith thus much in effect: that if ſhe did not reconcile her ſelfe, ſhe ſhould remaine unmarried: 2 For otherwiſe it was not in the caſe of diſmiſſion for adulterie in the offenders power to be reconciled, but in the innocent partie to receive her to reconciliation: but here it is in the power of the guiltie partie to reconcile her ſelfe: therefore it was for other offences beſide fornication.

Argum. 5. If marriage ſhould bee granted after divorce, theſe inconveniences would follow. Firſt, the children ſhould be evill provided for, that are conſtrained to live under a ſtepfather, or ſtepmother. Secondly, by this meanes the married parties being diſcontented, would ſeeke occaſions and picke quarrels one to another, that they may be divorced and marrie againe.

Thirdly, if the marriage be utterly diſſolved, then the guiltie partie is either to marrie againe, or not to marrie: if the firſt, they of purpoſe may commit adulterie, that they marrie where they liſt: if ſecond, what reaſon is there to reſtraine the weaker partie of the remedy? *Bellarm. c.*16.

Contra. Firſt, 1 The ſame danger will bee to the children, upon ſecond marriage after death, as well as after divorce, to endure ſtepfathers or ſtepmothers; ſhall therefore all ſecond marriage for this be reſtrained? 2 If the innocent partie having not the gift of continencie, ſhould be forced to keepe an adultereſſe ſtill, there would enſue a greater inconvenience, the father being uncertaine of his children.

Secondly, 1 As it may be feared, leſt divorces ſhould be procured and ſought, where a way is open to ſecond marriage; ſo if the way were ſhut up, a greater matter would be feared; leſt where by divorce they cannot help themſelves to new wives, they ſhould practiſe by other meanes one to take away another. 2 Againe, where divorce is by pretence or conſent, to pleaſe their owne luſt, the Magiſtrate in his diſcretion hath power to moderate and overrule ſuch inordinate practices. 3 But where Chriſt hath granted a libertie, the wiſdome of man muſt not controll it, but leave the ſucceſſe to Gods providence.

Whether the guiltie partie may have the like libertie as the innocent.

Thirdly, 1 As the guiltie partie by Moſes Law was to die for adulterie, ſo now alſo; if ſome grievous mulct be laid upon the offender, according to the nature of the offence, they would have ſmall liſt to practiſe by adulterie. 2 The guiltie partie doth not ſue for divorce, but the partie grieved; and therefore if there be offence willingly committed, yet the innocent partie may expect amendment and reconciliation, without whoſe conſent and liking divorce is not to bee granted. 3 Some have thought that the guiltie partie ſhould not take benefit at all of ſecond marriage, as Luther, Eraſmus: ſome otherwiſe, as Melanct. in annot. ad c.5. Matth. Howſoever, he or ſhe is not ſo eaſily to be admitted to it, but with due puniſhment and rebuke before, and the mature advice and diſcretion of the Magiſtrate: but for ever to barre the incontinent partie of the remedie, would be occaſion of further ſinne: and if the innocent partie doe marrie againe, the bond of the firſt marriage is diſſolved, and both parties are ſet free, but if the innocent partie doe not goe unto ſecond marriage, it is not fit the offender ſhould have that libertie at all: and if the innocent partie be admitted to ſecond marriage, where there is no hope of reconciliation, which firſt ought by all meanes to bee attempted, yet the offender ſhould not ſuddenly, nor without condigne puniſhment before inflicted, bee allowed that libertie.

The Proteſtants.

FOr no other cauſe in the world, but onely for fornication, may there be either a finall ſeparation, or cleane diſſolution of marriage by way of divorce: But for that cauſe our Saviour hath granted libertie, both to diſſolve matrimony, and to marrie againe.

Matth.5.32.
Matth.19.9.

Argum. Matth. 5. 32. Whoſoever putteth away his wife (except it bee for fornication) committeth adulterie: Ergo, for fornication it is lawfull for a man to diſmiſſe his wife. Likewiſe Matth. 19. 9. Whoſoever ſhall put away his wife, except it be for whoredome, and marrie another, committeth adulterie: Ergo, for adulterie it is lawfull for the man both to put away and renounce his wife; and the wife likewiſe her husband (for there is the like reaſon for both) and for them to marrie againe. This libertie granted by our Saviour Chriſt, by no humane law can be reſtrained or cut off.

This place troubleth our adverſaries verie ſore, and therefore they have found out many ſtarting holes, but all to ſmall purpoſe.

1 Durand thus anſwereth: That when Chriſt uttered theſe words, the Law of the Jewes was, that the adulterous woman ſhould be put to death, & ſo the husband might have libertie to marrie againe.

Contra. Bellarmine overthroweth this anſwer, 1 Becauſe Chriſt here giveth a rule not onely to the Jewes, but to all Chriſtians, not being ignorant, how that in everie nation that law of putting the adultereſſe to death, ſhould not bee in force. 2 Chriſt might as well have excepted other crimes that were puniſhed by death, as murder, and the like, that in thoſe caſes they might marrie againe, becauſe by the Law their wives were to die, as well as in the caſe of fornication. 3 Chriſt ſpeaketh of diſmiſſion: but properly the wife is not ſaid to be diſmiſſed, when ſhee is put to death: Chriſt therefore is not ſo to be underſtood.

2 Bellarmine therefore approveth this expoſition: Whoſoever ſhall put away his wife (except it bee for fornication) and marrie another: he would have the exception reſtrained to the firſt clauſe, in this ſenſe: hee that putteth away his wife, which is not lawfull to doe but for fornication: ſo that the crime of fornication maketh it lawfull to diſmiſſe, but not after diſmiſſion to marrie againe.

Contra. 1. This expoſition is contrarie to the Jeſuite, for he alloweth a ſeparation of matrimony in other caſes, as of hereſie, infidelitie, vow of continencie: but here he ſaith, that onely ſeparation and diſmiſſion is to be made in the caſe of fornication. 2 This anſwer of Chriſt had not beene ſufficient, if he had ſpoken onely of divorce, and not of libertie to marrie againe: for the Phariſies moved the queſtion concerning the manner of divorce permitted by Moſes Law, after the which is was lawfull for them to marrie againe: And therefore it was expected that our Saviour ſhould anſwer to both theſe points; both in what caſes they might diſmiſſe their wives, and marrie againe. 3 The ſentence cannot ſtand in any good ſenſe, unleſſe it be read wholly together: unleſſe you will ſay, that hee which putteth away his wife onely, committeth adulterie: he may cauſe her to commit adulterie, as the Evangeliſt hath in another place, Matth. 5. 32. but commit adulterie he doth not, unleſſe he marrie another: ſo that this muſt needs be the ſenſe, he that putteth away his wife and marrieth another, unleſſe it be in the caſe of fornication, committeth adulterie.

3 Bellarmine further anſwereth with Auguſtine, that theſe words (except it bee for fornication) are onely negatively to bee taken in this ſenſe: that hee which putteth away his wife, and marrieth, where there is no fornication, ſinneth: but he determineth not of the affirmative part, where there is fornication, whether the partie in marrying againe ſin or not: ſo that it followeth not, he that marrieth againe, his wife being put away without fornication, ſinneth: Ergo, he that marrieth, his wife being diſmiſſed for fornication, ſinneth not: it may be a leſſe ſin, or not ſo grievous a kinde of adulterie, but it followeth not, that it is not at all: Bellarm. cap. 17. reſp. ad object. 3.

Cont. 1. This anſwer had beene more ſufficient than the other: for Chriſt in not determining their queſtion ſhould have left them in ſuſpence, and uncertaine what to doe: whereas Chriſts anſwers uſe to bee moſt full. 2 If as well hee committeth adulterie that marrieth upon divorce for fornication, as hee that marrieth where there is no fornication, then our Saviour Chriſts exception is needleſſe: he might have ſaid in generall termes, that whoſoever putteth away his wife, and marrieth another, excepting no cauſe, committeth adulterie. And ſo indeed S. Marke and S. Luke ſet downe this ſpeech in generall words: who are to bee expounded by Matthew, leſt they ſhould ſeeme contrarie one to the other. But farre be it from us to thinke, that Chriſt uſed any needleſſe or unneceſſarie word. 3 This word of exception, εἰ μὴ, niſi, unleſſe, or except, in Scripture is uſed to ſignifie a contrarie diſpoſition in that which is excepted to that which is ſet downe, ſo that if the one be affirmed, the other is denied: as 1 King. 3.18. None was in the houſe except we twaine: they two therefore were, other were not: Luk. 13.3. Except yee repent, yee ſhall periſh: Ergo, if you doe repent, you ſhall not periſh: Luk. 17.18. None are found to returne to praiſe God, εἰ μὴ, except this ſtranger: therefore this ſtranger did returne. So where Chriſt ſaith, Whoſo putteth away his wife, except it be for fornication, and marrieth another, committeth adulterie; We inferre negatively, that hee doth not commit adulterie, who putteth away, and marrieth, where there is fornication. Thus for all their ſhifting evaſions the truth cannot be obſcured.

Luk.17.18.

Argum. 2. Saint Paul ſaith, Let everie man have his wife, and everie woman her husband, for avoyding of fornication, and it is better to marrie than to burne. Wherefore it is lawfull, the firſt marriage according to the word of God being broken, both for men and women to uſe the remedy againſt incontinencie, and to be married againe: for he ſpeaketh generally of all. To this purpoſe Hierome thus excuſeth the marriage of Fabiola, Repudiato marito, &c. Her firſt husband being refuſed: Melius eſt (inquit Apoſtolus) nubere, quàm uri: The Apoſtle ſaith, It is better to marrie than burne: ſhee was young, and could not keepe her widdowhood, and therefore thought it better to confeſſe her infirmitie, and to enter into a ſhadow of marriage, than under the ſhew of ſingle life to play the harlot: ad Oceanum.

Argum. 3. If after divorce for adulterie no marriage ſhould bee lawfull, then the innocent partie ſhould bee puniſhed without his fault: and beſide, hee not having the gift of continencie, and being denied the remedy, either ſhall live in continuall burning, or elſe be tempted to fall into adulterie: ſo it had beene better for no divorce at all to be granted, than upon divorce no marriage: Object. Kemnitii.

Bellarm. 1. The guiltie partie may be reconciled againe, and ſo be retained ſtill. 3 Or if that bee not expedient, the remedy of continencie is ready for all thoſe that will ſue for it, and aske it at Gods hands. 3 And in this caſe the innocent partie muſt endevour to containe, as in the long abſence or ſickneſſe of the wife: B. c. 17. reſponſ. ad object. 2.

Cont. 1. For the partie that offendeth upon his or her repentance to be received againe; we deny not, but to bee a verie charitable, and ſimply the beſt courſe: but all the matter is, when as there is no hope of amendment, ſhall a man retaine a ſerpent ſtill in his boſome? 2 The gift of Continencie is not given to everie man: for 1 Our Saviour ſaith, Matth. 19.11. All cannot receive this thing, ſave they to whom it is given: It is not then given to all, for then all might receive it, which is here denied. 2 And the Apoſtle ſaith further, 1 Cor. 7.7. Everie man hath his proper gift of God, one after this manner, another after that. But if everie man may have the gift of continencie, it is no proper but a common gift. 3 Where Gods hand is upon either partie, as by long ſickneſſe, or by neceſſitie of involuntarie abſence, as in captivitie, there being no other remedy left, God will not deny the neceſſarie gift: but where there is an ordinarie remedy by marriage, we muſt not flie to the extraordinarie gift, which were to tempt God: as Peter leaped out of the ſhip to walke upon the water, and began to ſinke; ſo they which leave the ordinarie meane, truſting to extraordinarie helpe, may be deceived. 4 If continencie were ſuch an eaſie & uſuall remedy upon divorce; why did Pope Gregorie 3. give this libertie, Cauſ. 32. qu. 7. c. 18. that if a woman, by reaſon of her infirmitie, bee not able to render her due, the man, qui ſe continere non poterit nubat, which cannot containe himſelfe may marrie? And ibid. c. 24. If a man lye with his ſtepmother, Vir ejus poteſt aliam accipere, ſi ſe continere non poteſt: Her husband may take another if hee cannot containe. It is evident by theſe Canons, that everie man cannot containe, and that marriage after lawfull divorce, is the next and beſt remedy againſt incontinencie.

Whether everie one may have the gift of continencie.
1 Cor.7.7.

Argum. 4. If upon lawfull divorce marriage were not lawfull, then the Law of divorce ſhould be altogether ſuperfluous and unneceſſarie; neither ſhould Chriſt have provided as good a remedy in this caſe, as Moſes did, by whoſe Law the adultereſſe was to dye, and ſo the innocent partie at libertie to marrie againe. But none of Chriſts precepts are unneceſſarie or ſuperfluous: Ergo.

Bellarm. Yes, divorce is to great purpoſe, though it be not free to marrie afterward: for otherwiſe the innocent partie ſhould be conſtrained to the great danger of his ſoule, ſometime to live with an heretike, &c. Bellarm. c. 17. reſp. ad object. 2.

Contra. 1. Separation for hereſie is not lawfull, but onely for adulterie, and therefore this inſtance is impertinent. 2 The innocent partie may ſequeſter or ſeparate himſelfe of his owne accord from the guiltie partie, though there were no publike law of divorce, as Bellarmine confeſſeth, Divortium quoad thorum propria authoritate fieri poſſe: That divorce from the bed may bee done by a mans owne authoritie: *c.*14. *obſervat.*2. and by this private ſeparation all thoſe pretended dangers may be avoyded.

Argum. 5. This objection was made in Auguſtines time, *Lib.*2. *de adulter. conjug. c.*16. Cogentur mariti adulteras occidere, &c. If marriage after divorce be adulterie, then the husbands ſhall be urged to conſpire againſt their wives, to take them out of the way, that they may marrie againe.

Auguſtine anſwereth: 1 The ſame inconvenience may follow, when as the wife is ſeparated for any other cauſe than adulterie, that ſome may practiſe againſt the life of their husbands in this caſe alſo, to marrie their wives. 2 Another inconvenience may be feared on the other ſide, that men will firſt diſmiſſe their wives to cauſe them to fall into adulterie, that they may have new, Auguſtin. ibid.

Contra. 1. No ſeparation is to bee granted but for adulterie, and therefore in ſuch unlawfull ſeparations, no ſuch danger can bee feared, but when the ſeperation is lawfull and marriage unlawfull. 2 To practiſe againſt a womans chaſtitie, is not ſo great a ſinne as to practiſe againſt her life: This may follow upon the denying of marriage, the other upon granting. Auguſtine ſaith, as hee is alleaged, *cauſ.*33. *qu.*2. *c.*9. Si facturus eſt, quod non licet, jam faciat adulterium, & non faciat homicidium, &c. If a man muſt needs doe that which is not lawfull, let him commit adulterie rather than murder, and marrie another while his wife liveth, rather than ſhed bloud: this inconvenience then is worſe than the other. 3 Where inconveniences are like to enſue on both ſides, the leſſe is to be taken, and rather that rule to be followed which is more conſonant to the Goſpell, as this is to marrie after lawfull divorce.

De fide & oper. cap.19. tom.4. Auguſtine ſaith, that he which putteth away his wife for adulterie, and marrieth another, Non eſt æquandus ei, is not in the ſame caſe with him, which for any other cauſe putteth away and marrieth againe. But if it be as lawfull for other cauſes to be divorced, as for hereſie and infidelitie, as the Jeſuite telleth us, there ſhould be no difference made betweene the ſecond marriage of the one and the other. Auguſtine in the ſame place, though he be elſewhere reſolute againſt marriage after divorce, yet granteth that it is not plaine out of Scripture, whether he be an adulterer that marrieth againe after divorce for adulterie: Sed quantum exiſtimo, venialiter ibi quiſque fallitur: But as I thinke, we are everie one of us herein deceived: And, *de fide & operib. c.*20. he doubteth, whether he be an adulterer which marrieth another wife, the firſt being put away for adulterie.

I end this point, better allowing Pollentius judgement for this matter, than Auguſtines, betweene whom there is much diſcourſed of both ſides: Si mulier à viro non fornicante diſceſſerit, non ei licere alteri nubere propter præceptum: ſi autem à fornicante, non ei expedire propter opprobrium: If a woman depart from her husband being no adulterer, it is not lawfull to marrie another becauſe of the Commandement: but if he be an adulterer, it is lawfull to marrie, but not expedient alwayes, becauſe of the ſhame and reproach, *Ad Pollent. lib.*1. *c.*6.

We have alſo further evidence of antiquitie: *Venetic, Concil. can.*2. Eos qui relictis uxoribus ſuis, ſicut in Evangelio dicitur, excepta cauſa fornicationis, ſeu adulterii probatione, alias duxerint, ſtatuimus à communione arcendos: They which leaving their wives, unleſſe it be for fornication, and adulterie manifeſtly proved, and marrie another, we decree to be put from the Communion. It followeth then, that if adulterie be proved, they may relinquiſh their wives, and marrie other.

*Concil. Vermatienſ. can.*63. Si quis cum matre & filia in adulterio manſit, & poſtea ille vir mulierem acceperit, dimittat eam, &c. illa verò mulier, quam reliquerit, accipiat virum: If any hath continued in adulterie with the mother and the daughter, and after hee taketh a wife, let him diſmiſſe her, and have no wife ſo long as he liveth, but the woman ſo diſmiſſed may take an husband: Likewiſe if the mother and daughter did commit this ſin ignorantly, they may keepe their husbands: if wittingly, one knowing of another, dimittant maritos, they ſhall diſmiſſe their husbands, illarum verò viri accipiant mulieres: but their husbands may take other women to their wives. This Councell giveth libertie to the innocent partie to marrie after divorce. But Bellarmine confeſſeth, Libertatem divortium faciendi ob crimen, parem eſſe viro & uxori: That the libertie to make divorce for adulterie, is alike to the man and wife: *De matrimon. lib.*1. *c.*14. Ergo, they may both marrie after divoce for adulterie.

*Lateranenſ. part.*50. *cap.*46. Mulieres licita aliqua cauſa à viris ſeparatæ poſt annum expletum accipiant alium virum, ſimiliter vir uxorem: Women ſeparate from their husbands lawfully, after a yeere may take other husbands, and their husbands other wives.

*Lateranenſ. part.*6. cap. 21. Vrbanus decreed thus: Si quis pendente lite matrimoniali aliam acceperit, & poſtea inter ipſum & primam divortium fuerit celebratum, poterit cum ſecunda remanere: If any man, while the ſuit dependeth about marriage betweene him and his wife, doe marrie another, and afterward ſentence of divorce be pronounced betweene him and the firſt, he may upon ſufficient penance remaine with the ſecond. *Synod. Florentin. ſeſſ.*25. Græci matrimonia ſeparant, in quo diſſident à Latinis: The Grecians doe uſe to ſeparate matrimony, wherein they diſſent from the Latines: but the Latines ſeparate marriage onely, quoad thorum, not quoad vinculum, they diſſolve the uſe of marriage, riage, not the bond: Ergo, the Greek Church diſſenting from them, diſſolveth the whole, both the uſe of marriage and the knot. And thus far of this queſtion of marriage after divorce: which we ſee hath beene practiſed in times paſt of the Church, and approved of antiquity.

Yet we have further evidence, S. Ambroſe in 7. 1. ad Corinth. thus writeth, the Apoſtle ſaying, Let not the man put away his wife, doth not adde as before of the woman, let him ſo remaine, Quia viro licet ducere uxorem, ſi dimiſerit uxorem peccantem: Becauſe it is lawfull for the man to marry a wife, having diſmiſſed the firſt for her offence: here the man in Ambroſe judgement is permitted to marry after divorce: but there is the ſame reaſon and liberty both of the man and wife in this caſe: as their owne law ſaith: Vna erit lex per omnia & viro & fœmina: There ſhall be one law altogether for the man and the wife, Cauſ.29.qu.2. Ergo, it is lawfull for both.

Cod. lib. 5. tit. 17. leg.8. Theodoſ. Vxorem ſi velit, ſtatim ducere definimus: We doe define, that he may ſtraightway marry a wife, which putteth away the firſt, for cauſes there expreſſed.

Lib. 9. tit. 9. leg.2. Crimen lenocinii incurrunt, &c. They incurre the crime of Bawdes, that retaine a wife ſtill in marriage deprehended in adultery: and leg. 3. Diſſolutio matrimonii: Utter diſſolution of marriage is granted upon the detecting of that crime.

And 1 Further what was the practice of the Greek Church, beſide the foreſaid imperiall lawes, may appeare by that report, which Iuſtinus maketh of a Chriſtian woman, which gave a bill of repudium, to her adulterous husband: now, where there is repudium, there is an utter diſſolution of marriage, as Bellarmine himſelfe diſtinguiſheth betweene divortium, and repudium: ſee before, error 82. Epiphanius ſaith: Qui non potuit una mortua contentus eſſe, ob aliquam cauſam, ſcortationem aut ſeparatione ob aliquam malam cauſam facta, eum divina Scriptura non accuſat, ſi vir ſecunda conjungatur uxori, &c. He that cannot be content with one wife being dead, if ſeparation being made for whoredome, or any other evill cauſe, the man marry a ſecond wife, or the wife a ſecond husband, the Scripture doth not finde fault, &c. The Grecians at this day grant ſecond marriage in the cauſe of adultery, as Bellarmine confeſſeth.

Lib.2.tom.1. hæreſ.59.

Bellarm lib.1. de matrim.c.15.

2 Tertullian ſaith directly: Nubere legitime poteſt repudiata: She that is lawfully repudiate may marry. And againe, Illicite dimiſſam pro indimiſſa ducens adulter eſt: manet enim matrimonium quod non legitime diremptum eſt: He is an adulterer who marrieth a woman unlawfully diſmiſſed, as not diſmiſſed at all: for marriage remaineth, not lawfully diſſolved or broken off, &c. Then conſequently it may be lawfully broken off, and then it remaineth not.

Lib. 4. contra Marcionem.

3 The reformed Churches agree: Confeſſion of Saxonie, artic. 18. The innocent party is not forbid to marry, that he may invocate God, and live holily: for ſeeing the Lord doth expreſſely ſet at libertie the innocent perſon, Matth. 19. when as the other party is polluted with adultery, we muſt underſtand a ſetting at libertie, not in name onely, but in deed, &c. Wittemberg, 26. artic. chap. 21. We hope that it will come to paſſe, that all good Biſhops and Princes will permit them, who by a lawfull divorce are ſeparated from their adulterous wives or husbands, to uſe that libertie of marrying againe in the Lord, which the Son of God hath granted, &c. And concerning the judgement of our Engliſh Church, what it is, may appeare by this, that in the late act of Parliament which maketh it felonie to have two wives, ſpeciall exception is made of thoſe which marry after ſentence of divorce: and it is provided in the late Canons, can. 107. that in every ſentence pronounced onely for divorce and ſeparation, à menſa & thoro, from bed and board, a reſtraint ſhall be inſerted into the act, that the parties during each others life ſhall not marry againe, and that they ſhall put in a ſufficient caution for the performance thereof: but neither are ſuch ſecond marriages pronounced void, only the caution is forfeited, neither doth the Canon ſpeak of ſuch ſeparation, wherein the vinculum the bond it ſelfe is broken, as is by fornication.

Ibid.p.573.

4 [a] Eraſmus, [b] Cajetanus, [c] Catharinus doe all agree, that marriage is lawfull after divorce for adulterie.

Likewiſe their owne Canons thus teſtifie: Cauſ.31. qu. 1. c.6. Licet uxorem inſidiaturam dimittere, & ſi voluerit, aliam ducere: It is lawfull for a man to diſmiſſe a wife, laying await for her husbands life, and if he will to marry another.

[a] Annot. in 7.1. ad Corinth.

[b] In 19. Matth.

[c] Lib 5. annot. in comment. Cajetan.

Cauſ.29.qu.2.c.4. Qui ancillam duxerit uxorem, &c. He that hath married a bond-woman, ſi voluerit, aliam accipiat: after he knoweth her to be a bond-woman, let him take another.

Cauſ.32.qu.7.c.17. Viro licet ducere aliam: The man may marry another: ibid. c. 18. Gregor. 3. alloweth a man to marry againe: Si mulier infirmitate correpta non valet debitum reddere: If the woman taken with ſickneſſe cannot render her debt due to her husband, ibid. c. 19. Illi, cujus uxor ſtuprata cum viri fratre, licita conjugia non negentur: lawfull marriage is not to be denied to him, whoſe wife committed adultery with his brother.

Ibid.c.24. Si quis cum noverca; If any man hath lien with his mother in law, vir ejus poteſt aliam accipere, the man may take another, if he cannot containe.

Cauſ. 33. qu. 1. c. 1. Licet mulieri alteri nubere, ob frigiditatem viri: The woman may marry another for the weakneſſe of her husband. C.2. Videtur mulierem ſecundas nuptias contrahere poſſe: It ſeemeth that the woman may marry againe, ſpeaking of the ſame caſe. C. 33. qu.2. c.9. Potius uxore vivente aliam ducat, quàm humanum ſanguinem fundat: Let a man rather marry another wife, the firſt yet living, than ſhed mans bloud.

Thus it is evident, how by their owne law and Canons, marriage is lawfull after divorce: yea, we ſee that ſome of their Popes have granted ſecond marriage upon divorce, for other cauſes than adulterie, wherein, as they preſumed, exceeding the rule limited in the Goſpell, ſo now they offend in abridging the liberty granted.

The third Queſtion, Of the degrees in marriage prohibited.

First, of the ſupputation of degrees. Secondly, whether the degrees forbidden, Levit. 18. may be diſpenſed with. Thirdly, whether any other degrees may by humane law be prohibited beſide thoſe.

The firſt Part, Of the ſupputation and account of degrees.

THe degrees are either of conſanguinity, which is of divers perſons comming of the ſame ſtock and bloud: or of affinity, which ariſeth of marriage, as when the kinſmen of either party that is married, are by marriage allied to the other, though not of his bloud, as Laban the brother of Rebecca was allied by marriage, as alſo by bloud unto Iſaac, though not ſo neerely.

In both theſe kindes of kinred there is a right line both upward and aſcending: as in conſanguity, the Father or Mother, Grandfather or Grandmother, and ſo forth: in affinity, the father in law, and mother in law, the ſtepfather, or ſtepmother: as alſo deſcending, as the ſon, the ſons ſon, the ſon in law, or daughter in law, and their ſons and daughters. There is alſo a collaterall line in conſanguinitie, as brother and ſiſter, brother and ſiſters children, uncle or aunt: in affinity, the brothers wife, ſiſters husband, the uncles wife, or aunts husband. Now our adverſaries ſet downe theſe rules to know the degrees by.

The Papiſts.

85. Error. 1 IN the right line there is ſo many degrees as perſons, except the firſt, from the which we begin the account: as in this example, Iacob is in the ſecond degree from Abraham. The firſt is excepted, becauſe it is no degree of diſtance, but the beginning of the diſtance of the reſt, Bellarm. cap. 26.

Abraham
Iacob. 2.

Anſw. We ſee no reaſon, why the firſt ſhould be left out: for, 1 Looke how many generations, ſo many degrees: but every perſon is a generation. 2 And this is the manner of account in Scripture: as Matt. 1. there are fourteene generations reckoned from Abraham, whereof Abraham maketh one, Iude 14. Enoch the ſeventh from Adam, Adam being the firſt himſelfe in that number. Thus the Scripture numbreth incluſive, not excluſive, incluſively comprehending alſo the number, from whom the account beginneth. And thus Abraham muſt be counted the firſt degree, and Iacob, not in the ſecond, but the third from him. The uſe of Scriprure for this matter will perſwade more, than any reaſon the Jeſuite can bring. And we ſee that in Scripture not the ſpace betweene the perſons, but the perſons themſelves are counted the degrees.

Thus the Civill law accounteth: Cod. lib. 6. tit. 16. leg. 2. Dioclet. Frater aviæ: The grandmothers brother in the fourth degree, from the grandchildren. Filius fratris aviæ: The ſon of the grandmothers brother, eſt quinto gradu conſtitutus, is ſet in the fifth degree: as by this example it may be made plaine: Abraham is grandfather to Iacob: Iacob then is the fourth degree from Haran Abrahams brother, and the fifth from Lot Harans ſon: ſo by this account of the Civill law, every perſon ſtandeth for a degree: Iacob 1. Iſaac 2. Abraham 3. Haran 4. Lot 5.

This manner of account is alſo allowed by the Canon law: Cauſ. 35. qu. 3. c. 2. Calixtus: Eos conſanguineos dicimus, quos divinæ & imperatorum leges conſanguineos dicunt, &c. Wee call thoſe kinſmen, or of one bloud and conſanguinity, whom the divine lawes, and the lawes of the Emperors doe ſo call.

Ibid. qu. 5. c. 2. Alexander. Quia hæreditates nequeunt deferri, &c. Becauſe inheritances cannot be conveyed but from one perſon to another, the ſecular Emperour hath provided, in ſingulis perſonis ſingulos præſidere gradus, that in every perſon there ſhould be a degree: but becauſe marriage cannot be without two perſons, therefore the ſacred Canons have appointed two perſons in every degree, &c. but it is manifeſt that both theſe kindes of computations, are of one ſentence, and come both to the ſame effect.

Ibid. c. 6. declarat. arbor. conſanguinitat. In computatione aſcendentium, deſcendentium concordat utrunque jus, &c. In the computation of thoſe that aſcend and deſcend, both lawes doe accord: for one perſon added to another maketh a degree, &c. Thus we ſee that the computation of the Civill law is confirmed by their owne Canons.

The Papiſts.

86. Error. 2 IN the collaterall line, if the parties be equally diſtant from the root or ſtock of the generation, looke how many degrees diſtant they are from the ſtock, ſo is the diſtance betweene themſelves: Iacob and Rachel are in the ſecond degree, becauſe each of them is removed from Bathuel, in the ſecond degree: neither have they any relation one to the other, but as they are joyned in the ſtocke, Bellarm. cap. 26.

Bathuel.
Rebecca 1.	Laban 1.
Iacob 2.	Rachel 2.

The Proteſtants.

Anſw. Neither doe we allow this rule: but rather follow the count of the Civill law, which in the collaterall line maketh ſo many degrees as perſons, excepting the ſtock, which is not to be counted in collaterall degrees, becauſe we begin not to number there. Wherefore according to the rule aforeſaid, how many generations, ſo many degrees. According then to the account of the Civill law, which we here follow, Iacob and Rachel are not in the ſecond, but the fourth degree each from other: Rachel 1. Laban 2. Rebecca 3. Iacob 4. For in collaterall degrees, we count not the diſtance from the root or ſtock, but the mutuall diſtance from themſelves.

2 And by this rule one brother ſhould be as neere another, as they are both to their father; the which nature it ſelfe confuteth: ſeeing there is greater love and affection, and ſo a neerer conjunction betweene the father and the ſon, than betweene brethren.

3. By this reaſon alſo, if Coſin germanes be but in the ſecond degree, there ſhould be no degree beyond the ſecond forbidden, Levit. 18. for there is no degree forbidden beyond this: neither is this by name, and directly forbidden.

Bellarm. Firſt, à fratre ad fratrem non tranſitur per patrem, &c. We doe not paſſe from brother to brother by the father: for one brother proceedeth not from another, either mediatly or immediatly: One brother hath no conjunction with another, but conſidered in the father; and therefore from him we muſt ſeeke for the diſtance of brethren. Secondly, in the ſame equall diſtance, there may be notwithſtanding a greater conjunction, as betweene the father and the ſon, the conjunction is greater, than betweene brethren, yet the diſtance is alike.

Contra. Firſt, in the 1 collaterall line, the computation doth not follow the carnall proceſſion or generation, as in the right line: and therefore, though one brother proceed not in generation from another, yet the computation may proceed from one to the other. 2 And he reaſoneth abſurdly; brethren are conjoyned in the father, therefore from him the diſtance muſt be derived: for conjunction and diſtance are two divers things: and the contrary rather is inferred, that becauſe their conjunction is conſidered in the father, the diſtance and disjunction cannot bee taken from thence. 3 And reaſon it ſelfe ſheweth, that from one brother we cannot account to another, but paſſing by the father in computation.

Secondly, it cannot be that in an equall diſtance, there ſhould be an unequall conjunction: for the neereneſſe and farneſſe of the bloud, maketh the greater or leſſer conjunction: wherefore if brethren be as neere each the other in bloud as to the father, the conjunction and affection ſhould be as great: like as in a tree, the neerer the root the more ſap; ſo in conſanguinity, the neerer the root, the more affection.

The Civill law in the collaterall line maketh as many degrees as perſons, the ſtock onely excepted: Cod. lib. 5. tit. 57. leg. 3. Decius: Soror in ſecundo gradu, &c. The ſiſter in the ſecond degree, the brothers ſon in the third. Leg. 7. Patruus & matertera: The uncle and aunt in the third degree. Tit. 58. leg. 5. Diocletian. Fratres uterini, &c. Whole brothers are in the ſecond degree. Leg. 6. Avunculus: The uncle by marriage in the third degree. The Doway gloſſiſts then are deceived, who make the uncle or aunt onely in the ſecond degree: Numb. 26. 39. annot. in margin. Conſobrinus, the coſin germane is in the fourth. In all theſe examples, there are ſo many degrees as perſons, beſide the ſtock. This kinde of computation hath alſo the approbation of the Canons: Cauſ. 35. qu. 5. c. 2. Alexander. 2. Vtraque computatio uno fine concluditur, &c. Both the computations have the ſame end: for two degrees legall, make but one degree canonicall: as brothers that are by the ſecular lawes in the ſecond degree, are by the Canons in the firſt.

Ibid. qu. 5. c. 6. declarat. arbor. conſanguinitat. Theſe two rules of the Civill computation in the collaterall line are commended: firſt, Quoto gradu quis diſtat à ſtipite, in linea aquali toto duplicato diſtant inter ſe, &c. In what degree any are diſtant from the ſtock, double ſo much are they diſtant from themſelves: as Iacob and Rachel are in the ſecond degree from the ſtock (which is not counted for a degree in the collaterall line) and therefore they are diſtant each from the other in the fourth degree. Secondly, another rule is this, In the equall line of collaterals, whether the line be, paris numeri, vel diſparis: Of even number or odde, the degree is alwayes even. As the firſt line is odde, the ſecond even, &c. yet Rebecca and Laban being in the firſt line from Bathuel, are in the ſecond degree, which is an even number. It is otherwiſe in the Canonicall computation: for in an odde line, they have an odde degree: as in the firſt line, where Rebecca and Laban ſtand, they have the firſt degree: yet the firſt computation is commended in theſe words, Bene dicitur ſecundum leges, &c. It is well ſaid according to the lawes, &c.

I will here laſtly adde the teſtimony of S. Ambroſe, that it may appeare how degrees were accounted in his time: Ad paternum patrueles fratres ſibi quarto gradu ſociantur, &c. Brothers children are joyned in the fourth degree: hic autem gradus tertius eſt: but this degree is the third, namely, betweene the uncle and his neece.

The Papiſts.

[illegible] 3 THeir third rule is this: In collaterall degrees unequall, that is, when both are not alike diſtant from the ſtock, they ſhall differ in that degree, in the which the further of them is removed from the ſtock: as in this example, Ioſeph is diſtant foure degrees from the ſtock, and as many from Nachor, likewiſe from Bathuel and Laban, Bellarm. ibid.

Thare.

Abraham 1.	Nachor 1.
Iſaac 2.	Bathuel 2.
Iacob 3.	Laban 3.
Ioſeph 4.

The Proteſtants.

Anſ. NEither is this rule perfect: for by this reaſon, he that is indeed a degree further off, ſhall be in the ſame degree: as Ioſeph ſhall be as neere to Laban as he is to Nachor, who is three degrees from Laban: but this is againſt the common ſenſe, that Ioſeph ſhould be as neere the furtheſt off, as to him that is neerer by three degrees.

Bellarmine anſwereth: The reaſon is, becauſe the perſons that are of the one ſide, Non habent habitudinem ad eos, qui ſunt in altero, niſi ratione ſtipitis: Have no relation or diſpoſition to the perſons on the other ſide, but in reſpect of the ſtock wherein they are all joyned. And therefore looke how far Ioſeph is diſtant from the ſtock, ſo far he is from each of the other ſide.

Contra. If this rule hold in Ioſeph, who is the fourth degree from the ſtock, why ſhall it not hold in Abraham of the ſame ſide, who is in the firſt degree from the ſtock, that as Ioſeph is in the fourth degree from Nachor, Bathuel, Laban, becauſe he is in the fourth degree from Thare, ſo Abraham ſhould be in the firſt degree from Nachor, Bathuel, Laban, becauſe he is ſo from Thare? But this is not ſo: for you ſay Abraham is but one degree from Nachor, two from Bathuel, three from Laban.

Bellarmine ſaith the reaſon is this; becauſe that if Abraham ſhould be no further diſtant from the collaterall perſons, than he is from the ſtock, as but one degree from Laban, becauſe he is but one degree from Thare, it would follow, that Laban ſhould be neerer to Abraham, than to the ſtock, from the which he is removed three degrees, which is impoſſible.

Contra. 1. Yet by the Jeſuites reaſon alleaged before for Ioſephs account, it muſt be ſo for Abraham: becauſe the collaterall perſons have no relation or diſpoſition together, but as they meet and are united to the ſtock: why ſhould not then Abrahams account be directed by his diſtance from the ſtock as Ioſephs is?

2 As this way there falleth out an impoſſibility for Abraham, that Laban ſhould be neerer him than the ſtock: ſo on the other ſide for Ioſeph, that Laban ſhould be as neere him, as Nachor is, who is three degrees from Laban, and muſt needs be ſo much neerer Ioſeph. This account therefore and meaſuring of degrees according to their blinde Canons, is found to be moſt doubtfull and uncertaine; as it may further appeare thus: The Canon law ſaith, Perſona addita perſona uſque ad lineam æqualitatis non creſcit gradus: That one perſon being added to another, till the line be equall, the degree is not increaſed; as in the former example, Laban is added to Bathuel, yet both in the ſame degree from Ioſeph, Cauſ. 25. qu. 5. c. 6. declarat. arbor. conſanguinitat.

Contra. 1. It is abſurd and unreaſonable that they ſhould be in the ſame degree of conſanguinity, and that the addition of a perſon or generation ſhould not make a degree: for what elſe is a degree of conſanguinity, but a generation? ſo that ſo many generations as there are, ſo many degrees there ſhould be.

2 In the degrees of affinity this rule holdeth well: Perſona addita perſona per carnis copulam non mutat gradum ſed genus: One perſon comming or being added to another by carnall copulation, the degree is not changed but the kinde: Ibid. declarat. arbor. affinitat. As the brothers wife, marrying another husband, the ſecond husband is in the ſame degree of affinity with the brothers wife, though in another kinde: but it is otherwiſe in the line of conſanguinity.

3 If this were a good rule, that when two differ unequally from the ſtock, one two degrees, another foure, they ſhall differ one from another in that degree which is fartheſt off, that is, the fourth: then it would follow very well, they being diſtant in the ſame degree one from another, that if I cannot marry thy daughter, then thou canſt not marry mine, and ſo alſo affirmitively, but this is denied by their Canon: For he that is in the third degree may contract with his daughter that is in the fourth: ſed non è converſo, but not contrariwiſe: declarat. arbor. affinit. But if they were in the ſame degree of diſtance, according to their rule one from the other, why ſhould it not follow both affirmatively, and negatively?

4 Celeſtinus the third, decreeth contrary to this rule: Decret. Gregor. lib. 4. tit. 14. c. 3. That whereas there was a certaine indulgence or liberty to marry in the ſixth degree: and ſo conſequently, he that was in the ſixth degree on the one ſide, might marry into the ſecond or third degree on the other: Quod videtur poſſe fieri ſecundum regulam, &c. Which it ſeemeth (ſaith Celeſtinus) might be done according to the rule: which is, that how many degrees one is diſtant from the ſtock, he is diſtant from every one deſcending from the ſtock on the other line. And ſo one in the ſixth degree, & another in the ſecond or third in another line, differ from themſelves in the ſixth degree, and conſequently by this indulgence might marry: yet Celeſtinus determineth, that they muſt not be underſtood to be in the ſixth degree, unleſſe both of them were diſtant from the ſtock in the ſixth degree: and ſo he apparantly croſſeth the Canon, by the which they are ſaid to differ in the ſixth degree, if one of them only be removed from the ſtock in that degree. Wherefore in collaterals we preferre the Civill account of degrees: that is, ſo many perſons, the ſtock of the kinred excepted, ſo many degrees. Theſe then are the rules for the degrees of marriage.

The rules for the degrees of Conſanguinitie.

1 IN the right line aſcending and deſcending all degrees are forbidden; as aſcending, the *Father, Mother, Grandfather, Grandmother, Levit.*18.7. Deſcending, *the ſon or daughter, the ſons daughter, or daughters daughter, Levit.*18.10. and ſo of the reſt.

2 In the collaterall line of conſanguinity the prohibition reacheth expreſly to the third degree: as it is not lawfull to marry the Uncle or Aunt, *Levit.*18.12. and by way of conſequence to the fourth degree; as to the Uncles or Aunts ſon or daughter.

3 The ſame degrees are forbidden by way of Analogie, both to the man and woman: as it is not lawfull for the Nephew to marry the Aunt, *Levit.*18.14. So by the ſame reaſon, not for the Neece to marry her Uncle. And theſe are the rules for the limitation of the degrees of conſanguinity: The directions alſo for the computation are theſe.

4 In the right line there are ſo many degrees as perſons: as the Civill law ſaith: Generata perſona ſemper adjicit gradum: The generation of every perſon maketh a degree: as before I have ſhewed, *Err.*85.

5 In the collaterall line equall, or unequall, there are ſo many degrees as perſons, not counting the ſtock: See before *Err.*86.87.

Of the degrees of Affinitie.

FIrſt of the Computation of the degrees; then of the limitation: the rules for the Computation are theſe:

1 The firſt rule of the Canon law is this: Inter virum & mulierem non contrahitur affinitas, ſed ipſi ſunt affinitatis cauſa: Affinity is not betweene the man and the woman, but they are the cauſe of affinity: for affinity is defined, Perſonarum proximitas ex coitu proveniens: The neereneſſe of perſons proceeding of carnall conjunction.

2 Hereupon it followeth, that the neereſt affinity is in the ſecond or third degree: for if the man and wife be counted as one degree, the firſt affinity is in the ſecond; if they be reckoned for two, the firſt affinity is in the third, as the wives or husbands, father, brother, daughter, &c.

3 Quoto gradu quis tibi conſanguineus, toto mulier affinis: In what degree thy kinſman is of conſanguinity, in the ſame degree of affinity is his wife. The law giveth this reaſon, becauſe they are one fleſh: *Cauſ.*35.*qu.*5.*c.*3. And this rule ſeemeth to be grounded upon the Scripture: *Levit.*18.14. Thou ſhalt not uncover the ſhame of thy fathers brother, thou ſhalt not goe in to his wife for ſhe is thy aunt. Here the uncles wife is called the aunt, as being in the ſame degree of kinred: he of conſanguinity, ſhe of affinity. By this rule the brother being in the ſecond degree of conſanguinity, his wife ſhall be in the ſecond degree of affinity. I am not ignorant that ſome doe account alwayes the affinity in a degree further than the conſanguinity by the which it commeth in; as they place the uncles wife in the fourth degree of affinity, the uncle being in the third of conſanguinity, Iun. Annot. in 18. Levit. And this account I followed in the other edition: the matter is not great, whether way we make our computation: but the firſt ſeemeth to me to be more probable, and according to the rule of the Civill law: Generata perſona adjicit gradum, &c. The generation of a perſon maketh a degree: where then there is no generation, but a copulation only or conjunction, there is no new degree.

4 Perſona addita perſona per carnis copulam mutat genus, non gradum: One perſon comming to another, by carnall copulation, changeth not the degree, but the kinde of affinity: as the brothers wife is of affinity in the ſecond degree and firſt kinde: if ſhe marry a ſecond husband, he is of affinity in the ſame degree, but in the ſecond kinde: if he marry another wife, ſhe is of affinity in the ſecond degree ſtill, but in the third kinde.

5 By this rule of the Canon law may another be collected: Perſona addita perſona per generationem, mutat gradum, ſed non genus, &c. A perſon added to a perſon by generation, doth change the degree of affinity, not the kinde. As we have an example, Levitic. 18. 17. The wives daughter is in the ſecond degree of affinity to the husband, and the firſt kinde: her daughters daughter is in the third degree and firſt kinde. And theſe are the rules of the computation of the degrees of affinitie.

The rules for the limitation of the degrees of Affinitie.

1 I*Nter affines aſcendentes, deſcendentes, prohibitio extenditur in infinitum*: In aſcending or deſcending, affinity is prohibited infinitely, that is, without any limitation: as *Levit.*18. 17. It is not lawfull to marry the wives daughter, nor daughters daughter, and ſo downward: and likewiſe aſcending, not the wives father, or fathers father, &c.

2 Affinitatis perpetuum eſt impedimentum, quod durat, mortua perſona, qua mediante contrahitur: Affinity is a perpetuall impediment, and it holdeth, though the perſon be dead, by whom it was contracted: Cauſ. 35. qu. 10. c. 2. As, though the wife be dead, yet her kinred is of affinity ſtill with her husband remaining alive.

3 Affinitas non habet prohibitionem niſi in primo genere: Affinity is not forbidden, but in the firſt kinde: declar. arbor. affinit. Affinity in the firſt kinde continueth, till it be changed, by a new conjunction in marriage: as the brothers wife is of affinity in the firſt kinde, but if ſhe marry againe, her ſecond husband is of affinity in the ſecond kinde, and with him marriage is not prohibited.

4 In collaterall affinity marriage is inhibited till the third degree, counting the man and wife for one, or to the fourth, making them two degrees, Levit. 18. 14. the Vncles wife is of affinity in the third degree, the uncle being in the ſame degree of conſanguinity.

5 Inter conſanguineos viri & conſanguineos uxoris, nulla affinitas: Betweene the kinred of bloud on the mans ſide, and the kinred of bloud on the womans ſide there is no affinity; and therefore two brothers may marry with two ſiſters; the father and the ſonne, with the mother and the daughter.

6 In conſanguinity it followeth, the father is my kinſman, therefore his ſon, but not in affinity: for the father marrying my ſiſter, and having a ſon by her, he is of conſanguinity, but not of affinity unto me; if he have a ſon by another wife, though the father be my kinſman in affinity by the firſt marriage, yet the ſon is neither of affinity nor conſanguinity.

The ſecond Part, VVhether any of the degrees prohibited in the law may be diſpenſed withall.

The Papiſts.

88. Error. THey ſay not that the Pope may diſpenſe with all, but with ſome of them, Concil. Trident, ſeſſ. 24. can. 3. As they took upon them to diſpenſe with King Henry the eighths marriage with his brothers wife: their reaſon is, becauſe ſome of thoſe prohibitions were only judiciall and poſitive conſtitutions, not grounded upon the law of nature.

Argum. 1. If it be the law of Nature not to marry within thoſe degrees, it ſhould have beene in force before the law was made: but ſo was it not: for Abraham married his brothers daughter, and Iacob two ſiſters, Bellarm. cap. 27.

Anſw. 1. As Auguſtine ſaith of the marriage and copulation of Adams children, brothers and ſiſters together: Factum eſt compellente neceſſitate: It was for neceſſity ſake, becauſe there were then no more women: ſo alſo may it be in ſome ſort true of thoſe Patriarks, that having a neceſſity to marry amongſt their owne kinred, and not with the Gentiles: there was no choice to be had of women of their owne kinred further off in degree.

2 Although this example of theirs, both in marrying ſo many wives and ſo neere of kin, cannot be altogether excuſed or juſtified in them: yet becauſe the law of nature was not yet ſo cleerely known, as afterward by the giving of the law, which is nothing elſe but an expoſition of the law of nature; the offence was not ſo great in them, but might better be tollerated: becauſe, as Auguſtine ſaith, it was neither contra morem illorum temporum, nec contra praeceptum: neither againſt the cuſtome of thoſe times, nor againſt any flat precept. And to conclude, although thoſe holy men had their imperfections, yet we muſt not judge them in theſe things according to the evill and corrupt diſpoſition of men in theſe dayes, which might uſe this great liberty in marriage, better than many uſe lawfull marriage now: as Auguſtine ſaith, Caſtiùs habebant plures, quàm nunc unam: They uſed many wives more chaſtely, than many now uſe one, De bon. conjug. cap. 13.

Bellarmine replieth: Firſt, he denieth that Iacobs marriage and the reſt, were facta diſpenſante Deo, were diſpenſed with of God: for it appeareth, Geneſ. 28. 2 that it was the cuſtome of the place to give two ſiſters to one man: neither would Iacob have ſo eaſily 3 yeelded to it, if it had beene an unwonted thing: 4 and beſide there was no neceſſity in it, that they ſhould marry their kinſwomen.

Secondly, if they had ſinned in theſe marriages, 1 then ſhould they have continued all their life in ſin, which the ſervants of God doe not: 2 and by this meanes their children ſhould have beene baſtards, being borne in unlawfull Matrimonie, Bellarm. c. 27. reſponſ. ad probat. 2.

Contra. Firſt, Bellarmine is 1 contrary to himſelfe in denying that the marriages of the Patriarks were diſpenſed with: for he affirmed before, c. 11. propoſ. 4. Diſpenſatio circa polygamiam eſt judicata patribus, &c. The diſpenſation concerning polygamie, or multitude of wives, was declared to the Fathers by God, &c. Their Canons affirme the ſame, Decret. Gregor. lib. 4. tit. 19. c. 4. Nulli licuit ſimul plures uxores habere, niſi cui fuit divina revelatione conceſſum, &c. It was lawfull for none to have many wives at once, but to whom it was granted by divine revelation, &c. that as Iacob from lying, the Iſraelites from theft, Sampſon from murder; ſo they are excuſed from adultery: and as in taking many wives, ſo alſo in marrying in their neere kinred, it was by the ſame toleration permitted, though not by diſpenſation authorized or warranted.

Gen. 29. 26.

2 Geneſ. 29. There 1 appeareth no ſuch cuſtome, to give two ſiſters to one man, but the manner was not to marrie the younger before the elder, v. 26. Though there had beene ſuch a cuſtome, it was in an idolatrous Countrie, and therefore could not make it lawfull.

3 Iacob 1 deſired but one, and had a purpoſe onely to marrie Rachel; but being deceived, he was driven to this ſtrait, that he muſt either take both, or elſe be deprived of her whom hee chiefly loved. 2 Iacobs affection herein is no excuſe of his infirmitie. 3 And the unlawfulneſſe of ſuch marriage, there being yet no poſitive law, was not ſo fully revealed unto them. 4 Wherefore that which Iacob might doe either of infirmitie, or ignorance, maketh not the thing lawfull.

4 Their neceſſitie was ſuch, that they muſt either marrie their kinſwomen, or elſe the daughters of Canaan, which was unlawfull and forbidden, Geneſ. 28. 6.

Secondly, 1 Gods ſervants doe not continue in any ſin which they know, without repentance, but a ſin of ignorance or infirmitie may remaine in them: for how ſhould they correct that which they knew not: it was a weakneſſe in Abraham to cauſe Sara to diſſemble, as though ſhee were not his wife; yet did not Abraham know it, but continued in it; for he committed the ſame error twice: and Iſaac his ſon by his example did the like. 2 Neither can it bee denied, but that there was baſtardie in ſome of their ſeed: ſuch were the two ſons of Thamar which ſhee had by Iudah her father in law: But we denie, that though thoſe marriages in themſelves were unlawfull, that therefore all their ſeed was illegitimate; both 1 becauſe the poſitive law was not yet given, which judgeth of baſtardie: 2 And beſide, they married not for luſt, but for procreation and propagation of the Church: 3 As alſo the unlawfulneſſe of theſe marriages was tolerated in reſpect of the neceſſitie and condition of thoſe times. 4 And by lawfull marriage ſucceeding, in continuance of time, the firſt ſtaine and blot was extinct and worne out.

Deut. 25. 5.

Argum. 2 Deut. 25. 5. The law giveth this libertie, that if a brother die without iſſue, his brother ſhould take his wife, and raiſe up ſeed to his brother. This law commandeth nothing againſt nature, becauſe God is the author of nature, who made this law, and doth nothing againſt nature: therefore that is no naturall law, Levit. 18. that a man ſhould not marrie his brothers wife, neither is it ſimply evill ſo to doe, for then God would not have commanded the contrarie: but it is onely a judiciall law, afterward abrogate by Chriſt, Bellar. cap. 27.

Anſwer. 1. That the law, Leviticus 18. was grounded upon nature, and endured even after Chriſts comming, it appeareth, in that Iohn Baptiſt (Chriſt being then come, and entred into his office) reproved Herod for marrying his brothers wife. 2 That libertie granted, Deuteron. 25. is an exception from the other law, which ſerved onely for thoſe times, for the continuance of carnall kindred, and maintenance of their tribes and families, which were to hold till the comming of the Meſſia: but now the cauſe of that exception ceaſing, the libertie alſo is taken away. 3 Neither doth it follow, that if the other law, Leviticus 18. 16. bee grounded upon nature, that this exception ſhould bee againſt nature: for not ſimply the marrying of the brothers wife, but the uncleane affection in uncovering the brothers ſhame by ſo doing, maketh it unnaturall, as it is in the law expreſſed: but in marrying the brothers wife in this caſe onely, to raiſe up ſeed to him, and onely at that time during the ſtate of that people, was not to uncover but to recover his ſhame, and raiſe up his name and honour in Iſrael, wherefore it was not unnaturall. 4 God is above nature, and above the law: and who may better expound the law than the Law-giver: and by the ſame right might the Lord in this caſe onely grant libertie to marrie the brothers wife, notwithſtanding the other generall law, as Phinehes did ſlay the adulterer and adultereſſe, and Samuel the King of Amaleck, notwithſtanding the law, Thou ſhalt not kill. Neither doth it follow, that becauſe God did in that one caſe diſpenſe with his law: Ergo, man hath authoritie to doe the ſame. 5 Laſtly, if it bee anſwered, that in this exception, Deut. 25. 5. the next kinſman who might marrie the widowe by law, not the brother, is to bee underſtood: for neither doth the word in that place ſignifie a brother properly: and we ſee the practice accordingly, Ruth. 4. where not the brother but the kinſman performeth this dutie. This anſwer might ſuffice to remove the Jeſuites force: but wee rather receive the former.

Bellarmine replyeth: Firſt, this exception ſheweth, that to marrie the brothers wife, is not ſimply evill of it ſelfe, for then it could not be made good and lawfull by any circumſtance. Secondly, hee denieth it to be an exception; for not God, that knoweth all things, doth uſe to make exceptions after a law made, but men, when they ſee the law cannot otherwiſe be kept. Thirdly, neither is it a diſpenſation, for a diſpenſation is no law, but onely a qualifying of the law in ſome particular caſe. Fourthly, this kinde of marriage is againſt the law of nature, no otherwiſe than killing is, which by ſome circumſtance may be made lawfull, and ſo may the other, Bellar. c. 27.

Contra. Firſt, to marrie the brothers wife of a fleſhly minde and carnall luſt, is ſimply evill, and cannot be made lawfull by any circumſtance: but to marrie her according to the law, onely to raiſe up ſeed to the brother, for the continuance of the tribes and families, which were then Gods people, was not evill, not proceeding of any ſuch carnall deſire to the brothers wife, but of obedience to the law: like as to kill a man in malice is ſimply evill, and is never made lawfull, yet Phinehes killing not in malice, but in the zeale of Gods glory, was commended.

Secondly, as man may make exceptions againſt mans law, ſo to God only it belongeth to take exception againſt his owne law: for who dare preſume to adde any thing to Gods law, but himſelfe? neither doth God give exceptions againſt his law for want of foreſight, but for the profit and utilitie of men, as this exception was for the commoditie of the Jewes.

Thirdly, neither was this a perpetuall law, but onely for that nation and for that time, and therefore hath the right nature of a diſpenſation.

Fourthly, 1 As killing with a malitious minde and of private revenge, is againſt nature, and cannot be made lawfull; ſo is the marrying of the brothers wife with an uncleane affection: but to kill to the glorie of God, is diſpenſed with in the word: ſo is this marriage done onely in obedience to the law, and utilitie of the people of God. 2 Againe, as the lawfull kinde of killing (as by publike authoritie) is allowed by the ſame law-giver; ſo alſo the caſes and exceptions that allow the marriage of the brothers wife, muſt be warranted by Gods word. 3 Wherefore Bellarm. granting that this kinde of marriage is as much againſt nature as killing is, doth confeſſe as much as wee doe deſire: neither hath he gained any thing but loſt; ſeeing that as no man hath power to diſpenſe with killing but God, ſo neither is this marriage lawfull, but in caſes limited and appointed by God: ſo that neither the Pope nor any other mortall man hath power to diſpenſe in this caſe.

The Doway Collegials ſet downe this poſition, that all marriages in the right line, and in collaterall the firſt degree, as betweene the brother and ſiſter are onely forbidden by the law of nature: all other degrees depend on poſitive lawes, which have beene, and may be altered: their reaſons are theſe, and to the like effect.

1 By the law of Moſes, the brother was to marrie the brothers wife that died without iſſue.

2 Such marriages were permitted among the Gentiles, who followed the law of nature, which was knowne unto them by the diſcourſe of reaſon, as it may appeare by Laban, who followed the cuſtome of the place.

Levit. 18. 18. 3 The law forbiddeth one to marrie a woman and her ſiſter, while ſhe lived, not prohibiting ſuch marriage after his wife were dead.

4 The tranſgreſſion in the right line, and firſt collaterall degree, was puniſhed with death, not the other, which ſheweth, that the former were prohibited by the law of nature, not the other.

5 Abraham married his brothers daughter, Iacob his two ſiſters, two ſons of Iudah the ſame woman, Amram his fathers ſiſter, and yet all theſe were bleſſed of God: which ſheweth, that all theſe degrees were not forbidden by the law of nature: to this effect theſe College men of Doway.

Lib. de monogamia. Contra. 1. To this argument ſee the anſwer before, reſponſ. ad argum. 2. to the which I will adjoyne Tertullians reaſons of that law, which are theſe three. 1 Quia vetus illa benedictio dominica habebat, &c. Becauſe that old benediction was yet to take place, increaſe and multiply, &c. 2 Quoniam patrum delicta à filiis exigebantur, &c. The fathers ſins were required of their children. 3 Quoniam ſteriles ignominioſi habebantur; The barren were counted ignominious, and therefore leſt they which died without iſſue might be thought to be accurſed: Vicaria & quaſi poſtuma ſoboles illis ex ſuo genere ſupparabatur, &c. A poſteritie in their ſtead, and after their death out of their kindred was prepared for them, &c. and ſo he concludeth, Quod ceſſavit valere, ceſſante ratione, non poteſt alii argumentationem accommodare, &c. That which is now ceaſed to be in force, the reaſon thereof ceaſing, cannot be an argumen to ſerve anothers turne, &c. ſo then theſe particular reaſons, agreeable to the law of nature, for the propagation of that nation, doe not overthrow the generall law, but that, this caſe excepted, diſpatched by the author of nature, the rule ſhould hold ſtill for the unlawfulneſſe of ſuch marriages even by the law of nature.

2 The Gentiles had their reaſon darkned and obſcured, and underſtood not aright the law of nature, but did many things contrarie to it: neither doth it appeare, that Labans Countrie had ſuch a cuſtome of marrying two ſiſters, but that the younger ſhould not marrie before the elder.

3 1 The meaning of that place is not, Thou ſhalt not take a woman and her ſiſter, but not one woman to another, for ſo is that phraſe taken, Ezech. 1. 9. the wings were joyned, iſhah el achothah, the woman to her ſiſter, that is one to another, in the very ſame phraſe, which is uſed here: 2 For otherwiſe, there ſhould bee an apparant contradiction betweene this law and that other, verſ. 16. which maketh it unlawfull to marrie the brothers wife, and ſo by the ſame analogie, the wives brother or ſiſter. 3 And yet allowing the other ſenſe, Thou ſhalt not take a woman and her ſiſter to vex her during her life; It followeth not, that one may take his wives ſiſter after her death: but it ſheweth that it is more unlawfull to doe it, while the wife liveth with a minde to vex her: for ſuch an one ſinneth both wayes, in taking his wives ſiſter, and that in her life time, with an intent to vex her: and to this purpoſe the ordinarie gloſſe, as though there be not emulation betweene thoſe, that are not ſiſters; This therefore is ſaid, Ne hoc animo fiat, ut in zelum ſororis ſoror ſuperducatur, Leſt it ſhould be done of purpoſe with this minde, that a ſiſter be brought in to vex her ſiſter, &c. ſo one reaſon is underſtood of the unlawfulneſſe of this marriage, according to the generall law before preſcribed, another is expreſſed, of the vexing of one another.

4 1 Neither doth the argument follow, the tranſgreſſions of other prohibited degrees are not puniſhed by death, as the other two are, therefore they are not againſt the law of nature: for one ſin may be more againſt nature than another, and ſo worthie of greater puniſhment: as every trangreſſion of the morall law, which is grounded upon the law of nature, is not ſentenced by death. 2 Even the tranſgreſſions in other collaterall degrees beſide the firſt, are puniſhed by death: as it appeareth by the phraſe, of bearing their iniquitie, which is underſtood of the puniſhment of death, as *v.*17. he that taketh his ſiſter to wife, ſhall be cut off, he ſhall beare his iniquitie; ſo hee that marrieth his Aunt, his father or mothers ſiſter, ſhall beare his iniquitie, v. 19. which phraſe often in Scripture is taken for the puniſhment by loſſe of life, as *Levit.*24.15.*Num.*9.13. where to be cut off, and to beare his iniquitie, are joyned together. And againe, *c.*18.29. it is ſaid, Whoſoever ſhall commit any of theſe abominations, &c. ſhall be cut off from his people, which Lyranus thus expoundeth, per judicium humanum ſi fuerit convictus, per judicium divinum, ſi evaſerit humanum. By the judgement of man, if he bee convict, by the divine judgement, if he eſcape the human, &c.

Levit. 24. 15.
Numb. 9. 13.
Levit. 18. 29.

5 See this argument anſwered before, reſponſ. ad argum. 1.

The Proteſtants.

WE affirme, that it is utterly unlawfull for any Chriſtian to marrie within the degrees prohibited; neither can any human power diſpenſe with ſuch marriages; but the equitie of that law being grounded upon nature, is in force for ever. Wherefore the Pope of Rome ſheweth himſelfe plainly to be Antichriſt, in diſpenſing againſt the law of God.

Argum. 1. *Levit.*18.24. The reaſon of that law is given concerning the forbidden degrees: They ſhould not defile themſelves in any one of thoſe things, becauſe the Gentiles defiled themſelves thereby, and were caſt out before them for it. Wherefore it is a naturall and perpetuall law, otherwiſe the Gentiles had not beene bound unto it.

Levit. 18. 24.

Bellarm. anſwereth: Firſt, the Gentiles were puniſhed for other greater ſins, as idolatrie, adulterie, mentioned before; *v.*21.22. and not onely for theſe marriages. Secondly, the Gentiles did marrie in their kindred without any reſpect, and no circumſtances conſidered, and therefore offended againſt the law of nature: for the Patriarks married within the degrees prohibited, as Abraham, yet were not puniſhed, *Bell. c.*27. reſp. ad argum. 1. Proteſtant.

Contra. Firſt, the words are, In all theſe nations are defiled: therefore theſe unlawfull marriages are comprehended among the reſt: and although they had other ſins, for the which they were puniſhed; yet theſe alſo reigned among them, and conſequently were unnaturall. Secondly, the marriages here forbidden are ſimply propounded without any circumſtance, and therefore no circumſtance of mans deviſe, not allowed in the law, can diſpenſe with the unlawfulneſſe of theſe marriages. Thirdly, the ſins of the Gentiles are noted, wherewith they did then pollute themſelves: the marriages of the Patriarks were before the law, and in reſpect of the neceſſitie of thoſe times, their chaſtitie and fidelitie tolerated.

Argum. 2. Mark. 6. 18. Iohn ſaith to Herod, It is not lawfull for thee to have thy brothers wife: Ergo, the law was not abrogate, being in force in our Saviour Chriſts time. Neither are they to alleage, that Herods brother was yet living, or that hee had a childe by Herodias, and therefore it was not lawfull for him to marrie her: for all this being granted, which cannot be proved, yet it is plaine out of the text, that Iohn reproveth him in no other name, but becauſe hee married his brothers wife.

Argum. 3. Saint Paul reproveth the inceſtuous young man that had his fathers wife, 1 Cor. 5. 1. and excommunicateth him for it: but this is not forbidden any where in the new Teſtament, but onely by vertue of Moſes law: Ergo, that law concerning degrees of kindred continued in force ſtill. Neither is it a good anſwer to ſay, as Bellarmine doth, that in ſome degrees that law holdeth, and not in other; ſeeing that all the degrees there named, Levit. 18. are with the like ſtrictneſſe, and in the ſame forme of words prohibited: neither can the Jeſuite ſhew, where any part of that law is reverſed. The words are, v. 24. Ye ſhall not defile your ſelves in any of theſe things: ſo then all the degrees there expreſſed are forbidden. Neither doth it helpe him to ſay, that this inceſtuous perſon did keepe his fathers wife while his father lived: which is uncertaine, for as it is by ſome affirmed, ſo it is by other denied, as Theodoret: howſoever it were, the Apoſtle deſcribeth his ſin to bee this, that he had his fathers wife: ſo that we ſee, that the Leviticall prohibition was perpetuall, and in force under the Goſpell.

1 Cor. 5. 1.

Levit. 18. 24.

Auguſtine is againſt them, who ſpeaketh of the marriage of Conſobrines or Coſin germanes, which had beene ſometime in uſe, Quia id nec divina prohibuit, & nondum prohibuerat lex humana; It was as yet thought lawfull, becauſe neither the divine law forbad it, neither was it yet prohibited by mans law. If that then be thought lawfull, which Gods law manifeſtly forbiddeth not, that ſure is unlawfull which it plainly forbiddeth. Wherefore to marrie within any of the degrees directly forbidden, *Levit.*18. is utterly unlawfull.

De civitat. Dei. lib. 15. cap. 16.

We have the full conſent of antiquitie, *Concil. Agathenſ.*61. Hos inceſtus cenſemus eſſe, ſi quis relictam fratris, aut germanam uxorem duxerit, &c. Theſe we count inceſts, if a man marrie his brothers wife, or his owne ſiſter, his mother in law, his Aunt, &c. as it followeth in Moſes law.

Synod. Epaunenſ. can. 30. Aurelianenſ. 2. cap. 10. Arelatenſ. ſub Carolo can. 11. *Gregor.*3. decret. 5.

Neocaeſar. can. 2. In all theſe Councels and decrees it is in flat termes decreed, that it ſhall not be lawfull for any man to marrie his brothers wife.

Concil. Parrhiſienſ. can. 4. Nullus illicita conjugia contra praeceptum Domini ſortiri praeſumat, ut fratris relictam, novercam, &c. Let no man preſume to make any unlawfull marriage contrarie to the commandement of God, as to marrie his brothers widow, his mother in law, &c.

And that it is not lawfull for the Pope to diſpenſe in this caſe with the marriage of the brothers wife; heare the determination of the Pope himſelfe: Zacharie of that name thus writing to Boniſacium, who required his adviſe concerning one that had married his Uncles wife, who affirmed that he was diſpenſed with by Gregorie the 3. his Predeceſſor; Pope Zacharie maketh this anſwer: Abſit hoc, ut praedeceſſor noſter ita praeciperet, nec enim ab Apoſtolica ſede illa diriguntur, quae contraria canonum ſtatutis eſſe perhibentur; Farre be it from my Predeceſſor to make any ſuch law, for the Apoſtolike ſee hath no authoritie to decree any thing contrarie to the ancient Canons, Epiſtol. ad Boniſacium. But for a man to marrie his brothers wife, is contrarie to the Canons, as we have ſeene: Ergo, in this caſe the Pope cannot diſpenſe.

We have the approbation of the Imperiall lawes, Cod. lib. 5. tit. 5. leg. 4. 5. Valent. Theodoſ. Fratris uxorem ducendi, vel duabus ſororibus conjungendi penitus licentiam ſubmovemus, &c. Wee doe denie licence to marrie the brothers wife, or to be joyned to two ſiſters, ibid, leg. 9. Anaſtaſius: Reſcripta omnia viribus carere decrevimus, &c. Wee decree, that all diſpenſations, licences of the Prince, &c. ſhall be void, which doe give leave to marrie the brothers wife, &c. Wherefore ſeeing the lawes of Princes doe concurre with the law of God, in the prohibition of ſuch marriages, it followeth that they are meere morall precepts, and agreeable to the law of nature.

De religion. Muſcovit. The rude Muſcovites herein exceed the Romaniſts: there was none ever found among them, as Ioannes Faber writeth, qui in quarto gradu contraxerit, which contracted matrimonie in the fourth degree, neither is any therein diſpenſed with: And therefore they condemne the Romaniſts, quia conſanguineas in matrimonium ducunt, becauſe they marrie their kinſwomen.

Sacranus.

Damianus à Goes. confeſſ. fid. Indor. artic. 43.

2 The Æthiopike Church at this day doe not marrie any of their bloud untill the ſeventh degree, neither is it lawfull for their Patriarke therein to diſpenſe with any.

Harm. ſect. 18. pag. 541.

3 Confeſſ. of Helvetia the latter, c. 29. We teach, that marriages ought to be made lawfully in the feare of God, and not againſt the lawes which forbid certaine degrees to joyne in matrimonie, leſt the marriages ſhould be inceſtuous.

4 Their owne Canons alſo are evident, Cauſ. 27. qu. 2. c. 11. & decret. Gregor. lib. 4. tit. 1. c. 4. Sponſam fratris frater habere non poteſt; The brother cannot have to wife his brothers ſpouſe: how much more cannot he have his brothers wife, that was not eſpouſed onely, but married to him.

Cauſ. 35. qu. 3. c. 8. Non relictam fratris: It is not lawfull to marrie the brothers widow, c. 12. Nec relictam fratris uxoris; Nor the wives brothers widow.

Qu. 5. c. 3. Uxorem propinqui mei ita me oportet attendere, &c. I muſt ſo regard my kinſmans wife, of what degree ſoever, as though ſhe were in the ſame degree of mine owne kindred. By this rule it is no more lawfull for a man to marrie his brothers wife, than his owne ſiſter. And the Canon goeth further, Qui aliter ſentiunt Antichriſti ſunt, they that thinke otherwiſe, are Antichriſts: ſo conſequently the Pope is by their owne Canons an Antichriſt, for allowing ſuch inceſtuous marriages.

The third part, whether any other degrees may be by humane law prohibited, beſide thoſe directly forbidden in the law.

The Papiſts.

89. Error. 1 THey affirme, that by the law of Moſes, thoſe degrees onely are unlawfull to marrie in, which are directly and by name ſet downe: and therefore it is not unlawfull, by Moſes law, for the Uncle or Aunts husband to marrie his Niece, becauſe it is not by name prohibited: as Abraham married his brother Arams daughter: for Sara was his Niece. The marriage alſo of Coſin germanes was lawfull by Moſes law, and practiſed, Numb. 36. The daughters of Zelophehad married their Uncles ſons. Therefore by Moſes law no degrees are forbidden, which are not directly named, Bellar. c. 27.

The Collegials of Doway give inſtance of Othniel who married Achſah his brother Calebs daughter, Iud. 1. 13. whereupon they give this note, that though the Nephew could not marrie the Aunt, yet it was not forbidden for the Uncle to marrie his Niece, becauſe although there bee the ſame degree, yet there is not the ſame inconvenience, becauſe the ſame perſon remained ſubject, that was inferiour before marriage, &c.

The Proteſtants.

1 COncerning Abrahams marriage what is to bee thought, wee have ſhewed before, reſponſ. ad argum. 1. that although this marriage of Abraham is neither commended, nor ſimply allowed in Scripture: yet it was tollerated both in reſpect of the neceſſitie 1 of thoſe times, when as they could not marrie in further degrees of kindred, unleſſe they would have taken them wives from the idolatrous heathen. 2 Likewiſe the liberty then was greater, there being then no law to the contrary.

3 And their chaſtitie and ſobrietie did ſomewhat beare them out, who as Auguſtine ſaith, Non laſciviendi, ſed gignendi cauſa illis foeminis utebantur; They did not uſe thoſe women for luſt, but for generation ſake: de bon. conjug. c. 25. but this example of Abraham notwithſtanding, now after the law given, it is a plaine caſe, that the Uncle is no more to marrie his Niece, than the Nephew his Aunt: and this being by name prohibited, Levit. 18. 14. 20. 2. the other alſo is neceſſarily included: for the ſame rules for degrees of kindred, doe proportionably hold both in men and women: wherefore ſuch marriage is unlawfull, neither to be contracted; and if it be, to be diſſolved.

The like judgement is to be given of the marriage of two ſiſters; that as the brother is forbidden to marrie his brothers wife, ſo the ſiſter not to joyne her ſelfe to the ſiſters husband. And whereas Bellarmine urgeth that place, Levit. 18. 18. Thou ſhalt not take a wife with her ſiſter, to vex her during her life: thereby proving, that the law onely forbiddeth to marrie two ſiſters together, not ſucceſſively one after another. I anſwer, that the text is rather to be read thus, Thou ſhalt not take a woman to her ſiſter, that is, one woman to another: firſt, the word אשה ſignifieth a woman, as well as a wife: as in the next verſe following 19. and in many other places. Secondly, the true reading is, to a ſiſter, not, with a ſiſter; ſo the prepoſition אל ſignifieth: Then thus to read, Thou ſhalt not take a wife to her ſiſter, hath no ſenſe: to take the ſiſter to thy wife, by inverting the words, were to better ſenſe. Thirdly, the phraſe is ſo taken in Scripture, Geneſ. 26. 31. They did ſweare, vir fratri, a man to his brother, that is, one to another: for otherwiſe, Iſaac and Abimelech were not brethren. Likewiſe Ezech. 1. 10. Their wings were joyned, foemina ad ſororem, the woman to her ſiſter, that is, one to another; where the very ſame words in the very ſame conſtruction are uſed: ſo in this text, not the marriage of two ſiſters together, but Polygamie or Bigamie, the having of two wives or women together, is forbidden.

Now then, that by the ſame analogie the prohibition given to one ſex, doth bind the other, it may thus appeare: Firſt, becauſe all the rules of prohibited degrees are preſcribed namely to the male; ſo that if the other ſex were not included alſo, none of the prohibitions ſhould concerne them. Secondly, to give an inſtance, Levit. 18. 11. Thou ſhalt not diſcover the ſhame of thy fathers wives daughter: If the analogie did not hold in the other ſex, then it might be lawfull to marrie the fathers wives ſon. Thirdly, concerning theſe degrees which are in queſtion; firſt, to marrie with the Uncle, is forbidden in direct words, Thou ſhalt not uncover the ſhame of thy fathers brother, verſ. 14. Secondly, for the marrying of ſiſters, ſeeing degrees further off in affinitie are forbidden, as to marrie the wives daughters daughter, the neerer cannot be lawfull: now the wives ſiſter is neerer than the wives daughters daughter.

Further, concerning marriage betweene the uncle and his niece, I will adjoyne the moſt excellent teſtimonie of Ambroſe, who writeth hereof at large to one Paternus, epiſtol. 66. Tu copulare paras filium, &c. You would joyne together your ſon, and his ſiſters daughter. 1 Non ipſe te revocat ſonus nominum, &c. Doth not the very ſound of the names call you backe? for thus you ſhall bee both a grandfather, and a father in law. 2 The divine law doth forbid brothers children to marrie, which are in the fourth degree, &c. but theſe are in the third. 3 But you will pretend, that it is permitted by the divine law, becauſe it is not forbidden: Ego autem & prohibitum aſſero, but I ſay it is forbidden, becauſe lighter matters are forbidden, de patruelibus fratribus, of brothers children, &c. Neither doe you find it forbidden, that a man ſhould marrie his daughter, quia interdictum eſt lege naturæ, becauſe it is forbidden by the law of nature. 4 What is ſo common, as for the uncle to kiſſe his niece? Hoc inoffenſæ pietatis oſculum ſuſpectum facies; You will make ſuch kiſſes of love to be ſuſpicious, if ſuch be admitted to marriage. 5 But if you regard not the divine law, yet the Emperours law might move you. Theodoſius forbiddeth, that coſin germans ſhould come together in marriage. Thus much Saint Ambroſe.

2 Concerning the marriage of brothers and ſiſters children, there is a greater queſtion. Firſt, it cannot bee proved that Zelophehads five daughters married their Uncles ſons, that is, their Coſin germans: for the Hebrewes call the Nephewes, ſons: as Iethros daughters are called the daughters of Raguel their Grandfather, Exod. 2. 17. So it might bee that their husbands were their Uncles ſons ſons: or of ſome other familie of that tribe, as in the 12. verſe it may bee gathered, where the text ſaith. They were married into the families of the ſons of Manaſſes, and though they married their coſin germans, this was by ſpeciall diſpenſation for the preſervation of their inheritance, as the brother by a ſpeciall privilege was permitted to marrie his brothers wife to raiſe up ſeed unto him, Deut. 25. But as touching the queſtion in hand, the marriage of coſin germans ſeemeth alſo by ſome analogie to be forbidden by Moſes law: for if the degrees of affinitie be limited to the third or fourth degree; as it is not lawfull for a man to marrie his wives daughters daughter, Levit. 18. 17. why ſhould not the line of conſanguinitie hold to the fourth degree likewiſe? And ſo neither the ſon to marrie his fathers brothers daughter, or the daughter the ſon: for here are alſo foure degrees: the ſon, one: the father, two: the fathers brother, three: the brothers ſon, foure. Againe, the Uncles ſon is as neere as the Uncles wife, the one being of affinitie, the other of conſanguinitie: and therefore the firſt being forbidden, Levit. 18. 14. why not the other alſo? Yet this we grant, that this analogie or proportion is not ſo ſtrong, nor doth conclude ſo neceſſarily as the other. Wherefore we thus determine of this matter, that it is well that the marriages of coſin germans are reſtrained by humane law, and ſo they ought to be: which kinde of marriages may lawfully bee hindred, and the contract looſed: but the marriage being conſummate and finiſhed, it is not for this cauſe to be diſſolved.

So was it decreed, Concil. Lateranenſ. part. 6. cap. 30. Matrimonium in quarto gradu conſanguinitatis jam conſummatum non debet diſſolvi; Marriage in the fourth degree of conſanguinitie (ſuch as the marriage of coſin germans is) being conſummate and finiſhed, muſt not be diſſolved.

De civitate Dei, lib. 15. cap. 16. Auguſtine alſo writeth very well of this matter: Quis dubitat, honeſtius hoc tempore conſobrinarum prohibita eſſe conjugia, cui enim debet cauſa propinquitatis verecundum honorem, ab ea contineat quamvis generatricem libidinem? Who doubteth, but that the marriage of coſin germans is honeſtly forbidden? for to whom a man oweth a ſhamefaſt reverence for kindred ſake, from her he ought to refraine his luſt.

3 That inſtance of Othaniels marriage of Achſah is very impertinent: there are two readings of that place. 1 Some read thus, Othniel the ſon of Kenaz the brother of Caleb, the younger, that is, the younger ſon of Kenaz Calebs brother: ſo the Septuagint, and Vatablus, who thinketh that Othaniel was the Nephew, not the ſon of Kenaz, and that Kenaz and Caleb were brethren by the mothers ſide: but this interpretation is refuſed: for theſe reaſons. 1 Caleb could not bee Kenaz brother, becauſe he is called a Kenazite, Ioſua 14. 6. but one brother uſed not to take his appellation of another. 2 Neither doth the Scripture count genealogies and kindred by the mothers ſide but the fathers. 3 Maſius well obſerveth out of Nehemannus, that theſe words of Agnation muſt be referred to the principall firſt alleaged, as Iſay 32. 7. Iſay the ſon of Amos the Prophet, that is, with Iſay, not Amos, was a Prophet: ſo in this place, the brother muſt be referred to Othaniel firſt named, not unto Kenaz.

2 The other reading is, Othaniel the ſon of Kenaz, brother of Caleb the younger: that is, which Othaniel was brother of Caleb: thus readeth the vulgar Latine, Andreas Maſius, Montanus, Pagnine, Iunius: but in divers ſenſes: firſt Othaniel could not be the naturall brother of Caleb, as Lyranus and Burgenſis, and our Doway men hold: both becauſe that Caleb was the ſon of Iephuneh, not of Kenaz: Ioſua 14. 6. and againe, it was flatly againſt the law, for the Uncle to marrie the Niece, which though Maſius in 15. c. Joſuæ. it be not namely forbidden, yet it is included in the like prohibition, that the Aunt ſhould not marrie her Nephew: as Maſius well obſerveth, one of their writers: and the reaſon alleaged by Lyranus, confirmed by Paulus Burgenſis, which is the ſame propounded before by the Doway men, he ſaith, is argutior quam probabilior, more wittie than pithie or probable: that it is more againſt the reverence of nature for the Aunt to bee wife unto her Nephew, and ſo ſubject unto him, than for the Niece to marrie the Uncle: for by this reaſon, if more reſpect were to be had to the decencie of ſubjection of the one to the other, than of the diſtance of the degrees, then it would be lawfull for the husband to marrie his wives daughter, becauſe the inferiour partie remaineth in ſubjection ſtill, though it be in that regard unfit for the ſon to marrie the fathers wife.

Junius in 1. Chron. c. 4. tabul. 3. Maſius in Joſu. c. 14. 6. & c. 15. v. 17. 3 Wherefore I reſolve rather with our Iunius, and their Maſius, that Kenaz was the Grandfather both unto Othaniel and Caleb, and that brothers is taken according to the Hebrew phraſe for a kinſman: ſo that Othaniel and Caleb were Coſin germans: and Othaniel is ſaid to be younger, not in the degree of his brother-hood, but ſimply in regard of his age, for Caleb was much elder, as both Iunius and Maſius well expound, and Vatablus herein concurreth with them.

Let us ſee the conſent of antiquitie: Gregor. 3. decr. 6. Si quis neptim, nurum, novercam duxerit, &c. anathema; If any man marrie his Niece, his daughter in law, or mother in law, accurſed bee he, &c. As then it is unlawfull for the Nephew to marrie his Aunt, ſo is it for the Uncle to marrie his Niece.

As for the marriage of Coſin germans, the Canons every where forbid it: Agathenſ. can. 61. Epaunenſ. can. 30. Aurelianenſ. 3. cap. 10. it is decreed, that no man ſhall marrie conſobrinam, his Coſin german.

Antiſiodorenſ. can. 31. Non licet conſobrinam, hoc eſt, quæ de duabus ſororibus, aut duobus fratribus procreatur, in conjugium accipere; It is not lawfull to marrie a Coſin german, which commeth of two brothers, or two ſiſters. Turonic. 2. 22. Wormatienſ. c. 78. it was decreed that none ſhould marrie in the fourth degree, &c.

Arelatenſ. ſub Carolo. can. 11. Ne quis conſobrinam, vel filiam avunculi ducat; That no man marrie his Coſin german, or Uncles daughter. Thus we ſee how that our adverſaries, that make ſhew of antiquitie, are the onely enemies to antiquitie.

Now further I will ſhew the conſent both of the Civill and Canon law for the unlawfulneſſe of marriage: firſt, with the Uncle; ſecondly, the wives ſiſter; thirdly, the Uncles daughter.

Cod. lib. 5. tit. 4. leg. 17. Diocletian. Nemini matrimonium contrahere liceat cum ſororis filia; No man muſt contract Matrimonie with his ſiſters daughter, that is, his Niece.

Cod. lib. 6. tit. 20. leg. 19. Iuſtinian. Whereas in the conferring of dowries and other gifts ſome ſeemed to make a difference betweene Uncles and Aunts: Aſſerebant in perſonis avunculorum, non etiam patruorum, materterarum, vel amitarum locum habere; They affirmed that it tooke place in the perſons of the Uncles by the mothers ſide, not of the Uncles by the fathers ſide, or of the Aunts: the law proceedeth, Talem ſubtilem dubitationem amputantes; We cutting off this ſubtiltie and doubt: and ſo maketh the condition of Uncles and Aunts to be alike: As then in this caſe, there was no difference betweene Uncles and Aunts, ſo why not alſo in marriage?

Decret. par. 2. cauſ. 27. qu. 2. c. 12. Gregorie decreeth againſt one, qui deſponſatam nepotis virginem duxit, which married one eſpouſed to his Nephew: how much more doe the Canons forbid the marriage of the niece by bloud?

Cauſ. 35. qu. 3. c. 8. Si quis relicta, vel filia avunculi; It is not lawfull to marrie the uncles wife or daughter: how much more unlawfull is it to marrie the uncle himſelfe?

Secondly, the marriage of two ſiſters is contrarie to the Imperiall lawes, Cod. lib. 5. leg. 5 Valent. Theodoſ. Duabus ſororibus conjungendis, &c. Wee give no licence to marrie the brothers wife, or two ſiſters.

Thirdly, concerning the unlawfull marriage of Coſin germans, that is, brothers or ſiſters children, I find not the like ſtrict prohibition in the Imperiall lawes, for by the law of Antoninus, Cod. lib. 6. tit. 25. leg. 2. and the conſtitution of Arcadius, lib. 5. tit. 4. leg. 19. the marriage of conſobrines, and coſin germans is made lawfull: Yet degrees as farre off are inhibited; as lib. 5. tit. 4. leg. 17. Nemini liceat; No man is to contract Matrimonie with the brothers daughter, vel ex ea nepte, or his daughters daughter. Theodoſius alſo made a law againſt the marriage of coſin germans, as before out of Ambroſe: yea and the Canon law is very ſtrict againſt ſuch marriages: Cauſ. 35. qu. 3. c. 20. and Cauſ. 32. qu. 7. c. 20. Brothers and ſiſters children are inhibited to marrie.

Decret. Greg. lib. 4. tit. 2. c. 12. Non debet cum conſobrina propter publicæ honeſtatis juſtitiam permanere; He muſt not remaine or dwell with his coſin german for publike honeſtie ſake, whether he hath knowne her, or not.

Thus we ſee: firſt, that the two firſt degrees are even by the law of the Gentiles inhibited, as being unnaturall, that is, the marriage with the uncle, or with the wives ſiſter. Secondly, a difference wee find betweene theſe, and the marriage of coſin germans, which though it be not convenient, yet is not ſo unnaturall, nor prohibited by the Imperiall lawes. Thirdly, the canon law ſeparateth coſin germans after carnall knowledge, but that is too hard a ſentence: it is ſufficient to hinder marriage contracted, but not conſummate by carnall conjunction, as I have ſhewed before.

But, becauſe ſome in theſe dayes without any ſcruple at all of conſcience, have taken unto themſelves great libertie to marrie their coſin germans, therein giving great offence unto others: It ſhall not be amiſſe, ſomewhat more at large to diſcuſſe this doubt, touching the marriage of the firſt coſins, which are brothers and ſiſters children: And here I find divers opinions.

1 Some thinke, that it is as lawfull to marrie in this degree, as in any other not expreſſely forbidden: of this opinion ſeemeth Bucanus to be, that in the tranſverſe collaterall line, being equall; Matrimonie is onely forbidden betweene brothers and ſiſters.

De conjugio Cor. 7. art. 21.

2 Others on the contrarie thinke that it is directly forbidden by the divine law, as Ambroſ. epiſtol. 66. who is alleaged before.

3 Others in the meane betweene both, are of opinion, that although it be not forbidden in it ſelfe in the word, either expreſſed or underſtood, yet it is not convenient, to avoyd the offence of thoſe that are weake. See the Annotat. upon the Harmonie of Confeſſions, obſerv. 2. upon the confeſſion of Saxonie: ſo their opinion is, licere, ſed non expedire, that it is lawfull, but not expedient to marrie in this degree of conſanguinitie.

4 Auguſtine thinketh, it is not forbidden by the divine law, but by a poſitive conſtitution, which he wiſheth to be obeyed: as he cited before.

5 But the ſoundeſt opinion is, that although the marriage of coſin germans be not expreſly forbidden in the law, nor yet by an exact analogie, as the marrying of the uncle with the niece is held to be prohibited, becauſe the nephew is forbidden to marrie his Aunt: yet by ſome conſequence, and neceſſarie deduction out of Scripture it is reſtrained: this is Junius opinion, who thinketh this degree to be forbidden, becauſe marriage with the uncles wife is inhibited, which is but of affinitie, whereas the uncles daughter is of conſanguinitie. Now for the ſtrengthning of this opinion, and to ſhew not onely the inconveniencie, but unlawfulneſſe of ſuch marriages, our reaſons are theſe.

What is to be held concerning the marriage of coſin germans.
Jun. annot. in Levit. 18. in computatione graduum.

1 No man muſt come neere the kindred of his fleſh, Levit. 18. 6. but the uncles ſon is of the kindred of the fleſh, Levit. 25. 49. beyond this degree, they are not properly kinſmen, but in courteſie: the other onely are called coſin germans, that is, true coſins.

2 Where any degree of affinitie is reſtrained, there conſequently the conſanguinitie which commeth by that affinitie is likewiſe reſtrained: as the father cannot marrie his ſons wife, nor conſequently his ſons daughter by that wife: but becauſe exception will be taken that this is in the right line; where there is no ſtinting or limitation of degrees the prohibition holding perpetually, both in aſcending and deſcending; ſo it is alſo in the collaterall line: it is not lawfull to marrie the brothers wife, and ſo conſequently not the brothers daughter: in like ſort it is unlawfull to marrie the uncles wife, and ſo alſo the uncles daughter by that wife.

3 This degree of marriage ſeemeth to be reſtrained even by the law of nature, for that the wiſer ſort of the Gentiles, who were onely guided by the light of nature, did provide againſt ſuch marriages: as Plutarke ſheweth that of a long time it was not lawfull to marrie in this degree among the Romans, and that for theſe three reaſons: firſt, that by marrying they might increaſe kindred, and multiplie affinitie, whereas coſin germans are of the kindred without marriage. 2 For feare leſt in the diſcord of ſuch married perſons, beſide the violating of matrimoniall love, the law of nature ſhould alſo therein be wronged. 3 Or to this end, that if women ſhould be hardly uſed of their huſbands, they might have ſo many helpers and defenders, as they had of their kindred. But afterward this law was altered upon this occaſion: A certaine man, being well thought of, was ſuſpected to have for his wife a coſin german, by whom he ſhould have a great dowrie, thereupon he was called into the law, but the people favouring him upon that occaſion made it lawfull to marrie the coſin german, and ſo releaſed him: but, ſaith he, of ancient time, Romani non copulabant ſibi matrimonio ſanguine junctas; The Romans did not couple in marriage thoſe which were joyned in bloud. This reaſon alſo is alleaged in the Annotations upon the Harmonie of Confeſſions, why this degree ſhould be forborne, ſeeing that even certaine prophane lawmakers have forbidden this degree.

Sect. 18. obſerv. 2. upon the confeſſion of Saxonie.

4 Adde hereunto the continuall practice and conſent of the Church in all ages, which have miſliked the marriage of coſin germans: as before, the decrees of ſeven Councels are alleaged, and ſome of them very ancient, as the Synode of Agatha held about anno 450. the Epaunenſ. anno 500. Aurelianenſ. 3. anno 550. Antiſiodorenſ. anno 600. We have ſeene alſo before the judgement of Ambroſe and Auguſtine: unto the which ſhall be adjoyned Gregorie the 1. who ſaith: Sacra lex prohibet cognationis turpitudinem revelare; The ſacred law forbiddeth to diſcover the nakedneſſe of the kindred, &c. he ſpeaketh of brother or ſiſters children. Bernard alſo agreeth, who thus writeth of Lodovicus the King of France: Qua fronte aliis tam opere de conſanguinitate præſcribere laborat, homo cum ſua tertio conſanguinitatis gradu ferme permanens conſobrina; With what face can hee preſcribe unto other touching conſanguinitie, ſeeing himſelfe keepeth with his coſin german almoſt in the third degree of conſanguinitie? The moderne Churches of the world doe all diſlike theſe marriages: as the practice of the Greeke and Æthiopike Church is ſhewed before, err. 88. in the end. The reformed Churches concurre: as of Saxonie, Confeſſ. artic. 18. they allow of the rules of the Canon law touching the degrees of marriage: See the obſervation alſo upon that place, which cauſeth ſuch marriages to be forborne for offence ſake. It is great preſumption then to goe againſt the conſent of the Church decreeing according to Scripture, or at the leaſt not againſt it.

Epiſt. 225.

Harm. confeſ. ſect. 18. p. 565.

5 Further, the reaſons are here to be conſidered, why the marriage of conſobrines was forbidden: 1 One reaſon was, cohabitatio, cohabiting together; that all ſuch of the kindred, which uſed to cohabite and keepe in one familie, ſhould not marrie one with another, ne matrimonium incentivum libidini præſtaret; leſt that marriage might be an occaſion to kindle luſt. 2 Another reaſon is, multiplicatio amicitiæ, the multiplying of friendſhip, which is hindred by the marriage of ſuch, who are kinſmen, and ſo friends alreadie: and this reaſon is given in the law, why they which are neere in alliance ſhould not be married, for they are thy kinsfolks. 3 Ambroſe uſeth this reaſon againſt the marriage of the uncle and niece, which alſo may ſerve here: Interroga nominum religionem, &c. ipſe ſonus nominum te revocat: Aske the religious reſpect of the names,— the very ſound of the names will call thee backe, &c. As in that inſtance, the ſame perſon is both brother and ſon in law to his ſiſter, whoſe daughter hee marrieth, ſo here he is both nephew to his aunt, and ſon in law, whoſe daughter he marrieth, and to his wife he is both huſband and coſin german. 4 By this meanes no familiaritie ſhall be without ſuſpition with the coſin german, where marriage is permitted: as Ambroſe in the ſame place reaſoneth againſt that degree given in inſtance of the marriage of the uncle and niece: Quid tam ſolenne, quam oſculum inter avunculum & neptem? What is ſo ſolemnely uſed, as for the uncle to kiſſe his niece? &c. hoc inoffenſæ pietatis oſculum ſuſpectum facies: this kiſſe of love without offence, thou wilt make ſuſpitious, &c. So in this caſe, what is more common than for one Coſin to ſalute another with a kiſſe? which ſalutations now are made ſuſpitious. 5 The Counſell of Wormes giveth this reaſon: In the coupling of the faithfull wee define no number of generation, but we doe order, that it ſhall be lawfull for no Chriſtian to take a wife of his kindred, uſq; dum generatio recordatur, &c. as long as the generation is remembred and knowne, &c. but untill coſin germans the kindred is freſh in memorie and knowledge, but after it weareth away and groweth out.

6 Wee muſt give none offence according to S. Pauls rule, neither to the Grecians (hee meaneth Gentiles) nor to the Church of God: but the marriage of coſin germans is an offence to both: it being given, and not taken, in a thing, at the leſt in their owne opinion indifferent: and here that rule in the Civill law hath place: In rebus dubiis pars tutior ſequenda; In doubtfull matters the ſafer way is to be followed: So in this caſe, it being doubtfull whether ſuch marriages be lawfull, the ſafer way is, not to uſe ſuch marriages at all.

1 Cor. 10. 32.

But here it will bee objected, that if coſin germans may not marrie by the law of God, then ſuch marriages may be diſſolved, and the iſſue of ſuch marriages ſhould be held to be not legitimate.

To this objection I anſwer negatively, that neither the one or other inconvenience followeth upon that ſuppoſall: and for further explanation of this anſwer, I will remember divers opinions of this matter: 1 Some are ſo ſtrict, that they will ſimplie have ſuch marriages diſſolved: as the Councell of Mentz is ſo ſevere, that they will have ſuch to bee ſeparated, & ulterius nunquam in conjugio copulari; and never after to be married againe, &c. 2 Gregorie excepteth onely ſuch, as were Neophyti, newly called to the faith: he would have ſuch marriages borne with in them, but not in others: and ſo he ſendeth his directions to Auſtine then here in Britannie, how he ſhould deale with the Britons.

Cauſ. 32. 7. 20.

Cauſ. 35. 3. 20.

tons. 3 The Councell of Wormes giveth a larger ſcope, that they which marrie in the fourth degree ſhould bee ſeparated, ubi poſt interdictum factum fuerit, if any ſuch thing be done after ſuch interdiction: Can. 78. they beare with all ſuch marriages before. 4 But that in this caſe is the moſt reaſonable opinion, which was reſolved upon, in the Laterane Councell, that Matrimonium conſummatum in quarto Part. 6. c. 30. gradu conſanguinitatis non debet diſſolvi; Matrimonie conſummate in the fourth degree of conſanguinitie muſt not bee diſſolved, &c. It may bee hindred being contracted onely, but not being once conſummate: like as the conſent of parents is required by the law of God, and the want thereof is ſufficient to diſſolve the contract of marriage, but not the conſummation. The like decree is aſcribed to Fabianus: that licuit affinibus contrahere in quinto gradu, &c. It is lawfull for they which Centur. 3. are of affinitie to contract marriage in the fifth degree, in quarto reperti non ſeparantur; they which p. 147. 52. were found in the fourth cannot bee ſeparated: in tertio gradu conjuncti ſeparabantur: they which are joyned in the third, muſt be ſeparated. Like as then, ſuch as in their marriage neglected the conſent of their parents, may ſo remaine ſtill, yet confeſſing their error and overſight, not maintaining or juſtifying their fact: ſo ſuch as are married in this degree of conſanguinitie, either ignorantly, or not ſo well informed, may upon their repentance of their error, if they ſee it, or did it ignorantly, find comfort in their marriage, and their iſſue proſper. But I doubt, ſuch as doe juſtifie ſuch marriages, as holy and lawfull, will not finde ſuch comfort and contentment: as Gregorie ſaith of ſuch, Experimento didicimus ex tali conjugio ſobolem non poſſe ſuccreſcere; We have learned by experience, that the iſſue of ſuch marriage cannot thrive, &c. This I ſpeake not to entangle the conſcience of ſuch as are ſo married, but to give a caveat to ſuch as are to marrie, not to adventure upon ſuch neereneſſe of bloud willingly, which may afterward breed ſcruple of conſcience. And thus much by way of digreſſion of this matter.

The Papiſts.

1 IT is lawfull for the Church to reſtraine other degrees of affinitie and conſanguinitie, beſides 90. Error. thoſe preſcribed by Moſes, and that the decrees of the Church in ſuch caſes doe binde in conſcience, Concil. Trident. ſeſſ. 24. can. 3. As to prohibite marriage unto the ſeventh degree in naturall kindred, and afterward to the fourth. 2 Alſo their Canons doe make a ſpirituall kindred, that commeth 91. Error. in by Baptiſme and Confirmation: and ſuffer not the godfather to marrie the godchild, or the godfather the godmother. 3 Likewiſe they have found out an affinitie that commeth in by eſpouſals 92. Error. onely of Matrimonie, which bindeth (ſay they) in the firſt degree by the Canon law, which is the firſt and ſecond by the Civill law: as that it is not lawfull for the brother to marrie her which was eſpouſed to his brother. 4 Alſo another kindred and affinitie, by fornication and unlawfull fleſhly knowledge, which bindeth in the ſecond degree Canonicall, which is the third and fourth Civill: as it is not lawfull for the ſon to marrie his fathers baſtard, Bellarm. cap. 24. cap. 30.

Bellarmine thus reaſoneth for the reſtraint of conſanguinitie and affinitie: firſt to the ſeventh degree, and afterward to the fourth.

Argum. 1. There is a peculiar ſhamefaſtneſſe and reverence of nature due to kinſmen, which is violated in marriage. 2 If kinſmen might marrie together, they could not uſe cohabitation, or any familiaritie together without ſuſpition: but whereas marriage is interdicted betweene kinſmen, there is no danger. 3 For the propagation of love and charitie unto others, marriage is forbidden in theſe degrees, wherein their affinitie or conſanguinitie is a ſufficient bond of love, without marriage. 4 If kinſmen ſhould marrie together, their love would be too inordinate, the love of marriage being joyned to the naturall love of kindred, Bellarm. cap. 29.

Contra. Firſt, the wiſedome of man is not to controule the ordinance of God: if the Lord hath not thought good to make a reſtraint of marriage ſo farre, it is preſumption in man to doe it: ſhall it bee thought, that God had not reſpect to the reverence of nature, propagation of love, familiaritie of kindred, ſobrietie in marriage, in ſetting downe the marriage law?

Secondly, none of theſe inconveniences need to be feared in degrees ſo farre off: for whereas the fourth degree in the Canons, is the eighth Civill degree: and by the Canons, brethren are in the firſt degree, brethrens children in the ſecond, their childrens children in the third, and their children in the fourth: what kindred can there bee now betweene coſin germanes twice removed? and there being little or no kindred, there is neither 1 reverence of nature due as to the kindred of the fleſh: 2 and their familiaritie is no more with ſuſpition, than betweene ſtrangers: 3 nor yet ſhall the propagation of love be hindred, there being no ſuch ſure bond alreadie out of marriage: 4 and conſequently inordinate love in the marriage of ſuch is not to be feared, the naturall affection by ſuch long deſcent being extinguiſhed.

The Proteſtants.

1 TO forbid more degrees in marriage, than are either directly or by neceſſarie conſequence prohibited in the law, is a meere Antichriſtian yoke laid upon the people of God: for the Lord (the author of that law) beſt did know, both what perſons were fit for marriage, and how farre the line of marriage was to extend.

Bellarmine anſwereth, that the law of the degrees of marriage was peculiar to the people of the Jewes, unto whom the marriage of their kindred was not ſo much reſtrained: firſt, becauſe they were but few. Secondly, for the preſervation of the Tribes and families. Thirdly, that being ſuffered to marrie in their kindred, they ſhould not ſo eaſily put away their wives. Fourthly, as they were permitted to put away their wives, and to have many at once; ſo in like manner to marrie within certaine degrees of kindred, Bellarm. c. 29. reſp. ad argum. 2.

Contra. Firſt, theſe reaſons are not ſufficient to prove the law of degrees in marriage peculiar to the Jewes: 1 They were a great and populous nation: in Davids time there were 13. hundred thouſand fighting men in Iſrael and Judah, 2 Sam. 24. In the reigne of Iehoſaphat, Judah only was able to make 2 Chron. 17. 14. 11. hundred thouſand men of warre, 2 Chron. 17. 14. 19. therefore in reſpect of their ſmall number, there was no reaſon to allow them to marrie with their kindred. 2 For the preſervation of their families there was a ſpeciall proviſo in the law, that the brother might take the brothers wife to raiſe ſeed Deut. 25. 3. to his brother, Deut. 25. 3. Moſes permitted them (notwithſtanding this law of degrees) to give unto their wives bils of divorcement: and it is ſeene by experience, that the neerer in degree the married couples are, for the moſt part greater contention falleth out. 4 To put away their wives was but a toleration: but the law concerning degrees was a commandement, and the tranſgreſſion thereof
Levit. 18. 18. puniſhed with death, Levit. 20. The having of many wives was directly contrarie to the law, Levit.
Deut. 17. 17. 18. 18. Deut. 17. 17.

Secondly, that this was not a law peculiar to the Jewes, but generall, to binde the people of God under the Goſpell: it appeareth both by Iohn Baptiſts reprehenſion of Herode for marrying his brothers wife; and Saint Pauls cenſuring of the inceſtuous perſon that tooke his fathers wife: which are the very degrees forbidden in Levit. 2. Neither can they ſhew any diſpenſation or revocation in the new Teſtament contrarie to that law.

This prohibition of marriage to the fourth degree Canonicall, that is, the eighth Civill, is contrarie both to the Imperiall and Canonicall lawes.

Cod. lib. 5. tit. 4. leg. 17. Dioclet. In collaterals both of affinitie and conſanguinitie, the prohibition goeth not beyond the fourth degree: Nemini liceat, a man muſt not contract matrimonie with his Aunt, ſiſters daughter or niece, that is, her daughters daughter; with his brothers daughter or niece: and in affinitie, with his wives daughter, wives mother, ſons wife, fathers wife, &c. none of theſe exceed the fourth degree Civill. The Canon law thus teſtifieth, Cauſ. 35. q. 3. c. 3. Fabianus: In quarta generatione ſi contracti fuerint, non ſeparentur; They which are married in the fourth generation, let them not be ſeparated: Ibid. c. 12. Iulius, Uſque in tertiam progeniem, &c. No man muſt marrie a wife to the third degree: Theſe Canons inhibite not marriage in the third and fourth degree Canonicall, much leſſe to the ſeventh.

Lateranenſ. part. 50. 29. Cognati non ſunt ſeparandi niſi in primo vel ſecundo gradu conſanguinitatis ſint conjuncti; Coſins muſt not be divorced, unleſſe they marrie in the firſt or ſecond degree of conſanguinitie: the ſecond degree by the Canon law, is the fourth degree by the Civill law, and after our account: after the fourth degree then marriage is lawfull: it is not then reſtrained till the ſeventh.

Secondly, the invention of ſpirituall kindred is but a Popiſh trick, to get the more money for their diſpenſations: for by this reaſon no Chriſtians ought to marrie together, becauſe they are all of one ſpirituall kindred in Chriſt.

Their owne Canons are againſt them, Cauſ. 30. qu. 3. c. 4. Urban. Poſt compaternitatem geniti, &c. Godfathers children may marrie: Qu. 4. c. 5. Paſchal. Uxorem compatris ducere licet; A man may marrie his Godfathers wife: Decret. Greg. lib. 4. tit. 11. c. 1. Alexander. Filii duorum compatrum licitè contrahant; Godfathers children may contract matrimonie.

Thirdly, the new affinitie that commeth by eſpouſals, is alſo but an human invention: for the law ſpeaketh onely of the kindred of the fleſh, which ariſeth of carnall knowledge and copulation, not an Levit. 18. 6. intent or purpoſe onely of marriage, Levit. 18. 6.

We have the conſent of a generall Councell, Lateranenſ. part. 6. can. 27. Pope Benedictus decreeth thus, Qui unam ſororem deſponſaverit, ſi eam non cognoverit, poteſt aliam ſororem ſibi matrimonio copulare: apparet enim virum & mulierem non poſſe fieri unam carnem, niſi carnali copula ſibi adhæreant; He that eſpouſeth one ſiſter, not having knowne her, may marrie her ſiſter: for man and wife are not made one fleſh, but by carnall copulation. Therefore by the eſpouſall words they are not made one fleſh: Propinquitas ſanguinis verbis dicitur, non verbis efficitur; Propinquitie of bloud by words is ſaid, by words it is not made. Cur ergo prohibeamus, quod prohibitum nunquam ſcriptura declaravit? Why therefore ſhould we forbid that, which is no where in Scripture forbidden? To this agreeth alſo the decree of Pope Alexander, Lateranenſ. part. 45. can. 5. Non ſunt una caro vir & mulier, niſi carnali copula cohæſerint; Man and wife are not one fleſh but by carnall copulation.

Thus alſo the Civill law teſtifieth, Cod. lib. 5. tit. 4. leg. 24. Iuſtinian. Conditio nuptiarum impletur per actum, non habitum, aut potentiam; The condition of marriage is accompliſhed by the act, not by the habit or poſſibilitie.

Their Canons alſo are evident, Cauſ. 27. qu. 2. c. 17. Iulius: Mulier præter commixtionem ſexuum non pertinet ad matrimonium; A woman without the copulation of the ſex, belongeth not to matrimonie. C. 18. Benedict. Per nuda ſponſionis verba non poſſunt una caro fieri; They cannot be made one fleſh onely by the words of eſpouſall. The reſt of this Canon is recited before.

The Maſter of Sentences maketh this anſwer: That thoſe Canons are underſtood of eſpouſals which are made, per verba de futuro, by words not of the preſent, but of the time to come; when there is not, conſenſus de præſenti, ſed ſponſio futuri; not a conſent for the preſent, but a promiſe for afterward.

Contra. Firſt, that diſtinction of the Canon law is but an humane device, that there is fides pactionis, fides conſenſus; That faith of marriage is made by covenant and promiſe, or by conſent: the firſt holdeth not, the ſecond is firme even after carnall ſocietie with another, Cauſ.27.qu.2.c.51. For we ſee the Scripture maketh no difference betweene the covenant of marriage, and conſent, Geneſ. 24. 57, 58. We will call the maid and aske her conſent, &c. Wilt thou goe with this man? and ſhe ſaid, I will goe. Her promiſe by theſe words of the future, I will goe, are called her conſent. So David ſent to Abigail, ut accipiat in uxorem, to take her to his wife: he ſaid not, I doe take thee to my wife, 1 Sam. 25. 40. Wherefore that ſimple and well meaning age, knew no ſuch difference in contracts.

1 Sam. 25. 40.

Secondly, the Canons exclude all eſpouſals whatſoever from the computation of the degrees of marriage: Propinquitas ſanguinis verbis dicitur, non verbis efficitur; Propinquitie of bloud is ſaid by words, not made. He ſpeaketh generally of all words of eſpouſall or contract whatſoever, Benedict. cauſ. 27. qu. 2. c. 18. And the queſtion is of a maid that was ſimplicibus verbis deſponſata, &c. eſpouſed by ſimple, that is, plaine and direct words, to a young man: the maid eſpouſed dieth, hee is licenſed to marrie her ſiſter, and by warrant of Scripture; becauſe man and woman are not made one fleſh, niſi carnali copula, but by carnall copulation: as the Scripture ſaith, They two ſhall be one fleſh.

Wee have ſeene before the Imperiall conſtitutions, which were a rule both for the Eaſt and South Churches: the Canons alſo before alleaged, ſhew the ancient judgement of the Roman Church: the reformed Churches agree, as that of Saxonie, We make not a mixture of thoſe perſons, which by the law of God are not permitted to couple together. They goe no further, for reſtraint of marriage, than to the law of God.

Harm. ſect. 18. artic.18. p. 565.

Fourthly, the laſt wee admit, for the ſon of the father begotten out of marriage, is of his fleſhly kindred, though not lawfully: and therefore in marriage-matters there is reſpect alſo to be had even of this kindred of the fleſh: as Ruben is curſed of his father becauſe he lay with his concubine, Gen. 49.4. which notwithſtanding was not his fathers wife. So alſo the Civill law, Cod. lib. 5. tit. 4. leg. 4. Alexander. Concubina patris non debet eſſe uxor filii; The fathers concubine cannot be the ſons wife.

Geneſ. 49. 4.

The fourth queſtion, of other impediments of marriage.

THere are ſome impediments which may hinder and diſſolve the contract of marriage, before it be conſummate, but not after: ſome, which both may hinder the contract, and diſſolve the matrimonie even after carnall knowledge.

The Papiſts.

1 BEllarmine reckoneth up divers impediments of both kinds, which may diſanull the contract of marriage, and diſſolve the matrimonie it ſelfe: but he maketh no mention of the conſent of the parents. And indeed it is their opinion, that it is not a neceſſarie thing to bee reſpected in marriage: nor of the eſſence thereof, neither can ſuch marriage, as hath the conſent of the children onely, either by the parents, or Magiſtrate be diſſolved, Bellarm. c. 19.

93. Error.

Argum. Eſau married without his fathers conſent, yet was not his marriage diſſolved: Iacob alſo had not his fathers conſent to the marriage of Lea, and of his two handmaids: Ergo, the parents conſent is not neceſſarie, Bellarm. cap. 19.

Anſw. Firſt, concerning Eſau his marriage, we ſay he did very evill in marrying without his fathers conſent, and it was a great griefe to his parents: yet the marriage being once conſummate, wee ſay not, that then it ought to be diſſolved, for want of the parents conſent, but the contract and eſpouſals onely. Secondly, for Iacob, his maids were not his wives, and Lea was thruſt upon him againſt his will: no marvell if he had not his fathers conſent, when his owne was wanting: but to marrie one of his fathers kindred, as he made choice of Rachel, he had his fathers full conſent.

Argum. 2. In the marriage of children without conſent of the parents, the conſent of the parties is preſent, which is ſufficient: for conſenſus facit matrimonium, conſent maketh matrimonie. And if the marriage of ſervants againſt the will of their maſters bee notwithſtanding firme and ſure, much more the marriage of children, &c. Bellarm. cap. 19.

Anſw. Firſt, one of your owne writers ſhall make you an anſwer; Conſenſus facit nuptias, ſed eorum, qui ſui juris ſunt, &c. Conſent maketh marriage, but of ſuch as are in their owne power: ſo are not children, and therefore their conſent is not ſufficient, Eſpenc. de clandeſtin. matrim. cap. 11. Secondly, where the maſters are in ſtead of parents, there they have the ſame right and power to approve or diſſolve the contracts of their ſervants, which fathers have: but where ſervants have fathers beſide, they are to depend upon their fathers conſent, and not the maſters: and in this caſe the argument followeth not, for fathers have greater power in the marriage of their children, than maſters over their ſervants.

The Proteſtants.

FIrſt, we doe not ſay, that the want of the parents conſent may diſſolve marriage conſummate after mutuall conjunction: but that it may breake off the contract and eſpouſals. Secondly, neither have the parents power to beſtow their children in marriage without their conſent, Geneſ. 24. 57. And this is agreeable to the law of nature: according to the conſtitution of the Heathen Roman Emperours, Cod. lib. 5. tit. 4. leg. 12. Diocletian. Nec filium familias invitum ad uxorem ducendam cogi, &c. The diſcipline of the lawes doe not permit, that the ſon ſhould be compelled againſt his will to take a wife. Thirdly, neither muſt the parents exerciſe a tyrannicall power over their children in forbidding them marriage, but muſt alway have reſpect unto their need. And thus doing their conſent is ne-
1 Cor. 7. 37, 38. ceſſarie, and without it the contract hath no validitie, 1 Cor. 7. 37, 38. The parent hath power to give in marriage or not to give.

Exod. 22. 16. Argum. Exod. 22. 16. The law is this, That if a man lie with a maid not betrothed, and her father refuſe to give her unto him to wife, he ſhall pay money. Here the full authoritie of giving or not giving the daughter in marriage, is committed to the father.

Bellarmine anſwereth: That this is in ſuch caſes where there is no contract: but the law ſaith not, that the father may refuſe after the contract made.

Contra. 1. As though their mutuall carnall knowledge be not as forcible to joyne them, as a bare Numb. 30. 4. contract, this being but in world, the other in deed. Secondly, Numb. 30. 4. The father may breake his daughters vow made unto God: Ergo, much more her promiſe and contract made to man.

Bellarm. It is to be underſtood of ſuch an one, as is in ætate puellari, yet under age, a young maiden, which is not yet fit for marriage.

Contra. 1. In this Chapter there be three eſtates or degrees of women ſet downe: a maid, a wife, a widow: of theſe three onely the widow hath power to make a vow: ſhe that is not a widow, is either under her husband, if ſhe be married, or under her father, if ſhe be not: So then the law meaneth all maids unmarried, unleſſe you can find out a fourth kinde, that is, neither of maids, wives, nor widowes. 2 Againe, here are to be underſtood rather maids of yeeres and diſcretion, to make a vow, than of tender and young yeeres, who knew not what a vow meaneth. 3 And beſides, the word here uſed, verſ. 4. אשה ſignifieth a woman, not a girle or young maid. 4 Laſtly a writer of their owne thus concludeth upon this place: Ergo vota à filiabus Deo nuncupata poterant parentes diſſolvere, ſponſalia, &c. Therefore might the parents diſſolve vowes made by their daughters unto God, and could they not retract eſpouſals made to men? Eſpenc. c. 1. de clandeſtin. matrimon.

Deut. 7. 3. Argum. 2. Deuter. 7. 3. Ye ſhall not make marriages with the Heathen, thou ſhalt not give thy daughter to his ſon, &c. Hence the ſame author concludeth thus: Eam legem fruſtra laturus, &c. This law had beene made in vaine, if marriages had beene free for the children without the fathers conſent. Againe, whereas the Iſraelites had ſworne, that they would not give their daughters to the Benja-
Judg. 21. 1. mites to wife, Iudg. 21. 1. and therefore were very much perplexed and grieved for that tribe, ſaying, verſ. 7. How ſhall we doe for wives to them that remaine? The daughters might have helped their parents in this perplexitie, if notwithſtanding their parents oath, they might have married of themſelves. Thus much Eſpenc. and much more, lib. de clandeſtin. matrimon. c. 1. 2.

We have alſo the conſent of antiquitie: to omit thoſe ancient Canons, which are very many, which doe enjoyne that children ſhould not bee married without their parents conſent: unto the which Bellarmine anſwereth, that ſo much he granteth, yet it followeth not, that the contract ſhould for that defect and want be diſſolved: wee will therefore bring forth ſuch Canons, as annihilate and diſanull the contract, where the parents conſent is not.

Evariſtus epiſtol. 1. Non fit conjugium niſi ab his, &c. There is no marriage made, but by them that have power over the woman: let the wife be demanded of her keepers and tutors, and eſpouſed by her parents, and the neereſt of her kindred: otherwiſe it is adulterie rather and whoredome than lawfull marriage.

Celeſtin. decret. 4. Quod parentes, fratres, &c. ita ut ſi non interſint, & conſenſum non adhibuerint, ſecundum leges nullum fiat matrimonium; That the parents, brethren, kinsfolks, of both ſexes be admitted to teſtifie their conſent for their ſon or daughter, and ſo to eſtabliſh or breake off their mariage: who if they bee not preſent, neither give conſent, according to the law, let it be counted no marriage, &c. What plainer evidence can we have for this matter?

Cod. lib. 5. tit. 4. leg. 7. Gordian. Minus legitima conjunctio, ceſſante patris voluntate, &c. It is not lawfull conjunction, the fathers will being wanting, leg. 12. Diocletian. Sociare, &c. Thou art not hindred to aſſociate thy ſelfe to what marriage thou wilt, ut contrahendis nuptiis patris conſenſus accedat, ſo that thy fathers conſent be to the contracting of marriage, leg. 11. Valent. Theodoſ. Vidua intra vigeſimum quintum, &c. Widowes under 25. yeeres, in ſecundas nuptias ſine patris ſententia non conveniant, muſt not enter into ſecond marriage without the ſentence of their father, tit. 6. leg. 6. If a man marrie an orphane or pupill, whoſe father is dead, being under 25. yeeres of age, nec matrimonium habuiſſe, it is to be counted no matrimonie, nor they children, that are borne in marriage, unleſſe the father dying willed it.

Likewiſe the Canons, Cauſ. 32. qu. 2. c. 13. Conſulitur puella non de ſponſalibus, &c. The maiden is not asked concerning the eſpouſals; for therein ſhe expected the judgement of her parents, but ſhee is conſulted with about the day and time of her journey: This is ſpoken of Rebecca: The ſame Canon alleageth Euripides, thus ſpeaking in the perſon of the woman, νυμφευμάτων, Sponſalium meorum pater meus curam ſubibit, &c. For my eſpouſals my father ſhall take care, it appertaineth not to me, &c. Thus we ſee that it is agreeable to the law of nature, that the marriage of children ſhould not be attempted without the conſent of the parents.

Cauſ.36.qu.2.c.11.gloſſ. This law is alleaged out of the Digeſts, tit. de nuptiar. ritu, leg.2. Conſiſtere non poſſunt nuptiæ, &c. Marriages cannot ſtand, unleſſe they conſent, in whoſe power they are.

Divers of the learned Papiſts condemne ſuch marriages, as are enterpriſed without the conſent of the parents: Gropperus, in inſtitut. Colonienſ. Gentianus, in his booke ſet forth of this matter, alleageth a certaine Greeke Canon to this effect: Quæ ſine iis, qui habent poteſtatem matrimonia fiunt, fornicationes ſunt: They are fornications, no marriages, which are done without them that have the power, &c. Likewiſe Catharinus, Irrita eſſe velim, nec vera eſſe matrimonia, &c. I judge them to be no true, but voyd marriages: Eſpenc.lib.de clandeſtin.matrim.c.15.

There are notwithſtanding certaine caſes excepted by the law, wherein the ſonne or daughter have free liberty to marry without conſent.

1. Si utroq; orba parente: If both the parents be dead. Cod lib.5.tit.4.leg.20. Honor.

2. Cod.lib.3.tit.28.leg.19. Poſt viginti quinque, &c. After 25. yeeres children might marry without the parents conſent.

3. Ibid.leg.20. Poſt matris pænitentiam, &c. If the mother ſhall give conſent, the father being dead, and afterward repent her, yet the marriage ſhall be good.

4. Cod.lib.5.tit.4.leg.25. Filii furioſi, &c. The ſonnes of mad men may marry without conſent.

Other caſes there are beſide, as when the ſonne is manumitted, that is, ſet free by his father, or hath borne any publike office of Magiſtracy or government, Eſpenc.c.16 de clandeſtin. matrim. But theſe irregular and extraordinary caſes excepted, the power of parents is not to be infringed, but their conſent to be expected in the eſpouſals of their children.

De religion. Ruſſor ad D. Chytræum.

For the Greeke Church, ſee the conſtitutions of the Greeke Emperours before alleaged: the Muſcovites at this day obſerve this uſe, Impetrato parentum conſenſu nuptiis dies dentur, A day is appointed for the marriage, the conſent of the parents being obtained.

Lib.2 ad uxorem.

Tertullian ſheweth the practice of the ancient Africane Church: Nec in terris filii ſine conſenſu patrum rite & jure nubent: Neither in earth doe the ſonnes rightly and lawfully marry without conſent of parents, &c.

Harm.ſect.18. pag.565. Pag 571.

So the reformed Churches: Saxon. confeſſ. artic. 18. In affiances even according to the ancient lawes, we will have the conſent of the parents alſo. Wittemberg. c. 21. Alſo wee teach that they which are young, ought not to marry without the authority of their parents, —otherwiſe it is not to bee counted ratified.

B. Rhenanus upon that place of Tertullian before cited, hath this note: Utinam Theologi & Iuriſconſulti, &c. I would Divines and Lawyers would admoniſh the Biſhop of Rome, Cæſar, and other Kings and Princes hereof, that this miſchiefe may be met with in ſeducing ſimple maids without the conſent of their parents.

Annot. in Gen. 24 58. Annot. in Gen. 25.35.

Our Doway men here alſo are ſomewhat indifferent: as they give this note, that children ought not to marry without the goood liking of their parents. And againe, Eſau by marrying againſt his parents will, made a breach from them.

This truth alſo is ſealed: Maſter Tindall holy Martyr; Let parents provide marriages for their children in ſeaſon, teaching them alſo to know, that ſhe is not his wife whom the ſonne taketh, nor her husband whom the daughter taketh, without the conſent or good will of their Elders, or them that have authority over them: if their friends will not marry them, then are they not to blame if they marry themſelves: let not the fathers and mothers alwayes take the uttermoſt of their authority of their children, but beare their weakneſſe, &c. pag.1249. col.2. artic.2.

There are alſo other cauſes which may diſſolve contracts and eſpouſals made: as if the honeſt and lawfull condition propounded in the contract be not kept: or if there bee an error in the perſon, hee heareth afterward of her diſhoneſty, whom hee tooke for an honeſt woman: both theſe may make voyd the contract, but not the marriage, if they be once joyned together.

The Papiſts.

2. THey ſet downe many impediments, which may make a nullity of marriage it ſelfe, after it be conſummate: ſome of them we acknowledge, as afterward it ſhall appeare: but theſe following we doe renounce.

94 Error. 1 Tim.5.12.

Firſt, the vow of chaſtity and entring into Orders doe looſe the bond of marriage. Bellarmine to this purpoſe urgeth that place, 1 Tim.5. 12. Having damnation, becauſe they have forſaken their firſt faith: the firſt faith, is the vow of continency, which was a ſufficient impediment of matrimony. Bellarm.c.21.propoſ.1.

Contra. By the firſt faith, is underſtood their faith, which they profeſſed in baptiſme, to renounce the workes of the fleſh, which theſe wanton widowes now follow in forſaking their calling: 1. So the interlinearie gloſſe, and Bruno expound this place: ex Eſpenc. in hunc locum. 2. The Apoſtle doth interpret himſelfe, verſ. 8. He that provideth not for his owne, denieth the faith, &c. that is, by his works he denieth the religion of Chriſt: now to deny the faith, verſ. 8. and to violate the faith, verſ. 12. doe ſignifie the ſame. 3. The Apoſtle afterward giveth theſe widowes licence to marry, verſ. 14. which hee would not have done, if it had been damnation, and a breach of the faith to marry after their profeſſed widowhood: this place both Chryſoſtome and Theophylact expound of widowes profeſſed, vide Eſpenc. in hunc locum. This text then nothing maketh for them.

95. Error. Secondly, marriages of the faithfull with Infidels are not only unlawfull, but void, Bellarmine c. 23. Yet he confeſſeth that ſuch marriages are not voyd either by divine or naturall law; or by any law of the Church, but only by the cuſtome of the people of God, having the force of a law, propoſ. 2. 3.

Argum. Infidelity in the old law, and diſparity of religion did make matrimony void: Ergo, much more now; for there is greater difference betweene Chriſtians and Infidels, than was betweene the Jewes and Gentiles, Bellarm. argum. 1.

Anſwer. Firſt, if this argument conclude any thing, it ſheweth, that even by the divine Law ſuch marriages are void: which notwithſtanding he before denied.

Secondly, the argument followeth not, for this law belonged to the policy of that nation, that they ſhould not marry with the Gentiles: who were accounted as an uncircumciſed and unholy people, but now this wall of partition is taken away; and in Chriſt there is neither Jew nor Grecian, Gal. 3. 28. Thirdly, the marriage of the Gentiles was for no other cauſe inhibited the Jewes, but leſt it ſhould be a meane to withdraw them from the worſhip of God, Deut. 7. 4. This proveth not, that an Infidell willing to dwell together, and of whom there may bee ſome hope, ſhould bee put away, contrary to S. Pauls rule, 1 Cor. 7. 13. Fourthly, the Jewes were permitted upon divers occaſions to put away their wives, for the hardneſſe of their heart, Matth. 19. 8. wherefore the impediments and diſſolutions of marriage among them doe not bind us.

Gal. 3. 28.
Deut. 7. 4.
1 Cor. 7. 13.
Matth 19. 8.

96 Error. Thirdly, the marriage of thoſe which committed adultery, and did compact together before to marry after the firſt husbands or wives death, is actually voyd. Bellarm. 22.

The Papiſts.

1. Concerning the invalidity of vowes to diſanull marriage, we have declared the truth before, Contro. 6. de Monachis. For marriage lawfully contracted and conſummate, is only made voyd by way of divorce in the caſe of adultery, as we have before proved.

Matth. 19. 9. Argum. Matth. 19. 9. Our Saviour giveth this perpetuall rule, that no man ſhould diſmiſſe his wife but for fornication: but Orders is no fornication: Ergo, not for entring into Orders, is ſhe to be diſmiſſed: and verſ. 6. No man muſt put aſunder that which God hath coupled: but they which are but contracted, are coupled before God: Ergo, no humane ordinance, ſuch as is the ſingle life annexed to Orders can ſeparate them.

Decret. Gregor. lib. 3. tit. 32. c. 7. Alexander giveth liberty to a woman profeſſed, ut ad religionem tranſeat, &c. to profeſſe religion, or returne to her husband: Ergo, it was lawfull after profeſſion made to returne.

Sext. decretal. lib. 3. tit. 15. c. 1. Bonif. 8. Simplex votum non reſcindit, &c. A ſimple vow doth not cut off marriage afterward contracted: and againe he ſaith, Voti ſolennitas ex ſola conſtitutione eſt eccleſia: A ſolemne vow is onely by the conſtitution of the Church: and Alexander ſaith, that Votum ſimplex non minus obligat coram Deo, A ſimple vow doth not leſſe bind before God, than a ſolemne and publike vow: it followeth, that a ſolemne vow then doth not hinder marriage afterward contracted.

Extrav. Ioan. tit. 6. c. 2. Votum ſolemnizatum per ſacri ſuſceptionem ordinis, &c. A vow ſolemnized by entring into holy orders, is not of force to diſſolve Matrimony before going, though not conſummate with carnall knowledge: wherefore marriage contracted is not hindered or interrupted by the profeſſion of Orders.

And further, that the vow of ſingle life cannot hinder marriage contracted, or diſſolve it being conſummate: 1. Of the Greeke Church Theophylact ſhall ſpeake, who thus writeth upon that place, 1 Timoth. 5. 15. I will the younger widowes to marry: Maluiſſem, &c. I had rather theſe widowes had not departed from their covenants made with Chriſt, but ſeeing they had rather marry, & ipſe aſſentior, I alſo give conſent, &c. here widowes which profeſſed ſingle life, are licenced to marry.

Commentar. in 1 Timoth. 5.

Lib. de Monogam. 2. So Tertullian ſaith: Ad eas dirigit, quales ſupra denotat: Hee directeth his ſpeech to thoſe widowes, whom he noted before, that they had forſaken their firſt faith, &c. even thoſe the Apoſtle alloweth to marry.

Harm. ſect. 18. p. 560. 3. Confeſſ. of Auſpurg. artic. 6. A vow cannot take away Gods commandement. And againe: Although the breaking of a vow might be reprehended, yet it followeth not, that the marriage of ſuch perſons is to be diſſolved. Saxony artic. 21. Vowes which wrap them in a kind of life, wherein is the worſhip of Idols, are without doubt fruſtrate, according to the firſt commandement, —thou ſhalt have no ſtrange Gods. Wittemberg. c. 21. Neither ought the vow of chaſtity to bee any hinderance herein, becauſe that ſuch a vow being taken upon a man by humane ſuperſtition, without authority of Gods word, and againſt faith, is not acknowledged of God, and wedlocke alſo hath it chaſtity, that he who hath vowed chaſtity, and marrieth a wife in the Lord, doth indeed fulfill the vow of chaſtity, &c.

4 See their owne Canons produced before.

Secondly, neither doth the infidelitie of the one partie make a nullitie of marriage: for S. Paul ſaith, that the woman in that caſe is not to forſake her husband if hee will dwell with her: Of this matter ſee more, queſt. 2. part. 2. of this Controverſie. 1 Cor. 7. 13.

Cod. lib. 1. tit. 7. leg. 16. Leo & Anthem. Si ſponſa conjugium ſponſi propter religionis diverſitatem recuſaverit: If the ſpouſe refuſe to marrie with him, to whom ſhe is eſpouſed, &c. the law alloweth only a diſſoluing of the contract and eſpouſals for religion ſake, and not otherwiſe.

Diſtinct. 10. c. 1. Nicolaus, Si religionis cauſa conjugia debere diſſolui dicuntur, ſciendum eſt, quia licet hoc lex humana conceſſit, lex tamen divina prohibuit: If for religion ſake marriages are ſaid to bee diſſolved, let it bee knowne, that although humane law doth allow it, yet Gods law doth forbid it.

Cauſ. 28. c. 1. Innocent. Quod Deus conjunxit, homo non ſeparet, &c. What God hath joyned together, let not man put aſunder: and leſt he ſhould be thought to ſpeake onely of thoſe which marry after Baptiſme, let them remember, that the queſtion was asked by the Jewes, and to the Jewes was the anſwer made, c. 8. Auguſt. thus writeth to Pollentius: Tibi videtur infideles à fidelibus dimitti non licere, &c. You thinke that the Infidels ought not to bee diſmiſſed from beleevers, becauſe the Apoſtle forbiddeth it, but I ſay it is lawfull, becauſe the Lord forbiddeth it not; yet not expedient, Quia hoc ne fiat monet Apoſtolus, becauſe the Apoſtle wiſheth or admoniſheth that it ſhould not bee: here bee two opinions, one thinketh it is not lawfull for Infidels to be diſmiſſed, the other that it is not expedient: ſo which opinion ſoever is followed, they are not at all to be diſmiſſed. Ibid. c. 9. Affert impedimentum ſalutis, &c. The departure of the beleever from the Infidell, bringeth an hindrance to his ſalvation.

Decret. Gregor. lib. 4. tit. 19. c. 8. Innocent. Fideles cum infidelibus matrimonialiter copulati, &c. The beleevers joyned in marriage with unbeleevers, may freely and lawfully remaine with them.

Decret. Eutychian. In poteſtate fidelis eſt poſt baptiſmum recipere uxorem, quam infidelis infidelem ante dimiſerat: It is in the power of a beleeving man to receive his wife after Baptiſme, which, when they were both infidels, he diſmiſſed, &c. But if the very bond and marriage knot were diſſolved, as Bellarmine ſaith, how can they come together againe?

Thirdly, neither is the fault committed before the marriage, ſufficient to diſable the marriage once done: for then queſtion might have beene made of the ſtrength of Davids marriage with Bathſheba. And Auguſtine doubteth not thus to conclude, Poſſe ſanè fieri nuptias ex male conjunctis honeſto poſtea placito conſequente: That marriage may very well ſtand betweene thoſe, that once had unlawfull carnall copulation, but afterward an honeſt purpoſe of marriage followed.

Can. Apoſtol. 66. Non licitum eſto aliam ducere, quam quis prius ſollicitavit, quamvis paupercula ſit: It ſhall not be lawfull for a man to marry any other, but her whom hee entiſed to folly before, though ſhe be poore.

Concil. Lateranenſ. part. 45. can. 2. Alexander. Contrahere quis poteſt cum ea matrimonium, quam viro vivente, adulterio polluerat: A man may contract marriage with her, whom, while her husband lived, he defiled with adultery. Theſe Canons are directly oppoſite to the Jeſuits opinion.

Now whereas Bellarmine excludeth not all adultery before going from future marriage, but where the parties were conpact and confederate together to marrie afterward: their owne law ſimply maketh it lawfull for a man to marry his concubine, though hee had promiſed her marriage before: Cauſ. 22. qu. 4. c. 22. Quam prius concubinam habuerat, non eſt peccatum in conjugem ſuſcipere: It is no ſinne to make her his wife, that was before his concubine: cui juramento firmavit, &c. to whom he confirmed by an oath, to take her to wife. Cauſ. 31. qu. 1. c. 2. Fieri poteſt conjugium cum quo praceſſit adulterium: Marriage may bee made with whom adultery was before committed. Decret. Gregor. lib. 4. tit. 7. c. 8. Siquis uxore vivente fide data, &c. If a man, his wife yet living, did give his faith to marry another, or did contract himſelfe to her, and did not carnally know her, the marriage is not to be diſſolved. So then neither adultery precedent, nor yet the giving of faith, or contradicting marriage, the firſt husband or wife yet living, though theſe are grievous offences; yet are not ſufficient to diſſolve or breake off Matrimony.

But there are certaine caſes, wherein Matrimony unlawfully contracted, yea conſummate may bee diſſolved: as firſt, if the conſent of either party be wanting, as when by tyrannicall coaction and compulſion they come together, and the conſent is ſtill withholden.

Hormiſda decret. 4. Filiam invitam & renitentem, nemo viri alicujus conjugio cogat ſociari: quorum enim unum eſt corpus, unus eſſe debet animus: Let no man match in marriage unto any his daughter againſt her will: for they that have one body, ought alſo to have one minde. Nicholaus de matrimon. can. 1. Si ſolus conſenſus defuerit, catera cum ipſo coitu celebrata fruſtrantur: If the conſent onely bee wanting, the very carnall copulation, and whatſoever elſe beſide, are all fruſtrate and voyd.

Secondly, if the conſent of both be wanting, as in the marriage of children, that are not able to give conſent.

Nichola. 1. de matrimon. 3. can. Ubi non eſt conſenſus utriuſque, ibi non eſt conjugium, &c. Where each party conſenteth not, there is no marriage: Therefore they which give girles to boyes in marriage in the cradle, doe no act at all, unleſſe both of them when they come to yeares of diſcretion, conſent.

Thirdly, if there be an error of the perſon, as if one be thruſt upon a man in ſtead of another, as Lea was upon Iacob: or an error in the condition of the party, as if he or ſhe be an Hermaphrodite, an Eunuch, or ſuch like.

Lateranenſ. part. 50. cap. 28. Alexander. Sicut puer, qui non poteſt reddere debitum, non eſt aptus conjugio; ſic quoque qui impotentes ſunt, minime apti ad contrahenda matrimonia reputantur: As a childe, which cannot render the debt or duty of marriage, is not fit for marriage; ſo neither are they fit to contract marriage, that have any naturall weakneſſe or imbecillity. In this place it is ſaid further, that although it be not the cuſtome of the Romane Church, yet the French Church doth diſſolve marriage for frigidity, and impotency of nature.

Fourthly, if they marry within the degrees forbidden by Moſes law. In all theſe caſes, Matrimony thus unlawfully begun and ratified, may bee diſſolved. But lawfull Matrimony cannot bee abrogate, but either by naturall death, or lawfull divorce for fornication. In the caſe of deſertion alſo and long abſence of either party, after the expecting of his returne ſome terme of yeares, with probable intelligence of the parties death; or if hee bee wilfully abſent, of his lewd and diſhoneſt life, the innocent party, by the wiſe and deliberate ſentence of the Magiſtrate, may bee pronounced free.

For other matters which are commonly objected, marriage is not to be diſſolved: As for long abſence, when the husband is detained in captivity, or ſuch like: Leo epiſtol. 77. cap. 1. Quod fœmina debeant, quæ captis viris nupſerant aliis, regreſſis de captivitate viris, prioribus copulari: Women marrying to others while their husbands are captives, muſt be reſtored unto them at their returne.

Barrenneſſe is no cauſe of diſſolution: Lateranenſ. part 6. cap. 25. Ob coeundi poſſibilitatem fieri non debet divortium: Divorce muſt not be made, for poſſibility of generation.

The leproſie is no cauſe: Lateranenſ. 37 part. cap 3. Alexander. Uxores propter lepram non ſunt dimittendæ, ſed illis petentibus debet debitum reddi: Women for leproſie muſt not be put away: but their huſbands muſt performe the duty of marriage if they require it.

So likewiſe in other caſes: Quicquid mulier contra te cogitaverit, vel ſi te accuſaverit, non eſt exceptâ cauſa fornicationis ejicienda: Though thy wife ſhould conſpire againſt thee, and accuſe thee, yet ſhe muſt not be caſt off except for fornication, Nichol. 1. decret. de matrim. 6.

Ibid. can. 7. Hi qui matrimonium ſani contraxerunt, & uni ex duobus dementia, aut furor, aut aliqua infirmitas acceſſerit, non debent conjugia talium diſſolvi; They which were ſound when they married, if either of them afterward fall into frenzy, madneſſe, or ſickneſſe, they muſt not for that be divorced.

Ibid. Similiter ſciendum eſt de his, qui ab adverſariis excæcantur, aut membris truncantur, aut à barbaris execti ſunt: The like is to be ſaid of thoſe that have their eyes pulled out, are maimed, or gelded of their enemies, &c. None of theſe are ſufficient cauſes to breake off marriage. And thus much of this queſtion.

The fifth Queſtion of the compariſon betweene Virginity and Marriage.

The Papiſts.

Virginity is preferred before Marriage, not onely for that it is a more quiet ſtate of life, and freer from troubles in this world, but that it is more convenient for the ſervice of God, and that it hath a gratefull purity and ſanctity, both of body and ſoule, which Marriage hath not, Rhemiſt.

1 Cor. 7. 32. Argum. 1 Corinth. 7. 32. The unmarried careth for the things of the Lord, how ſhee may pleaſe God: Ergo, virginity is a fitter ſtate of life to ſerve and pleaſe God in, Rhemiſt. ibid.

The Proteſtants.

97. Error. First, we grant, according to the Apoſtles ſaying in this place, that virginity is alſo a fitter ſtate of life for the ſervice of God, yet not ſimply, but for thoſe onely that have the gift of continency: for they which cannot abſtaine, may and doe ſerve God with a more quiet mind being married, than many Popiſh Virgins which burne in the luſt of concupiſcence. Secondly, yet it followeth not, that virginity is a more holy and cleane thing in it ſelfe, and more meritorious before God, than marriage is: for this were to make marriage unholy and uncleane; whereas it is not the act of marriage, but the abuſing thereof, that bringeth uncleanneſſe with it: before God in themſelves, neither is more holy than other.

Argum. It is faith which maketh us accepted of God, not the merit of any worke: and therefore of all faithfull beleevers it is ſaid, Apocal. 14. 4. Theſe are they which were not defiled with women: for they are virgins. And he underſtandeth all that are redeemed by Chriſt, from amongſt men, and are the firſt fruits of the Lamb, verſ. 4. and not onely thoſe which properly in common uſe of ſpeech wee call Virgins. And thus S. Ambroſe expoundeth: Si ideo putes virgines dictos, quia corpora ſua intaminata ſervarunt, &c. If you onely underſtand virgins, becauſe they have kept their bodies unpolluted, then Apoc. 14. 4.

the Saints ſhall bee excluded from this glory: for all the Apoſtles, except Iohn and Paul, had wives. Ambr. in 2 Corinth. 11. True godlineſſe therefore and a ſincere faith, whereby wee are divorced from the world, and joyned to God, is the true virginity.

De bono conjugal. c. 21. tom. 6.

Auguſtine: Sicut non eſt impar meritum patientiæ in Petro, qui paſſus eſt, & in Iohanne, qui paſſus non eſt: ſic non eſt impar meritum continentiæ in Iohanne, qui nullas eſt expertus nuptias, & in Abraham, qui filios generavit: As there was no greater merit of patience in Peter that ſuffered, than in Iohn, who ſuffered not; ſo there was no greater merit of continency in Iohn that was never married, than in Abraham that begat children. See then, by his judgement, there is the ſame merit of married and unmarried perſons.

Synod. Gangrenſ. cap. 9. Si quis virginitatem profeſſus tanquam abominabiles nuptias judicat, anathema ſit: If any man profeſſing virginity doe condemne marriage, as an abominable thing, let him bee accurſed, &c. But thus doe our adverſaries, who are carried away with ſuch an extraordinary liking of their Monkiſh fained chaſtity, that they deſpiſe marriage, calling it a prophaning and pollution of orders, as we have ſeene before.

Cod. lib. 8. tit. 58. leg. 1. Conſtant. Whereas there was a Law, that, cœlebs, a ſingle man was not capable of any bequeſt or legacy: the Emperour correcteth that ordinance, and thus enacteth: Sit omnibus æqua conditio capeſſendi, quod quiſque mereatur: Let the ſame condition be to all, married and unmarried to receive whatſoever they are meet or worthy of, &c. This is the equity of mans law, to make no difference in reward betweene the ſingle and married: ſhall Gods law bee thought to be more unequall?

Diſtinct. 30. c. 4. Si quis virginitatem, &c. If any man profeſſing virginity for Gods cauſe, doe arrogantly diſpraiſe thoſe that are married, let him bee accurſed, &c. But the extraordinary extolling and advancing of ſingle life, tendeth to the diſpraiſe of marriage.

Cauſ. 12. 44. q. 4. c. 6. Quis ignorat omnes retro ſanctos ejuſdem fuiſſe meriti, &c. Who is ignorant, that all the Saints in time paſſed were of the ſame merit, that Chriſtians are? If then the Saints and Patriarches, that were married, be equall unto Chriſtian virgins; then is not virginity ſimply to bee preferred before marriage.

Wee have ſeene before. 1. The judgement of the ancient Greeke Church, in their Synode Gangrenſ. not much unlike is that ſaying of Ieremy the late Patriarke of Conſtantinople: Si quis admiranda juſtitia—præpolleat, &c. Though a man excell in admirable juſtice, ſi tamen cum ſuperbia & aliorum deſpicientia, &c. Yet if it be joyned with pride, and the contempt of others, it will bring him into meere vanity, &c. the like may be ſaid of virginity joyned with pride.

Cenſur. oriental. c. 20.

2. Auguſtine ſaith, Obedientia conjugata, minus obedienti virgini præponenda eſt: Obedience in marriage is preferred before a diſobedient virgin.

Lib. de bono conjugal. c. 24.

3. Confeſſion of Bohemia, c. 19. Wee muſt not thinke, that the workes of thoſe which are unmarried in the miniſtery, are to bee preferred in merit and dignity, before the workes of married men, &c. And a little after: Our men doe not ground the worthineſſe, holineſſe, or vertue of the Eccleſiaſticall miniſtery, no more than they doe of Chriſtian ſalvation, upon either of theſe kinds, to wit, neither upon the ſtate of ſingle life or wedlocke, &c. Wittemberg. artic. 26. It is evident that ſingle life is not commanded by the word of God: alſo it is evident, that although the ſtate of ſingle perſons bee in publike danger more quiet, and more fit and commodious to execute the publike miniſteries of the Church, than is theirs which uſe it not, yet we muſt not thinke, that this kinde of life is of it ſelfe, before the tribunall ſeat of God more excellent, and more holy, than is marriage: for as in Chriſt, there is neither Iew nor Gentile, ſervant nor maſter, as S. Paul ſaith, ſo neither married nor unmarried, &c.

Harm. ſect. 18. p 545. 547.

4. Their owne Canons ſee alleaged before.

The concluſion then is this, that virginitie is both equall, ſuperiour, and inferiour to marriage. 1. Equall in reſpect of God before whom one meriteth not more than another. 2 Superiour in regard of the cares and encumbrances which the ſingle ſtate is free from, and it is in it ſelfe a more excellent gift. 3 Inferiour in regard of the perſons profeſſing virginitie, if they be not equall in other gifts, of humilitie, obedience, ſobrietie, and ſuch like.

The ſixth Queſtion, of the times of Marriage prohibited.

The Papiſts.

98. Error.

THere are certaine ſeaſons in the yeare, wherein for the holineſſe of the feſtivall times, they hold it unlawfull to have marriage ſolemnized: as from the Advent to the Epiphany; from Septuageſima Sunday (as it is called) to the octaves of Eaſter: from three dayes afore the Aſcenſion, to the octaves of Pentecoſt, Ruard. Tapper. artic. 20. p. 526. But the Councell of Trent hath ſomewhat moderated this time, and cut it ſhorter, thinking it unreaſonable that marriage ſhould bee prohibited the third part of the yeare (for ſo much the time interdicted ariſeth to, if account bee taken of the weekes:) The time of Pentecoſt therefore they have diſpenſed with: and the time prohibited at Eaſter they would have begun not from Septuageſima, but from Aſhwedneſday, Seſſ. 24. c. 10. Upon theſe times they hold it unlawfull publikely to have marriage ſolemnized, both for the holineſſe of ſo great feaſts, and becauſe of receiving the Sacraments, Bellar. de matrim. cap. 31.

Argum. God commanded the people to abſtaine from their wives, when hee was to appeare unto them in Mount Sinai, Exod. 19. 15. And before the high Prieſt would deliver the ſhew-bread to David and his company, hee asked if the young men had kept themſelves from women: Ergo, marriage is not lawfull at all times. Bellarm. ibid.

Exod. 19. 15. 1 Sam. 21. 4.

Anſwer, Firſt, theſe places alleaged doe rather prove, that men in thoſe interdicted times ought not at all to come at their wives, than that the ſolemnization of marriage ſhould bee reſtrained: but I thinke they would bee aſhamed to forbid men their wives company ſo long together, as five or ſix weekes at the Nativity, and eight or nine weekes at Eaſter: why then ſhould not the one bee as lawfull as the other? Secondly, the abſtinence from their wives was commanded then, as a Legall and ceremoniall kind of ſanctification, as was alſo the waſhing of their clothes, Exod. 19. 10. And the company of women was at ſome times counted as a legall pollution, not as a ſinfull or uncleane act of it ſelfe: as the women after child-birth were commanded to purifie themſelves, Levit. 12. from a legall pollution onely, not from any ſinfull or uncleane act: for then it had beene a manifeſt injury to that holy birth that Mary purified her ſelfe according to the Law. Wherefore ſeeing it was a legall kind of ſanctification, it is not to bee intruded and impoſed upon Chriſtians now. Thirdly, neither can they prove that this kind of abſtinence is neceſſary alwayes before the receiving of the Sacrament, though ſometimes we deny not but it is convenient: for it was not alwayes required, no not of the Prieſts in the Law, when they were to offer incenſe or ſacrifice. For whereas the high Prieſt, which was alwayes but one, was bound morning and evening to offer incenſe unto the Lord, hee could not obſerve this rule unleſſe hee had beene injoyned perpetuall abſtinence, which wee ſee by the law was not impoſed upon them. This doubt ſomewhat troubled Auguſtine: for firſt hee ſaith, That it muſt needs follow, ſeeing the high Prieſt was married, and did ſometime goe in unto his wife, that the offering of incenſe ſhould ſome dayes bee intermitted: but in his Retractations hee miſliketh his former ſolution, and thus determineth; That the high Prieſt firſt offered the morning incenſe, and afterward went in to his wife, and ſo was uncleane, uſque ad veſperam, but untill the evening, not after the eventide, and then he offered the evening incenſe. To take this anſwer for this time, though it bee inſufficient: for the Hebrew word which is tranſlated the even, or eventide ערב, ſignifieth the twi-light, when the Sunne is ſet, when light and darkneſſe are mixed together: but the incenſe was renewed before the Sun-ſet: yet I ſay, admitting Auguſtines ſolution, the high Prieſt did not abſtaine one whole day before hee offered: much leſſe many dayes, much leſſe many weekes, much leſſe ſome moneths: as the Popiſh Church preſcribeth by interdicting ſo many dayes.

The Proteſtants.

THat not onely the publike ſolemnitie of marriage at ſome times may have intermiſſion, but all Matrimoniall acts ought to ceaſe: as when men either privately doe give themſelves to faſting and prayer, 1 Corinth. 7. 5. or when publike or generall faſts are by the ſpirituall governours thought meet, and by the Chriſtian Magiſtrate proclaimed: wee doe not deny, but in our judgement allow it, and by our practice approve it: but that Matrimony at ſuch ſet times as an unholy and uncleane thing is to bee forbidden and reſtrained, wee take it to be Popiſh ſuperſtition, and an Antichriſtian yoke.

1 Cor. 7. 5.

Argum. 2. It diſgraceth the holy inſtitution of marriage, which the Apoſtle calleth honourable, and S. Paul counteth the fruits of marriage, which are the children of the faithfull, holy: How is it then, that there can bee any time ſo holy, the which holy Matrimony is not beſeeming? Againe, in thus doing they make difference of dayes, eſteeming ſome in themſelves more holy than others, contrary to the Apoſtles rule.

Heb. 13. 4. 1 Cor. 7. 14. Galath. 4. 10. Coloſſ. 2. 16.

Argum. 2. The Apoſtle willeth, that they ſhould not defraud one another, but by conſent for a time &c. 1 Cor. 7. 5. which though it bee eſpecially underſtood of married perſons, yet it may bee extended to thoſe which are contracted together: how can they obſerve this rule, when their marriage is ſuſpended ten weekes together, from Septuageſſima till the octaves of Eaſter? may not Sathan tempt them all this while for their incontinency? Againe, what is this elſe, but a forbidding to marry, though not in whole, yet in part: contrary to the Apoſtle, 1 Timoth. 4. 3.

1 Cor. 7. 5. 1 Tim. 4. 3.

Argum. 3. The Tridentine Chapter maketh but two holy times in the yeere, the Nativity, and Eaſter: during which times, they would not have Matrimony ſolemnized: and I pray you, why is Pentecoſt left out, is it not as feſtivall a time as the other? And if they have power to diſpenſe with the feſtivall of Pentecoſt, why not with the reſt alſo? wherefore it appeareth to be but an humane device. And as the Popiſh Church hath abrogated one of the interdicted times for marriage; ſo it were to bee wiſhed that thoſe reformed Churches which have abandoned other ſuperſtitious obſervations, and yet doe retaine this uſe for the reſtraint of marriage at certaine ſeaſons, would proceed a degree further, and grant a generall liberty to marry in thoſe inhibited times: firſt, becauſe it is an offence to other reformed Churches, that where the Goſpell is profeſſed, any ſuch yoke ſhould bee impoſed. Secondly, If Papiſts have inlarged this reſtraint, thinking it not reaſonable to injoyne ſo many times of inhibition, much more ought Proteſtants to doe that which is moſt agreeable to the liberty of the Goſpell. Thirdly, while by diſpenſation it is made lawfull to marry in theſe times, for every one that will bee at the charge thereof, and not otherwiſe, it will be taken only to be an engine to draw advantage. Fourthly, ſeeing that the Martyrs were perſecuted, for marrying in theſe inhibited times, as Iohn Crimes mentioned afterward: it is very unfit, and unbeſeeming, that the people ſhould under the Goſpell bee encumbred with ſuch things. Fifthly, becauſe the lawes of the Realme doe ſeeme to give liberty for marriage at all times, in theſe words: That no reſervation, or prohibition, Gods law except, ſhall trouble or impeach any marriage, without the Leviticall degrees: ann. 32. Henric. 8. c. 38. If no prohibition, then not the prohibition or reſtraint of time. Laſtly, becauſe this reſtraint of marriage is not grounded upon the word of God, for then it could not be altered; but is only an humane conſtitution, and ſeemeth rather to abridge the liberty of marriage, and to be againſt the Apoſtles rule, 1 Cor. 7. 5. as I have ſhewed before: in mine opinion it were much better for theſe reaſons alleaged, for this Canon of reſtraint to be diſcontinued, than urged: and I hope, that the diſcreet officers of our Church, will bee more ſparing and moderate therein.

But to returne, let us ſee a little I pray you, how well they agree together about the times prohibited for marriage: ſome of them beſide the three times of the Nativitie, Eaſter, Pentecoſt, make alſo a fourth time unſeaſonable for marriage, and that is at the feaſt of Saint Iohn Baptiſt: Neither doe they here agree about the time, ſome preſcribing three weeks before of abſtinence from marriage: Synod. Illerdenſ. decret. 1. ex Gratian. Some foureteene dayes onely, Synod. Salegunſtadienſ. can. 3. Some doe adde alſo other times of prohibition, as in the foure Ember faſts, and in the holy dayes eeves: when they hold it unlawfull to marry, Salegunſtad. ibid. Others doe abridge the three uſuall times of reſtraint, either in part, as reformat. Ratiſpon. artic. 21. the laſt weeke onely of Advent is reſtrained for marriage: or in whole, as the reſtraint of Pentecoſt is abridged and cut off in the late Tridentine Chapter. Thus it appeareth to bee onely an humane tradition, which hath ſo much doubtfulneſſe, and uncertainty: as though any time can be too holy for marriage.

Could there be a more holy place than Paradiſe? or a more holy time, than while man was in his innocency? yet even then and there Matrimony was inſtituted.

Laſtly, is not the Sabbath or Lords day an holy feſtivall time? and as holy as any is? what if I ſaid more holy, for this onely immediately was inſtituted of God: but marriage may notwithſtanding bee fitly ſolemnized upon that day, the abuſes and diſorders, which commonly fall out in ſuch aſſemblies, being cut off: for Auguſtine is of opinion, that the marriage in Cana of Galile, was Die dominico, upon the Lords day. And it is moſt fit that Matrimony ſhould bee ſolemnized in the face of the congregation, which is uſually aſſembled upon that day: Ergo, it may as fitly and conveniently at any time bee kept and ſolemnized, excepting the reſpects aforeſaid. De rempor. ſerm. 159.

The civill Law for decency and comelineſſe ſake interdicteth ſome times of marriage to particular perſons: as a woman marrying within a yeare after her husbands death, was counted infamous: Cod. lib. 2. tit. 12. leg. 15. Gordian. but generally to all, and for religion the Law enjoyneth not times of reſtraint.

1. Whereas the ancient Greeke writers had a moſt reverent opinion of marriage: as Epiphanius ſaith, Sancta Eccleſia nuptias habet venerandas & colit eas: The holy Church doth hold marriage to bee reverenced, and maketh account of them. And Chryſoſtome: Nuptiæ precioſa res & nobis & externis videtur: Marriage ſeemeth to be a precious thing to us, and thoſe which are without, &c. Theſe counting marriage ſo holy and reverent a thing, no doubt thought no time too holy for it. Lib. 2. tom. 2. Hom. 12. in 1 ad Corinth.

2. Tertullian ſaith, Prohiberi nuptias nuſquam legimus, ut bonum ſcilicet: Wee reade no where marriage to be prohibited, as being a good thing, &c. If marriage bee no where prohibited, then neither at any time to be reſtrained. Lib. 1. ad uxor.

3. Auſpurg. artic. 5. Humane traditions ought to give place to times and opportunities, eſpecially in the Church, wherein there ſhould be more regard had of the ſalvation of the godly, and of love and publike peace, than of humane traditions. This reſtraint of marriage then at certaine times, being but an humane tradition, ought to give place to publike peace. Sect. 18 p. 554.

4. The Tridentine Chapter, as is ſhewed before, argum. 3. hath taken away one of the times of reſtraint at Pentecoſt, and why not the reſt alſo?

And let it be here obſerved, that the Chriſtian Romaniſts have bemoaned this cuſtome of reſtraining marriage at certaine times of the Pagane Romanes their predeceſſors: for ſo Plutarch writeth, that menſe Maio mulieres non ducuntur, that women are not married in the moneth of May: and that, publicis feriis mos non eſt nubere virgines, in the publike feries or holy dayes, it is the faſhion for virgins not to marry. Quæſtion Roman. q. 86., q. 105.

Wee have here the teſtimony of the Martyrs: Iohn Lambert holy Martyr: In that they will not ſuffer marriage to bee ſolemnized at all times in the yeare: I thinke it ſtandeth not with Chriſts rule, but is againſt the ſame; and that they will not ſuffer the banes upon all holy dayes to bee proclaimed, unleſſe a diſpenſation for money bee purchaſed: All this God forbiddeth: Fox pag. 1105. col. 1.

The

The ſeventh Queſtion, to whom Matrimoniall cauſes properly doe belong.

The Papiſts.

99. Error. MAtrimoniall cauſes, as to determine of the degrees of kindred, of divorces, of the impediments of marriage, of contracts : doe onely belong unto the Church, and the Magiſtrate may make lawes hereof (approbante principe eccleſiaſtico) by the approbation of the eccleſiaſticall Prince (hee meaneth the Pope:) otherwiſe the lawes of Princes are in this behalfe void : Bellarm. de matrimon. cap. 32.

Math.19. 1 Cor.7.13. Argum. 1. Our Saviour Chriſt giveth a law concerning divorces, Matth. 19. hee ſendeth them not to the Civill Magiſtrate : and Saint Paul preſcribeth, what is to bee done in the marriage of beleevers and Infidels, 1 Cor. 7. 13. Ergo, the officers of the Church are onely Judges of theſe cauſes: Bellarm. ibid.

Anſw. Firſt, the argument followeth not : for Chriſt as King of his Church, the Apoſtles as his chiefe Miniſters, by warrant and commiſſion from him, preſcribed and gave lawes to the Church : no mortall man now is to challenge that authority to himſelfe. Secondly, by this reaſon eccleſiaſticall perſons ſhall have the rule of all cauſes : for Saint Paul deſcribeth the office alſo of Princes, and giveth direction for civill cauſes, as for tribute, uſing of the ſword, and ſuch like, Rom. 13. doth it follow then that theſe things doe belong to the Apoſtles ſucceſſors ? Thirdly, as the Apoſtles did give rules and directions for Matrimoniall and other cauſes : ſo it is the Miniſters part alſo, by the word of God to miniſter counſell, and give direction to the Civill Magiſtrate in theſe caſes, but not without authority from the ſame power to meddle with the execution thereof.

Argum. 2. Matrimony 1. is a Sacrament, and therefore belongeth to the knowledge of eccleſiaſticall perſons: 2. and many caſes of conſcience may fall out, wherein recourſe is to bee had to the paſtors of mens ſoules : 3. otherwiſe when there are no Chriſtian Magiſtrates, their ſpirituall cauſes ſhould bee brought before Heathen Judges, if the Church hath no power to diſcerne of them : Bellarm. ibid.

Anſw. Firſt, wee deny Matrimony to bee a Sacrament, neither ſhall they bee ever able to prove it ſo. Secondly, in caſes of conſcience in Matrimony the Paſtors of ſoules muſt bee conſulted with out of the word : but it followeth not, that they therefore ſhould make lawes : and are your Canoniſts and Licentiates paſtors of ſoules, to whom you referre the deciding of theſe cauſes? Thirdly, Heathen Judges have 1. made good lawes concerning Matrimoniall matters, as that no man ſhould marry his fathers concubine, Alexander Cod. lib. 5 tit 4. leg. 4. not without the parents conſent : Dioclet. ibid. leg. 12. But where ſuch lawes faile, they muſt take that courſe which S. Paul did againſt the inceſtuous perſon, to uſe ſpirituall correction.

The Proteſtants.

MAtrimoniall cauſes, ſuch as are before rehearſed, originally doe belong to the Civill Magiſtrate, by whoſe munificence they have beene granted to eccleſiaſticall perſons, and unto them properly it doth belong to make Matrimoniall lawes.

Rom.13.4. 1 Timoth.2.2. Arg. 1. This is evident firſt out of the Scripture, for Moſes and not Aaron, did publiſh the lawes concerning the degrees of marriage, Levit. 18. and other Matrimoniall cauſes. The Magiſtrate is Gods miniſter to take vengeance on them that doe evill, Rom. 13. 4. therefore alſo to cenſure and puniſh all tranſgreſſions and offences in marriage ; to him it appertaineth to ſee that men live in godlineſſe and honeſty, 1 Tim. 2. 2. Therefore it is part of the Magiſtrates care, that honeſty and godlineſſe bee kept in Matrimony and Matrimoniall duties and cauſes.

Argum. 2. Secondly, this is proved by the ancient practice of the Civill power : how the Emperours both Heathen and Chriſtian have made lawes as concerning the degrees, contracts, divorce of marriages ; ſee Cod. lib. 5. tit. 4. de Nuptiis, tit. 5. de inceſto, &c. Beſide their practice, the teſtimony of the law is evident, Cod. lib. 5. tit. 4. leg. 3. Severus. Poteſt univerſam incidentem quaſtionem examinare, &c. Hee before whom any principall cauſe is brought, may examine every queſtion incident : but ſo cannot an eccleſiaſticall perſon examine every matter that falleth in queſtion in the caſe of Matrimony. Secondly, Ibid. leg. 3. Valerianus : Civilis quaſtio & incidens criminalis eadem ſententia terminantur, &c. A civill queſtion and criminall falling into it, are ended with the ſame ſentence : but eccleſiaſticall perſons have nothing to doe with Civill cauſes, as with matters of inheritance, debts, dowries, which are incident into Matrimoniall cauſes : Ergo, neither the judgement of the crimes belongeth to them. They being incompetent perſons of themſelves, are made competent by the conſtitution of Princes : as the law ſaith, Cod.lib.3. tit.13.leg.5. Arcad. Principis oraculum incompetentem judicem facit competentem : The oracle of the Prince maketh an incompetent Judge competent.

The eighth queſtion, of the Ceremonies and rites of Matrimonie.

The Papiſts.

THe Jeſuite reckoneth up ſeven. Firſt, they which are to bee joyned in Matrimony, are bleſſed of the Prieſt. Secondly, oblation is made for them in the ſacrifice of the Maſſe. Thirdly, they are covered with a vaile. Fourthly, they are coupled together vitta purpurea & candida, with a ſcarſe or riband, partly white, partly purple. Fifthly, the Bride giveth to the Bridegroome a ring, firſt hallowed and bleſſed of the Prieſt. Sixthly, he commendeth them to God in his prayers. Seventhly, hee exhorteth and admoniſheth them of their mutuall duty, Bellarm. cap. 33. de Matrimon.

100. Error.

The Proteſtants.

SOme of thoſe rites wee altogether allow and uſe them our ſelves, as the 6. and 7. for both prayers are made unto God for them, and they are by the Miniſter put in minde of their duty : and all is done with us in the vulgar tongue, much more to the edifying of the people, and comfort of the parties themſelves : whereas their idolatrous Prieſt chattereth all in an unknowne tongue : A goodly exhortation ſure, when the parties exhorted underſtand not one word thereof. Some other of theſe rites we utterly reject, as the 2. 3. 4. for oblation or ſacrifice, in their meaning, we acknowledge none : for the married parties to receive the Communion, if there be a ſufficient number, we neither hold it neceſſary as being of the eſſence of marriage, nor yet thinke it unmeet. But as for that coloured and painted attire of blew and white, we take it fitter for a May-game, than to bee ſhewed in a ſolemne aſſembly of Chriſtians.

Nichol. 1. de Matrim. can. 4. Ut ligaturam auream, vel argenteam, vel ex quolibet metallo compoſitam, quando nuptialia fœdera contrahunt, in capitibus non deferant: That they weare no billament or plate of gold or ſilver in their heads, when they celebrate the Matrimoniall contract. Yet ſuch ornaments were more ſeemely, than ſuch gue-gawes, and toyes of blew and white.

Colonienſ. part. 7. cap. 47. Ludicra illa, quæ in templis poſt benedictionem ſacerdotalem fieri conſueverunt, veluti in pulſando ſponſo, atque alia ejuſdem generis penitus tollantur : nam res ſeria, quam Deus ipſe inſtituit, agitur : Thoſe light toyes which are accuſtomed to bee done in the Church, after the bleſſing of the Prieſt upon the married couple, as in ſmiting of the Bridegroome, and ſuch like, muſt bee left : for a ſerious matter of Gods owne inſtitution is in hand.

Cod. lib. 5. tit. 4 tit. 21. Theodoſ. Milites ſine antiqua ſolennitate, &c. Souldiers have licence to contract Matrimony without the ancient ſolemnity. Ibid. leg. 22. Si pompa aliaque nuptiarum celebritas omittatur, &c. If the pompe and celebrity of marriage bee omitted, nothing is wanting to the firmneſſe or ſureneſſe of marriage : Ergo, by the Civill Law ſuch toyes and vaine pompe are not required, nor neceſſary. The reſt we in part allow, as the Ring, ſo it bee uſed onely as a civill ornament, and token of mutuall love : but that popiſh bleſſing either of the Ring, or of the married couple with the fingers a croſſe, and muttering of ſome few inchaunting words, as though by the very act of popiſh bleſſing, there were a ſecret vertue and quality of holineſſe infuſed into the things ſo bleſſed or inchaunted ; we condemne it as a ſuperſtitious toy. So we conclude, all ſuch rites in Matrimony, as have a comely and profitable uſe, tending to edifying, we refuſe not : the reſt we reject, and ſend them backe to Rome, from whence they came.

Tertullian ſheweth what ſolemnities were uſed in marriage in his time : I ſuffice not to ſhew the happineſſe of that marriage, quod eccleſia conciliat, oblatio confirmat, obſignatum angeli renuntiant, Pater rato habet : which the Church doth begin, the oblation confirmeth, the Angels ſeale, the Father ratifieth, &c. Their chiefe and only ceremony of account, was their oblation and communicating in the Sacrament.

THE

THE SIXTEENTH GENERALL CONTROVERSIE, OF CONFIRmation, Orders, extreme Vnction.

The firſt Queſtion, of Confirmation.

THe parts of this queſtion are theſe. Firſt, whether it be a Sacrament. Secondly, of the parts thereof. Thirdly, of the Miniſter. Fourthly, of the effect of this ceremony. Fifthly, of the rites, and whole order thereof.

The firſt part, whether it be a Sacrament.

The Papiſts.

THat Confirmation is properly and truly a Sacrament, it was decreed in the Tridentin. Concil. ſeſſ. 7.can.1. and it is their generall opinion.

Argum. Act. 8.17. They did lay their hands upon them, and they received the holy Ghoſt: This impoſition of hands, together with the prayers here ſpecified, was no doubt, the Sacrament of Confirmation: for here is an outward ſigne, and a ſpirituall grace: Ergo, a Sacrament, Rhemiſt. ibid. Bellar. de Confirmat. lib.2.cap.2.

Anſw. Firſt, theſe were miraculous gifts of the holy Ghoſt, as the gifts of tongues, of prophecying, healing, which were beſtowed upon the Diſciples, whereof the impoſition of hands was a ſigne at that time: but it is impoſſible to ground an ordinary and perpetuall Sacrament upon an extraordinary example: and that they were ſuch viſible graces of the ſpirit, it appeareth, becauſe Simon Magus ſaw that the holy Ghoſt was given them by laying on of hands.

Secondly, the holy Ghoſt was obtained by their prayers, verſ. 15. and not by the laying on onely of hands.

Thirdly, to make a Sacrament, it is not enough to have a viſible ſigne, and to ſhew ſome ſpirituall grace therewith to bee beſtowed: for then the ſpittle and clay that Chriſt uſed, the napkins alſo and partlets, which were carried to the ſicke from the Apoſtles, and they were healed preſently: all theſe ſhould be Sacraments; for here are outward ſignes, and ſome effect followed: yet becauſe there was no inſtitution of a Sacrament by Chriſt, nor any commandement to uſe them, neither theſe, nor the impoſition of hands can be a Sacrament.

Fourthly, the Apoſtles had an eſpeciall commandement to impoſe hands, and a ſpeciall promiſe by laying on of hands to give the holy Ghoſt, which we now have not.

Fifthly, ſeeing the extraordinary gifts, which the Apoſtles beſtowed by impoſition of hands, are now ceaſed, the ceremony in that behalfe alſo is expired.

Bellarmine anſwereth: 1. The Apoſtles gave not only the miraculous gifts of the Spirit, but the ho-
1 Cor. 12.30. ly Ghoſt; for all did not ſpeake with tongues, but theſe gifts all the beleevers had. 2. It cannot bee ſhewed, that the Apoſtles had any ſuch ſpeciall Commandement or promiſe, but the promiſe is generally made to the Church: I will be with you to the end of the world. 3. Though the viſible ſignes are cea-ſed, yet the inviſible grace which was given by the impoſition of hands, remaineth ſtill: Bellarm. cap.2.

Contra. Firſt, we 1. grant, that by impoſition of hands, the Apoſtles gave both inviſible graces and viſible ſignes together, not the one without the other: this notwithſtanding it was an extraordinary worke of the Apoſtles, and no good ground for an ordinary Sacrament. 2. Though all beleevers ſpake not with tongues, yet they had all in thoſe dayes ſome eſpeciall or extraordinary gift for the Mark, 16.17. confirmation of their faith, Mark. 16.17. Theſe tokens ſhall follow them that beleeve, &c. 3. Yet it is cleare, that all theſe at Samaria received extraordinary gifts, for they had beene baptized before and beleeved, and were partakers of the common grace : and they were ſuch graces as Simon ſaw to be given : therefore extraordinary and viſible.

Secondly, it is great boldneſſe to deny that the Apoſtles had a ſpeciall promiſe to give the graces of the ſpirit, and a commandement ſo to doe : for he himſelfe granteth, Nunquam ordinarie impoſuiſſent manus : They would never ſo ordinarily have impoſed their hands, if Chriſt had not ſo commanded. 2. Ananias by the commandement of Chriſt laid his hands upon Paul, not to take away his blindneſſe only (as Bellarmine boldly affirmeth) but that he might be filled with the holy Ghoſt. Here is both an expreſſe commandement and promiſe. 3. Some generall promiſes were made not onely to the Apoſtles, but to the whole Church, as of Chriſts perpetuall preſence and protection : but it is very abſurd, to ſay, that the Apoſtles had no more power to give the holy Ghoſt, than others ſucceeding them have; for this were to make all Apoſtles, which S. Paul denieth.

Act. 13. 7.

1 Cor. 12. 29.

Thirdly, if the viſible ſignes are ceaſed, which came by impoſition of hands, then have you loſt your ſacrament, the ſacramentall effect being extinct : the inviſible graces of the Spirit remaine, but not conferred by impoſition of hands, but by the preaching of the word, and prayers of the Church. Hitherto therefore you have proved no ſacrament.

The Proteſtants.

WEE grant a ceremony of impoſition of hands uſed in the Apoſtles time, and after, ſo long as the miraculous gifts of the holy Ghoſt continued in the Church, there is alſo another kind of impoſition of hands, ſuch as the Apoſtle ſpeaketh of, which may have perpetuall uſe in the Church, which is nothing elſe but a kind of prayer to be ſtrengthened by the holy Ghoſt, and for the increaſe of grace. But neither this nor the other doe we hold to be a Sacrament.

Heb. 6. 2.

Argum. 1 Every Sacrament muſt have his appointment from Chriſt, conſiſting both of an outward Element, and the word of inſtitution : but the Popiſh Sacrament of confirmation hath none of theſe : the element they uſe, is oyle, the word of conſecration, I ſigne thee with the ſigne of the Croſſe, and annoint thee with the Chriſme of health, in the name of the Father, the Sonne, and holy Ghoſt : but none of theſe have their inſtitution by Chriſt or his Apoſtles any where in the new Teſtament, Act. 8. 19. and in other places wee reade that the Apoſtles uſed impoſition of hands, but there is no where mention made of Chriſme or oyle : neither was this ſuperſtitious device in uſe then, whatſoever the Jeſuite ſaith, being brought in long after by [a] Sylveſter, who is reported by Damaſus to be the deviſer of Chriſme: Ergo, it having no inſtitution in the Goſpell, it is no Sacrament.

Act. 8. 19.

[a] Some aſcribe this invention to Hyginus before : but it is not like to be ſo ancient : ſee further anſwer to the objector here, pag 77. Retect.

Argum. 2. The Scriptures beſide that extraordinary impoſition of hands uſed by the Apoſtles, make mention of another impoſition of hands, not as of a Sacrament by it ſelfe, but as appertaining to the Sacrament of Baptiſme, as the Apoſtle ſaith, Heb. 6. 2. The doctrine of baptiſmes and laying on of hands : this externall rite depended upon baptiſme, it was not a ſeverall Sacrament by it ſelfe.

To this effect alſo their owne Canon, p. 3. diſtinct. 4. c. 124. Nullus miniſtrorum, &c. None of the Miniſters that hath power to baptiſe ſhould goe without Chriſme : Quia inter nos placuit ſemel in baptiſmate Chriſmari, &c. Becauſe the uſe is with us once in baptiſme to be Chriſmed. Chriſmatis non niſi una benedictio : Chriſme is but once bleſſed or hallowed, &c. Here we ſee, that Chriſme, which they now uſe in confirmation, went together then with baptiſme.

Auguſtine ſaith, Manus impoſitio quid aliud eſt, quàm oratio ſuper hominem? The impoſition of the hands, what elſe is it but prayer over a man? He ſaith not it is a Sacrament.

De Baptiſm. lib. 3. c. 16.

Deuſdedit. Papa decret. Scitis quia quomodo ſunt 7. dona ſpiritus ſancti, ita ſunt ſeptem dona baptiſmi, à primo pabulo ſacrati ſalis, & ingreſſus ſanctæ Eccleſiæ, uſque ad confirmationem ſpiritus ſancti per Chriſma: Ye know, that as there are ſeven gifts of the holy Ghoſt, ſo there are ſeven gifts of baptiſme, from the firſt ſpirituall nouriſhment of hallowed ſalt, and the entrance to the Church, unto the confirmation of the holy Ghoſt by oyle, &c. Here confirmation is but a part of baptiſme, and therefore not a Sacrament of it ſelfe.

Concil. Arelatenſ. ſub Carolo can. 18. Ut presbyteri ſub ſigillo chryſma cuſtodiant, genus enim ſacramenti eſt : That the Prieſt keepe the Chriſme under ſeale, for it is a kind of Sacrament, &c. Confirmation miniſtred with Chriſme is a kind of Sacrament, that is, after a ſort, properly it is not.

In this cauſe ſuffered maſter Benbridge holy Martyr, for denying Confirmation to be a Sacrament, or that the Biſhop doth give grace thereby, pag. 2046. col. 2. artic. 3.

The Grecians at this day, as Villamont reporteth, deny the Sacrament of Confirmation : ſo doe the Ruſſians alſo, as Sacranus : and they uſe this reaſon, taken from theſe words of the Nicene Creed : I beleeve one baptiſme : if there be but one baptiſme, there is alſo but one unction. So in the Æthiopick Church, Confirmation and Chriſme is not held for a Sacrament: as Zago Zabo their Biſhop confeſſeth.

The

The ſecond Part, of the Matter and forme of Confirmation.

The Papiſts.

102. Error. THe matter of this popiſh Sacrament, they ſay, is oyle mixed and tempered with balme, Rhemiſt, Act.8.ſect.6. Firſt hallowed and conſecrated by the Miniſter thereof, and ſtriked in manner of a croſſe upon the forehead of him that is to be confirmed, *Bellarm.c.*8.

2 Cor. 1. 21. Argum. 2 Cor. 1. 21. It is God which eſtabliſheth us, or confirmeth us with you in Chriſt, and hath annointed us. Here the Apoſtle ſpeaketh of confirmation, and of the materiall part thereof, which is holy unction, or annointing: and this holy Chriſme was prefigured by that precious oyntment, Exodus 30. wherewith the tabernacle and the Prieſts were annointed: Bellarm. ibid.

The Proteſtants.

Anſ. FIrſt, the Apoſtle ſaith not, which hath confirmed, but, which doth confirme: which if it were meant of that externall ceremony of confirmation, ſee what injury you offer to the Apoſtle, that being a confirmer of others, he had need now to bee catechized and confirmed himſelfe. Againe, he ſpeaketh not of confirmation wrought by the miniſtery of men: but God (ſaith hee) confirmeth us, that is, eſtabliſheth us by his ſpirit.

2. It is too too groſſe to underſtand by this annointing, your greazy beſmearing mens faces with your Chriſme, ſeeing the Apoſtle expoundeth himſelfe in the next verſe, He hath ſealed us, and given the earneſt of his ſpirit in our hearts, verſ. 22. Of this holy annointing of our hearts by the ſpirit, Saint 1 Ioh. 2. 27. John alſo maketh mention, ſaying, This annointing teacheth you all things. But doth the annointing of the face, I pray you, give men inſtruction?

3. S. Ambroſe thus expoundeth S. Paul of the ſpirituall annointing: Chriſtus confirmat gentes in fide promiſſa, &c. Chriſt confirmeth the Gentiles in the faith promiſed to the Jewes, &c. he hath annointed us, giving us regiam honorificentiam, a kingly honour: as Peter ſaith, we are genus regale, of a royall kinde: per unctionem ſpiritualem, by the ſpirituall anointing: who hath alſo ſigned us, dando ſpiritum ſuum nobis pignus, giving his ſpirit as a pledge, that wee ſhould not doubt of his promiſes: Ambroſ. in 1 *Cor.*2.

Tractat. 3. in Epiſt. Ioh. 1. Let us heare Auguſtines expoſition, Chriſtus ſit in corde, unctio ipſius ſit in corde: —Chriſtus docet, inſpiratio ejus docet: Let Chriſt be in your hearts, let his annointing be in your hearts: Chriſt teacheth, his inſpiration teacheth, &c. You may bee aſhamed therefore, ſo groſſely to abuſe the Scripture.

And concerning the oyntment of the Tabernacle: firſt, it is no way anſwerable or like to the popiſh Chriſme: 1. There is no mention made of balme in that confection, Exod. 30.33. for the word which Bellarmine urgeth בשם beſhem, is a generall name for ſweet ſpices; by the Septuagint tranſ-

Cantic. 4. 16. c 5. 6. lated ἡδύσματα, by the vulgar Latine, aromata, ſpices: and ſo is it taken in Scripture, *Cant.*4.16.5.1. But 2. admit that there was balme there, as ſome thinke, being the chiefe of the reſt, yet had they other ſweet ſpices, Cynamon, Calamus, Caſſia: you muſt mingle theſe alſo with your Chriſme, if you will find a type here. 3. This oyntment ſerved for the Prieſts; you muſt prove then that Chriſt the high Prieſt of the new teſtament was thus annointed: for if it belonged not to him, neither are we to chal-

Luk. 4 18. Exod 30 32. lenge it: but Chriſt was no otherwiſe annointed than by the ſpirit. 4. They were not to annoint any mans fleſh with that oyntment; how then dare you preſume to lay your Chriſme upon every mans forehead that is confirmed?

Secondly, ſay that your Chriſme, and that oyntment were in all points agreeable; who taught Coloſſ. 2. 17. you to borrow ceremonies of the Jewes, ſeeing they were but types and ſhadowes, but the body is in Chriſt?

Argum. 1. As for your oyle therefore mixed with balme: Firſt, the true balme you know is not to be had, and therefore you abuſe the people: As it may appeare, Epiſt. 2. Fabiani ad Orientales: in the which Epiſtle he reproveth them for not renewing the Chriſme every yeere: Dicunt enim nec balſamum per ſingulos annos poſſe reperiri: For they alleaged, that they could not get the right balme every yeere: If they of the Eaſt countrey could not get it where it groweth, how ſhould it come into the Lib. 12. c. 25. Weſt parts? Pliny alſo ſaith, that the balme, which grew but in two places of Judæa, is periſhed: yet Bellarmine controlleth him, and ſaith, that there is a kind of balme brought from India, beſide that which uſed to grow in Judæa: yet by Bellarmines leave it cannot be that balme, which grew in Judæa, which he ſaith the Apoſtles uſed. And Pliny may be credited for this matter, being a curious ſearcher out of the ſecrets of nature. Secondly, make the beſt of it you can, it is but a Jewiſh ceremony. Thirdly, your benediction of it, is but a kinde of magicall inchantment, ſeeing you have no word of God to conſecrate creatures in that ſort: for all things are ſanctified by the word of God and prayer: Ergo, without the warrant of God, there is no ſuch ſanctifying of creatures.

Act. 10. 44. Argum. 2. Act. 10.44. the holy Ghoſt is given without any Chriſme, Act. 8.17.19.5. the Apoſtles Act. 8. 17. laid on their hands, but uſed no Chriſme. Ergo, your Chriſme hath no ground out of Scripture. Kemnitii argum.

Bellarm. 1. In the firſt place alleaged, the holy Ghoſt was given by the ſingular privilege of God without a Sacrament. 2. Where mention is made of impoſition of hands, Chriſme alſo is underſtood : as where the Apoſtles are ſaid to baptize in the name of the Lord Jeſus, both the father and the ſonne are underſtood : and where the Apoſtle ſaith, Wee are ſaved by the lavacre of regeneration, hee underſtandeth alſo the word, though hee make no mention of it : Bellarm. c. 9. reſponſ. ad argum. 1.

Act. 19.5.

Contra. Firſt, though 1. the holy Ghoſt came upon them while Peter preached, yet this is no ſingular or extraordinary privilege, but the uſuall effect of the preaching of the word : as we may ſee in Lydia, Act. 16. and faith ordinarily commeth by hearing. And though the ſpirit was given without and before the Sacrament, yet preſently for their further confirmation, they were baptized, but not confirmed with Chriſme : ſo here is a Sacrament miniſtred unto them, to their further aſſurance and confirmation, but none other than the Sacrament of Baptiſme.

Act. 10.44.
Rom. 10.17.

Secondly, 1. we doe not doubt, but that the Apoſtles baptized in the name of the whole Trinity, though compendiouſly the name of Jeſus bee expreſſed, becauſe they were commanded ſo to doe : that although mention be not made there of the Father, Sonne and holy Ghoſt ; yet in other places there is, Matth. 28. 19. 2. And S. Paul alſo elſe-where joyned the word with the waſhing of water, Epheſ. 5. 25. and in the very ſame place it followeth by the waſhing of water and renewing of the holy Ghoſt ; whereby the operation of the word is ſignified : ſo then if in any other place of Scripture you could find your Chriſme to have beene uſed by the Apoſtles with impoſition of hands, though they be not every where joyned together, it might ſeeme probable that you ſay : but this you are not able to doe, therefore theſe examples are frivolouſly alleaged.

Matth 28. 19.

Thirdly, whereas Bellarmine doubteth not to ſay that the Apoſtles uſed Chriſme : other Papiſts more honeſtly deny it, being convinced with evidence of Scripture : as Synod. Moguntin. c. 18. Sacramentum confirmationis ab initio ſola manuum impoſitione exhibitum : The Sacrament of confirmation in the beginning was only exhibited with impoſition of hands.

It cannot be denied but that there was an unction uſed of ancient time in the Church : but it was a ceremony annexed to Baptiſme : and 1. Dionyſius ſheweth, that it was partly taken from the heathenish annointing, which wreſtlers did uſe, and partly from the law of Moſes : but with what warrant the ceremonies of the law, much leſſe of the Heathen may bee retained, that remaineth a queſtion, whereas the Apoſtle doth reprove the Galathians for turning againe to the beggerly rudiments of the word.

De cœleſti Hierarch.
De baptiſm.
Galath 4. 9.

2. Tertullian ſaith : Egreſſi de lavacro perungimur benedicta unctione de priſtina diſciplina, qua ungi oleo de cornu in ſacerdotio ſolebant, &c. Comming out of the lavacre, we are annointed with the bleſſed unction according to the ancient diſcipline, whereby they uſed in the Prieſthood to be annointed with oyle out of the horne, &c. If the unction were annexed to Baptiſme, it could not bee the matter of a new Sacrament.

Lib. de baptiſm.

3. Confeſſ. of Wittemberg. c. 10. It is evident, that in the law of Moſes, there was a time for ſhadowes, but now Chriſt being revealed, it is the time of truth, and the uſe of externall annointing pertaineth to the rudiments of the world, &c.

Harm. ſect. 13. p. 408.

4. Decret. Gregor. lib. 1. tit. 16. c. 1. Innocent. 3. Confirmationis ſacramentum non debet in eo iterari, qui per errorem fuit non chriſmate, ſed oleo, delinitus : The Sacrament of Confirmation muſt not bee iterated in him, which by error was annoynted with oyle, and not with Chriſme : Ergo, Chriſme is not neceſſary to confirmation.

Some of the Popiſh writers affirme, that balme, whereof their Chriſme is made, is not neceſſary ad eſſentiam Sacramenti, to the eſſence of the Sacrament : Cajetan. 3. par. qu. 72. artic. 2. Dominic. a Soto. lib. 4. ſentent. diſt. 7. qu. 1. art. 2. Synod. Arauſican. 1. cap. 1. Qui in baptiſmate Chriſmatus fuerit, in confirmatione ſacerdos commonebitur : nam inter nos Chriſmatis ipſius, non niſi una benedictio eſt : Hee that was chriſmed, or annointed in Baptiſme, muſt admoniſh the Prieſt thereof in confirmation (that hee be not annointed againe) for with us Chriſme is but once bleſſed and uſed, &c. He then that was baptized with Chriſme, was confirmed without Chriſme : This Chriſme then and conſecrate oyle was not the matter of confirmation.

The Papiſts.

THe forme of Confirmation is in the words which are pronounced, I ſigne thee with the ſigne of the Croſſe, and confirme thee with the Chriſme of ſalvation or health, in the name of the Father, the Sonne, and holy Ghoſt. Bellarm. cap. 10.

103. Error.

The Proteſtants.

1. THey muſt ſhew the inſtitution of Chriſt, out of the word, for the forme of every Sacrament : which they cannot doe for this, unleſſe they run to their beggerly traditions, which they blaſphemouſly call the word of God unwritten.

2. Where have they learned, that men are confirmed and eſtabliſhed with the externall annoynting of oyle ? ſo ſaid ſome amongſt the Coloſſians, Touch not, taſte not, handle not : to whom the Apoſtle anſwereth, Which things periſh with the uſing, and are after the commandement of men : So is this annointing with oyle, a meere invention of men, and hath no longer vertue or force than in the naturall uſe thereof.

Coloſſ. 2. 21, 22.

Bellarmine anſwereth : Firſt, wee have the warrant of the word for the forme of confirmation ; for

Act 8.15. the Apoſtles prayed, when they laid on hands, Act. 8. 15. and the forme of the Sacraments conſiſteth in prayers. Secondly, the oyle is called the oyle of health or ſalvation, as Baptiſme the waſhing of the new birth, becauſe it is an inſtrument thereof, Bellarm. cap. 10.

Contra. Firſt, prayer 1. is made to God, this forme is pronounced to him that is confirmed, therefore it is not a prayer: 2. Beſide in the forme there is mention made of the ſigne of the croſſe, and of chriſme: can you fetch theſe alſo out of the Apoſtles prayer? 3. And if you make confirmation nothing elſe, but prayer over a man, we will not much ſtand with you.

Secondly, 1. we make not Baptiſme a cauſe of regeneration, as you doe the oyle; but a ſeale only thereof. 2. Neither can yee ſhew the like inſtitution and ordinance of Chriſt for confirmation, as we can for Baptiſme.

Interrelig. cap. 16. Sacramentum confirmationis initio impoſitione manuum tantum celebratum fuit, &c. The Sacrament of confirmation in the beginning was onely celebrated with the impoſition of hands: It was then no part of the forme of conſecration in thoſe dayes, to ſay, I confirme thee with the Chriſme of health, &c. For at the firſt no oyle or Chriſme was uſed, but onely the impoſition of hands.

See before Error 101. the conſent of the Churches, that confirmation is no Sacrament, then conſequently they deny unto it the forme of a Sacrament.

The third part, of the Miniſter of confirmation.

The Papiſts.

104 Error. THe Papiſts are here divided: Some thinke that the Biſhop is ſo neceſſarily the Miniſter of confirmation, that it can in no wiſe be committed to Presbyters: Sic Bonaventur. Durand. Adrian. in* 4. diſtinct. 7. Other of them are of opinion that it may extraordinarily bee miniſtred by Presbyters, as Thomas, Marſilius, Ruhardus, Paludanus: But the Biſhop is the ordinary Miniſter thereof by the word of God: of this ſentence is Bellarmine cap.* 12.

Argum. Act.* 8. *Peter and Iohn are ſent to Samaria to lay on their hands, Philip onely baptized, if Philip could not have given the ſpirit, what need the Apoſtles have beene ſent? the Apoſtles then only confirmed: Biſhops ſucceed Apoſtles: Ergo.

Anſw. Firſt, the Apoſtles by laying on the hands, gave the extraordinary grace of the ſpirit, therefore this place maketh not for confirmation. Secondly, none can ſucceed the Apoſtles, in their Apoſtolike and extraordinary power in giving the ſpirit. Thirdly, Philip gave the holy Ghoſt alſo, though not thoſe viſible ſignes, which belong not to confirmation: for by his preaching they beleeved, and were baptized: and S. Hierome ſaith, Niſi forte Eunuchus à Philippo Diacono baptizatus ſine ſpiritu ſancto fuiſſe credendus eſt: Unleſſe it is to be thought, that the Eunuch was baptized of Philip the Deacon without the holy Ghoſt: adverſ. Luciferian. Fourthly, Philip was an [a] Evangeliſt, which was an office before [b] Paſtors: Biſhops are the Paſtors of the Church: will they deny that to an Evangeliſt, which they yeeld to Paſtors? Laſtly, other beſide the Apoſtles were ſent to ſecond the firſt Preachers, and to confirme them in their faith, as Barnabas to [c] Antioch.

Know that this obſervation, Ad honorem potius eſſe ſacerdotii, quam ad legis neceſſitatem: Is rather for the honour of the Prieſthood, than any neceſſity of law: otherwiſe, if the holy Ghoſt only be given at the prayer of the Biſhop, they are to be bewailed, which in remote places are baptized by Presbyters, and die before they are viſited of the Biſhop: Hieron. adverſ. Gagnin. de relig. Ruthen. And the Muſcovites following the Greeke Church, doe hold, that Biſhops and Prieſts are of the ſame authority in giving of Chriſme, which is miniſtred together with Baptiſme.

2. Tertullian is of the ſame minde: who reckoneth Chriſme, and impoſition of hands among the rites and ceremonies of Baptiſme: which Prieſts and Deacons have right to give as well as Biſhops: Dandi quidem habet jus ſummus ſacerdos, qui eſt Epiſcopus; dehinc Presbyteri & Diaconi, &c. The high Prieſt, who is the Biſhop, firſt hath right to give Baptiſme, then the Presbyters and Deacons, &c.

3. Confeſſ. of Bohemia, c. 12. Such as are thus inſtructed, our Miniſters receive unto this covenant of holy Baptiſme, and by the laying on of hands doe teſtifie unto them, &c. They give generally unto their Miniſters this right of impoſing of hands.

4. See the opinion of ſome Papiſts before, that confirmation may bee committed to Presbyters, &c.

Bellarmine himſelfe granteth, that the chiefe Biſhop may give authority to a ſimple Prieſt to confirme, lib.1.de matrim. c.5. reſp. ad argum.13.

The fourth part, of the efficacie and vertue of Confirmation.

The Papiſts.

THe holy Ghoſt is given in confirmation, for force, ſtrength, and corroboration, againſt all our ſpirituall enemies, and to ſtand conſtantly in the confeſſion of our faith, even to death, with great increaſe of grace, Rhemiſt. Act.8. ſect.7. And in this reſpect it giveth more abundant grace, in ſtrengthening of us againſt the devill, than Baptiſme doth, Bellarm. cap.11.

105. Error.

The Proteſtants.

FIrſt, they doe offer great injury to the ſpirit of God, tying him as it were, to their beggerly elements, which have power, as they ſay, to conferre grace. The Scripture ſaith, The ſpirit bloweth where it liſteth, the ſpirit of God is free, and is given without Sacraments, as well as with them: but this tradition of yours is no Sacrament: if it were, yet could it not conferre grace, as we have proved before.

Iohn 3. 8.

Their owne Maſter of Sentences lib.1. diſtinct.14.d. proveth that the Apoſtles themſelves gave not the Spirit: Orabant quippe ut veniret: They prayed that the Spirit might come upon them, on whom they laid their hands, they themſelves gave it not. And againe, ibid. d. Nos accipere hoc donum, &c. We according to our meaſure may receive this gift, Effundere ſuper alios utique non poſſumus: but we cannot powre it out upon others: Ergo, Confirmation doth not conferre the holy Ghoſt.

Secondly they doe greatly deface the Sacrament of Baptiſme, making it imperfect without confirmation, ſaying, that he which is baptized, ſhall never be a perfect Chriſtian, unleſſe he be confirmed with Chriſme, Gerſon. And that it is to bee reverenced with greater reverence than Baptiſme: See Fulke Act. 8. ſect.7. Yea, they deprive Baptiſme of the proper effect and uſe thereof, which is a ſigne unto us of the aſſiſtance of Gods Spirit, to fight manfully againſt the Devill: for by Baptiſme wee are buried into the death of Chriſt: But Chriſt by his death triumphed over the Devill, Ergo, Baptiſme is a ſigne of our victory againſt the Devill: yet they rob Baptiſme of this honour, and give it to confirmation. And thus they preferre their owne inventions before the ordinance of God; no Sacrament before a Sacrament.

Tileman Heſhuſ. loc. 22. error. 12.
Rom. 6 3.
Coloſſ. 2. 15.

Auguſtine ſheweth what the Sacrament of Unction is, Unctionis ſacramentum eſt virtus ipſa inviſibilis; unctio inviſibilis, ſpiritus ſanctus: The Sacrament of Unction, is the inviſible vertue: the inviſible annointing, the holy Spirit. What is become now of your Sacrament of Unction?

Tract. 3. in Epiſt. Iohan.

1. The Greeke Church alloweth no Chriſme or annointing to be uſed but in Baptiſme: they urge theſe words of the Nicene Creed, I confeſſe one Baptiſme for the remiſſion of ſinnes: If one Baptiſme, then one Chriſme or annointing, &c. They aſcribe not then any ſacramentall operation unto confirmation other than that which is exhibited in Baptiſme.

Gagnin. de relig. Ruthen.

2. So alſo Tertullian, annexeth unction and impoſition of hands unto baptiſme: Dehinc manus imponitur, per benedictionem advocans & invitans ſpiritum ſanctum: Then the hand is impoſed by benediction, calling and inviting the ſpirit, &c. The grace is not conferred then by the ceremony, but obtained by prayer and invocation.

Lib. de Baptiſm.

3. Confeſſ. of Bohemia, c. 12. The Miniſters by laying on of hands, doe teſtifie to them, that grace is contained (they meane exhibited) in Baptiſme to ſtrengthen them to the warfare of faith, &c. The vertue and efficacy then is in Baptiſme, not in the impoſition of hands.

Harm. p. 400.

4. And that confirmation maketh no ſupply, or addeth any complement to Baptiſme, their owne Canons teſtifie: decret. par.3. diſtinct.5. c.2. Melchiades; Spiritus ſanctus in fonte tribuit plenitudinem ad innocentiam: The holy ſpirit in Baptiſme giveth fulneſſe tending to innocency: Continuò tranſituris ſufficiunt regenerationis beneficia: The benefit of regeneration is ſufficient to thoſe that preſently paſſe out of the world: ibid. c.5. In the unction in Baptiſme is ſignified deſcenſio ſpiritus ad habitationem, the deſcending of the ſpirit to dwell with us: If then by Baptiſme we have innocency, and the ſpirit dwelling in us, how is it not perfect and abſolute without confirmation?

The fifth part, of the Rites and Ceremonies of Confirmation.

The Papiſts.

106. Error.

THe ceremonies which they commonly uſe in Confirmation, are theſe. Firſt, the Biſhop muſt breathe upon the pot or cruze of Chriſme. Secondly, he ſaluteth it in theſe words, Ave ſanctum Chriſma: Haile holy Chriſme. Thirdly, he giveth a kiſſe. Fourthly, he ſtriketh him that is confirmed with his hand, to teach him patience. Fifthly, his forehead is bound about, leſt the Chriſme ſhould run downe, which teacheth him not to loſe the grace of God. Sixthly, ſeven dayes together hee muſt neither waſh his head nor face. And theſe with ſuch like ridiculous toyes, are practiſed amongſt them, Bellarm. cap. 13. lib. de confirmat.

The Proteſtants.

1. SOme of theſe ceremonies we condemne as ridiculous: as the breathing upon the oyle, the ſtriking of the party confirmed, which light geſtures become not the gravity of the Miniſters of the Goſpell: all things ſhould bee done in the Church in decent and comely order. 1 Cor. 14. 40. Concerning this light geſture of ſtriking, the like whereof was uſed in the celebration of Matrimony, we heard before the judgement of the Councell of Cullin: how it is counted, inter res ludicras, among ridiculous and wanton toyes. Concil. Colonienſ. part. 7. cap. 47. vid. ſupra, controv. 15. quaeſt. 7. In the like caſe, in the emancipation, or ſetting of men free, they did uſe to ſtrike them: which fooliſh uſe was corrected by the imperiall law, Cod. lib. 8. tit. 49. leg. 6. he biddeth, Injurioſa raphiſmata, ſuch injurious ſtrokes to be left, quorum nullus rationabilis invenitur exitus, of the which there can be no reaſonable end: Jubemus circuitus hujuſmodi in poſterum quieſcente, &c. We will ſuch toyes and circumſtances to ceaſe. If in a civill act ſuch ridiculous toyes were inhibited, how much more uncomely are they in an act of religion? Secondly, one of them is meerely Idolatrous, to ſalute the oyle, as the Angell ſaluted Mary, to ſay, Ave, All haile unto it, making an idoll of it, being a thing without ſenſe or life. Thirdly, all of them are ſuperſtitious, having myſticall and typicall ſignifications and ſhadowes, which agreeth not with the nature of the Goſpell: for all ſhadowes are now paſt, the body being come. Coloſſ. 2. 17. Laſtly, they are ſuperfluous, cumberſome, and burdenous, as Auguſtine ſaith: Ipſam religionem, quam Deus pauciſſimis ſacramentis miſericordia Dei liberam eſſe voluit, ſervilibus oneribus premunt: They oppreſſe religion with ſervile burthens (of ceremonies) which Gods mercy hath left free in few Sacraments, &c. Againe, who ſeeth not how thus by their owne traditions they doe evacuate the ordinance of God? for in ſtead of catechizing and inſtructing of the youth in the principles and foundation of religion, as of repentance from dead workes, faith toward God, of the reſurrection and eternall judgement, they have brought in nothing elſe, but oyling, greazing, annoynting of them, breathing upon them, croſſing, and ſuch like: Heb. 6. 2, 3. And whereas S. Paul giveth parents a charge to bring up their children in the inſtruction of God, Epheſ. 6. 4. they bid them bring their children to be annointed, croſſed, and chriſmated, as they call it, and they have done enough.

1. In the Greeke Church they uſed Chriſme of ancient time, but without any ſuch ceremonies. Concil. Laodicen. c. 58. Oportet baptizatos poſt baptiſmum ſacratiſſimum chryſma percipere, &c. They which are baptized muſt after their baptiſme receive holy Chriſme, and ſo bee made partakers of heaven, &c.

Lib. de Baptiſ.

2. Tertullian maketh mention of Chriſme and impoſition of hands, but of no ſuch toyes.

3. Wittemberg, confeſſ. cap. 20. It is not to bee doubted, but that the ceremonies of Moſes, whereof one part is the externall annointing, doe pertaine to the rudiments of the world, &c. much more doe the other toyes belong to ſuch rudiments.

4. Againſt theſe ridiculous ceremonies we have the judgement and determination of the Councell of Mentz, cap. 18. Sacramentum confirmationis ab initio ſola manuum impoſitione exhibitum: nam cum initio ſpiritus ſanctus, ad evidentiorem recentis adhuc fidei confirmationem, ſigno viſibili influeret confirmatis, externa unctione tum opus non erat: The Sacrament of Confirmation in the beginning was exhibited only with laying on of hands; for whereas the holy ſpirit then for the more evident confirmation of faith, did appeare by evident ſignes in thoſe that were confirmed, there was no need then of outward annointing, &c. At the firſt, the Apoſtles uſed nothing but impoſition of hands: all the reſt of the ceremonies came in ſince by men. And this decree maketh directly againſt the Jeſuite, who will needs beare us in hand, that the Apoſtles uſed oyle and Chriſme together, with impoſition of hands: which is but his braine-ſick conjecture, without any ground.

This truth hath that holy Martyr of God Iohn Huſſe ſealed with his blood: Levis & brevis confirmatio epiſcoporum cum ritibus ſolennizata, eſt à diabolo introducta: The light and briefe confirmation of Biſhops ſolemnized, with the ſuperſtitious rites thereof, ſeemeth to have beene brought in by the devill. Quantum ad oleum, quo epiſcopi ungunt pueros, & peplum lineum, quod complexum eſt capiti, videtur, quod ſit ritus levis: And as for the oyle, wherewith the Biſhops annoint boyes, and the linnen vaile bound to their head, it ſeemeth to bee a ridiculous faſhion, &c. For thus ſaying, and boldly uttering his conſcience, this good man was condemned in the Councell of Conſtance, ſeſſ. 15.

The

The ſecond Queſtion, of Orders.

THe ſeverall parts of this queſtion, are theſe: Firſt, whether it be a Sacrament. Secondly, of the materiall part therof. Thirdly, of the efficacy and vertue thereof. Fourthly, of the ceremonies.

The firſt part, whether the receiving of Orders be a Sacrament.

The Papiſts.

THat holy Orders are a Sacrament rightly and properly ſo called, it was decreed in the Tridentine Councell, Seſſ. 23. can. 3. And that not only the three higher degrees, of Prieſthood, Deaconſhip, Sub-deaconſhip, but the foure inferiour orders, of Exorciſta, Acoluthi, Lectores, Oſtiarii, doe belong unto the ſame Sacrament of orders, and are Sacraments as well as the other: Bellarm. cap. 8. lib. de Sacram. ordinis. 107. Error.

Argum. 1 Timoth. 4. 14. Deſpiſe not that gift which was given thee through prophecy, with the laying on of hands. Holy orders give grace by an externall ceremony and worke: Ergo, it is a Sacrament, Rhemiſt. in hunc locum. 1 Timoth. 4. 14.

Anſw. 1. It cannot be proved out of this place, that impoſition of hands giveth grace: for this was an extraordinary gift which Saint Paul ſpeaketh of, and doth not alwayes follow impoſition of hands. Secondly, this gift was not given by the very ceremony of impoſition of hands, but through prophecy and revelation of the holy Ghoſt: for it was revealed unto the Church by Spirit of propheſie, that Timothie was a choſen veſſell of God: therefore S. Paul ſaith, That worthy thing which is committed unto thee, keepe through the holy Ghoſt. The holy Ghoſt was both the conferrer of that grace, and the preſerver of it. Impoſition then of hands was but an outward ſigne of the preſence of Gods ſpirit upon thoſe that were lawfully ordained: for all upon whom hands were laid, received not the holy Ghoſt, but ſuch onely as were appointed of God: And therefore the Apoſtle chargeth Timothie to lay hands ſuddenly on no man: which caveat was not needfull, if upon whomſoever hee had laid his hands, they ſhould immediately receive the holy Ghoſt. Thirdly, every promiſe of grace annexed to the outward ſigne maketh not a Sacrament, but it muſt be the grace of juſtification, ſuch as is not in Orders. 2 Timoth 1. 14. 1 Timoth. 5. 22.

Bellarmine denieth, that every Sacrament ſerveth to juſtification or remiſſion of ſinnes; and hee giveth an inſtance in the Euchariſt, which was not inſtituted to take away ſinne, but to conſerve an encreaſe the ſpirituall life, Bellar. cap. 2. de ſacram ordinis.

Cont. Firſt, that the Euchariſt was inſtituted to aſſure us of remiſſion of ſinne, it is evident by the Scriptures; for it is a ſhewing forth of the Lords death: but to what end elſe died Chriſt, but for remiſſion of ſins? Againe, it repreſenteth unto us the blood of Chriſt, which (ſaith Chriſt in the inſtitution of this Sacrament) is ſhed for many for remiſſion of ſins. Secondly, it ſerveth alſo to conſerve our ſpirituall life, which cannot be without aſſurance of forgiveneſſe of ſinnes: for 1. the life of the ſoule is faith, The juſt ſhall live by faith, and our faith is in the blood of Chriſt. And 2. what elſe is the life of the ſoule but the happineſſe thereof? But our happineſſe is this, to have our ſins forgiven, Bleſſed are they whoſe iniquities are forgiven. 1 Cor. 11. 26. Matth. 26 28. Rom. 1. 17. Rom. 3. 25. Pſal. 32. 1.

Argum. 2. Deaconſhip is a Sacrament, becauſe it is given by impoſition of hands: Bellarm. cap. 6. Sub-deaconſhip likewiſe is a Sacrament, becauſe it is not re-iterable; and ſo of the reſt of the inferiour orders, cap. 7. 8.

Anſw. 1. The Jeſuits reaſon ſtandeth thus: Whatſoever is miniſtred by laying on of hands is a Sacrament, but Deaconſhip is ſo miniſtred: Ergo, it followeth then that the little children, upon whom Chriſt laid his hands and bleſſed them, received a Sacrament. What Sacrament was it, I pray you? not Confirmation, for they were not yet baptized: and Orders, I hope, they will not ſay, they received: Ananias laid his hands upon Paul, and hee received his ſight. By the Jeſuits reaſon then, the giving of ſight, becauſe it is miniſtred with laying on of hands, ſhall be a Sacrament: for S. Paul neither receiveth Orders from Ananias, ſeeing he was immediately called from Chriſt; nor yet was confirmed, not being yet baptized. Mark. 10. 16. Act. 9. 17.

Secondly, he hath reaſoned as well for the reſt of the Orders: Whatſoever is not re-iterable (ſaith he) is a Sacrament: but the creation of the word, the drowning of the ſame by water, are works not iterable, or to be done againe: Ergo, they ſhould be Sacraments by the Jeſuits reaſon. 2. Orders may be iterated: Toletan. 4, 27, Clericus injuſte depoſitus, ſi in Synodo innocens reperiatur, non poteſt eſſe quod fuerat, niſi gradus amiſſos recipiat de manu Epiſcopi: A Clerke depoſed, if he be cleered in the Synode, cannot bee reſtored to his former ſtate, unleſſe hee doe receive the degree hee loſt, at the hands of the Biſhop.

Our Papizing countrimen of Doway do thus alſo reaſon for the Sacrament of Orders: the Prieſts of the law were conſecrated by a peculiar Sacrament, by certaine determinate externall ceremonies and rites, ſignifying grace given them by God, for the due performing of their function: as their waſhing ſignified their purity, their precious garments their dignity. Annot. in Levit. c. 8. verſ. 6.

Contra. 1. If every ceremony of the law ſignifying a ſpirituall grace, were a Sacrament in the old teſtament: there ſhould be as many Sacraments as ceremonies: not ſo few as an hundred. 2. Neither is it true that any ſuch grace was given in the conſecration of the Prieſthood: what grace, I pray you, had Ophni and Phinehes, that were graceleſſe men, and unworthy Prieſts? 3. And if they ſignified grace given, then they conferred grace, which is decreed by them a little after, where they ſay, that the Sacrament of orders then did only ſignifie grace, not conferre it, p. 278. but to ſignifie grace given and conferred, and to conferre grace, doe not much differ: for if grace be not conferred, it cannot be ſignified to be conferred.

The Proteſtants.

YOur ſeven Popiſh orders we doe not at all receive into the Church, much leſſe can we abide that they ſhould be Sacraments: The lawfull ordaining of Paſtors, Teachers, and Deacons, we doe acknowledge; but no ſacrificing Prieſthood, nor no miniſtring Deaconſhip at the Altar: ſuch orders as we have notwithſtanding we doe not take to be Sacraments, properly ſo called, much leſſe yours, that are utterly to be aboliſhed.

Argum. 1. Sacraments muſt have their inſtitution from Chriſt; ſo have not your orders: for Chriſt inſtituted onely Apoſtles and Diſciples: Presbyters and Deacons were founded by the Apoſtles: who notwithſtanding had no commiſſion to conſtitute new Sacraments. As for the other five orders, of Subdeacons, Readers, Acoluthi, Exorciſts, doore-keepers, they are neither read in Scripture, nor ordained of the Apoſtles, nor heard of for many yeeres after.

Our Saviour, when he ordained Apoſtles, uſed no impoſition of hands, or did annoint them: therefore Orders given by impoſition of hands, is no Sacrament, becauſe it hath no inſtitution from Chriſt. We deny not but that the miniſtery of the word is Chriſts ordinance, but that it is no Sacrament, becauſe they can ſhew no inſtitution of the outward ſigne from Chriſt: Kemnitii argum.

Bellar. 1. Chriſt might make Apoſtles without impoſition of hands, becauſe hee was not tied to the Sacraments: 2. And there is nothing to the contrary, but that hee might alſo uſe impoſition of hands: 3. Further, ſeeing that in Orders grace is tyed to the outward ſigne of impoſition of hands, it muſt needs bee of God, for no man hath power to annex grace to the ſigne but God: and that 2 Tim. 1.6. grace is tied to impoſition of hands, S. Paul teſtifieth, Stirre up the grace of God which is in thee by the putting on of my hands, Bellar. cap. 2.

Contra. Firſt, we doe not ſpeake of Chriſts power, that he can worke without Sacraments, but of his will in ordaining of a Sacrament: for there is no Sacrament of the new Teſtament, which is not grounded upon his precept and example: but neither can bee ſhewed for Orders by impoſition. Secondly, the inſtitution of a Sacrament muſt be expreſſed in Scripture, not implyed or conjecturally collected. Thirdly, in none of the Sacraments grace is annexed to the ſigne, much leſſe in orders, which is no Sacrament: neither hath S. Paul any ſuch meaning, as I have ſhewed before: Reſponſ. ad argum. 1. Fourthly, an ordinance of the miniſtery by commandement from Chriſt, we grant, but no inſtitution of a Sacrament.

Argum. 2. Secondly, your Sacrament hath neither outward element, nor word of inſtitution: if you ſay, laying on of hands is the externall ſigne: wee anſwer, that the viſible ſigne in a Sacrament muſt not onely bee an externall action, but a materiall element, as water in Baptiſme, and bread and wine in the Lords Supper. The forme (you ſay) is in theſe words pronounced by the Biſhop, Accipite poteſtatem offerendi ſacrificium, Receive yee power to offer ſacrifice: Bellar. cap. 9. Wee anſwer againe, that this ſacrificing office hath no foundation in Scripture: The Miniſters of the Goſpell are called diſpenſers of Gods myſteries, namely, of the word and Sacraments. Miniſters for Chriſt, not ſacrifi-
1 Cor. 4.1. cers of Chriſt: wherefore neither have ye any word of inſtituion; and conſequently no Sacrament.

And I pray you tell me, if you will make every one of your orders a Sacrament; then muſt you needs have as many Sacraments as there are orders: and ſo ſhall you have ſeven Sacraments more than you thought; and ſo fourteene in all: for you doe diſtinguiſh all the orders in office and forme of conſecration one from another: and therefore they cannot all make one Sacrament.

Bellarmine anſwereth: that all theſe make but unum Sacramentum genere, one Sacrament in generall, though they be divers in ſpeciall, cap. 8. Anſwer. By this reaſon, Baptiſme, Orders, Confirmation, ſhall make but one Sacrament, ſeeing they are all of one kind or gender, that is, Sacraments irreiterable. But ſeeing all theſe ſeverall orders doe differ both in matter and forme, it cannot be avoyded, but there muſt be divers Sacraments.

Epiſt. 118. cap. 1. Auguſtine ſaith, Chriſtus Sacramentis numero pauciſſimis—ſocietatem populi colligavit: Chriſt hath joyned together his people with moſt few Sacraments: and then hee nameth Baptiſme, and the Communion: Et ſi quid aliud in Scripturis canonicis commendatur: And if any other bee commended in Scripture: Ergo, there is no Sacrament of Orders, becauſe it is not found in Scripture, as we have ſaid.

ἄνευ θείων γραφῶν. Catech. 4. For the Eaſt Church. 1. Cyril ſaith, Not the leaſt of the divine Sacraments of the faith, muſt be delivered (without the divine Scriptures) but Scripture they have none to make Orders a Sacrament: and Ieremy the late Patriarke of Conſtantinople ſaith, that ſacer ordo—in ipſo Moſe & Aron, &c.
Cenſur. oriental. c. 7. That holy Orders was by the univerſall Lord conſtituted in Moſes and Aaron, &c. How then can it be a Sacrament of the new Teſtament, having beginning in the old?

2. Tertullian maketh mention but of two Sacraments: of the Euchariſt and Baptiſme, lib. 4. cont. Marcion. Orders was then excluded.

3. The reformed Churches alſo admit but two Sacraments, of Baptiſme and the Euchariſt: See before Centur. 2. err. 104. of the number of the Sacraments.

4. Their owne writers are againſt them: the Maſter of Sentences ſpeaking of Presbyters, ſaith, Hic ordo à filiis Aaron ſumpſit initium: This order tooke beginning from the ſonnes of Aaron: Lib. 4. *diſtinct.*24.I. And of Exorciſts, ibid.E. Hic ordo à Salomone videtur deſcendiſſe: This order ſeemeth to have deſcended from Salomon: Ibid.I. Eccleſia ſibi Subdiaconos & Acolythos conſtituit: The Church hath ordained Subdeacons and Acolythes; De his ſolis præceptum Apoſtoli habemus: of theſe onely we have the precept of the Apoſtles: ſpeaking of Deacons and Presbyters. If ſome of theſe were inſtituted before Chriſt, ſome of them ſince Chriſt and the Apoſtles, by the Church; how can they be Sacraments of the Goſpell, which muſt be inſtituted onely by Chriſt? Durandus, Cajetanus, two learned Papiſts, deny the inferiour orders of Subdeacons and under, to be Sacraments.

This doctrine is ſealed: Laurence Maxwell perſecuted, becauſe he denied that the order of Prieſthood is a Sacrament: *Fox.p.*1041.*col.*2.

Of the Materiall Part, of Orders, which is the impoſition of hands.

The Papiſts.

THis matter is chiefly controverted among the Papiſts themſelves: Some of them hold, that the impoſition of hands is not an eſſentiall part of orders, but only accidentall; as Dominicus à Soto, diſtinct. 24. qu. 1.*artic.*4. Others affirme it to be eſſentiall: *Petrus à Soto.ſect.*5.*de ordin. Hoſius, confeſſ.Polonic.c.*50. whereunto Bellarmine ſubſcribeth, *cap.*9. 108. Error.

Argum. In the Scripture every where, when any are ordained,[a] mention is made of the impoſition of hands, and in other places: Ergo, it is an eſſentiall part of this Sacrament: Bellarm.ibid. [a] Act.6.6.13.3. 1 Tim.4.14.

Anſw. Firſt, in the election of Matthias to be one of the twelve, there was no impoſition of hands uſed, [b] therefore not every where. Neither can it bee anſwered, that this ceremonie was omitted, becauſe Matthias was extraordinarily called by the direction of the Spirit, for [c] Paul and Barnabas were called of the Spirit, yet they impoſe hands upon them. Secondly, theſe places alleaged, onely prove it to be requiſite as a decent ceremony, not neceſſary, as an eſſentiall part, without the which there could be no ordination. [b] Act.1.26. [c] Act.13.2.

The Proteſtants.

THat impoſition of hands is a comely and decent ceremony to be uſed of the Church in ordaining of Miniſters we willingly grant, and our Church doth retaine it: but we take it not to be of the eſſence of orders, as that without it, upon no occaſion, there could be any ordination.

Argum. Chriſt, when he inſtituted his Apoſtles, breathed upon them, he laid not on his hands: the Apoſtles caſt lots for Matthias, no impoſition of hands is mentioned: Ergo, it is not an eſſentiall part of orders, for then it could not be omitted.

1. What here was the judgement of the Eaſterne Churches, appeareth in the Florentine Councell, to the decrees whereof, they would make us beleeve, that the Grecians, Jacobines and Armenians, being preſent by their Agents and Ambaſſadors, conſented: there in the decree of the ſeven Sacraments, in the ſixth Sacrament of order, it is thus reſolved: That is the matter per cujus traditionem confertur ordo: by the delivering whereof order is conferred, as the order of Prieſthood, by the delivering of the Chalice with wine, and of the paten with bread, &c. here is no mention made of the impoſition of hands. Bellarmines anſwer here is but ſimple, that the Councell onely expreſſeth that materiall part which was ſubſiſtant, (not tranſeant) as water in Baptiſme; or it may be the Armenians erred onely in that point, &c. Contra, In the deſcription of ſome other of their Sacraments, they doe not make the materiall part any ſubſiſting, as Confeſſion in penance, is a thing tranſeant and paſſing: and for his other conjecture, fortaſſis, it may be, ſaith hee, wee may anſwer him with another fortaſſis, it may bee that they doubted not of that point, for neither the one, nor the other is expreſſed: it is a ſimple ſhift, to put off the manifeſt decree of a Councell, with a fortaſſis, it may be. Bellar.lib.1.de ſacram.ordin. c.10.ſect.cur autem.

2. In the Æthiopick Church, the Abuna or Patriarke, when he giveth orders, firſt examineth thoſe which are to be ordained, and cauſeth them to reade on a Booke, and if they can reade, and are capable, then he impoſeth his hands, &c. It ſeemeth then that the capability and ſufficiency of their Clerkes, is taken rather to be the materiall part of orders among them, the other is added as an externall rite and ceremony. Alvares c.34.

3. Confeſſion of Bohemia, *chap.*14. In the adminiſtration of which things, they may uſe ſome ſeemely and indifferent ceremonies, that is, which are no way neceſſary, ſuch as are to lay on hands, or to reach out the right hand, or elſe they may omit them. The ſame is the confeſſion of Wittemberg. artic.35. If impoſition of hands be then an indifferent ceremony, it is not the materiall part, which is alwayes neceſſary. Harm.ſect.12. p.356. Harm.ſect.17. p.537.

*Decret.Greg.lib.*1.*tit.*16.*c.1.& c.*3.*Greg.*9. They determine, that orders miniſtred ſine impoſitione manuum, without inpoſition of hands, ſhould not be iterated: Ergo, orders may bee miniſtred without it.

The

The third part, of the efficacie which they aſcribe to this Sacrament.

The Papiſts.

169. Error. THis Sacrament of orders, as they call it, giveth a double grace. Firſt, it giveth thoſe that are ordained, ability and power to execute their office: which is to conſecrate and offer up the body and blood of Chriſt; wherein chiefly the Prieſthood conſiſteth, and not in preaching the word: for they may be Prieſts, though they preach not, Concil. Trident. ſeſſ. 23. can. 1. By holy Orders then the holy Ghoſt is actually beſtowed, when thoſe words are pronounced, Accipite ſpiritum ſanctum. Receive yee the holy Ghoſt, Canon. 4.

The Proteſtants.

FIrſt the Goſpell alloweth no externall ſacrificing Prieſthood, but a ſpirituall only, whereby every Chriſtian is made a King and Prieſt to offer ſpirituall ſacrifices of praiſe and thankſgiving unto God. And the only eſſentiall part of the office of Miniſters under the Goſpell, is, to be able diſpenſers of the myſteries of the word and Sacraments. Apoc. 1. 6. 1 Cor. 4. 1. 2 Cor. 3. 6.

So Auguſtine alſo ſaith: Quicunque aut Epiſcopus aut Presbyter, aut etiam laicus frequenter de Deo loquitur, & quomodo ad vitam æternam perveniatur annunciat, meritò Angelus Dei dicitur: Whoſoever Biſhop or Presbyter, or a lay man doth ſpeak freely of God, and preacheth the way to eternall life, is an Angell of God. This then is the onely principall office of true Paſtors, to teach the way to the kingdome of God. In Apocal. hom. 2.

Secondly, it is alſo a great untruth, that the holy Ghoſt is ſtraightway given to all thoſe, upon whomſoever hands are laid, and they admitted to Orders: For what need then that triall and examination, which ought to be had of thoſe which are to be ordained, whereof S. Paul ſpeaketh, if the only laying on of hands can make able Miniſters? 1 Timoth. 3. 22.

Noſtri ſacerdotes, ſaith one, ſuper multos quotidie nomen Domini & verba benedictionis imponunt, ſed in paucis effectus eſt: Our Prieſts doe lay the word of bleſſing upon many, calling upon the name of God, but in few followeth any effect of that bleſſing, &c. And he giveth the reaſon in another place, Dei eſt effectum tribuere benedictionis: It belongeth unto God, to give effect to Prieſtly bleſſing: Ergo, it is not by only act and uſing of the ceremony beſtowed. Ex veter. teſt. qu. 109. inter opera Auguſt.

Aquiſgranenſ. cap. 13. Præconis officium ſuſcipit, quiſquis ad ſacerdotium accedit: He taketh upon him the office of a Preacher, that commeth to the Prieſthood.

Synod. Colonienſ. part. 4. cap. 1. Officium Parochorum in duobus potiſſimum ſitum eſt, diſſeminatione verbi, & adminiſtratione ſacramentorum: The office of Pariſh Prieſts, conſiſteth eſpecially in two things: in ſowing of the word, and adminiſtration of the Sacraments.

Ibid. part. 6. Verbi miniſterium ſanctiſſim. Apoſtolus cæteris omnibus præfert, &c. The moſt holy Apoſtle preferreth the word before all other things, ſaying to the Corinthians, that Chriſt ſent him to preach, not to baptize, &c. The office then of Miniſters of the Goſpell chiefly ſtandeth in preaching.

And concerning the judgement of other Churches: that the preaching of the Goſpell is the principall part of the Miniſteriall function: 1. Ieremy the Patriarke ſaith: Mihi prædicandi neceſſitas incumbit, &c. A neceſſity of preaching is laid upon me, and woe is unto me, if I preach not the Goſpell, &c. Which is agreeable to that concluſion of the ſeventh Synode, therein following Dyoniſius: Subſtantia ſacerdotii vera ſcripturarum divinarum diſciplina: The ſubſtance of the Prieſthood is the true knowledge or diſcipline of the divine Scriptures, &c. cited diſtinct. 38. c. 6. Cenſur. Oriental. c. 20.

2. What Auguſtines judgement is herein, is ſeene before: the Africane and Æthiopike Church, have great ſtore of Preachers: Concionatores paſſim eſſe, qui Chriſti fidem populo prædicant: They have Preachers every where which preach the faith of Chriſt unto the people, &c. wherein they are farre to be preferred before the rude Muſcovites, that have no Preachers in their Churches: nay Concionari obſtinatiſſime prohibent: They obſtinatly forbid any to preach, ſaying, that it breedeth ſects and hereſies. And as their Prieſts are ignorant for knowledge, ſo are they rude for manners: they are many times ſo drunke, that they are faine to ſtay and hold them up, till they execute their office, as in marrying, or ſuch like. Damianus à Goes Indor. legat. Guagnin.

3. Our reformed Churches doe with a generall conſent, place the chiefeſt part of the Miniſtery in preaching the word. Confeſſion of Wittemberg, artic. 20. It is evident, that unleſſe a Prieſt bee ordained in the Church to the Miniſtery of teaching, hee cannot rightly take unto him the name of a Prieſt, nor the name of a Biſhop, &c. Confeſſion of Helvetia former artic. 19. The chiefe duty of this function is to preach repentance and remiſſion of ſins through Chriſt, without ceaſing to pray for the people, &c. And the ſame is the judgement of the reſt. And that orders do not conferre grace upon him that is ordained, their decrees alſo teſtifie: Cauſ.2. qu.7.c.29. Non omnes Epiſcopi, Epiſcopi: all Biſhops are not Biſhops. *Ibid.c.32. The Proteſtants.

FIrſt, the practice of the Popiſh Church is contrary to their owne rules: for I would have them tell me, whether they tooke not the Prieſthood and annointing from Iohn Huſſe, when with a paire of ſheares they clipped off the skin of his head moſt cruelly, as they were buſie in degrading of him, in the Councell of Conſtance: Or when they had groſſely abuſed that reverend Father Biſhop Cranmer, Fox pag.623. and unmannerly behaved themſelves in his degradation, and clapt him in a poore beggerly threadbare Lay-mans gowne; did they not thinke, that they had diſpoiled him of his Prieſthood? What is now become, maſters, of your indeleble character? Or is it your meaning, that it may bee clipped or ſcraped off onely, but not waſht off, or lightly rubbed away? your owne cruell deeds doe overthrow your Popiſh principles.

1. Auguſtine is againſt you: Ut conſtitueretur in eccleſia, ne quiſquam poſt criminis alicujus pœnitentiam clericatum accipiat, ad clericatum redeat, aut in clericatu maneat, &c. Epiſtol.50. That it is a conſtitution of the Church, that no man after publike penance done for ſome notorious crime, ſhould be either made a Clerke, or returne to his Clerkſhip or Prieſthood, or bee ſuffered to continue therein: —not the deſpaire of pardon, but the rigour of diſcipline hath cauſed it, &c. If his Prieſthood were neither reſtored to him, nor he ſuffered to remaine therein, then ſurely he had loſt his Prieſthood.

2. We have here evident teſtimony of both lawes: Cod.lib.1.tit.6.leg.12.Arcad.Curialis clericans: A Courtier taking Clergy upon him, is brought backe to his former eſtate. Ibid.leg.33.authentic. A ſervant without his maſters knowledge taking orders, within a yeare may be challenged, and muſt returne to ſerve his maſter.

3. Decret.diſtinct.54.c.7. A ſervant promoted to the Clergy without his maſters conſent, amittat gradum, let him loſe his degree. Diſt.50.c.12. Martin. Lapſus poſt ordinationem nullum gradum ſacerdotii adipiſci poteſt: He that is fallen after his ordination, can have no degree of the Prieſthood. Cauſ.1.qu.1.c.60.Ordinatus & non baptizatus, &c. He that is ordained and not baptized, muſt be ordained againe, Cauſ.11.qu.3.c.10. Nicholaus: Epiſcopi depoſiti communicent ut laici: Biſhops depoſed muſt communicate as lay men. What now is become of the indeleble character, if Clergy may bee loſt, and Clerkes become lay men againe?

4. Confeſſion of Wittemberg, chap.20. Except a Prieſt be ordained to the miniſtery of teaching, he can never rightly take unto him the name of a Prieſt, &c. Harm.p 373. What is then become of the ſuppoſed indeleble character in popiſh Prieſts, that are not ordained to that end, and ſo are no Prieſts at all? This tricke and device of the indeleble character, the new Pope-Chriſtians may bee thought to have borrowed from the Pagan Romans their predeceſſors: for among them this privilege the Augur had, that whatſoever he had committed, non abrogat ſacerdotium quamdiu vivit: he did not abrogate his Prieſthood as long as he lived. Plutarc.queſt. Roman qu 99.

The fourth part, of the Miniſter of Orders.

The Papiſts.

THey hold that they are neither Prieſts nor Deacons, which are not ordained of Biſhops, Bellarm. de Sacram. Ordinis, cap.11. hee meaneth Popiſh Biſhops, ſuch as receive their conſecration 111. Error.

and other Epiſcopals from Rome: and ſuch Biſhops he ſaith only are Miniſters and conferrers of Orders. Arguments he uſeth none, neither alleageth any teſtimonies at large, but referreth us to the Controverſie of the Sacraments in generall: but he forgetteth himſelfe; for in that place there is no ſuch thing handled: but he onely proveth this propoſition, that verus Miniſter ſacramentorum, &c. that the true Miniſter of the Sacraments is not every man, but hee onely that is lawfully ordained in the Church, lib.1.de Sacram.c.24. which propoſition we willingly grant.

The Proteſtants.

IN this aſſertion of the Papiſts, I note three errors, as it now followeth to be ſhewed. Firſt, whereas Bellarmine affirmeth, that they are no Miniſters or Presbyters which are not ordained by Popiſh Biſhops: we doubt not to avouch the contrary, that they are no true Presbyters that receive ordination from ſuch: for their Biſhops are undoubtedly the Miniſters and officers of Antichriſt: which was the very poſition maintained by Iohn Huſſe: Sunt procuratores & diſcipuli Antichriſti: Papa, Cardinales, Patriarcha, Archiepiſcopi, Epiſcopi, &c. The Pope, Cardinals, Patriarchs, Archbiſhops, Biſhops, are the proctors and diſciples of Antichriſt. One of their owne writers, ſpeaking of their Biſhops, ſaith, they are not Epiſcopi, but apoſcopi: not over-ſeers, but by-ſeers: Eſpenc.præfat.in 2.ad Timoth. Being then the officers of Antichriſt, they cannot create or ordaine Miniſters for Chriſt.

Secondly, neither is it true, that there are no Miniſter but by the ordinations of Biſhops: for this were to condemne all thoſe reformed Churches, of Helvetia, Belgia, Geneva, with others, that have not received this forme of eccleſiaſticall government. Undoubtedly, where godly Biſhops are, there no ordination is to bee had without them, as in the Church of England: but every Church having not the ſame office, but others equivalent or correſpondent thereunto, hath full authority in it ſelfe, to ordaine Miniſters in ſuch order and manner, as the Church hath received, agreeable to the word of God: ſo that we doubt not but that all the reformed Churches profeſſing the Goſpell, have true and lawfull Miniſters, though they obſerve not all the ſame manner in the election and ordaining of them. And this is the generall conſent of the Churches themſelves:

Harm. ſect. 11. Helvetic. confeſſ. latter. Let the Miniſters of the Church bee called and choſen, by a lawfull and eccleſiaſticall vocation or election: that is to ſay, let them bee religiouſly choſen of the Church, or of thoſe which thereunto are appointed of the Church, and that in due order.

Helvetic. confeſſ. prior. artic. 16. They muſt bee choſen either by the divine ſentence of God, or by the certaine and adviſed ſuffrage of the Church, or by their ſentence, to whom the Church hath aſſigned this charge.

Confeſſ. Bohem. c. 9. They muſt be proved and tried by examination, and ſo afterward prayer and faſting being made, they may be confirmed or approved by the Elders, by laying on of hands.

Confeſſ. Gallic. artic. 31. Every one ought to be admitted thereunto by a lawfull election, ſo neare as may be; and as long as the Lord giveth leave, &c. Neverthelesſe, howſoever it be, we beleeve, that this rule is alwayes to be followed, that all Paſtors and Elders ſhould have a teſtimony of their calling.

Confeſſ. Anglican. We ſay, that the Miniſter ought lawfully, duly and orderly to bee preferred to that office of the Church of God.

Confeſſ. Belgic. We beleeve, that the Miniſters, Seniors, Deacons, ought to bee called to thoſe their functions, by the lawfull election of the Church: to be advanced to thoſe roomes, earneſt prayer being made unto God, and after the order and manner, which is ſet downe unto us in the word of God.

Confeſſ. Scotic. p. 22. We affirme lawfull Miniſters to be only they, that are appointed to the Preaching of the word, &c. they being men lawfully choſen thereto by ſome Church.

This then is the judgement of the reformed Churches, that every Church is not tied to the ſame manner of ordination of Miniſters, ſo that it be agreeable to the word of God: but according to this rule every Church may make choice of that forme and order which is moſt agreeable to their ſtate: ſo that, where the calling of Biſhops is received, by them Miniſters muſt enter; where there are none, the calling of the Church muſt be followed: Our arguments and reaſons are theſe:

Act.13.3. Firſt, out of the Scripture, Act. 13. 3. certaine Prophets and teachers at Antioch lay hands upon Paul and Barnabas; the Rhemiſts gather hereupon, That they were ordered, admitted and conſecrated by them: Annot. in hunc locum: (which we ſay not, but they were only ſent out to the execution of their office, being before choſen of the ſpirit) but hence it followeth, that as at Antioch, there being no other Apoſtles, but onely Prophets and teachers, to lay hands upon Paul, the reſt did it: ſo in thoſe Churches where there are no Biſhops, the right of ordaining Miniſters may bee executed by others lawfully appointed of the Church.

Argum. 2. If it were not ſo, theſe inconveniences would enſue: firſt, that all thoſe reformed Churches ſhould have no true Miniſters, being without Epiſcopall ordination. Secondly, that they muſt either be denied to be Churches, or elſe a true Church may be without the right power of ordination, which in no wiſe is to be granted. Thirdly, that thoſe excellent men, Luther, Melanct. Calvin, with others, extraordinarily raiſed up of God, for the propagation of the Goſpell, ſhould not have been true Miniſters, becauſe they entred not by that ordination.

Argum. 3. That every Church is left to it owne liberty herein, their owne Canons teſtifie: Diſtinct. 12. Mihi placet, ut ſive in Romana Eccleſia, &c. It liketh me well, that whether in the Roman, or French, or in any other Church, you find any thing which may better pleaſe almighty God, you make choyce of it. Ibid. c. 13. Auguſtin. Nec eſt ulla diſciplina melior: Neither is there any better diſcipline, than for a man ſo to doe, ut viderit agere eccleſiam, as hee ſeeth the Church to doe, to the which he commeth.

Thirdly, whereas Bellarmine ſeemeth to aſcribe ordination wholly to the Biſhop, he therein is contrary to his fellow Papiſts: as the Rhemiſts give this note, upon that place, 1 Timoth. 4. 14. By the impoſition of the hands of the Prieſthood, as they tranſlate it, the practice of the Church giveth us the ſenſe of this place, which the ancient Councell of Carthage doth thus ſet downe: When a Prieſt taketh orders, the Biſhop bleſſing him, and holding his hand upon his head, let all the Prieſts preſent lay alſo their hands on his head by the Biſhops hands, &c. Concil. Carthag. 4. c. 3. This interpretation is received by Ioann. Gropperus in Iſagoge, and allowed by Eſpencæus upon this place. 1 Timoth 4 14.

The ſame was the practice 1. of the Greeke Church, as many both Biſhops and Presbyters aſſembled together at the election of Origen at Cæſarea, as Euſebius writeth. Lib 6. c. 10.

2. The Africane Church aſſembled in the fourth Councell of Carthage, c. 22. thus decreed: Epiſcopus ſine concilio Clericorum Clericum non ordinet: A Biſhop muſt not ordaine a Clerke without an aſſembly and councell of the Clergy. At this day the practice of the Æthiopick Church is ſomewhat otherwiſe: for none hath power to conferre orders, no not the Biſhops, but the Patriarke only, called Abuna, as Zago Zabo reporteth: yet he hath alwayes twelve eccleſiaſticall perſons his aſſiſtants, with whom he conſulteth touching eccleſiaſticall affaires. Damianus a Goes. Titleman de fide & morib. Æthiop.

3. See the conſent of the reformed Churches before.

4. Their decrees doe further thus teſtifie: Diſtinct. 67. c. 1. Alii ſacerdotes aſſenſum præbeant: Let other Prieſts beſide the Biſhop give their conſent. Cauſ. 12. qu. 2. c. 38. Vrban. Ordinationes factæ ſine communi conſenſu Clericorum irritæ: Ordinations made without the common conſent of the Clerkes, are void, &c. This alſo is agreeable to the practice of the Church of England, which requireth all the Presbyters preſent to lay on their hands together with the Biſhop upon his head, that is to bee ordained.

Againe, Decret. Greg. lib. 1. tit. 13. c. 1. Alexand 3. Ordines minores à non Epiſcopis conferuntur: The leſſe orders (that is, till the Subdeaconſhip) are conferred by them that are no Biſhops. Ibid. tit. 14. c. 11. Innocent. 3. Abbas ſi eſt presbyter conferre poteſt ordinem clericalem. An Abbot in his Monaſtery, if he be a Presbyter, may give orders. Thus we ſee, that by their owne law, there are other Miniſters of orders beſide Biſhops.

Now becauſe I have entred to make mention of the calling of Biſhops (and there being two chiefe adverſaries to this dignity in our Church; the Papiſts that refuſe it as hereticall; the Schiſmatikes that condemne it as Antichriſtian) before I leave this place, I will briefly deliver this honourable calling, from both their ſlanders and accuſations.

That the calling of Biſhops as it is received in the Church of England, is not Antichriſtian.

IN the office and calling of Biſhops, ſomewhat is divine; ſome things are humane; and in Popiſh Biſhops there is ſomewhat Antichriſtian: theſe three points, I purpoſe by Gods grace, briefly to declare in order. Firſt then, that it is a divine ordinance, that among the Miniſters of the Church, there ſhould bee a ſuperiority, and that one ſhould bee appointed among the reſt, to whom chiefly though not ſolely, the impoſition of hands, and adminiſtration of diſcipline did appertaine: thus I truſt to make it evident. Firſt, the Scripture evidently ſheweth, that even among the Apoſtles themſelves there was a certaine order obſerved: as Iames, Peter, Iohn, were counted as the chiefe, and as the pillars among the reſt: as Act. 15. the aſſembly of Apoſtles and Elders was moderated by Iames and Peter. And to this purpoſe ſpeaketh Cyprian. de ſimplic. Cler. The ſame doubtleſſe were the reſt of the Diſciples, that Peter was, having an equall fellowſhip with him, both in honour, and power: but the beginning thereof proceedeth from unity, to ſignifie to us, that there is but one Church. Againe, who doubteth but that the twelve Apoſtles were in office and calling ſuperiour to the 70. Diſciples, which were alſo ſent forth to preach, for elſe what needed another to be choſen in Iudas roome, and namely Matthias, ſuppoſed by the ancient writers to have beene one of the ſeventy, if the Apoſtles office had not beene greater? If there had beene an equality, a ſupply had not beene neceſſary: neither had it beene requiſite or fit to remove Matthias from his Diſcipleſhip to an office of the ſame equality. Galath 2. 10. Luke 10. 1.

Beſide, the ſeven Epiſtles written to the ſeven Churches of Aſia, are directed to the Angels, which are the chiefe paſtors of the Churches, who are in the name of the whole Church blamed and commended, as in whoſe hands the Eccleſiaſticall diſcipline chiefly conſiſted. Saint Paul alſo writeth to Timothy, as the chiefe paſtor in Epheſus, to whom chiefly the impoſition of hands appertained, Lay hands ſuddenly on no man: upon the which place, Beza thus noteth, notandum eſt, it is to be noted out of this place, that Timothy was in the Epheſine Presbytery or Miniſtery, προεστῶτα, the Preſident, or chiefe Paſtor: And to omit here the teſtimony of the Fathers, who all with one conſent affirme Timothy to have beene Biſhop of Epheſus, the ſame is affirmed by the reformed Church of Bohemia, in their confeſſion, Harm. ſect. 11. In like ſort Paul writeth to Timothy a Ruler and a Biſhop. Revel. 2. 3. 1 Tim. 5. 22.

2. Secondly,

Secondly, concerning the difference and ſuperiority of Biſhops, wee have plentifull evidence from the ancient Church: Can. Apoſtol. 13. Epiſcopus, &c. The Biſhop muſt not leave Propriam Parochiam, his proper Church or pariſh; ſo then was his Dioceſſe called: Carthag. 4. can. 35. Epiſcopus, &c. The Biſhop muſt ſit higheſt in the aſſembly of the Presbyters: Cyprian. lib. 4. epiſtol. 9. Chriſtus dicit ad Apoſtolos, &c. Chriſt ſaith to his Apoſtles, and conſequently to all governours, prapoſitos, which ſucceed the Apoſtles vicaria ordinatione, as their Vicars or deputies by ordination: Hieron. ad Ruſticum: Singuli eccleſiarum Epiſcopi, &c. In every Church but one or a ſingle Biſhop, one arch-presbyter, one arch-deacon, &c. as in a ſhip but one governour, in an houſe one maſter, in an army one Captaine. Ambroſe in 1 Timoth. 3. after a Biſhop hee ſetteth the ordination of a Deacon, and why? becauſe there is but one ordination of a Biſhop and a Presbyter, for each of them is a Prieſt: Epiſcopus tamen inter Presbyteros primus: But a Biſhop is the firſt or chiefe among the Presbyters. But the teſtimonies of the fathers concerning the antiquitie of Biſhops is infinite: who liſteth to ſee further, I referre him to the learned treatiſe of a reverend writer of our Church, written of the perpetuall government of Chriſts Church.

B. Bilſon c 13. p. 263. & deinceps.

3. Thirdly, let us ſee the conſent of the reformed Churches, and the writers thereof. M. Calvin epiſtol. 87. written to the Lord Protector of England, Epiſcopi & parochi, &c. Let the Biſhops and the pariſh Miniſters be eſpecially intent, that the Supper of the Lord be not polluted: Epiſtol. 190. To the King of Polonia: Eſſent deinde vel provinciales, &c. If there were provinciall or city Biſhops, which ſhould eſpecially be intent to conſerve order, as nature teacheth, that one ſhould bee choſen out of every College, to whom the chiefe care ſhould belong: and epiſt. 199. Fratres noſtri Epiſcopi, &c. Our brethren the Biſhops of England are detained in priſon: ſo farre was this godly learned man from counting our Biſhops Antichriſtian, that he giveth them the name of brethren. Likewiſe M. Beza, This was eſſentiall in the matter wee have in hand, that by Gods perpetuall ordinance it hath beene, is, and ſhall bee neceſſary, that ſome in the Presbytery, firſt in place and dignity, ſhould moderate and rule every action, with that right which by Gods law is given unto him: in reſponſ. ad tract. de Miniſter. gradib. c. 23. fol. 153. So alſo the reformed Church of Sueveland confeſſeth: Such as have an earneſt care for the flocke of Chriſt, and doe labour faithfully in the word and doctrine, &c. are acknowledged of our Preachers for true Biſhops: ſuch as the Scripture every where ſpeaketh of. Thus it appeareth, that to have ſuperiority among the Miniſters of the Goſpel, that one ſhould be chiefe and above the reſt, is by Scripture, conſent of the ancient and new reformed Churches found to bee divine and Apoſtolicall: all other Churches in the Eaſt and South parts profeſſing Chriſtianity, as of the Grecians, Armenians, Jacobines, Georgians, Æthiopians, have their Biſhop, as ſuperiour to other Presbyters.

Secondly, I affirmed ſomewhat in the calling of Biſhops, to ariſe rather of humane conſtitution, than of divine preſcription: as it appeareth by theſe particulars following.

1. Firſt, that Biſhops were ſubjected to their Primates and Metropolitanes, was an ordinance of the Church: as Hierome teſtifieth lib. de 7. ordinibus; or who elſe is the author: Propter hoc & nuper, &c. For this cauſe the Epiſcopal election of late was referred to the Metropolitane, &c. and the chiefe Prieſts begin not of right but of neceſſity to ſuffer another Prieſt over them.

2. Concil. Aquiſgranenſ. c. 8. It is thus alleaged out of Iſidore, Solam propter authoritatem, &c. Only for authorities ſake to the chiefe Prieſt is reſerved the ordination of Clerkes, &c.

3. In the ſame place, Conſecratio virginum, the conſecration of the virgins is for the ſame cauſe reſerved alſo: but this is now out of uſe in our Church.

4. Of the ſame ſort is confirmation, as Hierome witneſſeth, adverſ. Luciferian. Si hoc loco quaeras, &c. If thou aske in this place, wherefore hee that is baptized receiveth onely the holy Ghoſt by the hands of a Biſhop, know, that this obſervation is rather for the honour of the Prieſthood, than neceſſity of any law.

5. Hierome againe in the ſame place, Inde venit, &c. From thence it commeth, that is, to avoyd ſchiſme, that without the Biſhop bid, neither a Presbyter ~~or Deacon may~~ baptize: but this uſe, as very injurious to the office of Miniſters, is diſcontinued in our Church.

6. The titles of honour given to Biſhops have the ſame beginning, as Auguſtine witneſſeth epiſtol. 19. ad Hieronym. Secundum honorum vocabula, according to the names of honour, which eccleſiaſticall uſe hath ordained, a Biſhops office is greater than a Prieſts.

7. Of the ſame kind are the poſſeſſions and revenues of Biſhops, as Auguſtine ſaith, Vix vigeſima particula, &c. That portion which I had from my parents, is hardly the 20. part in compariſon of the mannors of the Church, which I am held now as Lord to enjoy, epiſt. 5.

1. The diſtinction alſo and diviſion of Dioceſſes is grounded upon the ancient cuſtome of the Church: Decret. part. 2. cauſ. 9. qu. 3. c. 2. Unumquemque Epiſcopum, &c. It behoveth every Biſhop to have power over his owne Dioceſſe, and of the region which is under his city: ex Concil. Antiochen.

9. Certaine cauſes as matrimoniall and teſtamentary have by the favour of Chriſtian Emperours bin reſerved to Biſhops, as Cod. lib. 1. tit. 6. leg. 28. Anthemius thus decreed: That where there is no executor appointed, the Biſhop ſhall diſtribute the goods.

B. Bilſon c. 12. pag. 237.

10. Hierome ſaith, in 1. cap. epiſt. ad Titum, That whereas at the firſt Presbyters with common advice, and equall care guided the Church under the Apoſtles, Paulatim ad unam, &c. The whole care thereof was by little and little derived to one. To this it is farther thus added by a reverent learned man, now a B. of our Church: So at length by cuſtome Presbyters were utterly excluded from all advice and counſell, whereof Ambroſe complaineth, and Biſhops onely intermedled with the regiment of the Church: this manner of ſubjection in Presbyters, and prelation in Biſhops grew onely in continuance of time, and not by any ordinance of Chriſt or his Apoſtles: See more of this matter, Contr. 5. qu. 3. part. 2. of the difference of Miniſters.

Theſe and other ſuch like additions, privileges and encreaſing of the dignity of Biſhops, grounded rather upon cuſtome than any commandement, doe not yet make that function unlawfull or Antichriſtian: To this wee have the conſent of other reformed Churches: Harm. ſect. 11. Confeſſion of Sweveland; Our Preachers have great injurie offered them, in that they are blamed, as though they ſought to bring the authority of eccleſiaſticall Prelates to nothing, whereas they never forbad them, that worldly government, and authority, which they have; but they have often wiſhed, that they would come nearer the Eccleſiaſticall commandements, &c. ſect. 16. confeſſ. Auſpurg. Wee doe not goe about to weaken the authority of eccleſiaſticall power, wee detract nothing from the dignity of Biſhops, we doe not diſturbe the good order of the Church: Againe, ſect. 17. in the confeſſion of Auſpurg. The Churches doe not deſire of the Biſhops, that they would repaire peace and concord with the loſſe of their honour, which yet good Paſtors ought to doe, onely they deſire, that they would remit unjuſt burdens, &c. If the calling then of Biſhops were Antichriſtian, all theſe Churches ſhould bee no leſſe, that allow them.

Thirdly, I will now in the third place ſhew the difference betweene Proteſtant Biſhops, and Popiſh Biſhops, that it may appeare wherein indeed theſe are worthily counted Antichriſtian.

1 Popiſh Biſhops receive their power from the Beaſt, and doe fight under Antichriſts banner: ſo doe not our Biſhops, who expect not any forraine ordination, but are made over-ſeers by the ſpirit of God, directing and governing every true Church, according to the Scriptures. Act.20.28.

2 Popiſh Biſhops are maintainers of corrupt doctrine, and enemies to the faith, contrary to the Scriptures, Tit. 1. 9. S. Pauls Biſhop muſt hold faſt the faithfull word according to doctrine: So are our Biſhops defenders and preachers of the truth.

3 Popiſh Biſhops for the moſt part are unlearned and unpreaching Prelates, and juſtified herein by their owne writers, Rhemiſt. annot. in 1 Tim. v. 17. contrarie to the Scriptures: A Biſhop muſt bee apt to teach. But our Biſhops are Preachers; there is not one at this day in the Church of England, but is both able, and doth Preach: which is the moſt weighty part, and giveth greateſt grace to their paſtorall office: for whom we doe pray, that God would give them grace both in their life and doctrine to ſet forth his holy word: as S. Paul warneth Timothy, Preach the word, bee inſtant, in ſeaſon, out of ſeaſon: according alſo to the Canons, Carthag. 4. can. 1. Epiſcopus, &c. A Biſhop muſt onely attend upon reading, prayer, and preaching of the word. 1 Tim 3.2.

4 Popiſh Biſhops muſt aſcend by ſeven ſteps or degrees: firſt, he muſt be a Doorekeeper, then a Reader, then an Exorciſt, an Acolythiſt, a Subdeacon, Deacon, Prieſt, and laſt of all a Biſhop, ex decr. Gaii. But our Biſhops aſcend but by two degrees, of Presbyters and Deacons, according to the Scriptures, which deſcribe the office only of Biſhops, under them alſo comprehending Presbyters and Deacons, as degrees of the miniſtery. 1 Tim.3.2.12.

5 Popiſh Biſhops are ſuperſtitiouſly conſecrated, with the annointing of oyle, they have their mitre, pall, croſſe, crozier ſtaffe, with other ſuperſtitious ornaments contrary to the Scripture. Timothy was ordained only by Impoſition of hands: ſo are our Biſhops conſecrated, with impoſition of hands and prayer. 1 Tim 1.6.

6 The Popiſh Prelates doe reſerve unto themſelves for their advantage, many ſuperſtitious rites and cuſtomes, as to baptize bells, to dedicate Churches, to anoint with Chriſme, and ſuch like: which things S. Pauls Biſhop hath no charge of, 1 Tim. 3. neither have our Biſhops any thing to doe with ſuch things.

7 Popiſh Prelates are as Lords over their flocke, over-ruling their faith; and the Clergy and people are as their ſubjects, nay which is more, their ſlaves: contrary to the Apoſtle: Not that we have dominion over your faith: and againe, Not as though ye were Lords over Gods inheritance. But ſo are not our Biſhops, who diſdaine not in the ordaining of Miniſters, to call them brethren: as Hierome ſaith, Pontifices Chriſti, &c. We reverence Biſhops, preaching the true faith, not with the feare of Maſters, but with the honour of Fathers, that we may yeeld reverence to Biſhops as Biſhops, and not under one name to ſerve another: Hieron. ad Theophylact. 2 Cor 1.24. 1 Pet.5.3.

8 Saint Pauls Biſhop muſt be φιλάγαθον a lover of good men: So are not Popiſh Prelates, who hate to death the profeſſors of the Goſpell of Chriſt: So doe not our Biſhops; I doubt not but that they are patrons and lovers of the truth. Tit.1.8.

9 Popiſh Prelates take upon them to diſpenſe Indulgences, to forgive ſinnes for dayes, moneths, yeares; by their owne power to acquite and diſcharge ſinners. But our Biſhops take not upon them to be conferrers or beſtowers of Gods graces or mercies, but according to the Scriptures, to bee as Miniſters by whom the people beleeve, as diſpoſers of the ſecrets of God, as helpers of our joy. 1 Cor.3.5. 1 Cor.4.1. 2 Cor.1.24.

10 Saint Pauls Biſhops muſt bee ready to ſuffer adverſity for the truth: ſo doe not Popiſh Prelates, who have made many martyrs, but themſelves never were martyrs of or for the truth: but many 1 Tim.4.5.

of our Biſhops have beene faithfull Martyrs, and ſuffered for the truth, as B. Cranmer, Ridley, Hooper, Latimer, Ferrar, of bleſſed memory.

2 Tim.3.15.17.

11. Saint Pauls Biſhop beleeveth and is perſwaded, that the Scriptures ſufficiently containe all doctrine neceſſary to ſalvation: So alſo doe our Biſhops profeſſe in their conſecration, as is evident in the booke of Orders: but ſo doe not the Popiſh Prelates beleeve, neither are they ſo perſwaded, holding many unwritten traditions neceſſary beſide Scripture.

2 Tim.3.14.

12. Our Biſhops doe profeſſe, when they are conſecrated, To teach nothing as required of neceſſity to eternall ſalvation, but that they are perſwaded may be concluded, and proved by the Scriptures: according as S. Paul ſaith to Timothy. Continue thou in all things which thou haſt learned, and art perſwaded of, knowing of whom thou haſt learned them: But Popiſh Prelates doe bind mens conſciences to obſerve their owne traditions, as the Church of Saxony complaineth in their confeſſion: The Biſhops take to themſelves authority to ordaine new kinds of worſhip, and to bind conſciences, Harmon. ſect. 17.

13. Saint Pauls Biſhop is required to bee ſober, watching, modeſt; ſo is it demanded of our Biſhops in their conſecration: Will you deny ungodlineſſe and worldly luſts, and live ſoberly? Such are not Popiſh Prelates, who forcing themſelves to keepe the violent vow of ſingle life, are many of them detected of incontinent and adulterous life: as Pope Iohn 13. was wounded and ſlaine in adultery, Luitprand lib.6. Two adulterous Biſhops of the Tridentine Councell, were ſlaine in adultery: ex proteſtat. concion. German.

14. Popiſh Prelates take to themſelves authority to give power unto Prieſts, to make the body of Chriſt, and to offer ſacrifice for the quicke and the dead: for this is the very forme of the order of Popiſh Prieſthood invented by man, and not grounded upon the word of God: but our Biſhops doe ordaine Miniſters to be faithfull diſpenſers of the word of God, and of his holy Sacraments: agreeable to the Scriptures: Give attendance to reading, to exhortation, doctrine: Preach the word, &c.

1 Tim.4.13.

2 Tim.4.3.

1 Tim.3.3.

15. Popiſh Prelates neglecting their Epiſcopall office, take upon them the uſe of both ſwords: as to be Captaines and leaders of Armies, Muſter-maſters: Such an one was Henry Spencer, anno 1380. or there about, that was Pope Vrbanes captaine Generall, and in his owne perſon fought the Popes battailes: Fox. p. 446. Such an one was Theodorike Biſhop of Colen, that waged many battailes. Cardinall Ballua under Lodovic. 11. King of France, tooke generall muſter of the ſouldiers at Paris: whereupon one Chabanus a Courtier merrily ſaid to the King: Send mee, I pray you to his Biſhopicke to conſecrate Prieſts, for I may as well doe that, as he muſter ſouldiers: Eſpenc. digreſſ. in 1. ad Tim. lib.3. c.6. And it is not long ſince a Cardinall was Lievtenant of the King of Spaine his forces in the Low Countries. But S. Pauls Biſhop muſt be no fighter, neither are the Proteſtants Biſhops ſuch.

Heb 13.4.

16. Popiſh Prelates doe moſt tyrannically compell their Clergy to live unmarried, and to forſake their wives to whom they were coupled, as is evident in the ſtories of Lanfrank and Anſelme Biſhops of Conterbury; contrary to the Apoſtle, Marriage is honourable among all: But our Biſhops enforce no ſuch thing.

1 Iohn 5.21.

17. Popiſh Prelates are moſt groſſe idolators, falling downe before ſtockes and ſtones, commanding the people to doe the like: contrary to the Apoſtle: Keepe your ſelves from Idols: But our Biſhops are free from all idolatry.

Rom.13.1.

18. Popiſh Prelates doe take themſelves and their Clergy to be exempted from the Civill power: contrary to the Apoſtle. Let every ſoule bee ſubject to the higher powers: ſo are not our Biſhops, who doe moſt willingly ſubmit themſelves to the lawes of the Prince, and at their conſecration bind themſelves by oath thereunto.

Iohn 3. Epiſt.9.

19. Popiſh Prelates are capable to bee Lord Cardinals, and ſo to inſult above their brethren and fellow Biſhops, and to be the Popes agents and factors; contrary to the Apoſtle, who reproveth Diotrephes, for loving to have the preheminence. And Hierome ſaith, Whereſoever a Biſhop is, whether at Rome, Eugubium, Conſtantinople, they are of the ſame merit or worthineſſe of the ſame Prieſthood: Hieron. Evagr. But our Biſhops are capable of no ſuch proud or ambitious title.

Revel.2.13.

20. Popiſh Biſhops and Cardinals are capable of the Papacy, the ſeat and throne of Antichriſt and Satan; for they are not true Biſhops: as Antipas was ſlaine, even where Satans throne was, becauſe he kept the name of Chriſt, and did not ſit in Satans throne. And our Biſhops at their conſecration doe renounce and diſdaine the power and juriſdiction of all forraine Prelates, Potentates, and ſo doe not communicate at all with that throne of Satan.

In theſe and many other materiall points, doe our Biſhops differ from the Popiſh Prelates: and yet if they agreed with them in all other matters, and diſſented onely in doctrine and faith, it were ſufficient to cleare and diſcharge them from their ſlanderous accuſation of Antichriſtianiſme: for where Satans throne is not, there cannot Antichriſt ſit: and where Chriſts name is kept, his faith not denied, but ſincerely taught, there Satans throne is not, Revel. 2.13. Therefore the Church of England, profeſſing the true doctrine and faith of Chriſt, is not under the Kingdome of Antichriſt: and ſo I conclude with that ſaying, Nicen. concil. 2. can. 2. Noſtra Hierarchia ſubſtantia, &c. The ſubſtance of our Hierarchy are the heavenly words, that is, the true knowledge of the divine Scriptures: the Church and Miniſtery then of England having the ſubſtance of the true Miniſtery, cannot be judged Antichriſtian: neither are our Biſhops the Miniſters of Antichriſt, being Preachers and profeſſors of the true faith. Now I will proceed.

The fifth part, of the Ceremonies.

The Papiſts.

THey doe anoint the hands of ſuch as are ordained, with oyle, and doe enjoyne them to ſhave their crownes. And the higher degree of Prieſthood they have, ſo much broader muſt their ſhaven crowne be, *Tileman.Heſhuſ.loc.*14.*Err.*5.*Bellarm.cap.*12.

The Proteſtants.

WEe have the ſame opinion of theſe ceremonies, as wee have of the Popiſh orders themſelves, counting them worthy of no place in the Church of God. As for the ſuperſtitious cuſtome of anointing, it is a Jewiſh rite, better beſeeming Aarons order, than the Miniſters of Jeſus Chriſt. Looke how he was anointed, ſo are we: of him it is ſaid, The ſpirit of the Lord is upon me, becauſe hee hath annointed me: [a] So the inward working of the Spirit is our anointing.[b] Againe, in divers places of the Scripture we reade of ordaining by impoſition of hands: [c] But there is no mention at all made of anointing with oyle.

1 And as for the ſhaving of the crowne, it is worſe than a Jewiſh ceremony: for it ſeemeth to have taken beginning from the Heathen: and the Jewes were forbidden to cut or make bald their heads: [d] In ſo much, as it was a ſigne of more holineſſe amongſt them not to ſuffer the razor to come upon their heads, as it is to be ſeene in the law of the Nazarites, Numbers 6. The reſt of the queſtions that concerne the calling of Miniſters, we have entreated of more at large, Controverſ. 5. of Eccleſiaſticall perſons.

-- *Concil.Eliberin.can.*55. Sacerdotes, qui tantum ſacrificantium coronam portant, nec ſacrificant idolis, placuit poſt biennium communionem accipere: Prieſts, that have onely a ſhaven crowne like idolatrous ſacrificers, and yet doe not ſacrifice to idols, after two yeeres may receive the Communion, &c. We ſee that by this Canon they are cenſured, that had ſhorne crownes.

1 *Decret.Gregor.lib.*1.*tit.*15.*c.*1.Innocent. 3. Among the Greekes, Non conſueverunt vontifices cum conſecrantur innungi: Biſhops, when they are conſecrated, are not anointed, &c. If it were an Apoſtolike inſtitution, It would have beene generally obſerved in all Churches.

2 Optatus reproveth the Donatiſts, that uſed to ſhave the heads of their Prieſts: Docete ubi vobis mandatum eſt radere capita ſacerdotum, cum è contra ſint tot exempla propoſita fieri non debere: Shew where it is commanded you to ſhave the heads of Prieſts, whereas on the contrary ſide there are ſo many evidences propounded, that it ought not to be.

Lib. contra Parmenion.

3 Confeſſ. of Wittemberg, c. 10. In the law of Moſes, there was a time for ſhadowes, but now Chriſt being revealed, it is a time of truth, and the uſe of externall anointing pertaineth to the rudiments of the world, &c.

Harm.ſect.13. p.48.

4 *Cauſ.*12.qu. 1.*c.*7. Hanc coronam habent ab inſtitutione Romana eccleſia: They have their ſhaven crowne from the inſtitution of the Romane Church. Then not from the inſtitution of the Apoſtles.

*Magiſter ſententiar.lib.*4.diſt. 24.b. Tonſura eccleſiaſtica uſus à Nazaræis exortus videtur; The uſe of Eccleſiaſticall tonſure or ſhaving ſeemeth to have taken beginning from the Nazarites. How then can it be a ceremony of the Goſpell, being altogether a Judaicall rite? Nay, the Jewes never ſo abounded in Superſtitious obſervations, and fooliſh ſignifications. The Prieſts ſhaving firſt (they ſay) betokeneth that they are as it were Kings of the Church, which is ſignified by the crowne, to rule themſelves and others: And ſo indeed Popiſh Prelates have taken upon them to bee Kings indeed, exalting themſelves above Kings and Princes: *Cauſ.*12.qu. 1.c. 7. Secondly, Raſio capitis eſt temporalium omnium depoſitio: The ſhaving of the head ſignifieth the laying aſide of all temporall things: ibid. This did well appeare in their cloiſtered ſhavelings, that had ſcraped together the riches of the land. Thirdly, Denudatio capitis eſt revelatio mentis: The baring of the head ſignifieth the revealing of the minde, that they ſhould not bee ignorant of Gods ſecrets: Magiſter ſententiar. ibid. And no marvell, their ſhaveling Prieſts were ſuch great Clerkes. Fourthly, their ſhaving betokened the mortifying of their fleſh, and the ſubduing of vice: Magiſt.ibid. The uncleane ſtories of Monkiſh lives doe well make proofe of their mortification. Thus wee ſee how unlike they are in their workes, to the meaning of their ſhaven crownes upon their heads. The ſuperſtitious Jewes themſelves may well laugh at ſuch toyes.

To this agreeth the judgement of the holy Martyrs: Robert Smith holy Martyr: As for your ſhaving, anointing, greaſing, polling, rounding: there are no ſuch things appointed in Gods booke; and therefore I have nothing to doe, to beleeve your orders. And as for you my Lord, if you had grace or intelligence, you would not ſo disfigure your ſelfe as you doe; Fox.p. 1693.

The third Queſtion, of extreme Vnction. Firſt, whether it be a Sacrament. Secondly, of the efficacy. Thirdly, of the ceremonies.

The firſt part, whether extreme Vnction be a Sacrament.

The Papiſts.

112. Error. THat extreme Unction is rightly and properly a Sacrament, which is (ſay they) the anointing of thoſe that are extreme ſicke, to aſſure them of remiſſion of their ſinnes: it was concluded in the Chapter of Trent, ſeſſ. 14. can. 1. and is generally maintained by the Church of Rome, Bellarm. cap. 2.

Iames 5.14. Mark. 6.13. Argum. The Sacrament of extreme Unction in this place is plainly promulgated by the Apoſtle, being inſtituted before by our Saviour Chriſt: For here is remiſſion of ſinnes promiſed to the outward element, that is, the anointing of the ſicke with oyle: Ergo, a Sacrament, Rhemiſt.

Anſw. 1. This anointing of oyle, was a ſigne only of the miraculous gift of healing, that was then in the Church, and therefore was no longer to continue, than the gift it ſelfe. But it is not like, will they ſay, that every one of the Elders had this miraculous gift of healing. Anſw. Though every particular Elder perhaps had it not, yet the whole company of the Elderſhip might have it, as S. Paul 1 Tim. 4 14. ſpeaketh of the gift of prophecy given to the Elderſhip. And it is not like that the Apoſtle would have promiſed health by calling for the Elders, if the gift had not beene generall in every congregation.

Anſw. 2. Neither is remiſſion of ſinnes annexed to the element, but to the exerciſe of prayer made in faith. The prayer of faith, ſaith the Apoſtle, ſhall heale the ſicke.

Bellarmine on the contrary ſide laboureth to prove, that this place of Iames cannot bee underſtood of the miraculous gift of healing. Firſt, if it had beene a miraculous gift, it ſhould have beene more generall, not only to cure ſicke folke, but the blind alſo and lame.

Contra. 1. As though there were not divers miraculous gifts, which were not all in every one, neither was it requiſite ſo to be. S. Paul diſtinguiſheth the gifts of the Spirit, as one hath the gift of healing, 1 Cor 12. 9 10. another the operation of great workes, as to caſt out devils, to heale thoſe which were borne blind, and ſuch like: doth it follow now, that he which had the one, muſt needs alſo have the other? 2. The Jeſuite controuleth the wiſdome of our Saviour Chriſt, who although he endued his Apoſtles with a generall power to worke miracles, yet gave them this gift, that by this ſpeciall meane (the Mark. 6. 13. anointing the ſicke with oyle) they ſhould heale them.

Bellarm. 2. If the Apoſtle had ſpoken of a miraculous gift, hee would not have preſcribed them the matter to worke by, namely oyle.

Mark. 16 18. Contra. By this reaſon, that gift of healing, which the Apoſtles promiſed, Mark. 16. 18. ſhould not be miraculous, becauſe there alſo they are preſcribed oyle: nor that which is promiſed, becauſe there is a preſcription alſo, how they ſhall lay their hands upon the ſicke, and ſo heale them.

Bellarm. 3. If it had beene a miraculous gift, it ſhould have never failed, but they alwayes ſhould have recovered bodily health, and ſo none ſhould have died in the Apoſtles time.

Contra. 1. As though the miraculous gifts, which were given unto men then, were infinite, and not Mark 3. 15. rather meaſured, and directed according to Gods will: The Apoſtles had power given them to caſt Mark 9. 8. out Devils, yet could they not caſt out a dumbe ſpirit: So that their miraculous gifts, then and ſo often, and for the moſt part tooke place, when it pleaſed God, when hee ſaw it to bee to his glory, and needfull for his Church. 2. Neither doth it follow, that they which were thus once healed, ſhould alwayes be healed, and ſo never dye: no more than Lazarus, who was once raiſed out of the grave, was preſerved from death, who afterward notwithſtanding died.

Bellarm. 4. The Apoſtle ſpeaketh in direct termes of forgiving of ſinnes: therefore ſpirituall health is here underſtood, rather than corporall.

Contra. We grant, that remiſſion of ſinnes did concurre with the outward miraculous gift, at the fervent prayers of the faithfull. For how could the diſeaſe be cured, if the cauſe thereof, which was ſinne, were not firſt removed? but it followeth not, that the gift of bodily health was not therefore miraculous; For Chriſt, whom he healed bodily, to many of them alſo he forgave their ſinnes, yet did Mark. 2 5. he heale by miracle, as Chriſt ſaith to the ſicke of the palſey, thy ſinnes are forgiven thee: he healed him both bodily and ghoſtly: ſhall we ſay therefore, that hee was not cured miraculouſly? Wherefore it remaineth, as we anſwered before, that this gift of healing, which S. Iames ſpeaketh of, was miraculous, and ſo proveth no Sacrament: for it is all one with that gift which the Apoſtles exerciſed, Mark. 6. which cannot be denied but to have beene miraculous.

Thus much alſo is confeſſed: Interrelig. Caſarea, cap. 19. Inter initia fidei externa quoque corporis ſanitas quaſi internæ ſanationis ſignum conſequebatur, &c. In the beginning, and ſpringing up of faith, the outward health of the body did follow as a ſigne of the inward healing: Quemadmodum in aliis Sacramentis ad confirmationem rudis fidei interna virtus, externis ſignis & miraculis demonſtrabatur: As in other Sacraments, for the confirmation of their weake faith, the inward vertue was ſhewed forth by outward ſignes and miracles: which are not needfull now, &c. The gift of healing then was a miracle.

The Proteſtants.

EXtreme Unction is no convenient ceremony at all to bee uſed in the Church, as tending to ſuperſtition, and breeding a vaine confidence in terrene elements: much leſſe is it to be holden for a Sacrament.

Argum. 1. It hath no inſtitution from Chriſt: for they themſelves confeſſe, that Marke 6. 13. there is but a preparative to the Sacrament of extreme Unction, Rhemiſt. the promulgation and publiſhing thereof is ſet forth by the Apoſtle, Iam. 5. But this is not to be admitted, that Chriſt was a preparer of Sacraments onely, and that they were perfited and finiſhed by his Apoſtles: nay, they were not to adde any thing to the inſtitution of Sacraments, but to take them as Chriſt delivered them. 1 Cor. 11. 23.

The Maſter of the Sentences ſaith: Sacramentum unctionis infirmorum, &c. The Sacrament of anointing of the ſicke, is read to have beene inſtituted of the Apoſtles. Then is it no Sacrament, for Chriſt onely is the Author of the Sacraments, as Bellarmine proveth at large, lib. 1. de Sacrament. in genere, c. 24. And it was thus decreed, Concil. Trident. ſeſſ. 7. c. 1. Siquis dixerit Sacramenta novæ legis non eſſe omnia à Ieſu Chriſto inſtituta, anathema: If any man ſay that the Sacraments of the new Teſtament were not at all inſtituted of Chriſt, let him bee accurſed, &c. How then doth Bellarmine and the reſt avoid this curſe, that doe hold this Sacrament to have beene inſtituted by the Apoſtles? There are two opinions among them: ſome think the anointing, ſpoken of Mark. 6. 13. and the other mentioned Iam. 5. to be all one: Sic Thomas Waldenſ. Alphonſus de caſtro lib. de Hæreſib. Others of them doe think, that that which Marke ſpeaketh of, was not Unctio ſacramentalis, a Sacramentall Unction, but only a figure and ſhadow of it: ſic Ruardus in explicat. artic. 12. Ianſenius in Mark. 6. Dominicus à Soto, diſtinct. 23. qu. 1. artic. 1. The Rhemiſts alſo and Bellarmine. Thus we ſee how well they agree among themſelves.

Againe, the place in Iames maketh nothing for their Popiſh aneeling: for the Apoſtle would have all the Elders called: but one Prieſt is ſufficient to bring your oyntment box. Secondly, if any man be ſicke, ſaith S. Iames, though it be not deadly or mortall ſickneſſe, but whenſoever hee is ſick: But your Unction is never miniſtred before the point of death. Thirdly, here health is certainly promiſed: But not one amongſt ten recovereth after your Popiſh aneeling.

Argum. 2. Chriſt uſed ſometime clay, and ſpettle, ſometime other elements in healing the diſeaſed, as the Apoſtles uſed oyle: why, I pray you then, may not they be Sacraments as well as this? for they were ſignes of healing but for a time: no more was the anointing with oyle.

Bellarmine anſwereth, there is not the like reaſon: firſt, thoſe other ceremonies are not commanded to be frequented as this of oyle is, Iam. 5. Secondly, there is no promiſe of ſpirituall grace annexed to them, as unto this. Thirdly, neither is the certaine Miniſter of thoſe ceremonies deſcribed, as the Elders, that is, the Prieſts, are of this, Iam. 5.

Contra. Firſt, you cannot prove an inſtitution of a Sacrament out of that place of Iames, ſeeing Chriſt, and not the Apoſtles, is the author of Sacraments: There is no Sacrament of the Goſpell which is not grounded both upon the example and precept of Chriſt: but ſo is not your aneeling.

Secondly, the other elements which Chriſt uſed have thoſe three things required: firſt, our Saviour uſed ſpettle divers times: as in healing the dumbe man, in curing the blind man. Here is an iteration of the ſame element. Secondly, it hath alſo an infallible effect: for it healeth both dumbneſſe and blindneſſe. Thirdly, the Miniſter thereof is certaine, Chriſt himſelfe. Mark. 7. 33. Mark. 8. 23.

Thirdly: firſt, the ſpirituall grace promiſed, is not annexed to oyle, but to the prayer of faith: Neither can it be proved, that all thoſe Elders were Miniſters, or, as they call them, Prieſts: for divers of the faithfull, which were not Miniſters, had the gift of healing: as it appeareth, Theſe things ſhall follow them that beleeve, &c. they ſhall lay their hands upon the ſicke, and they ſhall recover. But all beleevers were not Miniſters. Iames 5. 15. Mark. 16. 18.

Auguſtine ſaith, De latere Chriſti Sacramenta eccleſiæ profluxerunt cum dormiret in cruce: The Sacraments of the Church iſſued out of Chriſts ſide when he ſlept on the Croſſe: There guſhed out of his ſide, water and bloud: but we reade not that any oyle was ſhed from him: therefore by Auguſtines argument, Unction is no Sacrament. Auguſt in Pſal 40.

Now to adde the practice of other Churches: 1. The Grecians doe deny the Sacrament of confirmation and extreme unction: Villamont. Lib. 2. 21.

The Ruſſians doe ſay, that the Sacrament of extreme unction cannot give a remedy againſt the ſtaine of ſinne, and that Iames ſpeaking of unction, did meane, that it was only to cure and helpe bodily infirmities. Sacranus elecid. error.

2. The Abyſſines hold not extreme unction for a Sacrament, nor yet uſe it as the Romanes doe: Zaga Zabo. Damianus à Goes.

3. Confeſſ. of the Swizers, c. 19. Confirmation and extreme Vnction are mans inventions, whereof the Church may rid it ſelfe without any dammage, and we have them not in our Churches, &c. See to the ſame purpoſe the confeſſion of Saxony, artic. 19. ſect. 2. Harm. p. 500. ſect. 16. and of Wittemberg, artic. 22. Harm. p. 505. ſect. 16. tit. of extreme unction, &c.

4. Here we want not plentifull teſtimony of our adverſaries, their Jeſuite Suarez confeſſeth, that it is no Sacrament, if it be not inſtituted of Chriſt: and yet the ſame Suarez confeſſeth, that Hugo de S. Victor. Magiſter, Alenſis, Altiſiodorus, principall Schoolemen, are of opinion, that it was not inſtituted of Chriſt: whereupon it followeth, that it is no Sacrament.

Tom. 4. diſput. 39. ſect. 2. numer. 1.

Bellar. lib. 1. de extrem. unction. c. 2. §. de prior.

And whereas they have but two places to prove their Sacrament of extreme unction, Mark.6.13. Iames 5.14. the firſt place is diſclaimed by Ruardus, Ianſenius, Dominicus à Soto, Bellarmine, as not making mention of that Sacrament: the ſecond is refuſed by Cardinall Cajetane upon that place, as not proving extreme unction.

Innocent. 1. Epiſtol. 1. can. 8. ſaith, that this cuſtome in annointing with oyle, genus eſt ſacramenti, is a kind of Sacrament. It is not then properly a Sacrament, but after a certaine kind and manner. This is rehearſed, diſtinct. 95. c. 3.

We have alſo the ſeale of the holy Martyrs: Iames Bainham Martyr, being asked what hee thought concerning the Sacrament of aneeling, he anſwered, It was but a ceremony, neither did hee wot what a man ſhould be the better for ſuch an oyling and anointing: Fox pag. 1028.

Iohn Denley, Iohn Newman, Patricke Pachingham, holy Martyrs, condemned to death, for affirming, that the anointing and aneeling of the ſick was not allowable by the word of God: Fox. pag. 1684. col. 2.

The ſecond part, of the matter and forme of extreme Vnction.

The Papiſts.

112. Error.

THe matter is oyle olive conſecrated by the Biſhop, not ſimple or unhallowed, as is water in Baptiſme: the forme is in theſe words: By this holy unction, and by his moſt godly mercy, God forgive you, &c. Bellarm. c. 7.

The Proteſtants.

FIrſt as touching the forme: 1. It is not warranted, nor found in Scripture, as the words of conſecration in the other Sacraments are, and therefore we refuſe it. 2. It is blaſphemous, matching the beggerly anointing, and Gods mercy together, and ſo joyne the creature and Creator in commiſſion together.

1 Cor. 10. 16.

Secondly, for the matter: 1. The element is not conſecrated, but in the uſe of the Sacrament: 1 Cor. 10. 16. bread is bleſſed in the breaking: therefore that fore-running hallowing of oyle is ſuperſtitious and ſuperfluous. 2. If ſimple water ſerve for Baptiſme being ſo excellent a Sacrament, much more may ſimple oyle ſuffice for your unction. 3. Your Canons alſo allow the ſprinkling of water as well as oyle upon the ſicke, decr. p. 3. d. 4. c. 127. Aſpergi, &c. the ſicke are bid to be ſprinkled, &c. As for the judgement of forraine Churches, ſee in the former queſtion: for they which deny extreme unction to be a Sacrament, will neither acknowledge matter nor forme.

The third part, of the effect and vertue of extreme Vnction.

The Papiſts.

113. Error.

FIrſt, it giveth health of body. Secondly, it wipeth away the reliques of ſinne: And therefore the Prieſt thus ſaith: Per iſtam ſanctam Unctionem, & ſuam piiſſimam miſericordiam, indulgeat tibi Deus quicquid deliquiſti per viſum, &c. By the vertue of this holy oyntment, and the moſt mercifull favour of God, the Lord forgive thee what thou haſt offended by the ſight, hearing, &c. Bellarmine cap. 7. 8.

The Proteſtants.

1. YOur Popiſh aneeling is not able to heale the body, as we ſee by daily experience: for more die than live after your anointing: and they that doe recover, ſhould doe as well without your aneeling. Wherefore this anointing of oyle is not like to that uſed by the Apoſtles: for then health certainly followed, Iam. 5. 14.

Bell. lib. de extrem unction. c. 6.

Here alſo the Papiſts themſelves are divided: ſome thinke, that the health of the body is the proper end of this their Sacrament: Dominicus à Soto diſtinct. 23. qu. 1. art. 2. Bellarmine with other thinketh, that the health of the ſoule is the peculiar end: and the health of the body conditionally, ſo farre forth as it is expedient for the ſoule.

Sotus replieth, many times hee that is aneeled, is more wicked than before, how then is it to the health of his ſoule? Bellarmine, when this falleth out, he obtaineth not health by the Sacrament, but by ſome other naturall meanes. Contra. Then it would follow, that other naturall meanes applied, are more effectuall for the health of the body, than your Sacrament is; ſeeing they may give health, when the Sacrament doth not: ſo then ſeeing your extreme aneeling doth not alwayes give health, by your owne confeſſion, it is no effect of a Sacrament: for the Sacrament alwayes worketh Sacramentally, where it is not otherwiſe hindred for want of faith: but many a faithfull man may be aneeled, and yet dye, in whom there is no ſuch let: and many a wicked man may recover his health, in whom the impediment is found, namely, the lacke of faith.

2. It is alſo a great blaſphemy, to aſcribe remiſſion of ſinnes to a terrene and beggerly element: The Apoſtle ſaith, not the oyle, but the prayer of faith ſhall ſave the ſicke. The Scripture alſo teſtifieth, that the juſt ſhall live by faith. And we walke by faith, not by ſight. But he that aſcribeth remiſſion of ſinnes to oyle, or any other externall element, walketh by ſight, not by faith. Ian.es 5.15. Rom.1.17. 2 Cor.5.7.

Here againe the Popiſh Divines are put to their trumpes; and much ſcanning there is among them, what manner of ſinnes are remitted by extreme unction: ſome ſay veniall ſinnes: other the aptneſſe to ſinne that remaineth. Bellarmine thinketh they be reliques of any ſinne veniall, or mortall, and the terror or anxiety of ſoule, which remaineth and perplexeth the ſoule in the point of death. Bellarm. cap. 8.

Contra. 1. The Apoſtle ſaith, If he have committed ſinne, or as the vulgar tranſlation readeth, if hee be in ſinne: whereby the Apoſtle underſtandeth neither the leſſer ſinnes only, which they call veniall, nor the reliques of ſinne only, but ſinne it ſelfe whatſoever that is pardonable. Iames 5.15.

2. This remitting of ſinnes is not aſcribed to the anointing with oyle, but to the prayer of faith: Acknowledge your faults one to another, and pray one for another, that you may bee healed: Here repentance with confeſſion of ſinnes is required in the behalfe of the ſicke; prayer to be performed by the other: by theſe two meanes health is obtained. Iames 5.16.

3. The ſinne being once pardoned and remitted, there remaineth no more terror of conſcience: Being juſtified by faith, wee are at peace with God. There is now no condemnation to them that are in Chriſt Ieſus: and conſequently no feare of condemnation. Rom.5.1. Rom. 8.1.

4. The anointing was a ſigne onely of their bodily healing: They anointed many that were ſicke with oyle, and healed them: but in this place they ſay, the ſame gift of healing is ſhadowed forth, which is deſcribed in S. Iames. Mark 6.13.

5. Whereas the Apoſtle requireth confeſſion of ſinnes in the ſicke, whereupon followeth remiſſion of ſinnes: they uſe to aneele the ſicke when they are paſt ſenſe, and ſo can ſhew no repentance: as Sext. decret. lib. 5. tit. [illegible] c. 5. Alexander 4. reproveth the uſe of certaine, qui nullam conſolantur, qui non ſit ſana mentis, &c. which uſe not to comfort any that are not of a right minde and ſound memory, &c. how then can there be forgiveneſſe of ſinnes, where no confeſſion goeth before?

1. The Muſcovites at this day following the Greeke Church, doe find fault with the Romaniſts, in applying extreme unction to them which in a manner are dead, urging this reaſon, quaſi corpori anima deſtituto accommodanda ſint Sacramenta: as though the Sacraments ought to be applied to the body deſtitute of a ſou[illegible]. Appendix ad Sacran. de errorib. Moſcov. err.15.

2. Zaga Zabo the Æthiopike Biſhop ſaith, that extreme unction is not in uſe among them, according to the cuſtome of the Church of Rome: but the Church of Rome applieth it for remiſſion of ſinnes: therefore ſo doe not they. Damianus a Goes.

3. Confeſſion of Saxony, artic. 19. ſect. 2. They ſay that ſinnes are forgiven through theſe anointings, and they adde invocation of the dead, which alſo of neceſſity muſt be diſliked, &c. Wittemberg, artic. 22. Theſe things were then practiſed profitably, when as yet the Miniſters of the Church were endued with the gift of healing the ſicke corporally and wonderfully: but this gift being ceaſed, —the thing it ſelfe doth witneſſe, that this ceremony of anointing is now idlely and unfruitfully uſed: for they which now are anointed, uſe not by this anointing to recover their health. Harm. ſect. 16. Pag 500. Ibid. pag. 505.

4. See the opinion of Dominicus à Soto before rehearſed, that extreme unction is not to be applied for remiſſion of ſinnes but for bodily health.

The fourth part, of the Miniſter of extreme Vnction, and the ceremonies.

The Papiſts.

FIrſt, they give power onely unto their anointed Maſſe-prieſts, to aneele the ſick with oyle. Lay men have no authority to doe it, nor whoſoever are no Prieſts, Concil. Trident. ſeſſ. 14. ca. 4. 114. Error. Secondly, for the rite and ceremony, the Prieſt comming to the ſicke muſt anoint his five ſenſes; his eyes, eares, noſtrels, mouth, and hands: alſo the reines, which is the ſeat of concupiſcence, and his feet, which are the inſtruments of execution, Bellarm. cap. 10. 115. Error.

The Proteſtants.

1. THis anointing which Saint Iames ſpeaketh of, was done by the whole company of Elders in every congregation, which were not all the Paſtors of the Church: and although the Paſtors and Miniſters of the Church are both more eſpecially bound in reſpect of their duty to viſit the ſick, and are the fitteſt perſons in regard of their calling to pray for them and comfort them; yet S. Iames much commendeth the prayer not onely of faithfull Paſtors, but of any righteous man, which is availeable to procure health unto the ſicke, verſ. 16. Yea, and it appeareth by their owne Canons, Innocent. 1. Epiſt. 1. c. 8. that it was lawfull for lay men and all Chriſtians to uſe this anointing.

Bellarmine anſwereth with Ianſenius, that Innocentius ſpeaketh not of the miniſtring, but receiving of this oyntment, that it is lawfull for every lay man to receive it at the Prieſts hands, and ſo uſe it, cap. 9.

Contra. 1. This place alleaged out of Innocentius troubleth them ſore, and maketh them almoſt at their wits end: Thomas Waldenſ. anſwereth, that lay men may aneele, where there are no Prieſts to be had: but this anſwer miſliketh Bellarmine, becauſe the Prieſt muſt neceſſarily bee the Miniſter of every Sacrament, unleſſe it be in Baptiſme. Dominicus a Soto ſaith, that Innocentius ſpeaketh of a kind of conſecrate oyle, which it was lawfull for lay men to uſe, beſide this ſacramentall oyle: this anſwer alſo diſpleaſeth the Jeſuite, for Innocentius ſpeaketh of oyle conſecrated by the Biſhop, which was the matter of this Sacrament. Secondly, therefore Bellarmine hath found out another anſwer, but as unſufficient as the other: the words of the decree are theſe: Sancto oleo chriſmatis ab Epiſcopo confecto, non ſolum ſacerdotibus, ſed & omnibus uti Chriſtianis licet in ſua aut ſuorum neceſſitate inungendo: The holy oyle of Chriſme made by the Biſhop, it is lawfull not only for Prieſts, but for all Chriſtians to uſe by anointing, in their, or their friends neceſſity, &c. This cannot bee underſtood as the Jeſuite ſuppoſeth: Firſt, it is lawfull for other Chriſtians to uſe oyle, as the Prieſts did uſe it, which was by miniſtring, not receiving. Secondly, they may uſe it to anoint their friends, as well as themſelves, therefore they miniſtred to their friends.

2. What need the body be anointed in ſo many places? It is meere ſuperſtition: of the like minde was Peter ſometime, when he ſaid to Chriſt, who would waſh his feet; Lord, not my feet onely, but my hands and my head. To whom Chriſt anſwered: He that is waſhed, need not ſave to waſh his feet, but is cleane all. Where, although the words of Chriſt have a ſpirituall meaning: yet wee ſee the evident and plaine practice of them in Baptiſme: In the which Sacrament, we doubt not, but that infants are throughly baptized, though every part be not touched with water. And even ſo, if your aneeling were a Sacrament, why might it not ſuffice, in ſome one part of the body to bee anointed, and not in ſo many? This we are ſure of, that now you ſpeake without book: For the Apoſtle maketh no mention of anointing eyes, hands, or mouth, but onely generally of anointing the ſicke. And thus it appeareth that your extreme Unction is no Sacrament, nor any of the other foure which you have invented.

John 13. 9.

The Eaſt and South Church holding extreme Unction to be no Sacrament at all, as is ſhewed before, conſequently deny, that a Prieſt onely is the Miniſter thereof, to whom the diſpenſation of the Sacraments only belongeth.

Harm. ſect. 16. p. 506.

Confeſſion of Wittemberg, artic. 22. The Miniſters of the Church are bound by duty to viſit the ſick, and to pray together with the Church for their health, and to comfort them as well by preaching of the Goſpell, as by diſpenſing of the Lords Supper: and this is a godly anointing, &c.

And whereas Thomas Aquine would prove, that neither Deacons, nor the Biſhop onely, but the Presbyters are the miniſters of extreme Unction, by that text, Iam. 5. 14. where mention is made only of the Presbyters: yet Cardinall Cajetane ſaith, that from that text the Sacrament of extreme Unction cannot be proved, either from the words, or from the effects.

James 5. 14.
Commentar. in Iacob 5.

Againe, whereas the Councell of Florence decreeth, that not only the places of the five ſenſes, but the reines and the feet alſo ſhould be anointed: Bellarmine following Thomas, thinketh it is of the eſſence of the Sacrament, to anoint only the five ſenſes: and thus in theſe their toyes they are not agreed among themſelves.

The concluſion of this Treatiſe concerning the Sacraments.

THus I truſt, wee have made it plaine by Scripture, and evidence of argument, that there are but two Sacraments onely, Baptiſme, and the Supper of the Lord, left and enjoyned to the people of God by our Saviour Chriſt: for foure things are required to make a Sacrament: Firſt, the authority of Chriſt in commanding it. Secondly, the element or externall ſigne, as the matter. Thirdly, the word of inſtitution, as the forme. Fourthly, the end and uſe, to be a ſeale of our faith for remiſſion of ſinnes.

1. Concerning the efficient cauſe, wee find that two Sacraments onely in the new Teſtament are commanded by Chriſt to bee uſed for ever in the Church, Baptiſme, and the Lords Supper: which both by his owne example and preſence, as alſo his precept and commandement, were eſtabliſhed.

2. There muſt be an outward viſible elementall ſigne, as is water in Baptiſme, bread and wine in the Lords Supper. But ſo is there not in the five Popiſh Sacraments: For in ſome there is no ſigne at all, as in Matrimony, where they are driven to ſay, that the parties that are married are the ſignes. In ſome there is a ſigne, but not viſible, as in abſolution, the audible voyce of the Prieſt pronouncing the words of abſolution is, they ſay, the outward ſigne: but in all the Sacraments of Chriſts inſtitution, we find a viſible ſigne. In ſome there is an outward ſigne, but it is an action or geſture onely, no materiall element, which is not ſufficient: ſo is the impoſition of hands in giving of Orders. In ſome there is a materiall ſigne, as Chriſme in Confirmation, oyle in extreme Unction: but they are not of Chriſts inſtitution.

3. They alſo want a word of inſtitution: In Penance the Prieſt ſaith, I doe abſolve thee, after particular confeſſion made of his ſinnes. In Confirmation the words are, I ſigne thee with the ſigne of the Croſſe, and confirme thee with the Chriſme of ſalvation, in the name of the Father, Sonne, &c. In Matrimony, I take thee to my wife. In giving of Orders, Receive thou power to offer up the body of Chriſt. In extreme Unction, God by the vertue of this oyle forgive thee thy ſinne. Theſe, they ſay, are the words of the inſtitution: But they can ſhew no word of God for them: for it is not every word that ſanctifieth, but only the word of God, 1 Timoth. 4. Wherefore, ſeeing they have no word of inſtitution, they are no Sacraments. 1 Tim. 4 5.

Laſtly, they want the true uſe and end of a Sacrament, which is, to ſtrengthen our faith for the remiſſion of ſinnes: for in ſome of theſe there is no relation at all had to the forgiveneſſe of ſinnes: As Matrimony doth but performe, ſay they, the graces of marriage, as fidelity, mutuall love, and ſuch like. Orders doe confer the power of Prieſthood. Here is no ſigne or aſſurance of the grace of juſtification. In the reſt, remiſſion of ſins is aſcribed to other inſtrumentall meanes, than to faith only; as to ſatisfactory workes in Abſolution, to Chriſme in Confirmation, to oyle in extreme Unction: wherefore we conclude, becauſe they are no ſeales of the righteouſneſſe of faith, as S. Paul defineth a Sacrament, Rom. 4. 11. that they are no Sacraments of Chriſts inſtitution, but ſuperſtitious ceremonies deviſed by men. Rom. 4 11.

Here endeth the third Centurie.

TO THE RIGHT HONORABLE SIR EDWARD COKE, LORD Chiefe Iuſtice of England, and of his Majeſties moſt honourable privy Councell:

THere bee three things (Right Honourable) whereby Commonwealths are maintained, Religion, Juſtice, and Fortitude: the firſt in directing, the ſecond in decreeing, the third in defending: the one by the ſacred word, the next by wholeſome lawes, the laſt by the valiant ſword: ſo ſaith Wiſdome: By me Kings reigne, and Princes decree juſtice: Kings directed by heavenly knowledge, doe both defend their ſubjects by their power and authority, and guide and governe them by juſtice and equity. The firſt ſimply hath the preeminence: as is well ſet forth in that imperiall law: Scientes magis religionibus, quam officiis, & labore corporis vel ſudore rempublicam noſtram contineri: Knowing that our Commonwealth is rather maintained by religion, than by officious adminiſtration, or bodily execution, &c. For as one well ſaith, A Kingdome by prayer is defended as with a tower, &c. The other two are equally ballanced the one againſt the other, and are as the two props and pillars of the externall ſtate: as Iuſtinian hath thus matched them together, Summa reipublicæ tuitio de ſtirpe duarum rerum, armorum ſcilicet atq; legum veniens, tam militaris res legibus in tuto collocata eſt, quam ipſæ leges armorum præſidio ſervatæ ſunt: The chiefe defence of the Commonwealth iſſueth from the ſtocke of theſe two, armor and lawes, for as well the military buſineſſe is maintained by lawes, as the lawes are preſerved by armor and defence. Neither doe they only goe on warfare, which uſe ſwords, bucklers, and other armor, as the Emperor Leo ſaith, Militant namque cauſarum patroni: But the Patrons and Pleaders of cauſes alſo play the ſouldiers, &c.

Next then unto the divine profeſſion of religion, moſt honourable is the ſtudy of the ſacred lawes: that worthy ſaying of Saint Paul, the law is good if one uſe it lawfully, being firſt uttered of the divine law, may bee extended alſo to humane conſtitutions grounded upon that law: Any thing, being never ſo profitably invented, may yet bee abuſed, and ſo may this excellent ſcience. So is Ambroſe to be underſtood, who thus writeth, alluding to that place, Cantic. 3.2. I ſought him in the ſtreets and open places,--but found him not, Sponſa Chriſtum nec in foro aut plateis reperire potuit: Chriſtus non eſt circumforaneus: Chriſtus enim eſt pax, in foro lites: The Spouſe could not find Chriſt in the court, or ſtreet: Chriſt haunteth not courts: for Chriſt is peace, in the courts is contention. And Hierome taxeth the abuſe, and not the practice, ſaying, Quadrante dignam eloquentiam nare ſubſanno: I ſcorne penny eloquence: but who will not honour ſuch a Lawyer as Gamaliel was, who ſpake in defence of the truth: or ſuch an one as Plato his Lawyer was among the Eginites, who made a law, that it ſhould be death, if any Athenian came thither: but he pleaded, that the law ſpake of an ordinary man, Plato was more, a great Philoſopher; and ſo he eſcaped with his life. And worthy is the memory of that great Lawyer Papiniane, who had rather ſuffer the paines of death, than take upon him the defence of the unjuſt and cruell fact of the Emperour Caracalla, in killing of his brother Geta.

In this rank of worthy profeſſors of the Law, your Honour may deſervedly be numbred: who, as Zenas the Lawyer, was a follower of S. Paul, ſo you have as well ſtudied Pauls Epiſtles, as Law-caſes: we all know and acknowledge you, as a lover of juſtice, ſo a defender of the truth, an hater of iniquity in the one, & of impiety & ſuperſtition in the other: As for the one, we doubt not, but that you willingly embrace his counſell, who ſaid, that a governor muſt not ſo much abſtaine from wrong, as attaine to right: your care

Now to your Lordſhip I have thought good to dedicate part of this worke as your due, to a Judge of controverſies, a treatiſe of controverſies, to a learned writer in your owne profeſſion, I a ſimple writer in mine, a ſhallow Divine and no Lawyer, to one both a great Divine and a deep Lawyer. This I have done, ut non tam inſtruam eruditos, quam incitem paratos: Not to inſtruct, but to incite you, as Tertullian ſaith: In this work I have uſed two kind of proofes eſpecially, the evidence of Scripture: Hoc cuneo veritatis omnis extruditur hæreſis, &c. By this wedge of truth all hereſie is extruded: the other is from the teſtimony of the adverſaries themſelves, which is a ſure and tried way to convince, as he againe ſaith: Firmum eſt genus probationis, quod ab adverſario ſumitur, ut veritas ab ipſis inimicis veritatis probetur: It is a firme kind of proof, which is taken from the adverſary, that the truth may be approved from the enemies of truth, &c.

Tertullian. adverſ. Marcion. lib. 1.

This labour I have undertaken, and now this fourth time publiſhed: firſt, that all men might underſtand the ſtate of the queſtions and controverſies betweene us and the Papiſts, and diſcerne with judgement: Nihil veritas erubeſcit, niſi ſolummodo abſcondi: The truth is never aſhamed but to be hid. Secondly, that they which have been in ſimplicity ſeduced by their ſubtill ringleaders, may learne to reforme their errors: Quis enim nauſeabit ad antidotum, qui hiavit ad venenum? For who will lothe the antidote, which hath gaped for the poyſon? &c. Thirdly, I have written to adviſe the Popiſh ſectmaſters themſelves, as Terullian ſaith, with whoſe words, leſt I be further troubleſome, I will conclude: Non vos terremus, quia nec timemus, ſed velim, ut omnes ſalvos facere poſſemus, monendo, μὴ θεομαχεῖν. We go not about to fray you, becauſe we neither are afraid of you, but my will and deſire is to ſave you all, by admoniſhing you not to fight againſt God, &c. in reſiſting the truth: which God grant may proſper and flouriſh for ever. HERE ENSVE SVCH CONTROVERSIES AND QVESTIONS, as are moved concerning the benefits of our Redemption, purchaſed unto us by the death of Chriſt.

HAving now ſufficiently entreated of all thoſe matters, wherein wee and our adverſaries diſſent, as touching the propheticall, regall, and Prieſtly office of our Saviour Chriſt: the next place according to our purpoſed order and method, doth offer unto us ſuch queſtions to bee conſidered of, as are handled betweene our adverſaries and us, concerning the benefits enſuing by theſe heavenly offices of Chriſt. And this Treatiſe containeth three Controverſies, which now follow in order: The firſt is of the ſtate of man in his firſt creation, before his fall. The ſecond, of the fall of man, the condition and quality thereof. The third, of the reparation of our decayed nature, and our reſtitution by Chriſt.

The firſt Controverſie being the 17. in the whole, of the ſtate of man in Paradiſe.

THis controverſie containeth three queſtions. Firſt of the ſtate of mans ſoule by creation. Secondly, of the quality and condition of his body. Thirdly, of the place, namely, of Paradiſe.

The firſt Queſtion, of the perfection of the ſoule of man.

The Papiſts.

1. Error.
Epheſ. 4. 24.
Coloſſ. 3. 10.

IT is agreed betweene us, that man was created in his ſoule according to the image of God, both in holineſſe and righteouſneſſe in his will and affections, as S. Paul ſheweth, Epheſ. 4. 24. as alſo with the light and perfection of knowledge, and judgement in the underſtanding part, Coloſſ. 3. 10. for in theſe two conſiſted the image of God. Being thus agreed of the thing it ſelfe, we diſſent about the manner: for the Papiſts opinion is, that the originall juſtice and perfection, wherein Adam was created, was not in him a naturall gift, either that it was a part of his nature, or did ariſe or ſpring out of any naturall beginning; as we ſay the ſoule in the body, and the underſtanding in the ſoule, are naturall: but that it was meerely a ſupernaturall gift, having no naturall beginning: even as Helias taken up into heaven in a fiery chariot, was a thing ſimply and abſolutely ſupernaturall. They ſay alſo further, that man now hath all the pure naturals that Adam had, and that the humane nature is the very ſame that Adams was: And that Adam if it had not beene for that ſupernaturall gift, ſhould have beene ſubject to the like ignorance, and infirmity, and rebellion of fleſh that we are, ſaving that, then in Adam, Ex natura & conditione materia profluxiſſet: Thoſe infirmities ſhould have ſprung out of the very nature of man, and the quality of the mould that he was made: but now in us they doe proceed ex originali culpa, of originall ſinne. This then is their ſentence, that Adams nature by creation, and ours now by birth, is all one: Bellarm. de grat. primi homin. cap. 5. And hee further declareth his minde thus: The ſtate of man after the fall of Adam differeth no more from the ſtate of Adam in his pure naturals, than a man that is ſpoyled differeth from a naked man, that is, nothing at all: Neither is mans nature now more ſubject to ignorance and infirmity, if you take away originall ſinne, than it ſhould have bin, being created in the pure naturals: and therefore the corruption of nature is not by want of any naturall gift, or by the acceſſion of any evill quality, but only by the loſſe of that ſupernaturall gift, by reaſon of Adams ſin. Bellar. ibid. So then 1. his opinion appeareth plainly to be this, that as a man ſpoiled differeth not from a naked man in the ſubſtance of the thing, but in the cauſe or maner; for the one is ſpoiled by force, the other is naked without force, yet both without clothing; ſo man in his creation without that ſupernatural gift or grace, was as naked, but now by ſin is as one robbed & ſpoiled. 2. Againe, he ſaith, If you take away originall ſinne? If he meane, that our nature is the ſame with Adams but for ſinne, he fighteth with his owne ſhadow; for no man denieth, but that ſinne cauſed this alteration in the nature of man. 3. And he ſpeaketh againſt himſelfe: for if originall ſinne bee the cauſe of our corruption, It commeth by the acceſſion of an evill qualitie, which he before denied: unleſſe hee will denie that ſinne is an evill qualitie. 4. But if hee make exception of originall ſinne, not in regard of the fruits and effects thereof, but as of the cauſe, that Adams ignorance and infirmitie ſhould have proceeded of another cauſe than originall ſinne, that is, out of the condition of his owne nature; it is a great error, as afterwards ſhall appeare: let us ſee ſome of his arguments.

Gen.3.19. Argum. 1. God ſaid to Adam, Gen. 3. Duſt thou art, and to duſt thou ſhalt returne: that is, by nature and creation, had it not beene for that ſupernaturall gift which I gave, which now thou haſt loſt, thou art mortall. Alſo *Pſal.*8. the Pſalmiſt ſaith, What is man, &c. thou haſt made him a little lower than the Angels, and crowned him with glory and honour: but Adam being created with a bodily ſubſtance, could not by nature, but by a ſupernaturall gift onely be made like the Angels: And ſo much is implyed by theſe words, glory and honour, which are things not naturally inherent, but outwardly added; *Argum.Bellarm.cap.*6.

Anſw. 1. To the firſt place wee anſwer thus: that it was ſpoken to Adam after his fall: And the Lord in ſaying, thou art duſt, &c. did not there ſhew the ſtate wherein he was created, but whereinto hee was fallen by ſin, for by nature hee was no more to returne to duſt, than to eat his bread in the ſweat of his browes; for they are both joyned together. If they anſwer that this was alſo a ſupernaturall gift to be void of labour and trouble, in ſeeking his food; then was it a ſupernaturall gift alſo in the earth not to bring forth thornes and thiſtles: for theſe are the cauſe that man muſt eat his bread with ſweat, that is, with labour in tilling the ground. But it were abſurd to ſay, that God created the earth in the beginning with an aptneſſe and inclination to bring forth weeds and unprofitable herbs, ſeeing all he made was excellent good.

2. To the other place alſo we doe thus make anſwer: firſt, why might not God naturally create the ſoule of man like unto Angels, though it were incloſed in the body, as naturally he hath created the bodies of beaſts in ſtrength, ſenſe, agility, ſwiftneſſe, and the like qualities, not onely equall, but farre ſuperiour to the bodies of men, which are joyned with a reaſonable ſoule, but the bodies of beaſts to
Heb.2.15. an unreaſonable? Secondly, this place, *Heb.*2.15. properly is applied to Chriſt, *verſ.*9. But we ſee Jeſus crowned with honour and glory: but the glory of Chriſt is not accidentall, externall, or ſupernatu-
Iohn 17.5. rall: but altogether in him naturall, which he had with God his father before the world was, John 17. 5. Therefore Bellarmine faileth in his collection here.

Argum. 2. If Adams integrity and innocency were naturall, then they ſhould have remained after his ſinne; as the ſame naturals in devils doe ſtill remaine: but ſo doe they not, Ergo.

Anſwer. Firſt, the argument followeth not in naturall qualities: for Adam had knowledge without ignorance, memory without oblivion before his fall, which were naturall in him, but ſo hath he not now: ſo the naturall qualities are corrupted and decayed by ſinne, but the naturall ſubſtance and ſubject as of the ſoule and body remaineth ſtill, though much depraved and corrupted by ſinne.

Secondly, yet this naturall integrity of Adam is not utterly by ſinne extinct, for there is in man a law of nature, which is a remainder of that law of perfection, whereby a mans thoughts doe either
Rom.2.14. accuſe him or excuſe him, *Rom.*2.14.

Thirdly, neither doe the ſame naturall qualities remaine in the reprobate ſpirits, which they had before their fall: for they have alſo loſt the integrity and innocency of nature; yea, and in other qualities of the ſpirituall nature are inferiour to the elect Angels.

Fourthly, the reaſon is not like betweene man and ſpirits: for the decay of perfection in ſpirits is helped by their ſpirituall nature, and long continuance, and therefore it is no marvell, that evill ſpirits are in underſtanding, memory, knowledge, agility of nature farre beyond the ſoules of men, which are both clogged with terrene bodies, and by the mortality thereof abridged of the courſe of experience.

The Proteſtants.

THat the gifts of integrity and innocency were in our firſt parents by nature of their creation; yet not without Gods gift (for even naturall things are of Gods grace; that is, the generall grace and gift of the creation, which is not properly called grace, *Lombard.diſt.*25.*lib.*2.) and that their naturals were not the ſame, but much more pure and perfect than ours are; neither that they were the ſame in them before and after their fall, thus we prove it.

Argum. 1. If Adams naturals were the ſame that ours are, then would it follow that the concupiſcence of the fleſh, which is in us by nature, was alſo naturall in Adam, and that Adam ſhould have beene as prone by nature unto all kind of vice as wee are: which if it be granted, this were to make God the author of ſinne, and his workmanſhip imperfect, if he had not made man ſuch an one by creation, as could not ſinne.

Bellarmine anſwereth: granting that the concupiſcence of the fleſh was by nature in Adam, and that if he had beene created in his pure naturals onely, he ſhould have beene as prone to ſinne as wee are: But God (ſaith hee) did take away, ſuſtulerat concupiſcentiam, this concupiſcence, and bridle it by a ſupernaturall gift. Secondly, it followeth not, that God ſhould have beene the author of evill, for concupiſcence is not properly ſinne: neither if God had created man in his pure naturals, ſhould it follow that he made concupiſcence: Quæ præter intentionem agentis ex conditione materiæ conſequuta fuiſſet: Which ſhould have proceeded from the condition or quality of the mould or matter, whereof man was made, beſide the purpoſe or intention of the Creator: Bellar.cap.7.reſponſ.ad 1.9.& 10.objection.

Contra. Firſt, it is falſe that Adam ſhould have beene as prone to ſinne, continuing in his pure naturals, as we are: ſeeing that neither we ſhould have been made ſinners, if Adam had remained in his naturals, and not added the actuall ſinne of diſobedience, which ſinne, and not his pure naturals, made both him, and us ſinners, as S. Paul ſheweth, Rom. 5. 19. By one mans diſobedience many were made ſinners: he ſaith not, by his naturals. Secondly, he ſaith, that God tooke away Adams naturall concupiſcence: then God did correct his owne workmanſhip, and ſo it ſhould be imperfect. And againe, the Jeſuite here forgetteth his owne rule, that, Nullum naturale principium aut donum corrumpitur: That no naturall part or gift can be corrupted or changed in man; and yet here he ſaith, that God took away or ſuppreſſed Adams naturall concupiſcence: ſo then the generation or infuſing of a ſupernaturall gift, was the corruption and deſtruction of the naturall. Thirdly, neither can it bee avoided, that God ſhould not be the author of ſinne: for concupiſcence is properly ſinne, as the Apoſtle ſaith, hee knew not ſinne but by the law: and then it followeth, I had not knowne luſt, unleſſe the law had ſaid, thou ſhalt not luſt: ſo that luſt is ſinne. Neither is it like, that any thing can fall out beſides the intention and purpoſe of the Creator: for God cannot be deceived, Who worketh all things according to the counſell of his owne will, Epheſ. 1.11. All things are wrought according to the counſell, purpoſe, and intention of God: Ergo, nothing falleth out beſide, or contrary unto it.

Epheſ.1.11.

Argum. 2. Every gift and grace beſide the generall grace of creation, is given by the mediation of Chriſt, and the merit of his paſſion, Epheſ. 4. 8. Hee led captivity captive, that is, by his death, and gave gifts to men: but as Auguſtine ſaith, Adam in illis bonis in quibus creatus, Chriſti morte non eguit: Adam in thoſe gifts wherein he was created, had no need of Chriſts death: *De corrept.grat.c.*11.Ergo, the graces which Adam had in the ſtate of his innocency, did belong to his creation.

Epheſ.4.8.

Argum. 3. Whatſoever Adam had by creation, hee had by nature: for as our birth is unto us, ſo was Adams creation to him: and as well that was naturall to him, which was given by creation; as that naturall to us which we have in our birth: But Adam by his creation was made righteous, Eccleſ. 7. verſ. 31. Ergo, his perfection and originall juſtice was in him in his creation, through the gift of the Creator, naturall.

Eccleſ.7 31.

Bellarm. Firſt, it is true that God made man righteous, but it was by a ſupernaturall gift beſide the worke of the creation. Secondly, if man had beene created onely in his pure naturals, hee might be ſaid to be made right or perfect, becauſe as yet there was no evill in him, but onely a poſſibility and ſubjection thereunto; like as an iron ſword is ſubject to ruſt, *Bellar. c.*5. & c. 7. *reſp. ad argum.*10.

Anſw. Firſt, that man by the very worke of his creation, was made perfect and righteous, it is evident by the Scripture; for he was created according to Gods image, Geneſ. 1. 26. and the image of God is expounded by the Apoſtle, to be *in righteouſneſſe and holineſſe, Epheſ.*4.24. Gods generall gift and grace beſtowed upon man in his creation, we grant, but of any other grace beſide conferred in the worke of the creation, we reade not.

Epheſ.4.24.

Secondly, as iron, becauſe it is but a baſe metall, is ſubject to ruſt; but the more perfect and precious metals, as of ſilver and gold are not: ſo if man by creation had an inclination to ſinne, hee could not be perfect. This then is the difference betweene us: they ſay, that man was created like iron that is made bright, and kept from ruſting with oyle; ſo man in his creation was upheld from falling and ſinning by a ſupernaturall gift: we rather ſay, that man was created as gold, without any aptneſſe or inclination by nature to corruption, if he had not fallen away by ſinne from his ſtate of innocency.

Laſtly, we reaſon thus: Whatſoever was in Chriſt as touching his humanity, was of the nature of man: for in all things he was made like unto us, ſinne onely excepted: and as the firſt Adam was in his perfection, ſo was the laſt: for the firſt Adam was a figure of him that was to come, *Rom.*5.14. But Chriſt as he was man had a perfect ſoule: Ergo, perfection was of the nature of man, in his ſtate uncorrupted. So Auguſtine ſaith: Mente humana perfecta, &c. God onely is greater than a perfect human ſoule, ſuch as was in Chriſt, &c. Hee calleth a perfect and righteous ſoule, an human ſoule: and whatſoever is human, is of or belonging to the nature of man.

Synod. Moguntin. cap. 3. Deus ab initio creavit hominem ad imaginem ſuam, intus in animo pravis motibus vacuum, &c. God in the beginning created man after his image, in his ſoule void of evill motions, &c. Ergo man by nature in his creation, was indued with a perfect and righteous ſoule.

From hence I reaſon thus: Adams ſoule received the print or image in the creation; (unleſſe they will ſay, that Adams ſoule was created bare and naked: but the righteouſneſſe and holineſſe of Adam was this print or image: Ergo, he received it in the creation.

Harm ſect.4. pag.67. Confeſſ. of Bohemia, c.4. The grace of God, and thoſe good gifts of juſtice, and the image of God, which in his creation were engraffed in him, he partly loſt them, and partly corrupted and defiled them, &c. Theſe things were ingraffed then in man, in his creation.

The ſecond Queſtion, of the quality and condition of the body of man by creation.

The Papiſts.

2. Error. Bellarmine* his opinion is, that the immortality of Adams body was a ſupernaturall gift: and that by nature his body was created mortall, but that this naturall mortality was taken away by the ſupernaturall gift of immortality, Bellar. de grat. primi homin. cap.9.

Argum. 1. His beſt reaſon is drawne from that place of Scripture, which he alleaged before: Duſt thou art, &c, which the Jeſuite would have underſtood of Adams creation: becauſe the reaſon is rendred, Thou ſhalt returne to duſt, becauſe thou waſt taken out of the duſt.

Anſ. This was ſpoken to Adam, after that by his tranſgreſſion he had deſerved death. And whereas the Lord ſaith, For out of the duſt thou waſt taken, it ſheweth not that hee was created mortall: but that he had a poſſibility onely of mortality, into the which he might fall by ſinne, and ſo loſe the immortality of nature, wherein he was created: for this is the difference betweene the immortality of man by creation, and the immortality which we ſhall have by grace through Chriſt; that man in his creation had power, poſſe non mori, not to die, if he would, that is, if hee kept himſelfe in obedience: but in the kingdome of heaven we ſhall have a gift, non poſſe mori, not to have power or poſſibility to die. And Auguſtine ſaith, Bina iſta quid inter ſe differunt, diligenter intuendum eſt, &c. Wee muſt diligently conſider, what difference is betweene theſe two: Poſſe non peccare, & non poſſe peccare, To bee able not to ſinne, and not to bee able to ſinne: To have power not to dye, and not to have power to dye: The firſt man was able not to ſinne, not to dye; but wee cannot ſay, non potuit mori, hee had no power to dye, or to ſinne: De correp. & grat. c. 11. If Adam before his fall had power not to dye, then had he power to be immortall; then conſequently he was not created mortall.

Argum. 2. Adam in his creation was made apt to generation, for God ſaid unto him, Increaſe and multiply: he had need alſo both of meat and drinke: Ergo, he was created mortall, Bellar. c.9.

Reſp. Firſt, aptneſſe to generation proveth not mortality, but ſuch generation onely as is by concupiſcence and ſinne procured: 1. as the tree of life in Paradiſe was alſo increaſe and multiply, but it ſhould not have beene corruptible: 2. Eva by a kind of generation was produced out of Adam, ſhee ſhould notwithſtanding have beene immortall. 3. Some affirme, that the ſoule commeth into the body by a kind of generation, ex traduce, yet they hold notwithſtanding, the immortality of the ſoule. 4. Chriſt had a generation, as God, will ye conclude him therefore to be mortall? He alſo had a generation according to the fleſh, yet was hee not ſubject at all to corruption, nor to death of neceſſity, but of his owne will.

Secondly, the Angels did eat and drinke, yet were not their bodies mortall, wherein they appeared: therefore not every eating and drinking proveth mortality, but to eat and drink with hunger, thirſt, and of neceſſity: but Adam in Paradiſe ſhould neither have felt hunger nor thirſt, heat or cold, as Auguſtine ſaith, In Paradiſo abſit ut credamus aliquid fuiſſe, unde ſenſum aut dolor pungeret, &c. Farre be it from us to think, that there was any thing in Paradiſe, whereby either griefe ſhould offend the ſenſe, or labour weary the body: Cont. Iulian. lib.5.*c.*8.

The Proteſtants.

THat Adam was by nature created immortall, if he had not ſinned, we by theſe reaſons doe make it good.

Argum. 1. The ſoule of Adam was immortall, and therefore it was meet and requiſite, that a body alſo immortall ſhould be joyned unto it.

Bellar. Yea, an immortall body is moſt meet for an immortall ſoule: but the functions of the body, which are now exerciſed, and ſhould have beene in the ſtate of inuocency, doe require a body temperated together of divers humours and qualities, which muſt needs make it mortall, Bellarm. c.9.

Contra. Firſt, if an immortall body had beene a fitteſt companion for the ſoule, and yet was not given unto it: then by their ſentence, God did not that which was moſt meet and convenient. Secondly, what manner of qualitied body humane actions require now, it ſkilleth not: certaine it is, that if man had not ſinned, he ſhould have done no other thing than were beſeeming an immortall body, ſuch as he had by creation.

Argum.* 2. Auguſtine ſaith, Conſtat inter Chriſtianos veraciter Catholicam tenentes fidem, etiam ipſam nobis corporis mortem non lege naturæ, —ſed merito inflictam eſſe peccati : It is evident among Chriſtians rightly holding the Chriſtian faith, that even the death of body is laid upon us, not by the law of nature, but by deſert of ſinne. S. Paul alſo ſheweth, that death came in by ſinne, Rom. 5. 17. *Ergo, before man had ſinned, he was not ſubject to death.

Lib. 13. de civit. Dei, cap. 15.

Bellarm. anſwereth, that death came in by ſinne, becauſe by ſinne that ſupernaturall gift was loſt, whereby man was preſerved from mortality.

Contra. Yet hath he not ſufficiently anſwered : for if man remaining in his pure naturals was ſubject to death, then ſhould there have beene death in the world without ſinne, which S. Paul denieth, for death is the wages of ſinne, Rom.* 6. 23.

Rom. 6. 23.

Argum. 3. Chriſts body had no poſſibility of corruption, Act.* 2. 24. It was impoſſible hee ſhould bee holden of death : the reaſon is given, verſ. 27. *Thou wilt not ſuffer thy holy one to ſee corruption : Chriſts holineſſe and freedome from ſinne preſerved him from corruption : Ergo, Adam in the ſtate of innocency was free from the poſſibility of mortality and corruption.

Auguſtine alſo ſaith, Perfunctos obedientiæ munere, &c. Our parents having performed their duty of obedience : angelica eos immortalitas, &c. the angelicall immortality had followed them, ſine interventu mortis, without death comming betweene, de civitat. The third Queſtion, of the place where Adam was created : namely, Paradiſe.

THe Jeſuite affirmeth, that Paradiſe, where Adam was placed, was a terreſtriall place : which wee grant : and ſuch a place, as was not knowne to any : and therefore hee miſliketh their opinions, that would define where Paradiſe ſhould be : Some think, that Paradiſe is taken for the whole world, as Ioſephus : ſome, that it is a place divided from the world beyond the Ocean ſea : Others imagine it to be a high ſituated region, reaching even unto the globe of the Moone : others think it was in Meſopotamia : But Bellarmine approveth none of theſe opinions, but ſaith ſtill that Paradiſe was a place unknowne, yet that it remaineth ſtill unto this day, Bellarmin. cap.* 12. & 14. This queſtion then hath two parts : firſt, whether that Paradiſe were a place alwayes unknowne to men : Secondly, whether that Paradiſe doth remaine to this day.

3. Error.

The Papiſts.

THat Paradiſe was a ſecret place kept from the knowledge of men, the Jeſuite would ſeeme to prove it thus.

Argum. 1. If Paradiſe were ſituate in a knowne place, it is moſt like by the deſcription to have been in Meſopotamia ; but there it was not : for the text ſaith, that out of Eden went a river, which afterward was divided into foure heads : but there is no ſuch river, that hath his beginning in Meſopotamia : Ergo, Bellarm. cap.* 12.

Anſw. The text ſaith not, that this river had his beginning in Eden, but went out from Eden, that is, it might have the beginning before, and ſo run thorow Eden : neither are wee to underſtand the place ſo, as though this river, as ſoone as it was runne thorow Eden, did divide it ſelfe into foure heads : but theſe foure heads or branches doe come from two rivers, Tigris, and Euphrates, which running aſunder till they come to Eden, make two heads, which in the text are called Hiddekle and Perath, and ſo joyning together, as they paſſe through Eden, doe againe divide themſelves, and ſo make two heads more, Phiſon and Gihon, and ſo run into the Perſian gulfe.

Argum. 2. How could Paradiſe bee a knowne place being kept of the Cherubins by a fiery ſword?

Anſw. Firſt, the keeping of it with the fiery ſword, doth ſhew that it was a place inacceſſible, and not inhabited before the flood: for ſo long was it ſo kept: but it might bee knowne where it was ſituate, though the paſſage thereunto were ſtopped. Secondly, after that the beauty of Paradiſe was deſtroyed by the flood, it needed not any more the cuſtody or watch of Angels: but the place where Paradiſe was planted then lay open to man and beaſt, being both knowne and inhabited.

The Proteſtants.

THat Paradiſe, otherwiſe called Eden, was planted in a knowne place of the world, which was moſt like to be Meſopotamia; thus we make it plaine.

Argum. 1. The two rivers mentioned in the deſcription of Eden, namely, Hiddekle, which is Tigris; and Perath, which is Euphrates, are found to run through Meſopotamia: Ergo, there alſo was Paradiſe.

Bellarmine anſwereth, that the two other heads of the river, namely Phiſon and Gihon, are the two rivers Ganges and Nilus, which come not neere Meſopotamia, and therefore it is not like that the two other rivers make the other two heads, cap.12.

Contra. Firſt, Phiſon and Gihon cannot bee the knowne rivers Ganges, whoſe beginning is in the mountaines of Scythia; and Nilus which ſpringeth from the mountaines in Æthiopia: for Phiſon and Gihon are two heads of one Fountaine and River: but Ganges and Nilus have two ſeverall heads or fountaines many thouſand miles aſunder; Ganges in Aſia, and Nilus in Africa.

Secondly, if Ganges and Nilus be theſe two heads, which are knowne Rivers, and their fountaines alſo knowne, then muſt Eden alſo be knowne, where the Jeſuite hath his beginning.

Bellarmine replieth, that Phiſon and Gihon cannot bee two heads ſpringing from Tigris and Euphrates. 1. Becauſe thoſe two heads are ſaid to compaſſe divers nations; but the branches of thoſe two rivers doe run by a ſtraight courſe into the Perſian Sea. 2. The mapps doe ſhew that Tigris and Euphrates after their conjunction are not divided againe, but run together into the Sea.

Ierem.2.18.

3. Ierem. 2.18. the Septuagint reade thus, What haſt thou to do in the way of Egypt, to drink the water of Geon? Geon then is Nilus the river of Ægypt. Againe, Eccleſiaſtic.24.31. Gihon is ſaid to overflow in the time of vintage, and ſo doth Nilus. 4. Hierome, Ambroſe, with others, doe take Phiſon and Gihon for Ganges and Nilus, Bellarm.cap.12.

Contra. Firſt, it is evident, that Phiſon and Gihon the neather ſtreames of Tigris and Euphrates, doe paſſe through and compaſſe in a manner the lands Havilah, where gold is; and Cuſh, which is Arabia deſerta, before they fall into the ſea.

Secondly, if he view the Mapp better, or follow the beſt deſcription, hee ſhall find that the rivers Tigris and Euphrates part againe before they run into the Sea.

Ioſu.13.3.

Thirdly, 1. in Ierem. 2.18. the Hebrew hath not Geon, but Sichar, which ſome doe take for Nilus, others upon better ground, for a river, that paſſing by Arabia Petrea, falleth into the lake Sirbon, and divideth the Land of promiſe from Egypt, Ioſu. 13.3. neither doth the vulgar Latine reade, Geon, but aquam turbidam, troubled water.

Deut.11.10.

2. It is 1. no good argument, that Geon ſhould bee Nilus, becauſe it overfloweth in the time of Vintage: as though it is not uſuall for rivers to riſe twice in the yeere, in the Spring, and in Autumne: 2. and yet Nilus greateſt overflowing is in ſeed time, which is in the Spring, Deut.11.10. 3. I urge not beſide, that this booke is not canonicall; for the other anſwers are ſufficient beſide.

Fourthly, Hierome and Ambroſe doe follow the opinion of the Greekes, who were herein deceived by the tranſlation of the Septuagint: as Ambroſe de Paradiſ. cap. 3. Phiſon Ganges eſt ſecundum Græcos: Phiſon is the river Ganges according to the Greekes, &c. And Epiphanius ſaith, Ego vidi aquas Geon, &c. I have ſeene with mine eyes the waters of Geon, meaning Nilus, and then he alleageth Ierem. 2.18. where the Septuagint ſo reade: epiſt. ad Ioann. Hieroſolym. So that this conceit of the Greekes was grounded upon the erroneous tranſlation of the Septuagint.

Geneſ.2.10.
Geneſ.2.13.

Fifthly, this opinion is contrary to Scripture, 1. Phiſon and Gihon come out of one river, and have the ſame beginning: Geneſ. 2. 10. But Ganges and Nilus are many hundred miles diſtant. 2. Gihon compaſſeth the whole land of Cuſh, Geneſ.2.13. Which they take to bee Æthiopia; but Nilus compaſſeth Ægypt, not Æthiopia, taking his beginning only from thence: ſo that Cuſh here is not taken for Æthiopia, but for Arabia deſerta, for it is a generall name to them both. 3. Whereas Epiphanius ſaith, he had ſeene Geon, and that he had drunke of the great river Euphrates: the rivers of Paradiſe being ſo well knowne, how could Paradiſe be a place unknowne?

Argum. 2. Againe, Eden is deſcribed by the countries next adjoyning, as Aſſyria, Geneſ. 2.14. So Charran and Eden are joyned together, Iſai.37.verſ.12. Cain alſo is ſaid to have dwelled on the Eaſt ſide of Eden: But theſe countries were well knowne: Ergo, ſo was Eden.

Bellarmine anſwereth, that this Eden in theſe places mentioned, was another Eden beſide that, out of the which Adam was throwne: unleſſe you will ſay, that Cain was ſent and baniſhed into Paradiſe, Bellarm.cap.13.

Anſw. Firſt, the Jeſuite cannot ſhew unto us any other Eden out of the ſtory of the Bible: Geneſ. 2.14. that Eden is ſpoken of, which is neere to Aſhur: Iſai 3.7. that Eden, which is joyning to Charran: But Aſſhur and Charran were not farre aſunder, Ezec. 27.23. therefore it was one and the ſelfe ſame Eden. Secondly, the text ſaith not, that Cain was exiled into Paradiſe, or that he dwelt in Paradiſe, but by the Eaſt ſide of Paradiſe.

Saint Ambroſe ſaith, *Epiſt.*42.Ioſephus hiſtoriographus,&c. Ioſephus the Hiſtoriographer ſaith, that Paradiſe is a place full of trees and plants, and is watered with a river, which is divided into foure ſtreames. How could Ioſephus deſcribe Paradiſe, if it had beene an unknowne place? And if they will have Paradiſe ſo ſecret a place, let them ſay with their Maſter, that Paradiſe was ſituate in a region that reached up to the circle of the Moone: *lib.*2.*d.*17.lit.e.Ianſenius a learned Papiſt witneſſeth with us, that Paradiſe was ſituate in Meſopotamia, but afterward defaced and deſtroyed by the floud, in cap. 143.concord.Evangelic. So alſo Vatablus,Oleaſter.in 2.Geneſ.

Tertullian ſaith: Peculiarem Protoplaſtis, æterna vita mundum quendam Paradiſum in oriente conſtituit: God planted to our firſt parents Paradiſe in the Eaſt, as a certaine world of eternall life, &c. It ſeemeth then by the ſituation of it, that Paradiſe was not planted in a place altogether unknowne. Lib.de Trinit.

Iuſtinus Martyr calleth it, ſenſible Paradiſe: and he thinketh that Homer in the deſcription of Alcinous garden, imitated Moſes deſcription of Paradiſe, and calleth it εἰκόνα an image or repreſentation of Paradiſe: but he could not have taken his deſcription from an obſcure and unknowne place. παράδεισος αἰσθητὸς, qu. orthod 76. Cohortat.ad Græcos.

Some of our beſt new writers of the reformed Churches held Paradiſe to have beene ſituate in a part of Meſopotamia, or Chaldea. Pet Martyr cleſ. 1. c. 12. 29. Iun in 2. Gen. numer.24.cum aliis.

The ſecond part of this Queſtion, whether the terreſtriall place of Paradiſe doe yet remaine.

The Papiſts.

THeir beſt argument is this: Henoch and Helias doe yet remaine alive in Paradiſe in their bodies, Ergo, there is a Paradiſe, *cap.*12. 4 Error.

Anſwer. Firſt, that Henoch and Helias doe live with God wee deny not, but whether in their bodies or no, the Scripture ſaith not. Secondly, but that they live in an earthly and terreſtriall place, ſuch as he imagineth Paradiſe to bee, it is contrary to Scripture, which ſaith, that Elias went up in a whirlewind to heaven, 2 Kings 2.11. Ergo, hee is not in earth. Thirdly, Paradiſe is now no terreſtriall but a celeſtiall place in heaven: for Saint Paul taketh Paradiſe and heaven for all one, 2 Corinth. 12.4. 2 King 2.11. 2 Cor.12 4.

The Proteſtants.

THat the terreſtriall Paradiſe is not now extant upon the earth, but long agoe, as it is moſt like, deſtroyed by the flood, we thus ſhew it.

Argum. 1. The waters in the flood covered the whole earth, and prevailed over all the mountaines that are under the heaven, fifteene cubits, *Geneſ.*7.20. wherefore it is moſt like, that Paradiſe was then deſtroyed. Gen.7.20.

Bellarm. Firſt, hee ſaith, that all thoſe mountaines were covered with waters, where ſinners and mortall men dwelt, whom the Lord purpoſed to deſtroy, ſo that the mountaines and regions of Paradiſe are excepted.

Contra. Firſt, but the text ſaith all the mountaines were covered under the whole heavens: how then dare he make the holy Ghoſt a liar, and ſay, as it were correcting the text, no, all were not covered. Secondly, thus to uphold his fancies, he runneth to forged miracles: for the waters being fifteene cubits above other mountaines, and yet not overflowing Paradiſe, muſt needs compaſſe it about, as a wall, and ſtand as a collar of a coat round about it: But what authority hath hee thus to coyne miracles beſide Scripture?

Bellarmine anſwereth, that it had beene a greater miracle to ſee Henoch and Elias hanging in the ayre to bee kept from the waters, for they could not have lived in Paradiſe, being overflowen, as it is certaine they doe.

Contra. Why Bellarmine? Elias was taken up into heaven, as wee proved out of Scripture, and therefore he needed not to have feared the flood upon the earth. Thirdly, if Paradiſe were not overflowen, God might have ſpared the making of the Arke, for Noah with his family and all the cattell might have beene more ſafely kept in Paradiſe.

Bellarmine ſaith, it was no place for ſinners.

Anſw. Why Noah was a faithfull man, and no more a ſinner now, than Henoch was, when he was taken up: might not Noah therefore as well have beene kept there as Henoch? eſpecially ſeeing hee was not to continue there, but to remaine only for a time, till the deluge were overpaſt?

Secondly, Bellarmine denieth the argument: it followeth not, that Paradiſe ſhould be utterly deſtroyed, though it were overflowen: for the deluge did not change the ſituation of the place, nor the diſpoſition of the aire, &c. *Bellarm.cap.*14.

Anſw. Firſt, the overflowing of water, which many times caſteth downe hils, and filleth up valleyes, which maketh ſtanding pooles where it was dry land, muſt of neceſſity bring great alteration, both for the pleaſant ſituation, and the temperate ayre. Secondly, we ſay not, that by the floud Paradiſe was utterly made deſolate: for it remained a pleaſant and fertile ſoyle even afterward, Geneſ. 10. 10. (Geneſ.10.10.) The land of Sodome and Gomorrha, before it was deſtroyed, is ſaid to have beene like the Lords garden, which was Eden: But yet the beauty and excellency of Paradiſe was by the flood decayed.

Argum. 2. That Paradiſe is now only remaining, which is the receptacle of the bleſſed ſoules of the Saints after this life: This day (ſaith Chriſt) ſhalt thou be with mee in Paradiſe, Luke 23. 43. (Luke 23 43.) the Goſpell ſpeaketh not of any other Paradiſe. But this can bee no terreſtriall place: for the ſoules of the righteous goe to heaven: and Paradiſe, in the Jeſuites judgement, is a receptacle of bodies, not of ſoules: Ergo, there is no ſuch terreſtriall Paradiſe.

Saint Ambroſe witneſſeth with us: Tum ſalvus ero, &c. Then I ſhall be ſafe, when I ſhall be in Paradiſe, where I ſhall live inter electos Angelos, among the elect Angels: ſerm. 15. in Pſal. 119. Againe, in 2 Corinth. 12. Vltra omnia mundi ſydera raptus intelligitur, &c. Paul is ſaid to bee rapt or taken up beyond all the ſtarres, &c, and into that Paradiſe, of the which the Lord ſpake to the theefe, even where the city Jeruſalem is, the mother of us all, &c. Paradiſe then is no other where now but in heaven.

Of this judgement is Chryſoſtome, who thinketh, that before Chriſts death none aſcended into Paradiſe but the theefe: latro primus cum Chriſto intravit, the theefe firſt entred with Chriſt, &c. It is not then any terreſtriall place, where they imagine Henoch and Elias to bee kept in their bodies: which is one of their chiefe reaſons, that the earthly Paradiſe ſhould remaine ſtill. Damaſcene ſaith of Helias, that he is οὐρανοφοίτης, an heaven walker: he thinketh not then, that he is in any terreſtriall place.

2. And Tertullian alſo thinketh the Paradiſe now remaining to be a place for ſpirits, not for bodies: he calleth it, Locum divinæ amœnitatis recipiendis ſanctorum ſpiritibus deſtinatum, a place of divine pleaſure appointed for the receiving of the ſpirits of the Saints.

3. Of this opinion are our [a] Proteſtant writers, that the terreſtriall Paradiſe was diſſolved by the flood, or before [b] immediately after mans fall.

4. And ſome of their owne beſt writers doe concurre herein with us, as Engubinus, Oleaſter, Vatablus, in their annotations upon the 2. chap. of Geneſis: [c] Ianſenius, who all are of opinion, that the earthly Paradiſe was defaced by the flood.

The Doway Commenters doe give this note, Whether this Paradiſe bee now extant is uncertaine, &c.

An Appendix or third part of this Queſtion, concerning the tree of life in Paradiſe.

The Papiſts.

5. Error.

BEllarmine rehearſeth two opinions of this matter: ſome thinke that it was called the tree of life, becauſe by eating thereof Adam might bee preſerved from death, and his ſubſtance, which might decay, in time be reſtored: ſic Auguſtine. Others are of opinion that it was appointed to bee a meane to bring Adam to perfect immortality, ſuch as we ſhall have after the reſurrection: Of this minde is Bellarmine.

Geneſ.3.22. Hee groundeth his opinion upon that text, *Geneſ.*3.22. Leſt hee put forth his hand, and eat of the tree of life, and live for ever: Ergo, the tree of life had power to give eternall life to the eaters thereof.

Ironia is a figure, when one meaneth contrary to the ſignification of the word or ſentence.

Anſ. 1. This ſpeech here uttered by the Lord, is ironically to be underſtood, that is, God in ſo ſaying, meaneth not, that indeed, by eating of this fruit, Adam ſhould live eternally: but as in the former part of the verſe the Lord derideth the folly and ſimplicity of man, who thought by eating the forbidden fruit to have beene as God, and was deceived: Behold, (ſaith God) the man is become as one of us, to know good and evill: that is, he thought in his owne opinion and conceit, &c. So the ſame ſpeech is continued in this part of the verſe: leſt he live for ever, that is, hee may in his ſimplicity be ſeduced to thinke hee may have eternall life by eating of the tree of life, as hee was made to beleeve before, that he ſhould by taſting of the forbidden fruit in knowledge be like unto God.

2. Or if we take the words ſimply as they are ſpoken: the meaning is this, that ſeeing Adam was by his tranſgreſſion deprived of life, he ſhould alſo loſe the ſigne thereof: it was therefore called the tree of life, not ſo much becauſe it gave life, as that it was a ſigne thereof: And to this purpoſe the ordinary gloſſe, this was a juſt puniſhment after ſin, intercluſus ad ſapientiam aditus, &c. The way unto true wiſdome was ſhut up, till by Gods mercy he ſhould be revived, that was dead, &c. Other expoſitions are given of this place: as that the meaning ſhould be, leſt man indeed taking of the fruit ſhould live for ever: ſo Tertullian: Ne vivens in æternum—circumferret in pœnā ſui immortale delictum: Leſt living for ever, he ſhould beare about as a puniſhment his immortall ſinne, &c. This ſenſe followeth the Interlineary gloſſe, and Bellarmine: but Lyranus reaſon taketh away this interpretation: cum homo incurriſſet neceſſitatem moriendi: ſeeing man had incurred and was fallen into a neceſſity of dying, the tree of life could not now continue his life: ſome give a cleane contrary ſenſe, not making it a prohibition,but a promiſe rather and permiſſion:that man was ſent forth into the labours of this life, ut aliquando porrigat manum ad arborem vitæ, that hee might ſtretch forth his hand to the tree of life, that is, the croſſe of Chriſt, and ſo live for ever : ordinar. gloſſ. but the very forme of the words, and phraſe of ſpeech ſheweth, that it is a prohibition : ſome other therefore doe thinke, that by for ever, here is not meant true eternity, but onely ſome prolonging of dayes, which the fruit of this tree might of Gods goodneſſe worke, though man was now fallen : Lyran. Vatabl. Borrhaius : but I preferre the two firſt expoſitions, for the reaſons before alleaged.

The Proteſtants.

THat the tree of life was not ordained to preſerve Adam from mortality, and to endue him with a new kind of immortality,but that it was principally a ſigne or ſymbole of life received of God: though it might alſo have ſome vertue to preſerve the body in perfect health : thus we ſhew it.

Argum. 1. This tree; which was in the middeſt of Paradiſe, was no otherwiſe the tree of life,than the other was of the knowledge of good and evill : but this was not ſo called,becauſe it actually gave knowledge, but was a ſeale and ſigne unto them of that miſerable knowledge and experience. which by tranſgreſſing of Gods commandement in eating of that fruit,they ſhould fall into. And this is confeſſed by their Maſter,that it was called the tree of good and evill, becauſe man by tranſgreſſing in eating thereof, experiundo diſceret, ſhould learne by experience what difference there was betweene good obedience and evill diſobedience, lib. 2. diſt. 17. To this purpoſe Lyranus and the ordinary gloſſe following Auguſtine,ſo alſo Vatablus ſaith,it was ſo called ab eventu,from the event,either becauſe God thereby ſhould have experience of mans obedience, or man rather by experience ſhould find what good he had loſt,and what evill he was fallen into : to this purpoſe our orthodoxall interpreters, Iunius, Calvin, Borrhaius, Pellican, with the reſt : Ergo, the other tree was a ſymbole or pledge of life. So in the Revelation, 22. 2. mention is made of the tree of life, which is Chriſt Jeſus : Hee is indeed the true tree of life, becauſe hee verily giveth life, this was but a ſigne and ſymbole of life. Revel.2.22.

Argum. 2. Spirituall graces are not obtained by corporall and carnall meanes : for as wee cannot uſe carnall weapons againſt ſpirituall evils, 2 Cor. 10. 4. ſo can wee not by externall and corporall meanes procure celeſtiall and ſpirituall bleſſings : but immortality was a ſpirituall gift, eating of the fruit was but an externall action : Ergo, it could not give immortality. 2 Cor.10.4.

By this reaſon Lyranus confuteth Ioſephus opinion, who thinketh it was called the tree of the knowledge of good and evill,becauſe the fruit thereof had vertue,acuendi uſum rationis,of ſharpning the uſe of reaſon,but ſaith he,ad hoc ſe non extendit virtus corporalis : a corporall vertue doth not extend it ſelfe to any ſuch thing : ſo neither any corporall fruit of a tree could conferre immortality which is a ſpirituall gift,&c.

Argum. 3. If the tree of life had been able to give immortality,and God foreſeeing the fall of man, would not have him in that eſtate to bee partaker of immortality : God would not have permitted unto man the uſe of that tree as he did, but rather have given him a prohibition to eat thereof : but this the Lord did not,giving them only a charge concerning the tree of knowledge : Ergo, it is not like that tree had any ſuch force.

Bellarmine anſwereth: 1.that neither Adam nor Satan did know which was the tree of life:for Satan 1.would have tempted him to have eaten alſo thereof,that he might have bin eternally miſerable: but Adam 2.might have eaten of it by chance,as the text is, ne forte, leſt perhaps he put forth his hand, &c. Geneſ. 3. 22. 2.Though Adam had knowne it, hee would not have beene curious to eat thereof before the time appointed, *Bellarm.cap.*29. Geneſ.3.22.

Contra. Firſt, 1. Satan had no reaſon to tempt them to eat of the tree of life, becauſe it was not forbidden : *for they might have eaten freely of every tree in the garden,cap.*2.16. the tree of the knowledge of good and evill onely excepted: In eating then of any other tree they ſhould not have tranſgreſſed : but Satans drift was to bring them into tranſgreſſion. 2. And the Hebrew particle פן, pen.is not ſo to be tranſlated, ne forte, leſt perhaps, but rather as the 70. reade μήποτε, ne quando,leſt at any time. Likewiſe, Iſay 27. 3. I will keepe it, leſt any aſſaile it : but the enemies would aſſaile it, not by chance, but of purpoſe and pretended malice. The words alſo that follow exclude this collection of chance, ne extenſa manu, leſt he ſtretch out his hand : But he that ſtretcheth out his hand, doth it not at adventure,but wittingly and of purpoſe. 3. Adam could not be ignorant which was the tree of life: 1.both in reſpect of his great knowledge,wherby he knew the nature of all creatures,and ſo of plants and trees. 2. And becauſe they had liberty to eat of all the trees in the garden : unleſſe they will ſay, hee eat hee knew not what : 3. And for that the tree of life was ordained only for Adams uſe,as they thinke,to bring him to immortality,as we ſay,to be a ſymbole unto him of Chriſt; howſoever the uſe of this tree ſpecially concerning Adams ſtate,was not to bee kept from his knowledge. Iſay 27.3.

Secondly, if Adam had knowne this tree to bee able to give immortality, hee would ſooner have eaten thereof,being not prohibited,than to have touched the forbidden fruit, ſeeing that the eating thereof alſo would have brought him to greater happineſſe than the other tree:that giving immortality; the other but the knowledge of good and evill. Wherefore the tree of life could not give immortality to thoſe that eat thereof,but only was a ſigne of true immortality in Chriſt.

And that the tree of life was principally a ſymbole of Chriſt our true life, and could not actually, conferre immortality, but onely a ſtability of the body, conſerving it in perfect health without ſickneſſe or decay, thus further it is manifeſted.

Lib.4.peri arch.in princip.

1. Origen ſaith, Quis ita idiotes invenitur ut putet—ut corporalibus dentibus manducans quis ex ea arbore vitam percipiat, &c. Who is ſuch an ideot to thinke that one eating with corporall teeth of that tree ſhould have life,&c.and his reaſon is, becauſe he that ſhould eat of the other tree preſently ſhould not have knowledge, Auguſtine thinketh that the tree of life had this uſe, ne illum ſenecta diſſolveret,to preſerve man from decay and old age: and this we are not againſt, but that there was ſuch vertue in that tree to keep the body in perfect health without infirmity:as S.Iohn alluding to that tree of life,ſaith that the leaves of the tree of life ſerved to heale the nations with. But Auguſtine further ſaith,Erat lignum vita ſicut petra Chriſtus: The tree of life ſignified Chriſt, as the rocke did; erat in cæteris lignis alimentum,in illo ſacramentum: in the other trees was aliment,in this a ſacrament.

4. Of the ſame opinion is Thomas [c] Aquine, that the tree of life had both a power to conſerve life, and did alſo ſignifie ſome ſpirituall thing as the rocke in the deſert: ſo alſo [d] the ordinary and interlineary gloſſe.

THE SECOND CONTROVERSIE, OF THE FALL OF MAN.

THis Controverſie is divided into theſe queſtions: Firſt,of the difference of veniall and mortall ſins. Secondly, whether ſin any way ſtandeth with the will of God. Thirdly, of the ſinne of Adam,whether it were pride or infidelity,whether a veniall or mortall ſinne. Fourthly, of originall ſinne: of the nature thereof, what it is, the beginning thereof,from whence it ſpringeth, the effects thereof, the puniſhment thereof, with other parts of this queſtion.

The firſt Queſtion, of the diſtinction and difference of veniall and mortall ſinnes.

The Papiſts.

Error.

MOrtall ſinnes are thoſe which doe caſt men out of Gods favour, and are worthy of eternall damnation: veniall ſinnes doe ſomewhat diſpleaſe God,yet deſerve not eternall death, but are pardonable of their owne nature, Bellarm.lib.1.de amiſſ. gratia, cap.2.& cap.9.in princip. Rhemiſt.annotat. Roman.1.11. They define alſo in particular which are veniall ſinnes. Firſt, all involuntary and ſudden paſſions of the mind,as of anger,concupiſcence,and ſuch like, Bellarm. cap. 3. ad finem: for all ſinne,they ſay,is voluntary,and therefore theſe paſſions having not conſent of will, are farre from ſin, neither are imputed to any man,neither for them need he ſay unto God,forgive us our ſins, Rhemiſt. annot.Rom.7 ſect.8,9.

Secondly,thoſe are veniall ſinnes,which though they be done with conſent of the mind,yet are but ſeene in ſmall and light matters: as if a man ſteale a halfepenny, ſpeake an idle word, laugh immoderately,or ſuch like. But the contrary to theſe are mortall and deadly ſinnes,as perjury, adultery, murder,&c.

Now to prove that theſe veniall ſinnes, as they call them, are in their owne nature pardonable, and deſerve not eternall damnation; theſe arguments they bring out of Scripture.

1 Cor.3.12.

*Argum.*1.Saint Paul ſaith,that they which build hay or ſtubble,&c. though their work burne,yet they themſelves ſhall be ſafe,yet through the fire:By hay and ſtubble the Apoſtle underſtandeth venial ſins,which doe bring detriment or loſſe,but not deſtruction: for he ſhall be ſafe,Bellarm.cap.9.

Anſw. Not to ſtand at this time to ſift out the right meaning of this place, where the Apoſtle intreateth not in generall of the good or evill workes of Chriſtians, but onely of the preaching of the Goſpell,which when it is ſincerely preached,both for the matter and manner,then doe they build upon the foundation,which is Jeſus Chriſt, gold and ſilver, &c. but when Chriſt is taught for vaine glory, or contentiouſly, or with any other ſiniſter affection, ſuch doe build up hay and ſtubble. Now we anſwer: firſt, to preach Chriſt, but impurely. and not ſincerely,which is compared here to a ſtraw-building, is no veniall or light offence, but a ſinne worthy of death: for Chriſt ſhall ſay unto them in the day of judgement, that preached and propheſied in his name, but not ſincerely: Verily I know you not, depart from me ye workers of iniquity.

Math.7.22.23.

Againe, veniall ſins, ſaith the Jeſuite, Facili negotio expiantur, are eaſily purged and done away, cap. 2. bnt ſo is not this ſin of impure preaching: he ſhall be ſafe, yet as through the fire, that is, with ſome hardneſſe and difficulty: and ſo the phraſe is uſed, Epiſt. Iud. 23. Others ſave with feare, as pulling them ont of the fire: but have compaſſion of others in putting difference: Theſe are ſuch as ſin of infirmity: the other are more notorious offenders, which are as it were in the fire, that is, in great danger.

Iud 23.

2 But admit theſe are veniall ſins, ſuch as are forgiven at Gods hands: yet is it not hence proved, that they are veniall of their owne nature, but are pardoned in Chriſt: for the Apoſtle ſpeaketh of ſuch which keepe the foundation, that is, Chriſt Jeſus, though their building be not perfect and ſound.

Argum. 2. Math. 5.22. Onely hee that ſaith to his brother, foole, is worthy of hell fire: hee that ſaith raca, or is but angry, is but culpable of judgement, or of a Councell,&c. Ergo, every ſin is not worthy of hell fire, Bellarm.cap.9.

Math.5.22.

Anſwer. Firſt, this place doth ſhew a difference and degree of everlaſting puniſhment, according to the quality and diverſity of ſins: but another kinde of puniſhment beſide, it ſheweth not: ſo then, judgement, a councell, hell fire, doe but ſignifie three degrees of the ſame puniſhment: hell fire is due to the reſt, but it is added onely for diſtinction, to ſhew both a difference of the ſin and puniſhment.

Secondly, this is evident by theſe reaſons: firſt, becauſe judgement, κρίσις, κρίμα, is taken in Scripture for everlaſting puniſhment or condemnation, *Rom.*2. 3. how ſhalt thou eſcape the judgement of God? Secondly, every ſin is a tranſgreſſion of the law: And every tranſgreſſion is under the curſe: But theſe are tranſgreſſions of the law, Thou ſhalt not kill: as here our Saviour expoundeth: Ergo, they are under the curſe of the law, and ſo ſubject to death. Thirdly, S. Paul ſaith, No rayler can inherit the kingdome of God, but he that ſaith, raca, is a rayler: for the word ſignifieth a light head, or cockbraine, being derived of ריק rajak, which ſignifieth to evacuate or empty: wherefore he that ſaith raca, ſhall not inherit the Kingdome of heaven.

Rom.2.3.
1 Iohn 3.4.
Galath.3.10.
1 Cor.6.10.

Argum. 3. Luke 12.59. Thou ſhalt not depart thence, till thou haſt paid the utmoſt farthing. Theſe are veniall ſins, which ſhall be purged in Purgatory, and not be puniſhed in hell, Bellarm. ibid.

Luk.12.59.

Anſwer. Firſt, our Saviour in this place ſpeaketh of offences among men, and giveth a rule in this place only how to eſcape the judgement of man, and the troubles of this life. Secondly, if it be ſpiritually applyed, by priſon, hell is underſtood: and ſo is it taken for the place of the wicked and diſobedient. Thirdly, they ſhall not come out, till they have paid the utmoſt farthing, that is, never, becauſe it is impoſſible to pay or anſwer the debt unto God. Fourthly, our Saviour ſpeaketh of uncharitable perſons, ſuch as deferre and refuſe to be reconciled, and to agree with their brethren: but want of charity deſerveth hell.

1 Pet.3.19.
Matth.18.34.
Math.5.25.

Argum. 4 S. Iames ſaith, When luſt hath conceived, it bringeth forth ſin, and ſin when it is finiſhed bringeth forth death: Ergo, ſin is not mortall, but when it is conſummate and finiſhed: Rhemiſt. in hunc locum. Bellarm.cap.9.

Iames 1.15.

Anſwer. Out of this place it is gathered, that there are degrees of ſin, and that the more hainous ſin is, it is worthy greater death, and is more hardly forgiven: and therefore ſin conſummate or finiſhed is ſaid to bring forth death rather than ſin but conceived onely, namely in compariſon and reſpect of ſmaller ſins. The greater are neareſt to death. Otherwiſe to ſpeake ſimply, death is the wages of all ſin.

Rom.6.23.

2 If by ſin conſummate wee underſtand continuance in ſin without repentance, which is the right conſummation of ſin: then the Apoſtle ſpeaketh not of ſin as it is in it ſelfe, but as it is accounted of before God, who in his mercy forgiveth ſins not conſummate or finiſhed, but broken off by repentance, and in his juſtice judgeth and condemneth ſins conſummate by hardneſſe of heart and impenitency.

3 Otherwiſe luſt and concupiſcence it ſelfe is worthy of death: The world paſſeth away, and the luſt thereof: (which verſ. 16. is ſaid to be the luſt of the fleſh, and the luſt of the eyes) but he that fulfilleth the will of God abideth for ever: he that hath the luſt of the fleſh, which is the luſt of the world, fulfilleth not the will of God: Ergo, he abideth not for ever, and conſequently is ſubject to death.

Where although the Apoſtle have not that univerſall terme all, yet the propoſition being indefinite, is equivalent: ſee this objection further anſwered, *Retect.p.*225.
1 Iohn 2.17.

Argum. 4. Our Doway men doe thus diſpute for their veniall ſins: as the excuſe which the Hebrew Midwives made, they ſay was an officious lye, but a leſſe ſin and more eaſily pardoned, and purged by good workes, &c. ſo they make Moſes ſin, which he committed at the waters of ſtrife, to be but a veniall ſin, for the which he was temporally puniſhed, in not going over to the land of Canaan: ſo the officious lye of Rahab, they ſay was a veniall ſin, yet ſhee was juſtified by her faith in God and good workes, &c.

of the Mid-wives and Rahab. 1 They may be both excuſed from telling any untruth at all, as Iunius hath obſerved upon both theſe places: 2 But admitting an officious lye: how can they make it a veniall ſinne, ſeeing all that make lyes are excluded the celeſtiall Jeruſalem: 3 They themſelves ſay, that ſhe was juſtified by faith: and ſo we grant, that all theſe infirmities and greater ſinnes are veniall and pardonable by grace, but not of their owne nature, as Augustine well ſaith: Vivos conſervare natos opus fuit miſericordia, pro vita ſua mentitas fuiſſe opus fuit infirmitatis, quam Deus gratia condonat: To keepe the children alive was a worke of mercy, but to make a lye to ſave their life, was a worke of infirmity, which God pardoned by grace, &c. Wee have need then of grace for the pardoning of veniall ſins.

Num.20.12. Revel 21.8.

2 It is ſaid God was angry with Moſes: doth God uſe to bee angry for nothing, for ſmall or light offences? and the Lord directly chargeth Moſes with unbeleefe, Numb.20.12. but unbeleefe without Gods mercy condemneth to hell.

The Proteſtants.

WE confeſſe that there is a great difference of ſinnes, both in their nature and in the puniſhment due unto them: that as ſinnes are greater or leſſe in themſelves, ſo they are worthy of greater or leſſe puniſhment. And therefore wee deteſt their error, that thinke all ſins to bee equall and alike: but yet wee cannot admit this Popiſh diſtinction of veniall and mortall ſinnes, as though ſome ſinnes were veniall in their owne nature: for even the leaſt ſinne deſerveth death, if God ſhould deale with us according to the exact rule of his juſtice: yet all ſinnes, not only the leaſt but the greateſt are veniall by grace and faith in Chriſt, unto the faithfull and beleevers, and not otherwiſe: We prove it thus.

Deut.27.26. Ezech.18.20. Iam.2.10. 1 Iohn 3.4.

Argum. 1. That all ſinnes in themſelves are worthy of death, the Scripture ſpeaketh plainly: Curſed is every one that continueth not in all things written in this law: The ſame ſoule that ſinneth ſhall dye: Hee that faileth in one point of the law, is guilty of all: Every tranſgreſſion of the law therefore deſerveth death: but all ſinne is a tranſgreſſion of the law, Ergo.

Bellarmine anſwereth, that all thoſe are underſtood of mortall and great offences, not of the ſmaller ſins which he calleth veniall: for in the firſt place, the words are (written in this law) and in that law are only forbidden the greater ſins, as adultery, idolatry, murther, and ſo likewiſe Ezech. 18. the more hainous ſins are reckoned up.

Contra. This poore clauſe (this law) cannot help the Jeſuite: for S. Paul alleaging this place ſaith, Curſed is hee that continueth not in all things written in the law, not this law: ſhewing hereby that all tranſgreſſions generally of the whole law, or any part thereof, are ſubject to the curſe of the law: ſo alſo is the Prophet to be underſtood.

To the place in Saint Iames hee anſwereth thus: Hee that offendeth in one point, that is, not in any one point, but ſuch an one, as whereby charity or love is broken; and then it is no veniall but a mortall ſinne.

Matth.5 22. Rom.13.10.

Contra. Firſt, the Apoſtle ſaith, Whoſoever ſhall keepe the whole law, and yet faile in one point; he ſpeaketh not of any great and apparant tranſgreſſion, for how ſhould the man that doth it, ſeeme to keepe the whole law: but of ſome ſecret and ſmaller offence rather, which notwithſtanding he is taken for a good keeper of the law. Secondly, the Apoſtle himſelfe putteth an example, If thou committeſt not adultery, and yet killeſt, thou art a tranſgreſſor: but he only killeth not that ſlayeth, but he alſo that is angry unadviſedly, or calleth Racha, as our Saviour Chriſt expoundeth this commandement: therefore he that faileth in theſe points killeth, and ſo is a tranſgreſſor of the law. Thirdly, all veniall ſins doe faile alſo in charity: for charity is the fulfilling of the law: hee therefore that breaketh not charity doth keepe the law, and tranſgreſſeth it not: But he that committeth any veniall ſin, tranſgreſſeth the law, otherwiſe it were no ſin, and therefore faileth alſo in charity. S. Iames therefore by this one point underſtandeth veniall ſinnes, as well as other.

Iohn.13.8.

Argum. 2. Beſide our Saviour Chriſt ſaith to Peter, If I waſh thee not, thou haſt no part in me: If all ſins exclude us from having part in Chriſt, and conſequently from the kingdome of God; then conſequently all ſins are mortall, and in their owne nature worthy of death.

Bellarmine anſwereth that veniall ſins doe not ſimply exclude from the kingdome of God, but only for a time till they be purged and waſhed, reſp. ad object.3.

Heb.2.14.

Contra. Firſt, if then veniall ſins be never waſhed, they ſhall ſimply exclude from the kingdome of heaven. Secondly, the force of the argument remaineth unanſwered: for if all ſins muſt bee waſhed away in Chriſt, or elſe we have no part in him, and Chriſt died only to take away thoſe ſins which deſerved death, as the Apoſtle ſaith: That he might deſtroy through death, him that had power over death: verſ. 15. And that he might deliver them, which for feare of death were all their life time ſubject to bondage. They then that were ſubject to death by reaſon of their ſins, were delivered by Chriſts death: Ergo, all ſins for the which Chriſt died, were worthy of death.

Iohn 1.19.

Argum. 3. If all ſins are not mortall, then Chriſt died not for all ſins: for he by his death did ſatisfie only for ſins that deſerved death: but Chriſt died for all ſins.

Againe, originall ſinne, which is leſſe than any actuall ſinne, ſuch as their veniall ſins are, is worthy of death, and thereby death reigneth even over children which ſinne not actually as Adam did, Ergo, veniall ſins which proceed from originall ſin, doe much more deſerve death. S. Paul alſo further thus ſaith: If I doe that I would not, then is it not I any longer that doe it, but ſin that reigneth in me: He calleth it ſin, though he conſent not to it, which is againſt the Rhemiſts, that will have no motion or paſſion in the mind, ſin, unleſſe it be voluntary: and ſay further, that we need not aske forgiveneſſe for ſuch ſins.

Rom.5.14.
Rom.7.20.

Let Auguſtine here ſpeake: Peccata ignorantiæ vel negligentiæ melius accuſantur ut pereant, quam excuſantur ut maneant, meliusq; purgantur invocato Deo, quam firmantur irritato Deo: The ſins of ignorance and negligence are better accuſed, than excuſed; better by praying to God to purge them, than by provoking God to confirme them: Ergo, forgiveneſſe muſt be asked at Gods hand for involuntary ſins, ſins of ignorance.

In Pſal.105.

Alſo he ſaith, Propter omnia peccata baptiſmus inventus eſt, propter leviora oratio dominica: For all ſins Baptiſme is a remedy, and the Lords prayer for the leſſe, de ſymbol.lib.1.6. Ergo, theſe leſſer ſins are in their own nature guilty of death, and not of themſelves pardonable; for otherwiſe we need not ſay the Lords prayer for them, nor aske God forgiveneſſe, as the Rhemiſts themſelves confeſſe, annot.Rom.7.ſect.8.9.

Wee have alſo the conſent of antiquity; Gelaſius tom. anathemat. Eſt peccatum ad mortem in eodem peccato manentibus; eſt peccatum non ad mortem ab eodem peccato recedentibus: There is a ſinne unto death, to them that continue in it: there is a ſinne not unto death, to them that depart from it.

Nicen.2.can.5. Peccatum ad mortem eſt, quoties aliqui peccantes ſe non emendant: A ſin unto death is, when they that ſin doe not amend themſelves. Repentance wee ſee, maketh all ſins veniall: want of repentance maketh all ſins mortall. None therefore are veniall of their owne nature, but by repentance.

Decret.diſtinct.25.c.3.gloſſ.ex Auguſtin. Nullum peccatum eſt veniale, quod non fiat criminale dum placeat: No ſin is ſo veniall, which is not made criminall, if it doe pleaſe: that is, if the ſinner continue in it, Cauſ.33.diſtinct.1.c.47. Venialis culpa, quam ſequitur confeſſio delictorum: That fault is veniall, which the confeſſion of ſins followeth. This ſentence is rehearſed and approved by the Maſter of Sentences, lib.4.diſtinct.17.a.

The Maſter hath many ſentences to the like effect: Lib.2. diſtinct.24. I. Totus homo damnabitur, &c. Whole man ſhall be condemned, unleſſe thoſe ſins which without any will or purpoſe of working, but with a delight only of the mind, are committed in thought, are remitted by the favour of the Mediator: But theſe, by their owne definition, are only veniall ſins, which have not the conſent of the will, Lib.3.diſt.38.a. A lye made to ſave another, is a veniall ſin to the weake, but to the perfect it is damnable. If the ſame ſin be veniall to one and damnable to another, then is it not in it owne nature veniall, Lib.4.diſt.20.b. Quædam peccata mortalia in pœnitentia fiunt venialia: Some mortall ſins are by repentance made veniall. Therefore they are not veniall or worthy of forgiveneſſe in themſelves, but by repentance and mercy in Chriſt.

We have here plentifull teſtimony of the Greeke Church. Baſile ſaith, that no ſin is to be contemned as ſmall, ſeeing Saint Paul ſaith of all ſin, that it is the ſting of death: Chryſoſtome, as he is alleaged by Ieremy the Patriarke: Ea quæ nobis parva delicta videntur, apud illius juſtum tribunal, magnam merentur pœnam: Thoſe which ſeeme ſmall offences to us, before the juſt tribunall of God, deſerve great puniſhment: Ieremy himſelfe ſaith: Cum lex Evangelica nullum in hac parte peccatorum faciat diſcrimen, &c. Seeing the Evangelicall law maketh here no difference of ſins, it doth promiſe forgiveneſſe of all to them that worthily repent.

2 Tertullian ſpeaking of ſuch ſins as are quotidianæ incurſionis, which we incurre every day, unto the which we are all ſubject, as in our ſight, hearing, and ſuch like, ſaith, Horum erit venia per exoratorem patris Chriſtum: We have pardon of theſe through Chriſt, the intreater of his father: they are not then veniall in their owne nature, but by faith in Chriſt.

Lib.de pudicitia.

It cannot be denied, but that the new Africane and Æthiopick Church doe hold ſome ſins to bee mortall, but herein they differ much from the Romane Church: the Æthiopians doe account ſix ſins to be mortall, according to that text, Without ſhall be dogs, enchanters, whoremongers, murderers, idolaters, and whoſoever loveth or maketh lyes: by dogs the envious and malicious are to be underſtood; but the Romaniſts doe make ſeven mortall ſinnes, namely incontinencie, wrath, avarice, idleneſſe, envy, pride, gluttony; Ieremy the Patriarke leaveth out envy, and in ſtead thereof putteth in vaineglory: how then is it poſſible for them to diſtinguiſh veniall ſins and mortall, ſeeing they are not agreed, which are the mortall, nor how many there are of them.

3 That no ſins are veniall in their owne nature, but are tranſgreſſions of and againſt the law, it is the conſtant opinion of other Proteſtant Writers, as of Luther, Melancthon, Kemnitius, the Century writers, Calvin with others, as Bellarmine produceth them.

Lib.1.de amiſſion.grat.c.4.

4. Whereas Bellarmine ſaith, that veniall ſins are not contra legem, againſt the law, but præter legem, beſide the law: Azorius the Jeſuite alleaging alſo of that opinion, Durandus, Cajetanus, Vega: maintaineth the contrary, that veniall ſins are contra legem, againſt the law: whereupon it will follow, that they are not veniall in their owne nature: for every tranſgreſſion of the law deſerveth death.

Lib.1.de amiſſion.grat.c.11. ſect.deniq;
Azor.Inſtitut. Moral. part.1. lib.4.c.8.
Gal.3.10.

The concluſion of all is this. 1 That there are differences and degrees of ſinnes, which accordingly deſerve greater or leſſe puniſhment.

2 That ſome ſinnes may be ſaid to be veniall, pardonable, ſome mortall, either comparatively, becauſe they are more eaſily forgiven ſome than others, or in reſpect of the event, becauſe to the faithfull all ſinnes are veniall in Chriſt.

3 That no ſinnes are veniall in their owne nature, as being all the fruits of originall ſinne, which brought in death. Rom.5.12.

4 God never condemneth onely for the veniall and ſmaller ſinnes: becauſe in the wicked and impenitent, they are alwayes accompanied with greater ſins: and to the faithfull they with the greater ſinnes are pardoned.

The ſecond Queſtion, whether ſinne any way may ſtand with the will of God.

The Papiſts.

7. Error. NO ſin ſtandeth with the will or intention of God, but is directly againſt it, Rhemiſt. annot. Rom.3. ſect. 4. And therefore Chriſts death was Gods act no otherwiſe than by permiſſion, *Act.3. ſect.*2. Neither is God the author of ſin, otherwiſe than by permiſſion and with-holding of his grace: *annot. Iam.*1.13. *Sic etiam Bellarm. de ſtatu peccat. lib.*2. *cap.*3.

But our faith is this, grounded upon Scripture, that whatſoever is done in the world, is not done by Gods permiſſion only, but ſtandeth alſo with his knowledge: Hell and deſtruction are before him, how much more the hearts of men? Prov. 15. 11. With his will and pleaſure: *Whatſoever pleaſed the Lord, that did hee in heaven and in earth, Pſal.*35.6. With his eternall ordinance and decree: So the Apoſtle ſaith, that Chriſt was delivered up according to the determinate counſell of God, *Act.*2.23. And not only ſo, but all things in the world are done by the power of God: Shall there be evill in a City, and the Lord hath not done it? Amos 3.6. yea, at the bidding and commandment of God: the Lord hath bidden him to curſe David, 2 Sam. 16.10. Therefore evill actions are not done onely by the permiſſion of God. And yet for all this God ſhall not be the author of ſin.

For firſt, God is not the author of any evill action, as it is evill, either by willing, decreeing, bidding it, or moving thereunto, but only as he giveth power, as our Creator to his creatures, to move or work this or that: Therefore a ſinfull worke: Quatenus Dei eſt authoris, opus eſt, crimen non eſt, quantum autem hominis eſt, crimen eſt, ſcelus eſt: As it commeth of God the author, it is a work only, and no ſin: as it is of man, it is ſin & wickednes. Againe, God is no otherwiſe to be reſpected in a ſinfull work and action, but as a juſt Judge, which puniſheth ſin by ſin: for it is a juſt thing before God to recompence one ſin by another: and ſo it is to be conſidered, not ſo much, tanquam peccatum, quam pœna peccati, as it is a ſin, as a puniſhment of ſin. Thirdly in the ſame action, God propoundeth one end as the exerciſing of his children, and manifeſtation of his mercy, as in the tentation of Iob: the inſtrument whereby he worketh, reſpecteth ſome evill end, as Satan laboured the ſubverſion of Iob, and the evill affection and purpoſe of the inſtrument maketh the action evill; but God is free, and unſpotted: God therefore is not any wayes the author of ſin. Let us now ſee what arguments our adverſaries bring: firſt, againſt our opinion, and then for the confirmation of their owne.

Zuinglius ſerm. de provid. cap.5.

Beza Aphoriſ.31.

r Calvin adverſ. Libertin. cap. 14.

Argum. 1. Bellarmine ſetteth downe foure great abſurdities, that (he ſaith) muſt needs follow of our opinion. Firſt, if God be the author of every action good or bad, and if wicked men are his inſtruments to accompliſh his will: God muſt of neceſſity be the author of ſin, ſeeing hee willeth and commandeth it, *cap.*4. Secondly, God is not in thus doing the author only of ſin, but he himſelfe alſo ſhould properly and truly commit ſin, being conſenting, and ſetting his helping hand to ſinfull actions, *cap.*5. To the like purpoſe the Doway men object, *p.*172. Thirdly, God by this meanes ſhould not onely be guilty of ſin, but the onely perſon in the world that properly ſinneth: for if that neither Adam, nor any of his poſterity could chuſe but ſin, ſeeing it was ſo ordained of God: and no man is ſaid to ſin, in that which he cannot ſhun and avoyd: therefore no man properly is guilty of ſin; and ſo it would light wholly upon God, *cap.*6. Laſtly, ſeeing then that man ſinneth not, becauſe what hee doth, is by the power, will, and commandement of God: and yet God himſelfe is no wayes the author of ſin, as the Proteſtants affirme: then it would follow, that ſin is nothing at all, as the Libertines hold, but only an imagined and deviſed thing, being no where to be found: And if ſin be nothing, then hell is nothing, and Chriſts death in vaine, *Bellarm. cap.*7.

Anſwer. Firſt, theſe objections are eaſily removed by that which we anſwered before: that God is no otherwiſe the author of evill actions, or the willer and commander of them, than as the power of working is of God: but the evill quality and condition of the action is to bee imputed onely to the inſtrument: ſo that men committing evill, as they receive a generall and abſolute power of God, to move, to live, &c. are only paſſiva inſtrumenta, paſſive inſtruments: as they are workers of evill, they are onely activa inſtrumenta, active and working inſtruments. Wee will make this plaine by ſome example: as when the Sunne beames beat upon ſome carrion, by the heat thereof there is raiſed a ſtinch, yet the Sunne beames ſtinke not, but the evill ſavour ariſeth only of the corrupt matter:

And as when we ſee a lame man walking, and halting as he goeth; the ſoule and life that is in man giveth motion to the lame part, yet the lameneſſe thereof commeth of the infirmity of the member it ſelfe: Even ſo the Lord may be the cauſe of evill actions, and yet not guilty of the evill.

Bellarmine objecteth that theſe examples are unlike: for the Sunne, and the ſoule of man are only generall cauſes, not particular of theſe actions: but God (as you ſay) is not onely an univerſall, but a ſpeciall cauſe of every action, Bellarm.cap. 5.

Anſwer. The ſoule in the body is both an univerſall and particular cauſe of the power of moving in every part: for as the ſaying in Philoſophy is, anima eſt tota in toto, & tota in qualibet parte: The ſoule is both univerſally whole in the whole body, and ſpecially whole in every part. But of the lameneſſe and defect in moving it is no cauſe at all, unleſſe it bee the generall and furtheſt removed cauſe: ſo we doe ſay alſo of the working of God in evill actions.

2 In one and the ſame action God doth reſpect a good and profitable end, whereas the inſtrument may have a miſchievous purpoſe and intent, which maketh the action evill: and ſo the ſinne is proper only to the inſtrument.

Anſwer. This is againſt S. Pauls rule, who ſaith, we muſt not doe evill, that good may come thereof: therefore the good intent which God propoundeth to himſelfe, cannot juſtifie the evill action wherein he is a party, Bellarm. cap.4.

Contra. God is not a party in the evilneſſe of the action at all, as we have ſhewed: wherefore it is falſe that he doth evill to a good end. Nay, both the action it ſelfe is good as it commeth of God, and the end alſo good: which the Lord reſpecteth.

3 The judgements of God are alwayes juſt: and therefore ſinnes, as they are puniſhments of former ſinnes, are juſt: and ſo may be of God. Anſw. Yea, but Adams ſinne was not a puniſhment of a former, for he was created without ſin, therefore his ſin muſt be imputed to God, Bellar.c.4.

Contra. Yea, but Adam had free will by creation to chuſe good or evill, and therefore ſeeing it was his voluntary choyce to ſinne, he onely is to be blamed for it.

How Adams ſin ſtood with the will of God.

Object. Adams fall is fore-ſeene of God, and he could not otherwiſe chuſe: how then can hee be guilty of that ſinne which was not in his power to avoid?

Anſwer. Indeed Adam in reſpect of Gods appointment and fore-knowledge, did ſinne neceſſario, neceſſarily, but not coacte, he was not conſtrained: but in reſpect of his owne free will, he did neither, neceſſario vel coacte, ſed voluntarie peccare: he did neither ſinne of neceſſity or by conſtraint, but voluntarily.

S. Auguſtine doth anſwer this objection to the full: It will bee ſaid that Pharaoh could doe no other, becauſe it was ſo fore-ſeene of him: It is anſwered, ſaith he, Dei præſcientiam non cogere hominem ut talis ſit, qualem præſcivit Deus, ſed præſcire talem futurum, qualis futurus erat, quamvis ſic eum non fecerit Deus: qui ſi hoc præſcierat eſſe, quod non eſt, præſcientia jam non eſt: The preſcience of God doth not make a man to be that which he is fore-ſeene to be, but doth onely fore-know him to be ſuch as he ſhould have beene, though God had not made him ſuch: for if God ſhould have foreſeene that which is not, it were no fore-knowledge at all, De prædeſtinat. & gratia. lib 1.15.

Thus we ſee how ſinfull actions may ſtand with the will, decree, & power of God: and yet God ſhal neither be the author of ſinne, nor him ſelfe thereby be made either properly or only to ſinne, nor yet ſin to become nothing. Now let us examine the reaſons which our adverſaries bring of their part.

Argum.2. The Scripture ſaith, that God loveth not, or willeth not iniquity: He will not the death of a ſinner; And many ſuch places there are to the like purpoſe: Ergo, God giveth no conſent unto ſinne, much leſſe commendeth it, Bellarm.cap.8.

Ezech.18.32.

Anſwer. 1. Firſt, theſe places alſo make as ſtrong againſt Popiſh permiſſion: for if God hate iniquity, he will not permit it: for he that permitteth any thing which he hateth, either ſheweth his impotency, in that he is not able to hinder it, but is conſtrained to permit it: or elſe declareth his mutability in loving that which before he hated.

2 We alſo grant, that God neither willeth nor worketh iniquity: hee willeth the worke, but the iniquity of the worke is of man: And he willeth not the death of a ſinner; that is, he procureth not, nor worketh the death of any, which is wrought by ſinne, with the which the Lord hath no fellowſhip: As Auguſtine ſaith: Cupiditates peccantium Dei prædeſtinatio non excitavit, ſuaſit, aut impulit, ſed prædeſtinavit judicium ſuum, quo unicuiq; prout geſſit, retributurus eſt: Gods predeſtination doth not ſtirre up, perſwade or enforce the deſires of ſinners: but God hath onely predeſtinate his juſt judgements, whereby he will render to every man as he hath done, and as the ſinnes which he hath committed doe deſerve.

Articul. falſ. impoſit. 10.

3 Laſtly, theſe places in Scripture, God will not the death of a ſinner, and he will all men to bee ſaved, and ſuch like are to bee underſtood of the revealed will of God: who notwithſtanding in his ſecret will hath caſt his lots over every man, either to life or death: yet the externall meanes of ſalvation are offered to all.

1 Timoth.2.4.

Object. 1. You confeſſe then that there is a revealed will of God in the Scripture, from whence then doe ye know his ſecret will? ſurely ſaith the Jeſuite, Satis oſtendunt ſe eam non ex Scripturis, ſed ex proprio capite deduxiſſe: By this you declare, that this ſecret will you learne not out of Scripture, but gather it out of your owne head, Bellarm. cap.8.

Anſwer. 1. We grant the Jeſuites conſequent, you learne it not out of Scripture: Ergo, it is an invention of your owne head: for hereby he condemneth all inventions and traditions, beſide Scripture, which elſe-where hee moſt ſtifly maintaineth. 2. Wee deny the antecedent: for this diſtinction of the ſecret and revealed will of God, we learne even out of Scripture: for where wee reade, Ego Deus creans malum, I am the God that create evill: And againe, Non Deus volens iniquitatem tu es: Thou art not a God which loveſt iniquity: how ſhall theſe places be reconciled, to ſpeake one truth, unleſſe wee make a difference betweene the ſecret and revealed will of God? but becauſe this place cited out of Iſay may bee underſtood of that which is called malum pœna, the evill of puniſhment, which God in his juſtice is the author of: there is yet a more cleare place, for the proofe of this diſtinction of Gods ſecret and revealed will: as Deuter. 29.29. The ſecret things belong unto the Lord our God, but the things revealed belong to us and our children for ever, that we may doe all the words of this law.

Iſay 45.7.
Pſal. 5.4.
Deut. 29.29.

Object. 2. If God have a ſecret will whereby hee willeth one thing, and a revealed will whereby he nilleth the ſame: then hath God two contrary wils, which cannot be both true, and thus you make God a lyer, Bellar. ibid.

Anſwer. Firſt, we doe not ſay that God hath two wils, but one and the ſelfe-ſame will that hath divers reſpects: and if in reſpect of us God ſeeme to will one thing which in reſpect of his ſecret counſell he nilleth, he is no more contrary to himſelfe, than our Saviour Chriſt was, who made ſhew to his two Diſciples as though he would goe further, and yet had a purpoſe to ſtay with them. But concerning this diſtinction, S. Auguſtine putteth us out of doubt: Remota hac diſcretione, quam divina ſcientia intra ſecretum juſtitiæ ſuæ continet, ſynceriſſimè credendum eſt Deum omnes ſalvari velle: Setting apart that difference of men, which the divine knowledge hath locked up in the cloſet of juſtice, it is ſincerely to be beleeved, that God would have all men ſaved. There is then another difference of men in the ſecret counſell of God, than is outwardly and apparantly knowne. This diſtinction of Gods ſecret and revealed will, the Maſter of Sentences very well approveth out of Auguſtine lib. 1. diſt. 47. b. Multa non fieri præter voluntatem Dei, quæ fiunt contra voluntatem: That many things are done contrary to the will of God, which are not done beſide his will: that is, many things may be committed againſt Gods precepts, which are his will, and yet not againſt his omnipotent and everlaſting will: Contra eam quippe nihil fit, for nothing is done againſt that will: the one is called voluntas ſigni, the ſigned will of God, which is teſtified by outward ſignes, as precepts and prohibitions in Scripture: the other is voluntas beneplaciti, the will of Gods Counſell or purpoſe. And ſo Auguſtine concludeth, Quantum ad ipſos attinet, quod Deus noluit, fecerunt, quantùm ad omnipotentiam Dei, nullo modo facere voluerunt: In reſpect of themſelves, ſinners doe that which God would not; but in regard of Gods omnipotent will, they could not.

Argum. 3. S. Iames ſaith, Let no man ſay when he is tempted, I am tempted of the Lord: and Saint Paul; God will not ſuffer you to be tempted above that you are able: Ergo, much more doth not God tempt any man, or compell him to ſinne, ſeeing hee doth not ſuffer his children to bee tempted, &c. Bellarm. c. 8. loc. 4.

Jam. 1.13.
1 Cor. 10.13.

Anſwer. Firſt, this profeſſed diſputer forgetteth the point in queſtion, and fighteth with his owne ſhadow, forcing a concluſion, which no man denieth, and ſo travelleth with wind: For we confeſſe that God neither tempteth, provoketh, or compelleth any man to ſinne. Secondly, there is a temptation, which is of God, which is nothing but the triall of a mans faith: as the Lord is ſaid to have tempted Abraham, that is, to have made triall and proofe of his faith: any other way God tempteth not. Thirdly, theſe three wayes we acknowledge Gods power in the ſinfull actions of men. 1. In forſaking them, and giving men over to themſelves to follow their owne luſts: as he tooke his good ſpirit from Saul; by the abſence of which ſpirit hee fell into moſt grievous ſinnes. 2. God as a Creator giveth life and power to every thing to move, to live, to worke, In him we live, we move and have our being. 3. He as a juſt Judge doth puniſh ſinners by their owne ſinne, For this cauſe God gave them over to vile affections: So that ſinne, as it is a conſequent of deſertion, a worke of the creature, a judgement and puniſhment, is not without the will of God: yet the Lord is no way acceſſary to the evilneſſe of ſin, nor the author thereof. In this ſenſe we miſlike not that diſtinction of Origen: Multa ſine voluntate Dei geruntur, nihil ſine providentia; providentia eſt, qua diſpenſat, & providet; voluntas, qua vult, aut non vult aliquid: Many things are done without the will of God, nothing without his providence; that is his providence, wherewith hee doth diſpenſe, diſpoſe, and provide or fore-ſee; that is his will, whereby he willeth or nilleth any thing, &c. wherefore though ſinne be not agreeable to the will of God, yet it ſtandeth with his providence.

Gen. 22. 2.
Act. 17.28.
Rom. 1. 26.
Homil. 3. in Geneſ.

The Proteſtants.

WE affirme, that ſinne neither ſtandeth abſolutely with the will of God, for he made not ſin, nor yet created man to ſin, neither properly or directly doth God ſuffer or permit ſin, as it is ſin, to be done in the world: but he ſuffereth the creatures, without coaction or conſtraint to uſe their naturall faculties, which are of themſelves prone to ſin: ſo that in ſinfull actions God worketh otherwiſe than by permiſſion only, or with-holding of his grace: for he is to be conſidered both as a Creator that giveth power to every thing, to move, to live, to doe this or that, and as a juſt Judge puniſhing and judging men in and by their owne ſinnes.

Argum. 1. S. Peter ſaith, that Chriſt was delivered up according to the determinate counſell of God. Gods determinate counſell is more than his ſufferance or permiſſion.

Acts 2.23.

Anſw. The meaning of the Apoſtle is this : that God had decreed and determined, that Chriſt ſhould dye to redeeme the world : but that Iudas ſhould betray him, or Pilate condemne him, or the ſouldiers crucifie him, God decreed not it ſhould be done, but to ſuffer it to be done, Bellarm. cap. 11. ſic etiam Rhemiſt.

Contra. 1. God did not onely permit the Jewes to worke their malice upon Chriſt, but moſt juſtly and moſt holily he uſed their malice to bring his purpoſe to paſſe. 2. For if God ſuffered and permitted that to be done which he might have hindred, he thereby ſhould bee made acceſſary with the Jewes of his ſonnes death. And 3. againe, where the Apoſtle ſaith, definito conſilio, hee was delivered up by the determinate counſell of God : it ſheweth an active, not a permiſſive power of God, and a reſolute decree of God for the delivering up of his ſonne, not a foreknowledge onely. 4. Neither is it the Lords manner to decree to ſuffer, but to doe : for, Whatſoever the Lord will, is done in heaven and in earth. 5. But if hee ſhould ſuffer that to bee done which hee willeth not, then not whatſoever the Lord willeth is done ; but he ſhould be conſtrained to yeeld to the will of others.

Pſal. 35.6.

Argum. 2. The Prophet David ſaith, that God bid Shemei curſe. And the Lord ſaith to the evill ſpirit, that offered himſelfe to goe and deceive Ahab : Vade & fac, & prævalebis : Goe and doe ſo, and thou ſhalt prevaile : But bidding and commanding is more than ſuffering : Ergo.

2 Sam. 16.11.

Anſw. Firſt, God may bee ſaid to bid or command to doe evill, in ſuffering the inſtruments which he uſeth to doe evill. Secondly, becauſe hee not onely ſuffereth the wicked ſo to doe, but leaveth and forſaketh them, and withholdeth his grace. Thirdly, and beſide theſe two wayes, Præſidet etiam Deus ipſis voluntatibus malis, eaſque regit & gubernat, ac flectit in eis inviſibiliter operando, ut licet vitio proprio mala ſint, tamen à divina providentià ad unum potius malum, quàm ad aliud, non poſitive, ſed permiſſivè ordinentur : God ſitteth even in the wicked purpoſes of men, governing and ruling them, and ſo by his inviſible power working in them, doth turne them, that although they bee evill of themſelves, yet they are by the divine providence of God ordained to doe one evill rather than another, not poſitively, that is, abſolutely, appointing them thereto, but by way of permiſſion : As God is ſaid to have commanded Shemei to curſe, becauſe hee inclined his will, being evill, to curſe David : And he inclined him not by compelling, but by opening him a way to this ſinne, and ſtopping the way to other ſinnes, ſic Bellarm. de amiſſ. grat. lib. 2. cap. 13.

Contra. Concerning the two firſt wayes of permitting and with-holding of grace, they have not any place here ; for to bid and command is more than either of theſe. Concerning the third, firſt, the Jeſuite is contrary to himſelfe, he ſaith that God doth governe, turne, and rule, and incline the minds of wicked men, and yet concludeth that all this is done by permiſſion : inclinavit, id eſt, permiſit, hee inclined, that is, ſuffered : which are cleane contrary : for to incline is an action, to permit is a thing paſſive. Secondly, what differeth now this third way from the firſt ? for here hee runneth to permiſſion. Thirdly, in ſaying that God inclineth to evill by opening a way to evill, and ſtopping the paſſage to other ſins, hee runneth into that inconvenience, which hee moſt of all ſhunneth, to make God the author of ſin : for how can it be avoyded, ſeeing God openeth a way to ſin, pointeth to it, and ſheweth the meane, and might as well hinder the way to this ſinne, as he doth to others ? Therefore how much better and more ſafe is our aſſertion, that God in bidding Shemei to curſe, was himſelfe an agent in this action, ſo farre as it tended to good : namely, uſing this wicked inſtrument in reſpect of himſelfe after a moſt holy and juſt manner, for the triall of David, and the manifeſtation of his juſt judgement upon this wicked man. And thus ſpeaketh Auguſtine : Deus voluntatem ejus proprio ſuo vitio malam in hoc peccatum judicio ſuo juſto & occulto inclinavit : God by his juſt and ſecret judgement did incline his will, being corrupt of it ſelfe, unto this miſchiefe. Loe, he ſaith, inclinavit, he did incline his will, which is more than permiſit, he did ſuffer him.

De grat. & lib. arbit. cap. 20.

Argum. 3. God is ſaid in Scripture to harden mens hearts and to blind their eyes : as Exod. 7. 3. I will harden Pharaohs heart, Ioſua 11. 20. It came of the Lord to harden their hearts, that they ſhould come againſt Iſrael. 1 Sam. 2. 25. They obeyed not the voyce of their father, because the Lord would kill them. Iſay 63. 17. Why haſt thou made us to erre from thy wayes ? Ioh. 12. 39. They could not beleeve, becauſe Eſaias ſaith, hee hath blinded their eyes and hardned their heart : Rom. 1. 28. God gave them up to a reprobate mind.

Bellarmine anſwereth : Firſt, God is not the author of induration or excæcation poſitively, but onely negatively : that is, permittendo, deſerendo, by ſuffering them to bee hardned, and by forſaking them. Secondly, in Scripture thoſe things are ſaid to harden, or to blind, which are but the occaſions only, as gifts are ſaid to blind the eyes of the wiſe : ſo God is ſaid to harden, occaſionaliter, by miniſtring the occaſion, by abuſing whereof men are hardned : as Pſal. 105. God turned the hearts of the Ægyptians, ſo that they did hate his people : God did not pervert the hearts of the Ægyptians, but by ſhewing mercy to his people, they tooke occaſion thereby to hate them. Bellarm. c. 13. & 14. obſervat. 5.

Pſal. 105.25.

The Doway College men doe frame the like anſwer : as that God hardned Pharaohs heart onely by permiſſion, as he is ſaid to have caſt Pharaoh and his chariots into the Sea, Exod. 15.4. And further, as a father by not puniſhing is ſaid to ſpoile, ſo God to indurate : and Pharaoh abuſing Gods

Annot. in 7. Exod. p. 175.

Pag.172.173. in the margen. Pag.758.

benefits hardned his heart: and Gods patience is made by evill hearts unprofitable: and hee did indurate Pharaohs heart in not mollifying it: ſo God permitted the devill only to deceive Ahab.

Contra. First, Thomas Aquinas, whom Bellarmine alleageth, granteth that God doth inclinare malas voluntates, non ſolum permittendo, ſed poſitive, incline the evill wils of men, not onely by permiſſion, but poſitively: in Comment. c. 9. ad Roman. that is, not by ſuffering onely, but by doing and working.

Revel.2,14.

Secondly, neither can it ſafely be affirmed that God miniſtreth occaſion to men to bee hardned or to ſinne: ſeeing 1 that Balaam is reproved for teaching Balaak to put a ſtumbling blocke before the children of Iſrael, Revel. 2. 14. Shall we thinke then that God putteth ſtumbling blocks before men to fall at? 2 And this were to make God the worker of tentation, as Satan is, who tempteth occaſionaliter, by ſetting the occaſion or motive before mens eyes; as hee ſhewed Chriſt the whole world. 3 But if they ſay that the occaſion which God miniſtreth, is good, but men abuſe it, and are thereby hardened: as when through Gods patience men are made worſe. Here God doth miniſter no occaſion at all, but they take occaſion to bee hardned, where there is none offered: and thus God cannot any way be ſaid to harden mens hearts.

Thirdly, Auguſtine hath foure opinions of this matter. 1. God is ſaid to harden Pharaohs heart, becauſe he miniſtred the cauſe whereby Pharaoh his heart was hardned, ut cauſa (quibus animus propellitur) exiſtunt, vel non exiſtunt, non eſt in hominis poteſtate, ſed veniunt ex occulta providentia, &c. That the cauſes (wherewith the minde is forced) ſhould be or not be, it is not in mans power, but in Gods ſecret providence, &c. qu. 18. in Exod. But this (as I ſhewed) is not ſufficient. 2. Indurare Deus dicitur, quem mollire noluerit: God is ſaid to harden, whom he will not mollifie, de prædeſtinat. & grat. c. 4. Thus God ſhould bee ſaid to harden the hearts of all wicked men. 3. That God is ſaid to harden Pharaohs heart, Non ad operationem Dei, ſed praſcientiam pertinere monſtratur: It muſt bee underſtood of Gods preſcience only and foreknowledge, not of his working, de prædeſtinat. & grat. c. 6. this were to confound Gods knowledge and workes. 4. Wherefore in the fourth place he ſaith, Deus induravit per juſtum judicium, Pharao per liberum arbitrium: God did indurate Pharaohs heart by his juſt judgement; Pharaoh by the freeneſſe of his corrupt will: de lib. arbit. & grat. cap. 23. To this ſentence of Auguſtine we conſent, that God doth not harden mens hearts only by permiſſion, deſertion, occaſion, preſcience, but as a juſt Judge, he puniſheth ſinne by ſinne, and giveth them over to the hardneſſe of their heart: and Bellarmine unawares confeſſeth as much, that when God in Scripture is ſaid to indurate, id facit ut juſtus Iudex, he doth it as a juſt Judge, c. 14. obſerv. 5. This is more than to doe it by permiſſion only or deſertion. Laſtly, Origen doth very well expreſſe this matter by this ſimilitude: Sol duplicis videtur eſſe virtutis, &c. The Sunne ſeemeth to be of a double vertue, one to illuminate, another to burne or harden, but according to the matter and ſubject: ſo God hardned Pharaohs heart, becauſe it was by his corrupt thoughts of an earthly nature, as the Sunne hardeneth the clay: Hom. 2. in Cantic. So then as the Sunne, not by withdrawing his light, or by ſuffering, but effectively hardneth the clay; ſo God likewiſe: but the cauſe of all is in the corruption of mans heart. So then to conclude this whole matter, I ſay with Auguſtine; firſt, Non cujuſquam peccati author eſt Deus, ſed naturæ Creator, quæ cum poteſtatem habuit non delinquendi, ſponte deliquit: God is not the author of ſinne, but the Creator of nature, which when it had power not to ſinne, ſinned willingly; articul. 5. falſ. impoſ. Auguſtin. Secondly, Divina diſpoſitio non peccatores facit, ſed ordinat cum peccaverunt: The divine diſpoſition maketh not ſinners, but diſpoſeth of them when they have ſinned: in Pſal. 7. So God in the worke of ſinne is to bee conſidered as a Creator, from whom the creature hath power to doe this or that; and as a juſt Judge that ordereth and diſpoſeth of ſinne, directing it to the juſt puniſhment of the wicked.

Tertullian thus reaſoneth againſt Hermogenes, who to excuſe the Creator from being the author of evill, preſuppoſeth that the matter whereof God made all things, was alwayes, and made to Gods hand: and ſo the evill which is done, is to be imputed unto the evilnes of the matter, not to the goodneſſe of the Creator: Tertullian thus impugneth this opinion: Si non author, ſed aſſentator mali invenitur Deus: By this meanes, God though not the author, yet is found to be a favourer and flatterer of evill: aut enim potuit emendare, ſed noluit, aut voluit, verum non potuit; infirmus Deus ſi potuit, & noluit, malus ipſe, quia malo favit, &c. for either he could have mended the matter, but would not, or he would, yet could not, then he ſhould be a weake God, and if hee could and would not, hee ſhould be evill himſelfe, as favouring evill, &c. The like may be ſaid concerning Gods permiſſion of ſinne, if hee have no other hand in it: that he in permitting ſinne, ſhould want power in not hindring it, or aſſent unto it, being able to ſtay it, and yet ſuffering it.

2 Cyrillus of Jeruſalem doubteth not to ſay, that God doth turne the wicked will of the minde, to be an occaſion of the ſalvation of the faithful, &c. which he ſheweth by the example of Ioſephs brethren, whoſe hatred was an occaſion of his advancement: this is more than to ſuffer or permit.

4 Cauſ. 23. qu. 4. c. 23. Cum aliquos à Deo traditos deſideriis, aut obduratos legimus, &c. When we reade of any given up to their luſts, and obdurate, &c. We confeſſe that they had ſo deſerved by their great ſinnes, &c. Where then there is an evill deſert preceding, and hardneſſe of heart followeth as a puniſhment, there God is not to be conſidered only as a beholder or ſufferer, but as a juſt Judge.

Cauſ.24.qu.3.c.39. The Colluthians are numbred among Heretikes, Qui dicunt Deum non facere mala, who ſay that God doth not evill, contrary to the Scripture, I the Lord create evill: the Papiſts excluding the power of God from evill, but onely by the way of permiſſion, are not farre from this hereſie.

The Maſter of the Sentences is a plentifull witneſſe with us; ſhewing divers wayes out of Auguſtine how ſinne ſtandeth with the will of God. 1. Becauſe mala fieri bonum eſt, it is a good thing, that evill ſhould bee done: for by this meanes Gods power and goodneſſe is ſeene, in turning evill to good, lib.1.diſt.46.g.2. Voluntas Dei de nobis impletur, ſed tamen non implemus eam cum peccamus: The will of God is fulfilled of us, though we fulfill not the will of God when we ſin: lib.1.diſt.47.i. that is, Gods will even in ſinners is fulfilled to their puniſhment. 3. Actus mali, in quantum actus ſunt, bona ſunt & à Deo authore: Evill actions, as they are actions, are good, and ſo of God: lib.2.diſt.35.d.4. Ea qua peccata ſunt & pœna peccati, &c. That which is both a ſinne and a puniſhment of ſinne, is of God as it is a puniſhment, for all puniſhments of ſinne are juſt: lib.2.diſt.36.b. So likewiſe lib.2.d.32. Concupiſcentia in quantum pœna peccati Deum habet authorem: Concupiſcence as it is a puniſhment, hath God the author, but as it is a ſinne or fault, it hath the devill for the author. 5. Lib.2.diſtinct.44.b. Poteſtas mali eſt à Deo: The power of evill, or whereby evill is done, is of God: Potentiam Deus tribuit, elationem potentia malitia noſtra mentis invenit: God giveth power to worke, but the abuſe of the power is of the malice of our owne mind. Thus farre the Maſter of the Sentences agreeth with us: whereby it is evident in what ſenſe God in ſinfull acts is to bee conſidered, not as a ſufferer only, but as a worker and diſpoſer.

The third Queſtion, concerning the ſinne of Adam.

This queſtion hath three parts. Firſt, whether Adams fall were any other way, than by Gods permiſſion only. Secondly, what Adams ſinne was, whether pride or infidelity. Thirdly, what kind of ſinne, whether veniall or mortall.

The firſt part, whether Adams fall was any other way, than by Gods permiſſion.

The Papiſts.

Bellarmine affirmeth, that God only ſuffered Adam to be tempted, and ſo to fall, and that God no way willed or decreed it: De ſtat.peccat.lib.3.c.2.

9. Error.

Argum. 2 Pet.3.9. God would have none periſh, but to come to repentance: Therefore God no way willed, or decreed the fall of man. Againe, the Apoſtle ſaith, We muſt not doe evill, that good may come of it, Rom.3.8. Ergo, God would not Adams fall, that hee might afterward bee ſaved by Chriſt.

2 Pet.3.9.

Rom.3.8.

Anſwer. Firſt, the fall of man tended not to his deſtruction, but to his further ſtrengthning and raiſing up in Chriſt: as Ambroſe well ſaith, Iuſta eſſet hac accuſatio, ſi vulnera noſtra immedicabilia eſſent: This accuſation were juſt, if our wounds were remedileſſe, de Paradiſ.cap.8. Neither was Adams fall evill, as it was foreſeene and fore-ordained of God, the cauſe thereof was evill, namely Adams rebellion and diſobedience: but God in his moſt holy counſell, knew how to turne Adams ruine and fall to his benefit.

The Proteſtants.

Neither doe wee affirme that Adams ſinne was appointed in the will and decree of God, but it proceeded from the liberty of Adams will: but the fall of Adam was both foreſeene of God, and decreed to be, not permitted only.

Argum. 1. As Chriſts death was decreed and determined, Acts 2.23. So was the fall of Adam; for the end of Chriſts death, was to reſtore Adams fall: and if the end be decreed, then thoſe things alſo which are neceſſarily referred to that end. Againe, Epheſ.1.4. The Saints were choſen in Chriſt before the foundation of the world, who hath predeſtinate us to bee adopted through Ieſus Chriſt. From whence I reaſon thus: The adoption of Gods children in Chriſt was predeſtinate and fore-ordained before the world: there could be no adoption, if Adam had not fallen: for what needed a reſtitution, if there had beene no tranſgreſſion or prevarication? Ergo, Adams fall was decreed.

Epheſ.1.4.

Auguſtine ſaith, Tenenda eſt inconcuſſe hac regula: This rule muſt ſurely bee held, that ſinners, in malis propriis praſcitos non pradeſtinatos, pœnam autem iis pradeſtinatam, were foreſeene in their ſinnes, not predeſtinate; but their puniſhment was predeſtinate, lib.6. Hypognoſtic. Wherefore Adams fall being a puniſhment of his ſinne, was predeſtinate, and before ordained. Concerning Adams ſin, how it may ſtand with the will of God, I have ſhewed at large before, quaſt.2.part.2.

Againe, Auguſtine ſaith: Creavit Deus hominem & pradeſtinavit, ut ſi obediens eſſet—ſin autem inobediens inobediens ſententiam mortis ſubiret: God created man, and predeſtinate, that if he were obedient hee ſhould continue in life: if diſobedient, hee ſhould undergoe the ſentence of death, &c.— the fall of man and ſentence of death thereupon was a part of Gods decree.

Iuſtine Martyr ſaith that God created Angels and men with free will,—yet with this law and condition to be judged of him, if they did any thing contrary to right and reaſon,&c. The fall of man then and ſentence of death for his tranſgreſſing of the law of reaſon was appointed of God as a juſt judgement.

Harm.ſect.5. pag.87.

Confeſſion of Belgia, artic.16. God hath declared himſelfe mercifull and juſt (after the whole offſpring of Adam was caſt headlong into perdition, through the fault of the firſt man) mercifull in delivering thoſe,—juſt in leaving others in that their fall and perdition, &c. Every thing which God doth in juſtice was ſo appointed and decreed by him: therefore mans fall being juſt for ſin, was ſo decreed.

Pag.1.q.23. art.3.2.

Thomas Aquine ſaith that reprobation is not a ſole preſcience, ſed includit voluntatem permittendi aliquem cadere in culpam & inferendi damnationis pœnam: but it includeth a will of permitting ſome to fall into the fault, and of inferring the puniſhment of damnation: then as Adams ſin then was by Gods permiſſion, ſo his fall and ruine was by his will and decree.

The ſecond part, whether pride, or infidelity were the firſt ſinne of Adam.

The Papiſts.

10 Error.

THe Jeſuites opinion is, that neither intemperancy, luſt of the fleſh, infidelity, or any other, but pride onely was the firſt offence into the which Adam fell: who being tickled with ſelfe-love, and an ambitious deſire to better their eſtate, when the devill had ſaid unto them (eritis ſicut Dii) ye ſhall be as Gods: afterwards alſo fell into infidelity, in giving eare to Satan, and not beleeving the words of God, Bellarm.de ſtat.peccat.lib.3.cap.4.

Eccleſiaſtic. 10. 14.

Argum. 1. We reade in Eccleſiaſticus, 10.14. that pride is the originall of ſin: Ergo, it was the firſt offence from the which other flowed, Bellarm.ibid.

Anſw. Firſt, the authorty of this booke doth not bind us, becauſe we doe not acknowledge nor receive it for Scripture. Secondly, it is apparant by the text it ſelfe, that pride hath alſo his beginning, and therefore is not the originall of all tranſgreſſion: as verſ.13. The beginning of mans pride is to fall away from God: therfore by this ſentence, diſobedience is ſet before pride, as the beginning and begetter thereof. Thirdly, the Canonicall Scripture ſpeaketh contrary: for S. Paul ſaith, that not pride, but covetouſneſſe or the love of mony is the root, that is, the beginning and cauſe of all evill, 1 Tim.6.20.

1 Timoth.6.20. Rom.5.19.

Argum. 2. S. Paul ſaith, Rom.5.19. By one mans diſobedience many were made ſinners: but diſobedience, that is, not to be ſubject to the commandement of another, is the firſt act of pride: Ergo, the firſt ſin of Adam was pride.

Anſw. Firſt, Bellarmine himſelfe confeſſeth, that the diſobedience of our firſt parents was tertius actus, the third act of their tranſgreſſion, infidelity the ſecond, pride the firſt, cap.9. but now he turneth his ſpeech, and ſaith that diſobedience was the firſt act, which hee maketh a part of pride. Secondly, by diſobedience in this place, the Apoſtle meaneth not any one particular offence committed by our firſt parents, but the whole lump or maſſe of ſin rather, which did concurre in their tranſgreſſion: And this appeareth, by ſetting againſt Adams diſobedience, the obedience of Chriſt: whereby is underſtood not any one vertue, but the whole righteouſneſſe, and perfection of Chriſts obedience; whereby many (ſaith the Apoſtle) are made righteous: but we are made righteous, not by the partiall, but whole and entire obedience of Chriſt. As Chriſts obedience then is taken for his whole and perfect obedience, ſo is Adams diſobedience likewiſe.

Thirdly, diſobedience to God proceedeth from infidelity firſt of all, which afterward is accompanied with pride: as the unbeleefe of the Iſraelites is rendred as the cauſe of their diſobedience: becauſe they beleeved not in God, nor truſted in his helpe, &c. and hereof it is that the ſame Greeke word ἀπειθὴς ſignifieth one that is refractary and diſobedient, and one that is without beleefe, ἄπιστος.

The Proteſtants.

THough it bee not a point greatly materiall, whether pride or infidelity in Adams tranſgreſſion was the firſt, ſeeing it is on each ſide confeſſed, that both of them were preſent; yet becauſe it is good, ſo farre as is poſſible, to ſearch out every truth: we will alſo declare, which of theſe opinions commeth neereſt the truth: firſt, it is to be conſidered, that many ſins conſpired as it were, and were heaped together in the tranſgreſſion of Adam: Auguſtine reckoneth up theſe five: 1 Sacrilegium, there was Sacrilege, that is, they robbed God of his honour, in that they beleeved not his word. 2 Homicidium, Homicide, in being guilty of their owne death. 3 Fornicatio ſpiritualis, Spirituall fornication, in giving credit to the devill. 4 Furtum, Theft, in eating fruit which was prohibited, and ſo none of theirs. 5 Avaritia, Covetouſneſſe, plus quam ſufficit expetendo, in deſiring more than was ſufficient: Auguſt.Enchirid.cap.45. And in another place he ſetteth downe three more: Gulam, cupiditatem, ſuperbiam: Gluttony, for they ſaw that the fruit was pleaſant to the eye, and therefore deſired to eat of it : Concupiſcence or carnall deſire, they perceived themſelves to bee naked, &c. Pride in ambitiouſly ſeeking to be like unto God : Ad fratres in Eremo ſerm.68. Unto theſe we may adde the excuſing of their ſinne, and in Adam, his credulity in giving too light eare to Eva her ſuggeſtion : The firſt of all theſe, which are ten in number, was their infidelity, which Auguſtine calleth ſacrilege, not their pride : and we ſhew it thus.

Argum. 1. Infidelity, and forgetting of God is the beginning of all ſinne, as the Pſalme ſaith : The foole hath ſaid in his heart, there is no God : and then it followeth : They have corrupted, and done an abominable worke : The forgetfulneſſe of God therefore which commeth of infidelity, begetteth and bringeth forth other ungodly workes. And our Saviour ſaith, that from within, out of the heart (which is the ſeat of infidelity) proceed fornications, murders, &c. Therefore pride followeth infidelity, for the foole will never lift up himſelfe againſt God, if he had not firſt forgotten the Majeſty, eternity, and power of God.

Mark.7.21.

Argum. 2. Wee doe thus alſo demonſtrate it : Eva ſinned before Adam : Eva her ſinne was by ſeduction : ſhe could not be ſeduced, but by giving eare to the ſeducer : the ſeducer lied unto her and made the word of God falſe : promiſing they ſhould become as Gods, by eating the forbidden fruit, whereas the Lord had ſaid, they ſhould dye the death if they did eat : Satan therefore could never have ſeduced them, unleſſe they had given credit to him, which was their infidelity. Our argument then is this : That, whereby they were ſeduced, was before that whereto they were ſeduced : for the cauſe is alway before the effect, the meane and inſtrument before the end ; but infidelity is that whereby they were ſeduced, in giving credit to Satan : pride and diſobedience, that, whereunto namely, to eat the forbidden fruit, and ſo to be like unto God : the firſt was the object of their diſobedience, the other of their pride : Ergo, their infidelity was firſt.

Argum. 3. Faith is the beginning of righteouſneſſe, Ergo, infidelity is the root of ſinne : argum. Calvin.

Bellarmine. It followeth not, for the foundation of the houſe is firſt laid, but it is laſt deſtroyed : the heart is the firſt that liveth, and the laſt that dieth, cap.5.object.2.

Cont. 1. Where an houſe is at once deſtroyed, and brought to utter ruine, it is firſt undermined at the foundation : ſuch was that univerſall overthrow of mankind, which began at the very foundation, namely the decay of faith, in not beleeving Gods word : ſo likewiſe for the other ſimilitude, in the naturall end of man, the heart is the laſt that dieth, but where the death is violent, and haſtened, the wound is firſt made in the heart to procure a more ſpeedy diſpatch : and ſo Satan gave firſt our parents a deadly wound in the heart and life of their ſoules, namely their faith : thus his owne examples are turned againſt him.

2 He is very bold thus to contradict their owne Canons : Clementin. lib.3.tit.16. Clemen.5. thus decreeth in the generall Councell of Vienna : Unde vulnus eſt ortum, prodit & medela ; unde mors ſubiit, inde vita evenit : Where the wound began, the cure was made ; where death entred, there life proceeded : But our life and cure beginneth from faith in Chriſt : Ergo, in his faith man was firſt maimed and wounded.

Let Auguſtine ſpeake : Eva ſerpenti credidit ut libidine corrumperetur : Eve beleeved the ſerpent to be corrupted with luſt : Cont. Iulian. lib.6.cap.10. The corruption of their minds then bred luſt : which was two-fold, luſt to eat the fruit, which was a ſpice of gluttony ; luſt and deſire thereby to be made like God, which was their pride : theſe two did ariſe of the corruption of their mind. Their mind then was corrupted firſt : and that was by infidelity.

Hereof alſo we have further evidence : Tertullian. lib.2. in Marcion. He doubteth not, Adæ delictum hæreſin, &c. to call Adams ſinne hereſie, which he committed by preferring his owne ſentence before Gods. What was this elſe but a kinde of infidelity, not to give credence unto the ſentence of God?

Againe, hee ſheweth how in that precept given to Adam, Omnia præcepta condita recognoſcimus, we acknowledge all the precepts to be contained : and ſo hee proceedeth to ſhew how they were all in that one tranſgreſſed : if he had loved God, contra præceptum ejus non feciſſent, they had not done againſt his precept: then they committed homicide in falling from immortality; theft, in eating ſecretly of the fruit ; and, if they had not coveted that which was not theirs, de fructu illicito non guſtaſſent, they had not taſted of the unlawfull fruit : But the firſt of all theſe, was the not loving of God, as they ought, which proceeded of their want of faith.

2. Gregory Nazianzene ſaith : Traditi mandati homo oblitus : Man was forgetfull of the commandement delivered : ſo alſo Ieremy the Patriarke : Adam ſi recenti memoria tenuiſſet præceptum &c. If Adam had kept in freſh memory the precept, —hee had not beene caſt into ſo great evill, &c. but his want of faith cauſed this forgetfulneſſe.

all this proceeded from incredulity, ſuſpition of God, diſcontent, doubtfulneſſe.

Likewiſe in their owne law: Clementin. lib. 3. tit. 16. Guſtus ſanciavit, guſtus ſanavit: The taſte woundeth, the taſte healeth, that is, the taſte of Chriſts fleſh giveth health, as the taſte of the forbidden fruit gave the firſt wound: diſobedience then, which was the fruit of infidelity, was the firſt tranſgreſſion, for they would never have eaten of the tree, if they had beleeved the word of God, that they ſhould have died.

The Maſter of the Sentences ſaith: In quo verbo locum dedit tentandi, cum dixit, ne forte moriemini: In which word the woman gave way to the tempter, when ſhe ſaid, Leſt perhaps yee dye: Attende ordinem & progreſſum humanæ perditionis: Conſider the order and progreſſe of mans perdition: Firſt, God ſaith, In what day yee eat thereof yee ſhall dye: then the woman ſaid, Leſt ye dye; laſt of all the Serpent, Ye ſhall not dye: God affirmed, the woman doubted, the devill denied: Ergo, the womans doubting, which proceeded of infidelity, was the beginning of the tranſgreſſion.

Certaine alſo of the Schoolemen, as Bonaventure, Scotus, in 2. ſenten. diſtinct. 21. 22. deny that pride was the firſt ſinne or offence of our firſt parents.

Laſtly, S. Ambroſe thus teſtifieth, Peccatum Adæ non longè eſt ab idololatria, prævaricavit ſe hominem putans futurum Deum, ſecutus magis quod diabolus ſuaſit, quam quod Deus juſſit: The ſinne of Adam is not farre from idolatry: he ſinned thinking that man might be God, following rather that which the devill perſwaded, than that which God commanded: in Luke 13. If Adams ſin were idolatry, it proceeded from infidelity.

The third part, whether Adams ſinne were veniall or mortall.

The Papiſts.

11. Error.

THe Jeſuite denieth that the ſinne of Adam was veniall: his reaſon is this, becauſe Culpa venialis non tollit gratiam aut amicitiam Dei: Veniall faults doe not deprive men of the favour or friendſhip of God. But God was angry with Adam, and thruſt him out of Paradiſe: and by his tranſgreſſion he loſt his innocency: Ergo, it was no veniall ſin: cap. 8.

The Proteſtants.

Rom. 6. 23.

IF the Jeſuite take veniall ſins for thoſe which in their owne nature are pardonable, and deſerve not death, as he doth elſewhere; in this ſenſe neither was this ſin of Adam, nor any other, no not the leaſt ſinne which is committed in the world veniall: for by nature every ſinne deſerveth death. But if by veniall ſinnes wee underſtand thoſe, which howſoever they are in their owne nature, yet through Gods mercy are pardoned: ſo we affirme, that both this ſin of our firſt parents, and all other, which the children of God fall into, are veniall: And though for this ſinne God was offended with Adam, and temporally puniſhed him; yet was he againe, through Gods mercy, reſtored to favour or grace. Thirdly, if by veniall ſinnes we underſtand the ſmaller and lighter offences; ſo we deny alſo that Adams ſinne was veniall: for it was an huge and grievous treſpaſſe; yet he was by grace thereof acquited. Theſe two points then are briefly to be declared: firſt, of the greatneſſe of Adams ſinne; ſecondly, of his recovery by repentance, and his undoubted ſalvation.

Lib. 14. de civit. Dei. c. 12.

Firſt, it appeareth, that the ſinne of our firſt parents was a grievous and great offence, even in the higheſt degree. 1 In reſpect of the party offending: Adam received power if hee would, not to ſinne, therefore his ſinne was the greater. 2 His ingratitude doth augment the ſinne, in that ſo ſoone he had forgotten the unſpeakable benefits beſtowed upon him in his creation. 3 In reſpect of the commandement it ſelfe, which was very eaſie: for in ſuch abundance of all kind of moſt pleaſant fruits, he was only forbidden to eat of one: and therefore, as Auguſtine ſaith: Tam leve præceptum ad obſervandum, tam breve ad memoria retinendum—tanto majore injuſtitia violatum eſt, quanto faciliori poſſet obſervantia cuſtodiri: A commandement ſo eaſie to keepe, ſo ſhort to be remembred, was with ſo much the greater unrighteouſneſſe violated, as it might more eaſily have beene obſerved. 4 The fourth circumſtance is the iſſue of this ſinne, whereby Adam did not only hurt himſelfe, but brought a miſerable ſtate upon his poſterity, both in the propagation of ſinne, and the puniſhment thereof. 5 Laſtly, the great puniſhment laid upon this tranſgreſſion, ſheweth the greatneſſe thereof: for beſide the ſpirituall wretchedneſſe of the ſoule, being not onely deprived of thoſe excellent graces of holineſſe and righteouſneſſe, wherein it was created, but alſo made ſubject to everlaſting damnation; there was a threefold puniſhment laid upon them in their bodies: upon the woman, in bringing forth with paine and travell: upon the man, in getting his living in the ſweat of his browes, that is, with paine and ſorrow: upon them both, in returning to the duſt, and yeelding to mortality and corruption. Theſe circumſtances then, being weighed together, doe plainly ſet forth the ſtate and quality of Adams tranſgreſſion, that it was an high offence before God.

Now concerning the ſecond point: we doe, notwithſtanding the greatneſſe of their ſinnes, undoubtedly hold, againſt the hereſie of the Tatianes, who blaſphemouſly affirmed that Adam was condemned, that our firſt parents were the children of Gods election. The Jeſuite alſo affirmeth the ſame: but upon very weake ground: as that Adam and Eve did make them coverings of fig leaves in ſtead of ſackcloth, in ſigne of repentance: alſo becauſe that Adam by certaine ancient writers is affirmed

The fourth Queſtion, concerning Originall ſinne.

THere are divers points of this queſtion, which are on each ſide confeſſed: wee will firſt ſet them down briefly, and then come to the points of difference and diſagreement between us.

Rom. 5. 12.

Rom. 5. 14.

How the ſoule is propagated.

Eccleſ. 12. 7.
Zach. 12. 1.
Heb. 12. 9.

Eccleſ. 11. 5.
2 Machab. 7. 22.
Auguſt. de ani. origin. lib. 1. c. 15.

Firſt, we are agreed, that originall ſin is verily propagated by generation from our parents, and is a corruption ingraffed in us by nature: not as the Pelagians did hold, that Adams tranſgreſſion was only hurtfull to his poſterity by imitation: for S. Paul ſaith directly: In quo omnes peccaverunt: That in Adam all have ſinned, Rom. 5. 12. Secondly, we confeſſe, that originall ſin hath not only made the body ſubject to death and mortality, which is the opinion of Iacobus Faber, and ſome others; but hath alſo polluted and defiled the ſoule of man: So the Apoſtle ſaith, that not only death hath reigned over all; but all men by Adams diſobedience are made ſinners, ver. 19. and ſin is the death of the ſoule. Thirdly, for the originall of the ſoule, we thinke it a more probable opinion, and agreable to Scripture, that the ſoules of men ſhould be created as they are infuſed into the bodies, conceived, and prepared in the womb, then that the ſoules ſhould be produced by generation from the parents, as the bodies are: for the Scripture ſeemeth to make a divers beginning of the ſoule and the body: as the Preacher ſaith, that duſt, that is, the body returneth to the earth, and the ſpirit to God, that gave it: So by the Prophet, Zacharie the Lord ſaith, that he formeth the ſpirit in the midſt of man: And the Apoſtle to the Hebrewes, ſeemeth to make a flat oppoſition between the fathers of the bodies, and the father of the ſpirits: Yet becauſe this queſtion is not plainly determined in the Scripture, we thinke it more ſafe, being not a point of faith, to wonder at it as a great myſtery, and not raſhly to pronounce any thing, as of a common and knowne matter: And the rather, becauſe the Preacher ſaith, that no man knoweth the way of the ſpirit: And thus Auguſt. contented himſelfe; writing in theſe words of the woman in the Machabees, that ſaid to her children, I know not how you came into my wombe: Ego, inquit neſcio, ille ſcit, qui formavit, utrum ſimul animam formarit, an jam formatis dederit: ſic ego dico de anima mea, me neſcire, quomodo venerit in corpus meum: I know not, ſaith ſhe, as if ſhee ſhould ſay, I know not, but hee knoweth that formed the ſpirit, whether he framed it together with the body, or gave it to the body framed before: So I ſay of my ſoule, I cannot tell how it came into my body.

Fourthly, this being concluded and determined, that the ſoule hath the beginning of God, and not of the parents: yet we are able to anſwer that objection which is made concerning originall ſin: for thus they reaſon: Sin is an adjunct of the ſoule, not of the body: it cannot then be in the body before the ſoule come; and in the ſoule it is not, becauſe it is created of God pure and unſpotted: unleſſe therefore the ſoule ſhould be derived from the parents, we cannot know where to place originall ſin.

Anſw. Originall ſin is neither proper to the body, nor to the ſoule, but it is hominis peccatum, a ſin of the whole man: who conſiſteth of body and ſoule: and it commeth not of the body alone, or of the ſoule alone, but of the conjunction of them both together: ſo that now neither the body muſt be reſpected alone, nor the ſoule alone, but as they do jointly make one man: and ſo enter into one condition, and are partakers each of others woe or welfare.

How originall ſin is derived.

De natu. & gra. cont. Pelagian. lib. 3. c. 10.

If it be further objected, that it ſtandeth not with Gods juſtice, to thruſt a pure ſoule into an uncleane body: We further anſwer: Firſt, that the ſoule and body are not of God reſpected as ſingle ſubſtances, but as they are joyned together, to make one man: and therefore there is but one condition of both. Secondly, the ſoule in reſpect of Gods creation, is a pure creature, yet it continueth not in that ſtate one moment: for it is created in the midſt of the body, in an uncleane and polluted place: and forthwith being coupled to the body, beginneth to be uncleane. S. Auguſtine alſo doth anſwer very well: Ut anima recens creata, ab omni delicto immunis, paſſiones carnis, diverſoſque cruciatus, etiam dæmonum incurſus in parvulis ſuſtinere cogatur——hoc ſi juſtum oſtenditur, ſic oſtendi poteſt, qua juſtitia, in carne quoque peccati ſubeat originale peccatum: That the ſoule newly created, and void of all offence, yet ſhould endure in infants the paſſions and vexations of the fleſh, yea the invaſion of Devils (which were ſuffered to torment children) if it may be ſhewed to be juſt, ſo it may be ſhewed how it ſtandeth with the rule of juſtice, that the ſoule in ſinfull fleſh ſhould be touched alſo with originall ſin.

Pſal. 51. 5.

Fifthly, it is of each ſide concluded, that originall ſin doth appertaine as well by nature to the ſeed of the faithfull, as of Infidels: for David confeſſeth, who no doubt was borne of faithfull parents, that in ſinne his mother conceived him.

Rom. 5. 16.

Sixthly, that not all the ſins of our parents and fore-fathers, but the offence only of Adam is derived and propagated to poſterity: ſo ſaith the Apoſtle, The fault came of one offence, namely Adams, to condemnation, but the gift is of many offences to juſtification.

Originall ſin no ſubſtance.
1 Tim. 4. 4.
Rom. 7. 18.

Seventhly, that originall ſin is no ſubſtance, nor hath any naturall being of it ſelfe, but is only a depravation, defect and corruption of nature: for every creature of God is good, Ergo, originall ſin is no ſubſtance created of God, being evill: S. Paul alſo ſaith, I know that in me dwelleth no good thing. Originall ſin then hath the ſeat and dwelling in man, it hath no being of it ſelfe.

Laſtly,

affirmed to have beene buried in the ſame place, where Chriſt was crucified, and ſhed his bloud: which is an uncertaine tradition beſide Scripture. But our arguments for the ſalvation of our firſt parents are theſe.

Argum. 1. The firſt promiſe of the Meſſiah was made to our parents immediatly after their tranſgreſſion: The ſeed of the woman ſhall breake the ſerpents head: Ergo, they had their intereſt and part of this promiſe: for which of all the Prophets or Patriarkes was there, to whom Chriſt was promiſed, to whom the promiſe of grace appertained not? Gen.3.15

Argum. 2. The firſt Adam was a figure of the ſecond: But it cannot bee ſhewed that ever any reprobate was ordained, or appointed of God, to be a figure of his Son Chriſt, the Meſſiah to come: Ergo, Adam was no reprobate. Rom.5.14.

Argum. 3. S. Luk. in ſetting down the genealogy of our Saviour Chriſt, ſaith, he was the ſon of Adam, who was the Son of God. Thus then we reaſon: Adam was the ſon of God: Ergo, he was no reprobate, not a child of perdition, but an heire of ſalvation. Other arguments we have for Adams election, but theſe at this time, and in this place may ſuffice. Luc.3.28.

That Adams ſin was veniall, Hilary teſtifieth: Adam confeſſum, veniæ reſervatum: that Adam confeſſed, and was reſerved to pardon, in Pſal. 119. c. 8. and S. Ambroſe lib. de Paradiſ. c. 14. Venabilis Eva culpa, quam ſecuta ſit delicti confeſſio: Eva her fault was veniall, which the confeſſion of her ſinne followed.

1. Of the ſame judgement, that Adam was ſaved are Ireneus, lib. 3. cap. 34. Epiphanius. cont. hæreſ. 46. Lib. de pœnitẽt. Claſ.3.1.c.n.37.

2. Likewiſe Auguſt. epiſt. 99. ad Evodium, and before him Tertullian, who ſaith, that Adam, exomologeſi reſtitutus in Paradiſum ſuum, that Adam by confeſſion was reſtored into Paradiſe. Comment. in Luc.3.

3. Of our own Writers, P. Martyr hereunto inclineth: and Bullinger doth collect ſo much upon that place, Luk. 3.38. which was the ſon of God. In 2 ſentent. diſtinct.21.

4. Scotus is of opinion, that Adams ſin was veniall, and others, that follow him.

An Appendix, to this Part, of the greatneſſe of Adams ſinne.

BEllarmine hath foure poſitions of this matter. Firſt, that Adam was not properly ſeduced but Eve, lib. 3. de ſtat. peccat. c. 7. Secondly, that Adams ſin was greater than the womans, c. 9. Thirdly, that in their tranſgreſſion they loſt their faith, c. 6. Fourthly, that Adams ſin, was aliquo modo, in ſome reſpect the greateſt of all ſins: firſt, both becauſe he might eaſily have kept himſelfe from tranſgreſſion, there being but one precept given him: ſecondly, in reſpect of his great ingratitude, having received ſo many benefits from God: thirdly, for that Adams ſin redounded to the hurt of all his poſterity, as no other ſin doth, c. 10. 12.Error. 13.Error.

The Proteſtants.

FIrſt, that Adam was not properly ſeduced, but Eve, we acknowledge, the Scripture ſo affirming: Adam was not deceived, but the woman was deceived. 1 Tim.2.14.

Secondly, that Adams ſin in ſome reſpect was greater, as in regard of his perſon, than Eva her ſinne was, we alſo grant; but ſimply it was not: ſo this point we partly affirme, and partly deny it: ſee the appendix to the ſecond part of the fourth queſtion following.

Thirdly, that our firſt parents loſt their faith in their tranſgreſſion, wee hold it an error: for beſide that, the faith of the Saints cannot bee utterly extinct by their ſin, for the gifts and calling of God are without repentance: That Adam had not loſt all faith, appeareth: firſt, by the conſcience and ſhame of ſinne, in that they hid themſelves, being afraid of Gods preſence: ſecondly, becauſe the promiſe of Chriſt was preſently upon their fall exhibited to them, which without faith, they were not capable of. Rom.11.29.

Fourthly, firſt, the three reaſons alleaged, ſhew Adams ſin to have been a very great and grievous tranſgreſſion, but not the greateſt that ever was: ſecondly, the Maſter of the Sentences well anſwereth, that becauſe all mankind is hurt by Adams ſin, it was not for that his ſin was greater than all other, but in reſpect of Adams perſon, in whom the whole humane nature then conſiſted. Thirdly, the ſin againſt the holy Ghoſt is greater, which ſhall never be forgiven: the ſins of the reprobate and damned are greater, being puniſhed with everlaſting damnation. Lib.2.diſt.33.

Thomas Aquinas ſaith, that Adams ſin was not ſimply the greateſt, but in reſpect of ſome circumſtance; as, propter conditionem perſonarum & perfectionem ſtatus, becauſe of the condition of their perſons, and perfection of their ſtate. 2.2.q.163.art.3.

They which hold Adam to be ſaved, conſequently affirme, that his ſin was not the greateſt, for then it ſhould not have found pardon: ſee the queſtion next before.

Laſtly, we doe diſtinguiſh betweene originall and actuall ſin: for infants and young children cannot commit any actuall ſin, but yet they are guilty of originall: the firſt is evident, Rom. 9. 11. the Apoſtle ſpeaking of Eſau and Iacob ſaith, that they yet had done neither evill nor good: the ſecond is alſo proved, Rom. 5.14. that children doe ſin, though not after the tranſgreſſion of Adam, that is, actually. Rom.9.11. Rom.5.14.

Theſe then are the ſeverall points, wherein wee and our adverſaries are agreed: the difference betweene us in this queſtion of originall ſin, is in theſe particulars following: firſt, of the nature and quality of originall ſin, Secondly, of the beginning of originall ſin. Thirdly, whether it remaine after Baptiſme. Fourthly, whether it be hurtfull to the regenerate after Baptiſme. Fifthly, of the ſeat of concupiſcence. Sixthly, of the puniſhment of originall ſin.

The firſt part, of the nature and definition of originall ſin.

The Papiſts.

THe Jeſuite defineth originall ſin to be nothing elſe but, Privatio ſeu carentia doni juſtitiæ originalis, vel habitualis averſio à Deo: A privation or wanting of the gift of originall juſtice; or an habituall averſion or turning away of the mind from God: but he denieth, that reatus culpæ, or pœnæ, that the guilt of the offence of our firſt parents, or of the puniſhment, is any part of originall ſin. His reaſon is, becauſe to be guilty of the offence or of the puniſhment, are the effect or ſequell of ſin, rather than any ſin it ſelfe: and therefore it is no part of originall ſin which hath Veram & propriam peccati rationem, The true and proper nature and condition of ſin: Bellarm. de amiſſion. grat. lib. 5. cap. 19. ſect. reatus culpæ. &c. 14. Error.

Anſwer. In the affirmative part of Bellarmines definition, there is a double fault: for he ſaith that originall ſin is only the defect or wanting of juſtice, whereas there is in it beſide a ſupply of naturall corruption and pravity: there is not only a grace wanting, but an evill preſent. Secondly, he calleth it an habituall or potentiall turning aſide of the mind from God, whereas there is an actuall rebellion of nature, and depravation of the mind, as even now ſhall be ſhewed.

Neither is the Jeſuites reaſon good, why reatus culpæ, the guiltineſſe of the offence, that is, the ſtaine or blot of Adams ſin remaining in his poſterity, ſhould bee no part of originall ſin, becauſe it is the effect of ſin, not properly ſin it ſelfe: for he might ſo reaſon againſt originall ſin: It is the effect of ſin: Ergo, no ſin: which were no good conſequent: For it is, peccatum, & pœna peccati, both ſin, and the puniſhment of ſin; as Auguſtine ſaith; Primo homini, quod erat pœna, natura nobis eſt: That which was a puniſhment to our firſt parents, is a naturall evill in us: in Pſal. 37. So this naturall ſtaine or blot of ſin, in reſpect of Adam, it is a puniſhment of his tranſgreſſion laid upon his poſterity, in reſpect of us it is ſin.

The Proteſtants.

WE define originall ſin generally to be that evill, which is ingraft in our nature, wherein wee are conceived and borne: which S. Paul calleth, peccatum inhabitans, the ſin that dwelleth in us. This originall evill or ſin, hath two parts: for firſt thereby wee are made guilty of the ſin and diſobedience of our firſt parents, which is made ours by propagation: as the Apoſtle ſaith, by one mans diſobedience many are made ſinners: And together with the fault or offence, the puniſhment is propagated: that is, death is gone over all, in as much as all have ſinned. This is the firſt part of this naturall evill, which is denied by our adverſaries, but confirmed as wee ſee by evident teſtimonies of Scripture. By this then, two Popiſh aſſertions of our adverſaries are overthrowne: one of Albertus Pighius, and Catharinus, that Adams ſin is ours onely by imputation: which opinion Bellarmine taketh paines to confute, cap. 16. the other is maintained by the Jeſuite himſelfe, that Adams ſin is ſaid to be ours, becauſe we were then in Adams loynes when he ſinned, cap. 18. But we affirme that wee are guilty of the ſin of Adam, not by bare imputation, nor yet potentially only in Adams loynes, but really, verily, and in ſome ſort actually by propagation. As by this reaſon may appeare; Look how death, the puniſhment of Adams ſin is derived to his poſterity, ſo is his ſin: but death reigneth over us verily and indeed, not by imputation, or potentially only: The firſt part is proved by the Apoſtles words: By one man ſin entred into the world, and death by ſin: they entred therefore both after the ſame manner. The ſecond part experience maketh good: for wee ſee that children are ſubject to dye, and are taken away by death: Ergo, Adams ſin really and indeed is transfuſed to his poſterity. This then is the firſt part of originall ſin, reatus culpæ, & obligatio ad pœnam: Whereby we are made guilty of the ſin of Adam, and the puniſhment. Rom.5.19. Verſ.12. Rom.5.12.

The other part is, beſide this reall communicating unto us the ſin of our parents, a generall depravation and corruption of the whole nature of man, both in his ſoule, and in his body: in the ſoule there is the blindneſſe of the mind, the loſſe of free will, the unrulineſſe of the affection, the proneneſſe to vice: in the body, the concupiſcence and rebellion of the fleſh. 12.Error.

And here concerning this part of originall ſin, wee affirme and maintaine two points againſt the Jeſuite: firſt he ſaith that originall ſin is no poſitive quality, or any inherent evill diſpoſition of nature: but whatſoever is evill in us, it doth ſpring onely, Ex carentia juſtitiæ originalis, non ex inſita Bellarm.cap. 15.

aliqua qualitate, from the loſſe or want of originall juſtice, not from any inherent quality. Contra. But the contrary may be ſhewed out of S. Paul, who calleth this naturall evill, *peccatum inhabitans, Rom.*7.20. & corpus mortis, a body of death, or ſin, verſ. 24. but how could it have a being or dwelling, and be as a body, a maſſe or lump of ſin, if it were not an inherent quality, but a privation or defect only: So Auguſtine ſaith: Quod in membris corporis hujus inobedienter movetur, totumq; animum in ſe dejectum conatur attrahere, &c. hoc eſt malum peccati, in quo naſcitur omnis homo: That which is in the members of our body diſorderly moved or ſtirred, and laboureth to captivate the mind unto it, this is that evill of ſin, in the which every man is borne: de peccator. merit. & remiſſ. contr. Pelag. 1.29. This ſin which he ſpeaketh of, moveth, and is moved: wherefore it is ſomewhat that hath a being, and is capable of motion: and for this cauſe not a privation only, or a defect.

Secondly, the Jeſuite defineth originall ſin: Habitualem averſionem à Deo: An habituall forſaking, or turning aſide from God, *cap.*19. as though it were only in habite, nothing in act, and did but give a promptneſſe or inclination to evill only.

Contra. Although wee doe admit the diſtinction of originall and actuall ſins: for theſe are by us done and committed, the other come into the world with us: yet this originall and native ſin is never idle in us but alwayes working, and ſheweth it ſelfe even in infants: This S. Paul calleth, the law of his members rebelling againſt the law of his mind. Rebellion of nature is an actuall thing, but this is the fruit of originall ſin. Auguſtine alſo ſaith, Concupiſcentia lex peccati cum parvulis naſcitur: This concupiſcence, which is the law of ſin, is even borne with children: cont. Pelag. 2. 4. And this rebellion of nature doth bewray it ſelfe in children, by thoſe unreaſonable motions, and ſtirrings which are ſeen in them: Qui non ratione, ſed dolore interdum cohibentur: Which are not ſtayed by reaſon, but ſometime with paine and griefe, as Auguſtine ſaith: and therefore he thinketh that Chriſt in his infancy, was voyd of them; *cont. Pelag. lib.*2.*cap.*29.

Concil. Arauſican. 2.*can.*1. Si quis per offenſam prævaricationis Adami, non totum ſecundum corpus & animam dicit hominem in deterius commutatum, &c. anathema ſit: If any man ſay that by the offence of the tranſgreſſion of Adam, man is not both in body and ſoule changed to the worſe, let him be accurſed, &c. The nature of man therfore by ſin is actually corrupted, it is not potentially, or in habit only: for there is, actus primus, & ſecundus, the firſt act, and the ſecond: the firſt is inward, and ſo we ſay that man is inwardly by originall ſin actually corrupted, ſin being yet as in the root, or ſeed. The ſecond act is externall, when this bitter root of ſin within bringeth forth evill fruit in the life.

In Pſal. 50.

Auguſtine further ſaith, what is it, that he ſaith, he was conceived in iniquity, Niſi quia trahitur iniquitas ex Adam, etiam ipſum vinculum mortis cum ipſa iniquitate concretum eſt: but that iniquity is drawne from Adam, yea and the bond of death is joyned together with iniquity, &c. he affirmeth originall ſin to be a concrete, and exiſtent thing.

ἐν ἑαυτῷ συνεστήσατο τὴν κακίαν.
lib.4. orthod. c.21.

Damaſcene ſaith, when the creature is become diſobedient unto him that created it, it conſtituteth evill in it ſelfe: ſin then, though it be no ſubſtance, as Damaſcene affirmeth in the ſame place, yet it hath a kind of exiſtence and conſtitution.

Harm. ſect. 4. p.73.

Confeſſ. of Auſpurg. artic. 2. Wee meane by originall ſin—that guilt, whereby all that come into the world, are through Adams fall ſubject to Gods wrath,—and that every corruption of mans nature derived from Adam: And this corruption of mans nature comprehendeth both the defect of originall juſtice,—as alſo concupiſcence.

Paulus Burgenſis maintaineth againſt Lyranus, that originall ſin is not only a privation, but habitus corruptus, a corrupt habit like unto a diſeaſe, which beſide the privation of health hath humores male diſpoſitos, the humours ill diſpoſed.

*Decret. par.*2.*cauſ.*33.*diſt.*3.*c.*25. This Canon ſheweth that originall ſin is not only habituall but actuall: firſt it ſaith, Iniquitas eſt habitudo mentis injuſta: Iniquity is the habit of an unrighteous mind. Againe, Peccatum eſt opus iniquitatis; iniquitas autem operatrix culpa, aut delicti: Sin is the worke of iniquity; iniquity is the worker of the guilt or of the ſin, &c. Thus then originall ſin, which is here called iniquity, is not only in habit but in act.

And that originall ſin is not only a privation of originall juſtice, but a reall depravation of our nature, not privative onely but poſitive, many of the learned Popiſh writers doe affirme: as *Henricus quodlib.*2.*qu.*11. Gregor. Arimin. in 2.*diſt.*3.*qu.*1. Ioann. Driedo. 1 lib. de grat. & liber. arbitrio.

Likewiſe, *Hyeronim. Hangeſt. c.*3. & 13. Ex Ada delicto, &c. ſecuta eſt plaga atque juſtitiæ originalis ablatio, & originalis culpæ incurſus: The plague or wound that followed of Adams ſin, is the ablation of originall juſtice, and the invaſion of originall ſin. Originall ſin then is ſomewhat elſe beſide the privation of originall juſtice.

But among the reſt the Maſter of the Sentences is moſt reſolute in this point: *lib.*2.*diſt.*30.f. Originale peccatum culpa eſt: Originall ſin is a fault. g. Fomes peccati, lex membrorum, languor naturæ, ſive tyrannus, &c. The nouriſhment of ſin, the law of the members, the diſeaſe of nature, a very tyrant. All this ſheweth more than a privation only. Diſtinct. 35. I. Aliquid ponit, &c. He ſheweth that originall ſin is poſitive, and not a privation only. Thus the truth wanteth not the teſtimony of the adverſaries thereof.

The ſecond Part, of the beginning of originall ſin, whether it be derived from Adam or Eve.

The Papiſts.

THe Jeſuite thinketh that originall ſin is only derived from Adam : his beſt and onely reaſon is grounded upon S. Pauls words : By one man ſin entred into the world, Rom. 5.12. And, as in Adam all dye, ſo in Chriſt are all made alive, 1 Cor. 15.22. Ergo, the propagation of ſin is only from Adam : Bellar.cap.13.lib.4.de ſtat.peccat. 15.Error.

Anſwer. Firſt, the word that the Apoſtle uſeth, ἄνθρωπος, homo, both in the Latine and Greeke indifferently ſignifieth a man, or a woman. Secondly, ſin is ſaid to have entred by one man, that is, by Adam, becauſe the man is the chiefeſt inſtrument of generation : as the Apoſtle ſaith : The man is not of the woman, but the woman of the man. And therefore in the law the males onely were circumciſed, becauſe the beginning of the carnall generation was from them. Thirdly, in reſpect of Adams perſon, who was the more worthy and excellent : and although in divers reſpects the womans ſin was not inferiour to his, yet becauſe the tranſgreſſion was not perfected nor conſummate but by the conſent of Adam, it is chiefly imputed to him. Fourthly, if Adam alone brought in ſin, the Scripture ſhould be contrary, that ſaith, The woman was firſt in the tranſgreſſion : Fifthly, Auguſtine alſo giveth another anſwer : The ſin came by two, and the Apoſtle ſaith, it entred by one, becauſe they two now made but one : They two ſhall be one fleſh. Laſtly, the Maſter of Sentences giveth theſe reaſons why ſin is ſaid to enter by one, and yet both ſinned : Quia per mulierem intraverit de viro factam : Becauſe it entred by the woman made of man: Or, becauſe if man had not ſinned, humane kind had not been corrupted, lib.2.diſtinct.22.g.

The Proteſtants.

THough we grant that Adam was the chiefeſt in ſome reſpects, though not the firſt in the tranſgreſſion, yet was he not alone: his ſin indeed was greater than the womans, for theſe cauſes: Firſt, he was ſtronger than the woman, and more able to reſiſt the tentation. Secondly, the woman encountred with a ſtronger enemy, for ſhe was ſeduced by the Serpent, in whom the devill ſpake : but Adam obeyed onely the voyce of his wife. Thirdly, becauſe the commandement was given by the Lord to the man, Gen. 2. 16. and by the man to his wife : wherefore the mans offence ſeemeth the greater in tranſgreſſing the commandement : yet although the man were the chiefe tranſgreſſor, as by theſe and other circumſtances may appeare : yet they were both authors and beginners of originall ſin. Gen.3.13.17. Gen.2.16.

Argum. 1. As ſin entred into Paradiſe, ſo is it entred into the world : for it is the ſame ſin which was in our firſt parents, and is in us, in them actually, in us originally : and the ſame ſin muſt have the ſame beginning : but ſin entred into Paradiſe both by the man and woman : nay the woman was deceived, and was firſt in the tranſgreſſion : Ergo, by them both ſin came upon us.

Argum. 2. By whom death entred into the world, by them alſo ſin entred : but death entred both by the man and woman : for being guilty of one ſin, they received one common puniſhment, Duſt thou art, and to duſt thou ſhalt returne. Eccleſiaſticus alſo ſaith (which is good Scripture againſt our adverſaries) Through the woman we all dye : Yea, ſaith the Jeſuite, per illam, through her, becauſe ſhee gave occaſion of the tranſgreſſion, but not in illa, in her, as we are ſaid to dye in Adam. Auguſtine laſtly anſwering an objection of the Pelagians, whether ſin entred by one or two, doubteth not to ſay, having alleaged that ſaying, Eccleſiaſtic.226. of the woman came the beginning of ſin, Ecce factum eſt tibi ſatis, per duos homines pertranſiſſe peccatum : Behold, this may ſatisfie you that ſin entred by two, the man and the woman, Hypognoſt.lib.2.

Laſtly, the maſter of Sentences thinketh, that Eve her ſin was the greater, lib. 2. diſt. 22. and that Adam was not ſeduced : then it will follow, that the womans ſin being the greater cannot be excluded, and the mans ſin, which was the leſſe, to be taken only to give beginning to originall ſin.

An appendix, whether the ſin of Adam or Eve were the greater in the tranſgreſſion. That Adams ſin was greater.

THis queſtion is not ſo much controverted betweene the Papiſts and Proteſtants, as betweene the ancient fathers of the Church, who have written diverſly of this matter. S. Ambroſe doth amplifie Adams ſinne ; S. Chryſoſtome and S. Auguſtine doe ſeeme to exaggerate the tranſgreſſion of the woman : I will propound the arguments on both ſides, and then briefly determine of the truth. Firſt, S. Ambroſe thus reaſoneth againſt Adams ſin : *Inſtitut. virgin. c.*4.

1 Illam decepit ſuperior creatura, &c. A ſuperiour creature deceived the woman, that is, an evill Angell : but a woman deceived Adam : he had a weaker tempter.

2 If Adam could not keepe the commandement, which he heard of God, how ſhould the woman that heard it not ?

3 The man is rebuked, the woman but asked the queſtion.

Gen.3.13. 4 The woman firſt confeſſed her fault, The Serpent beguiled me.

5 The woman accuſeth the Serpent, the man more unkindly accuſeth the woman.

6 The woman in her puniſhment findeth mercy : Ex remuneratione pœnam invenit : Shee findeth a reward in her puniſhment : though ſhe was to bring forth in ſorrow, yet by her fruit ſhe ſhall be delivered.

But theſe reaſons may thus eaſily be anſwered : Firſt, Ambroſe himſelfe confeſſeth, that homo ſerpentis perſuaſione deceptus: That man was deceived by the perſwaſion of the Serpent, ſerm. 7. in Pſal. 119. So then the devill tempted the woman, and the devill by the woman tempted Adam : Adams then was the ſtronger tentation.

2 The woman knew as well as the man that they were not to eat of the forbidden tree, ver. 3. God hath ſaid, Ye ſhall not eat of it, &c.

3 The woman is both rebuked and firſt puniſhed.

4 The woman confeſſeth her fault, no otherwiſe than Adam did, by poſting it off to another.

5 The man ſpake but the truth, that the woman gave him to eat, as the woman ſaith ſhe was beguiled of the Serpent.

6 The benefit of the promiſe concerning the womans ſeed redoundeth to the man, as well as to the woman : And the promiſe is firſt pronounced before her puniſhment is inflicted.

That the ſin of the woman was in it ſelfe not inferiour to Adams tranſgreſſion, but rather greater.

FIrſt, the Maſter of the Sentences thus reaſoneth; Plus videtur peccaſſe mulier, &c. The woman ſeemeth to have ſinned more, becauſe ſhe preſumptuouſly deſired the divine equality, and beleeved it would come to paſſe : but Adam did not ſo beleeve, being only entiſed by his wife, &c. diſtinct. 22. lib.2.

2 Mulier plus peccavit, quia gravius punita : The woman offended more, becauſe ſhee was puniſhed more : upon the man is inflicted labour and ſorrow : upon the woman travell and paine in labour : Thom. Aquin.22.qu.163.artic.4.

3 Mulier in ſe, proximum, & Deum peccavit; vir in ſe tantum & Deum: The woman ſinned againſt her ſelfe, againſt God, againſt her husband : the man only againſt God and himſelfe : de Geneſ. lib. 11. c.42. Auguſtin.

4 Saint Ambroſe alſo uſeth this reaſon : Mulier ſciens prudenſq; peccavit, &c. The woman ſinned willingly, and wittingly, in that after ſhe knew ſhe had ſinned, ſhe drew alſo her husband into error, de Paradiſ. cap.6.

5 As their ſins were in degree and order, ſo was the puniſhment : firſt the Serpent is curſed as being the firſt ſeducer : next the woman is chaſtiſed as being in the ſecond degree of offence : the man is reſerved to the laſt and leaſt puniſhment.

1 Tim.2.14. 6 But the beſt reaſon of all is grounded upon S. Pauls words : Adam was not deceived, but the woman was deceived, and was found in the tranſgreſſion : Whereupon Chryſoſtome giveth this note : Heva amplius deliquerat, &c. Eve ſinned the more, in ſo much that Adams ſin compared with it is not counted tranſgreſſion, Hom.31.ad Rom. And S. Ambroſe thus inforceth it : Viro mulier, non mulieri vir author erroris : The woman to the man, not the man to the woman is author of error. The concluſion of the queſtion is this, that Adams ſin in reſpect of the dignity and excellency of his perſon was the greater : as Auguſtine ſaith, Adam plus peccavit, quia omni bono abundavit: Adam ſinned more, becauſe hee had more excellent graces, and better ſtrength to reſiſt : But in regard of the quality of the the ſin in it ſelfe, it is evident, that the ſin of the woman was tempered with a greater meaſure both of Infidelity and ambition, than Adam was. And here I will not refuſe the reſolution of Thomas Aquine, who maketh the ſin of Adam, both ſuperiour to the ſin of Eve, equall and inferiour: 1 Superiour, 2.2.q.163.artic.4. quia fuit perfectior muliere, becauſe he was perfecter than the woman. 2 Equall, quantum ad genus peccati, in reſpect of the kind of ſin: 3 but inferiour, quantum ad ſpeciem ſuperbia, in reſpect of the divers kind and degree of pride: for in the woman there was a greater pride, becauſe ſhe beleeved the Serpent, affecting a greater perfection, but the man gave credit to the woman: & the woman induxit ad peccandum, did firſt induce the man to ſin. I end this matter with that concluſion of Auguſtine, in the like caſe: that as one being fallen into a pit, thus anſwered him that asked, how he fell in: Cogita quaſo quomodo hinc me liberes, non quomodo huc ceciderim quaras: Bethinke your ſelfe how you may deliver me hence, aske not how I came hither, &c. So it is needleſſe for us to be inquiſitive of the beginning, entrance, quality and degree of the ſin of our parents: but let us rather ſeeke and labour by what meanes to be delivered from it.

The third part, whether originall ſin remaine after Baptiſme.

The Papiſts.

BEllarmine in flat words denieth, that the corruption of nature, or concupiſcence, which remai- 16. Error. neth in the regenerate after Baptiſme, is originall ſin, nor yet any ſin of it ſelfe, nor yet doth make them guilty, in whom it is found: Bellarm. lib. 5. de ſtat. peccat. cap. 7. The like alſo the Rhemiſts affirme, that concupiſcence remaining after baptiſme, is not properly a ſin, nor forbidden by commandement: it is called ſin, becauſe it is the matter, effect, and occaſion of ſin, Rhemiſt. Rom. 6. ſect. 6.

Argum. 1. S. Iames ſaith, That luſt when it hath conceived, bringeth forth ſin, and ſin when it is fi- Iames 1,15. niſhed, bringeth forth death. The Apoſtle here calleth not luſt or concupiſcence ſin, but ſaith it bringeth forth ſin: Sie Bellarm. cap. 7. Rhemiſt. in hunc locum.

Anſw. 1. The argument followeth not, concupiſcence bringeth forth ſin: Ergo, it is no ſin: nay, it ſhall the rather be ſin, as one Serpent bringeth forth another: ſo both the mother and daughter are ſin.

2 We may better conclude out of this place, that concupiſcence is ſin: A good tree (ſaith our Saviour) bringeth forth good fruit, and an evill tree evill fruit; but concupiſcence bringeth forth evill fruit. Math. 7. 17. Every man is tempted (ſaith the Apoſtle) when he is drawne away of his concupiſcence, &c. Ergo, concupiſcence is an evill tree.

Argum. 2. S. Paul ſaith, Now it is no more I that doe it, but ſin that dwelleth in me: for I know that in me, that is, my fleſh, dwelleth no good thing. Hence it is proved, firſt that this ſin, which S. Paul ſaith, Rom. 7. 17, 18. is not his, is not imputed to the Apoſtle. And againe, it is in his fleſh, therefore no ſin, for the fleſh properly is not capable of ſin, Bellarm. ibid.

Anſw. By the fleſh and the minde, Saint Paul doth not here underſtand the two parts, whereof man naturally conſiſteth, namely, the body and the ſoule: but he ſpeaketh of a man new regenerate; by the fleſh underſtanding whatſoever is carnall, either in the ſoule or body; by the minde or ſpirit, whatſoever is ſpirituall and regenerate. And therefore as he is regenerate, he ſaith, the ſin in him is not imputed, but yet it is ſin ſtill.

Bellarm. objecteth: 1 Though ſometime the fleſh be taken for the whole man, yet is it not ſo here, Verſ. 24. for that which he nameth fleſh, he calleth the body of death, but by the mortall body, both the parts of man cannot be underſtood: for the ſoule is not mortall.

Contra. By death here the Apoſtle underſtandeth not the mortality of the body, but that death which commeth by ſin both to the body and ſoule: as the Prophet ſaith, That ſoule that ſinneth ſhall Ezech. 18. 18. dye. There is then a death of the ſoule, as there is of the body: the body then of death is nothing elſe but the body, that is, the whole lumpe and maſſe of ſin, which bringeth death both to body and Rom. 6. 6. ſoule.

Bellarm. 2. Saint Paul here ſpeaketh of the inner man, verſ. 22. but that is the ſoule of man; as it Rom. 7. 22. is taken, Though our outward man periſh, yet our inward man is renewed daily; the outward man then 1 Cor. 4. 16. is the body.

Contra. By the inward man in this place, the Apoſtle underſtandeth the regenerate part through the whole man, both in body and ſoule: which in other places he calleth the new man, and the outward man is the old man. And as here he ſaith, our outward man periſheth, ſo elſewhere our old man is crucified with him. And by the old man, hee underſtandeth the workes of the fleſh, not onely out- Rom. 6. 6. ward, as, Lye not one to another, ſeeing you have put off the old man, but inward: Caſt off the old man, and Coloſſ. 3. 9. be renewed in the ſpirit of your mind, Epheſ. 4. 23. Epheſ. 4. 23.

Bellarm. 3. Againe, Saint Paul doth in very direct words diſtinguiſh betweene the mind and the fleſh: In my mind I ſerve the law of God, in my fleſh the law of ſin. By the mind, underſtanding the ſoule Rom. 6. 25. of man: by the fleſh, the body, Bellarm.

Anſw. Saint Paul ſpeaketh indeed of a mind regenerate, not ſetting it againſt an unregenerate body: for if Saint Pauls minde were regenerate, ſo alſo his body in ſome ſort muſt be partaker of the ſame regeneration: for he himſelfe ſaith, Glorifie God in your bodies, and in your ſpirits, for they are the Lords. The regenerate are renewed both in body and ſoule, and in them both doe glorifie God: therefore the fleſh cannot be here taken for the body, ſeeing the Apoſtle ſpeaketh of himſelfe, who no doubt was mortified in his body, and did beat it downe. Neither can the minde ſimply ſignifie the whole, or all the regenerate part: for as there is a regenerate mind: Be renewed in the ſpirit of your mind, ſo there is a fleſhly mind. Wherfore the Apoſtle by the mind muſt either underſtand the whole regenerate part, which is to the unregenerate part, as the ſoule to the body, and therefore the regenerate man is called the ſpirituall man: or elſe by the minde regenerate which is the principall part of regeneration, incluſively the whole regeneration is inſinuated, a part figuratively being taken for the whole.

Having now anſwered the Jeſuites objections, wee will ſet downe ſome of our reaſons, why this place is to be underſtood, as we ſaid, not of the two naturall parts of man, the body, and the ſoule: but that by the fleſh the Apoſtle meaneth the whole unregenerate part: by the minde or ſpirit the part regenerate.

By fleſh both the ſoule and body not regenerate is underſtood.

Argum. 1. Saint Paul ſaith, The evill I would not, that doe I, verſ. 21. I ſerve in my fleſh the law of ſin, verſ. 25. And againe, I ſee a law in my members leading me captive to ſin, verſ. 23. Theſe ſpeeches are not uttered of the regenerate part: if of the unregenerate, which muſt needs bee granted, yet not of the body or fleſh by it ſelfe conſidered without the ſoule: for the fleſh of it ſelfe is a dead thing; how can the Apoſtle ſerve in his fleſh, or doe any thing in his fleſh, without the operation of the ſoule? And therefore by the fleſh muſt wee underſtand the part unregenerate both in body and ſoule.

Argum. 2. The fleſh of it ſelfe without the ſoule is no fit place for ſin: but in the fleſh ſin dwelleth, as the Apoſtle ſaith: Ergo, fleſh is not here to be conſidered without the ſoule.

Argum. 3. A perfect man conſiſteth of body and ſoule, but that which is regenerate is called the inner man: Ergo, regeneration is both in body and ſoule.

Rom.6.6.
Coloſſ.2.11.

Argum. 4. The fleſh is the ſame which S. Paul calleth the body of death, verſ. 24. The body of death is all one with the body of ſin. The body of ſin, or ſinfull body of the fleſh, is the whole corruption of man both in body and ſoule, ſo much as is put off by the ſpirituall circumciſion of Chriſt: Ergo, the fleſh in this place is the corrupt and unregenerate part of the whole man.

Rom.7.23.
Coloſſ.3.5.

Argum. 5. The Apoſtle calleth concupiſcence the law of his members, verſ. 23. what members hee meaneth, he ſheweth elſe-where: Mortifie your earthly members, fornication, uncleanneſſe, inordinate affection: but theſe are not members of the body, but of the whole corrupt maſſe of body and ſoule in man: Ergo. Thus much for our anſwer to Bellarmines ſecond argument.

Rom.8.1.

Argum. 3. The Apoſtle ſaith, There is no condemnation to them that are in Chriſt: But if concupiſcence remaining in thoſe that are juſtified were ſin, then there ſhould be ſome matter of condemnaon ſtill in them, contrary to the Apoſtle, Bellarm. lib. 5. cap. 7.

Anſw. There is no condemnation either for concupiſcence, or any other ſin, becauſe though in it ſelfe it be worthy of damnation, yet the guilt thereof is taken away in Chriſt.

Ezech.18.21.

Bellarm. The guilt of ſin cannot be ſeparated from the thing, that in it ſelfe deſerveth condemnation: neither can ſin be forgiven, as long as the foundation thereof remaineth: Forgiveneſſe is remitted, if the wicked will turne away from his iniquity. If iniquity ſtill remaine, there is then no forgiveneſſe, ibid.

Rom.7.25.

Contra. 1. The Apoſtle himſelfe had ſaid in the next words before: In my mind I ſerve the law of God, in my fleſh the law of ſin: He is not aſhamed to confeſſe, that ſin remained in his members, yet was he one of thoſe, that are in Chriſt.

1 John 1.9.

2 S. Iohn ſaith, If we ſay we have no ſin we deceive our ſelves: if wee acknowledge our ſins, he is faithfull to forgive them, &c. Here the Apoſtle ſheweth, that to have ſin, and to have forgiveneſſe of ſin, may both ſtand together: wherefore it is falſe which he ſo boldly affirmeth, that the guilt of ſin cannot be ſeparated from the ſin it ſelfe: the guilt is taken away by forgiveneſſe in Chriſt, and yet after forgiveneſſe obtained, he is a lyer, that ſaith he hath no ſin.

Rom.6.12.

3 The turning from iniquity, which Ezechiel ſpeaketh of, is by repentance, and by ceaſing to commit the act of ſin: the ſtaine or blot of ſin is one thing, the act and worke of ſin another: though ſin reigne not in us, that we obey the luſts thereof, yet there is ſin ſtill dwelling in us, ſo long as we have our habitation in theſe houſes of clay.

4 If there remaine then in the regenerate no ſin at all; how farre are they from the opinion of the Pelagian heretikes, Anabaptiſts, Libertines, which hold that a man may attaine in this life to a ſtate of perfection? And if the regenerate have no ſin, what need they ſay that petition in the Lords prayer; Forgive us our treſpaſſes? But I thinke they will be aſhamed of ſo great impudency; as Auguſtine ſaith, Neſcio utrum quiſpiam vel hæretica pravitate reperiri poſſit, &c. I thinke no man can bee found, though of a moſt hereticall proud ſpirit, which will (I ſay) not openly profeſſe, but thinke ſecretly within himſelfe, that he need not ſay this petition, Forgive us our treſpaſſes, &c. cont. Creſcon. lib. 2. c. 28

The Doway Doctors would thus prove concupiſcence in the regenerate not to be ſin: 1 Out of Auguſtine, becauſe in no wiſe it can be ſin, if it be not voluntary. 2 It was no ſin in Eve to be tempted of the Serpent, nor in Adam to be tempted of Eve, but they ſinned when they conſented to the evill ſuggeſtion. Annot.in Geneſ.c.3.1.

Contra. 1. Auguſtines definition muſt bee underſtood of actuall ſin, for originall in infants is not voluntary, and ſo it would follow by this rule, that neither in the regenerate nor unregenerate, there ſhould be any originall ſin, becauſe it is not voluntary: it was once voluntary in our firſt parents that tranſgreſſed, but now in our corrupt nature by propagation from Adam, it is become neceſſary.

2 The caſe is not like betweene Adam and Eve, and the regenerate now, for ſin was not yet in the world when they were tempted, and untill they gave conſent, they ſinned not: but now every one is borne with originall corruption: and ſo he hath ſin before he commeth to capacity to be able to conſent: in them the ſuggeſtion was externall, but in us it is internall, and from within us: now every one is tempted of his owne concupiſcence, when he is drawne away by it, and is entiſed. Iam.1.4.

The Proteſtants.

THat concupiſcence, and the corrupt inclination of nature, even in the children of God, is verily and properly ſin, and in it ſelfe worthy of damnation, but that both it, and all other ſins are remitted in Chriſt to the faithfull, and ſo not imputed: thus it is proved by the word of God.

Argum. 1. Saint Paul calleth it ſin dwelling in him, Ergo, it is ſin. Rom.7.17.20.

Bellarmine anſwereth: firſt, it is a ſin improperly ſo called, not becauſe it is a ſin indeed, but either the cauſe or effect of ſin: for the Apoſtle ſaith, that this ſin dwelleth in his fleſh: but the fleſh is not the ſeat or place of ſin, Bellarm.lib.5.cap.10.reſponſ.ad object.1.

Contra. 1. Let it be noted that the Apoſtle giving concupiſcence, at the leaſt ten ſeverall times the name of ſin in this one chapter, yet ſpeaketh improperly, and muſt now learne of Bellarmine to ſpeak. 2 By the fleſh S. Paul, as before we ſhewed at large, underſtandeth not the body, but the whole part of man not renewed as well of the ſoule as the body: therefore his reaſon for the place of ſin is nothing. 3 But that concupiſcence hath the very proper nature of ſin, it may appeare further by Saint Pauls Verſ.15.18. 19.24. deſcription: Firſt, he denieth it to be good, *verſ.*18. Secondly, he ſaith it is evill, *verſ.*19. Thirdly, he ſaith he hateth it, *verſ.*15 Fourthly, it maketh him to cry out, *O wretched man that I am, &c. verſ.*24. It bringeth wretchedneſſe, which is the fruit of ſin: Ergo, it is ſin.

Bellarmine anſwereth: that it is an evill, but no ſin.

Contra. Well then, it is an evill by the Jeſuites confeſſion, and S. Paul ſaith it is ſin: Ergo, it is an evill that is ſin. 2 What will he anſwer to this place? I knew not ſin but by the law; for I had not knowne Verſ.7. *luſt, except the law had ſaid, thou ſhalt not luſt, verſ.*7. Luſt and concupiſcence is forbidden by the law: Ergo, it is verily and properly a ſin.

Bellarmine before diſtinguiſhed of ſin, but that not ſerving his turne here, for hee dare not deny but that the tranſgreſſion of the law is ſin: he hunteth about for another diſtinction: Concupiſcence forbidden by the law (thou ſhalt not covet) is not originall, but actuall concupiſcence: and therefore it is not pertinent to the matter: for the one we confeſſe to be ſin, but not the other.

Contra. Firſt, Saint Paul ſaith that ſin tooke occaſion by the law to worke all manner of concupiſcence, *verſ.*8. Ergo, all concupiſcence, originall or actuall, is forbidden by the law. Secondly, Sin wrought in me all manner of concupiſcence: by ſin, ſaith the Jeſuite, he underſtandeth originall concupiſcence; the Apoſtle then calleth the working concupiſcence ſin, the concupiſcence wrought he ſetteth downe by the name of concupiſcence ſtill: ſo then we reaſon thus: That is ſin properly, which is rather ſin, than that which no man doubteth to be ſin: but concupiſcence wrought in us by our adverſaries owne confeſſion is ſin: yet the working concupiſcence is rather ſin, becauſe the Apoſtle calleth it ſin, and not the other: Ergo, it is properly ſin. Thirdly, Bellarmine ſaith, that Voluntarius actus concupiſcendi prohibitus eſt lege: That is, the voluntary act of concupiſcence which is forbidden by the law: ſo that involuntary motions, in his judgement, are not againſt the law. But Saint Paul ſheweth the contrary: If I doe that which I would not, I conſent to the law, that it is good, Verſ.16. *verſ.*16. His involuntary motions were againſt the law: for in obeying them againſt his will, hee did in judgement and conſent approve the law, though in practice he went againſt it. Fourthly, if originall concupiſcence be evill, as the Jeſuite confeſſeth, then muſt it needs be contrary to the law which is good, and ſo forbidden by the law: or elſe the law ſhall not be a perfect rule of righteouſneſſe, and goodneſſe.

Argum. 2. The Apoſtle calleth the law of his members a law rebelling againſt the law of his mind: but whatſoever rebelleth, or is contrary to the law, is ſin.

Bellarm. 1. Every thing that rebelleth, or is contrary to the law, is not ſin: for man when hee ſinneth reſiſteth the law; and yet man is not ſin. And againe, in that the Apoſtle calleth it a law, hee ſheweth that it is not properly ſin, but a law or rule rather of ſinning: reſponſ.ad object.6.

Contra, 1. The Jeſuites inſtance is very ridiculous, and bewrayeth the nakedneſſe of his cauſe, which hee is faine to bolſter out with ſuch ſilly anſwers: Man reſiſting the law is not ſin it ſelfe, yet is hee a ſinner: the queſtion is of that, which formally is contrary to the law. 2 That every tranſgreſſion of the law is ſin wee ſhew it thus: Sin onely deſerveth the eternall curſe of God: for the proper wages and ſtipend of ſin is death, and nothing is found worthy of death but ſin : but every tranſgreſſion of the law, falleth under Gods curſe : Ergo, it is ſin. 3 Concupiſcence is the law of ſin, therefore it is not ſin. Anſw. Yea, but by this reaſon it is worſe than ſin: As the law of God commanding things holy juſt, and good is it ſelfe much more holy, righteous, and good ; ſo the law of ſin preſcribing that which is evill, unjuſt, wicked, is it ſelfe more unjuſt, evill, and wicked. If then concupiſcence be not ſin, and yet by your argument is worſe than ſin, what have you gained ?

Rom.6.23.
Galath.3.10.
Rom.7.11.

Rom 7.18.24.

Argum. 3. Verſ. 18. To will is preſent with me, but I find no meanes to performe that which is good : but he that performeth not that which is good, ſinneth. Againe, verſ. 24. O wretched man that I am who ſhall deliver me from this body of death ? that which maketh a man wretched, and bringeth death, is ſin : Ergo, concupiſcence working theſe things, is ſin.

Bellarm. 1. Wretchedneſſe in Scripture is attributed to puniſhment rather than to the fault.

2 If a man performe not that good which he cannot doe, he is leſſe good, but not evill : as not to covet in the fleſh, is not in mans power.

3 The Apoſtle ſpeaketh not of everlaſting death, but of the miſery and mortality of the body : *Bellarm.c.*10.reſp.ad 7. & 8.object.

[a] Pſal 32.1.

Contra. 1. Wretchedneſſe and miſery is the puniſhment it ſelfe, but iſſuing out from ſin : for 1 as the forgiveneſſe of ſin maketh [a] happy, ſo ſin maketh wretched. 2 And that which the Apoſtle would be delivered from, made him wretched : but from concupiſcence, which he calleth the body of death he deſireth to be delivered : Ergo, his concupiſcence made him wretched, and ſo conſequently is properly ſin.

[b] Joh 16.9.
[c] Joh.6.29.

2 It 1 is not in a mans power to doe any good thing, but all our power is of God, it would follow then upon this anſwer, that it is no ſin to leave any good thing undone : and further it is evident, that it is ſin to leave that undone, which is not in our power : as Iohn, [b] The ſpirit ſhall reprove the world of ſin, becauſe they beleeve not in mee : now to beleeve is not in mans power, but it is the worke of God, [c].

[d] Rom.8.1.
[e] Rom.5.12.

3 Saint Paul 1 ſpeaketh directly of condemnation, which is the ſecond death, [d] There is no condemnation to thoſe which are in Chriſt. 2 Though hee ſhould ſpeake onely of outward miſery and mortality, they are the fruits of ſin, [e] Death came in by ſin, therefore concupiſcence bringing death, is ſin.

Argum. 4. [f] Rom. 8. 7. The wiſdome of the fleſh is enmity againſt God : [g] The imaginations of the thoughts of mans heart are evill continually : Ergo, concupiſcence is ſin.

Bellarm. 1 Theſe places are underſtood of actuall, not originall ſin. 2 And the Scripture thus deſcribeth the wicked, in whom concupiſcence remaineth and reigneth, *reſponſ.ad object.*9.

[h] Epheſ.4.23.
[i] Rom.7.23.
[k] Geneſ.8.21.
[l] Matth.15.19.

Contra. Firſt, theſe places cannot be otherwiſe underſtood, than of originall ſin. 1 The Apoſtle oppoſeth the wiſdome of the fleſh to the wiſdome of the ſpirit which he ſaith is life and peace, verſ. 6. but the wiſdome of the ſpirit is the inward ſanctifying of the ſoule, and the renewing of the ſpirit, [h] Ergo, the wiſdome of the fleſh, is the inward ſecret corruption of the heart. 2 It is the ſame which *verſ.*2. he calleth the law of ſin and death : as the wiſdome of the ſpirit is there called the law of the ſpirit: but the law of ſin is concupiſcence.[i] 3 Moſes alſo ſpeaketh of originall corruption, ſaying 1 the imagination of the thoughts of the heart : but there is no actuall ſin before the thoughts. 2 And [k] the thoughts of mans heart are evill from his youth : but the infancy is no fit age for actuall ſin. 3 Our Saviour alſo expoundeth this place, [l] Out of the heart come evill thoughts : the fountaine of evill thoughts is originall ſin.

[m] 2 Cor.3.5.

Secondly, 1 Moſes as he ſpeaketh in this place eſpecially of the inhabitants of the old world : ſo *Geneſ.*8.21. he deſcribeth the naturall ſtate of all men in generall ; that their thoughts are evill. 2 S. Paul alſo ſheweth this to be the condition even of the children of God, that they are not ſufficient to thinke any thing of themſelves which is good [m]. So that the ſame corrupt inclination remaineth even in the regenerate, yet bridled and governed by grace. 3 That even in the righteous and regenerate the ſin of concupiſcence remaineth : theſe places following doe manifeſtly ſhew.

Argum. 5. The Prophet David ſaith, 1. Create in me a new heart [n] S. Paul ſaith, 2 [o] Bee renewed in the ſpirit of your mind, [p] Mortifie your earthly members, fornication, uncleanneſſe, &c. Ergo, the regenerate had need ſtill to be renewed, and cleanſed from the old man: Ergo, the ſin of concupiſcence ſtill remaineth in the regenerate. 3 [q] If we ſay that we have no ſin we deceive our ſelves : the Apoſtle ſaith, If we ſay that we have, &c. ſhewing, that ſin that continually remaineth, which is originall ſin : for other ſins are not alwayes in the regenerate, argum. Luther. Calvin.

[r] Rom.6.12.

Bellarmine anſwereth : Firſt, to the 1 and 4 places, that they muſt bee underſtood of actuall ſins, which the regenerate are daily ſubject unto. 2 Secondly, there are ſome reliques of originall ſin in the regenerate, in reſpect whereof, they had need daily to bee renewed. 3 Thirdly, the regenerate muſt mortifie their earthly members, that they give not conſent thereunto, and fall into fornication, uncleanneſſe : which is all one with that, which the Apoſtle ſaith elſewhere, that ſin ſhould not reigne in their mortall body [r], *Bellarm.c.*11.*lib.*5.reſponſ.ad loc. 2.8.9.12.

Contra. Firſt, it is evident, that the Prophet David ſpeaketh of originall ſin. 1 He ſaid before, verſ. 5. In ſin hath my mother conceived me : from the which he deſireth to be purged, *verſ.*7. 2 The creation of the heart anew is expounded by S. Paul to be the putting off of the old man, and putting on the new, which after God is created in righteouſneſſe. Now the image of God, which the Prophet praieth to be created in him, is defaced and deformed by originall concupiſcence: therefore againſt that he directeth his praier. 2. Thoſe reliques of ſin in the regenerate, are either belonging to actuall or originall ſin; but in the Spirit of the mind, there can be no actuall ſin: Ergo, it is originall: and the Apoſtle expoundeth himſelfe, what it is to bee renewed, &c. To caſt off the old man which is corrupted through deceiveable luſts. What is the old man, but the originall depravation and corruption of nature?

Epheſ.4.24. Epheſ.4.22.

3. If the regenerate muſt mortifie their earthly members, that is, their carnall concupiſcence, then is not concupiſcence dead or extinct in them, for then it need not be mortified: and whatſoever is to be mortified in us is evill and ſinfull: that whereto we muſt be dead, is ſin: neither is there feare that the ſin of concupiſcence ſhould raigne in our mortall body, if it be not at all there.

Rom.6.11.

4. The Apoſtle ſpeaketh not onely of actuall but of originall ſinnes. 1. He ſaith, If we ſay we have no ſinne: and afterward verſ.10. If we ſay we have not ſinned: there he pointeth at that ſin which we alwaies have in us, which is none other but originall ſin, in the other place he ſpeaketh of that ſin which hath beene committed, noting actuall ſins, wherein the regenerate continue not. 2. He meaneth ſuch ſins, wherein a man may be deceived, and thinke he hath none: but none of the regenerate are ſo groſſe to thinke they have no actuall ſin. 3. He ſpeaketh of all ſins, for the which Chriſt is our reconciliation, If any man ſinne, &c. but Chriſt died, and ſo is our reconciliation by his death; not onely for actuall, but originall ſinne: Ergo, Thus we ſee how frivolous and inſufficient this Diſputers anſwers are.

1 Iohn 1.10. 1 Ioh.2.2.

Laſtly, let Auguſtine ſpeake: Omnium malorum reatu caret, qui baptizatur; non omnibus malis: —nunquid caret ignorantia malo? He that is baptized is cleered from the guilt of all evils or ſins, but not from the evils themſelves: for ſhall we thinke that he is void of ignorance? Againe he ſaith: Dimittuntur in baptiſmo omnia peccata, & originaliter tracta, & ignoranter vel ſcienter adjecta: All ſins are forgiven in baptiſme, both originall, and ſins committed ignorantly or wittingly. Originall ſin then is no otherwiſe taken away in baptiſme, than other ſins are: but the guilt only of other ſins is remitted in Baptiſme, the blot or ſtaine remaineth ſtill: Ergo, originall ſin ceaſeth in reſpect of the guilt only: for neither it, nor any other ſins ſhall be imputed to thoſe which are juſtified in Chriſt: but yet it is a ſin ſtill, as the reſt are. Auguſt. alſo dare call it a ſin: Concupiſcentia pejor eſt ignorantia: Concupiſcence is worſe than ignorance: cont. Iulian. lib.6.c.5. And in another place, Ignorantia in iis, qui intelligere noluerunt, peccatum eſt, in iis qui non potuerunt pœna peccati: Ignorance in them that are able to learne and will not, is ſin; in thoſe that cannot, a puniſhment of ſin: Epiſt.105. If ignorance then be ſin, concupiſcence, which is worſe than ignorance, is much more.

Cont. Iulian. lib.6.c.5. Ibid.c.6.

I will adde one other notable ſentence out of this father: Hoc malum quod in nobis remanet, non ſubſtantia, ſed ſubſtantiæ vitium; Dei gratia nos regenerante non eſt imputandum, Dei gratia juvante frænandum; Dei gratia commorante ſanandum: This evill, which remaineth in us, being not a ſubſtance, but a vice of or in our ſubſtance or nature, by the grace of God regenerating us ſhall not be imputed, by the grace of God helping us is bridled, by the grace of God in the end crowning or rewarding us, ſhall be healed. Firſt, Auguſtine calleth here concupiſcence even in the regenerate, malum & vitium, a vice and an evill. And what difference, I pray you, betweene vice and ſin? Vitium, ſaith Bellarm. eſt nomen habitus mali, peccatum operationis malæ: Vice is the name of an evill habit, ſin the name of the evill action. Vice and ſin then are coſin germanes: and if concupiſcence be a vice or a vicious habit, it is in the next doore to ſin. Againe, Auguſt. ſetteth down a three-fold change of concupiſcence: it is not imputed, it is bridled, in the end it is healed. In the two firſt changes, though it bee not imputed; yet it ceaſeth not to be ſin: but only when it is healed, that is, cleane taken away, which is not in this life, but when the time of our reward commeth: Ergo, it is ſin ſtill in the regenerate, yet brideled in them, and not imputed.

Concil. Milevitan.c.2. Propter hoc parvuli, qui nihil in ſeipſis peccatorum committere potuerunt, adeo in peccatorum remiſſionem veraciter baptizantur, ut in eis regeneratione mundetur, quod generatione traxerunt. For this cauſe children, which have as yet done no ſin in themſelves, are truly baptized for the remiſſion of ſins, that it may be purged by regeneration, which they tooke in their birth, &c. If originall corruption be not properly a ſin, then children, who are as yet guilty of no other ſin, ſhould not be baptized for remiſſion of ſins.

2. Iſychius ſaith, Pollutionem non motus naturales faciunt, ſed peccatum de quo David, ecce in iniquitatibus, &c. The naturall motions do not make pollution, but ſin, whereof David ſpeaketh, Behold I was conceived in iniquity, &c. Belgia, artic.14. Neither are we to beleeve, that this ſin is by baptiſme utterly extinguiſhed, or plucked up by the roots, ſaying that out of it, as out of a corrupt fountaine, continuall floods and rivers of iniquity continually ſpring and flow, &c.

Decret.part.3. diſt.4.c.2. In baptiſmo caro peccati evacuatur, &c. In Baptiſme the fleſh or body of ſin is evacuate; not that concupiſcence ſhould wholy bee conſumed, ſed ne obſit mortuo, quæ oberat nato: but that it be not hurtfull to him that is dead unto it, which was hurtfull to him in his birth. Their Maſter to the like effect, lib.2. diſtinct.32.b. ſheweth how originall ſin is taken away in Baptiſme extenuatione, & ſolutione reatus, by the extenuation of it, and taking away the guiltineſſe: originall ſin then remaineth ſtill; but it is not hurtfull, nor imputed to the regenerate.

Auguſtin, alſo thus alleageth out of Hilary, lib.2. cont. Iulian. Apoſtoli licet verbo ſidei emundatis non deeſſe malitiam, per conditionem communis originis: Even in the Apoſtles, though cleanſed with the word of faith, there was not wanting malice or evilneſſe by the condition of the common originall or birth: Ergo, by this ſentence even in the Apoſtles, the evilnes or malice of concupiſcence by nature remained.

The fourth part whether Originall ſinne bee hurtfull to the regenerate after Baptiſme.

The Papiſts.

17 Error.

THe Rhemiſts do not only deny concupiſcence in the regenerate to be ſin, but they affirme alſo that the motions of the fleſh in a juſt man, whereunto the mind conſenteth not, cannot any whit defile the operations of the ſpirit, but make them often more meritorious, for the continuall combat that he hath with them: for it is plaine that the operations of the fleſh and the ſpirit do not concurre to make one act: Rhemiſt. annot. Rom. 7. ſect. 10. So the doway men ſay, that it is matter of exerciſe in the juſt, and if we reſiſt, of merit.

Annot. in 3. Geneſ. 1.

Anſw. 1. The combat between the fleſh, cannot make the operations of the ſpirit meritorious: firſt, we cannot merit at all by any good action wrought in us, becauſe it is not of our ſelves, but wholly of God: Thus I live, (ſaith the Apoſtle) not I now, but Chriſt liveth in me. Secondly, the reſiſtance of the fleſh, is ſo far from encreaſing our reward, that it maketh our debt greater: for whoſe is the fleſh? is it not ours? Who ſhall anſwer for that which is evill done in the fleſh? ſhall not we? It is therefore our own fault, that our fleſh is rebellious, and that we do not wholly yeeld to the working of the ſpirit.

Galath. 2. 20.

2. Though the operations of the fleſh concurre not with the ſpirit to make one act: yet the fleſh concurreth, or rather occurreth, and reſiſteth the ſpirit in every good act: and doth hinder the works of the ſpirit from perfection, and ſo defile them.

The Proteſtans.

THe luſt or concupiſcence remaining, but not remaining in the regenerate, doth greatly hinder the good proceeding of the ſpirit in them.

Argum. 1. Concupiſcence kept the Apoſtle from doing that good, which he deſired: That good that I would, do I not: Ergo, it was an hindrance to the working of the ſpirit.

Rom. 7. 19.

Argum. 2. If concupiſcence were any way profitable to goodneſſe, it were a thing to be loved, not hated; to be deſired, not wiſhed to be taken away. But S. Paul hateth it: What I hate, that doe I, and longeth till he be rid from it: O wretched man that I am, who ſhall deliver me from the body of this death? Ergo, concupiſcence is not good, nor any way helping unto goodneſſe.

verſ. 15. 24.

Auguſtine thus writeth of theſe ſmaller and leſſe ſins: Quibus peccatis licet occidi animam non credamus, ita tamen eam veluti quibuſdam puſtulis —— deformem faciunt, ut eam ad amplexum ſponſi aut vix, aut cum grandi confuſione venire permittant: By the which ſinnes, though the ſoule bee not ſlaine, yet the face is deformed, as with pimples, that they either not at all, or with great bluſhing will permit it to come to embrace her ſpouſe, &c. Let them tell me now, what great glory is obtained, by this corruption in our members.

Originall ſin then is hurtfull to all men that come of Adam: Ergo, it is no helpe or furtherance.

Eſpencæus a grave writer among the Papiſts, alleageth out of S. Cyprian de tentationibus Chriſti, to this effect: Neminem libidinum morſu illæſum evadere: That no man doth eſcape the biting of luſt without hurt: According to that ſaying of Propertius, lib. 2. Nec quiſquam ex illo vulnere ſanus abit: No man goeth away whole of that wound: in 2. epiſt. Tim. c. 2. And out of Auguſt. 4. Hypognoſticon: In omni homine libido mala eſt, &c. Luſt or concupiſcence is evill in every man: in 2 Tim. c. 3. Wherfore originall ſin is hurtfull to the regenerate: Cauſ. 24. qu. 3. c. 39. There are certaine heretikes rehearſed among the reſt, called Ophitæ, of the Serpent, whom they did reverence: ſaying, Ipſum in paradiſum induxiſſe virtutis cognitionem: That the Serpent brought into Paradiſe the knowledge of vertue: not much unlike do the Papiſts commend concupiſcence, which is the Serpents ſting: ſaying, that it maketh the operations of juſt men more meritorious.

Confeſſ. of Bohemia, c. 4. Let the force of this hereditarie deſtruction bee acknowledged and iudged by the guilt and fault, by our proneneſſe and declination, by our evill nature, and by the puniſhment which is layd upon it, &c. See further teſtimonie and evidence hereof in the former queſtion.

The fifth part, of the place or ſeat of concupiſcence in the regenerate.

The Papiſts.

BEllarmine granteth, that ſometime fleſh is taken in the Scripture for the whole man corrupted, both in body and ſoule: but then it is underſtood only of the wicked, and not of the godly: Bellarm. de ſtat. peccat. lib. 5. cap. 7. reſponſ. ad argum. 2. caution. 6. And therefore hee expoundeth that place of S. Paul, There dwelleth not in me, that is, in my fleſh, any good thing, of the body: and hence would prove that concupiſcence in the regenerate is no ſinne, becauſe it is in the body: cap. 10. reſponſ. ad argum. 1. His opinion then is, that concupiſcence in them remaineth only in their body. And where S. Paul ſaith, I am carnall, he thus expoundeth it: Quia nondum ſpirituale corpus habeo: Becauſe he had no ſpirituall body, ſuch as he ſhould have in the reſurrection: cap. 10. reſponſ. ad obiect. 6. So then in his opinion, the minde only of the regenerate is renewed, not their body: hee reaſoneth thus.

18. Error.

Rom. 7. 18.

Argum. S. Paul ſaith, In my minde I ſerve the law of God; in my fleſh the law of ſinne: Here the minde regenerate or renewed, is oppoſed or ſet againſt that part which is not renewed, namely the fleſh, which ſhall be renewed in the reſurrection: Bellar. c. 7. reſponſ. ad Bezam.

Anſwer. Firſt, that this place is to be underſtood of the minde regenerate, we grant: but thereby, as a principall part, the whole regenerate man is expreſſed both in body and ſoule; ſo where S. Paul ſaith, Be renewed in the ſpirit of your minde[a]: hee underſtandeth a renovation of the whole new man: and put on the new man, ſaith hee: And S. Peter ſpeaking to the women, that the hid man of the heart ſhould be uncorrupt: In the ſame place exhorteth them to ſoberneſſe and modeſtie of apparell, which is outward in the[b] body. So in this place, by the minde, the Apoſtle underſtandeth the whole new or regenerate man. Secondly, how could S. Paul, ſpeaking of himſelfe, by fleſh, underſtand a body not regenerate: ſeeing the Apoſtle was a mortified man, and was much exerciſed in the taming and beating downe of his[c] body? Thirdly, the bodies of the Saints ſhall be renewed, we grant, in the reſurrection: which is called the[d] regeneration: but it followeth not, they ſhall be regenerate then from all mortalitie and corruption: Ergo, they cannot now be renewed, and ſubdued from ſin: the ſoule alſo then ſhall be cleanſed and made pure, like the Angels, yet for all this, the ſoule while it is in the body, is dayly renewed. As it is called the regeneration, ſo is it alſo the redemption of our[e] bodies, becauſe then our redemption in body and ſoule, ſhall be perfectly accompliſhed: notwithſtanding it is begun in this life.

The Proteſtants.

THat concupiſcence dwelling in the regenerate, remaineth both in their bodies and their ſoules, and that as their regeneration is of the whole man, both in body and ſoule; ſo there is ſome fleſhly part in both, reſiſting againſt the ſpirit, which in the Scripture is called fleſh: thus wee are perſwaded.

Argum. 1. Saint Paul ſaith, I am carnall, ſold under[f] ſinne: if this ſhould be meant of Saint Pauls body: what could be ſaid more of the body of an adulterer, murtherer, glutton, or whoſe body elſe is given over to all wickedneſſe, than that it is ſold under ſin? If S. Paul then, where he ſaith, I am carnall, or, in my fleſh I ſerve the law of ſin, verſ. 25. doth underſtand his body; is it not all one, as if hee had ſaid, he had given his members ſervants to ſinne? to ſerve ſin in the body, and to give the members ſervants to ſin, is all one: But neither S. Paul nor any other regenerate man is a ſervant of ſin in his body: for, ſaith he, When yee were ſervants of ſinne, yee were freed from[g] righteouſneſſe: And as yee have given your members ſervants to uncleanneſſe: he ſpeaketh of the time before their calling: therefore S. Paul ſpeaketh not of his body.

Auguſtine writing of thoſe words of the Apoſtle, It is no more I that doe it, but ſinne that dwelleth in me, ſaith thus: Quod ille dicere non poteſt, qui aut cordis conſenſione decernit, quod concupiſcit, aut corporis miniſterio perficit: which S. Paul could not ſay, if either he had conſented in his heart, to that whereunto his concupiſcence led him, or by the miniſtery and ſervice of his body had done it. The Apoſtle then did not give the miniſterie or ſervice of his body to ſinne.

Cont. Iulian. lib. 2. in fine.

2. Man hath ſometime his denomination of the minde, but not of the body: S. Paul ſaith not, my body is carnall, but I am; and afterward, in me, that is, my fleſh. S. Pauls fleſh is himſelfe, but he himſelfe conſiſteth both of body and ſoule: Ergo, the fleſh is in them both: ſee more of the expoſition of this place, part. 3. iſtius quaeſtion. argum. 2.

Argum. 2. There is a moſt evident place for this purpoſe, Gal. 5. 17. the fleſh luſteth againſt the ſpirit, and the ſpirit againſt the fleſh: The Apoſtle by fleſh here underſtandeth the corrupt part both of body and ſoule: for a little after, among the works of the fleſh, hee nameth not only ſinnes of the body, as adulterie, uncleanneſſe, but the ſinnes alſo of the ſoule, as hatred, emulation, hereſies, verſ. 20. And all this while the Apoſtle ſpeaketh to and of the regenerate: theſe are contrary each to other, ſo that ye cannot doe the ſame things ye would : this he writeth to the faithfull among the Galathians. So to the beleevers among the Coloſſians, he ſaith, Mortifie your earthly members, fornication, uncleanneſſe, covetouſneſſe : which ſins are as well in the minde as the body : wherefore they are not members onely of the body, but of the old man unregenerate both in ſoule and body : And thus, I truſt, it appeareth, that the fleſh, even in the regenerate, doth comprehend the corruption remaining in them, both in ſoule and body.

Shall Auguſtine now ſpeake : Hæc eſt lex membris omnium inſerta mortalium, quæ repugnat legi mentis— cogitationum ſpinas cœpit & tribulos germinare : This is the law ingraft in the members of all mortall men, which rebelleth againſt the law of the mind or ſpirit : which beginneth to bring forth thornes and thiſtles of evill thoughts, de tempor. ſerm. 47. Out of theſe words I reaſon thus : There concupiſcence the law of the members is, where evill thoughts ariſe ; but they are bred in the minde, not in the body : Ergo, concupiſcence is as well in the minde as in the body.

Concil. Arauſican. 2. cap. 2. Si quis dicit ſoli Adæ prævaricationem ſuam nocuiſſe, &c. nec peccatum, quod mors eſt animæ, per unum hominem in omne genus humanum tranſiiſſe, &c. If any man ſay that Adams tranſgreſſion onely hurt himſelfe, and that ſin, which is the death of the ſoule, did not through one man come unto all mankinde, let him be accurſed. Originall ſin then is the death of the ſoule : Ergo, it hath the place in the ſoule where it worketh.

And for further evidence. 1. Origen ſaith, Hom. 8. Levitic. Audi Davidem dicentem, &c. Heare David ſay, I was conceived in iniquitie, ſhewing, that Quæcunque anima ex carne naſcitur, &c. That every ſoule is borne of the fleſh, and is polluted with iniquitie : if the ſoule then be polluted with originall ſin, then it followeth, that it hath the place and ſeat in the ſoule.

2 Cor. 4. 16.

Tertullian alſo is here a very direct witneſſe: for whereas, ſome denying the reſurrection, urged that place of S. Paul, Though the outward man periſh, yet the inward man is renewed dayly : And thereupon affirmed, that the ſoule ſhould onely bee renewed in the reſurrection, not the bodie : hee maketh this anſwer, Nec anima per ſeipſum homo, &c. That neither the ſoule by it ſelfe is man, which is infuſed into the figment or frame called man, Nec caro ſine anima homo, &c. Neither is the fleſh man without the ſoule, which after the ſoule is exiled, is called a carcaſſe, &c. And againe, upon theſe words of the Apoſtle, That Chriſt may dwell in your hearts by faith, &c. hee thus inferreth : In cordib. dicens, quæ ſubſtantiva ſunt carnis, jam & ipſum interiorem hominem carni deputavit, quem in corde conſtituit: Saying in the heart, which is a ſubſtantiall part of the fleſh, hee doth alſo aſcribe the inner of man to the fleſh, ſeeing he placeth him in the heart, &c. And yet more evidently : Si ſine anima nullius eſt ſenſus, intellige ſenſum carnis ad animam eſſe referendum, carni interdum deputatum, &c. If without the ſoule there be no ſenſe of any thing, know that the ſenſe is referred to the ſoule, ſometime alſo imputed to the fleſh, becauſe it is exerciſed by the fleſh: and therefore he ſaith that ſin dwelleth in the fleſh, Quia & anima, à qua delinquentia inducitur, inquilina eſt carnis, &c. Becauſe the ſoule, whereby ſinne is brought in, is a ſojourner of the fleſh, &c. here directly hee maketh the ſoule the originall ſeat and place of ſinne.

The ſixth part, of the puniſhment of originall ſinne.

THe puniſhment due to originall ſinne, is double, either temporall or eternall : firſt, of the eternall puniſhment, then of the temporall.

Of the eternall puniſhment due to originall ſinne.

The Papiſts.

19. Error.

BEllarmine affirmeth, that Infants dying without Baptiſme in originall ſinne, are eternally puniſhed : but their puniſhment is, damni, non ſenſus, ſive ignis ſenſibilis, Of loſſe only becauſe they are excluded from heaven, not of any ſmart or outward paine of fire: ſuch as the damned ſuffer in hell. Concerning the firſt point, whether infants not being baptized, are damned; wee have before intreated, in the twelfth Controverſie, and the third queſtion of the neceſſity of Baptiſme.

Yet thus much of it here, that the popiſh opinion, in holding all infants dying without Baptiſme, to bee in the ſtate of damnation, is very cruell, and moſt uncharitable: whereby it both reſtraineth Gods power, as though hee were not able to ſave infants without the Sacrament; and obſcureth his mercie, and impugneth his juſtice, in ſuffering ſo many, having not yet ſinned in act, to be loſt.

Our opinion rather is this, agreeable to Scripture, and the rule of charity: firſt, that although all infants in themſelves, being borne with that maſſe of originall corruption, are ſubject to damnation; yet that many of them are ſaved, both by the covenant made to their faithfull parents, both or either of them, and to their ſeed: and that both immediatly, if their next parents were beleevers, and mediatly ſometime, when their former predeceſſors have beleeved, though their next progenitors are Infidels, (for Gods promiſe made to them that love him, extendeth to a thouſand generations, Exodus 20.) as alſo ſuch as are not within the covenant, ſo many as God hath ordained to life, are ſaved by the free election of grace.

Secondly, as we denie not, but that if any infants ſo dying are damned (which God beſt knoweth) he doth it moſt juſtly: ſo Chriſtian charity bindeth us to hope and thinke the beſt of the children of beleeving parents dying in their infancie, and to preſume that they are ſaved: ſeeing God preventeth them, leſt that they ſhould bee overtaken of the wickedneſſe of this life: for which cauſe Henoch is ſaid to have been taken up, Sapient. cap. 4.

Conſul. Iunium de grat. reſponſ. ad ration. 28.

But now to the ſecond point, concerning the manner of the puniſhment of infants, Bellarmine reaſoneth thus.

Argum. 1. We read in the Apocalypſe, As much as ſhe glorified her ſelfe and lived in pleaſure, ſo much give you unto her torment and ſorrow: but infants never glorified themſelves, or lived in pleaſure; therefore they ſhall have neither torment nor ſorrow, Bellarm. de ſtat. peccat. lib. 6. cap. 4.

Apoc. 18. 7.

Anſw. Firſt, the Jeſuite abuſeth this place to ſignifie the torments of hell: it is a prophecie of the temporall deſtruction of the ſecond Babylon, which is the ſeate of Antichriſt, (and Rome by your leave) as we have at large proved, in the fourth Controverſie of the Pope: therefore the plagues are numbred which ſhall fall upon her for pride, verſ. 8. In one day ſhall come upon her, death, ſorrow, famine: but famine, I thinke, is none of the plagues in hell. But, ſecondly, if you will needs have this place to be underſtood of hell torments, what have you gained by it? Surely, by your owne confeſſion, your Babylon and confuſed Antichriſtian kingdome is appointed to that place. Secondly, the argument followeth not; they that live in pride or pleaſure, ſhall be tormented in hell: Ergo, they that doe not live in theſe ſinnes, ſhall not be tormented; for by this reaſon not only infants ſhall bee excuſed, that are guiltie only of originall ſin, but all other ſinners that offend not in the foreſaid ſins.

The Proteſtants.

THe due and wages of originall ſin, is eternall death, which is the puniſhment both of body and ſoule in hell: And hell in the Scriptures is alwayes taken for a place of torment: if infants then dying before Baptiſme are condemned to hell, as the Jeſuite ſaith, they cannot there bee exempted from torment.

Argum. 1 Chriſt ſhall ſay to the goates on the left hand, that is, to thoſe that are condemned; Depart from me yee curſed into everlaſting fire, prepared for the devill and his angels. But of this number are infants which are condemned to hell: Ergo, they ſhall ſuffer torment in everlaſting fire. Bellarmine ſaith, that the forme of judgement is here preſcribed whereby they only ſhall bee judged which were of the Church, for they are not condemned becauſe they had no faith, which is the cauſe of the condemnation of Infidels, and thoſe which are out of the Church, but for want of good works: wherefore this place appertaineth not to children that dye without Baptiſme, which were not of the Church, Bellarm. cap. 5.

Matth. 25. 41.

Contra. 1 The failing or want of good works, is cauſe of condemnation to all men, whether within the Church, or without, as S. Paul ſheweth, Know you not that the unrighteous ſhall not inherit the Kingdome of God, as fornicators, idolaters, adulterers; and hee reckoneth up other works of the fleſh: and ſuch, ſaith he, were ſome of you, &c. he ſaith not for want of faith, but of good works, that before they beleeved, they were in ſtate of damnation.

1 Cor. 6. 11.

2 But to put this matter out of doubt, the text ſaith plainly that in the day of judgement all nations ſhall be gathered before Chriſt: Ergo, all ſorts of men, both within and without the Church: then conſequently infants alſo are included.

Matth. 25. 32.

Argum. 2 Apocal. 20. 15. Whoſoever was not found written in the booke of life, was caſt into the lake of fire: Ergo, infants alſo that are condemned: and if they be in the lake of fire, how are they not tormented?

Apoc. 20. 15.

Bellarmine: They ſhall be caſt, we grant, into the lake of fire, that is, the place where fire is, but ſhall not be burnt of the fire, either becauſe they ſhall bee in a higher place, or that the fire ſhall have power only detinendi, non urendi, to keep them as it were in hold, but not to burne or conſume them.

Contra. Who ſeeth not what vaine and ſophiſticall ſhifts the Jeſuite uſeth to obſcure the truth? but none of them can help him. Firſt, the text ſaith, they ſhall be caſt into the lake of fire, not into a place neere to, or higher than the fire, where they ſhall ſee but not feele it: but they ſhall have their part in the lake, Apoc. 21. 8. And againe, It is ſaid to burne with fire and brimſtone, that is, to burne moſt hotly, and moſt fiercely, that whoſoever is in it, muſt needs be burned and tormented therein. Secondly, the Jeſuites anſwer here is contrary to his doctrine elſewhere: for he ſaith, that Limbus infantium, the dungeon of infants, is higher than Purgatory: and that Purgatory is betweene it and hell, ſo that hell-fire cannot come unto it, Bellarm. de purgator. lib. 2. cap. 6. If it bee ſo, as hee imagineth, then cannot infants any way be caſt into hell-fire, ſeeing there is ſuch a great ſpace and diſtance betweene hell and their priſon: wherefore if the Scripture be true, then Bellarmine muſt be the lier.

1 Auguſtine thus anſwereth Iulian the Pelagian, who objected, that if children bee borne in the ſtate of damnation, their parents, that are the cauſe of their birth, are not better than murtherers of their owne children: Cur non tale aliquid ipſi potius (ſaith he) hominum creatori dicitur, quàm genitoribus, nam quos præſcivit ignibus æternis arſuros, creare non deſinit? he might better object this unto the Creator of men, than to their begetters, for whom he foreſaw ſhould burne in everlaſting fire, he ceaſeth not daily to create, cont. Iulian. 5. 9. Children then, and whoſoever are borne and die in the ſtate of damnation, ſhall burne in everlaſting fire. Further, hee ſaith, Lacus inferni plenus eſt tenebrarum—ignis inextinguibilis—vindicta perennis: The lake of hell is full of darknes, of unquenchable fire, of perpetuall revenge, &c. Whoſoever then is condemned to hell, ſhall be perpetually revenged in fire, which ſhall not be quenched.

Whoſoever then is in hell, is there in torment.

Eternall condemnation then is the juſt reward even of originall ſinne.

Part. 3. diſt. 4. c. 3. Qui ſine ſacramento ſancti baptiſmatis de hoc ſeculo tranſeunt, ſempiterno igne puniendos: They which depart without the ſacrament of Baptiſme, ſhall bee puniſhed with everlaſting fire: For although they had no ſin of their proper action, yet of originall corruption, &c.

The Maſter of Sentences is of opinion, that infants ſhall have ſenſe of inward paine and of the worme of conſcience: quod Dei viſione carebunt in perpetuum; becauſe they ſhall want the ſight of God for ever: lib. 2. diſt. 33. c. If they have ſenſe of inward paine, why not alſo of outward?

The ſecond point of the Temporall puniſhment of originall ſinne.

THere are many evils and plagues which are laid upon men in their mind, and all the parts thereof, the will, underſtanding, and affections, and in their bodies, ſome externall calamities alſo of the life, which all are juſt puniſhments of originall ſin: firſt in the underſtanding there is great ignorance not only in naturall things, but much more of heavenly and ſpirituall. Secondly, the fooliſhnes and fatuitie of the minde, the privation or want of wit, which many children are borne withall, more than any beaſt in their kinde. Thirdly, the difficultie and great labour in attaining to knowledge and learning. Fourthly, the curioſitie of the minde, and the deſire that man hath to know things that are hid, and not belonging to him. Fifthly, the vanity of the minde, which is occupied many times in fooliſh and idle thoughts: and ſuch other defects there be in the minde.

Secondly, in the will and affections: firſt, there is philautia, ſelfe-love, whereby every man is addicted to himſelfe. Secondly, the frowardnes of the will, in inclining to evill rather than good; chuſing vice rather than vertue. Thirdly, the careleſneſſe of men to follow after heavenly things. Fourthly, the too great deſire and coveting of earthly things. Fifthly, the inconſtancie and mutabilitie of the will. Sixthly, diſcontentment, murmuring, and repining, no man contented with his owne eſtate. Seventhly, the weaknes of our affections, in being ſoone provoked to anger, envie, revenge. Laſtly, the concupiſcence and luſt of the affections, ſeeking to over-rule reaſon.

Thirdly, in the body theſe infirmities are remaining: firſt, naturall defects and wants: as ſome are borne blind, ſome deafe, ſome lame, &c. Secondly, the infinite diſeaſes and ſickneſſes, which our bodyes are ſubject unto. Thirdly, the difficult, hard and unpleaſant meanes in recovering our health.

Fourthly, the great labour and toyle of the body for the preſervation thereof. Fifthly, the ſhortneſſe of our life, and the mortalitie of our bodies, with the continuall feare of death imminent, and hanging over our heads.

Fourthly, beſide theſe, there are externall calamities without us: firſt, by nature being the children of wrath, we are under the power of Sathan. Secondly, man is become by reaſon of his ſin, one an enemie, yea, as the Preacher ſaith, a beaſt, to another. Thirdly, the unreaſonable creatures, whom Eccleſ. 3. 18.
man in his creation was made Lord of, are now become rebellious, and diſobedient. Fourthly, the reſt of Gods creatures, as the heavens, the elements, the earth are armed againſt us: as when men are plagued with drowth, famine, peſtilence, mill-dewe, lightning, and ſuch like.

Theſe and many more calamities ſin hath brought us unto, and they are juſt puniſhments for our rebellion and diſobedience againſt God: As S. Paul ſaith, Tribulation and anguiſh, indignation and Rom. 2. 9. wrath, ſhall bee upon the ſoule of every one that doth evill. Auguſtine alſo thus writeth, after hee had ſhewed that the cauſe of theſe evils which men ſuffer, is not for the ſinnes done in another life, before the ſoule came into the body, as ſome Philoſophers have thought; he inferreth thus, Quid reſtat, niſi ut conſtitutorum malorum ſit aut iniquitas, aut impotentia Dei, &c. It remaineth then that the cauſe of theſe evils is either Gods impotencie or injuſtice, or that it is a puniſhment of the firſt tranſgreſſion: but becauſe God is neither unjuſt nor impotent, wee muſt needs confeſſe, that this grievous yoke ſhould not bee layd upon the ſonnes of Adam, but for originall ſinne: Contra. Iulian. lib. 4. ca. 16.

And thus farre wee and our adverſaries are agreed: that, wherein wee varie and diſagree, is this point as followeth.

The Papiſts.

THere are three other effects, which wee affirme to bee the fruits of originall ſin, but Bellarmine 10. Error.
denieth them. Firſt, the loſſe of free will to do good, which we ſay is utterly decayed by Adams tranſgreſſion, which Bellarmine gaine-ſayeth. Secondly, the corruption of nature, which is ſuch even in the regenerate, that they cannot chuſe but ſin: but the Jeſuite affirmeth, that man by grace may receive power to keepe the law. Thirdly, the third effect, as doubt, deſpaire, hatred of God, and ſuch like: The two firſt the Jeſuite utterly rejecteth, denying that there be any ſuch effects at all: and herein referreth us to the treatiſes of free will, and juſtification which follow: and for thoſe places we will alſo reſerve this matter. Concerning the third, he granteth, that ſuch effects there be, yet not properly cauſed by originall ſin, Bellarm. cap. 16.

Argum. Theſe motions are in ſome that have not originall ſin, as in devils, and are not in other, that have: Ergo, they are not the proper effects of originall ſin, Bellarm. ibid.

Anſwer 1. As it followeth not, heat and light are proper to the Sunne, therefore not to the fire: for as the Sunne hath one kinde of heat and light, ſo the fire hath another: After the ſame manner, it is no good conſequent, Lying and murther are proper to the devill, and ſo likewiſe, deſpaire, diſtruſt, Iohn 8. 44.
hatred of God, and the reſt: Ergo, they are not proper to men: for though theſe ſinnes in both beare the ſame name, yet are they not of the ſame nature, neither came they of one beginning: for theſe ſins in the damned ſpirits are alwayes actuall, and in the higheſt degree ſpringing from their proud and wilfull apoſtaſie: but man was ſeduced and deceived by Sathan, and ſo tranſgreſſed; whoſe fall was neither ſo grievous, as the apoſtaſie of the Angels, nor his ſinnes either originall or actuall ſo hainous.

2 There are ſome proper effects of originall ſinne by the Jeſuits owne confeſſion, that are not to bee found in children: as curioſitie in the mind, whereby men are more ready to behold other mens ſinnes than their owne, Bellarm. cap. 9. hee maketh this the ninth wound of the underſtanding: there is alſo malitia & perverſitas, the frowardneſſe and malice of the will, which Bellarmine maketh the fifth wound or diſeaſe in the will of man, cap. 10. But theſe defects are not in children, becauſe as yet they want ſuch acts of the will and underſtanding: wherefore either theſe are not proper effects of originall ſin, as the Jeſuite affirmeth they are, or elſe there may be ſome fruits of this ſin, that are not actually or preſently in children, which is moſt true, becauſe they want ſuch inſtruments and meanes, whereby thoſe effects ſhew themſelves. Therefore Bellarmines argument is not good: theſe motions of the mind, deſpaire, diſtruſt, are not in children: Ergo, they are not proper fruits of originall corruption.

The Proteſtants.

THat theſe evill motions of the minde, whereof we ſpeake, are the immediate and proper effects of originall ſinne, it may thus appeare.

Argum. 1. Rebellion of the fleſh againſt the ſpirit, is a proper fruit of originall concupiſcence: But deſpaire, diſtruſt, murmuring and ſuch like, are nothing elſe but the rebellion of the fleſh: Ergo. Rom. 7. 23.

Argum. 2. Theſe evill motions that ariſe ſuddainely in the mind without conſent of the will, doe ſpring immediatly from originall ſin: for there is no evill in man, but hath it beginning either from the corruption of our nature, or by the conſent of will, or from both: But theſe evill motions, deſpaire, diſtruſt, &c. in the regenerate have no conſent of will: for Saint Paul ſaith, The evill which I Rom. 7. 19.
would not, that doe I: And David did theſe things in haſte, as we heard before: Ergo, they doe ariſe immediatly from originall ſin.

Auguſtine ſaith: Operatur in nobis peccatum deſideria illicita, quibus ſi obedimus & nos operamur: ſi non obtemperamus, non illud nos operamur, ſed quod in nobis habitat peccatum: Sinne worketh in us unlawfull deſires: which if wee obey by conſenting unto them, then doe we alſo worke together with ſin: but if we obey them not, not we, but ſinne worketh it in us, in Pſalm, 118. concion. 2. Ergo, All unlawfull deſires and motions wrought in us without conſent of the will, are the fruits and effects of originall ſin.

Serm. quod Deus non ſit author. malorum. 2. Baſile, as hee is before alleaged, among other effects and fruits nameth, inconſiderantia, timiditas, raſhneſſe, timiditie, or fearefulneſſe. Gregory Nyſſenus ſaith, that man by his fall libertatem—cum noxia ſervitute, peccati mutavit, changed his libertie with the hurtfull ſervitude of ſin, &c. Imaginis etiam, abolitio facta eſt, and the image (of God) was aboliſhed. THE THIRD CONTROVERSIE,
BEING THE NINETEENTH
IN THE WHOLE, OF THE REPARATION AND Reſtoring of man by Chriſt.

THis Controverſie hath foure parts: firſt, of our Predeſtination: Secondly, of our vocation, unto the which belong the Treatiſes of grace and free-will: Thirdly, of our juſtification, and the fourth part is of ſanctification, that is, of good works that follow our juſtification, as neceſſarie fruits thereof.

The firſt part, of Predeſtination.

THis part is divided into foure queſtions: firſt, what predeſtination is. Secondly, who they are which be predeſtinate. Thirdly, the cauſe of predeſtination. Fourthly, of the certaintie and aſſurance thereof.

The firſt part, of the definition of predeſtination.

The Papiſts.

31. Error. BEllarmine thus defineth predeſtination: Prædeſtinatio eſt providentia Dei, &c. Predeſtination is a certaine providence, or fore-knowledge of God, whereby certaine men elected, are by infallible meanes and wayes directed unto life eternall, Bellarm. lib. 2. de grat. & liber. arb. cap. 9.

In this definition wee find a double fault: firſt, becauſe Bellarmine defineth predeſtination to bee fore-knowledge or preſcience. Secondly, for that hee affirmeth it to bee only of the elect. But of this latter fault more ſhall be ſaid in the next part. As for the firſt, Bellarmine maketh predeſtination to be a ſpecies, a kinde or part of Gods providence: and further ſaith, that predeſtination partly belongeth to the will of God, partly to his knowledge and underſtanding, but moſt principally to his knowledge: Ubi (ſaith he) prædeſtinationis ratio & eſſentia conſiſtit: Wherein conſiſteth the very eſſence of predeſtination. He reaſoneth thus.

Rom. 11. 1. 2 Timoth. 2. 19. Argum. S. Paul ſaith, God hath not caſt away his people whom he knew before: The foundation of God remaineth ſure, the Lord knoweth who are his. Bellarm. from hence he concludeth, that predeſtination is a fore-ſight or fore-knowledge of God. Bellarm. ibid.

Anſw. Firſt, theſe places doe evidently prove, that God fore-ſaw in his divine providence thoſe that ſhould be ſaved: and that his preſcience is certaine and infallible; but that predeſtination is the verie preſcience and fore-knowledge of God, it is not hence proved. Secondly, Saint Paul himſelfe doth diſtinguiſh them in the place alleaged, The foundation of God remaineth ſure (ſaith he) and hath this ſeale; the Lord knoweth, &c. Hee calleth predeſtination, the foundation, and preſcience, the ſeale thereof: the foundation then, and the ſeale are not the ſame. Thirdly, wee anſwer with Auguſtine: Aliquando prædeſtinatio ſignificatur nomine præſcientiæ, ut Rom. 11. non repulit Deus plebem ſuam, quam præſcivit: Sometime predeſtination is ſignified by the word preſcience, as in the 11. to the Romanes, God hath not rejected his people whom he knew before, de bon. perſeverant. lib. 2. cap. 18. In this place therefore preſcience may be taken for predeſtination.

The Proteſtants.

THat predeſtination is alwayes joyned with the providence and preſcience of God, we grant: but that predeſtination properly iſſueth out from Gods will, being an act and effect thereof, and not of his knowledge, it may partly appeare by the name: for prædeſtinare, προορίζειν, doth properly ſignifie, to define and determine, which requireth rather the conſent of the will, than light of underſtanding. Wee therefore define it thus: Prædeſtinatio eſt decretum Dei, &c. Predeſtination is the decree of God, touching the ſalvation and condemnation of men: our arguments are theſe.

Argum. 1. If the preſcience of God give the eſſence, nature and kinde unto predeſtination, as the Jeſuite ſaith, then is it the cauſe thereof, and the other is the effect; but Gods preſcience is not the cauſe of predeſtination: for he alſo confeſſeth, Homines gratis à Deo electos, ante omnium operum prævisionem: That men are freely elected of God, before any foreſight of their works, cap. 10. Ergo, Gods preſcience giveth not the eſſence and nature of predeſtination. And here by the way, note the Jeſuits contrary and repugnant ſayings: election, he ſaith, goeth before preſcience, and yet Gods knowledge is the cauſe of election: but how can the effect goe before the cauſe?

Argum. 2. Saint Paul ſpeaketh evidently, that predeſtination proceedeth of Gods good will and pleaſure, which is the only cauſe thereof: He hath predeſtinate us according to the good pleaſure of his will, Epheſ. 1. 5. and according to his good pleaſure, which hee had purpoſed in him, verſ. 9. predeſtinate according to the purpoſe of him, which worketh all things, according to the counſell of his own will, verſ. 11. Theſe three words, beneplacitum voluntatis, propoſitum voluntatis, conſilium voluntatis, the good pleaſure of his will, the purpoſe of his will, the counſell of his will, have no relation at all, to the knowledge or underſtanding of God, but only to his will. Saint Peter alſo putteth a manifeſt difference betweene preſcience and predeſtination, when he ſaith, that Chriſt was delivered up according to the determinate counſell and foreknowledge of God: the decree or determination is joyned to his counſell or will, not to his foreknowledge.

Epheſ. 1. 5. 9. 11

Act. 2. 23.

1. Auguſtine, ſpeaking of the free election of the children of God, ſaith thus: Sed divinæ voluntatis eſt hoc donum, non humanæ fragilitatis meritum: — Audi, qui omnia operatur ſecundum conſilium voluntatis ſuæ: But this is the gift or grant of the divine will, not a merit or deſert of humane frailtie: hearken what the Apoſtle ſaith, which worketh all things according to the counſell of his owne will, &c. He maketh election a free worke of Gods will.

Hypognoſt. lib. 6. articul. 6.

2. Theodoret ſaith, Cum nos ab initio prædeſtinaſſet, ad hanc vitam ſorte elegit, qui quæcunque vult, facit: When he had predeſtinate us from the beginning, he elected us unto this life, who doth whatſoever he will, &c. Gods will then is the cauſe of predeſtination.

In 1. cap. ad Galatas.

3. Latter confeſſion Helvetia, cap. 10. God hath from the beginning freely and of his meere grace, without any reſpect of men, predeſtinate or elected the Saints, &c. Gods preſcience then and foreknowledge of man induced not him to elect man, but his free and gracious will.

Harm. ſect. 9. pag. 84.

4. Thomas Aquin directly maintaineth this poſition, that predeſtination nihil ponit in prædeſtinato, doth ſuppoſe nothing in the predeſtinate, &c. but if it iſſued forth of Gods preſcience rather than his will, by preſcience ſomewhat in the creature ſhould bee foreſeene, for the which it ſhould bee predeſtinate.

1. p. qu. 23. artic. 2.

The ſecond queſtion, of thoſe which are predeſtinate, whether ſome are ordained to damnation as other are elected unto life.

COncerning this point, there are foure opinions: Some thought that all men in the end ſhould be ſaved; yea the devils and all: which error is attributed to Origen: whom with the reſt of this opinion, Auguſtine confuteth at large, 21. de civitate Dei, cap. 17. ad 24. Some other held, that God ordained grace and mercie for all, and was not any way the cauſe of the reprobation of men: This was the hereſie of the Pelagians, every where confuted by Auguſtine in his learned works written againſt the Pelagians: and I am afraid it hath too many favourits and friends in theſe dayes. The third opinion is of the Papiſts, who deny not, but that reprobation doth proceed in ſome reſpect from the will, and decree of God, but that it is not ſo properly Gods act, as election is. The fourth opinion is ours, that predeſtination is both of the elect to ſalvation, and of the reprobate to damnation. Againſt two of theſe opinions, we will deale briefly at this time; firſt, againſt the Papiſts, then againſt the error of the Pelagians.

THE

The firſt part, of Reprobation.

The Papiſts.

22. Error. GOd intendeth no mans damnation, ſay they, directly, or abſolutely, but in reſpect of their demerits, Rhemiſt. annot. Rom. 9. ſect. 9. And againe, God is not the cauſe of any mans reprobation or damnation, ibid. ſect. 1. Of the ſame opinion is Bellarmine, who, although hee ſimply denieth not reprobation, as afterward we ſhall ſee: yet maketh God farre otherwiſe the author of it, than of election: yea he excludeth it out of the definition of predeſtination; which he defineth to be the providence of God only to direct thoſe that are elected, to eternall life, lib. 2. de grat. cap. 9. Their arguments are theſe.

1 Timoth. 2. 4. 2 Pet. 3. 9. Ezech. 18. 23. Argum. 1. God would have all men to be ſaved, and come to the knowledge of the truth, God would have no man to periſh, but would have all men to come to repentance. God will not the death of a ſinner: Ergo, the death and damnation of men, ſtandeth not properly with the will of God.

Anſw. 1 God is ſaid not to will or deſire the death of a ſinner: not becauſe in his ſecret counſell, he hath not decreed it at all, but becauſe God in their condemnation hath reſpect to his owne glory, which is the chiefe and principall end both of election and reprobation: And God is ſo tender of his owne honour and glory, that in reſpect of it, he is ſaid not to will or deſire other things: hee willeth not death or damnation, that is, not as the chiefe end of his will or purpoſe, but intendeth a further thing, than their damnation, that is, the ſetting forth of his owne glory: as the Apoſtle ſaith, that God hath ſet up Pharaoh to ſhew his power in him: So Auguſtine ſaith, Ita plenitudo divinæ praeſcientiæ in alios manante juſtitia, in alios gratia profluente completa eſt: So the fulnes of Gods preſcience is accompliſhed, his juſtice being ſhewed upon ſome, and upon others grace and mercie: de Praedeſt. & gratia, cap. 13.

2 God is ſaid not to will the death of any, becauſe no man is to impute his damnation unto God, becauſe the wicked are juſtly puniſhed for their ſins, without any reſpect had to the ſecret counſell of God: Gods eternall decree then, is not the next and immediate cauſe of damnation, but the ſinnes of men: therefore he may truly ſay, God will not the death of a ſinner, becauſe hee no wayes willeth ſin, which is the cauſe of their death. But as Auguſtine ſaith, Praedeſtinavit ſolum judicium ſuum, quo unicuique prout geſſit, retributurus eſt: Hee hath predeſtinate only his judgements, to give to every man as he hath done: articul. falſ. impoſit. 10.

Enchirid. cap. 103. 3 Whereas Saint Paul ſaith, God would have all men ſaved, &c. Auguſtine expoundeth it thus: Omnes homines, omne genus hominum intelligamus: By all men, wee may underſtand all ſorts of men, not every particular man. And this is very agreeable to the Apoſtles meaning, which a little before exhorted men to pray for Kings and Princes: and then hee giveth this reaſon, becauſe God would have all men to be ſaved, that is, high and low, Kings and people, men of all ſorts.

4 We muſt underſtand theſe and the like places, not of the ſecret, but of the revealed will of God, who offereth unto all, the outward meanes of ſalvation: there is, voluntas medii vel ſigni, and, voluntas finis: the will of God concerning the end, and concerning the meanes leading to the end: So although God have willed and determined every mans end, ſome one way, ſome another, yet the externall meanes of ſalvation are denied to none. And that this is the Apoſtles meaning, that which followeth doth declare: God would have all men come to the knowledge of the truth, verſ. 4. and to come to repentance. 2 Pet. 3. 9. Thus alſo Auguſtine expoundeth theſe words; Remota hac diſcretione, quam divina ſcientia intra ſecretum juſtitiæ ſuæ continet, ſinceriſſimè credendum eſt, &c. Setting apart the conſideration of the ſecret counſell of God, it is ſincerely to be beleeved, that God would have all men to be ſaved: that is, offering to all the outward meanes of ſalvation, as his word and Sacraments: cont. articul. falſ. impoſit. articul. 2. To this purpoſe Saint Ambroſe lib. 2. de vocat. Gent. c. 1. Quamvis omnes dominus ſalvos fieri, &c. Although God would have all men ſaved, and come to the knowledge of the truth: non tamen ſibi diſpenſationum ſuarum abſtulit poteſtatem, &c. yet hath hee not taken away the power of his diſpenſation, that the order of his counſell ſhould run otherwiſe than he in his ſecret judgement had appointed.

5 Saint Ambroſe alſo ſheweth another way how this is to be expounded, lib. 1. de vocat. Gent. cap. 3. Habet populus Dei plenitudinem ſuam, &c. The people of God have a certaine plenitude or fulnes, and in the elect there is a ſpeciall kinde of univerſality: like as when the Scripture ſpeaketh of the wicked, Ea quæ de parte quadam dicuntur, &c. Thoſe things which are ſpoken but of a part, doe ſeeme to appertaine to all: as Philip. 2. All ſeeke their owne, &c. Videmus ergo pro parte hominum omnes homines nominari: We ſee then that for a part of men, all men are named. After the ſame manner may the Apoſtle be underſtood, when he ſaith, God would have all men to be ſaved.

6 Saint Ambroſe alſo hath another expoſition of this place: Vult Deus omnes ſalvari: ſed ſi accedunt ad eum, &c. God would have all to be ſaved; but if they come unto him, non ſic vult, ut & nolentes ſalventur: he ſo would it not, as that they againſt their wils ſhould be ſaved, &c. but all men are not willing to be ſaved; Ergo, God would not ſuch to be ſaved: Ambroſ. in 1. Tim. 2. Among ſo many expoſitions of this place, there is none of them that enforceth theſe words to ſignifie a generall decree and purpoſe in God to ſave all.

The Proteſtants.

GOd as he hath made all men, ſo hath he freely diſpoſed of their end, according to the counſell of his owne will, ſelecting ſome to be veſſels of honour, and rejecting others to be veſſels of wrath: And this very well ſtandeth both with the mercy and juſtice of God, to ſave ſome and reject others: for he might juſtly condemne all to eternall death. So Auguſtine ſaith, Nemo juſtitia Deum arguat, ſi uni indebitam donaverit gratiam, alteri reddiderit debitam pœnam: Let no man ſeeme to challenge Gods juſtice, if he give unto one grace undeſerved, and to another puniſhment due and deſerved: De Prædeſt. & grat. cap. 4.

Further, we ſay with Auguſtine: Præſcientiam non cogere hominem ut talis ſit, qualem præſcivit Deus, &c. That Gods preſcience compelleth not a man to be ſuch, as he foreſaw him to be: De Prædeſtinat. & grat. cap. 15. And againe, Ab illo eſſe quod ſtatur, non ab illo eſſe quod ruitur: Of him it is that wee ſtand, of him it is not that wee fall: artic. falſ. impoſ. 15. Wee ſo then affirme the reprobation of the wicked, as that we thinke none ordained to condemnation, which they have not juſtly deſerved by their ſin, and that God only hath decreed and willed their puniſhment, but not their ſin, that bringeth them unto it.

Argum. 1. God hath made the wicked for the day of evill. They were before of old ordained to this condemnation. The Prophet Iſai ſaith, Topheth, that is, hell is prepared of old. And everlaſting fire is ſaid to be prepared for the devill and his angels. If hell were prepared of old, then they were alſo prepared of old, that ſhould be tormented in hell; for hell was not made for nought.

Prov. 16. 4.
Iude 4.
Iſai. 30. 33.
Matth. 25. 41.

Argum. 2. But of all other places this is moſt evident in the ninth to the Romans: out of the which chapter, for this matter we gather divers arguments: Firſt, the Apoſtle alleageth the example of Eſau, and Iacob, I have loved Iacob, and hated Eſau: which was ſpoken before they were borne: Ergo, God in his eternall decree electeth ſome, and rejecteth others. It cannot bee anſwered here, that this is only to be underſtood of the temporall rejection of Eſau, and election of Iacob, concerning the promiſed land: for the Apoſtle throughout this chapter reaſoneth of Gods eternall election, and reprobation, as it appeareth by the example of Pharaoh: yea, and this Bellarmine liberally confeſſeth; that the example of Eſau and Iacob is to bee applied unto eternall election, and reprobation, lib. 2. de grat. cap. 10. But he hath another evaſion, making a diſtinction betweene negative and poſitive damnation, which ſerveth not his turne here, as afterward ſhall be ſeene.

We have Auguſtines judgement alſo of this matter: Et reprobi in Eſau demonſtrantur Iudæi, & prædeſtinati in Iacob apparent Chriſtiani: The reprobate Jewes are ſhewed in Eſau, and the elect Chriſtians appeare in Iacob. Hee underſtandeth this example of election, and reprobation.

De ſymbol. lib. 2. cap. 2. tom. 9.

Secondly, the Apoſtle ſaith that as the veſſels of mercie are prepared to glorie, ſo the veſſels of wrath are prepared to deſtruction: And that God hath as great right and power over his creature, as the Potter hath over the clay, to make of it a veſſell of honour or diſhonour.

Thirdly, verſ. 17. The Lord ſet up Pharaoh, to ſhew his power in him. Prov. 16. The Lord hath made all things for himſelfe, and the wicked againſt the evill day: The damnation of the wicked then, doth as well ſet forth the glory of God, as the ſalvation of the elect: for God hath done both for his owne ſake: Ergo, both are the Lords proper acts, the one, as well as the other.

Prov. 16. 4.

1 Auguſtine ſaith, Filius perditionis dictus eſt traditor Chriſti, perditioni prædeſtinatus: The betraier of Chriſt is called the child of perdition, becauſe he was predeſtinate or ordained to perdition: Tract. in Iohan. 107.

Againe, he ſaith, Tenenda eſt inconcuſſè hæc regula,—impios in peccatis, antequam eſſent in mundo præſcitos eſſe tantum, non prædeſtinatos, pœnam autem iis prædeſtinatam, &c. This rule we muſt undoubtedly hold, that the wicked were only foreſeene or foreknowne of God in their ſinnes, not predeſtinate, but their puniſhment was predeſtinate, Hypognoſt. articul. 6. So then God ordaineth not men to ſinne, but he ordaineth men to puniſhment for their ſinnes: yet are not the wicked to complaine, for they are juſtly forſaken of God, becauſe of their rebellion, and diſobedience. Neither are the godly and faithfull by this doctrine to bee diſcouraged: foraſmuch as God hath not denied them the grace of his ſpirit, but hath given them faith and repentance, and ſtrength to walke before him, in his feare: all which are pledges unto them of their free election, and ſalvation in Chriſt.

Tertullian ſaith: Prælatio alterius ſine contumelia alterius non poteſt procedere, quia nec electio ſine reprobatione: The preferring of one cannot bee without the reproach of another, neither is election without reprobation, &c. He ſpeaketh of the election and reprobation among men: but the ſame rule holdeth in all elections and rejections, the one is not without the other.

2 Iſychius: Omnes dicit vocari quidem à Chriſto, ſed non omnes juſtificari, quia multi vocati, pauci electi: he ſaith, that all are called of Chriſt, but all are not juſtified, becauſe many are called, few elected, &c. If ſome only are elected, conſequently the reſt are rejected.

Lib. 6. in 23. cap. Levit.

3 Latter confeſſion of Helvetia, chap. 10. In Chriſt, and for Chriſt, did God chuſe us, and they who now are engraft into Chriſt by faith, the ſame alſo were elected: but ſuch as are without Chriſt, were rejected.

Harm. ſect. 5. pag. 84.

4 Wee want not the teſtimony of ſome of their owne writers for the reprobation of the wicked: Magiſter ſent. lib. 3. diſtinct. 4. c. Dicuntur filii gehennæ, non ex illa nati, ſed in illam præparati: They are called the children of hell, not becauſe they are borne of hell, but ordained, or prepared unto it.

Lib. 3. diſt. 32. liter. e. De reprobis, qui preparati ſunt non ad vitam, ſed mortem, quaritur, &c. It may be asked concerning the reprobate, which are not prepared to life, but unto death, whether it may be granted, that God did love them from the beginning: we ſay then, that it muſt be granted only of the elect, that God loved them from the beginning, &c. but of the not elected it muſt be ſimply granted, that God did hate, that is, reprobate them, &c. A more evident teſtimony we cannot have.

The ſecond part, of the Vniverſality of the grace of God.

23. Error.

In epiſt. Proſper ad Auguſt.

IT was the error of the Pelagians, as Auguſtine noteth, that the grace of God was not only in reſpect of the outward meanes, generally offered to all, but in Gods eternall decree and purpoſe ordained for all, if they would receive it, for thus they affirmed: Quantum ad Deum, omnibus paratam eſſe vitam æternam, quia vult omnes ſalvos fieri: quantum ad arbitrii libertatem attinet, ab eis eam apprehendi, qui ſponte Deo crediderunt: On Gods behalfe, they ſay, life eternall is prepared for all, becauſe God will have all men ſaved: and as for the freedome of the will, ſo many apprehend or lay hold of eternall life, as of their owne accord doe beleeve in God. It followeth upon this opinion, that Chriſt alſo died in the purpoſe and intention of God, for all men generally, and not for beleevers only, ſuch as are ordained unto life.

Bellarmine confuteth this error, and would make us beleeve that he himſelfe is farre from it: yet elſewhere he ſeemeth to affirme it in theſe words: Si ſanguis Chriſti dandus eſſet omnibus pro quibus fuſus eſt, dandus eſſet omnibus omnino hominibus, etiam Turcis, Iudæis, Ethnicis, quibuſcunque impiis: ſanguis enim ille pro omnibus fuſus eſt: If the blood of Chriſt ſhould be given to all, for whom it was ſhed, it ſhould be given generally to all men, Turks, Jewes, Ethnikes, to all wicked men: for his blood was ſhed for all, Bellarm. de Euchariſt. lib. 4. cap. 25. This ſhould ſeeme alſo to have been the judgement of the elder Papiſts: for Iohn Careleſſe Martyr was charged by a Popiſh Doctor, that hee ſhould hold, that Chriſt did not die effectually for all men, Fox pag. 1920. It ſhould appeare then, that hee himſelfe thought that the benefit of Chriſts death was ordained and purpoſed for all: and therefore that he died effectually for all.

There be at this day three ſundry opinions maintained by ſome concerning the Univerſality of grace: The firſt is, Chriſtum ſine ullo diſcrimine pro omnium hominum peccatis eſſe mortuum, & omnia hominum peccata non modo ſufficienter verum etiam efficienter expiaſſe, &c. That Chriſt hath died for all men, without any difference, and hath actually purged all mens ſinnes, not only ſufficiently, but effectually: abſque ullo fidei vel incredulitatis reſpectu, without any reſpect to their faith, or incredulity: Hubertus theſ. 19. Againe, Omnes reprobos, & electos æque per Chriſtum ſalvatos ſive credant, ſive non; That the reprobate as well as the elect are ſaved by Chriſt, whether they beleeve or not, Huber. theſ. 270. That Chriſt dyed as well for the damned and reprobate, as for Peter and Paul; Iacobus Andre. colloq. Mompelgartenſ. p. 548. yet are not the reprobate ſaved, becauſe, they deſpiſe this grace offered, and ſo are deprived of this reconciliation purchaſed by Chriſt, Huber. theſ 245.

The ſecond opinion is, Omnes & ſingulos homines beneficio & gratia univerſali ſummi patris eſſe per Chriſtum ſervatos: That all men, and every one by the univerſall grace of God the Father in Chriſt, are ſaved, yet not without reſpect had to their faith: but they ſay further, Fidem in Deum naturalem eſſe, omnibus inditam & innatam That this faith in God is naturally given unto all: ſic Puckſius præfation. So that in effect they affirme the ſame thing which the other doe, that by nature all men are actually ſaved by Chriſts death, if they doe not afterward wilfully reject this grace.

The third opinion is: Quod ſit Dei propoſitum ſalvare omnes, & elegerit eos & prædeſtinarit vitæ æternæ, ſervata tamen conditione; That it is Gods purpoſe, that all men ſhould be ſaved, and that he hath elected, and predeſtinate them to eternall life, the condition kept, that is, if they beleeve: Hemming. de gratia univerſal. p. 20. So alſo Suecanus: Deus univerſaliter omnium in Chriſto miſertus aſſumpſit humanum genus in reconciliationis fœdus: That God having mercy upon all, hath received whole mankinde into the covenant of reconciliation, de Prædeſtinat. 480. That is, as many as beleeve: which gift to beleeve they acknowledge to be of God, and the ſame not denied to any, but offered generally to all; and that it is in mans power to give aſſent unto grace offered, and to beleeve: Voluntatem à Deo doctam, & motam à Spiritu Sancto poſſe ſe applicare ad gratiam, aſſentiri Evangelio, credere: That the will being taught of God, and ſomewhat ſtirred of the ſpirit, may apply it ſelfe to grace, give aſſent to the Goſpell, beleeve, &c. Hemming. de libro arbit.

Pag. 112.

Theſe three opinions, though in ſome circumſtances differing from themſelves, as the firſt holdeth all men actually by nature to be ſaved by Chriſt, without any reſpect to their faith; the ſecond by nature, not excluding faith; the third by grace and faith, which they ſay is offered of God and apprehended of mans free will: yet all theſe herein agree, that Chriſt was not given of his father to dye for a certaine and definite number of the elect, which they denie, but univerſally for all men in the world.

The firſt opinion, applying Chriſts death to all, as well unbeleevers as beleevers, doth manifeſtly impugne the Scripture, which ſaith, God ſo loved the world, that he hath given his only begotten ſonne, &c. that whoſoever beleeveth in him, ſhould not periſh, &c.

Ioh. 3. 16.

The ſecond, making faith a naturall gift, is contrary alſo to the word: for that which is naturall is common to all: but all men have not faith. 2 Theſſ. 3. 2.

The third, aſcribing power to mans free will to receive and apprehend grace offered, gainſayeth the truth, which ſaith, Without me you can doe nothing. Ioh. 15. 5.

But leaving the ſeverall abſurdities of theſe opinions, we will deale againſt them all in that wherein they agree, concerning the univerſalitie of grace: and eſpecially againſt the latter, which ſeemeth to bee much approved even of ſome of our owne countreymen, and already hath gotten ſome patrons and defenders in our Church. Wherfore this matter being weightie in it ſelfe, and dangerous for feare of further infection, we will not lightly paſſe over this place, but take ſome paines, firſt to anſwer the arguments uſed by the adverſe part, and then bring forth our owne.

Their arguments are of two ſorts, either drawne directly from ſome places of Scripture, or from ſome ſhew and apparance of reaſon: of the firſt in the firſt place.

Argum. 1. Firſt, they object ſuch places of Scripture, where it is directly affirmed, that Chriſt died for all men.

1 God will that all men ſhall be ſaved. Chriſt gave himſelfe a ranſome for all men: Huber. theſ. 70. Puck. ration. 83. 1 Tim. 2. 4, 5.

2 Chriſt died for all: Huber. theſ. 87. Pucks. ration. 79. 2 Cor. 5. 15.

3 The Lord would have no man periſh, but would have all men come to repentance: Pucks. ration. 90. Huber. theſ. 93. 2 Pet. 3. 9.

4 Chriſt gave himſelfe for us all. Rom. 8. 32.

5 Chriſt did taſte death for all men. Heb. 2. 9.

Out of theſe and ſuch like places of Scripture, they inferre and conclude, that Chriſts death is effectuall to all, and that in the purpoſe of God he was given generally for all men.

Contra. Firſt, to theſe places wee will anſwer in generall, and then in particular: That Chriſt died for all men, the Scripture ſo affirming, we denie not: but becauſe elſewhere the Scripture ſaith, that Chriſt gave his life for his ſheep[a]: [b] for the Church. Hee prayeth not for the [c] world, much leſſe died for it: leſt now the Scripture ſhould ſeeme to be contrary to it ſelfe, wee muſt not take the letter, but follow the ſenſe, where we find mention made of the univerſality of Chriſts death: Chriſts death therefore is ſaid diverſly to be univerſall, or to be given for all men.

[a] Ioh. 10. 11.
[b] Epheſ. 5. 25.
[c] Ioh. 17. 9.

1 The death of Chriſt, ſecundum ſufficientiam, in reſpect of the ſufficiencie and the fulnes of redemption thereof, hath ſatisfied for all men: but ſecundum efficientiam, it is efficacious and effectuall only to thoſe which were fore-ordained to life in Chriſt: thus Auguſtine diſtinguiſheth: Quod ad magnitudinem & potentiam pretii, ſanguis Chriſti redemptio eſt totius mundi: quoniam tamen non omnes captivitate eruti ſunt, redemptionis proprietas haud dubiè, penes illos eſt, qui membra ſunt Chriſti, &c. In reſpect of the greatneſſe and price, the blood of Chriſt is the redemption of the whole world: but becauſe all are not redeemed from captivity, the proper effect of redemption is only wrought in the members of Chriſt, Tom. 7. ad articul. falſo. impoſit.

Object. This is a vaine diſtinction of ſufficiencie, and efficacie: Quia nil magis requiritur ad ſufficientia veritatem, quàm efficacitas: For there can bee no ſufficiencie, unleſſe the ſame bee effectuall: Pucks. ration. 2.

Reſponſ. 1. There is as great difference between ſufficiencie, and efficacie, as between δύναμις καὶ ἔργον, facultie or ability, and the worke: as a tree firſt is good, there is the ſufficiencie; then it bringeth forth good fruit, which is the efficacie: the tree may bee good, though it have not alwaies good fruit: ſo there may bee a kinde of ſufficiencie without efficacitie. Secondly, wee ſay that the death of Chriſt is both ſufficient and efficacious in it ſelfe, though it be not to thoſe that periſh for want of beleefe: and it is efficacious alſo to them in ſome ſort, for through Chriſt they enjoy what good thing ſoever they have, though not after that ſingular manner, as it is to the faithfull: ſic Iunius ad ration. 3. Puckſii.

To this purpoſe Saint Ambroſe lib. 3. de fide cap. 4. Ille quidem miſericordia ſua omnibus natus eſt, ſed perfidia hæreticorum fecit, ut non omnibus naſceretur, qui omnibus natus eſt: Hee in mercie was borne for all, but the unfaithfulnes of the heretiks is the cauſe that hee which was borne to all, is not borne for all. Likewiſe, lib. 5. in Luc. c. 7. Si Chriſtus pro omnibus mortuus eſt, pro nobis tamen ſpecialiter paſſus eſt: If Chriſt died for all, yet more ſpecially he hath ſuffered for us. What is this ſpeciall ſuffering of Chriſt but his effectuall dying only for the elect?

Magiſt. ſentent. lib. 3. diſtinct. 20. liter. c. Chriſtus precium noſtra redemptionis obtulit pro omnibus quantùm ad ſufficientiam, ſed pro electis tantum, quantum ad efficaciam: Chriſt offered up the price of our redemption for all in reſpect of the ſufficiencie, but for the elect only as concerning the efficacie. This diſtinction is received by Thomas, Lyra, and the whole ſchoolemen: Eſpenc. in 1. Tim. p. 36.

2 Chriſt is ſaid to have died for all, and that effectually, that is, for all the elect: for as there is an univerſalitie of the wicked, as the Apoſtle ſaith, All ſeeke their owne, and not that which is Ieſus Chriſts, that is, all falſe teachers: ſo there is an univerſalitie of the faithfull: as Chriſt ſaith, When I am lift up from the earth, I will draw all men unto me, meaning all beleevers: Omnes prædeſtinatos ad ſalutem: All ordained to ſalvation, as Auguſtine expoundeth it, Tractat. 53. Likewiſe, They ſhall bee all taught of God: that is, all the faithfull. So one ſaith, Et populus Dei ſuam habet plenitudinem, &c. in

Philip. 2. 21.
Ioh. 12. 32.
Iſai. 54. 13.

electis & praeſcitis ſua quadam cenſetur univerſitas, ut de toto mundo totus mundus, & de omnibus hominibus omnes homines videantur aſſumpti: The people of God hath a certaine fulneſſe, and there is a kinde of univerſality in the elect, that out of the whole world, a whole world, and from among all men, all men in ſome ſort ſhould be delivered, Ambroſ. de vocat. Gent. lib. 1. cap. 3.

3 Chriſt is ſaid to have dyed for all: and all men are ſaid to bee redeemed by his death, becauſe as many as are redeemed, doe obtaine redemption only by Chriſt: ſo is that place to be underſtood, God worketh all in all, not every man hath all gifts; but becauſe, what good gift ſoever there is in any man, it commeth only of God. So Auguſtine ſaith, Dictum eſt, omnes juſtificari per Chriſtum, non quia omnes juſtificantur in Chriſto, ſed qui juſtificantur non aliter juſtificantur, quàm in Chriſto; ut dicimus omnes homines intrare in domum per unam januam,—quia nemo intrat niſi per ipſam: It is ſaid, many are juſtified by Chriſt, not becauſe all are juſtified in Chriſt, but they that are juſtified, are not otherwiſe juſtified, than in Chriſt, as we ſay, all men went into the houſe by that doore, becauſe none went in, but by it: Auguſtin. contra Iulian. lib. 6. cap. 12.

1 Cor. 12. 6.

4 When the Scripture uſeth in this caſe theſe generall termes, omnes, omnia, all men, all things, wee muſt not underſtand them univerſally, as comprehending every particular, but indefinitly, as for omnes homines, all men, we underſtand omnia hominum genera, all ſorts of men: this is Auguſtines rule alſo, tractat. in Iohan. 53. So it is ſaid, that Chriſt healed omnem morbum, every diſeaſe, that is, every kinde of diſeaſe,[a] Decimatis omne olus: You tithe all herbes, that is, every kinde.[b] Omnis Iudaea exibat: All Judea went forth vnto Iohn[c], that is, out of every part of Judea.

[a] Matth. 4. 23.
[b] Luke 11. 42.
[c] Mark. 1. 5.

5 Chriſt is ſaid to have died for all: in reſpect of the externall preaching of the Goſpell, and common obligation of grace unto all, which notwithſtanding is not available or effectuall in all: as in the Goſpell the marriage feaſt was prepared for all; but all that were called came not: For many are called (ſaith our Saviour) few choſen[d]. So the grace of God, ex peccato evocat omnes communiter, ſuos excitat ſingulariter, doth call all men from ſin generally, but his elect hee ſtirreth up after a ſingular manner, and effectually.

[d] Matth. 22. 14.

Object. If God doe offer Chriſt outwardly to all, and yet all be not thereby called, he ſhould ſeeme to mocke and diſſemble with men, Pucks. ration. 57.

Reſponſ. Firſt, the calling of God in it ſelfe is effectuall to all, if all had grace to lay hold of it: now, if God give grace unto ſome to obey their calling, & thereby to be converted, and not to others, we muſt not be inquiſitive to ſearch, but leave it unto God, whoſe judgements may be hid and ſecret, but they are alwayes moſt juſt: for hee hath mercie on whom he will. Secondly, though the calling of God worke not it proper and naturall effect in the incredulous, unto their converſion; yet it is effectuall, more accidentario, accidentally, being made unto them, through the hardneſſe of their owne heart, the ſavour of death unto death. Thirdly, S. Ambroſe witneſſeth for this diſtinction of generall and effectuall calling: lib. 2. de vocat. Gentium, cap. 8. Praeter illam generalem gratiam parcius & occultius hominum corda pulſantem, excellentiore opere, largiore munere, potentiore virtute vocatio ſpecialis exercitur, &c. Beſide the generall grace more ſparingly and ſecretly beating upon mens hearts, there is a ſpeciall calling more excellent in working of a larger gift, and more mighty in vertue.

The particular anſwer to the former places.

TO the firſt, that God would have all men to be ſaved, wee have anſwered before, queſt. 2. of this Controverſie, part 1. and to this effect, that it cannot be literally underſtood, that God would abſolutely have all men to be ſaved, for why then ſhould not all be ſaved? For who hath reſiſted Gods will[e]? Neither can it be anſwered here, as ſometime by the old Pelagians, that Gods will is not fulfilled, becauſe man will not: for this were to make men mightier than God. The meaning then of the place is this: firſt, that God offereth the externall meanes of ſalvation to all: which if they refuſe, they are in fault themſelves, God is not to be blamed. Secondly, the Apoſtle, as Auguſtine ſaith, by all men, underſtandeth all ſorts of men: as high and low, Kings, Princes, and the people, as it may appeare by that which goeth before in this place. Thirdly, in the ſame ſenſe Chriſt is ſaid to give himſelfe a ranſome for all men, that is, for all ſorts of men, or for all the elect, or ſufficiently for all in generall.

[e] Rom. 9. 19.

In the ſecond place,[f] the Apoſtle ſheweth, that howſoever the death of Chriſt is ſufficient for all, yet it is effectuall only to the faithfull, to them, That from henceforth live not to themſelves, but to him that died for them, verſ. 15. and to ſuch as are new creatures, verſ. 17. But all are not new creatures in Chriſt, therefore for all and to all Chriſts death is not effectuall.

[f] 2 Cor. 5. 15. 17.

In the third place S. Peter ſpeaketh to the faithfull, whom hee calleth, verſ. 1. beloved, and God is patient toward us, ſaith he, verſ. 9. and would have no man periſh; that is, none of us, none of the faithfull and elect: Sic Iunius reſponſ. ad ration. 90. And againe, The patience, long-ſuffering, and bountifulneſſe of God, leadeth every man to repentance[g]: But thou (ſaith the Apoſtle) after thine hardneſſe, and heart that cannot repent, &c. They therefore which abuſe and deſpiſe the patience of God, are themſelves the cauſe of their deſtruction: God is not to be charged with it.

[g] Rom. 2. 4.

In the fourth place, the Apoſtle ſaying, Chriſt gave himſelfe for us all, meaneth the univerſality of the faithfull and elect: whom he hath predeſtinate, called, juſtified, verſ. 30. Rom. 8. 32.

In the fifth place, where the Apoſtle ſaith, that Chriſt did taſte death for all men, he afterward expoundeth himſelfe, verſ. 10. ſaying, That Chriſt brought many children to glory, ſuch as are ſanctified, verſ. 11. whom Chriſt vouchſafeth to call his brethren, verſ. 12. and his children, verſ. 13. Theſe are not univerſally all men, but the faithfull and elect only: Chriſt only is the Prince of their ſalvation, whom he bringeth to glory, verſ. 10. Heb. 2. 9. 10. 12. 13.

Argum. 2. Their ſecond generall argument is drawne from ſuch places of Scripture, where mention is made of the whole world, in the benefit of redemption: as [a] Behold the Lambe of God, that taketh away the ſinne of the world: [b] The bread that I will give is my fleſh, which I will give for the life of the world: [c] I came not to judge the world, but to ſave the world: [d] God was in Chriſt, and reconciled the world to himſelfe. Theſe places are alleaged by Hemingius lib. de univerſalitate gratiæ. Huberus, lib. theſe: Puckſius ration. 60. 91. to prove the univerſality of the benefit of Chriſts death to all.

[a] Iohn 1. 29.
[b] Iohn 6. 51.
[c] Iohn 12. 47.
[d] 2 Cor. 5. 19.

Anſwer. Firſt, Chriſt is ſaid to take away the ſinnes of the world, in reſpect of the ſufficiencie of his death, which is able to ſatisfie in it ſelfe, not only for the ſinnes of the world, but, as Thom. Aquinas ſaith, Si plures mundi eſſent, If there were many worlds, yet is his death effectuall only to thoſe that beleeve, and are ordained unto life. Epiſtol. decret. Gaii. Effuſio juſti ſanguinis Chriſti tam dives fuit ad pretium, ut ſi univerſitas captivorum in redemptorem ſuum crederet, nullum diaboli vincula retinerent: The ſhedding of Chriſts righteous blood, was ſo rich to pay our ranſome, that if all the captives did beleeve in their redeemer, none of them ſhould be held in the devils bonds. Secondly, the world in Scripture is not alwayes taken for the univerſall company of men both good and bad, but as it is ſometime taken only for the wicked: as [e] the Prince of this world commeth, &c. And [f] the world hath hated them: ſo alſo doth it ſometime ſignifie only the elect company diſperſed over the world: [g] as that the world may know that thou haſt ſent me. And againe, The world hath not knowne thee, but I have knowne thee, and theſe have knowne that thou haſt ſent me. So then there is a world that hath not knowne Chriſt, namely the wicked world: there is a world that hath knowne Chriſt, that is, the company of the elect: ſo Abraham is called the heire of the world, [h] that is, the father of the faithfull, verſ. 11. Auguſtine alſo thus writeth, Tract. evangel. Ioan. 52. Mundus appellatur in malis hominibus, qui toto terrarum orbe diffuſi ſunt:—appellatur mundus in bonis, qui ſimiliter toto terrarum orbe diffuſi ſunt: unde dicit Apoſtolus, Deus erat in Chriſto mundum reconcilians ſibi: The world is underſtood of wicked men, that are diſperſed over the world: the world alſo is named of good men, that are ſo likewiſe diſperſed; as the Apoſtle ſaith, God was in Chriſt reconciling the world to himſelfe. This world Chriſt came to ſave, not to judge, he gave himſelfe for the life of this world: this is the reconciled world, as Auguſtine againe ſaith, Mundus damnatus quicquid præter Eccleſiam: mundus reconciliatus Eccleſia: The reconciled world is only the Church: the damned world all thoſe that are beſide the Church.

[e] Iohn 14. 30.
[f] Iohn 17. 14.
[g] Ioh. 17. 23. 25.
[h] Rom. 4. 13.

Object. But Saint Iohn ſaith, Chriſt is the propitiation for our ſinnes, and not for our ſinnes only, but for the ſinnes of the whole world: Chriſt then died not for the elect only, (not for our ſinnes only, ſaith the Apoſtle) but for all in the world: and therefore he ſaith the whole world: ſic Huber. theſ. 131. 1 Iohn 2. 2.

Contra. Firſt, S. Iohn in ſaying (not for our ſinnes only, but, &c.) meaneth that Chriſt hath not ſatisfied by his death, for our ſinnes that now beleeve, ſaith the Apoſtle, but for as many as ſhall beleeve, while the world ſtandeth: as our Saviour ſaith, I pray not for theſe alone, but for them alſo which ſhall beleeve in me through their word. Secondly, by the whole world the Apoſtle may here as well underſtand the univerſall company of the faithfull, as he ſaith, The whole world lyeth in wickedneſſe, meaning the wicked only. Therefore Auguſtine writeth well, Epiſtol. 48. Totus mundus in maligno poſitus eſt propter zizania, quæ ſunt per totum mundum, & Chriſtus propitiatio eſt peccatorum totius mundi propter triticum, quod eſt per totum mundum: The whole world lyeth in evill, becauſe of the tares throughout the whole world, and Chriſt is the propitiation of the ſinnes of the whole world, becauſe of the good wheat throughout the world.

Iohn 17. 21.
1 Iohn 5. 19.

Argum. 3. Their third generall argument is grounded upon ſuch places of Scripture, where the fall of mankind by Adam, and the redemption by Chriſt are compared together: As by the offence of one the fault came upon all to their condemnation: ſo by the juſtifying of one the benefit abounded towards all men, &c. And againe, As in Adam all die, ſo in Chriſt ſhall all be made alive: Chriſts redemption then is as generall, as Adams fall, unleſſe yee will ſay, that Adams ſinne exceedeth the merit of Chriſt. But all are dead in Adam: Ergo, all are redeemed by Chriſt: Huber. Theſ. 48. Snecan. de prædeſt. pag. 486. 492. 494. & alibi.

Rom. 5. 18.
1 Cor. 15. 22.

Anſwer 1. Auguſtines expoſition may here ſafely be admitted, that all men are ſaid to bee juſtified by Chriſt, not that all men are actually juſtified by him, but becauſe all that are juſtified, are not otherwiſe juſtified, than by him: as all that are dead, are dead in Adam: Auguſt. de natur. & grat. cap. 40. And againe he ſaith, Sicut in Adam omnes, &c. as in Adam all die, &c. Nemo ad mortem niſi per Adam, nemo ad vitam niſi per Chriſtum. As none die, but in Adam; ſo none are made alive, but in Chriſt. Auguſt. So then as all that pertaine to Adam, in the firſt generation, are dead in Adam; ſo all that by regeneration and new birth are engraft into Chriſt, are made alive by him. 2 The Apoſtle ſaith, that all they which are juſtified by Chriſt, ſhall reigne in life by Chriſt, verſ. 17. but all that are of Adam ſhall not inherit eternall life: Ergo, all are not univerſally juſtified by Chriſt, neither dyed

Chriſt in that ſenſe for all. 3 Neither doth it follow, that if more periſh by Adam, than are redeemed by Chriſt, that the grace of Chriſt ſhould be of leſſe force, than the ſinne of Adam. Firſt, becauſe they which have no fruit in Chriſts death, are deprived thereof through their owne unbeleefe, not for want of any ſufficiencie in the ranſome and price of redemption. Againe, though ſo many ſhould bee ſaved by Chriſt, as are dead in Adam, yet herein grace ſhould bee but equall to the ſinne of Adam : as many for as many: But now the Apoſtle preferreth grace, not in reſpect of multitude or number of the redeemed, but in a double regard. Firſt, Adams ſinne brought death, grace by Chriſt giveth life : now it is an eaſier thing for many to periſh, than for one to be reſtored : Adam alone loſt himſelfe and all the world : but all mankinde joyned together cannot ſave a ſoule : grace therefore is preferred in reſpect of the difficultie of the worke. In this ſenſe the Apoſtle ſaith : If through the offence of one, death reigned ; much more ſhall they which receive abundance of grace, reigne in life, &c. Secondly, the Apoſtle ſaith, The fault came of one offence to condemnation, verſ. 16. that is, only originall ſinne, which wee derive from Adam, maketh us guiltie of condemnation : but the gift is of many offences to juſtification : in Chriſt not only our originall, but actuall ſinnes alſo are pardoned. This then is the preeminence of grace. Which further is thus ſet forth by Primaſius : Major eſt redemptio Salvatoris, quam perditio tranſgreſſoris, &c. The redemption of the Saviour is greater than the perdition of the tranſgreſſor, becauſe all ſinnes are remitted by Chriſt, not only originall, but actuall, &c. Theodulus alſo ſaith : Gratia Dei adeo exuberavit, ut & ipſum Adami peccatum deleret, &c. The grace of God hath ſo abounded, that it hath taken away the very ſinne of Adam, and not only that, but all other ſinnes, &c. and not only ſo, Sed ad juſtitiam omnes deduxit, But hath brought all to juſtice, &c. In three things hee placeth this preeminence and excellencie of grace. 1 In that even Adams ſinne was thereby pardoned. 2 And not only originall, but actuall. 3 And not onely ſinnes committed, but righteouſneſſe imparted : ſee further hereof elſewhere.

1 Cor. 15. 22.

The other place is either to bee underſtood of the reſurrection, or rather of the life of the Saints in glory : for the Apoſtle ſaith, All ſhall be made alive in Chriſt : not that they already are : And in this ſenſe it maketh nothing for the univerſality of grace. And if wee underſtand it of redemption purchaſed by Chriſt, by (all) here, the elect only are ſignified, namely, they which are of Chriſt, as verſ. 23. And ſo Ambroſe upon this place expoundeth it, upon theſe words, 1 Cor. 15. Sicut in Adam, &c. As in Adam all die : Sicut Adam peccans mortem invenit, & omnes ex ejus origine tenuit : ita Chriſtus mortem vincens, omnibus qui ſunt ex ejus corpore vitam acquiſivit : As Adam ſinning wrought death upon all of his off-ſpring ; ſo Chriſt hath purchaſed life to all that are of his body : vel ſicut, &c. or as in Adam all, both juſt and unjuſt doe die : ſo in Chriſt all, both beleevers and unbeleevers ſhall riſe, though unto puniſhment.

Argum. 4. Their fourth argument out of Scripture, is from ſuch places, which ſeeme to extend the benefits purchaſed by Chriſts death generally to all.

Iohn. 1. 9.

Firſt they urge that place, This is the true light that lightneth every man which commeth into the world : Ergo, the light of grace is common to all : Puckſ. ration. 55.

Anſwer. Firſt, this place muſt be underſtood not of that ſingular and eſpeciall light of grace which is given only to the elect, but of the light of nature, or common grace, which is infuſed into all : for what light hee meaneth, is plainly ſhewed before, verſ. 4. In it was life, and the life was the light of men : he ſpeaketh of the naturall life & light, and that capacitie of reaſon, which is in all by nature. Secondly, if we ſhould underſtand the light of peculiar grace, then it wolud follow, that not only grace is offered, but received of all : for this light is ſaid verily and indeed to lighten all. Thirdly, Auguſtines expoſition may here ſafely be received ; by all men we may underſtand all ſorts of men, Enchirid. c. 103. or thus : Illuminat omnem hominem, quia nullus hominum illuminatur niſi lumine illo veritatis : He lightneth all men, becauſe there is none lightned but by that true light : de peccator. merit. & remiſſ. lib. 1. c. 25.

Rom. 11. 32.

Object. 2. God hath ſhut up all under unbeleefe, that hee might have mercie upon all. Mercie then is ordained for all.

Anſw. The meaning of the place is this, God will have mercy upon all, that is, both Jewes and Gentiles : for of them the Apoſtle entreateth throughout the whole chapter: Intelligitur (ſaith Auguſtine) de Iudæis & Gentilibus quos Deus prædeſtinavit : It is to bee underſtood of thoſe of the Jewes and Gentiles, whom God hath predeſtinate : de civitat. Dei. lib. 21. cap. 18. & 24.

Coloſſ. 1. 20.

Object. 3. It pleaſed God the Father, &c. by him to reconcile all things to himſelfe, &c. both the things in earth, and the things in heaven, through the blood of his Croſſe : Ergo, Chriſt dyed for all : Puckſ. 82.

Anſw. Firſt, if they will ſo ſtrictly urge this word, omnia, all things, Chriſt ſhall not only bee the Redeemer of men, but of all things in the world. Secondly, this word therefore is to bee reſtrained, according to the matter or ſubject whereof the Apoſtle entreateth : who having firſt ſet downe the worke of the creation, wherby all things viſible and inviſible were created, verſ. 16. he commeth then to the worke of redemption, which he extendeth not to all things viſible, and inviſible, as he did the creation, but reſtraineth to the Church, whereof Chriſt is the head, verſ. 18. which Church conſiſteth of two parts, of the Saints in heaven, and the Saints in earth, verſ. 20. As the Apoſtle ſaith elſe-where :

Of whom is named the whole family in heaven, and in earth. The benefit of redemption therefore belongeth only to the Church and family of the Saints. Epheſ. 3. 15.

Object. 4. Iohn 17. 2. Thou haſt given him power over all fleſh, that hee ſhould give eternall life to all them that thou haſt given him: Ergo, all fleſh is reconciled unto God by Chriſt: Huber. theſ. 161. John 17. 2.

Anſwer. Firſt, it followeth not, Chriſt hath power over all fleſh, therefore all fleſh is reconciled by Chriſt: for he hath power over all creatures in heaven and earth, even over bruit beaſts, yet they have no part in this reconciliation. Secondly, it is one thing to have power given over all fleſh, another thing to have men given unto Chriſt out of the world, as Auguſtine ſaith: Poteſtatem quidem omnis hominis accepit, ut liberet, quos voluerit; damnet, quos voluerit: ſed eos ſibi eſſe datos oſtendit, quibus omnibus det vitam æternam: Hee hath received power over all men to deliver whom he will, and to condemne whom he will: but they only are given unto him, to all whom he giveth eternall life: In Iohan. tractat. 111. Thirdly, that not all men, but only ſome in this ſenſe are given unto Chriſt, hee himſelfe witneſſeth: I have declared thy name unto the men, whom thou gaveſt mee out of the world. All the world therefore was not given unto Chriſt, but a certaine number choſen out of the world. And thus much of their objections out of Scripture: let us now ſee ſome other of their arguments. John 17. 6.

Argum. 2. Their ſecond generall argument is drawne from theſe abſurdities and inconveniences, which doe follow, as they imagine, upon this doctrine, that God in his eternall counſell hath predeſtinate ſome unto damnation, as he hath ordained others to life.

Object. 1. If God have appointed ſome unto damnation, and it is impoſſible that ſuch ſhould not ſinne, neither can Gods ſentence be altered: it ſhould ſeeme then, that they are not in fault themſelves, ſeeing they can no wayes eſcape the wrath of God: how then can it be avoided, but that God ſhould be the author of ſinne? Sic Hubertus in theſib. Snecan. p. 483. & 500.

Anſw. 1. I anſwer with Auguſtine: Qui à pietate deficiunt, non ex opere Dei, ſed ex voluntate ſua deficiunt, nec impelluntur ut cadant, nec circiuntur ut deſerant; caſuri tamen ab eo, qui falli non poteſt, præſciuntur: They which fall away from piety, doe not fall away, by any thing that God doth or worketh, but of their owne will and voluntary inclination; they are neither compelled to fall, nor caſt off to that intent they ſhould forſake God: but God who cannot be deceived, only fore-ſaw they ſhould fall, &c. The fall of man therefore is voluntary, and none the cauſe of it but himſelfe: God fore-ſeeth (from whoſe eyes nothing can be hid) that ſin ſhould be committed in the world: but hee decreed it not, but only fore-ordained the puniſhment of ſinne: And although ſinne be evill, yet the puniſhment thereof, as it is appointed of God, is juſt and good: Non ipſe ignis æternus, qui cruciaturus eſt impios, malus eſt, habens modum & ordinem ſuum, — ſed cruciatus eſt damnatio malis, quorum peccatis eſt debitus: Auguſtin. Everlaſting fire, which ſhall torment the wicked, is not evill it ſelfe, being not without ſome meaſure, and order, but the torment is evill to the damned, to whoſe ſinnes it is due. Artic. falſ. impoſit. 16. De natura boni cap. 37. Tim. 6.

Let us heare for this matter the teſtimony of Snecanus a Patron alſo of univerſall grace: Deum indurare, aut juſto odio deſtinare, quos vult; & homines interea ſponte, non coactè malefacere, &c. ſimul ſubordinata non pugnantia: Theſe two ſayings, for God to harden, and ordaine to be hated, whom he will; and for men notwithſtanding to doe evill willingly, not of conſtraint, are not contrary: but one ſerving and ſubordinate to another. Noſtræ voluntates manent liberæ ſub divina providentia: poſita prima cauſa, non tolluntur mediæ cauſæ, ſed potius ſtabiliuntur: Our owne wils remaine free under Gods providence, the firſt cauſe doth not take away the ſecond, but rather eſtabliſheth them: hæc ille de prædeſtinat. pag. 622. His meaning is this, that though Gods will and decree be the firſt cauſe of all things, and ſo of the ſalvation, or damnation of men; yet are there ſecond canſes, whereby Gods will is effected: as the corrupt will of man is the cauſe of ſinne, and ſinne the cauſe of damnation. It is not Gods will, that any man ſhould come to condemnation, who firſt willingly falling into ſinne, doth not juſtly deſerve the ſame. So then Gods decree is not the cauſe of ſinne, but the corruption only of mans will. Thus have we the teſtimony of an adverſarie very cleare on our ſide.

S. Ambroſe alſo thus teſtifieth lib. 2. de vocat. Gentium. c. 4. Æterna Dei cognitio nulla nos urget neceſſitate peccandi, &c. The eternall knowledge of God, doth not urge any neceſſity to ſinne, neither doth iniquity proceed from whence commeth equitie, &c. From the free will of men tranſgreſſion firſt tooke beginning.

Magiſt. ſenten. thus lib. 1. diſt. 41. liter. E. Non reprobatio ita eſt cauſa mali, ſicut prædeſtinatio cauſa boni, neq; obduratio ita facit hominem malum, ſicut miſericordia bonum. Reprobation is not ſo the cauſe of evill, as predeſtination is the cauſe of good; neither doth obduration ſo make a man evill, as mercie maketh him good.

Anſwer 2. But if God would (they ſay) men might be preſerved from ſinne: why ſhould hee rather give his grace to one, than to another? Auguſtine alſo very well anſwereth this matter: Inveſtigabilis miſericordia, qua cujus vult miſeretur, nullis ejus præcedentib. meritis, inveſtigabilis veritas, qua quem vult indurat, ejus præcedentib. meritis, ſed cum eo cujus miſeretur, plerunq; communib. His mercie is unſearchable, whereby he hath mercie on whom he will, without any his merits going before, and his truth is unſearchable, whereby he hardeneth, whom he will, his merits going before, but for the moſt part common with him, of whom he hath mercie, de bon. perſeveren. 2. 11.

The Apoſtle alſo may reſolve us herein, who ſaith, according as God ſpake to Moſes, I will have mercie upon whom I will have mercie, and will have compaſſion upon whom I will have compaſſion : Rom. 9. 15. Other reaſon wee muſt not bee deſirous to know, neither ſhall wee bee ever able to comprehend.

Object. 2. But why ſhould God ſave ſome, and not others, ſeeing they are all his creatures and workmanſhip? how is not God unjuſt, or partiall in ſo doing, and an accepter of perſons : Suecan. p. 480. de prædeſtinat.

Rom. 9. 20.

Anſwer 1. Saint Paul herein doth ſatisfie them to the full : firſt hee ſaith, Who art thou O man, that pleadeſt againſt God? It is an unreaſonable thing, that the creatures ſhould call the Creator to account, or demand a reaſon of his doings. Secondly, hee ſheweth by the example of the Potter, that God may with better right diſpoſe of his creature, as it pleaſeth him, than the Potter maketh of one lumpe, veſſels of honour and diſhonour. Thirdly, the Apoſtle giveth a reaſon, which may content us, why hee electeth ſome, namely, to ſhew the richneſſe of his mercie, and why he rejecteth others, namely, that his power may bee knowne, verſ. 22. Gods glory then, which ſtandeth partly in mercie, partly is ſeene in his juſtice, cannot appeare to the full, but in the ſalvation of ſome, and damnation of others : hee therefore that thinketh Gods dealing herein to bee unjuſt, is an enemie to the glory of God.

Anſwer 2. Auguſtine hath a ſingular ſpeech of this matter : Quis in tantam inſaniam—ut injuſtitiæ Deum arguat, ſi uni indebitam donaverit gratiam, alteri reddiderit debitam pœnam? an audebit debitor creditorem iniquitatis arguere, ſi alteri donans, ab eo, quod debebat, exegerit? Who will bee ſo mad as to accuſe God of injuſtice, if he give grace to one undue, and to another render puniſhment due and deſerved? ſhall the debtor accuſe the creditor of unjuſt dealing, if he forgive one his debt, and exact of thee that which thou oweſt? de prædeſt. & grat. c. 4. Neither can God be charged with partialitie, or having reſpect of perſons, in that of his free grace and mercie hee ſaveth ſome, and leaveth the reſt in their ſinnes : hee is ſaid to reſpect perſons, that for ſome quality or outward circumſtance preferreth one before another : as the Judge is ſaid to reſpect the perſon, when he heareth the rich and the great men, before the ſmall and the poore: As Samuel being ſent to annoint one of Ieſſe his ſonnes, reſpected the outward comely perſon of the elder brethren : But with God there is no ſuch reſpect of any ſuch outward condition or quality. God is no accepter of perſons, but in every nation he that feareth God, &c. that is, God reſpecteth not the perſon of men, that is, of what kindred or Country they are : So is it likewiſe taken : There is no reſpect of perſons before God : that is, whether they be Jewes or Gentiles. It is not therefore of any thing in men themſelves, that ſome are ſaved and not others, but of the free mercie of God : God ſeeth nothing in man, thereby to bee moved to ſhew him mercie : therefore hee reſpecteth no mans perſon : but all is of grace.

Deut. 1. 17.

Act. 10. 35.

Rom. 2. 10.

Object. 2. The perſon of man betokeneth not only ſome externall quality, or outward reſpect in man, but the eſſence and ſubſtance of man alſo : As in the Trinity, the name of perſon is taken ſubſtantially. Therefore if God be no accepter of perſons, one man cannot any wayes be preferred before another. Suecan. de prædeſtinat. p. 480.

Anſwer. First, the perſon of God and the perſon of man are not well compared together : for as much as there is nothing accidentall in God ; but whatſoever is belonging to his eſſence : but ſo is it not in man, in whom many things are accidentall, and ſubject to change. Secondly, though the perſon in the Trinity bee ſubſtantiall, yet is it not all one with the ſubſtance of the Trinity : for there is but one ſubſtance of the Trinity ; and if the perſon were the ſubſtance, then ſhould there bee but one perſon alſo, which were great hereſie to affirme, and ſo are they overthrowne by their owne example. Thirdly, if they will ſo ſtrictly exclude all reſpect of man on Gods behalfe ; how commeth it to paſſe, that beleevers are ſaved, all unbeleevers damned? unleſſe the reſpect of their faith make a difference betweene them, through the gracious and free acceptation of God. Wherefore God is ſaid not to accept the perſons of men no otherwiſe than I have ſaid, that is, not to regard any thing in man, or of man, whereby originally one man ſhould have a preeminence to another.

How God is ſaid not to have reſpect of perſons.

And to ſpeake yet more diſtinctly of this point : in the acception of perſons three things are to bee conſidered. 1 The gift, what is beſtowed. 2 The cauſe why. 3 The manner how. Firſt, in donis gratuitis, free gifts which are not due, there is no accepting of perſons properly : but when as that which is equally due, is not equally given, that is partialitie : now election unto life is not due unto any as a debt, but it is a franke gift of grace : Secondly, then ones perſon is accepted, when for any reſpect to the perſon, and ſome cauſe on his behalfe, a difference is made : but they which are elected, are not preferred for any thing which God ſeeth in them, but of his meere grace. Thirdly, the reſpecter of perſons offendeth, when hee giveth unto, or doth for one, with the injurie of another : but God in electing ſome, doth no wrong unto thoſe which are not elected : wherefore in this caſe there is with God no reſpect of perſons : ſee more of this point elſewhere, &c.

Hexapl. ad Rom. qu. 23. & addit. 3. to the doctrines.

Contr. artic. fall. impoſit. 1. 4.

3. They are all Gods creatures, we grant : but what then? muſt either all be ſaved, or ſhould God refraine from creating thoſe whom hee fore-ſaw ſhould fall? No, it is ſufficient that God is not the cauſe of their fall. And if God in his preſcience ſaw they ſhould fall, & ſhould for this cauſe deſiſt from creating them, that they might not fall : then ſhould the preſcience of God be deceived in foreſeeing that to be, which ſhall never be. Auguſt. alſo doth very well touch this point: Creat ut ſint homines—ſecundum conſilium bonæ voluntatis ſuæ, reparaturus in multis, quod ipſe fecit, & puniturus, quod non fecit

God did create men to repaire according to the counſell of his good will, in them that, which he had made, and to puniſh that, which he made not.

Obiect. 3. If it bee ſo, that God hath caſt lots over every man, and hath already decreed concerning their ſavation or damnation; then all exhortation and preaching, and all endevour to live a godly life, is in vaine: for de unoquoque fiet, ut prædeſtinatus eſt, it ſhall befall every man, as he is predeſtinate. So the Pelagians objected: de perſever. lib. 2. 15.

Anſw. 1. The doctrine of predeſtination doth no more hinder godly endevour and exhortation, than the doctrine of Gods preſcience and foreknowledge: Sicut non deterremur, (ſaith Auguſtine) à confitenda præſcientia Dei, &c. As wee are not terrified, or frayed from confeſſing Gods preſcience, becauſe whether men live well or evill, tales erunt, quales præſcivit Deus, they ſhall bee none other than God foreſaw they ſhould be: ſo, ſaith hee, wee ought not for this cauſe to bee driven from confeſſing predeſtination; Auguſtin. ibid.

2 Auguſtine alſo in another place putteth this example: As (ſaith hee) though the Apoſtle confeſſe, that God worketh in us both the will and the deed, yet hee ceaſeth not every where to exhort us, both to will and worke thoſe things that pleaſe God. Our Saviour Chriſt alſo biddeth us to beleeve in him: Yee beleeve in God, beleeve alſo in mee. Nec tamen ejus falſa eſt ſententia: And yet it is true which our Saviour ſaith, That no man can come unto him, unleſſe his Father draw him: for faith is the gift of God. So men notwithſtanding ought to endevour themſelves to walke in obedience before God, although they be predeſtinate thereunto.

De perſeverãt. lib. 2. cap. 14.

3 Chriſt alſo (ſaith Auguſtine) teaching his Apoſtles to pray, further telleth them, that God knoweth what is needfull for us, before we aske, and yet wee ought to pray notwithſtanding. So although God foreſaw and did predeſtinat the end of every man, yet we muſt exhort and ſtirre up one another to all holineſſe of life, thereby to make ſure our election, as S. Peter ſaith.

2 Pet. 1. 10.

4 I will alſo adjoyne Maſter Philpots learned and godly anſwer: Some (ſaith he) for an extreme refuge in their evill doing run to Gods predeſtination and election, ſaying: If I bee elected of God to ſalvation, I ſhall be ſaved, whatſoever I doe: but ſuch be great tempters of God, and abominable blaſphemers of Gods holy election, and caſt themſelves down from the pinacle of the temple in preſumption, that God may preſerve them by his Angels through predeſtination. Such verily may reckon themſelves to be none of Gods elect children, that will doe evill that good may enſue; whoſe damnation the Apoſtle ſaith, is juſt: Gods predeſtination ought with a ſimple eye to be conſidered, to make us more warily to walke according to Gods word: for this is the end and fruit of our election, That we ſhould be holy and blameleſſe in his ſight: Epiſtol. ad congregat. Chriſtian. pag. 1832.

Epheſ. 1.

Gregory hath an excellent ſaying, which may ſerve as a full anſwer to this objection: as hee is alleaged, Cauſ. 23. qu. 4. c. 21. Obtineri nequaquam poſſunt quæ prædeſtinata non fuerunt, &c. Thoſe things cannot be obtained, which are not predeſtinate: but thoſe things, which holy men effect by their prayer, were predeſtinate to be obtained by prayer: for predeſtination is ſo diſpoſed of God, that they which are elected ſhould come unto it by labour, &c. Wherefore predeſtination doth not take away the meanes, as prayer, inſtruction, exhortation, which tend unto it.

I will here adde the reſolution of Thomas Aquine, who ſetteth downe theſe poſitions of this matter, the queſtion being thus propounded, whether prædeſtination may be helped by the prayers of the Saints: 1 he reſolveth that predeſtination, quoad ordinationem, in reſpect of the ordination and decree, cannot be helped, but only in the execution: as Iacob was predeſtinate, yet he was obtained by the prayers of Iſaak and Rebecca. 2 Yet this is not propter defectum virtutis, for want of any power in God, but becauſe he uſeth, cauſis mediis, meane cauſes, to effect his will. 3 Yet although by prayers, exhortations and other meanes the execution of Gods decree may be furthered, yet can it not be altred and changed or hindred.

1. p. qu. 23. artic. 5.

Obiect. 4. To what end commanded Chriſt that the Goſpell ſhould bee preached to every creature, if it were not Gods meaning that all men ſhould come to the knowledge of the truth, and ſo bee ſaved: otherwiſe the Lord ſhould ſeeme to purpoſe one thing and doe another? Sic Huber. in theſib.

Contra. Firſt, God calleth all men generally by the preaching of the Goſpell, neither is God to bee blamed, if they obey not their calling, which in it ſelfe is ſufficient, but they only are in fault that refuſe it: As S. Ambroſe well ſaith, In aliis prævaluiſſe gratiam, in aliis reſiluiſſe naturam: That in ſome grace prevaileth, in ſome their owne nature reſiſteth, &c. He ſpeaketh of thoſe, to whom the Goſpell is preached lib. 2. de vocat. Gent. cap. 8. Secondly, it followeth not, that becauſe the Goſpell is preached to all, God hath decreed to ſave all: for Chriſt commanded his Apoſtles to preach unto thoſe the Goſpell of peace, that ſhould notwithſtanding neither heare them nor receive it. So Ezechiel is ſent to a people that will not heare. And why may not the Goſpell bee preached in like ſort to many that ſhall periſh? Thirdly, the cauſes therefore why the Goſpell is preached to all, and yet all are not ordained to be ſaved, are theſe two chiefly: firſt, becauſe the elect and the reprobate are mixed together in earth, neither is it knowne unto men, whither every man appertaineth, therefore is the Goſpell offered to all, that ſome might bee ſaved. And it is more agreeable to Gods mercie, that even the reprobate ſhould have the externall meanes of ſalvation offered unto them for the elects ſake among them, than that the elect ſhould be defrauded thereof becauſe of the other. Of this Auguſtine writeth well: Correptio medicinaliter adhibetur, etiamſi ſalus ægrotantis incerta ſit: ut ſi is, qui corripitur ad numerum prædeſtinatorum pertinet, fit ei correptio ſalubre medicamentum; ſi autem non pertinet, fit pænale tormentum: de corrept. grat. cap. 13. The medicine muſt bee given to all, though it be uncertaine who ſhall have their health: that if he that is rebuked bee of the predeſtinate, his chaſtiſement ſhall be healthfull to him; if not, it ſhall bee a penall torment, &c. So then the ſecond reaſon is, that the wicked may bee left inexcuſable, when as the word of God is preached unto them, and they regard it not.

Math. 10. 13.
Ezech. 2. 5.

Huberus here objecteth, theſ. 304. If it bee ſo, that the word of God bee unto ſome the ſavour of death unto death, it were better never to heare it, than that the hearing thereof ſhould be to ſome to their condemnation.

2 Pet. 2. 21.

Contra. 1 It is an abſurd conſequent, that the word ſhould not bee preached at all, becauſe ſome profit not by it: by the ſame reaſon, becauſe ſome in the Sacrament doe eat and drinke their owne damnation, it might bee inferred, that it were good for none to receive it: or becauſe ſome abuſe meat and drinke to gluttonie and drunkenneſſe, that therefore none ſhould eat or drinke. 2 That it were better for the wicked, never to have knowne the way of righteouſneſſe, than after they have knowne it to turne away, &c. as S. Peter ſaith, we grant: but it followeth not, that it were better not to have it knowne at all: It is better, that by the preaching of the Goſpell ſome ſhould bee ſaved, though other bee left without excuſe, than by not preaching, to help to excuſe unbeleevers, none ſhould be ſaved.

Matth. 28. 19.

Object. 5 This objection is not much differing from the former: Seeing that Baptiſme is offered to all: Goe and baptize all nations, grace alſo together with Baptiſme is offered: for God would never have invited all men to Baptiſme, if he would not impart unto them that grace which is ſealed by Baptiſme: Sic Heming. de univerſal. grat. pag. 75.

Mark. 16. 16.
Ioh. 6. 29.
Acts 13. 48.

Contra. 1 That Baptiſme is available only to thoſe that beleeve, the Scripture teſtifieth, Hee that beleeveth, and is baptized, ſhall be ſaved. And to beleeve is the worke of God: And to them only, that are ordained to everlaſting life, is it given to beleeve. Therefore to them only is Baptiſme of efficacie. 2 As before we ſaid of the preaching of the Goſpell, ſo now of Baptiſme: that they are offered to all, that amongſt many, ſuch as are ordained to life, ſhould be ſaved: for it were not meet, that becauſe ſome are found abuſers and prophaners of the Sacraments, therefore they ſhould bee denied to all. 3 If all in Baptiſme are verily partakers of grace, how are not all ſaved? If they anſwer, that through their owne negligence this grace is loſt, which is their only anſwer here, Heming. pag. 75. they ſpeake contrary to the Scripture, which teſtifieth that whom God loveth, hee loveth to the end. And that the gifts of God are without repentance, Rom. 11. But of this more God willing afterward.

Iohn 13. 1.
Rom. 11. 29.

Object. 6 The doctrine of predeſtination, ſay ſome, is a doctrine of deſpaire: for if it bee ſo, that God hath decreed ſome to damnation from the beginning, what comfort now remaineth to thoſe that are in deſpaire, and diſtreſſe of conſcience, if we cannot aſſure them, that the mercy and grace of God is free for all men, and not denied to any?

1 Cor. 3. 2.
De perſever. lib. 2. cap. 16.

Anſw. 1 The doctrine of predeſtination is a true and ſound doctrine, yet not at all times, nor in the hearing of all perſons to be uttered: for ſo Saint Paul ſaith, That hee gave unto ſome milke, not ſtrong meat, for they were not able to beare it. The doctrine of predeſtination is ſtrong meat, and therefore not to be miniſtred to the weake and bruſed conſcience. Hæc una eſt cauſa tacendi verum, (as Auguſtine ſaith) ne pejores faciamus, qui non intelligunt, dum volumus eos, qui intelligunt, facere doctiores: This is one cauſe of concealing the truth, leſt wee make them worſe, that underſtand not, while wee would teach thoſe which are of better capacity, &c. He preſcribeth alſo the manner how predeſtination ſhould bee taught and handled: namely, in the hearing of the faithfull, to intreat only of election: But if any man be diſpoſed likewiſe to touch the other part of reprobation: Non de ipſis, qui in populo audiunt, dicendum eſt per ſecundam perſonam, ſed de aliis ad ipſos per tertiam: He muſt in no wiſe ſpeake in the ſecond perſon to thoſe that are preſent, but of others in their hearing in the third perſon, lib. 2. de perſever. cap. 23.

2 This doctrine notwithſtanding, there is ſufficient place for comfort: If any man doubt of his ſalvation, wee muſt neither build upon a falſe ground, to comfort them; as to beare them in hand, that God hath a purpoſe to ſave all men: nor yet referre them to Gods eternall decree, which is too ſtrong meat for them in that weak eſtate to beare: But as if a man ſhould denie that the fire is hot, or that the Sun ſhineth, we would uſe no better argument to perſwade him, than by experience of the effects, as how the fire burneth, and the Sun giveth light: ſo in this caſe to aſſure a man of ſalvation, we would exhort him to uſe the ſecondary meanes, as faith, repentance, to beleeve in Chriſt, and as the Apoſtle ſaith, to make his election ſure by good works: And by the experience of Gods mercy and goodneſſe, which hee hath felt, to grow up unto the aſſurance of his favour.

3 I will conclude with Auguſtine, who thinketh this doctrine of predeſtination to be a doctrine not of deſpaire and diſtruſt, but of comfort and confidence: Abſit à vobis ideo deſperare de vobis, quoniam ſpem veſtram in ipſo habere jubeamini, non in vobis: An verendum eſt, ne tum de ſe homo deſperet, quando ſpes ejus ponenda demonſtratur in Deo? God forbid that you ſhould deſpaire of your ſelves, becauſe ye are willed to put your truſt in God, & not in your ſelves: Is it to be feared, leſt man ſhould then deſpaire of himſelfe, when he is taught to place his hope and truſt in God? de perſever lib. 2. c. 22.

For this the doctrine of predeſtination teacheth us, that whatſoever is in us, that is good, it neither is of our ſelves, nor yet commeth unto us by chance, but is beſtowed upon us freely, as God in mercie in the beginning had appointed.

Huberus further objecteth thus: If it be ſo that Chriſt died not for all, but only for ſome, then all comfort and conſolation is taken away: as if a man ſhould thus reaſon: Some men are elected to ſalvation in Chriſt, I am a man: Ergo, I ſhall be ſaved. This were a weake argument of comfort, concluding only upon particulars, *Huber.p.*20.97.

Contra. 1 If wee ſhould draw our comfort immediatly from Gods eternall will and decree, our adverſaries muſt needs fall into the ſame ſtraits of particularities: for it is certaine, that in the day of judgement all ſhall not be ſaved, but ſome muſt goe into everlaſting paine, others to eternall life, as God in the beginning had decreed. Wherefore there muſt bee a certaine number of ſuch as are ordained to life. 2 To aſſure our ſelves then of our ſalvation before God, wee muſt not run immediatly unto Gods ſecret decree and counſell, as though by ſome extraordinary ſpeculation or revelation, wee could attaine to the knowledge thereof: but we muſt judge of our election, by the fruits and effects thereof, as our faith, vocation, ſanctification: and this Snecanus ſheweth at large, pag. 466. Our argument then of comfort grounded upon the word of God, is this: Whoſoever beleeveth in Chriſt, ſhall bee ſaved: I beleeve in Chriſt: Ergo, I hope to be ſaved: So then our comfort ariſeth not from any particulars, but from the univerſall promiſes of God made to all thoſe which beleeve. But in the aſſumption of this argument, two things may trouble us: firſt, if Satan ſhall tell us, that we beleeve not, how we may aſſure our ſelves of faith. The remedie againſt this tentation is this: We muſt examine our faith by the fruits thereof: as 1 Ioh. 2. 3. Hereby we are ſure we know him, if we keep his commandements. Neither are wee to bee diſmaied, though wee find in our ſelves ſome contrary motions of feare, doubtfulneſſe, and ſuch like. But though our faith be yet imperfect, we muſt conſider how Chriſt did ſuccour and cheriſh the weake in faith, as it was written of him, that hee ſhould not breake the bruiſed reed, nor quench the ſmoaking flax: as alſo wee muſt pray continually with the Apoſtles, Lord increaſe our faith; and with him in the Goſpell: Lord I beleeve, help my unbeleefe, Mark. 9. The ſecond thing that may trouble us, is, to know how we attaine to faith: for all have not faith, as the Apoſtle ſaith, 2 Theſſ. 3. 2. Our remedy here, is to acknowledge faith, and all other gifts to come from God, not to thinke it ſtandeth in our owne power to beleeve: and therefore by faithfull prayer to ſeeke for this precious gift at Gods hands.

1 Ioh. 2. 3.
Iſay 42. 3.
Luke 17. 5.
Mark. 9. 24.
2 Theſſ. 3. 2.

3 Who ſeeth not then, but that this is a more ſure and ready way unto comfort, as we have ſhewed, than to beare men in hand, that God would have all men to be ſaved, and that Chriſt died for all? So their argument of comfort ſtandeth thus: Chriſt died for all, even for thoſe that ſhall be damned, therefore he died for me. What comfort now can a troubled conſcience reape by the death of Chriſt; ſeeing that notwithſtanding hee may bee damned: and that Chriſt hath done as much for thoſe that ſhall bee damned, as for other? May not the diſtreſſed conſcience juſtly ſay unto ſuch, Miſerable comforters are yee, and phyſitians of no value? Iob 15.4. And thus farre of their arguments, and objections, that do maintaine the univerſality of the grace of God. Now we will come, by evident teſtimonies of Scripture, and other effectuall reaſons to eſtabliſh and make knowne the truth.

Iob 13. 4.

That Chriſt died only for the elect.

OVr ſentence then is this, that whereas all men were by nature the children of wrath, and like to periſh in themſelves, God from the reſt hath according to his good pleaſure elected ſome, to whom he hath appointed Chriſt Jeſus to be their Mediator and Redeemer. And here we are to conſider, firſt the beginning of election: ſecondly, the progreſſe thereof: laſtly, the end. The beginning, in that God according to his good pleaſure, elected his in Chriſt before the foundation of the world. The progreſſe, in that he hath given the elect unto Chriſt to be ſaved, and redeemed by him: He hath predeſtinate us to be adopted through Ieſus Chriſt. The end is, that whom hee hath predeſtinate, (that is the beginning) called, juſtified, (there is the progreſſe) them alſo he hath glorified, he hath purpoſed to bring them to glory: that is the end. That now Chriſt only was given to die for the company of the elect: not that it is not ſufficient for the whole world in it ſelfe, but becauſe the efficacie and benefit of Chriſts death is only applied by faith unto the beleevers: and faith only is of the elect. That therefore Chriſt died only for the elect, it remaineth now to be proved. Our arguments we will diſtribute into three places: firſt wee will produce direct places of Scripture for our purpoſe. Secondly, reaſons grounded upon Scripture. Thirdly, we will ſhew the abſurditie of the adverſaries opinion.

Epheſ. 1. 4. 5.
Rom. 8. 30.

First, our evident teſtimonies out of Scripture are theſe: Firſt, Ioh. 10. 15. Chriſt layeth downe his life for his ſheep: the elect only are his ſheep: Ergo.

Argum. 1.
Ioh. 10. 15.

Huberus denieth the aſſumption: ſaying, that all men are Gods ſheep, and inheritance, who if afterward they ſtray away from the Lords ſheepfold, the fault is in themſelves, theſ. 1069.

Contra. But our Saviour ſpeaketh of ſuch ſheep, as doe heare his voyce, and follow him, and they will not follow a ſtranger, verſ. 5. They therefore that fall away, & follow any other, are not the ſheep of Chriſts fold: therefore for ſuch ſheep only hee died, as finally are his: thoſe are the elect only.

2 Chriſt

Ioh. 11. 52. Ioh. 10. 16. 2 Chriſt died not for the nation only, that is, of the Jewes, but, That he might gather together in one the children of God that were ſcattered. But the elect only are the children of God: of whom he ſpeaketh againe, namely, of theſe diſperſed and ſcattered children: Other ſheep I have alſo, which are not of this fold, them alſo I muſt bring, &c. Theſe are the predeſtinate, as Auguſtine ſaith: Erant prædeſtinati, nondum congregati: They were predeſtinate, though not yet gathered together: Auguſtin. ſerm. 50. de verbis Domini in Iohan.

Ioh. 15. 13. Rom. 5. 10. 3 Ioh. 15. 13. Chriſt died only for his friends; the elect only, and ſuch as ſhall bee ſaved, only are the friends of Chriſt. And if that place of the Apoſtle bee objected, That Chriſt died for us, when wee were yet enemies: Wee anſwer with Bernards diſtinction, Serm. 10. de Pſalm. Qui habitat: Chriſtus ſecundum tempus pro impiis & inimicis mortuus eſt, ſecundum prædeſtinationem autem pro fratribus & amicis: Chriſt according to the diſpenſation of time died for the wicked and his enemies: but in reſpect of his predeſtination, for his friends and brethren.

Epheſ. 5. 26. verſ. 23. 4 Saint Paul teſtifieth that Chriſt gave himſelfe for his Church, that he might ſanctifie it, &c. and hee is the Saviour of his body, verſ. 23. But the elect only, and ſuch as ſhall be ſaved, are members only of his body: Ergo, for ſuch only he died.

Contra. Huberus anſwereth, that the Church is here taken for the whole aſſemblie of beleevers, and unbeleevers, who all were ſanctified and waſhed with the blood of Chriſt, but afterward are defiled againe by their unbeleefe: Huber. theſ. 1088.

verſ. 27. Anſw. That Church which Chriſt ſanctifieth, and cleanſeth with his blood, he alſo glorifieth: to make it a glorious Church (ſaith the Apoſtle) without ſpot or wrinckle, verſ. 27. But the elect only and predeſtinate unto life ſhall be glorified: Ergo, they only are the true Church, and lively members of Chriſts body. Secondly, our reaſons and arguments grounded upon the word of God, are theſe, and ſuch like which follow.

Ioh. 3. 16. Matth. 13. 11. Acts 13. 46. 1 Chriſt died only for thoſe that ſhould beleeve in him: But it is not given to all to beleeve in Chriſt, except only to the elect, which are ordained to life: Ergo, for them only Chriſt died. That faith is only of the elect, it is thus proved: firſt, To you it is given to know the ſecrets of the kingdome, to them it is not given: this knowledge then is not given to all. Contra. The meaning is, not that God in his eternall decree had ordained knowledge unto ſome, and denied it to others, but that the miniſtery of the word being offered to all, ſome through their incredulity refuſed the ſame, and ſo their hearts were juſtly hardened: as the Apoſtle ſaith elſewhere, That they did put away from them the word of God, which it was neceſſary ſhould have been firſt ſpoken unto them, and ſo judged themſelves unworthy of everlaſting life. The reſt, which did not abuſe their naturall gifts of hearing and underſtanding, but willingly gave eare unto Chriſt, had power to beleeve in Chriſt, and to continue therein: Sic Huber. theſ. 826. Snecan. p. 522.

2 Theſſ. 2. 10. Matth. 11. 26. Anſw. 1 That they which love not the truth, are juſtly given over of God to a reprobate ſenſe, we grant, as S. Paul ſheweth: Becauſe they would not receive the love of the truth, God ſhall ſend them ſtrong deluſions, &c. 2 Yet men are not ſo the cauſe to themſelves of their beleefe, as they are of their incredulitie: but the cauſe and beginning is of God, as our Saviour teſtifieth, It is ſo, O Father, becauſe thy good pleaſure was ſuch. The cauſe then why ſome underſtand the myſterie of the kingdome, is not in their willingneſſe, but in the good pleaſure of God: It is not a gift equally offered to all, which all may receive, if they will; it is given to you, ſaith Chriſt, it is not given to them.

To this purpoſe S. Ambroſe: Qui veniunt Dei auxilio diriguntur, qui non veniunt ſua poteſtate reluctantur: They that come are directed by Gods help, they which come not, by their owne power doe reſiſt, lib. 2. de vocat. Gent. c. 9. And againe, Tales fuerunt, qui ſunt attracti, quales hi, qui in ſua duritie ſunt relicti, ſed illis tribuit gratia ſtupenda quod voluit, iſtis retribuit veritas juſta, quod debuit, &c. They were the ſame, that are drawne, which they were, that remained in their hardnes: but grace giveth unto them, as God would; juſtice rendreth to the other as they deſerve. Wherefore though a man reſiſting the calling of grace, is the cauſe why hee beleeveth not, yet in them which obey their calling, it is of the grace of God that they beleeve.

Ioh. 10. 26. 2 Againe, Chriſt ſaith, You beleeve not, for you are not of my ſheep. It is not therefore given to all to beleeve in Chriſt, but to his ſheep only, that is, the elect, to whom he giveth eternall life, verſ. 28.

Act. 13. 48. Thirdly, As many as were ordained to eternall life, beleeved: To beleeve therefore is given only to the elect, which are ordained unto life.

Contra. Huberus thus expoundeth this place: they beleeved, which were ordained to life, that is, which followed the order appointed of God, whereby men ſhould be ſaved, that is, by the preaching of the Goſpell: for this, ſaith he, is the ordinance of God, that they that beleeve the Goſpell ſhould be ſaved, Huber. theſ. 834.

Anſw. 1. If this bee the meaning, that they beleeved that were ordained, that is, followed Gods ordinance, which was to beleeve, it is all one to ſay, they beleeved, that beleeved; and ſo there ſhould be a needleſſe repetition of the ſame thing. 2 If we underſtand it of faith and beleefe, yet it includeth an act of the ordainer, and they paſſively are ordained to beleeve: whereupon it will enſue, that they only beleeved that were ordained to beleeve; for whereas they aſcribe unto man an active power to beleeve; but this, to be ordained, is active in God, and paſſive in man, it cannot be underſtood ſimply of the act of beleefe, but of the ordinance of God before going. 3 Though God as well ordaine daine the meanes, as the end, to the which the meanes doe leade; yet becauſe the end is here directly mentioned, namely, to eternall life; wee are thereby directed to underſtand the ordinance of the end, rather, or as well as of the meane: ſo that this muſt be the ſenſe, they that were ordained, that is, appointed of God to be ſaved eternally, beleeved: life eternall is the end, beleefe in Chriſt is the meane, the ordinance or foreappointment of God is the cauſe or beginning. Other not ſatisfying themſelves with the former expoſition, have found out a new: As many as were ordained, &c. that is, many of the Gentiles, according to the ordinance of God, beleeved. So they underſtand this word (quotquot, as many as) not of their particular perſons that beleeved, but by way of diſtribution, of every kinde and ſort of men preſent: that is, even the Gentiles alſo as well as the Jewes (as God had foreordained) beleeved: for it is not like, ſay they, that all, in the citie of Autioch, which ſhould bee ſaved, were at this time converted, but ſome at one time, ſome at another: Sic Hemming. p. 23. Snecan. p. 527.

Anſw. First, they now are conſtrained to uſe that diſtinction, which they will not allow unto us: for whereas wee interpret S. Pauls ſaying, God would have all men to be ſaved, of all ſorts of men, they utterly reject that ſenſe, and yet are driven here to uſe it themſelves. Secondly, yet the word there uſed, πάντες, omnes, will better beare that ſenſe, than the word ὅσοι, quotquot, (as many as) which wee read here: for the word (omnis) all, ſometime in Scripture ſignifieth, not every particular, but every kinde, as Decimatis omne olus, You tithe every herb, that is, every manner of herb. But whereſoever you ſhall reade, ὅσος, ὅσα, quiſquis, quotquot, (as many as) it includeth every particular, as, Sell all that ever thou haſt: As many as the Lord your God ſhall call: As many as had lands, ſold them: that is, every one: and ſo muſt it be taken here. Thirdly, it cannot be underſtood here of every kinde, that is, both Jewes and Gentiles: for they were all Gentiles that beleeved here, the Jewes openly reſiſted the Apoſtles. Fourthly, to their reaſon wee anſwer, that it is not neceſſary to reſtraine this ſpeech, As many as were ordained to life, beleeved, to that preſent time: but as S. Luke ſaith, God added from day to day to the Church ſuch as ſhould be ſaved: ſo this may be ſpoken indefinitly, that by the preaching of the Apoſtle, ſo many firſt and laſt beleeved, as ſhould bee ſaved. And yet if wee apply it to the preſent auditory then, not to the whole citie, (for all the citie heard him not at once) wee know nothing to the contrary, but that every one of them that was ſaved in that aſſembly, at that inſtant beleeved.

Luke 11. 42. Luke 18. 22. Acts 2. 39. Acts 4. 34. Acts 2. 47.

Argum. 2. Ioh. 17. 9.

Our ſecond argument out of Scripture is this: for whom Chriſt is a Redeemer, for them alſo hee is a Mediator and advocate: but hee is an advocate only for the elect, not for the reprobate: I pray not for the world, but for thoſe which thou haſt given me: Ergo, Chriſt by his death only redeemed the elect.

Contra. 1. Huberus anſwereth that Chriſt prayeth not for the world, that is, that the works and endevours of the wicked and unbeleevers ſhould be approved: yet ſaith hee, Pro mundo orandum eſt, ut convertatur: We muſt pray for the world, that it may be converted: theſ. 925.

Anſw. 1. Chriſt ſo farre forth prayeth not for the world, as hee prayeth for his; but for his owne he prayeth, that they may bee ſaved: verſ. 24. I will that they which thou haſt given me, to be with mee where I am: Therefore in that ſenſe he prayeth not for the world, that it ſhould bee converted or ſaved: and therefore ſeeing the world hath no part in Chriſts mediation, and interceſſion, neither have they any benefit by his redemption.

verſ. 24.

2 Chriſt prayeth only for thoſe which were given him out of the world, verſ. 6. 9. But all the world was not given unto Chriſt to be ſaved; for how can the world bee given out of the world? Againe, Chriſt giveth glory, that is, eternall life to thoſe that are given him, verſ. 22. but the whole world hath not eternall life, but thoſe only that are elected thereunto: Ergo, the world is not given Chriſt to be ſaved, neither doth he pray for them.

Ioh. 17. 6. 9. verſ. 22.

3 Though we in charity may pray for the converſion of Turks, Jewes, Infidels, out of the world: yet it followeth not that Chriſt did pray for the world: for he knew who they were that ſhould be ſaved, and ſo doe not we, and therefore we are to hope the beſt, even of thoſe which are in the world.

4 Origen thus expoundeth this place, Hom. 9. in Levitic. Non exorat Chriſtus pro his, &c. pro illis exorat tantum qui ſunt ſors Domini: Chriſt prayeth not for them, &c. but only for thoſe which are the Lords lot or portion.

Contra. 2. Hemmingius anſwereth, that by the world here we muſt underſtand the perverſe and obſtinate company of the Jewes, which had already wilfully refuſed grace offered unto them, and ſo had committed ſin againſt the holy Ghoſt, for thoſe Chriſt prayeth not, pag. 42.

Mark. 3. 30.

Anſw. That Chriſt by the world underſtandeth not only the wicked of that time, but all unbeleevers to the end of the world, it is thus ſhewed: As they are, which are given Chriſt, for whom hee prayeth; ſo is the world to be underſtood, for them which hee prayeth not: but by thoſe that are given him he underſtandeth all beleevers, not only at that time, but to the end of the world. Therefore by the world our Saviour meaneth all unbeleevers whatſoever; and not the obſtinate only of that time.

Ioh. 17. 20, 24.

Cont. 3. Snecanus de prædeſtinat. p. 660. ſaith, that by the world Chriſt underſtandeth thoſe that do contemne the benefit of Chriſts death, as, If the world hate you, it hated me before you: and ſo they exclude themſelves from grace offered in Chriſt, not that any ſimply are excluded before their unbeleefe.

Ioh. 15. 18.

Anſw. Firſt, it is true, that there are none elected in the eternall counſell of God, but are ordained in time to beleeve, nor none excluded, but doe afterward by their owne malice and frowardnes juſtly exclud themſelves from beleefe: yet it is certaine, that the number and company of beleevers is foreſeene and preordained of God, and ſo conſequently of the other alſo: as it may thus appeare: Chriſt praying for thoſe that ſhall beleeve in him, verſ. 20. ſaith, verſ. 22. I have given them the glory,&c. and verſ. 24. I will, that they which thou haſt given me,&c. They which as yet beleeved not, but ſhould beleeve, are already given unto Chriſt, and even now glorified: what is this elſe, but that they are preordained of God, which ſhould beleeve in Chriſt, and that they are already given unto him, and glorified in the purpoſe of God? Secondly, wee will adjoyne alſo the teſtimony of Auguſtine: Eſt mundus, de quo ſcriptum eſt, ne cum mundo hoc damnemur, pro iſto mundo non rogat; neque enim quò ſit prædeſtinatus, ignorat: eſt mundus, de quo Apoſtolus, Deus erat in Chriſto mundum ſibi reconcilians, pro iſto mundo rogat, &c. Tractat. in Iohan. 110. There is a world, of the which it is written, that we bee not damned with the world: for this world Chriſt prayeth not; for hee was not ignorant to what end it was predeſtinate: there is a world, of the which the Apoſtle ſaith, God was in Chriſt reconciling the world, &c. for this world Chriſt prayeth: Ergo, for this world Chriſt only died.

1 Cor. 11. 32.

Argum. 3. Ioh. 17. 19. Our third argument is this: Chriſt only died for thoſe, to whom the benefit of his death verily and indeed is applyed, and which find life by his death: For their ſakes ſanctifie I my ſelfe (that is, to bee an acceptable ſacrifice upon the croſſe) that they alſo may bee ſanctified. And verſ. 2. Chriſt giveth eternall life to all that were given him: But all the world is not ſanctified, or regenerate by Chriſt, nor yet commeth to eternall life, but only thoſe that ſhall bee ſaved: Ergo, Chriſt died not for the whole world, but for the elect only, that ſhall bee ſaved. Neither can it be anſwered, that Chriſt died for all, becauſe all may, if they will, beleeve; and ſo bee ſaved: for Chriſt ſpeaketh not of a power or poſſibility only to bee ſanctified, and ſo ſaved, but of an actuall ſanctification, and ſalvation: they are verily ſanctified, for whom Chriſt ſanctifieth himſelfe, and he giveth eternall life indeed to all them that are given him: wherefore ſeeing that all men are not ſanctified, nor brought to eternall life, but ſuch as are indeed ordained to ſalvation; it followeth, that for them only Chriſt died.

Argum. 4. Chriſt died only for thoſe that are appointed to ſalvation, for the death of Chriſt is a ſubordinate meane for the ſalvation of thoſe, whom God would have ſaved: But all men in the world are not appointed to ſalvation, therefore Chriſt died not for all. It will be anſwered, that it is Gods will, that all men ſhould bee ſaved by Chriſt, with this condition, ſo that they beleeve in him, and that God hath not made any ſpeciall election and ſeparation of ſome from the reſt, which ſhould bee ſaved, but that indifferently all men are comprehended under Gods conditionall decree of election, that is, as many as ſhall beleeve. If then wee can prove out of the word of God, that Gods election unto life is not conditionall, but abſolute, in ſetting a certaine number apart, who only ſhould have power to beleeve, and ſo only be ſaved by Chriſt, and none beſide, then it will appeare manifeſtly, that for them Chriſt only died.

Gods election abſolute, not conditionall.

1 Our firſt place to prove an abſolute and particular election of ſome only unto life, is, that Many are called, but few choſen: which place ſheweth, that although the externall meanes of ſalvation bee offered to many, yet not all of them, but ſome only are elected and choſen unto life.

Matth. 22. 14.

Huberus anſwereth, that there is a generall election, and ſpeciall: the generall election is of all which are called to the kingdome of God, and outwardly profeſſe obedience: the ſpeciall election is of thoſe which doe obey their calling, and indeed perſevere and continue in the faith to the end, theſ. 734. So then his meaning is, that few are elected, not in reſpect of any election and ſeparation made in the counſell and decree of God, but becauſe ſome amongſt many perſevere to the end.

Contra. Firſt, there can bee no ſuch generall election: for what choice is there, when all indifferently are received? An election therefore implieth a receiving of ſome, and a refuſing of others: all therefore cannot bee elected. This were alſo to confound vocation, and election: Many are called, but not many are choſen: to ſay therefore that many are choſen, where Chriſt ſaith, A few only are choſen, were to contradict his words. Secondly, if the ſpeciall election depend upon mans perſeverance and continuance, not this rather upon the other; if ſome are ſaid to be elected, becauſe they perſevere, and not rather to perſevere becauſe they are elected; then are men the cauſe of their owne election, and they chuſe God firſt. But Chriſt ſaith contrary, you have not choſen me, but I have choſen you: and S. Iohn ſaith, not that we loved God, but he loved us firſt. Saint Paul alſo ſaith, Who hath ſeparated thee? 1 Cor. 4. 7. It is God that electeth and ſeparateth men one from another, and diſtributeth unto them his gifts. And againe, in the parable, Is it not lawfull for me to doe as I will with mine owne? The election therefore of ſome dependeth not upon their own will, but upon the good will and pleaſure of God.

Ioh. 15.
1 Ioh. 4. 10.
1 Cor. 4. 7.
Matth. 20. 15.

Matth. 20. 23. 2 The ſecond place, The kingdome of God ſhall be given unto them, for whom it is prepared of my father: The kingdome of God then is not prepared for all, but for ſome. S. Paul alſo ſheweth, That there are veſſels of wrath prepared to deſtruction, and veſſels of mercy prepared unto glory: All therefore are not veſſels of mercy, neither are all prepared to glory.

Rom. 9. 22.

3 Snecanus anſwereth, pag. 602. that theſe places prove not any particular exception or reſtraint of ſome certaine men prepared to glory, or of others to deſtruction, but that generally and indifferently, ly, the kingdome of God is prepared for all that ſhall beleeve, and they that beleeve not are prepared by their owne incredulity to deſtruction.

Contra. Wee alſo grant, that none but beleevers are prepared to glory: but wee make beleefe a conſequent and effect of their election and preparation to glory: ſo that the number of beleevers is as certaine before God, as certainly he hath decreed who ſhall be ſaved: for I aske, whence commeth it that wee have faith? it is not of our ſelves, but it is the gift of God. And, it is the worke of God to beleeve. Epheſ. 2. 9. Ioh. 6. 29. If faith then be Gods gift, how is it that all have not faith? but becauſe God giveth it not to all. And why is it not given to all? but that God in mercie hath choſen ſome, whom he purpoſeth to ſave in Chriſt: And unto theſe only faith is given. If yee ſay, God giveth faith to all, but all receive it not; then is Gods will reſiſted: for if he would have all men beleeve, and they will not; then doth the will of man fruſtrate Gods will.

Hubertus anſwereth that all men are elected and adopted in Chriſt, theſ. 748. And that God giveth faith, converteth the heart, illuminateth, worketh effectually in all that are ſo elected, and made the veſſels of mercie, theſ. 867. But yet ſo that the veſſels of honour thus prepared of God, may bee made the veſſels of diſhonour, theſ. 903. So the ſame veſſels are prepared of God to honour, of themſelves and Satan to deſtruction, theſ. 870.

Contra. Firſt, thus it ſhall come to paſſe, that the veſſels of honour ſhall be prepared to deſtruction, which is contrary to the text alleaged, That the kingdome of heaven ſhall bee given unto them for whom it is prepared: But by his ſaying, they that are prepared for it ſhall not have it. Secondly, by this meanes alſo Satan is made ſtronger than God: for whom he prepareth to glory, the other prepareth to deſtruction. But Chriſt ſaith otherwiſe, none is able to plucke them out of mine hand, Ioh. 10. 28.

3 The third place: They only are ordained to life, that are given to Chriſt: Ioh. 17. 2. Chriſt giveth eternall life to all that are given him: Ioh. 17. 2. but a certaine number taken out of the world, not the whole world is given to Chriſt, verſ. 6. thou gaveſt them me out of the world, thine they were, &c. Ergo, the number is certaine and definite before God, of them that ſhall be ſaved.

Snecanus anſwereth: Firſt, Chriſt ſpeaketh not here of eternall election, but of ſuch as were given him out of the world to be his Apoſtles, of which number Iudas was one, who was given unto Chriſt, and yet periſhed: but they that by eternall election are given unto Chriſt, periſh not, pag. 724.

Contra. Firſt, that Chriſt ſpeaketh of thoſe that were given him eternally, it is plaine; becauſe, to them Chriſt giveth eternall life, verſ. 2. he glorifieth them, verſ. 22. he will have them to bee where he is, verſ. 24. Ioh. 17. 22. 24. But ſuch are eternally elected. Secondly, though Iudas may be ſaid in ſome ſenſe to be given to Chriſt in reſpect of his Apoſtleſhip; yet was hee not given as the reſt of the Apoſtles: for of them Chriſt ſaith, that they kept his word, verſ. 6. that hee was glorified in them, verſ. 10. they were not of the world, verſ. 14. But Iudas neither kept Chriſts word, neither yet was Chriſt glorified in him; and he was of the world: therefore they were given eternally to Chriſt, though Iudas was not.

Snecanus. Secondly, though we underſtand here eternall election, whereby ſome were given unto Chriſt, yet it implieth not a ſpeciall exception and choice of ſome perſons, but that all indifferently were given unto Chriſt, that ſhould beleeve in him: Snecan. ibid.

Contra. Firſt, Chriſt ſaying, the men which thou gaveſt me out of the world, aſſigneth ſome ſpeciall perſons that were given unto him, namely his Apoſtles, as it is cleere by the text: And if ſome particular perſons were given unto him, why may there not bee a particular aſſignement, and cogniſance alſo before God of the reſt that are given unto him? Secondly, where Chriſt ſaith, ſpeaking of his Apoſtles, thine they were, and thou gaveſt them me, verſ. 6. it ſheweth an abſolute election before God, Ioh. 17. 6. 8. without any reſpect of their faith: for firſt, Chriſt ſaith, they are thine, that is, by election; and then they are given to him, to know him, and beleeve in him, verſ. 8.

4 The foruth place: Whoſe names are in the booke of life: Whoſe names are not written in the booke Philip. 4. 3. of life from the foundation of the world: Apocal. 17. 8. Therefore ſome were elected in the beginning before God, ſome not elected.

Hubertus anſwereth that all are elected in Chriſt, and written in the booke of life, but with a condition; ſo that they beleeve, and continue in faith: whereupon it commeth to paſſe, that they which beleeve not, doe loſe their ſalvation, and ſo are as not written in that booke, but are raſed out of it, theſ. 917.

Puccius alſo anſwereth to the ſame effect, that not to be written in the booke of life muſt bee underſtood poſitively, not privatively, that is, they are written and declared through their contumacie or contempt worthie of damnation: ration. 96.

Cont. 1. The text is, They are not written in the booke of life from the foundation of the world: which firſt overthroweth Hubertus anſwer, that ſaith, they were written, but after raſed out: for they were not written from the foundation of the world, not from the beginning, that is, never.

2 Secondly, it meeteth with the other cavill: for in that they were not written from the foundation, &c. it ſheweth, that they were ſhut out of the booke of life, before their contumacie or infidelity appeared; and therefore their contumacie which appeared in the world, could not be the cauſe of their names not writing in the booke of life, which was done before the foundation of the world: And thus much of our reaſons and arguments deduced out of Scripture.

Laſtly, that Chriſt died only for the elect, this evidence wee have of antiquitie. 1 Origen. hom. 9. Levit. alleaged before, affirmeth, that Chriſt prayeth only, pro illis, qui ſunt ſors Domini; for them, that are the Lords lot or portion: Homil. 1. in Cantic. Eccleſiam cœtum omnium adverte ſanctorum: By the Church underſtand the company of all Saints. If the Saints only make the Church, and Chriſt died only for his Church, Epheſ. 5. 25. then conſequently he died only for the Saints.

The elect only are the ſheep of Chriſt, as Auguſtine ſaith, De ovibus iſtis, nec lupus rapit, nec fur tollit, nec latro interficit: Of theſe ſheep, neither the woolfe ſnatcheth, nor the theefe taketh, nor the robber killeth, Tract. 48. in Ioann.

12 Magiſt. ſententiar. lib. 3. diſtinct. 19. g. Chriſtus omnes fideles per mortem reconciliavit: Chriſt reconciled the faithfull by his death: *diſt. 31. d. 14 We want not here the conſent of other reformed Churches: Confeſſ. Helvet. former, chap. 11. Chriſt hath reconciled to his heavenly father all the faithfull, and purged their ſinnes, &c. but faith is only of the elect: as in the ſame confeſſ. the latter, chap. 10. Chriſt hath predeſtinate the Saints, whom he will ſave in Chriſt. And chap. 15. God alone of his power doth give faith to the elect,—as S. Luke witneſſeth, as many as were ordained to life beleeved, &c. Thus then the argument ſtandeth, Chriſt died only for the faithfull, and ſuch as beleeve in him; but the elect only have faith: Ergo, for them only Chriſt died.

15 The preſent Æthiopike Church putteth theſe two together, ſpeaking of Chriſtian parents and their children: Electi ſunt & conſecrati ex corporis & ſanguinis noſtri Ieſu Chriſti communicatione: They are elect and conſecrate by the communication of the body and blood of our Lord Ieſus Chriſt.

The

The third generall Argument, againſt the univerſall and confuſed communitie of Redemption by Chriſt, drawne from the manifold inconveniences and abſurdities, which neceſſarily enſue and follow upon this opinion.

ABſurdum 1. Firſt in affirming that Chriſt dyed univerſally for all that ſhould beleeve, and not for any ſpeciall elected ſort, they conſequently doe hold, that God ſpecially and particularly elected none unto ſalvation, but onely in generall, and indifferently all that ſhould beleeve. And thus in effect they take away predeſtination, making it to be a confuſed and conditionall decree of God to ſave whomſoever: This we are then to prove, that Gods election is certaine and definite, and that he knoweth and decreeth the number of the choſen.

Firſt, we reaſon thus, whatſoever God did fore-ſee, that he was to doe in the world, that alſo he decreed and ordained: Some things he fore-ſeeth only, namely ſuch things as are done in the world, and not by him, as evill and ſinfull works: but whatſoever God doth in the world, he both fore-ſaw and decreed: as Auguſtine ſaith, Prædeſtinatione ea Deus præſcierat, quæ erat facturus, præſcire autem poteſt, quæ non eſt facturus: God in predeſtinating did fore-ſee, that is, did both predeſtinate and fore-ſee, whatſoever he was to doe in the world; but he onely fore-ſaw the things that he was not to doe, as all ſins whatſoever, *lib.2.de perſeverant.cap.*10. But God in the beginning did fore-ſee the particular end of every man in the world: The Lord knoweth who are his: that is, he knoweth the definite and certaine number of the elect: as Auguſtine alſo witneſſeth, Non temerè quenquam creat Deus, aut quid de illis boni operetur ignoret: God createth no man raſhly, neither is ignorant to what good uſe or purpoſe he hath made them, *cont.Iulian.lib.*5.*cap.*3. Ergo, God hath defined and decreed the particular number of ſuch as ſhall be ſaved.

2 Tim.2.19.

And for better proofe of the propoſition: firſt, we ſay further, that ſeeing the knowledge and will of God, are infinite, as he himſelfe; and that the attributes of God, receive neither magis vel minus, more ore leſſe, his will is not greater than his knowledge, nor this more ample than the other, in their proper objects: hereupon it followeth, that ſeeing God by his knowledge knoweth all things, which are to be knowne, ſo by his will he decreeth all things that doe fall under his decree, namely, ſuch things as are good, and to his glory: ſuch is the particular election of thoſe that are ſaved: Ergo, by him it is decreed. 2 Further, there can be but two kindes of things, which are without the compaſſe of Gods decree, either what he knoweth not, or what he doth not; of the firſt ſort there is none, becauſe God knoweth all things; of the ſecond, are all evill and ſinfull works, which God hath no part in: But the particular election of men, is neither unknowne nor unwrought by God, but both knowne of him, and wrought by him: Ergo, alſo decreed. 3 The particular end of the elect dependeth either of ſome fatall neceſſitie, ſome accidentall chance, or of the will of man, or it ſtandeth by Gods everlaſting decree: there can be aſſigned no other cauſe: Not the firſt, for that were to tie God unto ſecondarie cauſes, for ſuch was the ſtoicall deſtinie; not the ſecond, for that were to overthrow Gods providence, by the which all things are governed, and not by chance: not the third, which were to advance the creature above his Creator: and S. Paul ſaith, It is not of the willer, nor the runner, &c. Ergo, Gods ſpeciall and definite decree muſt ſtand: As Auguſtine alſo concludeth: Certè hic, ubi nulla eſt fati immobilitas, nulla fortunæ temeritas, nulla perſonæ dignitas, quid reſtat niſi miſericordiæ & veritatis profunditas? Certainly in this caſe, where neither things are governed by fatall neceſſitie, nor by raſh unadviſed chance, what other cauſe remaineth than the profunditie of Gods mercie and truth? *Cont.Iulian.*6.cap 5. Fourthly, it skilleth not, concerning the matter in hand, namely, the particular and perſonall election of thoſe that ſhall be ſaved, whether we urge Gods preſcience onely or predeſtination: for if God did onely fore-ſee in particular, who, and how many, and of what condition, ſhould beleeve in Chriſt, and be ſaved; and that as God fore-ſaw, ſo it muſt be, that the ſame, ſo many, no other, no more ſhall beleeve, than God fore-ſaw; then muſt the number of the elect and beleevers be as certaine, definite and determined, as if they yeelded to Gods decree herein: wherefore they muſt either doubt of Gods preſcience, or confeſſe a certaine determination of the number of the elect.

Rom. 9. 16.

That there is a certaine and definite number of the elect.

Secondly, we have direct places of Scripture for particular election: Chriſt calleth his ſheepe by name: they are all knowne particularly, and aſſigned to ſalvation as by name: The Apoſtles were perſonally elected of God, and given unto Chriſt: and as ſome of the elect be, ſo are the reſt, for there is one condition of them all. S. Paul ſpeaking of certaine perſons his fellow labourers, amongſt whom he nameth Clement, ſaith, Their names are written in the booke of life: Ergo, they were ſpecially and particularly elected. Further, the Scripture ſaith, that God calleth the ſtarres of the skie by their names; how much more the ſons of men, the children of ſalvation are particularly knowne unto him: and if the haires of their head are numbred, much more themſelves.

Iohn 10.3.

Iohn 17. 6.

Philip.4.3.

The Preacher alſo ſaith: I know that whatſoever God ſhall doe, it ſhall be for ever: to it can no man adde, and from it can none diminiſh: But the election of ſuch as ſhall be ſaved is one of Gods works: Ergo, to it can no man adde, or take from it, and ſo conſequently the number of the elect is certaine and determined:

Eccleſ.3.14.

mined: But if Gods election were left at large for all, then is it in mans power to adde unto it, or take from it, as they are many, or few that apprehend and lay hold of their election.

Rom.9.13. Thirdly, we urge that place of the Apoſtle: I have loved Iacob, and hated Eſau: which the Apoſtle referreth to the purpoſe of Gods free election before the children were borne, or had either done good or evill, verſ. 11. Hence we conclude, that Gods election is not generall and indefinite, but particular and perſonall.

First, it is here anſwered, that the particular perſons of Eſau and Iacob are not here underſtood, but that they are types of two people, the one of the Iſraelites, of whom Meſsiah ſhould come; the other of the Idumeans: that two people are here ſignified, their reaſons are theſe: Firſt, the Lord ſaith to Gen.24.23. Rebecca, two nations are in thy wombe: Secondly, the elder ſhall ſerve the younger, which was accompliſhed in their poſteritie, for Iacob in his owne perſon ſubmitted himſelfe to Eſau, Huber.theſ. 675.Snecan p.565. Thirdly, theſe words, Iacob have I loved, and hated Eſau, were uttered by the Prophet Malachy, about 1400. yeeres after the birth of the children, and therefore it cannot be, that the Prophet ſhould underſtand onely the perſons of Iacob and Eſau, that were dead ſo long before, Snecan.p.566. Fourthly, becauſe S. Paul ſpeaking of Iſmael and Iſaac, Galath.4. uſeth the word type or allegorie, in like manner Eſau and Iacob may be ſet forth for types in this place, Snecan.533.

The example of Eſau and Jacob, belong to the decree of Gods eternall election and rejection.

Contra* 1. to admit that in Iacob and Eſau two people are prefigured, yet it followeth not, that their perſons are to be excluded: for whatſoever was fore-tolde of their poſteritie, it was firſt and in part true in them: As where it was ſaid, Two nations are in thy wombe: Iacob and Eſau were not bare types of two nations, but the beginners and progenitors, and two nations were even now in their loynes: The elder ſhall ſerve the younger: ſo Eſau ſold unto Iacob his birth-right, and reſigned unto him in his owne perſon the ſoveraigneſhip. So in like manner, where God ſaith, Iacob have I loved, and hated Eſau. Firſt, this diſtinction of love and hatred appeared in Iacob and Eſau, and then in their poſteritie. Secondly, there are two ſorts of types, there is, typus hiſtoricus, ſeu factus, an hiſtoricall type which was done, typus poeticus ſeu fictus, a deviſed and invented type. In types of the ſecond kinde, that which is prefigured is not neceſſarie to be firſt true in the type: as Chriſt for the ſuddainneſſe of his comming is compared to a thiefe, though the type in all reſpects properly agree not unto him: In types of the firſt kinde, firſt, the example muſt be true, then the thing exemplified: as the 1 Cor.10.11. old Iſraelites that were puniſhed for their fornication, are types and examples to admoniſh us, that we commit not fornication as they did, and be puniſhed likewiſe with them. So Iſaac and Iſmael are ſet forth as types, Galath.4. but firſt the thing exemplified by them is true in the types: As verſ.29.
Gal.4.29. As then he that was borne after the fleſh perſecuted him that was borne after the ſpirit, ſo it is now: after the ſame manner Iacob and Eſau are ſet forth as examples, the one of Gods love, the other of his hatred: which firſt muſt agree to their owne perſons. Thirdly, Pharaoh is ſet forth an example of the ſame thing, whereof Eſau is, namely of the hatred of God: the perſon therefore of Eſau can be no more exempted here, than the perſon of Pharaoh. And that both the perſons of Iacob and Eſau are to be underſtood, it appeareth by theſe circumſtances: Firſt, the Apoſtle ſpeaketh of the conception of theſe children in their mother Rebecca, and of their birth: but Eſau and Iacob perſonally were thus conceived and borne, not the whole nations: ſecondly, unto them this love and hatred belongeth, that had yet neither done good, or evill: but this is ſpoken of the perſons of Eſau and Iacob, verſ.11.Ergo, alſo the other.

Secondly, it is anſwered, that this love and hatred, are to be underſtood onely of temporall bleſſings, becauſe Iacob was made heire of the promiſed land, and Eſau refuſed; and in this reſpect the one was loved, the other hated, not that Eſau was eternally, but onely temporally refuſed: Snecan. p.550. Huberus theſ. 697. their reaſons are theſe: firſt, Iacobs bleſsing pronounced by his father, is Gen.27.28. onely of temporall things, God give thee the dewe of heaven, and the fatneſſe of the earth, &c. Secondly, Eſau is bleſſed as well as Iacob: But if Iacob onely had beene heire of the ſpirituall bleſsings, they ſhould have beene denied to Eſau.

Contra* 1. That Iacob and Eſau are ſet forth as examples in ſpirituall things, it appeareth by the ſcope of the place; for how agreeth it with the Apoſtles purpoſe, to bring in examples of temporall things? verſ.8. he bringeth in a diſtinction, of the children of the fleſh, and the children of promiſe; theſe hoping to be juſtified by faith, and to be partakers of the promiſe in Chriſt, the other remaining ſtill in their carnall ignorance and unbeleefe: of thoſe two kinds, he propoundeth Iacob and Eſau as examples, the one of the children of promiſe, the other of the children of the fleſh: As Eſau had the carnall prerogative, but Iacob was made heire by promiſe. And that Iacob and Eſau do exemplifie theſe two generations, it is confeſſed by Hemingius de grat.univerſ.p.33. and by Snecanus p.533. Secondly, that theſe examples doe ſhadow forth ſpirituall things, it thus further appeareth: the Apoſtle to the Heb.11.20. Hebrewes ſaith, that by faith Iſaac bleſſed Iacob and Eſau concerning things to come: but faith is ſeene in things ſpirituall not temporall, it is of things inviſible, not viſible, v.1. Againe, Eſau is called a pro-
Heb.12.16. phane perſon, becauſe he ſold his birth-right. It is not prophanenes to contemne things temporal, but ſpirituall. S. Ambroſe doth take Iacob and Eſau for examples of Gods eternall election and rejection, In 9.ad Roman. unum elegit preſcientia, alterum ſprevit, Eſau 1. & Iacob. He did chuſe one in his preſcience, and deſpiſed another. The Maſter of the Sentences doth ſet them forth as examples of eternall election and reprobation, lib.3.diſt.32.e. Thirdly, now as touching their reaſons: firſt, Iacob is not only bleſſed in things temporal,but in ſpiritual alſo: for he ſaith, Bleſſed be he that bleſſeth thee,and curſed be he that curſeth thee. In the very ſelfe ſame words, wherein the promiſe of Chriſt is made to Abraham, ſo that this muſt needs be ſpiritually underſtood: for otherwiſe we ſhall obſcure the moſt manifeſt promiſes of the Meſſiah,which were made to Abraham. Secondly,though Eſau have a ſhare with his brother in his temporals, yet hath he no part in his ſpirituall bleſſing: Eſau alſo ſhall have of the fatneſſe of the earth, and of the dewe of heaven: but Iſaac ſaith not unto him, as before unto Iacob, Bleſſed be he that bleſſeth thee,&c. Therefore the Apoſtle to the Hebrewes concerning this ſpirituall bleſſing ſaith,that when Eſau would have inherited the bleſſing,he was rejected: neither found he any place of repententance, though he ſought it with teares: that is, his father by no meanes would revoke that bleſſing, which he had given to Iacob: Eſau therefore was not bleſſed in like ſort as Iacob was. Gen.27.29. Gen. 12. 3. Heb. 12. 16.

Thirdly, it is anſwered: that theſe words, Iacob have I loved, Eſau have I hated, are to be underſtood comparatively,not as though Eſau and his poſteritie were abſolutely rejected of God: but that God rather made choice of Iacob, of whoſe ſeed the promiſed Meſſiah ſhould come, than of Eſau and his ſeed, Snecan.p.568. Heming.p.34. Their reaſons are theſe: firſt, it is not neceſſarie in every place in Scripture, where we read of election and rejection, or reprobation, to referre it to eternall ſalvation or damnation; as, He refuſed the tabernacle of Ioſeph, and choſe not the tribe of Ephraim, but choſe the tribe of Iuda and mount Sion,which he loved: Becauſe God preferred Iuda, it followeth not that the other tribes were condemned: So in this place though in compariſon of Iacob, Eſau be refuſed, yet is he not abſolutely rejected: Huber.theſ.720. Pſal.78.76.68.

Anſ. Firſt, we grant that the love and hatred here ſpoken of in the perſons of Iacob and Eſau are comparatively to be underſtood: that Eſau is ſaid to be hated, not that God ſimply hateth any, but becauſe Iacob is elected, and the other pretermitted; the one choſen, the other neglected: yet comparatively,not in reſpect of any ſuch temporall preeminence,but concerning eternall election,or pretermiſſion. Secondly, becauſe election ſometime implieth a temporall preferring onely in reſpect of ſome ſpeciall and peculiar benefit, and is not neceſſarily alwayes referred to eternall ſalvation; it is therefore to bee interpreted according to the ſcope and circumſtance of the place: as in the Pſalme alleaged, it is plaine,that the Pſalmiſt meaneth, that in reſpect of the Sanctuarie, which was placed at Jeruſalem, Iudah was elected,and Ephraim refuſed: So in this place the Apoſtle treating through the whole Chapter, of the mercie of God upon ſome, and his wrath upon others, not in this or that reſpect, but ſimply, as they ſtand before God, would have us ſo to underſtand the inſtance of love and hatred in the perſons of Iacob and Eſau: So is Pharaoh brought in an example of eternall hatred and rejection: ſo the Apoſtle ſpeaketh of veſſels of mercie prepared to glorie, and veſſels of wrath prepared to deſtruction: ſo are we to underſtand the love of Iacob and hatred of Eſau.

Secondly, that Eſau was eternally hated, or rejected of God, it cannot be underſtood of Eſau his poſteritie: for then all his offſpring ſhould have been caſtawaies: which is not true,for Iob is thought to come of Eſau his ſtocke, Snecan.pag.574. Neither is it true of Eſau his perſon: for if he had beene eternally rejected, to what end was he circumciſed? Snecan.p.574. he lived alſo in his fathers houſe, who loved him,and he was obedient to his father: what reaſon had Iſaac to love whom God hated? Huber.theſ.709. Iſaac alſo is ſaid by faith to have bleſſed Eſau: which his bleſſing had beene in vaine, if Eſau had beene eternally rejected of God; Snecan. p.588.

Anſw. 1. If in Eſau and Iacob, not their perſons onely, but their whole generations are to be conſidered,which if it be rightly underſtood,we will not greatly gaine-ſay: yet it followeth not,that all of Iacobs carnall linage ſhould be likewiſe loved, and Eſaus poſteritie hated: for in Iacob we underſtand all the children of promiſe, though they be not of his carnall offſpring; and in Eſau, all the children of the fleſh,though not deſcending of his ſtocke: So that in this ſenſe, as all they are not Iſrael, which are of Iſrael, as the Apoſtle ſaith, verſ.6. ſo all are not Eſau, that are of Eſau. And therefore Iob, though of Eſau after the fleſh, yet is he the ſon of Iacob by promiſe: And thus Hemingius expoundeth this place, de univerſ.grat.p.33.

2 Concerning Eſau his perſon; how he ſtandeth before God, whether in the ſtate of ſalvation, or damnation, though we hold it the ſafeſt to leave him unto God, before whom he ſtandeth, or falleth; nor to affirme any thing raſhly without warrant: yet we may be bold to proceed ſo farre herein, as we have the word of God to goe before us. Firſt therefore their reaſons, which they bring in defenſe of Eſau, are very inſufficient: for Eſaus outward and temporall circumciſion cannot exempt him from this hatred, no more than Iſmael was privileged by his circumciſion: Who notwithſtanding was borne after the fleſh, and was a perſecutor of him that was borne after the ſpirit: Gal.4. The Apoſtle himſelfe alſo diſtinguiſheth of circumciſion: that there is a circumciſion of the fleſh,and a circumciſion of the heart. The firſt Eſau had,the other he had not: for though he had the ſigne of the covenant, yet the covenant it ſelfe he deſpiſed in ſelling his birth-right. As touching Eſau his obedience to his father, firſt, it was not ſuch, as it ought to be; for then he would not have married two wives of the daughters of the Hittites, to vex his parents withall. Secondly, it was but in hypocriſie: as it may appeare, in that he purpoſed to ſlay his brother Iacob after his fathers death: which he would not have done, if he had truly reverenced his father: for he would have loved his brother for his fathers ſake. Againe, when he underſtood that his father gave his ſon Iacob charge, not to marrie with the daughters of Canaan: Eſau like an hypocrite having already diſpleaſed his parents,in marrying with Gal.4.29. Rom.2.28. Gen.25.34. Gen.26.34,35. Gen.27.41.

Gen 28.9. the daughters of Canaan, went and tooke to wife the daughter of Iſhmael: So that nothing elſe kept
Gen. 27.4. Eſau in ſome awe to his father, but onely a hope of ſome temporall bleſſing. But Iſaac loved Eſau,
Gen. 25.28. would he love him whom God hated? Anſw. 1. It was a fatherly and in ſome ſort a carnall love: hee loved him, for veniſon was his meat: Eſau was an active and valiant fellow, and a good hunter, therefore Iſaac made account of him: he loved Eſau only as a father, but Iacob beſide as a Prophet. 2 Iſaac lo-
Gen. 17.18. ved Eſau, as Abraham loved Iſmael, and prayed, that he might live in Gods ſight, yet both of them were refuſed: ſo Samuel being ſent to annoint David King, liked other of his brethren before, whom God liked not: theſe holy Prophets and Patriarchs were men, and had their naturall affections. Thirdly, what if Iſaac did not ſee fully into the ſtate of his children as yet: for he did but as in a cloud be-
Malach. 1.2. hold things to come: ſo much was not revealed to him, as afterward to the Prophets, Iacob have I loved, Eſau have I hated: And more to the Apoſtles, who doubt not to call him a prophane perſon, Hebr.
Heb. 12.16. 12. 16. for as the Patriarchs and Prophets lived neerer to the times of our Saviour Chriſt, ſo were their revelations more full, and their viſions cleerer.

Now whereas it is ſaid, that Iſaac by faith bleſſed Iacob and Eſau; this doth no whit privilege Eſau: for it was Iſaacs faith, not Eſaus: and though he bleſſed both, yet not alike; for Iacob hath both a ſpirituall and temporall bleſſing: Eſau had only a temporall, the ſpirituall he could not obtaine, no not with teares. Thus whatſoever can be ſaid for Eſau, is eaſily removed. Now againſt him thus much
Gen. 25.34. may be alleaged out of Scripture: firſt, Eſau contemned his birth-right, and held it not ſo deare as a
Heb. 6.6. meſſe of pottage: wherefore the Scripture calleth him a prophane perſon: this is firſt a fearefull ſigne Heb 10.29. of eternall damnation, to contemne and deſpiſe holy things: for ſuch as make a mocke of Chriſt (as Gen. 27.41. Eſau did that deſpiſed this birth-right in Chriſt) and deſpite the ſpirit of grace, there remaineth nothing elſe, but a fearefull looking for of judgement, verſ. 27. Secondly, Eſau hated Iacob, he is become a perſecutor of the righteous, he hateth thoſe whom God loveth. So Iſmael perſecuted Iſaac, he that was Gal 4.29. borne after the fleſh, him that was after the ſpirit. Thirdly, Eſau was diſobedient to his parents, hee maried heatheniſh women, daughters of Infidels, to vex his parents withall: As the Apoſtle ſaith of
Rom. 1.29.30. the Gentiles, God gave them over to a reprobate minde, to doe thoſe things that were not convenient; as being full of envie, murther, (ſo was Eſau toward Iacob) diſobedient to parents, ſo was hee toward Iſaac and Rebecca. Fourthly, Eſau expecteth, and wiſheth his fathers death: the dayes of mourning for my father will come ſhortly: as if he ſhould have ſaid, I hope my father will not live long; then will I ſlay my
Gen. 27.41. brother Iacob: Thus envie in Eſau bringeth forth murther: and this murtherous heart continued to-

Laſtly, S. Paul intreating of Gods eternall election, bringeth in the examples of Iacob and Eſau, the one loved, the other hated of God.

Thus by more evident conjecture, and likely arguments wee are able to prove out of Scripture the finall rejection of Eſau, than they can ſhew the contrary: And ſo conſequently, notwithſtanding all theſe humane devices we have a moſt firme and evident teſtimony for particular and perſonall election in this place, drawne from the example of Iacob and Eſau. And thus much of the firſt inconvenience that muſt needs enſue upon this opinion concerning univerſall grace, which overthroweth the foundation of Gods predeſtination: which they do as it were hang in the ayre, affirming that it is nothing elſe but an univerſall confuſed decree, as though God either did not know the particular end of every man, or knowing the ſame willed it not.

Now laſtly, that God hath from the beginning made a particular and abſolute election of ſome, and that Gods election is not generall and conditionall, it hath been the ancient doctrine of the Church.

1 Ambroſe. 1 Tim. 5. Electos Angelos dicit, quia ſunt alii reprobi, non Dei Angeli, ſed diaboli, &c. He ſaith elect Angels, becauſe there are ſome reprobate, not the Angels of God, but of the devill. As there bee then among the Angels ſome elect, ſome reprobate, ſo is it among men: but the election and reprobation of Angels was particular and certaine: Ergo, ſo is the election and reprobation of men.

Hac altitudine diſcretionis Dei non conturbabitur cor noſtrum, &c.* By this depth of Gods ſeparation or diſcerning of men our heart ſhall not be troubled, if we ſtedfaſtly beleeve that Gods judgement is juſt, &c. If there be then a ſeparation, and diſcerning of men in Gods everlaſting decree; then are not all generally and conditionally elected: for this were not to make a ſeparation, but a confuſion of all together.

3 Auguſtine to this purpoſe writeth very directly: Tract. 14. in Iohan. Eſt quidam populus natus ad iram Dei, & ad hoc præcognitus, &c. There is a certaine people borne to the wrath of God, and foreſeene to this end.

4 Tract. 43. Iſti morti æternæ prædeſtinati reſpondebant, &c. Thoſe which were predeſtinate to everlaſting death, anſwered, Thou haſt a devill.

5 Tract. 48. How ſaid he to thoſe, You are not of my ſheep, Quia videbat eos ad ſempiternum ex- itium praparatos,&c. Becauſe hee ſaw that they were prepared to everlaſting deſtruction, and not redeemed to eternall life by his blood. By theſe places it is evident what Auguſtines judgement was, that Gods election was not indefinite or uncertaine, but that the end of every man, whether to life or death, was determined and decreed in particular.

6 And yet more directly he ſaith of the predeſtinate, Quorum ita certus eſt numerus, ut nec addatur eis quiſquam, neq; minuatur ex eis: Whoſe number is ſo certaine, that neither any can be added unto them, nor none diminiſhed, &c. De corrept. & grat. c. 13.

7 The ſame was the opinion of Iuſtine Martyr, long before, that the finall conſummation of the world is deferred, that the number of thoſe, which were fore-knowne of God, may be fulfilled. ϗ συντέλειαν ὁ ἀριθμός. Apolog. 2. pro Chriſtian.

8 The reformed Churches, now teach the ſame doctrine, of the certaintie of the number of the elect. Latter confeſſ. of Helvetia, c. 10. The Saints are choſen in Chriſt by God, unto a ſure end. Confeſſ. of Baſil: art. 1. §. 3. We confeſſe, that God before he had created the world had choſen all thoſe, to whom he would freely give the inheritance of eternall bleſſedneſſe. Harm. 5. ſect. p. 84. Ibid. p. 86.

9 Proſper and Hilarius, doe report this to have been one of the errors of the Pelagians, Electorum numerum augeri & minui poſſe, That the number of the elect may bee encreaſed and diminiſhed, &c. which error is by them condemned. Epiſtol. ad Auguſtin.

10 Thom. Aquine concurreth with Auguſtine, who concludeth, that, numerus prædeſtinatorum eſt Deo certus, non ſolum formaliter, ſed materialiter: The number of the predeſtinate is certaine before God, not only formally, that is, in reſpect of the knowledge of God, but materially in regard of their election. T. Aqui. 1. pars. queſt. 23. art. 7.

11 Magiſt. ſenten. lib. 1. diſt. 43. E. Non vult Deus omnes homines juſtificari, & tamen quis dubitat eum poſſe: God will not juſtifie all men, and yet who doubteth but he can, Lib. 2. diſt. 21. f. Humana natura, ex parte redempta eſt: Mans nature is redeemed but in part. If all be not redeemed, then all are not elected, Lib. 3. diſt. 32. a. Magis diligit rationales creaturas, & de illis eas amplius, quæ ſunt membra unigeniti: God loveth reaſonable creatures more than unreaſonable; and among the reaſonable, thoſe which are the members of his only begotten ſonne, &c. If all men bee not loved alike, then are they not all elected alike.

The ſecond inconvenience that followeth the opinion of univerſall grace.

ABſurd. 2. The ſecond inconvenience that iſſueth out of this doctrine of univerſall election, is this, that Gods election ariſeth ex prævisa fide, from the fore-ſight of their faith which ſhall bee ſaved: Hubertus theſ. 786. Deus electionem ſuam non abſolutè ſtatuit, ſed defixit eam in filio ſuo, ut qui credunt in eum, ſalvi fiant: God hath not abſolutely made any election, but hee hath founded it in Chriſt, that they which beleeve in him ſhould be ſaved; they that beleeve not, ſhould bee damned. So Hemingius ſaith: Præſcientia Dei regula eſt electionis & prædeſtinationis: The preſcience of God is the rule of election and predeſtination, pag. 21. And againe, Non quia præſciti & electi ſumus, credimus, ſed quia credimus præſciti & electi ad vitam cenſemur: We doe not beleeve, becauſe we are foreſeene and elected, but becauſe we beleeve we were fore-ſeene and elected unto life, pag. 27. Snecanus, though hee ſeeme in words to confeſſe, that æternum eligendi propoſitum non dependet ex ulla noſtra fidei, vel bonorum operum prævisione: That the eternall purpoſe of election dependeth not of the fore-ſight of our faith or works, pag. 461. yet hee is driven by the ſtreame of words to affirme as the reſt doe, that fides continetur in Dei propoſito, that faith is included in the purpoſe of Gods election, p. 463. and that God univerſally ordained to ſalvation all that ſhould beleeve, pag. 480. They would ground this their opinion concerning the fore-ſight of faith upon theſe and ſuch like places of Scripture: as, thoſe which he knew before, he predeſtinate to be like the image of his ſonne: Predeſtination then is grounded upon the fore-knowledge of God: Hemingius de univerſalit. grat. pag. 29. Rom. 8. 29.

Contra. 1. We grant with Auguſtine, that prædeſtinatio eſt quæ ſine præſcientia eſſe non poteſt, Predeſtination is that which cannot be without preſcience in God, lib. 1. de prædeſtinat. ſanctor. cap. 10. And thus are they joyned together in this place: but it followeth not, that one is the cauſe of another. 2 The text maketh directly againſt them: for he ſaith not, whom hee knew before ſhould be like the image of his ſonne he predeſtinate; but, whom he knew before he did predeſtinate to be like his ſon: ſo that this conformitie by faith unto Chriſt is an effect and conſequent of their predeſtination. 3 Though we admit the former reading, yet have they gained nothing: for the conformitie to the image of Chriſt conſiſteth in being made partakers of Chriſts ſufferings, whereof S. Peter intreateth, unleſſe they therefore will affirme, that the fore-ſight of mens afflictions is the cauſe of their election, and ſo joine in opinion with the old Pelagians, that grounded election upon the fore-ſight of good works, this place is not for their turne. 4 By the knowledge of God in Scripture, the love, liking, and approbation of God is often ſignified; as, The Lord knoweth the way of the juſt, that is, approveth it; I am the good ſhepheard, and know my ſheep, that is, love them: ſo in this place, whom he knew before (whom he loved and favoured) he did predeſtinate. 1 Pet. 4. 13. Pſal. 1. 6. Iohn 10. 14.

Againe they object that place: He hath choſen us in him before the foundation of the world: that is, God hath choſen thoſe whom he fore-ſaw ſhould beleeve in Chriſt, Heming. fol. 26. pag. 2. Epheſ. 1. 4.

Contra. 1, The Apoſtle meaneth not, that wee were ſo choſen in Chriſt, that is, for the fore-ſight of our faith in him, but that Chriſt was appointed of God, as the foundation, by whom our election ſhould be accompliſhed: as in the next verſ. Hee hath predeſtinate us to bee adopted through Chriſt: We were not firſt adopted in Chriſt, and then predeſtinate; but firſt predeſtinate, and then choſen in Chriſt, verſ. 11. In whom we were choſen, when we were predeſtinate according to the purpoſe of him, &c. Firſt therfore there is the decree of election and predeſtination, grounded only upon the good pleaſure of God, verſ. 5. then followeth the accompliſhment and execution of that decree by our adoption in Chriſt.

How we are ſaid to be elected in Chriſt.

2 Auguſtine upon theſe words, He hath choſen us in him that we ſhould be holy, groundeth a cleane contrary argument: Elegit nos—ut eſſemus ſancti, non quia futuri eramus, ſed ut eſſemus: Hee hath choſen them before the beginning of the world, that they ſhould be holy, not becauſe they were holy, de prædeſtinat. ſanctor. c. 18. So then faith, holineſſe, ſanctification, are fruits and effects of election, not cauſes thereof.

3 Chriſt Jeſus, or our faith in Chriſt fore-ſeene, cannot be the cauſe of our predeſtination, ſeeing Chriſt himſelfe, in reſpect of his office of redemption, and mediation, was predeſtinate, and preordained of God: the ſame thing then cannot be the cauſe of predeſtination and the object together, Chriſt Jeſus as the head, with his body, which is the whole company of the elect, are the object of predeſtination, that is, thoſe which were predeſtinated: Ergo, hee is not the cauſe. Auguſtine alſo ſaith, Chriſtus præclariſſimum lumen eſt gratiæ prædeſtinationis, qui, ut hoc eſſet, quibus tandem ſuis, vel operum vel fidei meritis, natura humana, quæ in illo eſt, comparavit? ſicut ergo prædeſtinatus ille unus eſt, ut caput noſtrum eſſet, Rom. 1. 4. qui prædeſtinatus eſt Filius Dei, ita multi prædeſtinati ſumus, ut membra ejus eſſemus: Chriſt is a notable light of the grace of predeſtination, in whom his humane nature deſerved not by the merit of his works, or faith, to be joyned to his God-head: As he therefore was predeſtinate to be our head, Rom. 1. 4. predeſtinate the Sonne of God (that is, in reſpect of his office and humanity) ſo are wee predeſtinate to be his members, that is, without reſpect to our faith or works, only according to the good pleaſure of his will. And this ſhall be our firſt argument on the contrarie ſide, againſt this reſpective election, and further we prove it thus.

De prædeſt. lib. 1. cap. 15.

Rom. 1. 4.

Luke 12. 31.

Luke 12. 31. It is your fathers pleaſure to give you a kingdome: There is no other reaſon to be rendred, why God hath elected his children, and appointed them a kingdome, but this: Complacuit patri, it was your fathers pleaſure.

Iohn 15. 16.

Iohn 15. 16. You have not choſen me, but I have choſen you: Whereupon Auguſtine thus writeth: Quod ſi autem ipſi primò crediderunt in eum, elegerunt eum, ipſe non elegit eos: But if ſo be that they firſt beleeved in him, they choſe him, he choſe not them, &c. Their only anſwer here is, that this is to bee underſtood not of their eternall, but temporall election to the office of their Apoſtleſhip.

Anſw. To this alſo Auguſtine anſwereth: Elegit eos de mundo cùm hîc ageret in carne, ſed jam electos in ſeipſo ante mundi conſtitutionem: He choſe them indeed out of the world when he lived in the fleſh: but they were choſen in himſelfe before the world was made, de prædeſtinat. ſanctor. cap. 17. Our Saviour alſo ſaith, I have choſen you, and ordained you, that you goe and bring forth fruit, and that your fruit remaine: This ſheweth that he ſpeaketh of their eternall election to ſalvation.

Rom. 9. 11.

Thirdly, we have a moſt direct place, where the Apoſtle ſaith; That before the children were borne, and had done either good or evill, the Lord pronounced of them, Iacob have I loved, Eſau have I hated: Ergo, in Gods eternall election, which goeth before our birth, there is no reſpect had unto any thing that followeth after the birth, either faith, or works: for the reaſon is generall againſt both.

Anſw. Snecanus anſwereth, that (theſe words) I have hated Eſau, are as much, as odiſſe decrevi, I have decreed to hate, for God really and verily hateth none but for their ſin, pag. 567. And therefore where the Scripture calleth Eſau a prophane perſon, the formall cauſe is added, for ſelling his birthright, Heb. 12. 16. Snecan. pag. 590.

Heb. 12. 16.

Contra. 1. We grant that no man is verily condemned (which is the reall reprobation) but for his owne ſin and wickednes: but here the Apoſtle ſpeaketh of the decree it ſelfe, not of the execution; the decree is before all time, the execution of the decree followeth in the time appointed: the execution followeth after the birth, and after men have done good or evill. This therefore, which the Apoſtle ſpeaketh of, which was determined before their birth, and before they had done any thing, is the abſolute decree of God. Neither is that place to the Hebrewes any thing like unto this: for there the Apoſtle ſpeaketh not of any purpoſe or decree of God concerning Eſau, before any evill done, as he doth here; but only of an act of prophaneneſſe committed in his life. And though we admit his interpretation, I have hated, that is, decreed to hate; yet we muſt underſtand the decree ſtill: that although reall hatred be cauſed by their owne ſin, yet hatred or love decreed, is grounded only upon the will & purpoſe of God: as the Apoſtle ſaith, that the purpoſe of God might remaine, &c. by him that calleth, ver. 11. but if election ſhould be becauſe of faith fore-ſeene, it ſhould ſtand as much by the called, as him that calleth. But here I deſire there may be no miſtaking; although it be affirmed that Gods decree both of election and rejection be abſolute, without any fore-ſight either to faith or unbeleefe, good works or evill: yet there is a difference: for wee make, Maſſa corrupta & damnata, The corrupt and damned Maſſe of all mankinde, loſt in Adam, the ſubject of election and rejection: that out of this Maſſe God of his free grace elected ſome, and left the other in that ſtate of corruption, wherein they were foreſeene: as Auguſtine well putteth the caſe of two debtors, if the owner doe unto one forgive the debt, habet quod gratuletur, he hath wherein to be thankfull; of the other he exacteth the debt, non habet quod criminetur: he hath not whereof to complaine.

2 Now that this pronounced concerning Eſau and Iacob, is to bee underſtood only of Gods eternall decree and free purpoſe without the foreſight of faith, or works, not of the execution of the decree alone, or of them both together; as Suecanus ſeemeth ſometime to affirme, pag. 572. thus it ſhall appeare by the opening of that which followeth.

Verſ. 14. The Apoſtle anſwereth an objection, Is there unrighteouſneſſe then with God? God forbid. Which objection ariſeth upon the former examples: If God then doe elect one and reject another, neither of them having done either good or evill, but both being alike, how is he not unrighteous, in that he ordaineth not alike unto thoſe that are in the ſame caſe? But if ſo that God preferreth ſome becauſe of their beleefe, and rejecteth others for their unbeleefe, there were no ſuch occaſion to complaine of God as unrighteous, or ſo to object, becauſe the cauſe of difference in Gods election is apparant, namely, the reſpect to their faith: and it is a juſt and righteous thing, that God ſhould preferre beleevers before unbeleevers: therefore if election depended upon any ſuch foreſight, and not abſolutely upon the will and purpoſe of God, there could bee no ſhew of unrighteouſnes in God, nor any cauſe ſo to object.

Hemingius maketh the meaning of the objection to be this: that God ſhould ſeeme to bee unjuſt, becauſe he doth not adopt and elect Iſmael and Eſau for his children for the merit of their works, as well as Iſaac and Iacob, pag. 47.

Contra. The merit of faith is as well excluded as the merit of works: and if God ſhould elect upon the foreſight of faith, the ground of this objection is as well removed, as if hee did elect upon the foreſight of works: for then God ſhould ſee ſomewhat more in thoſe that are elected, than in the other, that is, their faith, and ſo they ſhould have no colour to charge God with unrighteouſnes: This appeareth alſo by the verſe following.

Verſ. 15. I will have mercie on him, to whom I will ſhew mercie. And verſ. 18. He hath mercie on whom he will, and whom hee will he hardneth: that is, ſaith Hemingius, God ſheweth mercie upon thoſe that beleeve, who are ſaved only by faith, through the mercie of God in Chriſt, and hee rejecteth all that refuſe to beleeve, and ſuffereth them to bee hardned, Heming. fol. 49 p. 1. Suecan. 698. & alibi. Rom. 9. 15. 18.

Contra. 1. Thus they applie theſe places only to the execution of Gods decree, and underſtand them only of that temporall difference, which God maketh in this world betweene beleevers and unbeleevers: whereas the Apoſtle ſpeaketh of that difference which God maketh in his eternall election: as may appeare by the examples of Iacob and Eſau, betweene whom there was a diſtinction made before they were borne: and to this end he bringeth in the ſimilitude of the potter, verſ. 21. that as he hath power to make his veſſels, not yet made, how he will; ſo God may appoint his creatures to ſuch purpoſes, as him pleaſeth, even before they are: he hath not power to diſpoſe of them only after they are made and borne. 2 If Gods mercie bee decreed upon the foreſight of faith, I aske them, whence is this faith? Is it of themſelves that beleeve, or of God, or of both? if it be of man, then God hath not mercie on whom hee will, but upon whom man will: becauſe it is (ſay they) in mans power to beleeve; and if he will beleeve, then will God ſhew mercie, and not elſe. And againe, whereas they ſay, God would have all men to beleeve, and ſo be ſaved; it followeth that God hath mercie upon all, conditionally if they beleeve: but the Apoſtle ſaith contrary, that he hath mercy upon ſome, not upon all, and that hee withholdeth his mercie from others, whom in his juſt judgement hee hardneth. But if faith be of God, and none can have it, unleſſe he give it, what other reaſon is there, that he giveth it not to all, but becauſe he hath not elected all?

3 Neither is God ſaid to harden ſome mens hearts onely by ſuffering them to bee hardned, but as Auguſtine ſaith of Pharao: Deus induravit per juſtum judicium, Pharao per liberum arbitrium: God hardned his heart by his juſt judgement, Pharao by his free will. And againe, where David ſaith that God bade Shemei curſe him, Auguſtine ſaith thus: Utique non jubendo dixit ei, ſed quod ejus voluntatem proprio ſuo vitio malam, in hoc peccatum judicio ſuo juſto & occulto inclinavit: He did not command him ſo to doe, but becauſe by his juſt and ſecret judgement hee did incline his will of it ſelfe corrupt and wicked, to this ſin: de grat. & liber. arbit. cap. 20. & 23. God therefore only permitteth not as a looker on, but is an agent and a doer as a juſt Judge, yet without ſin.

Verſ. 16. It is not in him that willeth or runneth, but in God that ſheweth mercie: that is (ſaith Hemingius) it is not in him that willeth or runneth after the fleſh, but in him that willeth and runneth by faith, which is grounded upon the mercie of God; who of meere love gave his Son to bee the Redeemer of the world, pag. 48. Rom. 9. 16.

Contra. 1. The oppoſition here is not betweene man willing by nature, and man willing by faith, but betweene man willing or running, and God ſhewing mercie. If it bee all one for man to will according to faith, and for God to ſhew mercie, then is it Gods grace and mercie, that ſome men have faith: for if to will according to the fleſh be one thing, and to will according to faith another, ſeeing all men are the ſame naturally and according to the fleſh, whence is it then, that ſome mens will is regenerate by faith? is it not of the grace and mercie of God? Mercie therefore is firſt ſhewed, and then faith is given: the foreſight then of faith is not the cauſe of grace and favour. 2. It is Gods mercie, you ſay, that Chriſt was given for the redemption of the world: but this is a common mercie, as yee hold, that Chriſt died for all men: is it not alſo a mercie of God to give faith to beleeve in Chriſt? If you affirme only that common mercie, then is it not true, which the Apoſtle ſaith, that God hath mercie only on ſome, and hardneth others; but God is mercifull to all alike, in offering Chriſt both to beleevers and unbeleevers. And concerning faith, if it bee not Gods mercie that wee have it, then Gods mercie in giving Chriſt, is nothing without our owne mercie upon our ſelves in beleeving in Chriſt: yea our owne mercie ſhall exceed Gods mercie, in as much as beleevers have more mercie than unbeleevers. If it bee of Gods mercie, that wee have faith, why is not this mercie ſhewed to all, but that it pleaſed not God to elect all, but to receive to favour onely his choſen? Theſe patrons of univerſall and common grace are never able, holding their opinion, to make all ſound here.

Rom. 9.19.20. Verſ. 19. Thou wilt ſay unto me, Why doth hee yet complaine, who hath reſiſted his will? verſ. 20. But who art thou ô man, that pleadeſt againſt God? ſhall the thing formed ſay to him that formed it, why haſt thou made me thus? Hath not the potter power of the clay to make of the ſame lumpe one veſſell to honour, another to diſhonour? Hence wee conclude, that even ſo in the beginning God had power by ſpeciall election to appoint ſome unto honour, pretermitting others and leaving them in diſhonour, and this of his owne free will and purpoſe, not having any reſpect at all unto man.

Ierem. 18.6. Hemingius anſwereth: That this ſimilitude holdeth not in every point, but is brought in by the Apoſtle to ſhew the power of God, that hee is able to puniſh the contemners of his word, and upon their repentance to renew them againe, as the potter, &c. And ſo is it applied by Ieremie, chap. 18. for otherwiſe ſimply God maketh not the wicked, as the potter doth the baſer veſſels: pag. 50. 30.

Contra. 1. The objection here moved, Who hath reſiſted his will? ſtandeth not with this interpretation, nor with Hemingius opinion: for if God would have all men to beleeve, and ſo be ſaved; then is Gods will overthwarted, and his purpoſe is gainſaied, and his will reſiſted, for he would have all ſaved, and yet all are not ſaved. But the Apoſtle having ſet downe this principle, that God in the beginning elected whom he would, and left the reſt, whom he would not receive to mercie: then this objection is made, that ſeeing Gods will is performed in both, that whom he would, are ſaved; whom he would not, remaine as they were: why then ſhould there bee any complaint made of their diſobedience? unleſſe therefore we make the Apoſtles ſcope to be this, the objection hath no coherence at all with the precedent part.

2 This ſimilitude we doe dot urge in all points: for man is otherwiſe by creation, than a peece of clay, but ſo farre only as it is applyed by the Apoſtle, as we have ſhewed. Ieremie uſeth the ſimilitude ſomewhat to a divers purpoſe, than the Apoſtle doth: for the Prophet ſetteth forth Gods power in the externall works of his providence in the government and adminiſtration of the world; as in the planting and deſtroying of nations: the Apoſtle entreateth of the works of Gods election, and predeſtination, verſ. 11. That the purpoſe might ſtand according to election. Therefore Gods power is not here ſet forth toward thoſe that are now contemners, or beleevers, but before they were ſuch.

Prov. 16.4. Rom. 9.22. 3 As touching his reaſon: Though God make veſſels to diſhonour, that is, ordaine wicked men to puniſhment, yet he maketh them not wicked: they are wicked of their own making, but the puniſhment due to their wickedneſſe, which is eternall ſhame and diſhonour, is made and ordained of God: as, God made the wicked againſt the evill day.

Verſ. 22. What if God to ſhew his power, &c. the veſſels of wrath prepared to deſtruction, and to declare the riches of his glory upon the veſſels of mercie, which he hath prepared to glorie? Ergo, from the beginning ſome were prepared to glory, ſome to deſtruction.

Snecanus ſaith, That none abſolutely before God are appointed to be veſſels of honour or diſhonour, but conditionally in Chriſt, pag. 686. that is, as they ſhould beleeve or not beleeve in him. Hubertus ſaith, That God indeed prepareth the veſſels of mercie, giving them faith, and illumination, but they are made the veſſels of wrath of themſelves, and by Satan. And therefore the Apoſtle changeth the phraſe, ſaying, that God prepareth the veſſels of mercie, but the other are prepared: theſ. 868. 869. 870.

Contra. 1. The veſſels of honour and diſhonour are ſimple, not conditionally formed: elſe the Apoſtles ſpeech were impertinent, verſ. 20. Shall the thing formed ſay to him that formed it, why haſt thou made me thus? But now if they were formed only conditionally, which condition is performed not by the former, but by the thing formed; then are they formed by themſelves: but the Apoſtle ſaith they are formed of God: all condition then on their part is excluded. 2 Againe, as the potter of the ſame lumpe maketh veſſels of honour, or diſhonour, ſo God doth ordaine men of the ſame maſſe and condition in themſelves, ſome to honour, ſome to diſhonour: but now if God ſhould reſpect the faith of ſome, and the unbeleefe of others, and ſo according to this foreſight ordaine them, they ſhould not be one lumpe, or of one mould, but divers.

To Hubertus we anſwer: firſt if God prepare the veſſels of mercie, and worke effectually in them, one of theſe two muſt needs be granted; that God either prepareth all men generally for the veſſels of mercie, and they afterward are made by themſelves the veſſels of wrath, (which ſeemeth to be his opinion) then is the will of God reſiſted. If they ſay Gods will is conditionall, if they beleeve, yet this helpeth them not: for God giveth faith to all (as he ſaith) & ſo would have all to beleeve: ſeeing then all do not beleeve, Gods will is gainſayed, and overruled: Or elſe if God prepare ſome & not others, by giving faith and grace, whereof commeth this difference, but that God hath ſorted out ſome from the reſt by his eternall election?

2 Hubertus ſeemeth to note a myſterie, in that the Apoſtle ſpeaking of the veſſels of wrath, uſeth another word, and in the paſſive voyce, ſaying, σκεύη κατηρτισμένα, veſſels fitted or compoſed to deſtruction: but of the other he ſpeaketh actively, which God hath prepared, προητοίμασεν. Firſt, for the change of the voyce which he objecteth, it is nothing: for is it not all one to ſay, which hee prepared, or which are prepared of him? And, both the kingdome of God, and everlaſting fire are ſaid paſſively to be prepared of God. And for the word, both that which is here pronounced of the veſſels of mercie, is uſed in the Scripture of the preparation to deſtruction, Matth. 25. 41. And on the contrarie, the other word applied to the veſſels of wrath, is attributed to the faithfull, Be ye knit together, κατηρτισμένοι; and he ſpeaketh to thoſe which are ſanctified in Chriſt, and Saints by calling, verſ. 2. 3. So that here the Apoſtle ſpeaketh not, how men by their owne wickedneſſe are fitted to damnation, but how they ſtand in the decree of God, how they are under the hands of the potter: the reddition of the ſimilitude muſt anſwer to the propoſition: the potter maketh himſelfe both kinde of veſſele, he maketh not the one, and the other maketh it ſelfe: ſo God decreeth both concerning the elect and reprobate.

Math.25.34.41.

Matth. 25.41.
1 Cor. 1. 10.

Thus have wee opened the true ſenſe of this chapter, and freed it from the corrupt gloſſes of the contrarie minded: And ſo have wee a moſt cleere teſtimonie of the Apoſtle, for Gods free and gracious election, without any foreſight of faith or any thing elſe in us. And thus Auguſtine expoundeth it: Apoſtolus non ſolum fratres, ſed geminos, nec geminos ſolum, ſed uno concubitu fuſos in utero comparavit, ut quoniam in nondum natis, nondumq́; aliquid operatis nulla eſſe poterant momenta meritorum, nec ex parentum quidem meritis, quæ diverſo tempore varia eſſe potuerunt, aliquod contra gratiam relinqueretur obſtaculum:—itaque Apoſtolus eos vaſa miſericordiæ vocat, ut totum quicquid eſſent, ſecundum miſericordiam ſe eſſe cognoſcerent: De prædeſtinat. & grat. cap. 7. The Apoſtle doth compare together not brethren only, but twinnes borne at one birth: that becauſe in thoſe which were not yet borne, neither as yet had done any thing there could be no difference of merit, neither by their parents merits, which might have been at divers times unlike, grace might have any impediment: the Apoſtle therefore calleth them veſſels of mercie, that they might acknowledge all, whatſoever they had, to be of mercie, &c.

Saint Ambroſe in Tit. 3. upon theſe words of the Apoſtle, Secundum miſericordiam ſuam, &c. According to his mercie he ſaved us: Hoc bonum quod in Chriſtianis florere cernimus, de radice divinæ pietatis oritur, &c. This goodneſſe, which doth flouriſh in Chriſtians, doth ariſe of the root of the divine pietie, or love, for God by his mercie hath ſaved us in Chriſt.

Againe, de vocat. Gent. lib. 1. cap. 3. Non omnis Iſrael reprobatus, nec omnis electus, ſed partem cæcitas voluntaria avertit, partem ſibi illuminatio gratuita reſervavit: All Iſrael was not reprobated, nor all ellected: but part through their voluntarie blindnes is turned aſide, part by gracious illumination is reſerved.

Hieron. apolog. ad Ruffinum: Non aiit Apoſtolus elegit nos, &c. cum eſſemus ſancti, ſed ut eſſemus: The Apoſtle ſaith not he hath choſen us, when we were holy, &c. but that we ſhould be holy.

Proſper writing to Auguſtine of the reliques of the Pelagian hereſie, nameth this to bee one, they affirmed God only to have predeſtinate thoſe, quos dignos futura electione, &c. prævidiſſet, whom hee foreſaw would be worthy of his election, &c.

Epiſt. ad Auguſtin.

Theodoret ſaith, thoſe, whoſe purpoſe hee foreſaw, hee predeſtinate, ſed nemo præſcientiam horum cauſam eſſe dicat, non enim præſcientia eos tales effecit, ſed Deus, ut Deus, quæ futura erant procul proſpexit: But let no man ſay, that Gods preſcience is the cauſe hereof, for his preſcience did not make them ſuch, but God as God did foreſee a farre off what ſhould be, &c.

In 8. c. ad Rom.

The reformed Churches thus confeſſe: Some are no better than others, till ſuch time as the Lord doth make a difference, according to that immutable counſell, which he had decreed in Chriſt Ieſus, before the creation of the world, &c.

Harm. ſect. 5. Pag. 87.

Thomas Aquine doth very well reſolve of this point: that preſcience is not the cauſe of predeſtination; that ſome in generall are elected, ſome rejected, the cauſe is the demonſtration of Gods mercie in ſaving the one, and his juſtice in puniſhing the other: but in particular he doth elect ſome, and reprobate others, nulla ratio in creatura eſt, there is no reaſon or cauſe in the creature: neither is there iniquitie with God, if he give unequall things to them, that are not unequall: quia prædeſtinationis effectus, non ex debito redditur, ſed ex gratia datur: becauſe the effect of predeſtination is not rendred of debt, but given of grace, &c.

1 p. qu. 23. artic. 5.

Thus Auguſtine thought in the end of the grace of free election, though he had been ſometime of another minde, that God, though he elected not by the foreſight of works, yet, elegit fidem, ut quem ſibi crediturum præſciret, ipſum eligeret: yet hee elected their faith, that is, whom he foreſaw ſhould beleeve, him he elected. This ſometime was Auguſtines opinion, which he afterward retracted: Sed nondum (inquit) diligentius quæſiveram, nec inveneram, qualis ſit electio gratiæ: But yet I had not diligently ſearched, or found out, what to thinke of the election of grace: lib. 1. de prædeſtinat. ſanctor. cap. 3.

Auguſtine therefore being better reformed in judgement thus writeth: Miſericors Deus vocat nullis hoc vel fidei meritis largiens, quia merita fidei ſequuntur vocationem potius quàm præcedant: The mercifull God calleth, not for any merits of faith, becauſe the merits of faith doe follow rather our vocation, than goe before: qu. 2. ad Simplician.

So I wiſh that they, which thinke now, as Auguſtine ſometime did, would not be aſhamed with Auguſtine to correct their erroneous opinion. It was counted in time paſt Semi-Pelagianiſme, to aſcribe election to the foreſight of faith. Bellarmine a patrone of poperie yet abhorreth this opinion, and proveth at large, nullam eſſe cauſam in nobis prædeſtinationis: that there is no cauſe in us of our predeſtination, neither that God hath elected us upon the foreſight of our works: aut propter bonum uſum liberi arbitrii, aut gratiæ: or for the good uſing of free will, or grace: Lib. 2. de grat. & liber. arbit. cap. 10. Is it not therefore a ſhame for Proteſtants, even in a popiſh error to be more ſtiffe and reſolute, than a popiſh Profeſſor? And thus much of this ſecond abſurditie: We will be ſhorter in the reſt.

The third Inconvenience or Abſurditie.

ABſurd 3. The Patrons of univerſall grace, who affirme that God conditionally hath appointed all men to ſalvation, if they will beleeve, and that he would have all men to beleeve: Heming. de univerſal. grat. pag. 58. And that if all beleeve not, it is not for any defect of grace, but through their owne fault: Snecan. de liber arbit. pag. 408. They thus holding are driven to confeſſe, that to beleeve, man hath power of himſelfe, by his free will: for God offereth grace and faith to all, and it is in mans power to receive, or refuſe it.

Hemingius further delivereth his opinion thus: That faith is both the gift of God, becauſe it is wrought by his holy ſpirit in thoſe that deſire it; it is alſo of mans free will, becauſe it is in the will of man to give or withhold his conſent to and from the calling of God: And yet (ſaith he) this will, whereby we beleeve, is alſo Gods gift, becauſe it appertaineth to free will, which was given in the creation: ſo there are foure things, which concurre unto faith, to heare the Goſpell, to conſent unto it, to deſire grace offered, and to beleeve God, which promiſeth: all theſe are voluntarie in man: De univerſ. grat. pag. 57. So hee concludeth, that faith is partly the gift of God, becauſe he giveth his word, and inwardly moveth the heart; partly the worke of man, becauſe man, volens credit, beleeveth willingly, being once moved of the ſpirit, à bonitate objecti, by the goodneſſe of the object: pag. 56. So his opinion is, That the will of man is not onely paſſive, but alſo active in the converſion of man: De libero arbit. pag. 118. And as God worketh by teaching, inſpiring, moving; ſo man worketh, by willing, conſenting, endevouring: pag. 120. lin. 1. 2. So the beginning and occaſion of faith is of God, but the act and perfection of faith, in man.

Yet Hemingius much forgetting himſelfe, alloweth that ſaying of Auguſtine: Liberi arbitrii eſt velle, tamen bene velle, gratiæ Dei eſt: That it is in our free will, to will; but well to will, is of grace: De liber. arbitr. pag. 98. And that of Bernard alſo he alloweth; Deus eſt author ſalutis, liberum arbitrium tantum capax, nec dat illam niſi Deus, nec capere valet niſi liberum arbitrium: God is the author only and worker of ſalvation, free will is onely capable, none giveth but God, nor nothing is capable of it, but free will: pag. 120. Thus he confeſſeth with theſe fathers, that mans free will is meerely paſſive in divine things, and only receiveth, worketh nothing. And further he confeſſeth, That a man regenerate and taught of God, may will that is good, by his free will, which he hath of grace: pag. 114. lin. 17. Here he ſaith, that free will to good is of grace: and thus he is contrarie to himſelfe.

Snecanus likewiſe runneth in a maze, and confoundeth himſelfe: One while he ſaith, That grace and mans will worke together: and that men may reſiſt God, and of their owne motion give aſſent unto him, Quantum ad ipſam naturalem volendi actionem in creatione inditam attinet: By the very naturall action of the will, as it was given in the creation: De liber. arbitr. pag. 405. Yet with the ſame breath he ſaith, that mans will is no efficient, or working cauſe of his converſion, but onely a principall ſubject, wherein the ſpirit of God worketh: And that in ſpirituall actions, as in faith, regeneration, A man unregenerate neither underſtandeth, nor is able to doe or will any thing: pag. 398. And that the whole benefit of our converſion, in the beginning, midſt, and end, is neither begun nor finiſhed by our ſtrength, but is only of grace: pag. 405. Thus they ſpeake and write contrarie things, and blow hot and cold with one breath. But for all this, they cannot thus ſhuffle up the matter, but we further urge them thus.

Contra. They that affirme that God offereth grace and faith equally to all, and that God would have all men to beleeve, and if they beleeve not, it is not for want of grace, but the fault is onely in themſelves: doe conſequently hold, that to beleeve is either wolly or in part in mans power. The firſt, to affirme that faith is in mans power wholly without the gift of God, is Pelagianiſme, and maketh man the author of his owne ſalvation. Yet ſo holdeth Puccius, one of the Patrones of this opinion: but Hemingius and Snecanus, or other univerſall men, are not yet ſo groſſe. Their opinion is then, that faith is partly of God, partly of man, that conſenteth unto the calling of God by his free will. Againſt the which opinion we have the decree of the Arauſican. Concil. 2. can. 5. Si quis ſicut augmentum, ita & initium fidei, ipſum credulitatis affectum, &c. If any man ſay, that as the increaſe, ſo the beginning of faith, likewiſe the very inward diſpoſition to beleeve, whereby we beleeve in him, that juſtifieth the ungodly, is not given us by grace, and the inſpiration of the holy Ghoſt, which converteth our will from infidelitie to faith, but that it is naturally in us, is contrarie to the Apoſtle, who ſaith, We truſt that he which hath begun this worke in you, will finiſh it untill the day of the Lord. This decree maketh both againſt thoſe, that affirme faith to bee naturally in us, as Puckſius, as alſo againſt them which aſcribe either the beginning of faith, or the increaſe, or the diſpoſition to free will, and not all to grace, as Hemingius. The abſurditie of which opinion, we further declare thus.

1 If it be in mans power to beleeve, whether doe you underſtand man regenerate, or unregenerate? Man unregenerate is not able to beleeve, for the naturall man perceiveth not the things of the ſpirit of God. 1 Cor.2.14. And this is partly confeſſed by Hemingius and Snecanus, as we have ſeene before. If man muſt firſt be regenerate before hee can beleeve, how commeth it to paſſe, that ſeeing an equall meaſure of faith, and grace is offered on Gods behalfe unto all, that all men are not regenerate? You will ſay, ſome are regenerate by grace: But why do ſome apprehend the grace of regeneration more than other? there is no power yet in their will, becauſe it is unregenerate: muſt it not then be needs confeſſed, that God giveth a greater meaſure of grace to ſome, ſuch as he hath elected, than to other? And this the Apoſtle notably proveth, where he ſaith, God is the Saviour of all men, eſpecially of thoſe which beleeve. 1 Timoth.4.10. But if God for his part offer grace no more to beleevers, than unbeleevers, but in that they accept of grace offered themſelves, how is he after a more eſpeciall ſort the Saviour of beleevers, more than of others? This place then inferreth of neceſſitie a more ſpeciall grace and favour of God toward them that beleeve.

2 That all cannot have faith, but ſuch as are ordained and elected thereunto: theſe Scriptures are our warrant: Ye beleeve not, for ye are not of my ſheepe. They could not beleeve, becauſe God had blinded their eyes. As many as were ordained to eternall life, beleeved. Their anſwers to theſe places wee have ſeene before, that we need not to repeate them againe. Ioh.10.26. Ioh.12.39. Act.13.48.

3 That faith and every good gift, the beginning, perfection and end, is only of God, thus alſo it is teſtified in the word of God: It is not of him that willeth, or runneth, but of God that ſheweth mercie. It is God that worketh both the will and the deed. Without me you can doe nothing. No man can come unto mee, except my father draw him. Rom.9.16. Philip.2.13. Ioh.15.5. Ioh.6.44. Hemingius anſwereth, that God draweth, by ſetting before us the promiſes of eternall life, and by miniſtring ſo excellent an object: pag. 57. But after this manner God (you ſay) deaweth all men: and ſuch drawing men may reſiſt, for all that are thus drawne by this common grace, follow not: But they that are drawne of God, as here our Saviour ſpeaketh, muſt needs come unto Chriſt, verſ. 37. All that the Father giveth me, ſhall come to me.

To conclude this place, theſe patrons of common grace doe fall into a flat point of Pelagianiſme, whoſe aſſertion was this: Vitam æternam omnibus paratam eſſe, quantum ad Deum, quantum ad arbitrii libertatem, ab eis eam apprehendi, qui ſponte Deo crediderunt: That life eternall, on Gods behalfe is prepared for all, and as for the libertie of free will, they lay hold of eternall life, that of themſelves beleeve God: In epiſtol. Proſper. ad Auguſtinum. This did the old Pelagians hold, this doe the new Univerſaliſts affirme.

Now to requite us againe, for this charge, they accuſe us of Manicheiſme, the Manichees tooke away the uſe of free will altogether, and affirmed all things to be done of neceſſitie, and conſequently made God the author of ſinne: to this opinion they ſay, we come neere. Hemingius Pag.109.

Contra. Wee defie the monſtrous ſect of the Manichees and all Manicheiſme. Firſt we affirme, not all things to be done of abſolute neceſſitie: for though God have decreed the end of every man, yet this no more bringeth a ſtoicall & fatall neceſſitie, than to ſay that God hath foreſeene all things (which they themſelves affirme:) for whether God onely foreſeeth, or beſide predeſtinateth, things cannot otherwiſe fall out, than he hath foreſeene or appointed: yet it followeth not, that the yoke of abſolute neceſſitie is therefore laid upon us: for neither Gods preſcience nor predeſtination taketh away ſecond meanes and cauſes, as the libertie of mans will, and ſuch like, but rather eſtabliſheth them: for as God did foreknow and ordaine things to be done, ſo he willed and decreed, and foreſaw the meanes whereby thy ſhould be done.

2 We make not God the author of ſinne, though he have not elected all: for the not elected, being left to themſelves by the corruption of their owne will, fall into ſinne, which God foreſaw, but willed not, but the puniſhment of ſinne, he decreed before, and in his time will ſee executed.

3 Neither doe we take away free will: which we ſay is the beginning and fountaine of ſinne in man: ſo man hath a free will, that is without conſtraint to doe evill. And in good things we exclude not the will of man: but man (we ſay) willeth, and by grace his will is reformed to will that that is good: So grace worketh, the will of man is wrought: Man then hath a will in good things, but altogether paſſive: yet God otherwiſe worketh in man, than in bruit beaſts, for they have no will or underſtanding at all, man hath, though corrupted. Hence are all thoſe precepts, and exhortations in Scripture, not that man of his owne accord is able to receive them: but God ſpeaketh to men as a reaſonable creature, that naturally doth will, and underſtand, that they ſhould be ſtirred up by ſuch exhortations, to ſeeke for further grace at Gods hand, to reforme and regenerate their wills to the obedience of his holy precepts. Thus then it appeareth, that we are no Manichees. Other objections concerning free will, becauſe they are common to the Papiſts, and theſe new free will men (which differ not much in this matter) I will reſerve to the treatiſe of free will, which followeth. And yet, what ſaid I? that they much differ not? Nay, of the two theſe univerſall free men are more erroneous concerning this point of free will, than the Papiſts.

1 The Papiſts make a diſtinction of ſufficient and effectuall grace on Gods behalfe, Bellarm.lib.1. de grat.cap.2. But theſe Univerſaliſts ſay, that on Gods behalfe, like effectuall grace is given to all, but their free will maketh the difference, whereby ſome beleeving, make this common grace to themſelves more effectuall: So they aſcribe more to free will, namely, to make grace effectuall, than the Papiſts doe. 2 The Papiſts ſay, we have free will (yet aided and aſſiſted by God) to doe good works: theſe Univerſaliſts ſay, we have free will to beleeve, which is a greater gift, than to doe good works, which are a neceſſarie conſequent of faith. 3 The Papiſts ſay, that the firſt grace whereby we are juſtified, that is the beginning of juſtification, is meerely of grace both in the giver and receiver: theſe Univerſaliſts ſay, that God indeed offereth grace, by moving and ſtirring the heart, but man by his free will giveth conſent to his calling: ſo that the beginning of their calling is but free in behalfe of the caller, but it is of themſelves, that they are effectually called. And thus much of this third inconvenience.

That it is not in a mans power to beleeve, Saint Ambroſe thus further witneſſeth, in 4. ad Galat. upon theſe words of the Apoſtle: Seeing ye know God, or rather are knowne of God: Cum enim hi non quarerent Deum, advocavit eos ad ſuam gratiam: For when they did not ſeeke God, he called them to his grace. Lib.1. de vocat. Gentium, cap. 9. Licet inſit homini bonum nolle, tamen niſi donatum non habet bonum velle: illud contraxit natura per culpam, hoc recipit natura per gratiam: Although it be in man to nill that is good, yet he cannot will that is good, unleſſe it be given him.

Cont.2.epiſt. Pelag.lib.1.c.3. Auguſtine ſaith, Datur poteſtas, &c. Power is given them to be the ſons of God, which beleeve in him, cum hoc ipſum datur, ut credant in eum, ſeeing this is given them to beleeve in him, which power unleſſe it be given them of God, it cannot be of free will, &c.

Hom.30. in 14. cap. Act. Chryſoſtome ſaith, Nihil noſtrum eſſe putemus, quandoquidem & ipſa fides non eſt noſtrum opus: Let us not thinke any thing to be ours, ſeeing that faith is not our worke.

In 2.Cor.c.1. Theodoret: Deus horum bonorum cauſa eſt, ipſe enim firmam nobis fidem in Chriſtum donavit: God is the cauſe of theſe good things, for he hath given unto us firme faith in Chriſt.

Harm. ſect. 7. pag. 205. Harm. ſect. 9. pag. 244. Confeſſion of Bohemia, chap.10. Onely through the pure Goſpell, and the preaching thereof, is faith ſowed inwardly by the holy Ghoſt. Latter confeſſion of Helvetia, chap.16. This faith is the meere gift of God, becauſe God alone of his power doth give it to his elect.

Thomas Aquine directly affirmeth, that to beleeve, oportet ponere Dei gratiam interius moventem: We muſt preſuppoſe the grace of God inwardly moving: and ſo he concludeth, that, 2.2.q.6.artic.1. credere eſt in voluntate hominis, qua preparatur per gratiam ut credat, &c. to beleeve is in the will of man, which is prepared by grace to beleeve, &c.

The fourth Inconvenience or Abſurditie.

Abſurd. 4. Another conſequent of their opinion is, that as it is in mans power to beleeve, and obey his effectuall calling, ſo may he reſiſt it if he will. So Hemingius pag.117.lin.17. The will of man being moved by the word of God, and the holy Ghoſt, may both obey and reſiſt the ſame. The ſame is affirmed by Snecanus de libero arbitrio, pag.405. for they ſay, that the cauſe why all beleeve not that are called, is not at all for any want of grace on Gods behalfe, but it is onely in themſelves, that refuſe grace offered: Snecan.pag.919.

Argum. Our Saviour ſaith, O Ieruſalem, &c. how often would I have gathered thy children together, &c. and thou wouldeſt not? Matth.23.37. Matth. 23. Wherefore if they would, they might have beene ſaved: It is therefore in mans power to reſiſt his vocation: ſic Heming.pag.117.

Contra 1. True it is, that it is not for any defect or want of grace on Gods behalfe, that many being called, beleeve not, but the defect is in themſelves: there is no defect properly in God: his calling is ſufficient unto all; but that it is effectuall to ſome and not to others, it commeth of their owne corruption, and evilneſſe of nature, which God taketh away and healeth in whom he pleaſeth, and ſuffereth the reſt to remaine in their hardneſſe of heart.

2 There is a ſufficient calling for all, when God offereth the externall meanes of ſalvation, whereby all might come to ſalvation, if they had grace to apprehend: this calling may be reſiſted by men, whom God juſtly leaveth to themſelves. There is alſo an effectuall calling, when as God worketh inwardly by the efficacie of his ſpirit, and draweth his elect, of unwilling making them willing, to obey their calling: and thus are the elected only called, and this calling cannot be reſiſted. So ſaith our Saviour, Many are called, namely, ſufficiently on Gods behalfe, but few are choſen, that is, effectually called, as the elect onely are: The firſt calling was offered to Jeruſalem.

Here it will be objected: firſt, This generall calling of God, if it be not effectuall to all, how is not God to be charged with the periſhing of thoſe, to whom it is not effectuall?

Anſw. God in no wiſe is chargeable therewith: for Gods calling in it ſelfe is ſufficient to all, it is for want of grace in themſelves, that it is not effectuall to them.

Object. 2. But why doth not God by the powerfull operation of grace, make it effectuall to all as to ſome? is he not now partiall?

Anſw. God is a debter to none: but whereas all by nature have made themſelves the ſervants of ſinne, if God in his juſtice would leave them all to themſelves, he were not therefore to be judged unjuſt. But now ſeeing he of his infinit mercie ſaveth ſome, and giveth them his grace, it is not partialitie in him, who findeth nothing in man to be reſpected, but a worke of his meere grace and favour: for as the Apoſtle ſaith, he hath mercie on whom he will; and whom he will he hardneth.

3 That Gods effectuall and gracious calling of election cannot be reſiſted, thus the Scripture beareth witneſſe: No man hath reſiſted Gods will: But as the Pſalme ſaith, Whatſoever it pleaſed him, that did he in heaven and earth. Whom it pleaſed God therefore to ſave, and call by his grace, they ſhall be ſaved and called. Rom. 9. 19.

All that my father giveth me, ſhall come unto me: And every man that hath heard, and hath learned of the father, commeth unto me: Not that God ſaveth any man againſt his will, but, as Auguſtine ſaith, Ex nolentibus volentes facit: Of unwilling he maketh them willing. Auguſtine further alſo writeth notably of this matter: Non poteſt effectus miſericordiæ Dei eſſe in hominis poteſtate, ut fruſtra ille miſereatur, ſi homo nolit: quia ſi vellet etiam reluctantium miſereri, poſſet ita vocare, quomodo illis aptum eſſet, &c. Illi ergo electi, qui congruenter vocati, non reſpuant:—Cæteri non electi, quia non ſecuti, quantumvis vocati: ad Simplician. lib. 1. quæſt. 2. It cannot be in mans power to fruſtrate the efficacie of Gods mercie, if man will not: for if God alſo would have mercie of thoſe that ſtrive againſt his mercie, he could alſo call them, as it were meet for them: They therefore are elected of God, who are agreeably or conveniently called, that they refuſe not their calling: the reſt are not elected, which are called, but obey not, &c. And thus much alſo of this inconvenience, that if man may fruſtrate Gods effectuall calling, that God ſhall not have mercie, unleſſe man will; then is the will of man ſtronger and of greater power, than Gods will is. Iohn 6. 37. 45.

Laſtly, concerning theſe three points: firſt, that there is a generall calling which is ſufficient to all; and beſide that a ſpeciall calling effectuall only in ſome. Secondly, that the generall calling by the hardneſſe of mans heart may be made fruſtrate. Thirdly, that the effectuall calling of God cannot be reſiſted. S. Ambroſe doth thus witneſſe evidently.

Firſt, he ſaith, lib. 1. de vocat. Gent. c. 2. Credimus ſecundum ſcripturas, &c. Wee beleeve according to the Scriptures, that Gods providence was never wanting to the univerſall company of men: Quæ licet exceptum ſibi populum ſpecialibus ad pietatem direxerit inſtitutis, &c. Which providence of God did yet give ſpeciall directions unto godlineſſe to his people, which hee had excepted from the reſt.

For the ſecond he thus teſtifieth: Si quis non credit in Chriſtum, generali beneficio ipſe ſe fraudat, ut ſi quis clauſis feneſtris radios ſolis excludat: If any man beleeve not in Chriſt, hee doth defraud himſelfe, as if a man ſhould ſhut the windowes to keep out the Sun-beames: lib. 2. cap. 2.

Thirdly, lib. 1. de vocat. Gent. cap. 10. Nihil obſiſtere divinæ gratiæ poteſt, quo minus id, quod voluerit impleatur: Nothing can reſiſt the divine grace, that it ſhould not fulfill whatſoever it would. And againe, cap. 9. Quantumlibet impiorum malignitas accuſetur reſiſtens gratiæ, &c. Although the malignitie of the wicked bee accuſed, as reſiſting grace; ſhall it bee thought, that they deſerved grace, upon whom it was conferred, or that grace, which ſubdued whom ſhee would, could not convert thoſe, which remaine unconverted? they which were called, were the ſame, which they are that remaine in their hardneſſe of heart: Sed illis tribuit gratia ſtupenda, quod voluit; iſtis retribuit veritas juſta, quod debuit: but grace gave unto them, what ſhe would; and juſtice rendred to the other, what was due.

Auguſtine alſo thus witneſſeth: Volenti ſalvum facere nullum hominum reſiſtit arbitrium: Mans will is not able to reſiſt God, being willing, or purpoſed to ſave: De corrept. & grat. cap. 14. Non eſt dubitandum voluntati Dei—voluntates humanas reſiſtere non poſſe: It is not to bee doubted, but that mans will cannot reſiſt Gods will, who hath done, whatſoever hee would in heaven and earth: ibid.

Likewiſe: 1 Auguſtine maketh two kindes of vocation: writing upon theſe words, Whom he hath predeſtinate, he hath called, Hæc vocatio ſecundum propoſitum, eſt, hæc eſt ſine pœnitentia: This calling is according to Gods purpoſe, that is, without repentance, &c. Non ſunt in iſta vocatione, &c. They are not in this calling, which walke in faith a while, but perſevere not. Epiſt. 59. ad Paulin.

Tertullian agreeth: & lapides filii Abrahæ fient, ſi in fidem Abrahæ inſeruntur, & genimina viperarum fructum pœnitentiæ facient—hæc erit vis divinæ gratiæ, potentior utiq; naturæ, habens in nobis ſubjacentem ſibi liberi arbitrii poteſtatem, &c. Both ſtones ſhall become Abrahams children, if they be planted into the faith, and the ſprigges of vipers ſhall bring forth fruits of repentance, if they ſpet out their venome: this is the power of the divine grace, mightier than nature, having ſubject unto it the power of free-will. Lib. de anim. cap. de cæteris naturalib. animæ.

2 Cyril ſaith, that faith worketh above the ſtrength of man: mans ſtrength then is not able to reſiſt the grace of God. [illegible] Catechiſ. 5.

3 Confeſſ. of Helvetia, the former, artic. 19. Except the Lord doe give encreaſe in the heart of the hearer, the doctrine to him which hath no faith, is as it were a watring and planting, but ſuch as is with- Harm. ſect. 11. pag. 350.

out efficacie and unfruitfull, but being received by faith into good ground, and being trimmed by the inward husbandman the Holy Ghoſt, doth worke mervailouſly, and profit, &c. There are then two kindes of calling, one externall, which is not alwaies effectuall, one internall, which alwayes worketh effectually.

2. 1. qu. 112. artic. 4. 4 Thom. Aquine: this queſtion being propounded, whether grace can bee more in one, than another, granteth, that it may ex parte ſubjecti, on the behalfe of the ſubject: Prout unus perfectius illuſtratur lumine gratiæ quàm alius: As one may be more perfitly lightned with the light of grace than another: and the firſt reaſon of this diverſitie is on Gods part, Qui diverſimode ſua dona diſpenſat, who diverſly diſpenſeth his gifts, &c. ſo then there are divers kinds of callings, which are not alike effectuall to all.

The fifth Abſurditie.

ABſurd. 5. Theſe patrons of univerſall and conditionall election and grace, which affirme that men are no otherwiſe elected, but with condition if they beleeve, and ſo long are they elected, as they continue in faith, doe conſequently alſo hold, that men may both loſe their election, and loſe their faith: and of the veſſels of honour, if they fall from faith, become veſſels of wrath: Heming. pag. 30. And they which are written in the booke of life, may be raſed out of it: Huber. theſ. 757. The ſame alſo is maintained by Suecanus, that the elect may finally fall away from Chriſt. pag. 976.

Argum. 1. That election may be loſt, they would thus prove it out of Scripture: Moſes ſaith unto Exod. 32. 32. God: If thou wilt not pardon them, raſe me out of the booke which thou haſt written: The Lord anſwered, Him that ſinneth will I put out of my booke. Neither Moſes would have asked an impoſſible thing, neither would God have ſo anſwered, if that they could not bee raſed out of the booke of life that are written there: Huber. theſ. 766.

Anſ. 1. Moſes being carried away with an extraordinary zeale of Gods glory, and love to the people, forgetting himſelfe and his owne eſtate, wiſheth, that himſelfe ſhould periſh, rather than the people: yet it followeth not, that hee could periſh: For after the ſame manner S. Paul with the like Rom. 9. 3. zeale wiſheth he were accurſed, ſo the Jewes might bee ſaved, yet the Apoſtle was ſure that hee could Rom. 8. 38. not periſh, nor be ſeparated from the love of God: And he knew there was a crowne of glory laid up 2 Tim. 4. 8. for him. No ſuch thing therefore can be inferred upon theſe extraordinarie examples of zeale. 2 But the Lord anſwering Moſes, ſaith, hee will put out, &c. though Moſes might bee carried away in zeale ſo to ſpeake, yet the Lord ſpeaketh adviſedly. Anſw. Firſt, the Lord applieth his ſpeech unto Moſes infirmitie at this time, and by way of conceſſion, ſaith unto him, that if it were ſo, that ſome were to bee put out of his booke, yet Moſes ſhould not, but they rather that ſinned. Againe, it is a metaphoricall ſpeech, for God hath indeed no ſuch booke, ſuch putting in or putting out: but by writing in that booke, the decree of ſalvation is ſignified; by not writing or blotting out, the decree of damnation: God will put them out that ſinne, that is, hath decreed their juſt damnation: for otherwiſe to ſpeake properly they were never written in the booke of life. Here wee have a direct teſtimonie, that Revel. 17. 8. ſuch as are loſt, were never written in the booke of life; how dare then any man wreſt the Scripture to a contrarie ſenſe, and ſo make it ſpeake contrary things? Or as Auguſtine interpreteth, Non ſic accipere debemus, quòd quenquam Deus ſcribat in libro vitæ & deleat illum, ſi homo dixit, quod ſcripſi;—Deus quenquam ſcripſit & delet?—quomodo ergo ibi delentur, ubi nunquam ſcripti ſunt? hoc dictum eſt ſecundum eorum ſpem, quia ibi ſe ſcriptos putabant: We muſt not ſo take it, as though God writeth any in the booke of life, and blotteth them out againe: for if a man ſaid, what I have written, I have written (ſo Pilate ſaid concerning the inſcription of the Croſſe) doth God write any, and blot out againe? how are they then blotted out, where they were never written? It is ſo ſaid in repect of their hope, becauſe they thought they were written there.

1 Cor. 9. 27. They alſo object that place, I beate downe my body, leſt, &c. I my ſelfe ſhould be a reprobate, &c. Ergo, the elect may become a reprobate: Pucks. rat. 77.

Anſw. 1. That Paul was aſſured he could not be a reprobate, we have ſhewed before, for he knew that there was a crowne of righteouſnes laid up for him. 2 It is not then to be referred to the perſon of Paul, as though hee feared any reprobation before God, but to his miniſterie, leſt, if he ſhould doe himſelfe otherwiſe than he preached to others, his miniſterie ſhould be diſgraced, and reproved.

1 Cor. 8. 11. Argum. 2. Now that faith alſo may bee loſt, they ſhew it thus: Through thy knowlege ſhall the weake brother periſh for whom Chriſt died: Ergo, a man may loſe his faith and ſo periſh: Heming. pag. 24.

Anſwer. 1. None can finally or eternally periſh, whom Chriſt hath redeemed by his death: for John 6. 39. John 17. 12. Chriſt cannot loſe any thing of that which is given him. 2 Therefore the Apoſtle here by periſhing underſtandeth not a finall deſtruction, but a ſhaking or weakning of their faith, which verſe 12. hee calleth a wounding of their conſcience: now it is one thing to wound, another to ſlay: that this is Rom. 14. 15. 21. the meaning, it may appeare by comparing this place with the like: Deſtroy not him with thy meat for whom Chriſt dyed: where the ſame word is uſed, μὴ ἀπόλλυε, deſtroy not: that is, thy brother is grieved, verſ. 15. hee ſtumbleth, is offended, or made weake, verſ. 21. And againe, verſ. 20. Deſtroy not the worke of God for meats ſake: the word is, κατάλυε: ſo then, ἀπόλλυε, and κατάλυε, deſtroy not, with the Apoſtle are all one, and to build up is contrarie to deſtroy, as they are oppoſed: If I build againe the things that are deſtroyed: So then, as to build up and edifie our brother, is nothing elſe but to inſtruct and confirme his faith, ſo to deſtroy, is not to periſh his perſon, but to impaire his faith. 3 Or thus we may read, Through thy knowlege thy weake brother ſhall periſh: that is, as much as in thee lyeth, by thy meanes thy weake brother might periſh, not that ſimply or abſolutely he doth periſh. 4 Laſtly, S. Paul ſpeaketh not here of the eternall purpoſe of God, in them for whom he hath given Chriſt to die, but that, as he himſelfe giveth the rule, Love hopeth all things: ſo we ſhould thinke none other of our weake brother that beleeveth, but that Chriſt dyed for him: And that the Apoſtle thus ſpeaketh, not in reſpect of Gods ſecret decree in the death of Chriſt, but of that hope and opinion, that we ought one to have of another, it appeareth, *Rom.*14. 4. where the Apoſtle ſpeaking of Gods ſecret decree, ſaith, Every man ſtandeth or falleth to his owne maſter: Every man ſtandeth not, but ſome ſtand, ſome fall: But in reſpect of the judgement and charitable opinion of men, he ſaith, *verſ.*3. God hath received him: *verſ.*4. He ſhall be eſtabliſhed: for God is able to make him ſtand: yet in the ſame verſe, he ſaith, before God he ſtandeth, or falleth: but in the judgement of men, every beleever ſtandeth, is eſtabliſhed, and received: and ſo conſequently for him Chriſt died, verſ. 15.

Contra. Now on the contrary ſide, that both our election is ſure before God, neither that the faith of the elect, though it may faile, and impaire, yet cannot utterly be loſt, thus we are aſſured by the evident teſtimonie of Scripture.

Argum. 1. The gifts and calling of God are without repentance: *Ioh.*13. 1. Whom God loveth he loveth to the end: My father is greater than all, and none is able to take them out of my fathers hand: Ergo, the elect cannot periſh.

Rom.11. 29.
John 10.29.

Hemingius pag. 65. anſwereth, that no man by violence can plucke the elect from God, yet they willingly may fall away: Snecanus alſo granteth, that on Gods behalfe our election is ſure and immoveable, but not on mens behalfe, unleſſe they continue, and hold faſt their faith to the end: *pag.*976.

Contra. 1. The text is, My father is ſtronger than all: he is then ſtronger than our ſelves, that neither willingly nor unwillingly the elect cannot depart from God: For I give unto them eternall life, ſaith Chriſt, and they ſhall never periſh: They can in no wiſe periſh, neither by force, nor by voluntarie declining from God: I will put my feare into their hearts, that they ſhall never depart from me: I will marrie thee for ever unto me in righteouſneſſe.

John 10.28.
Jerem.32.40.
Hoſh.2.19.

2 That Gods election is abſolutely ſure both on his owne behalfe, and on their part that are elected: our Saviour teſtifieth: This is my fathers will, that of all which he hath given me, I ſhould looſe nothing, but ſhould raiſe it up at the laſt day. All that are elected, ſhall be aſſuredly raiſed up to life eternall: And God, to ſuch as he hath choſen, will give grace to continue. They therefore that finally fall away, were not elected in the beginning: And that faith, which ſome have made ſhipwracke of: is not the juſtifying faith of the elect, but a temporarie, or hiſtoricall faith. Mens falling away from faith then, cannot make Gods election voyd: as the Apoſtle ſaith: *Shall their unbeleefe make the faith of God without effect? Rom.*3. 3.

John 6.39.
1 Tim.1.19.

3 We notwithſtanding confeſſe, that Gods election ſtandeth faſt, and is immutable in them that are elected, not by their owne ſtrength, but by the grace and gift of God, for of our ſelves we are mutable and changeable, readie to fall away, but that we ſtand by grace, as Ambroſe ſaith, *lib.*2. *de vocat. gentium, c.*9. Si defectura erat fides tanti Apoſtoli, niſi pro eo Chriſtus oraret, inerat ei profecto mutabilitas, &c. If the faith of ſo great an Apoſtle ſhould have failed, if Chriſt had not prayed for him, there was mutabilitie in him, for the unchangeable firmeneſſe of the minde is not to be found here.

Object. If they, whom the Apoſtle ſpeaketh of, made ſhipwracke onely of a temporarie faith, that is, a faith in ſhew, or imagined, then they loſt nothing: And is it a ſinne worthie of eternall puniſhment, to loſe the image onely, and ſhew of faith? Againe, where S. Paul ſaith, In the latter times ſome ſhall depart from the faith: they may as well here alſo underſtand a diſſembled and imagined faith: *Huber. theſ.*243.

Anſw. Firſt, though thoſe, which the Apoſtle ſpeaketh of, had not a true juſtifying faith, and therefore could not make ſhipwracke of that which they had not, yet had they more than a bare image of faith: for they had a forme of knowlege, and the profeſſion of the truth. Men alſo in ſome ſort may be lightned, Taſte of the heavenly gift, be partakers of ſome gifts of the holy Ghoſt, taſte of the word of God, and of the powers of the world to come: Heb. 6. 4, 5. And theſe things not in ſhew onely, but in their kinde and meaſure in ſome ſort indeed, for it is but a taſte (as the Apoſtle ſaith) not as it were a full draught: and yet for all this they have not a juſtifying faith, which if they had, they could not finally fall away. Therefore though they have but an image or ſhew of the lively juſtifying faith, which they indeed have not, but ſeeme onely to have, *Luk.*8. 18. yet a kinde of faith they have indeed, which they make ſhipwrack of. Secondly, the Apoſtle here underſtandeth not a right juſtifying faith, which worketh * alwayes by love, Galath. 5. 6. and is joyned with a good conſcience, *Rom.*5. 1. 1 Timoth. 1. 19. But theſe firſt had put away a good conſcience, and then made ſhipwracke of their faith. To this purpoſe Saint *Ambroſe, lib.*2. *de vocat. Gentium c.*2. Dignus erat perdere inutilem fidem, qui non exercuerat charitatem: Hee was worthie to looſe an unprofitable faith, which did not exerciſe charitie: ſuch a fruitleſſe faith then may be loſt. Thirdly, by faith in the place alleaged, the Apoſtle under-underſtandeth the forme of true doctrine, as it appeareth by the oppoſite member, they ſhall depart from the faith, that is, from the doctrine of the truth, and give heed to the doctrine of devils: So in this place Hymenæus maketh ſhipwrack of faith, that is, concerning the truth hath erred. And the Apoſtle ſheweth wherein he erred, ſaying, the reſurrection is paſt already. Thus by making ſhipwracke of faith, the Apoſtle underſtandeth, the leaving of the truth, and falling into error. Fourthly, and for this Apoſtaſie from the truth, they deſerved eternall puniſhment, without their repentance: although the Apoſtle ſpeake not here of eternall damnation, but ſaith only he had delivered them to Sathan, that is, excommunicated them, for their amendment, to learne not to blaſpheme: as hee decreed concerning the inceſtuous young man, 1 Corinth. 5. 5. who notwithſtanding afterward repented, and was reſtored.

2 Tim. 2. 19.

Argum. 2. The foundation of God remaineth ſure, the Lord knoweth who are his. We then thus reaſon: Gods preſcience cannot be deceived: but God fore-ſaw in the beginning not onely in generall, but in particular, who ſhould be ſaved: Ergo, the ſame, and no other ſhall be ſaved: therefore none of the elect can periſh. So Auguſtine writeth: Horum, qui electi ſunt, ſi quiſpiam perit, fallitur Deus, ſed nemo eorum perit, quia non fallitur Deus: horum ſi quiſpiam perit humano vitio vincitur Deus, ſed nemo eorum perit, quia nulla re vincitur Deus: If any of the elect ſhould periſh, God is deceived, but none of them periſheth, becauſe God is not deceived: if any of them periſh, God is overcome by the infirmitie of man; but nothing can overcome God: therefore none of them periſheth, &c. This argument drawne from the definite certaintie of Gods preſcience, hath not yet been anſwered by any of theſe Univerſaliſts: neither ſhall they ever be able to anſwer it.

Object. Doe we not ſee by experience, that many which beleeved, fall away; how is not faith then loſt, and election withall? We anſwer with Auguſtine: Firſt, they that finally fall away, never were endued with a right faith, nor elected of God: Nec nos moveat, quod quibuſdam filiis ſuis Deus non dat perſeverantiam, abſit ut ita eſſet, ſi de illis prædeſtinatis eſſent—qui verè ſunt filii promiſſionis: Let it not move us that unto ſome, which appeared to be Gods children, God giveth not grace to perſevere, it ſhould not be ſo, if they were of the number of the predeſtinate, which are the true children of promiſe. Secondly, but concerning the elect he ſaith: Horum fides aut omnino non deficit, aut ſi qui ſunt, quorum deficit, reparatur, antequam vita iſta finiatur: Their faith either faileth not at all; or if it doe, it is reſtored before their life be ended: Lib. de correpț. & grat. cap. 7. 9.

Lib. de correp. & grat. cap. 7.

S. Ambroſe alſo ſaith, in 8. ad Roman. Qui credere videntur & non permanent in fide, à Deo electi negantur: They which ſeeme to beleeve, and continue not in faith, are not elected of God: Eſt qui ad tempus eligitur, ſicut Saul & Iudas, non de præſcientia, ſed de præſenti juſtitia: there is, that is choſen for a time, as Saul and Iudas, not of preſcience, but according to their preſent juſtice.

Object. If then the elect cannot finally periſh, nor bee deprived of their faith, to what end are all thoſe admonitions in Scripture, Let him that ſtandeth take heed leſt he fall: to him that overcommeth will I give a crowne, &c. Snecanus to this anſwereth well, that theſe exhortations doe ſerve as meanes to preſerve our faith, and doe ſtirre up in us a care of godlineſſe, whereby we may riſe up in aſſurance daily of our election: pag. 470 for though our election be alwaies ſure before God, yet is it not otherwiſe aſſured to us, but by the effects and works of our calling: And though our ſalvation bee certainly decreed before God, yet is it by meanes, ſuch as hee hath appointed, accompliſhed toward us. As S. Ambroſe witneſſeth, lib. 2. de vocat. gent. cap. 10. Quamvis quod ſtatuit Deus, nulla poſſit ratione non fieri, ſtudia tamen non tolluntur orandi, nec per electionis propoſitum liberi arbitrii devotio relaxatur: Although that which God appointeth cannot be but done, yet the ſtudie or deſire of prayer is not taken away, nor the devotion of mans free-will releaſed by election.

And for the certaintie of election he further thus teſtifieth: Lib. 2. de vocat. gent. c. 9. Sicut nullus infidelium in hac ſorte numeratus, ita nullus piorum ab hac ſorte diſcretus: de plenitudine quippe membrorum corporis Chriſti, præſcientia Dei, quæ falli non poteſt, nihil perdit, &c. As no unbeleever is numbred in this lot, ſo none of the godly is ſeparated from it; for the preſcience of God, which cannot bee deceived, doth loſe nothing of the fulneſſe of the members of Chriſt.

Hierome Epiſt. ad Pammach. & Ocean. rehearſeth this to be one of the errors of Origen: that in the end after divers worlds, Idipſum fore Gabrielem, quod diabolum; Paulum, quod Caipham: Gabriel ſhall bee the ſame, that the devill; and Paul, that Caiphas: Hubertus hath the like ſaying, as I have ſhewed before, that Paul and Peter were no more elected, than Iudas.

De fid. ad Petrum. c. 39.

1 Auguſtine yet more directly ſaith: Firmiſſimè tene neq; perire poſſe aliquem eorum, quos Deus prædeſtinavit ad regnum cœlorum, &c. Undoubtedly hold, that none of them can periſh, whom God hath predeſtinate to the kingdome of heaven, nor any of them can bee ſaved, that are not predeſtinate.

1 p. q. 23. ar. 6.

And thus much of this inconvenience, which they are driven to confeſſe, namely, that election and faith may be loſt: whereupon follow many abſurdities, as wee have ſeene: Firſt, that by this meanes the preſcience and fore-knowlege of God may be deceived, if election, which he both foreſaw and decreed, may be altered. Secondly, Gods purpoſe of ſalvation is by mans infirmitie overthrowne: that if he hold not, neither doth the decree hold. Thirdly, it breedeth uncertaintie of ſalvation, and ſo deſpaire: for by this meanes the ſtrength of our hope is ſtayed upon mans free-will: a miſerable hold for a diſtreſſed conſcience to ſtay upon. Fourthly, the Univerſaliſts herein are more erronious than the Papiſts: for they confeſſe an abſolute and determinate certaintie of our election before God, though they denie a full perſwaſion and aſſurance thereof unto men: but theſe denie both: Let us now finiſh the reſt.

The ſixth Inconvenience.

ABſurd.6. In ſaying that God onely purpoſed to ſave thoſe that ſhould beleeve, and to condemne all unbeleevers, they conſequently affirme, that, Incredulitas ſit unica cauſa condemnationis, that incredulitie is the only cauſe of condemnation: Huber. theſ. 187. And ſo they extenuate other ſins, as Puckſius: In ſimplice ignoratione, aut incredulitate nullum eſt ſcelus: In ſimple ignorance and unbeleefe, there is no ſin, *ration.*56. And againe, Reſpectu peccati originalis, neminem æterna morte plecti: That no man is puniſhed eternally for originall ſin: *ration.*13. That mortalitie and other miſeries of this life, are onely the puniſhment of originall ſin: ration. 1. & 5. Snecanus alſo ſaith, that the originall corruption of mans nature, is not the foundation of reall reprobation, but the contempt of the grace of God: His reaſon is, becauſe then every man ſhould be rejected, becauſe there remaineth originall corruption in all: *De prædeſtin. pag.*655.

Contra 1. That ſimple ignorance or incredulitie excuſeth not, S. Paul ſheweth, As many as have ſinned without the law, ſhall periſh without the law. And verſ. 14. They having not the law, are a law to themſelves. Here the Gentiles are not accuſed of willfull contempt of grace, which was not preached unto them, but onely of ſimple ignorance, yet are they worthie of condemnation. Secondly, that originall ſin in it ſelfe deſerveth eternall death, it is at large declared by the Apoſtle, By one man ſinne entred into the world, and death by ſinne. And afterward he ſheweth what death, The fault came of one offence to condemnation. Thirdly, that originall ſinne is not the ground or cauſe of reall reprobation, and actuall condemnation, in part it is true, in part falſe: It is true, becauſe by the mercie of God it is not imputed to thoſe which are ſaved by Chriſt, as no other ſinnes are: It is falſe, firſt, becauſe, though originall ſinne bee not imputed of grace, yet in it ſelfe it hath ſufficient matter of condemnation: againe, it is the ground of all actuall ſin, and ſin is the ground or cauſe of damnation: thirdly, unto ſome it is the ground of reprobation, as unto ſuch children of Infidels, as are not ſaved by election of grace.

Rom.2.12,14.

Rom.5.12.16.

Now concerning wilfull incredulitie, and contempt of grace, that it is not the onely cauſe of reprobation, I will briefly ſhew by theſe two arguments, ab incommodo, which follow.

Firſt, it will follow upon this opinion, that all thoſe nations of the Gentiles, which had no knowlege of God, were freed from damnation, becauſe the Goſpell was not preached unto them, as, In times paſt God ſuffered the Gentiles to walke in their owne wayes, verſ. 17. hee notwithſtanding left not himſelfe without witneſſe, in that he gave them raine from heaven, &c. They had no other witneſſe but the teſtimonie of the creatures: the word they had not, The time of this ignorance God regarded not: Seeing therefore that grace was not offered them, they could not be contemners of grace, and ſo conſequently by their opinion, were free from damnation.

Act.14.16,17.

Act.17.30.

Snecanus goeth about here rather to make an anſwer, then indeed anſwereth: All theſe nations which were ſtrangers from Iſrael, and from the promiſe, in the beginning contemned the grace of redemption offered, and refuſed the promiſe, and therefore were worthily rejected: *De prædeſtinat. pag.*665.

Contra. Let it be granted, that all nations at the firſt deſpiſed the promiſe (yet ſhall he never bee able to prove, that in the time of the Law, grace was univerſally offered to all people) how could their poſteritie after them be counted contemners of grace, which they never heard of? The parents actuall ſinnes, though they may be the cauſe of temporall puniſhment upon the children, yet can they not, in the juſtice of God, be the ground of their eternall rejection. And as for their originall corruption, it is confeſſed already, that it cannot be the foundation of reall reprobation. To this objection therefore we expect a more ſufficient anſwer.

This objection is ſtrongly urged and enforced by S. Ambroſe: *lib.*1. *de vocat. gent. cap.*5. Liberatur pars hominum parte pereunte, &c. Part of mankinde is delivered, the reſt periſheth: and if we will aſcribe this to the wils of men, that grace neglected the evill, and did chuſe the good: Reſiſtet nobis innumerabilium cauſa populorum: The condition of innumerable people will gaine-ſay us, unto whom for many ages no light of heavenly doctrine did ſhine: neither can we ſay, that their poſteritie was better, of whom it is ſaid, the people, that ſate in darkneſſe, ſaw great light. As Ambroſe concludeth, that the Gentiles were not called for their merits, becauſe they ſate in darkneſſe, and had no heavenly light: ſo it may be inferred, that they could not contemne or deſpiſe that light which did not ſhine unto them.

Secondly, we object, concerning the infants of infidell parents, that if unbeleefe onely exclude from election, then are they not excluded, for they are not capable of faith, and therefore cannot deſpiſe faith and grace. To this objection divers anſwers have beene deviſed, but none of them ſufficient.

Firſt, it may be, and is anſwered of ſome, that infants are judged according to the fore-ſight of their beleefe or unbeleefe, if they had lived.

2 Cor. 5. 10. De prædeſtinat. Sanctor. cap. 12.

Contra. Auguſtine confuteth this, by that place of S. Paul, 2 Cor. 5. 10. That every man ſhall receive according to the things done in the bodie: Geſſit inquit, non adjunxit, vel geſturus fuit: He ſaith, what he hath done, not what he ſhould doe. Againe, Chriſt upbraiding the unthankfull Cities that ſaw his works, and repented not, ſaith, If the great works which have beene done in them, had beene done in Tyrus and Sidon, they had repented, &c. By this reaſon Tyrus and Sidon ſhould not have beene judged, becauſe of the fore-ſight of their repentance.

Secondly, it may be ſaid, that infants dying, though they be not ſaved, becauſe they have no faith, yet are they not damned, but they ſhall have a certaine kinde of beatitude, though not in the Kingdome of heaven.

Rom. 5. 18.

Contra. But this alſo is overthrowne by S. Paul, Rom. 5. where he ſheweth, that by one mans ſin, death came upon all to condemnation: and therefore children, if they be not ſaved, are neceſſarily damned. This alſo is confuted by Auguſtine lib. de bon. perſeveran. cap. 12.

Gen. 17. 7. 1 Cor. 7. 14.

Thirdly, Snecanus anſwereth concerning the children of the faithfull, that they are all elected, and belong unto the promiſe: I will be thy God, and the God of thy ſeed: S. Paul alſo calleth them holy, p. 667. As for the children of infidels, he leaveth them unto God, who may deale with them (he ſaith) extraordinarily, and further he defineth not their ſtate: pag. 675.

Infants of beleeving parents ſaved.

Exod. 20.

Contra. 1. Concerning the children of the faithfull that dye in their infancie, we affirme that they all by nature are ſubject to eternall damnation, and if God adjudge any of them to condemnation, he doth it juſtly: which we leave unto Gods ſecret judgement: yet we are of charitie rather to judge, that the infants of ſuch, whom God calleth to himſelfe, and ſo prevent the courſe of ſin, are ſaved, becauſe they are under the covenant. And here we underſtand not onely thoſe children to be under the covenant, whoſe immediate parents were beleevers, but if any of their predeceſſors in former times beleeved, for the promiſe of grace is made to a thouſand generations, Exod. 20. But whereas Snecanus holdeth all the children of the faithfull, both thoſe that dye, and they that remaine, that they are elected; whereas we ſee, that many righteous mens children doe fall away from God: how can it be? unleſſe they will affirme, that men may fall away from election, which how abſurd it is, wee have ſhewed before. Againe, though the children of the faithfull be ſaved by the covenant of grace, yet are they not by faith: faith then alone is not the object of election, as they affirme.

2 Concerning Infidels children, it is ſtrange that Snecanus ſo much forgetteth himſelfe, as to ſend us to Gods extraordinarie and ſecret working; whereas he telleth us, I am ſure above an hundred times in his booke, De prædeſtinatione, that God dealeth not with us in the matter of predeſtination, Secundum abſolutam ſuam, aut extraordinariam potentiam, according to his extraordinarie power, pag. 677. aut occulta ſua voluntate, or after his ſecret will, ſed ex lege ſui fœderis in ſacra ſcriptura patefacti, pag. 623. but after the law of his covenant ſet forth in Scripture: What meaneth he then in the predeſtination of Infidels children to ſend us to Gods extraordinarie worke and ſecret will? hee ſhould have ſhewed us ſomewhat revealed in Scripture.

But to helpe him a little: we affirme, that even ſome children of Infidels, whom it pleaſeth God, may ordinarily be elected: for, ſuch children of Infidels, whoſe immediate parents were unbeleevers, but their former anceſtors were faithfull, may be ſaved by the covenant of grace, which is made to a thouſand generations: the reſt indeed that are ſaved, whoſe progenitors were altogether Infidels, are ſaved by Gods ſecret election, and ſomewhat extraordinarily: unto the which Snecanus is faine to flye for the reſolution of this queſtion. And thus much alſo of this inconvenience.

S. Ambroſe thus enforceth this objection concerning infants: Lib. 1. de vocat. Gent. cap. 5. Reſpice ad univerſalem multitudinem parvulorum, &c. Looke unto the univerſall multitude of little ones: which all before the uſe of underſtanding and free-will, ſome goe unto eternall happineſſe being regenerate, others to perpetuall miſerie being not borne againe: If you confeſſe originall ſin, they are all guiltie: if you ſeeke for innocencie, they are all without fault: Non invenit, quod diſcernat humana juſtitia, ſed habet, quod eligat inenarrabilis gratia: Human juſtice can finde nothing, to diſcerne or make difference, but the unſpeakable grace findeth ſomewhat to elect, &c. The election of children is grounded only upon the grace of God, here is no fore-ſight, or reſpect had unto faith.

Lib. 6. Hypognoſtic.

And that onely infidelitie is not the cauſe of damnation; 1 Auguſtine teſtifieth of the Africane Church: this rule muſt be firmly held; peccatores in malis propriis, antequam eſſent in hoc mundo, præſcitos non prædeſtinatos, &c. That ſinners were fore-ſeene in their proper evils, not predeſtinate, before they were in the world, but their puniſhment was predeſtinate according to that which they were fore-ſeene, &c. the reprobate then have their proper and peculiar ſinnes, not all one common ſinne of infidelitie onely.

Qu. 64. in Geneſ.

2 Theodoret. God being good, Non vult punire ex ſola præſcientia, ſed expectat operum conſummationem, & ita omnibus oſtendit, quàm juſte puniat: Will not puniſh all according to his preſcience only, but he expecteth the conſummation of their works, and ſo he ſheweth unto all how juſtly hee puniſheth, &c. ſo then not onely infidelitie, but other evill works condemne.

3 Confeſſion of Belgia, artic.16. God is mercifull and juſt, mercifull by delivering, &c. juſt in leaving others in that their fall and perdition, whereunto they had throwne themſelves headlong, &c. they make originall ſinne the firſt ground of reprobation, then not infidelitie onely. Harm. ſect. 5. pag 87.

4 Thomas thus determineth the queſtion whether infidelitie be a ſinne, if it be taken onely negatively, as in them which never heard any thing of the faith: it is rather a puniſhment of ſinne, than ſinne it ſelfe: and they which are incredulous in this ſenſe, damnantur quidem propter alia peccata,—non autem propter infidelitatis peccatum, they are damned for other ſinnes, which yet cannot be remitted without faith, and not for the ſinne of infidelitie, &c. Infidelitie then in his opinion is not the only cauſe of condemnation. 2.2. qu. 10. artic.1.

The ſeventh Inconvenience.

A*Bſurd.* 7. If it were ſo, that God elected ſo many, as hee fore-ſaw ſhould beleeve, and upon this foreſight cauſed the Goſpell to be preached unto them, and that God rejected thoſe whom he foreſaw would not beleeve, and therefore ſuffered them to abide in ignorance ſtill, it were no myſterie or ſecret at all in our faith, why God hath choſen ſome, and refuſed others: for the reaſon is apparant, becauſe ſome beleeve, and others doe not. But Saint Paul acknowledgeth here a great and unſearchable myſterie, that ſeeing all are ſhut up in unbeleefe, and ſo are in the ſame common caſe, yet God hath mercie only on whom he will. Whereupon the Apoſtle in admiration of this great ſecret, crieth out, O the deepnes of the riches of the wiſedome and knowledge of God! how unſearchable are his judgements, and his wayes paſt finding out? To this place our adverſaries anſwer diverſly. Rom.11.33.

Firſt Puckſius ſaith, that the Apoſtle crieth not out in admiration, as not finding a ſolution concerning the queſtion, why ſome were choſen, others refuſed: for it had been a thing unworthie ſo great an Apoſtle, ſo to leave his diſputation imperfect: but thus rather, having fully diſcuſſed this doubt, that the cauſe why ſome are refuſed, is their diffidence only and diſtruſt, he giveth thanks to God for the finding out of this ſolution, from whoſe wiſedome he had learned it: ration, 76.

Contra. 1. The Apoſtle bringeth no ſuch ſolution here, as hee dreameth of, as though the cauſe were in the beleefe or unbeleefe of men, why God had mercie on ſome, and not on others: nay rather the contrarie appeareth, becauſe the Apoſtle ſaith, All men are ſhut up in unbeleefe: they are all by nature alike, none in themſelves more worthie of favour than other: And therefore all is aſcribed to Gods mercie: but mercie is free, and therefore not cauſed by any deſert of faith, or works. 2 That the Apoſtle falleth into an admiration, the manner of his ſpeech declareth: and he plainly confeſſeth this doctrine farre to exceed all human reach: Gods wayes (he ſaith) are unſearchable, and paſt finding out: Is not this caviller therefore aſhamed to confeſſe that doctrine to be eaſie and plaine, which the Apoſtle calleth deepe, profound, and unſearchable? 3 Neither doth the Apoſtle leave his diſputation imperfect, but it is perfect and abſolute: (if we underſtand ſuch perfection, as man in this life may attaine unto) for otherwiſe if the knowledge of the greateſt Prophets and Apoſtle, in this life be compared with the revelations of the life to come, it is imperfect: We know in part, and propheſie in part; when that which is perfect is come, then that which is in part ſhall be aboliſhed. Neither doth Saint Paul commit any thing unworthie his Apoſtleſhip, in ſubjecting himſelfe to the depth of Gods judgements: but here ſheweth himſelfe an example of that which he teacheth others, That no man preſume to underſtand above that which is meet to underſtand, but that he underſtand according to ſobrietie. Neither was it a diſgrace to the Apoſtle to be ignorant of ſome part of Gods counſell, no more than where elſe he ſaith, he heard words which cannot be ſpoken, which are not poſſible for men to utter. If he could not utter that which he heard and ſaw, how much more that which was not at all revealed unto him, but kept ſecret in Gods counſell? 1 Cor.11.9,10. Rom.12.3. 2 Cor.12.4.

Secondly, Hemingius ſaith, The wayes of God are here ſaid to be unſearchable, becauſe they can not be found out by the wit of man: For the naturall man perceiveth not the things that are of God: But yet it followeth not, but that in the word of God, whatſoever is neceſſarie to ſalvation to bee knowne is revealed: as Saint Paul ſaith, We have the minde of Chriſt: Sic Hemingius pag.52. Snecan. pag. 762. 1 Cor.2.16.

Contra. Firſt, that all things neceſſarie to ſalvation are revealed in the Scriptures, we grant, for they are able to make us wiſe to ſalvation, and perfect to all good works. But to know the cauſe why God electeth ſome, and not others, is not any part of this neceſſary knowledge, but rather a point of curioſitie. Secondly, that the myſterie of ſalvation, though not revealed to fleſh and blood, yet is diſcerned by the ſpirituall man in the Scriptures we grant, as the Apoſtle ſpeaketh: yet are there ſome ſecrets of God which are not revealed in this life, neither to the regenerate, nor unregenerate, of the which ſort this is, whereof the Apoſtle here ſpeaketh: he meaneth that theſe wayes of God, concerning the ſecrecie of election, are ſimply unſearchable of all; as it may appeare by that which followeth; Who hath knowne the minde of God, or who was his counſeller, or who hath given unto him firſt? &c. But no man either naturall or ſpirituall hath beene Gods counſeller, to know his minde, or hath given unto him firſt: where the Apoſtle ſecretly excludeth all manner foreſight in our election, of 2 Tim.3.15.17. 1 Cor.2.10.16.

faith or works in men; for then they ſhould have given unto God firſt, which here is denied. Laſtly, the Apoſtle breaketh out into this admiration, not in the perſon of the carnall man, but in his owne perſon as ſpirituall, and confeſſeth, that even unto himſelfe the wayes of God herein were unſearchable.

Thirdly, Huberus anſwereth firſt, after a ſcoffing manner, that we may as well aske thus in other queſtions concerning faith and the Sacraments, as why all men profit not by hearing the Goſpell preached, why all that are baptized, are not ſanctified, why all doe not receive the Euchariſt worthily? we may anſwer in theſe queſtions, as in this of election, very compendiouſly, ô abyſſus, ô abyſſus! O depth! but afterward he giveth us a more ſober anſwer: There be, ſaith he, two ſorts of profound things in the works of God. Some things ſo profound, that God hath kept the knowlege thereof to himſelfe, whereof there is nothing revealed in Scripture. Another ſort of profound things there is, when as we know that God hath done this or that, but the cauſe thereof we know not, neither are able to ſearch: we know them, τὸ ὅτι, that they are, but not διότι, why they are: As in this example whereof the Apoſtle intreateth: that the Gentiles were firſt rejected, and the Jewes called, and afterward the Gentiles choſen and the other refuſed, we know it ſo to be done, but wherefore wee know not, the cauſe thereof is unſearchable, Huber.theſ.937.947.948. So Snecanus ſaith, that the Apoſtle here doth reſtraine humane raſhnes, that we ſhould not be too buſie in ſearching out the cauſe of Gods works. Pag. 762.

Contra 1. Huberus ſcorneth not us, but ſcorneth the Apoſtle, who though in all other queſtions in religion, he were able to give a divine anſwer, as appeareth notably in his heavenly Epiſtles, yet in this caſe of Gods ſecret judgements, giveth no other anſwer but this, ô abyſſus! We in like manner, in other matters concerning our faith, where the word of God goeth before us, wee truſt by Gods grace, are able to frame ſome reaſonable anſwer, and need not to ſay abyſſus: (As to the queſtions propoſed) the effect of preaching, the efficacie of Baptiſme, the ſacramentall grace, are extinguiſhed in unworthie men through their unbeleefe and other ſins, whereof they have not repented, which although they be not the chiefe cauſe of their rejection, yet are they of their actuall condemnation; yet in this profound matter, why God hath mercie on ſome, and not on other ſome, we are not aſhamed to anſwer with the Apoſtle, ô abyſſus! Secondly, their diſtinction we miſlike not: it maketh for us, and againſt them: for us, we acknowlege in the worke of election, τὸ ὅτι, that God hath in his eternall counſell elected ſome, and not others, but διότι, why and for what cauſe God hath ſo done, wee know not, but hold it to be unſearchable: And particularly who are damned, who are ſaved, it is ſimply a profound ſecret: we neither know, ὅτι, that this man, or that, is ſaved or damned (though there be a meanes for every man to know it in himſelfe) much leſſe doe we know, διότι, the cauſe or reaſon thereof. It maketh againſt them, for they take upon them to ſet downe the cauſe of the election of the Gentiles, and rejection of the Jewes, and generally of all men, the foreſight of faith in the one; and unbeleefe or contempt of grace in the other: And ſo they make the judgements of God eaſie and plaine, and not unſearchable at all.

I will conclude this place with that ſaying of Ambroſe, or who elſe was the author of that booke De vocat. gent. lib.2.c.3. Altitudo divitiarum ſapientia & ſcientia Dei, cujus imperveſtigabiles via, ſic ſemper miſericordiam & judisium temperavit, ut ſecratiſſima aterni conſilii voluntate noluerit in omnibus, ſuper omnes generationes, aut ſuper omnes homines, aquales donorum ſuorum eſſe menſuras. Qua autem cauſa ſint harum diſſimilitudinum ſanctis ſcripturis non loquentibus quis loquetur? patienter & aquanimiter ignoretur, tam remotum ab humana cogitatione ſecretum, in quo ſcientia Pauli Apoſtoli à diſputatione tranſit ad ſtuporem: The depth of the riches of the knowlege and wiſedome of God, whoſe wayes are unſearchable, hath ſo tempered his mercie and judgement, that in the ſecret will of his eternall counſell, he would not have an equall meaſure of his gifts to be beſtowed upon all men: but what might bee the cauſe of this difference, the Scriptures not ſaying any thing, who can ſpeake? Let us with patience be content to be ignorant of ſo great a ſecret; wherein the knowlege of the Apoſtle Paul giveth place, and leaving to diſpute beginneth to wonder, &c. Thus doth this father expound this place of the Apoſtle.

Saint Auguſtine likewiſe counteth the doctrine of predeſtination a great ſecret: Cur hoc illi operetur, illi non operetur, metuentem me & trementem judicia ejus inſcrutabilia nolo interroges, quia quod lego credo & veneror, non autem diſcutio: Why he worketh in one and not in another, aske not me that feare and tremble at his unſearchable judgements: what I read I beleeve and reverence, I diſcuſſe not: who art thou man, that ſhouldeſt anſwer God? Hypognoſt.cont. Pelag.lib.3.

Saint Hierome alſo thus writeth: ad Cteſiphont. Quam quidem quaſtionem Apoſtolus ad Romanos, ſcribens ventilat, ignorans hac, & Dei concedens ſcientia, &c. Which queſtion the Apoſtle handleth to the Romans, being ignorant of this ſecret, and giving place to the knowlege of God.

Origen hom. 12. in Geneſ. Cur antequam ex utero procederent, &c. Why it is ſaid by the Prophet, Eſau have I hated, Iacob have I loved, before they came out of their mothers wombe? Hac ſupra noſtram linguam ſunt, & ſuper auditum veſtrum, &c. Theſe things exceed my tongue, and your hearing.

Cauſ.33.diſtinct.4.c.8. ex Auguſtin. in talibus rebus exclamamus, quam inſcrutabilia ſunt judicia ejus, &c. In theſe matters, we crie out, How unſearchable are his judgements? &c.

Magiſt.lib.1.diſt.40.d. Non aperit, ſed miratur Apoſtolus dicens, ô altitudo, &c. The Apoſtle doth not open this matter, but wondreth at it, and crieth out, O the depth of the riches of the wiſedome of God! &c.

Laſtly, Saint Ambroſe thus moſt excellently writeth: Cum Apoſtolus hec divinorum operum myſteria quodam mentis ſua profudiſſet exceſſu, &c. When the Apoſtle had in the exceſſe of his minde or meditation uttered theſe myſteries, hee endeth his expoſition with aſtoniſhment, and wondring at that he had ſaid, he exclaimed, O the depth, &c. omitting nothing of theſe things, whereof we muſt not be ignorant, and handling nothing, which it is not lawfull to know: for there are many things in the adminiſtration of Gods works, whoſe effects only are ſhewed, the cauſes lying hid, ut cum pateat quid geritur, non pateat cur geratur, that when it is apparant what is done, yet it appeareth not wherefore it is done, &c.

Theodulus ſaith: Ne petamus rationem eorum quæ agit Deus—nam infinita & inſcrutabilis judiciorum Dei natura eſt: Let us not aske a reaſon of Gods works,—for the nature of his judgements is infinite and inſcrutable, &c. In 11. c. ad Roman.

French confeſſ. Some are no better than others, till ſuch time, as the Lord doe make a difference, according to that immutable counſell, &c. This then is a great counſell, and ſecret to us, why God maketh ſuch a difference betweene one another. Harm. ſect. 5. pag. 85.

Lyranus, upon theſe words: his judgements are incomprehenſible, ſaith: Supra capacitatem naturæ intellectualis ſunt exceſſiva: They exceed the capacitie of the intellectuall nature: and the interlinearie gloſſe, ne putes comprehendi poſſe: thinke not they can be comprehended: and the gloſſe ordinarie; If any aske why they are ſo ſaved, Hoc ſe neſcire innuit per admirationem: he ſignifieth by his admiration, that he knoweth not. In 11. c. ad Roman. v. 33.

And thus hitherto in the Church of God, hath the doctrine of predeſtination been taken for a great ſecret, and hidden myſterie; which now in the opinion of theſe men, is an eaſie, plaine and common point of religion: and thus by humane reaſon they will comprehend the deep things of God, and therfore becauſe with the Apoſtle, we ſay that Gods judgements in electing whom he will, and refuſing as it pleaſeth him, are unſearchable, they ſcorne and deride both us and our faith. But we hold this in religion to be a great abſurditie, to meaſure divine myſteries by humane wit, and by reaſon to underſtand that which is by faith to bee beleeved. Thus farre of the abſurdities, and ſtrange concluſions, which the patrons of univerſall ſaving grace doe maintaine.

1 That God hath created men without any particular knowlege or determination of their end.

2 That God electeth upon the fore-ſight and fore-knowlege of faith.

3 That it is in mans power by the ſtrength of his free-will to beleeve.

4 That a man may reſiſt the effectuall calling of God.

5 That the elect may become reprobates, and ſo loſe both their election and faith.

6 That contempt of grace is the onely cauſe of reprobation, whereas many nations never had grace offered, and ſo could not contemne it: and infants beſide are not capable of faith, which therefore they cannot deſpiſe.

7 They affirme the doctrine of Predeſtination to be eaſie and plaine, and within the compaſſe of mans underſtanding: All theſe inconveniences they are forced to grant, who affirme, that Chriſt died effectually for all men univerſally, and not for thoſe only whom he ordained to life.

To theſe we may adjoyne other abſurdities: firſt, that if Chriſt died for all, and yet all be not ſaved by Chriſt, it followeth, that Chriſt for ſome died in vaine: this Huberus willingly granteth, theſ. 1123. But the Scripture ſaith, that Chriſt loſeth nothing of all that is given him: but all that hee gave himſelfe for, are given unto him. Secondly, that the efficacie of Chriſts death may bee made fruſtrate by man: confeſſed by Huberus theſ. 1124. denied by S. Paul, ſhall their unbeleefe make the faith of God without effect? Thirdly, that in reſpect of Chriſt there is no difference betweene the reprobate and the elect, ſeeing hee died effectually for both, granted by Huberus pag. 1127. denied by the Apoſtle, God is the Saviour of all men (for he ſaveth both men and beaſt, as being the preſerver of that which he hath made) ſpecially of thoſe that beleeve: Ergo, God hath done ſomewhat more ſpecially for beleevers as their Redeemer, than for other men, as their Creator. Iohn 6. 39. Rom. 3. 3. Toſſan. theſ. 21. 1 Tim. 4. 10.

I will then conclude this place with that ſaying of Auguſtine, Quomodo iſtis dixit, non eſtis ex ovibus meis? quia videbat eos ad ſempiternum exitium præparatos, non ad vitam æternam ſui ſanguinis precio comparatos. How did our Saviour ſay unto ſome, you are not of my ſheep? becauſe hee ſaw, they were prepared to everlaſting deſtruction, not appointed to life eternall by the price of his blood: Tractat. in Iohan. 48. Here Auguſtine teſtifieth two things, both that the wicked and unbeleevers are ordained to everlaſting death, and that the blood of Chriſt was onely ſhed for the heires of ſalvation.

Laſtly, I will adjoyne the ſeale of this doctrine, that is, the teſtimonie of the holy Martyrs: Iohn Careleſſe thus profeſſeth his faith, I beleeve that Chriſt did effectually dye for all thoſe that effectually beleeve, and repent, and for none other, Fox pag. 1920. col. 1.

Thus have I ſufficiently (I truſt) maintained this ancient truth concerning the efficacie and benefit of Chriſts death ordained only for the elect: wherein (I doubt not) but that they which are ſomewhat wavering, and not yet ſetled in judgement, may ſoone be reſolved, if on the one ſide they doe conſider the ſubſtantiall grounds,and evident demonſtration of the truth,and on the other the weakneſſe of their proofes, the diverſitie of opinion in themſelves, and the neceſſary conſequence of ſo many abſurdities, that follow upon the opinion of univerſall or common grace. Wherefore I wonder,that ſome heretofore throughly perſwaded of the truth: ſhould now begin to ſtagger in opinion: to whom may be applied that ſaying of the Apoſtle, Gal.1.6. I marvell that ye are ſo ſoone removed away to another Goſpell: Againe, Gal.3.1. Who hath bewitched you, that you ſhould not obey the truth, to whom Ieſus Chriſt was before deſcribed in your ſight? Wherefore the death of Chriſt being ſo evidently deſcribed unto us in Scripture, to appertaine onely to the elect: Let us therein reſt, and leaving all other ſtrange and new opinions, which may diſturbe our peace, and diſtract ſimple minds, let us from henceforth follow the truth in love: which God grant.

The third queſtion, of the cauſe of Predeſtination.

The Papiſts.

24. Error. OUr adverſaries are not all of one opinion concerning this matter. The Rhemiſts affirme, that God doth neither elect nor reprobate any, but in reſpect of their works either good or evill: Concerning election thus they write, Chriſt doth not appoint any by his abſolute and eternall election, to be partakers of the fruit of his redemption, without any reſpect or condition of their owne works, obedience of free-will. Rhem.Heb. 5.ſect.9. Concerning reprobation alſo, thus they ſay: God doth not hate or reprobate any man, but for ſinne, or the fore-ſight thereof, Rhem. Rom.9.ſect. 2.

Bellarmine is of a contrary judgement to the Rhemiſts, ſo well they agree together: for he confeſſeth that the election of Gods children dependeth onely of the gracious will of God without any reſpect to their works: he granteth, electos eſſe gratis, ante omnem operum pravifionem, that they are elected freely, before any fore-ſight of their works, lib. 2. de grat.cap.10. And he doth not onely affirme it, but proveth it by many arguments,and at large confuteth the contrarie opinion. But for reprobation, his ſentence is this, Partim ad ſolam Dei voluntatem, partim ad peccata praviſa referendam eſſe: That is partly to be referred to the will of God, partly to the fore-ſight of ſinne: not wholy to either, but in part to both, cap.16.

And further he explaineth his minde thus: There is,ſaith he,reprobatio negativa,a negative reprobation; as thus, God hath no will or purpoſe to ſave the wicked: There is alſo reprobatio poſitiva, a poſitive reprobation, as when God doth ordaine ſome, not onely not to be ſaved, but to be condemned: the firſt act of reprobation dependeth onely of the will of God, without any reſpect had unto men: the ſecond is cauſed by the fore-ſight of ſinne, ibid.

And here we doe not much miſlike the Jeſuites opinion in this matter as agreeable to ours,and not much differing from the truth,as even now ſhall be ſeene: ſo that in this place we have no great cauſe to contend with Bellarmine: but our whole buſineſſe is with the Rhemiſts.

First, for their ſentence concerning election, that it ariſeth only from the fore-ſight of our works, they reaſon thus, Heb.5.9. the Apoſtle ſaith, He is made the author of ſalvation, to all that obey him: They are not elected we ſee, without condition of obedience: To the ſame purpoſe alſo is alleaged by ſome that place of the Apoſtle: 2 Tim.2.20. In a great houſe, &c. and ſome veſſels are for honour, ſome for diſhonour, if any man purge himſelfe from theſe, he ſhall be a veſſell of honour: here we ſee, that by free will and good works a man is made a veſſell of honour.

Anſwer. First, God indeed electeth all that ſhall be ſaved, not with any condition on their owne behalfe, but on his owne behalfe; for unto them, whom he chuſeth he will give grace to obey, will to beleeve, and power to doe that he appointeth.

Secondly, good works are the effects and fruits that follow Predeſtination: Rom.8.30. Whom he hath predeſtinate he hath called, whom he hath called, he hath juſtified, &c. Therefore they can be no cauſe of election.

Thirdly, a better anſwer cannot be found, than that which Bellarmine maketh: Bellarm. cap. 13.reſponſ. ad 2. teſtimon. the Apoſtle ſaith not, that a man by purging himſelfe from vice is made a veſſell of honour,but onely,that he is,or ſhall be: that is, is knowne ſo to be,for our faith and obedience are no cauſe why the Lord elected us: but they are meanes certificatorie, and infallible arguments to aſſure us of our election: as S.Peter ſaith, Make your election ſure, &c. Epiſt.1. 10.

Rom.8.29. Argum.2.Rom.8.29. Thoſe which he knew before, he predeſtinate to be made like to the image of his ſon, &c. Ergo, Gods preſcience is the cauſe of predeſtination.

Anſw. First, God in deed doth know in his preſcience all thoſe, which are predeſtinate to life: for how can they be predeſtinate, if they be not knowne? Secondly, the Apoſtle ſaith not he knew them before to be like, &c. but he did predeſtinate them to be like his ſonne: this conformitie then is an effect of their Predeſtination, not a cauſe. Thirdly, Gods preſcience here may be taken for the knowlege of approbation: John 10.14. as Chriſt is ſaid to know his ſheepe, that is to love them, approve them: Pſal.1.6. So God is ſaid to know the way of the righteous.

Matth.20.8. Argum.3. Matth.20. Call the labourers and give them their reward, Ergo, heaven is ordained for mens good works.

Anſw. Firſt, this place ſheweth that good works are the way unto heaven, wherein we muſt walke: but not, that the decree of life hath reſpect to good works: There is difference then betweene the decree of predeſtination, and the execution thereof: good works goe before the poſſeſſion of heaven, but not before the decree and ordination.

Secondly, S. Ambroſe out of this place frameth a contrary argument, proving thereby, that election is altogether of grace without any reſpect to works. Lib. 1. de vocat. gentium. c. 3. Hora undecima intromiſſis in vineam, &c. They which were ſent into the vineyard at the eleventh houre, by the divine indulgence were made equall to the labourers of the whole day, not paying the price of their labour, but ſhewing the riches of his goodneſſe to thoſe, whom he choſe without works, &c. Let us now ſee on the other ſide, what they can ſay concerning reprobation.

Argum. 1. The Apoſtle ſaith, Wrath, and indignation ſhall be upon the ſoule of every man that doth evill: therefore the reprobation of the wicked hath relation to their evill works. Rom. 2. 9.

Anſw. Saint Paul ſpeaketh not in this place of the decree of reprobation made againſt the wicked; but of the execution rather of that decree: the evill works then of wicked men, are not the only cauſe of their rejection, which is an abſolute act of Gods own will, yet are they a juſt cauſe of their damnation: that although wrath and indignation bee decreed againſt them from the beginning, yet this ſentence is not executed upon them, before by their evill works comming betweene, they have worthily deſerved the damnation decreed againſt them.

Argum. 2. To condemne a man without cauſe, is an unjuſt thing, and therefore it is farre off from God who is moſt juſt, to condemne the wicked without reſpect to their ſinnes.

Anſw. Firſt, there is great difference betweene damnation it ſelfe, and the decree or ſentence of damnation: God indeed condemneth none without their deſerts: for there is no man which is condemned in hell, but by his evill life before worthily deſerved it: and ſo it is moſt true, which Auguſtine ſaith: Bonus eſt Deus, juſtus eſt Deus, poteſt aliquos ſine bonis meritis liberare, quia bonus eſt, non poteſt quenquam ſine malis meritis damnare, quia juſtus eſt: God is good, and God is juſt, hee may ſave a man without any good works of his, becauſe hee is good; but hee cannot condemne any man without his evill deſerts, becauſe he is juſt: cont. Iulian. 3. 18. Secondly, as for the decree and ſentence of condemnation, it is no unjuſt thing for God, as it pleaſeth him to diſpoſe of his creature, whether to honour, or diſhonour: as the Potter hath right and power to make of the ſame clay veſſels either to honorable, or vile uſes, Rom. 9. 21. And yet God caſteth of none, but juſtly, not only in reſpect of his abſolute right and power, which he hath over his creature, but in regard of them alſo that are caſt off, all being loſt in Adam. Rom. 9. 21.

The Proteſtants.

First, that the election of the faithfull proceedeth only from the mercifull and gracious will of God, without any fore-ſight of their good works as any cauſe thereof: we prove it thus.

Argum. 1. That which is the effect of our election, cannot be the cauſe thereof: but good works are the fruits and effects of our election: Ergo. This is proved by S. Paul: God hath choſen us in Chriſt before the foundation of the world, that we ſhould be holy, Epheſ. 1. 4. upon the which words Auguſtine writeth thus, Elegit nos ut eſſemus ſancti, non quia futuri eramus, ſed ut eſſemus,—& ſecundum bonam voluntatem ſuam, non noſtram, quæ bona eſſe non poſſit, niſi ipſe ſecundum bonam voluntatem ſuam ut bona fieret, ſubveniret: He hath choſen us, ſaith the Apoſtle, that we ſhould bee holy, not becauſe hee ſaw we ſhould be holy, but to the end we might bee holy, and according to his good pleaſure, not after our owne will, which could not be good, unleſſe he according to his good will ſhould aſſiſt us to make it good, &c. So then our holineſſe and obedience is a fruit and effect of our election, not a cauſe thereof, neither is there any free-will or good diſpoſition in man, till God make it free and good. Epheſ. 1. 4. De prædeſtinat. ſanctor. c. 18.

Argum. 2. The Apoſtle ſaith, Our election, is not of the willer, or of the runner, but of God that ſheweth mercie: Ergo, the mercie of God is the only ground of our election: for if our faith or works ſhould be for any ſuch end or purpoſe fore-ſeene, it ſhould bee of the willer, and runner, which the Apoſtle denieth. Auguſtine alſo ſaith: Quia per gratiam liberantur, non vaſa meritorum ſuorum, ſed vaſa miſericordia nominantur: Becauſe they are ſaved or delivered by grace, they are called not veſſels of their owne merits, but veſſels of grace, de natur. & grat. lib. 1. 5. Yea the Rhemiſts confeſſe againſt themſelves, that Gods meere mercie is ſeene in the elect: Rom. 9. ſect. 2. Ergo, our election is a worke of Gods meere mercie: there is then no reſpect at all had to our works, for then it were not of Gods meere and ſole mercy. Rom. 9. 16.

Argum. 3. It is your Fathers pleaſure to give you a kingdome: You have not choſen me, but I have choſen you: but if men bee choſen for their good works, then they ſhould chuſe God firſt: I have reſerved or left to my ſelfe ſeven thouſand, &c. Hee ſaith not, they are reſerved, but I have reſerved: ſo then ſaith the Apoſtle, There is a remnant, through the election of grace: if of grace, then not of works. Luke 12. 32. Iohn 15. 16. Rom. 11. 14.

Likewiſe, the Apoſtle propoundeth the examples of Iacob and Eſau, of whom it was ſaid, Iacob have I loved, Eſau have I hated, before they were borne, and before they had done good or evill, that the purpoſe of God might remaine according to election, not by works: Ergo, Gods election is not upon the fore-ſight of any mans works. Rom. 9. 11.

Object. Theſe are examples of temporall, not ſpirituall bleſſings, and Iacob and Eſau ſignifie two people, the Apoſtle ſpeaketh not of the election or reprobation of any in particular.

Contra. 1. It is evident, that the Apoſtle ſpeaketh of election, not in temporall things, but to everlaſting glory: verſ. 23. That he might ſhew the riches of his glory upon the veſſels of mercie, prepared unto glory. 2 So likewiſe he entreateth of particular election, and reprobation, as may appeare by the example of Pharao, who is brought in as an inſtance of particular rejection.

Argum. 4. Bellarmine that mightily impugneth this opinion, uſeth divers effectuall reaſons out of Scripture, to prove election to proceed only of grace: I will briefly repeate them.

1 None can be ſaved without faith: but faith is the gift of God: Ergo, election is the free gift of God. It will be anſwered, that faith is not given to all, becauſe all will not receive it, but they which doe obey their calling (for God calleth all, and giveth all ſufficient help to beleeve, if they will) are fore-ſeene that they will beleeve, and ſo predeſtinate. Contra. Though God doe offer unto all generall and ſufficient meanes of their calling, yet none can beleeve, unleſſe God effectually worke in them:
Iohn 10.26. Yee beleeve not, becauſe yee are not of my ſheep.

Matth. 10.22. 2 Without the gift of perſeverance, none can be ſaved: He that endureth to the end ſhall be ſaved:
Iohn 13.17. but perſeverance is the free gift of God; of grace, not of works: nor yet given to all: If yee know theſe things, bleſſed are yee, if yee doe them: I ſpeake not of you all, I know whom I have choſen: Ergo, election unto life is of grace.

3 Infants dying, ſome are ſaved, ſome condemned, having done yet neither good nor bad: Ergo, election is not of works: it will be anſwered, that Infants are predeſtinate according to the fore-ſight of their works, which they ſhould have done, if they had lived: and beſide, Infants are not condemned to hell, but have a place of reſt appointed for them, though they be not ſaved. Contra. 1. The Apoſtle
2 Cor. 5. 10. ſaith, Every man muſt receive according to the things done in the fleſh, not fore-ſeene to bee done.
Rom. 5. 16. 2 Againe, S. Paul ſheweth, that death and condemnation are the reward of originall ſin, unto which Infants are ſubject being borne in originall ſin: if then they are not ſaved, they are condemned.

Rom. 1. 4. 4 Chriſt as he was man, was freely predeſtinate to bee the Sonne of God: man Chriſt could not deſerve by any works to be the Son of God: Ergo, his members alſo are freely predeſtinate.

5 If men were elected by the fore-ſight of their works, then it ſhould bee no myſterie nor matter
Rom. 11. 33. of admiration as the Apoſtle maketh it: for the reaſon is evident, why God electeth ſome and not others, namely becauſe of their works that are fore-ſeene. Bellarm. lib. 2. de grat. cap. 12.

Secondly, concerning the decree of reprobation, our ſentence is this: firſt, that as eternall ſalvation is from the beginning ordained for the elect, ſo eternall deſtruction is decreed for the reprobate: for we cannot but affirme, that God both our firſt Creator, and laſt Judge, did both fore-ſee and appoint the end of every creature. Secondly, God doth reject the wicked two wayes, conſilio, in his eternall counſell, and facto, by the execution of his counſell and decree, which ſhall bee in their actuall damnation: his counſell or decree of rejection is alſo two-fold, it is either decretum præteritionis, the abſolute decree in paſſing by or not chooſing ſome, but leaving them in their owne nature: And this is called reprobation in two reſpects: firſt, by way of compariſon, becauſe he that is not loved or leſſe
Gen. 29. 31. loved, is ſaid to be hated, as Iacob is ſaid to deſpiſe Lea, that is, he loved her not as he did Rachel: and
Deut. 21. 15. againe it is ſaid: If a man have two wives, one beloved, the other hated, &c. that is, not ſo much loved: ſecondly, it is ſo called becauſe of the end and event, becauſe reprobation and damnation followeth upon the decree of preterition. There is alſo decretum ex praſcientia, the decree of reprobation iſſuing out of Gods preſcience and fore-knowlege: who as he did fore-ſee in the beginning the obſtinacie and wickedneſſe of men, ſo hee preordained in his juſtice the ſame to bee puniſhed: as a Judge fore-knowing and underſtanding the wickedneſſe of a malefactor, may juſtly with himſelfe ordaine his puniſhment, before he be brought forth in open judgement. From hence wee obſerve theſe three things: firſt, the difference betweene thoſe two decrees: the decree of preterition or omiſſion is not the efficient cauſe of damnation, but only an antecedent or fore-runner to it: the proper cauſe of damnation is the ſinne of the creature: the externall or accidentall cauſe is the juſtice of God, that cannot otherwiſe chuſe, but puniſh ſinne: but the decree of preſcience, according to the fore-ſight of their ſinnes, that are rejected, doth ordaine and procure unto them moſt juſtly eternall damnation: Pœnam Deus decrevit, & ordinavit efficienter ut juſtus judex: God as a juſt Judge, is the efficient cauſe by his decree of the puniſhment, Iun. reſponſ. ad ration. 72. Secondly, we muſt note the difference betweene the decree of election and reprobation: for men are elected without any fore-ſight of their works, but they are not reprobate without reſpect to their works: God did both fore-ſee and ordaine both the godly life and glorious ſalvation of the elect, as the proper cauſe of them both; but as for the ſinnes of the reprobate, God fore-ſaw them only: their juſt and deſerved puniſhment, hee both fore-ſaw, and did ordaine: ſo that, cauſa perditionis ab hominibus interna, ſalutis à Deo externa eſt: The cauſe of mens perdition is inward in themſelves, the cauſe of their ſalvation is externall from God, Iun. reſponſ. ad ration. 16. Thirdly, the decree of preterition, that is, of not chuſing ſome, which Bellarmine calleth negative reprobation, is a free act of Gods will without reſpect had to the creature; but the decree according to Gods fore-knowlege, hath relation unto their works: ſo that the decree of reprobation and actuall condemnation, as it dependeth not abſolutely altogether upon Gods will, without reſpect had unto the ſin and rebellion of the reprobate, ſo neither doth it ſpring only from the fore-ſight of ſin, as the Rhemiſts affirme, that God doth not reprobate any but for ſin.

But touching this diſtinction of negative and poſitive reprobation, and of the decree of preterition, and of preſcience; thus much muſt be added further by way of explanation: that becauſe damnation neceſſarily followeth upon rejection and preterition, as Tertullian ſaith, Sicut ad ſalutem vocat, quem non recuſat, ita in perditionem damnat, quem recuſat: As he calleth to ſalvation, whom hee refuſeth not, ſo he damneth to perdition, whom he refuſeth: and againe, Quis erit exitus ſegregatorum? nonne amiſſio ſalutis? What ſhall be the end of thoſe which are ſet apart, and forſaken? is it not the loſſe of ſalvation? And therefore in effect the poſitive and negative reprobation are all one: wherefore to deliver the decree of God in rejecting ſome, from all ſhew of injuſtice or crueltie: I now ſee no reaſon, why Auguſtines opinion may not ſafely be received, who maketh the Maſſe of damnation in Adam the object of Gods decree: Una quadam maſſa peccati ſupplicium debens divina juſtitia: There is one maſſe of ſin, owing puniſhment to the divine juſtice: Quod ſive exigatur, ſive donetur, nulla iniquitas, Which whether it be exacted, or pardoned, there is no iniquitie with God: ad Simplician. lib. 1. c. 2. So then mankinde being conſidered as all loſt in Adam, the Lord out of his owne gracious will elected ſome out of this maſſe or lumpe of perdition, leaving the other, (here is the decree of preterition, iſſuing forth of Gods will and counſell) thoſe being left in their ſtate of corruption, are fore-ſeene, in the conſummation and acceſſion of many other ſins, and ſo are ordained to damnation, (here is the decree iſſuing out of his preſcience.)

Lib. 4. adverſ. Marcion.

In eodem libro.

Whether man conſidered in his fall, be the ſubject of predeſtination.

Here we have the conſent of other reformed Churches, that the maſſe of corruption in Adam muſt bee ſuppoſed in the decree of election and reprobation. French confeſſ. Wee beleeve, that out of this univerſall corruption and damnation, wherein all men by nature are drowned, God did deliver and preſerve ſome, whom by his eternall and immutable counſell, of his goodneſſe and mercie, without any reſpect of their works, hee did chuſe in Chriſt Ieſus, and others hee left in that corruption and damnation. &c. Confeſſ. of Belgia, artic. 16. We beleeve that God (after the whole off-ſpring of Adam, was caſt headlong into perdition and deſtruction, through the fault of the firſt man) hath declared himſelfe, mercifull and juſt: Mercifull by ſaving thoſe—whom of his owne free goodneſſe he hath choſen in Chriſt, without any regard at all to their worke: but juſt in leaving others in that their fall and perdition, &c. See this point fully, and at large cleared elſe-where, whither I referre the Reader.

Harm. ſect. 5. pag. 86.

Ibid. ſect. 5. pag. 87.

Hexap. in epiſt. ad Roman. c. 9. contr. 10.

Auguſtine putteth the caſe of two twinnes: Quorum unus aſſumitur, alius relinquitur, diſpar eſt exitus, merita communia: One of them is received, the other forſaken, their end is farre unlike, and yet the works of them both are the ſame, &c. Two Infants die in their infancie, one before Baptiſme, and ſo as the Papiſts hold, is damned; another after Baptiſme, and is ſaved: the works of them both are alike: if therefore their predeſtination ſhould depend of the fore-ſight of their works only, good or evill, they ſhould both have the ſame end.

And as we ſee it to bee in children, ſo ſaith Auguſtine: Hoc & in majoribus fieri nequaquam cunctemur: Wee need not to doubt, but that God even ſo dealeth with men of greater yeeres: therefore he thus concludeth: Inveſtigabilis ergo eſt Dei miſericordia, qua cujus vult miſeretur, nullis ejus precedentibus meritis; & inveſtigabilis veritas, qua quem vult obdurat, ejus precedentibus meritis, ſed cum eo cujus miſeretur, plerunque communibus: Therefore unſearchable is the mercie of God, whereby hee hath mercie on whom he will, no merits of his going afore: and unſearchable is his truth, whereby he hardneth whom hee will, his deſerts going before, but the very ſame with his, upon whom God hath mercie, de perſeveran. lib. 2. cap. 11. It remaineth then, that neither election, nor reprobation are decreed, becauſe of mens works that are fore-ſeene, but doe proceed from the free-will and counſell of God: leaving ſome in the ſtate of corruption, into which all mankinde is fallen by Adam, and his mercie delivering ſome, lib. de predeſtin. & grat. c. 16.

Laſtly, I will adde one other reaſon out of Auguſtine, to ſhut up this place withall: Si humanum genus, quod creatum primitus conſtat ex nihilo, non cum debita mortis & peccati origine naſceretur, & tamen ex eis creator omnipotens in æternum nonnullos damnare voluit interitum, quis omnipotenti Creatori diceret, cur feciſti ſic? If that mankinde, which in the beginning God created of nothing, were not by nature ſubject both to ſin, and death, and yet the almightie Creator would condemne ſome to everlaſting deſtruction, who would ſay unto him, Lord why haſt thou done ſo? &c. His opinion is this, that though there were no matter of condemnation naturally in man, yet God by the right of his Creatorſhip might diſpoſe of his creature as he thought beſt, whether unto death or life.

But againſt this, which hath been before ſet downe touching the decree of rejection and reprobation, that it hath relation to man being in tranſgreſſion, and conſidered in his fall, it will bee thus objected.

1 Object. The Apoſtle ſaith, that God pronounced of Iacob and Eſau, that the one he loved, the other he hated, before they had done good or evill: Rom. 9. 11. Therefore the decree of reprobation reſpecteth not at all the evill or ſin that followed after.

Anſw. Eſau was rejected before hee had done evill, being yet unborne, yet Eſau was fore-ſeene in the ſtate of corruption, out of the which Iacob was delivered by grace, and the other ſuffered ſo to remaine.

2 Object. God is compared to a Potter, that out of the ſame clay may make one veſſell to honour, another to diſhonour, Rom. 9. 21.

Anſwer. 1. This clay is the lump or maſſe of corruption, into the which man is fallen by Adams tranſgreſſion: out of the which God maketh ſome veſſels of honour in ſelecting them by grace, and the reſt are made veſſels of wrath, remaining ſtill in their corruptible ſtate: 2 Or it may be ſaid, that the Apoſtle ſpeaketh here of Gods abſolute power, what he might doe de jure, by the right of a Creator, as is alleaged before out of Auguſtine, not what hee doth de facto in fact: he dealeth not with us ſtricto jure, by his ſtrict right: for ſo if hee made all veſſels of diſhonour, becauſe it is his pleaſure, the creature is not to complaine: but his judgements are juſt and reaſonable, and tempered with mercie.

Now laſtly, that election is only of grace, S. Ambroſe is a notable witneſſe, lib. 1. de vocat. Gentium. cap. 5. ſpeaking of Infants, of whom ſome are ſaved and elected, others refuſed, he thus concludeth: Non invenit, quod diſcernat humana juſtitia, ſed habet, quod eligat inenarrabilis gratia: Human juſtice can find nothing whereby to diſcerne them, but unſpeakable grace findeth how to elect them. And againe, Omnibus hominibus cujuſlibet generis, &c. cauſa percipiendæ gratiæ voluntas Dei eſt, apud quem ratio electionis abſcondita, eſt &c. The cauſe of receiving grace unto all men, of what kinde ſoever, is the will of God, with whom the reaſon of election is hid and ſecret, their merits beginning from that grace, which they received without merits.

Lib. 2. c. 3. Datur ante ullum laborem, unde quiſq; mercedem accipiat, ſecundum ſuum laborem, &c. It is given before any labour, whereby according to their labour every man ſhall receive reward.

Againe, lib. 1. c. 3. Tales fuerunt, qui ſunt attracti, &c. They which are called, are the ſame, that they which remaine in their hardneſſe: Illis tribuit gratia ſtupenda quod voluit; iſtis retribuit veritas juſta, quod debuit: ut judicium Dei magis inſcrutabile ſit in electione gratiæ, quam in retributione juſtitiæ: Grace giveth to them, as ſhee would; Juſtice rendreth to the other, that which is due: that the judgement of God ſhould bee more unſearchable in the election of grace, than in the retribution of juſtice.

Secondly, that actuall reprobation is decreed to none without their deſerts: that although election cannot be merited, yet that damnation is deſerved, the ſame father thus witneſſeth, lib. 2. de vocat. Gent. c. 1. Nec damnati juſta eſt querimonia, nec juſtificati verax eſt arrogantia, ſi vel ille dicat non meruiſſe ſe pœnam, vel iſte aſſerat meruiſſe ſe gratiam, &c. Neither can the damned juſtly complaine, nor the juſtified truely boaſt; if either he ſay he hath not deſerved puniſhment, or the other, that hee hath deſerved grace: & cap. 9. Cum illos propria nequitia demergat ad pœnam, iſtos Dei gratia perducat ad gloriam: Seeing their wickedneſſe doth caſt them downe into paine, and grace bringeth the other to glory.

Likewiſe Auguſtine, as he is alleaged, cauſ. 23. qu. 4. c. 24. Nec de judicio Dei querimur, quo deſerit meritos deſeri, & miſericordia ejus gratias agimus, qua liberat non meritos liberari: Neither doe wee complaine of the judgement of God, whereby hee forſaketh thoſe that deſerved to bee forſaken, and we give thanks to his mercie, whereby he delivereth thoſe, which deſerveth not to be delivered: ſee before the judgement of other Churches, touching the free and gracious decree of election, without any fore-ſight of works: Error 23. the 2. inconvenience.

Thus we conclude, that actuall reprobation is not decreed to any, nor executed without reſpect to their deſerts; yet the electing of ſome, and the not electing of others dependeth only of the abſolute will and purpoſe of God, as I have ſhewed.

The fourth queſtion, of the certaintie of Predeſtination.

The Papiſts.

25. Error. 1 THere are two parts of this queſtion: firſt, whether Gods decree, concerning the election of men, be certaine and unchangeable: Secondly, whether a man in this life may in himſelfe bee aſſured of his election. The firſt our adverſaries dare not plainly affirme: for it were great blaſphemie openly to ſay, that Gods decree may be changed: yet they doe in circumſtance of ſpeech affirme it: as Rhemiſt. Act. 27. ſect. 3. (Men cannot bee ſaved, though they bee predeſtinate, unleſſe they keep Gods commandements.) As though it were poſſible for men predeſtinate, not to keep the commandements of God, or in the end not to be ſaved. Likewiſe it was concluded in the Counſell of Trent, ſeſſ. 6. can. 23. that the grace of juſtification may bee loſt, which is as much to ſay, that a man may loſe his predeſtination: for none are juſtified, but whom God before hath predeſtinate, Roman. 8. 30. They cannot therefore fall away from the grace of juſtification, unleſſe they fall away from predeſtination.

The Proteſtants.

THat the decree of God, concerning ſuch as ſhall be ſaved, remaineth ſure and certaine, and that it is impoſſible for any of the Elect to fall away, the Scripture every where proveth.

Argum. Whom God loveth, hee loveth to the end, John 13. 1. The gifts and calling of God are without repentance, Rom. 11. 29. My Father is greater than all, and no man is able to take them out of his hand, John 10. 29. Ergo, our election is certaine, for with God there is not ſo much as any ſhadow of change, Iam. 1. 17.

Auguſtine ſaith, Horum qui electi ſunt, ſi quiſpiam perit, fallitur Deus, ſed nemo eorum perit, quia non fallitur Deus: Of the Elect, if any periſh, God is deceived: but none of them can periſh, becauſe God cannot be deceived, De corrept. & grat. cap. 7. This ſentence is repeated in the decrees, cauſ. 33. diſt. 2. de pœnit. c. 25.

Many other places to this purpoſe are cited out of Auguſtine by Eſpencæus a Popiſh writer, commentar. in 2 Timoth. pag. 51. as lib. 18. de civuat. Dei, c. 51. Ex eis quos præſcivit Deus, perire nullus poteſt: None can periſh of thoſe, whom God hath fore-knowne: lib, 20. c. 8. Nunquam ab illo eccleſia ſeducetur prædeſtinata & electa ante mundi conſtitutionem: The Church predeſtinate and elected before the conſtitution of the world, ſhall never be ſeduced from God: de catechizand. rudib. c. 11. Satis fixum corde debet retineri, nullum ex Ieruſalem illa periturum eſſe, quia qui perierat, ex illa non erat: It muſt be held as fixed in the heart, that none of that Jeruſalem can periſh, becauſe hee that periſheth, was not of it.

Aquinas is very ſound in this matter: part. 1. qu. 23. artic. 3. ad 2. & 3. Prædeſtinatum abſolutè quidem, & ſecundum ſe conſideratum, poſſe in peccato mortali emori, &c. That he, which is predeſtinate being abſolutely and in himſelfe conſidered, may die in mortall ſin, and periſh, non tamen ex ſuppoſitione, ſeu in ſenſu compoſito, but not by way of ſuppoſition, or in the compound ſenſe, that is, Gods everlaſting will and decree being preſuppoſed, &c. For certaine it is, that the predeſtinate of themſelves are ſubject to fall; but Gods decree of their ſalvation conſidered, they can never fall.

The ſame Aquinas, qu. 24. artic. 3. Simpliciter in libro vitæ ſcriptos nunquam deleri, &c. That ſimply they which are written in the book of life, cannot be blotted out: but they are ſaid to be blotted or raſed out, which are written there not by predeſtination, but in reſpect of their preſent juſtice: that this blotting out is to be referred to the opinion of men, not to the verity it ſelfe and knowlege of God.

Their owne Decrees agree: Cauſ. 23. qu. 4. c. 24. Eſſent prædeſtinati ſi eſſent reverſuri: They ſhould be predeſtinate, if they were to returne: Ergo, becauſe they returne not, they are not predeſtinate.

Cauſ. 33. diſt. 2. de pœnitent. Nullus eorum ex bono in malum mutatus finit hanc vitam: None of them being changed from good to evill, endeth his life: diſt. 4. c. 10. Ex his nemo ſeducitur: None of thoſe which are elected, are ſeduced.

The Maſter of Sentences evidently concludeth, for the certainty of predeſtination, lib. 1. diſtinct. 40. b. Non poteſt utrumq; ſimul eſſe, ut aliquis ſit prædeſtinatus & non ſalvetur, &c. Both of theſe cannot be together, that one ſhould bee ſaved, and not predeſtinate; or one to be predeſtinate, and yet damned: ibid. C. Non poteſt eſſe ut ab æterno ſit prædeſtinatus, & modò non ſit prædeſtinatus: It cannot bee, that one ſhould from everlaſting be predeſtinate, and yet now not bee predeſtinate. Thus I truſt this point is every way cleared as touching the certaintie of the decree of predeſtination. See further hereof before, error 23. in the fifth inconvenience.

The Papiſts.

FOr every man to bee aſſured infallibly that he ſhall be ſaved without ſpeciall revelation, is a moſt damnable, falſe illuſion, and preſumption, Rom. 8. ſect. 9. They call it a faithleſſe perſwaſion of ſalvation, to be confident of Gods grace and ſalvation, and fides dæmoniorum, not Apoſtolorum, the faith of devils, not of Apoſtles, Rhemiſt. 1 Corin. 9. ſect. 9. So the Tridentine Councell calleth certitudinem remiſſionis peccatorum, vanam, & ab omni pietate remotam fiduciam, The certainty of remiſſion of ſins, a vaine and faithleſſe perſwaſion. And therefore every man, De gratia formidare, & timere poteſt, may ſtand in doubt, and be afraid, whether he be in the ſtate of grace, ſeſſ. 6. cap. 9.

Argum. 1. S. Paul ſaith: I know nothing by my ſelfe, yet am I not thereby juſtified: Paul durſt not aſſure himſelfe, whether he were juſtified, Rhemiſt.

Anſw. Paul was moſt ſure of Gods grace, and his juſtification through faith: He is perſwaded that nothing can ſeparate him from the love of God in Chriſt: but hee doth acknowlege, that hee is not juſtified by his faithfull labours in the Goſpell, or any other works of his owne, although he were cleere in conſcience. Rom. 8. 38.

Argum. 2. Worke your ſalvation with feare and trembling: Ergo, men muſt not be ſecure of their ſalvation. Philip. 2. 12.

Anſw. We doe not teach men to walke ſecurely, or preſume of their election, but we proteſt unto them, that ſeeing men are predeſtinate unto good works, that unleſſe they be carefull to lead an holy life, they cannot aſſure themſelves to have part in predeſtination: yet we teach men notwithſtanding, aſſuredly to beleeve the promiſes of God made to all thoſe that beleeve, to bee ſaved. And this confidence doth very well agree with the feare of God. See theſe arguments anſwered more at large in the ſecond part of juſtification, queſt. 2. argum. 3. and 4. Then as Proſper well ſaith: ſentent. 6. ad capitul. Gallor. Gratia non abolet arbitrium, ſed adolet: Grace doth not aboliſh mans will and endevour, but cheriſh it. So predeſtination doth not make men more ſecure, but more carefull.

The Proteſtants.

OVr ſecuritie of ſalvation is no vaine preſumption, but an aſſurance upon the word of God, that through faith in God, and walking in that way which God hath appointed us, we ſhall undoubtedly come in the end to eternall life.

Argum. 1. As our election is certaine, ſure, and vndoubted before God: ſo it is the Lords pleaſure, 2 Pet. 1.10.

that every Chriſtian while he liveth, may and ought in himſelfe to bee aſſured thereof by a lively faith: as Saint Peter teacheth us to labour and give our diligence to make our calling and election ſure.

Rom. 8. 38.

Argum. 2. S. Paul ſaith, I am ſure, that neither death nor life, &c. ſhall ſeparate us from the love of God in Chriſt Ieſus: Ergo, the Apoſtle was certaine of his ſalvation.

Rhemiſt. Firſt, the Apoſtle ſpeaketh onely in generall: as if he ſhould have ſaid, So many as are elected, cannot certainly periſh.

2 Tim. 4. 8.

Anſwer. It is falſe, for the Apoſtle pronounceth particularly of himſelfe: as more plainly, 2 Timoth. 4. 8. From henceforth there is laid up for me a crowne of righteouſneſſe.

Rhemiſt. Secondly, S. Paul might have this perſwaſion by ſome eſpeciall revelation.

De corrept. & grat. cap. 7.

2 Tim, 2. 19.

2 Tim. 4. 8.

Anſwer. The ground of the Apoſtles perſwaſion is none other, but that which is common to all the faithfull, the love of God in Chriſt. And ſo Auguſtine interpreteth this place, writing thus: Iſti, ſignificati ſunt ad Timotheum, &c. Theſe, of whom the Apoſtle ſpeaketh, are ſignified in another place to Timothie. The foundation of God remaineth ſure, the Lord knoweth who are his: Ergo, this aſſurance and confidence is common, though not in the like meaſure to all faithfull Chriſtians. So the Apoſtle ſaith, that there was a crowne of righteouſneſſe laid up not only for him, but for all thoſe which love his appearing.

Bernard alſo telleth us, what this revelation is: Hoc non fit, niſi revelante ſpiritu per fidem homini æternum Dei propoſitum ſuper ſua ſalute futura: quæ ſane revelatio non eſt aliud, quam infuſio gratiæ ſpiritualis, per quam facta carnis mortificantur: This is not brought to paſſe, but by the ſpirit of God revealing unto a man by faith, the eternall purpoſe of God concerning his ſalvation: which revelation is nothing elſe but the ſpirituall infuſion of grace, whereby the deeds of the fleſh are mortified, &c. Epiſtol. 108. So then a man by revelation of the ſpirit commeth to the knowledge of his ſalvation: but not by any ſpeciall or extraordinarie revelation, but that which is by faith, and worketh mortification, which is common to all the faithfull. See more of this, part. 2. of Juſtification, queſt. 2.

Auguſtine alſo ſaith: Quia non ſecundum merita noſtra, ſed illius miſericordiam firma eſt promiſſio, nemo debet cum trepidatione prædicare, unde non poteſt dubitare: Becauſe the promiſe remaineth ſtedfaſt, not by our works, but his mercie: we muſt not with trembling and fearfulneſſe pronounce that, whereof we cannot doubt: Conc. 1. in Pſal. 88. Againe, Si nunc tempus eſt fidei, ſalus autem animarum, merces eſt fidei, quis dubitet in fide, quæ per dilectionem operatur per agendum diem ultimum, & in fine diei recipiendam eſſe mercedem -- ſalutem animarum? If now be the time of faith, and the ſalvation of the ſoules be the reward of faith, who doubteth but that we ſhall finiſh the laſt day in faith working by love, and in the end of the day the reward ſhall be received, the ſalvation of the ſoule? tract. 86. in Ioan. No marvaile then if Papiſts doubt of their ſalvation, becauſe their confidence is built not upon faith, but upon their works: if they would with the faithfull of God renounce their owne works, and bee content to ſubmit themſelves to the faith of Chriſt, they would not thinke it ſo ſtrange a thing, for Chriſtians to have a full and ſtedfaſt perſwaſion of their ſalvation.

Bernard alſo ſaith: Pignus ſalutis donat ſpiritus, reddens teſtimonium ſpiritui tuo quòd filius Dei ſis: qui certiſſima ſigna prædeſtinationis tuæ cordi tuo imprimat & oſtendat. ſerm. 2. in die Pentecoſt. The holy ſpirit giveth us a pledge of our ſalvation, giving teſtimonie to thy ſpirit, that thou art the ſonne of God: which doth imprint, and ſhew to thy heart moſt ſure ſignes of thy predeſtination, &c. If a man may have ſure ſignes of his predeſtination, how is he not ſure and certaine of his predeſtination?

Saint Ambroſe alſo thus teſtifieth de obit. Theodoſ. Fidelis Deus, quæ ſervis ſemel præparat, non ſubtrahit, &c. God is faithfull, what he once prepareth for his ſervants he taketh not away: if our faith remaine, the promiſe alſo holdeth: See O man the grace of God toward thee, In terris quateris, & in cœlo poſſides: Thou art ſhaken, or toſt in earth, and haſt a poſſeſſion in heaven, let thy heart be where thy poſſeſſion is.

1 Tertullian ſaith, Nullum opus certum mercedes incerta. There is no certaine worke, that hath an uncertaine reward, &c. And againe, Invitat præmio ſalutem, jurans, etiam vivo dicens, cupit credi ſibi: O beatos nos, quorum cauſa jurat Deus: He doth invite to ſalvation by the reward: he ſwearing, and ſaying, as I live, deſireth to be beleeved: O how happy are we, for whoſe cauſe God ſweareth, &c. what doubt then is remaining of ſalvation, which is confirmed by the Lords oath.

4 Thomas Aquine granteth, that conjecturaliter poteſt aliquis cognoſcere per aliqua ſigna ſe habere gratiam: One conjecturally by certaine ſignes may know, that he is in grace, in as much as he feeleth that he delighted in God. A perfect aſſurance as by the cauſe neither doe we affirme, but ſuch a certainty as may be gathered by the ſignes and effects.

See this truth ſealed by the holy Martyrs: Maſter Tyndal ſaith thus: Chriſt is thine, and all his deeds are thy deeds: neither canſt thou be damned, except Chriſt be damned with thee: neither can Chriſt be ſaved, except he be ſaved with thee: Fox pag. 1248.

Maſter Bradford: Know for a certaine, that as the devill goeth about nothing ſo much, as to bring you in doubt, whether you be Gods childe: ſo whatſoever ſhall move you to admit that dubitation, be aſſured, the ſame to come of the devill: Fox pag. 1640.

The ſecond part of this Controverſie, of the grace and gifts of God.

THe ſeverall queſtions handled in this part are theſe: firſt, whether the grace of God, whereby we are made acceptable unto him, bee a qualitie inherent in us. Secondly, of the diſtinction of ſufficient and effectuall grace, and wherein the efficacie of grace conſiſteth. Thirdly, of the diſtinction of grace operantis, cooperantis, helping and working grace.

The firſt queſtion, whether Grace be a qualitie inherent.

The Papiſts.

THe Jeſuite ſetteth downe this diſtinction of grace: There is gratia gratis data, & gratia gratum faciens: Grace freely given, and they are ſuch ſpirituall gifts of wiſedome, knowledge, utterance, and ſuch like, which are given rather for the benefit of others: there is alſo grace, whereby we are made acceptable unto God, the grace of juſtification; which grace Bellarmine defendeth to be, qualitatem per modum habitus in homine permanentem, a qualitie, in manner of an habit, reſiant and permanent in man, de grat. lib. 1. cap. 3. 27. Error.

Argum. 1. The Apoſtle ſaith, As by one mans diſobedience many were made ſinners, ſo by the obedience of one ſhall many be made righteous: But we are made ſinners, not by the imputation of Adams unrighteouſneſſe, but by ſinne inherent, and permanent in us: Ergo, we are juſtified, not by the imputation of the righteouſneſſe of Chriſt, but by juſtice of righteouſneſſe inherent in us, Bellarm. cap. 4. Rom.5.19.

Anſw. Firſt, I marvell that the Jeſuite hath ſo ſoone forgotten himſelfe: for before he denied that originall ſinne is a poſitive qualitie in man: lib. 5. de amiſſ. grat. cap. 15. Here he affirmeth the contrarie, that it is a qualitie or habit inherent in us, which is all one, as if he had ſaid, it is a poſitive qualitie: for what is it to be inherent, or permanent in us, but the ſame, which he calleth poſitive? Secondly, Saint Paul in this place compareth the things themſelves together, that as by Adam we are made ſinners, ſo we are juſtified by Chriſt: not the manner how they are done. This note of ſimilitude then, ſo by the obedience of one man, doth not inferre a likeneſſe or equalitie in every reſpect, but wherein they are compared. The Jeſuite therefore can no more gather upon this (ſo) as he doth, that our righteouſneſſe by Chriſt muſt be inherent, as our ſinne by Adam is, than that naturally we ſhould be juſt by Chriſt, as wee are evill naturally by Adam: or that univerſally all men ſhould be ſaved by Chriſt, as all are dead in Adam: or that Chriſt ſhould free us from the mortalitie of bodie, as Adams ſinne hath made us ſubject to death, and corruption. As this (ſo) doth not enforce a neceſſitie of theſe things, ſo neither of that inſtance, which the Jeſuite urgeth. Thirdly, that the Jeſuite may more fully underſtand our minde, even in this point alſo, in ſome ſort, the ſimilitude may hold: for as in originall ſinne there are two things, the guilt of Adams ſinne, which though it were not by us actually committed, yet is ours by propagation, and the corruption or depravation of nature, which is the fruit of Adams diſobedience, verily and really graft in us: ſo in our juſtification are two things; firſt, the imputation of the righteouſneſſe of Chriſt, which anſwereth to the propagation of Adams ſinne, and the effects or fruits of this righteouſneſſe, that is, holineſſe and ſanctification; which is an imperfect juſtice inherent in us: yet not by this, but by Chriſts juſtice imputed, are we made juſt before God: as by the propagation of Adams ſinne we are properly made ſinners, Rom. 5.12. The corruption of our nature being the fruit and effect, or puniſhment rather of Adams diſobedience in his poſteritie. Rom 5.12.

Argum. 2. Our Saviour ſaith: Hee that beleeveth, out of his belly ſhall flow rivers of waters of life. The Apoſtle ſaith, The love of God is ſhed abroad in our hearts by the holy Ghoſt, &c. Ye have an oyntment from him that is holy, &c. His ſeed remaineth in him. This fountaine, oyntment, ſeed, what is it elſe but an habit of grace inherent, whereby we are made acceptable to God? Bellarm. cap. 2. Iohn 7.38. Rom.5.5. 1 Iohn 2.20. 1 Iohn 39.

Anſw. In thoſe places the Scripture ſpeaketh not of the firſt grace of juſtification, whereby we are accepted before God, but of the ſecond grace of ſanctification whereby we are approved unto men, which is a conſequent of our juſtification by faith: as Ioh. 7.39. This ſpake he of the ſpirit, which they that beleeve in him ſhould receive. And Rom. 5.1. We are firſt juſtified by faith in Chriſt; then the love of God is ſhed abroad in our hearts by the holy Ghoſt, verſ. 5. So then the fountaine, oyntment, ſeed, that is in the regenerate, doth ſignifie their ſpirituall ſtate and ſtrength wrought in them by the juſtification of faith: ſo that they are firſt juſtified by faith, and then theſe graces are conferred and beſtowed upon them. Iohn 7.39. Rom.5.1.

The Proteſtants.

THat grace whereby we are juſtified, and made acceptable before God, is not a qualitie inherent or dwelling in us, but we are made juſt by the imputation of the righteouſneſſe of Chriſt: that righteouſneſſe which is in us, is imperfect, and not able to juſtifie us before God.

2 Cor. 5. 21. Argum. 1. Saint Paul ſaith, He hath made him to be ſinne for us, that knew no ſinne, that we ſhould be made the righteouſneſſe of God in him. Out of this place this argument may be drawne: As our ſins were made Chriſts, ſo is his righteouſneſſe made ours: but our ſins were not habitually inherent in him, but onely imputed: Ergo, his righteouſneſſe, and the grace whereby we are juſtified, is not inherent in us, but imputed onely.

Argum. 2. If we are juſtified by faith onely, then this juſtifying grace is by imputation onely, not inherent in us: but faith onely juſtifieth: Ergo. The propoſition is thus proved: Faith juſtifieth either formally and actually as a qualitie inherent, or inſtrumentally or paſſively, as it apprehendeth the juſtice of Chriſt: but it doth not juſtifie, as it is a qualitie or grace wrought in us, for the Apoſtle ſaith, Epheſ. 2. 9. not of works. Therefore faith, as a worke in us juſtifieth not: for then other ſpirituall graces, as love, hope, ſhould juſtifie as well as faith: if faith then onely juſtifie inſtrumentally, as it apprehendeth Chriſt, then doth the propoſition follow, that the grace whereby we are juſtified, is not inherent in us, but in Chriſt apprehended.

Rom. 3. 28. That faith only juſtifieth, the Apoſtle evidently proveth: We conclude that a man is juſtified by faith without the works of the law. And if they anſwer, that the works of the law are here excluded, not the works of grace: Saint Paul elſewhere doth alſo exclude ſuch works: By grace are ye ſaved through Epheſ. 2. 10. faith, not of works, &c. And afterward he ſheweth what works: Even good works which God hath ordained us to walke in: theſe are works of grace. But of this matter wee ſhall intreat (God willing) more at large, when we come to handle that weightie controverſie of juſtification by faith. Other arguments alſo for this matter which we have in hand, we will bring forth, in the queſtion of inherent juſtice.

We will conclude here with that ſentence of Auguſtine: Iuſtitia ſit, ſed ex gratia ſit, à Deo tibi ſit, non tua ſit: ſacerdotes (inquit) tui induantur juſtitia: veſtis accipitur, non cum capillis naſcitur, pecora de ſuo veſtiuntur: Let there be righteouſneſſe, but let it be of grace, let it be of God, let it not be thine owne: Let thy Prieſts (ſaith the Pſalmiſt) be cloathed with righteouſneſſe: cloathing is received outwardly, it groweth not in us, as our haire, nor as the ſheepe are cloathed of their owne: De verb. Apoſt. ſerm. 15. So then juſtifying grace is no more ours or inherent in us, than the veſture or garment which we are cloathed with, which is not in us, but only adhereth, and is applied to us.

In 1. cap. ad Roman. Chryſoſtome ſaith, Non ſudoribus, &c. ſed divino gratia dono, quod ex ſupernis eſt, gratis ut accipias, oportet: Thou doeſt not get it (that is, adoption) by thine owne labour, but by the divine gift of grace, which is from above, thou muſt receive it freely, onely bringing this of thine owne to beleeve, &c. Faith then onely is in us, the grace and mercie, which faith apprehendeth, is without us from God.

Harm. ſect. 9. pag. 251. Confeſſ. of Bohemia, c. 6. Our juſtification--is, to be cloathed with Chriſts righteouſneſſe, or the imputation thereof, alſo it is a reconciliation with God, and a receiving into favour, whereby we are made acceptable in the beloved, &c. The grace and favour whereinto one is received, is in him that ſheweth favour, not in him that is received.

1. 2. q. 110. artic. 2. Thomas himſelfe confeſſeth, that if grace be taken, pro auxilio divino, for divine helpe (as it is here) non eſt qualitas, ſed motus quidam animæ, It is no qualitie, but a motion of the minde.

We want not here the teſtimonie of ſome of their owne writers, as Albertus Pighius thus teſtifieth, lib. 5. de liber. arbitrio: In ſcholis imaginantur gratiam Dei qualitatem aliquam increatam animæ à Deo, &c. In the ſchooles they thinke that the grace of God is a qualitie created in the ſoule, either the ſame with the habit of charitie, or divers from it: quæ commentitia univerſa exiſtimo, &c. which I thinke all to be but fained, and to have no warrant or authoritie from the Scriptures.

The ſecond queſtion, of the diſtinction or difference of ſufficient and effectuall grace.

The Papiſts.

98. Error. B*Ellarmine* thus diſtinguiſheth them: gratia ſufficiens, ſufficient grace, is when God doth ſo call and ſtirre up a man, ayding and aſſiſting him by his direction and protection, and working together with him, that the man thus called, hath power to will that which is good, but yet in deed willeth it not: gratia efficax, effectuall grace is that, whereby a man ſo ayded, aſſiſted, and called, doth will indeed and performe that which is good, lib. 1. de grat. cap. 2. This then is the Jeſuites opinion, that Gods internall vocation, and his ſpeciall grace inwardly working, is not to all effectuall, but ſufficient only: being ſufficient for their converſion, but yet not in deed effecting it.

Iſay 5. 4. Argum. The Lord ſaith thus by the Prophet Iſay: What could I have done any more to my vineyard, that I have not done unto it? I looked that it ſhould bring forth grapes, and it bringeth forth wild Matth. 23. 37. grapes. The like place we have: O Ieruſalem, Ieruſalem, which killeſt, &c. how often would I have gathered thy children together, as the Hen, &c. and thou wouldeſt not: Theſe had grace neceſſarie and ſufficient to their converſion, for the Lord ſaith, What could I have done more, and I would have gathered them together ; yet were they not converted : this grace then, whereby they were called, was ſufficient, yet not effectuall, Bellarm. cap. 11.

Anſw. Theſe places alleaged are not underſtood of the internall calling, or of grace inwardly working, but onely of the externall calling and oblation of grace, and the ſupply of all neceſſarie outward meanes to ſalvation. As the Prophet Iſay ſpeaketh of hedging the vineyard, caſting out the ſtones, planting it with the beſt plants, ſetting up a watch-tower : that is, they had the watchmen the Prophets, alſo the beſt plants, the true worſhip and ſervice of God, they had the law and the Prophets, and all ſtones, that is, externall impediments, which might hinder them, were removed: So our Saviour ſaith, that he would have gathered them together by his preaching, and by the voyce of the Goſpell, as the Hen by her clocking doth call her chickens, but they refuſed and reſiſted, as they likewiſe ſerved the Prophets, and other meſſengers of God, ſent unto them.

We grant then, that the externall meanes of ſalvation in themſelves may be and are ſufficient to all, but effectuall onely to thoſe to whom God giveth his eſpeciall grace : and in this ſenſe we doe not much miſlike this diſtinction : but we denie any ſuch difference of the internall grace, whereby God calleth, ſtirreth up, aſſiſteth, moveth, directeth the hearts of men : this grace cannot be ſufficient in any, but it muſt needs alſo be effectuall. Yet here we deſire not to be miſtaken, but further doe inlarge our meaning thus : Firſt, we denie not altogether this diſtinction of ſufficiencie and efficacie : it hath place in the externall calling, and common grace offered to all, which is ſufficient to many, but effectuall onely to the elect : but not in the inward ſpirituall calling. Secondly, wee grant a divers meaſure of inward grace in the effectuall calling of the elect, and admit ſome degree in their ſpirituall calling, which though it be not alike effectuall in all that are ſo called, yet is it effectuall. Thirdly, we confeſſe, that ſomewhat may be inwardly wrought by Gods ſpirit even in hypocrits : but we affirme, that no inward temporarie gift wrought in them is ſufficient to their ſalvation: for hereupon it would follow, that they might reſiſt their inward powerfull ſufficient calling, and that the abſence of their owne will onely maketh it without effect : that therefore there is no ſuch powerfull inward working grace ſufficient onely, but that the ſame is effectuall alſo, we ſhew it thus.

The Proteſtants.

Argum. 1. THe Prophet David ſaith, I will run the way of thy commandements, when thou ſhalt inlarge my heart : Draw me, and wee will run after thee : And S. Paul ſaith, Whom he hath predeſtinate, he hath called ; whom he hath called, he hath juſtified. All theſe places prove that the internall calling of God is alwayes effectuall : After drawing and enlarging the heart, followeth running ; after vocation, immediatly enſueth juſtification. Pſal. 119. 32. Cantic. 1. 3. Rom. 8. 30.

Argum. 2. The grace of God is not in vaine in any : as S. Paul ſaith, His grace that was in me, was not in vaine : But if ſo that the grace of God inwardly moving and calling men, ſhould faile in the effect, then ſhould it bee in vaine : Ergo, it is effectuall in all the children of God, in whom it ſo worketh. 1 Cor. 15, 10.

Let Auguſtine ſpeake : Illud extra hominem ſcribitur, ut eum forinſecus terrificet ; hoc in ipſo homine eſt, ut eum intrinſecus juſtificet : That (namely the law) is written without man to terrifie him, this, that is, grace is within man inwardly to juſtifie him, de ſpirit. & liter. cap. 17. As terror then outwardly followeth the knowledge of the Law, ſo juſtification alwayes followeth grace inwardly working : it is therefore alwayes effectuall where it is ſufficient, ſpeaking of the inward and ſpirituall calling. Alſo in another place he ſaith : Quando Deus docet, ſic docet, ut ſcienda ſciamus, aperiendo veritatem, ſic docet ut facienda faciamus, inſpirando ſuavitatem : When God teacheth, he ſo teacheth, that things which are to be knowne we doe know, God opening the truth to us, and things which are to be done, we doe, by inſpiring a deſire into us. Gods inward teaching then by his holy ſpirit is alwayes effectuall in his children, and in none of them it is ſufficient, but together alſo effectuall. In Pſal. 118. Serm. 17.

Magiſter ſentent. lib. 1. diſt. 17. liter. K. thus teſtifieth, Spiritus ſanctus non ſolum non habenti, verumetiam habenti non incaſſum permittitur : non habenti quidem, ut habeatur ; habenti, ut amplius habeatur : The holy ſpirit is not given in vaine neither to him that hath it not, nor to him that hath : to him that hath not, that he may have him ; to him that hath him, that he may have him in greater meaſure, &c. Wherefore the inward calling of the ſpirit is alwayes effectuall : ſee further hereof before error 23. in the fourth inconvenience.

An appendix or ſecond part of this queſtion, wherein the efficacie of grace conſiſteth.

The Papiſts.

BEllarmine dare not attribute the efficacie of grace onely to free will, that this ſhould be the cauſe, why that grace in ſome worketh effectually, in ſome others it doth not, becauſe ſome give their free aſſent unto grace working in them, other with-hold it : for then (ſaith he) it ſhould reſt in mans power, whether grace ſhould be effectuall or not : Neither doth he thinke, that God only is the cauſe of this efficacie, by drawing and framing our wils to conſent to his grace : But this efficacie, hee 29. Error.

ſaith, partly dependeth of Gods inward perſwaſion, partly of the free aſſent of the will, Deus (ſaith the Jeſuite) quot efficaciter trahere decrevit, eam ſuaſionem adhibet, quam videt congruere ingenio eorum: God doth uſe that perſwaſion to thoſe whom he purpoſeth effectually to call, which he knoweth beſt to fit their humour, and which it is moſt like they will agree unto, Bellarm. cap. 12. So thus in the Jeſuites opinion, God is not a drawer, or worker of mans will, but a mover and perſwader onely.

Argum. If God ſhould not onely move and perſwade men by his ſpirit, but alſo produce and worke in them the very act of willing; then ſhould there be no free will in man to doe any thing: and ſo no action in man ſhould be voluntarie, but of neceſſitie and conſtraint, becauſe man is not left to himſelfe, to give his aſſent freely, but his will is determined of God, Bellarm. ibid.

Anſw. Firſt, it is no abſurditie at all, to ſay that in man by nature there remaineth no free will at all Iohn 15.5. to that which is good: for our Saviour ſaith, Without me you can doe nothing: but to give our conſent or will unto good is ſomewhat, therefore of our ſelves without Chriſt we cannot doe it. Auguſtine ſaith, Cum de libero arbitrio agimus, non de parte hominis agimus, ſed de toto, quia cum peccavit homo primus, non in parte aliqua, ſed in tota, qua conditus eſt, natura deliquit--vitiato ergo libero arbitrio, &c. When we ſpeake of free will, wee ſpeake not of a part of man, but of the whole, becauſe when the firſt man ſinned, he offended not in one part, but in the whole nature, wherein he was created,--free will then being corrupted, whole man is corrupt, &c. Hypognoſtic. 3. cont. Pelag. He granteth no other freewill without grace unto good, but that which was once in Adam, and is now utterly loſt. But of this more, by Gods grace, in the queſtion of Freewill.

Secondly, although God onely doth convert and incline the will of man to goodneſſe, yet for all Iohn 8. 36. this, man worketh willingly, not of neceſſitie or conſtraint: for our Saviour ſaith, If the Sonne make you free, ye ſhall be free indeed: God of unwilling maketh us willing.

And here we refuſe not the diſtinction of their owne gloſſe, Canſ. 23. qu. 4. c. 24. There are two kindes of neceſſitie: Simplex una, altera conditionalis: A ſimple neceſſitie, as it is neceſſarie that all men be mortall; conditionall, as when I ſee a man walke, it is neceſſarie he ſhould walke, not neceſſarie by the nature of the thing, for ſimply it is not neceſſarie to walke, but in reſpect of the condition, becauſe I ſee him or know him to walke: ſo in reſpect of Gods knowledge, and working grace, there is a conditionall neceſſitie, but no ſimple or abſolute neceſſitie in the things themſelves, which yet doe retaine their owne libertie: Thus farre, and to this purpoſe the Gloſſe.

The Proteſtants.

GOD onely is the cauſe, that his grace worketh effectually, and is not in vaine in us: neither doth he onely move and perſwade, but actually worketh the aſſent and inclination of the will.

Philip. 1. 13. Argum. 1. It is God that worketh in us the will and the deed: God worketh: this is more than to move or perſwade: Deus operatur in nobis velle: God worketh in us to will: what is this elſe, but, producere ipſum actum volendi, To bring forth the very act of willing, which the Jeſuite denieth, cap. 12. Act. 16. 14. So the Scripture ſaith, that God opened the heart of Lydia, that ſhe attended to thoſe things that Paul ſpake: To open the heart, is more than to move or ſtirre the heart: it betokeneth rather an actuall operation, and inclination of it. Further, thoſe places which are alleaged to prove that the efficacie of grace doth not depend wholly upon the aſſent of our will, doe likewiſe ſhew, that mans will herein worketh not at all, but the whole worke in making grace effectuall, is to be aſcribed to the ſpirit Iohn 6. 45. of God: as, Every man that hath heard, and hath learned of the Father, commeth to me: Pſal. 94. 12. Beatus homo, quem tu erudieris, &c. Bleſſed is the man whom thou teacheſt, O Lord: 1 Cor. 4. 7. Who ſeparateth thee, what haſt thou, that thou haſt not received? Theſe texts doe as well prove that no part of the divine worke is to be imputed to mans will, as that the whole is not: for if Gods teaching onely cauſe us to come unto him, and make us bleſſed, if God only ſeparate us, &c. then it is of Gods ſpirit only, that grace worketh in us effectually.

Argum. 2. We will deſire no better proofe, than the Jeſuites owne confeſſion: who being preſſed Iohn 6. 45. with that place, Ioh. 6. Every one that hath heard and learned of my Father, commeth unto me, thus anſwereth, Infallibilitas effectus, non habet pro cauſa ſtudium diſcipuli, ſed excellentiam magiſtri, ſicut allegat Dominus ibidem prophetiam Iſaia, erunt omnes docibiles Dei: The infallibilitie or certaintie of the effect, ariſeth not of the deſire and ſtudie of him that is taught, as the cauſe thereof, but of the excellencie of the teacher, as in the ſame place our Lord Chriſt alleageth the prophecie of Iſay, They ſhall be all taught of God, Iohn 6. 45. Bellarm. cap. 12. And againe he ſaith: Si eadem motione accepta unus credit, alter non credit, longe majorem habuit Dei gratiam, is qui credit, quàm qui non credit: If by one, and the ſelfe ſame motion inwardly received, one man beleeve, another doth not, ſurely hee that beleeveth hath a greater grace of God, than he which beleeveth not: de grat. lib. 1. cap. 13. reſponſ. ad object. 3. Here Bellarmine aſcribeth the efficacie of grace to the excellencie of the teacher, and to the greatneſſe of grace which ſome have, and others have not: It is then of God onely, nothing of our ſelves, that grace worketh effectually in us.

Auguſtine alſo ſaith: Alia eſt cauſa jam credentis in Deo, alia non credentis,--qui enim non credit,--verum lumen videre non poteſt, niſi Deus--in corde ejus illuxerit: There is another reaſon of him that beleeveth in God, and of him that beleeveth not: for he that beleeveth not,--cannot ſee the true light, unleſſe God firſt do lighten his heart: and ſo it is not of him that willeth, or of him that runneth, but of God that ſheweth mercie: cont. Pelagian. hypognoſtic. lib. 3. art. 3. The cauſe then of beleefe, is only the illumination of Gods ſpirit: for if any thing were to be aſcribed to man, it ſhould not bee wholy of him that ſheweth mercie, but ſomewhat alſo of the willer, and the runner, which the Apoſtle denieth.

Concil. Auraſican. 2. can. 2. Si quis ſine gratia Dei, credentibus, volentibus, deſiderantibus, ſtudentibus miſericordiam dicit conferri, non autem divinitus per inſpirationem ſpiritus in nobis fieri, reſiſtit Apoſtolo qui dicit, quid habes, quod non accepiſti? If any man ſay that mercie is conferred upon thoſe that beleeve, deſire, ſtudie, &c. of themſelves without the grace of God, and not rather wrought in us by the inſpiration of the ſpirit, he reſiſteth the Apoſtle which ſaith, What haſt thou, which thou haſt not received? &c. It is the inward inſpiration then of God, not our voluntarie conſenting, that grace is effected in us.

Iſychius ſaith: Quantumcunq; homo egerit, &c. ſine adjutorio Domini ſalutem adipiſci non poteſt: Lib. 2. in 7. c. Levitic. Whatſoever a man doth without the helpe of God, he cannot obtaine ſalvation: wherefore S. Paul ſaith, it is not of the willer, nor runner, &c. God then muſt be the helper and mover, not a perſwader onely, but the worker.

Former confeſſ. of Helvetia, artic. 19. Like as unleſſe God doe give power, whereby the meat may nouriſh, the ſeed ſpring up, the medicine be effectuall, the outward worke doth nothing at all profit, ſo except the Lord doe give increaſe to the heart of the hearer, the doctrine, &c. is without efficacie, &c. Harm. ſect. 11. pag. 350.

Their owne decrees alſo thus teſtifie: Part. 3. diſt. 4. c. 154. Qui dixerit gratiam Dei, qua juſtificamur, &c. He that ſaith, that the grace of God, wherewith we are juſtified by Jeſus Chriſt, is onely of force to forgive us our ſinnes, not that we ſhould not commit them afterward, let him be accurſed, &c. If it be the grace of God, that both taketh away our ſinnes alreadie done, and keepeth us from committing the like, what is left unto mans will? Ibid. c. 155. Qui dixerit, &c. He that ſaith the grace of God doth helpe onely to reveale unto us the will of God, whereby we know what to deſire, and what to ſhunne, and that thereby we are not enabled to doe that we know, let him be accurſed, &c. Grace then doth not onely move or perſwade, or reveale unto the will what is to be done, but giveth power to doe it.

The Popiſh writers are here much devided, ſome affirming, that God doth onely move and perſwade the will, as Bellarmine with others of that ſide: ſome other affirme, that God doth not onely move the will, but worketh it, et ad unum inclinat, and enclineth it unto ſome one object, and ſo determineth the will: which ſome of them hold to be done morally: as Suarez the Jeſuite granteth, Lib. 3. de auxil. grat. c. 10. num. 5. that the exciting and moving grace may be ſo effectuall, that it morally determineth the will, that it muſt needs conſent: ſome goe further, that this determinatio Phyſica, a Phyſicall determination of the will: wherein God is the onely agent, and the will is altogether paſſive, and wrought upon. Bevius de efficac. grat. c. 19.

The third queſtion, of the diſtinction of Grace into gratiam operantem, & cooperantem, vel adjuvantem: grace-working, and grace-helping.

The Papiſts.

Bellarmine thus doth define and diſtinguiſh them: Gratia operans eſt, quæ facit ut velimus: It is 30. Error. the working grace, which maketh us to will, that which is good: Gratia cooperans, quæ facit, ut quæ voluerimus, impleamus: Helping grace, or grace working together with us, is that, which cauſeth us to fulfill, or doe that which we will or deſire: Bellarm. cap. 2. This then is his minde, that God only worketh the beginning of every good action; that is, the conſent of the will: but the accompliſhment of the action is not only of God, but he worketh together with man.

Argum. The Jeſuite would illuſtrate his matter by this ſimilitude: As if it were expedient for a man to ſaile into the Eaſt-Countries, and yet he is unwilling, his friend commeth, and perſwadeth with him, and provideth things needfull for the Navigation, as money, victuals and ſuch like: though his friend may ſay, I onely was the cauſe, that he tooke this Navigation in hand, yet can he not ſay, that I onely carried or conveyed him unto that place, but helped him onely: So ſaith he, God onely worketh the beginning of any action by perſwading the will, but he is helping onely and aſſiſtant to man in the finiſhing thereof, lib. 1. de grat. cap. 13.

Anſw. Firſt, this ſimilitude is very inſufficient, and the things here compared are altogether unlike: for what preſumption is it, to match the doing of man with the power of God? Firſt, man draweth onely by perſwaſion, he hath no power over anothers heart: but God is greater than our heart, he doth not only apply perſwaſion to it, but bendeth and turneth it: as Auguſtine alſo ſaith, Deus magis habet in poteſtate hominum voluntates, quàm ipſi ſuas: De corrept. & grat. cap. 14. God hath greater power over the wills of men, than they have themſelves. Secondly, all the helpes that man provideth, or miniſtreth for any action, are externall: But God is ayding and aſſiſting every where by his power, and worketh mightily in the inward man. We ſee then the inſufficiencie of this ſimilitude.

Though it were a fit and meet compariſon, yet wee know that ſimilitudes prove not, no more doth this: it needeth not therefore any large confutation: but if yet they will preſſe this ſimilitude, taken from Navigation, God may be compared to the Pilate that directeth the ſhip, mans will to the

Marrines

Matriner that laboureth at the oares: who moveth the ſhip in deed, but the ſtirres-man guideth it right: ſo man willeth and worketh, but God onely directeth and guideth his will to that, which is good.

2 Chro. 15. 2. Argum. 2. The Doway Collegials give this note upon that place. 2 Chron. 15. 2. Our Lord is with you, becauſe yee have been with him: cooperation with Gods grace, meriteth encreaſe of grace, &c.

Contra. 1. The text is not truly tranſlated, the Hebrew word behiothechem, ſignifieth, in being you with him, as the Septuag. ſo read ἐν τῷ εἶναι ὑμᾶς: cum eſtis, when, or while you are with him: and ſo beſide our owne interpreters, their owne Vatablus giveth the ſenſe, ſi fueritis vel cum fueritis, if or when you ſhall be with him.

2 But allowing that reading, the gloſſe is falſe: for in that they had been with the Lord, it was not of themſelves, but it was Gods worke in them: as Ieremie. 31. 18. Convert thou me, and I ſhall be converted: Neither ſhould this their obedience have merited ſuch encreaſe, but God in mercie would crowne their former obedience, with further bleſſings: as the Prophet David ſaith: which crowneth thee in mercie: the Lord in deed crowneth and rewardeth, but in mercie.

Ierem. 31. 18.
Pſal. 103. 4.

The Proteſtants.

THis diſtinction of grace, that it ſhould be ſometime the principall, cheefe, and only working cauſe in man, and another while but ayding, and aſſiſting only, and that man ſhould be joyned with God as a fellow-worker in any good action, we hold it to be a blaſphemous doctrine: that the will of man worketh together with grace, as it is, cauſa phyſica, a naturall cauſe of ſuch actions as are wrought by man, not reſpecting the quality and goodneſſe of them, but the worke only, we deny not: but the grace of God only is, cauſa moralis, the morall cauſe of every good action. As they are but actions and operations, ſo they proceed from the will of man: but as they are good or commendable, they are the works only of grace.

Philip. 2. 13. Argum. God worketh the will and the deed, As he worketh the will, ſo alſo he worketh the deed; the will God alone worketh: Ergo. Againe, that God may bee all in all, ſaith the Apoſtle: But God ſhould not be all in all in every good action, if man ſhould be joyned as a fellow-worker. S. Iames ſaith, Every good and perfect gift is from above: therefore no good gift, or worke is from below, that is of man, either in part, or in whole. Our Saviour Chriſt ſaith, Sine me nihil poteſtis facere: Without me, you can doe nothing: of the which words Auguſtine writeth thus: Non ait ſine me difficile poteſtis facere, aut ſine me nihil poteſtis perficere, ſed ne facere quidem: He ſaith not, without me you can hardly doe any thing, or without mee, you cannot finiſh any thing, but you are not able to doe it at all: cont. 2. Epiſtol. Pelag. lib. 2. cap. 8. And againe: Multa Deus in homine facit bona, quæ non facit homo, nulla vero facit homo, quæ non facit Deus, ut faciat homo: God doth many good things in man, which man doth not: but man doth no good things, which God maketh him not to doe: Ibid.

1 Cor. 15. 28.
Iam. 1. 17.
Iohn 15. 5.

But if ſo that in any good action God ſhould worke part, and man part; then might man worke ſomewhat, that is his part, without Gods help: And if God doe but help to worke, what is that elſe, but to give power more eaſily only to worke; as though man, without that help, yet more hardly and difficultly of himſelfe might doe it? But all this is contrary to that ſaying of our Saviour, Without me you can doe nothing.

S. Ambroſe here hath an excellent teſtimonie, Epiſt. 84. Gratia Dei tota repellitur, niſi tota ſuſcipitur, &c. The grace of God is wholy refuſed, if it be not wholy received: and as he is no faithfull man which in any one point diſſenteth from the catholike verity; Sic extra gratiam efficitur, qui aliquid de ejus plenitudine diffitetur: So he is without grace, which doth denie any thing of the fulneſſe thereof: Grace then worketh fully, and not in part only.

Lib. de patient. And further. 1 Tertullian of the African Church, ſaith: ad præſtanda ea ſola gratia divinæ inſpirationis operatur: To performe thoſe things, the grace of divine operation only worketh, &c. And againe, nihil noſtrum, quia Dei omnia, cujus ipſi quidem nos: Nothing is ours, becauſe all is Gods, whoſe wee our ſelves are.

Homil. de Adam & Eva. 2 Chryſoſtome: By theſe eccleſiaſticall rules, and by inſtructions grounded upon divine authoritie, we are ſo by Gods help confirmed, Ut omnium bonorum operum—Deum profiteamur authorem, & non dubitemus ab ipſius gratia omnia hominis merita provenire, per quem ita fit, ut aliquid boni & velle inveniamur & facere, &c. That we profeſſe God the author of all good works, and doubt not, but that all mans merits proceed from his grace, by whom it is wrought, that wee are found both to will, and do that which is good, &c. Here all is aſcribed to God, both the will and the deed, both the beginning and perfection of the worke.

Harm. ſect. 3. pag. 60. 3 Confeſſ. of Helvetia, latter. c. 8. We being prone to evill, and full of all wickedneſſe, can doe no good of our ſelves, no not ſo much as thinke of any: Grace then worketh all in all.

4 Decret. part. 3. diſtinct. 4. c. 156. Quicunque dixerit, &c. Whoſoever ſaith, that the grace of juſtification is given, that, what we are bid to doe by free will, Facilius impleamus per gratiam, we ſhould doe more eaſily by grace; let him be accurſed. If Gods grace doe but help to worke, what doth it elſe but only make us more eaſily to worke, which this canon condemneth.

The maſter of ſentences maketh both theſe, the working grace and helping grace, all one grace and gift, Lib. 2. diſt. 26. liter. l. I then reaſon thus: if it bee all one grace, it worketh alwayes alike: but it worketh alone in preparing the will; as the Maſter alleageth out of Auguſtine: Per ſolam gratiam, quæ eſt in fide Chriſti poſita, præparatur voluntas, &c. The will is prepared by grace alone, which conſiſteth in the faith of Chriſt: Ibid. diſt. 26. liter. d. Ergo, it alſo worketh alone in helping and aſſiſting the will. Therefore both the firſt worke in preparing the will, and the ſecond in enabling the will, is only of grace.

The third part of this Controverſie of free-will.

THe ſeverall queſtions are theſe. Firſt, of the nature, condition, and qualitie of free will. Secondly, of the power of free-will. Firſt, in naturall things. Secondly, in morall duties. Thirdly, in ſpirituall.

The firſt queſtion, of the nature and definition of free-will.

B*Ellarmine* defineth free-will after this manner: Eſt libera poteſtas unum præ aliis eligendi, vel reſpuendi, intelligenti naturæ attributa, &c. It is a free or abſolute power, to chuſe, or refuſe one thing before another, given of God unto a reaſonable and underſtanding nature, or creature. Wee miſlike theſe points in this definition: firſt, concerning the power of free-will, as well in chuſing, as refuſing: ſecondly, of the object of free-will, that it is naturally, as it is now to be found in man, enclined as well to good as evill: thirdly, concerning the qualitie and condition of free-will, that it is active, and not paſſive: fourthly, of the ſubject of free-will. Of theſe in their order.

The firſt part, of the power of free-will.

The Papiſts.

THere is, duplex libertas, a double kinde of libertie: libertas à neceſſitate, a libertie or freedome from neceſſitie, as when it is in our power to will, or not to will, indifferently to chuſe, or refuſe this or that, as to walke, to ſit, to goe, none of all theſe being neceſſary, but ſubject to our will and choice: libertas à coactione, a freedome from coaction, or conſtraint, is, when that wee doe, is of neceſſity, and we cannot chuſe but doe it, yet wee doe it willingly. As a man cannot chuſe but ſinne, yet he ſinneth voluntarily, he is not conſtrained thereunto: Bellarmine affirmeth, that in the free-will of man, there muſt bee a freedome not only from coaction, but from neceſſitie: lib. 3. de grat. cap. 4. So alſo the Doway-men. annot. in Bib. p. 16. 31. Error.

Argum. God made man from the beginning, and left him in the hand of his counſell, hee hath ſet water and fire before thee, ſtretch out thy hand, to which thou wilt: before man is life and death, good and evill, what him liketh, ſhall be given him: Ergo, the freedome of mans will, is not only not conſtrained, but hath no neceſſitie, ſeeing it is in his power, to chuſe or refuſe what him liketh, Bellarmin. cap. 5. Eccleſ. 15. 14.

Anſw. 1. Wee grant ſuch a free-will to have been given to man in his creation, but is now loſt by his fall: as Auguſtine ſaith: Lex in Paradiſo non poneretur ſervanda, niſi liber eſſet eam tam velle, quam nolle ſervare—ſed ſicut per ſe lapſus eſt, non continuò per ſe, i. propriam voluntatem, reſurgere poteſt: A law ſhould not have been given man in Paradiſe to keep, unleſſe hee had been free, either to will, or nill to keep it:—but as man did fall of himſelfe, ſo he cannot riſe of himſelfe, that is, by his owne will, Cont. Pelag. articul. 3.

2 You muſt preſſe us with more waightie authorities, than thoſe out of Apocryphall Scriptures, ſuch as the booke of Eccleſiaſticus is, if you would winne any credit to your cauſe: for the authority of ſuch books bindeth us not.

Whereas Bellarmine alleageth divers Fathers to prove the libertie of free-will, not only from coaction and conſtraint, but from neceſſitie, either to good or evill: they are ſo to bee underſtood, that they either ſpeake of the ſtate of man in his perfection, or of the will of man, as it is by regeneration of grace, not by corruption of nature, or elſe by neceſſity underſtand coaction and compulſion, as Auguſtine ſaith, Liberum voluntatis arbitrium—ab omni neceſſitatis vinculo vindicamus, &c. We doe redeeme free-will, whereby we live well or evill, from all bond of neceſſitie: that is, as he expoundeth it, ſub fato ſtellarum, &c. We place no mans birth under the fatall deſtinie of the ſtarres, lib. 2. cont. Fauſtum. c. 5. By neceſſitie hee underſtandeth a fatall deſtinie and compulſion: from ſuch neceſſitie wee alſo free the will of man.

The Proteſtants.

A Freedome of will from neceſſitie we grant to have been in our firſt parents, whereby it was in their power, to have choſen either the good, or the evill way: But ſince that by Adams tranſgreſſion the whole power of nature was ſhaken, and all the gifts and graces of creation decayed;

there remaineth no freenes of will unto good in man, but only a voluntarie promptneſſe and inclination to evill without conſtraint.

Eccleſ. 7. 31. Rom. 7. 18. Argum. This have I found (ſaith the Preacher) that God hath made man righteous, but hee hath ſought many inventions. I know, ſaith S. Paul, that in me, that is, my fleſh, dwelleth no good thing. Theſe places prove, that, howſoever it was with man in his creation, now by nature there remaineth no good thing in him: and therefore no inclination to that which is good.

2 Cor. 3. 5. Cont. 2. epiſt. Pelag. 2. 8. We are not able, ſaith the Apoſtle, to thinke any thing of our ſelves, but our abilitie or ſufficiencie is of God. Upon the which words, Auguſt. writeth thus: Non idonei ſumus cogitare aliquid (dicit Paulus) minus autem eſt cogitare quam cupere,—neque ait non ſumus idonei, quod perfectum eſt cogitare,—ſed cogitare aliquid, cui contrarium eſt nihil: Wee are not fit to thinke any thing, ſaith the Apoſtle, but it is farre leſſe to thinke, than to deſire:—neither ſaith he, we are not fit to thinke any great matter, but not any thing, the contrary whereof is nothing, &c. If we are not then by nature able to thinke any good, much leſſe to will it.

Bernard thus writeth: Nemo putet ideo dictum liberum arbitrium, &c. Let no man thinke it is called free-will, becauſe it hath equall power to good and evill; for then neither God, which cannot bee evill, nor the devill, which cannot be good, ſhould have free-will: but therefore it is called free, becauſe none can be good or evill, niſi volens, but willingly, lib. de liber. arbit.

Saint Ambroſe alſo is an evident witneſſe: lib. 1. de vocat. Gent. c. 9. Licet inſit homini bonum nolle, tamen niſi donatum, non habet bonum velle: Although it bee in mans power to nill that is good; yet he cannot will that is good, unleſſe it bee given him: the one he hath by corruption of nature, the other he receiveth by the operation of grace. Againe, Non in poteſtate noſtra eſt cor noſtrum & noſtra cogitationes: Our heart and our thoughts are not in our owne power: de fug. ſecul. c. 1. Voluntas mutabilis quæ non ab immutabili voluntate regitur, tanto citius propinquat iniquitati, quanto acrius intenditur actioni: The mutable will, unleſſe it be governed of the immutable will, doth ſo much neerer approach to iniquitie, as it worketh more intendedly: Cui committi nihil aliud quam dimitti: For a man to bee committed to his will, is all one, as to be dimitted or forſaken: Nihil in ſuis viribus habet, niſi periculi facilitatem: Mans will hath nothing of it owne power, but the facilitie of danger: de vocat. Gent. lib. 1. c. 2. Then it followeth, that the will of man, by nature, cannot chuſe but to doe evill: What is this elſe but a neceſſitie not of coaction, but of depravation?

Bernard yet ſpeaketh more evidently: Serm. 81. in Cantic. Anima mala libera neceſſitate & ancilla tenetur & libera: ancilla propter neceſſitatem, libera propter voluntatem, &c. The ſoule is by an unhappie free neceſſitie, both bond and free; bond becauſe of neceſſitie; (it cannot otherwiſe chuſe) free, becauſe it is voluntarie.

Dominic. Advent. Chryſoſtome ſaith: Sicut navis fracto gubernaculo illuc ducitur ubi tempeſtas voluerit, &c. Like as a ſhip, the ſteering or rudder being broken, is carried whither the tempeſt will; ſo man, the divine help being loſt through ſin, doth not what he would, but what the devill would, &c. This ſimilitude doth moſt fitly expreſſe the thing in queſtion: for like as a man being carried in a ſhip, walketh up and down freely in the ſhip, whither he will, but yet he is carried whither the tempeſt driveth him: ſo mans will is free indeed, but alwayes unto evill.

Harm. ſect. 3. pag. 62. Confeſſion of Helvetia the latter, chap. 9. Theſe things are ſo altred in man (that is, his underſtanding, will, &c.) that they are not able to doe that now, which they could doe before mans fall: for his underſtanding is darkned, and his will which before was free, is now became a ſervile will, for it ſerveth ſin, not nilling, but willing, &c.

Peter Lombard lib. 2. diſt. 25. liter. e. Liberum videtur dici arbitrium, quia ſine coactione & neceſſitate valet appetere, &c. It ſeemeth that free-will is ſo called, becauſe without coaction and neceſſitie it doth deſire, &c. Hee taketh coaction and neceſſitie for all one, and ſo affirmeth the will to bee free from coaction; which we alſo grant.

Thomas 1. part. qu. 83. art. 2. ad 3. ſaith, Per peccatum periiſſe libertatem gratiæ, non libertatem naturæ, quæ eſt à coactione: By ſinne the libertie of grace is loſt, not the libertie of nature, which is from coaction.

Alphonſ. de caſtro lib. 9. Libertas, quæ opponitur neceſſitati, ſeu, ut verius dicam, coactioni: That is libertie, which is oppoſed againſt neceſſitie, or more truly coaction, &c. Theſe popiſh writers ſeeme to affirme a libertie only in the will from coaction and compulſion.

The ſecond part, of the object of Free-will.

The Papiſts.

32. Error. BEllarmine ſaith, Voluntatis proprium & primarium objectum bonum eſſe, ſive aliquid apprehenſum ſub ratione boni: That the proper and principall object of the will of man, is that which is good, or that appeareth, or is ſo taken to be: and ſo he determineth, Per arbitrium non expeti mala, ſed bona: That by free-will not evill things, but good are deſired, lib. de grat. 3. cap. 12.

Argum. The inclination of the will unto his object is naturall, and therefore God is the author thereof: If God be the author, then it is good: the will of man then is not naturally inclined to evill, for ſo the inclination thereof ſhould bee evill, which God hath made, Bellarmine, ibid.

Anſw. That naturall power which God hath given to man, generally to will, to thinke, to deſire, to hate, to love, muſt needs be good, becauſe it is of God; but the execution of this power in the abuſe thereof, by willing and chuſing evill, and refuſing and hating good, ariſeth of the corruption of our nature, and is evill; neither is God to be charged with it. Wee diſtinguiſh then betweene the naturall gift, and the uſe thereof, betweene the nature of man, as it was created of God, and the corruption thereof: to have power to will, is an naturall gift given of God; but to will that is evill, is an abuſe of that power, cauſed in us by the corruption of our nature.

Argum. 2. The object of the appetite or deſire, is that which is deſirable; but that which is good, is only appetible or deſirable: Ergo, only bonum, that which is good is the object of the will or deſire, Bellarm. ibid.

Anſw. 1. The propoſition is partly true, partly falſe: for if by (deſirable) that is underſtood which ought to bee deſired in right, it is falſe; if that which is (de facto) deſired, we grant it. Secondly, for the aſſumption; if it be underſtood of that which is naturally good: ſo it is true, that by the inſtinct of nature, every creature deſireth that, which maketh for the conſervation thereof: but this is not to the point in queſtion: But if hee meane that which is morally, and verily, and truly good, the aſſumption is falſe; for that which is good in this ſenſe is not only, nor yet at all by nature deſired.

The Proteſtants.

THat man by free-will may chuſe things naturally good, as for the preſervation of his life, and maintenance of his civill eſtate, and ſhun the contrary, that is, things hurtfull unto his life, we doe eaſily grant; ſeeing it is a generall gift of nature, even beſtowed upon unreaſonable creatures, to diſcerne what is good, and what hurtfull unto them: and in this ſenſe wee denie not, but that the proper object of the will, namely in naturall and civill matters, is to covet good, or at the leaſt, which appeare ſo to bee: But yet concerning things morally good, that is, vertuous and godly acts, the will of man hath no inclination thereunto naturally, but is prone to evill only: Neither is the will deceived in taking vice for vertue, and following evill, in the name of good. Some indeed may pretend ſome naturall or civill good, as profit, or pleaſure, but not that which is morally, that is verily and truly good: As hee that ſtealeth, is perſwaded it is for his profit, which is a civill good; but hee cannot thinke, that therein he doth juſtly, which is the morall good. An adulterer propoundeth to himſelfe pleaſure in that ſin: but he doth not ſo much as imagine, that he can bee chaſt in committing adulterie, which is the morall vertue. Wherefore we doubt not to conclude, both that mans free-will naturally hath no inclination to that which is truly good. And againe; Malum, etiam ſub ratione mali, proprium objectum voluntatis eſſe: That evill, that is, ſin, even as it is ſin, is the proper object of the will, by reaſon of the corruption of nature.

Argum. 1. That the wicked are naturally inclined to evill, even as it is evill, the Scripture teacheth us: It is a paſtime to a foole to doe wickedly: A foole maketh a mocke of ſin: The wicked perſon is not deceived in taking vice for vertue, but doth naturally as verily love vice, as by grace the righteous embraceth vertue: Woe unto them (ſaith the Prophet) that ſpeake good of evill, and evill of good, which put darkneſſe for light, and light for darkneſſe: The Prophet crieth not out againſt thoſe which ſin of ignorance and ſimplicitie, taking evill for good: but againſt ſuch, which do ſin of malice, and willingly and wittingly commend evill, even becauſe it is evill, and hate that is good, for the goodneſſe ſake; Which draw iniquitie with cords of vanity: but if they were ſeduced by error in taking one thing for another, they ſhould be led themſelves, and drawne into ſinne: but now the prophet ſaith, They doe hale and draw ſin to themſelves, as with cart-ropes.

Pro. 10. 23.
Pro. 14. 9.
Iſay 5. 20.

Argum. 2. Auguſtine in his booke of Confeſſions, is not aſhamed to confeſſe how that hee was accuſtomed to ſteale apples in his childhood and younger yeeres, when as hee both might have had better at home, and having ſtolne them, he caſt them to the hogges: ſo that (ſaith he) whereas theeves, adulterers, and the like, doe propound to themſelves in their evill doing, ſome end or other: Ego nihil hic amavi preter furtum: I loved nothing elſe but theft it ſelfe, lib. confeſſ. 2. cap. 4. For Auguſtine neither did it for pleaſure, for he had better fruit at home; nor for profit, for he caſt them to the ſwine, &c. Wherefore ſin, even as it is ſinne, is naturally the object of the will.

Likewiſe the divell loveth evill becauſe it is evill: the wicked hate and deteſt God, who is good: Ergo, the will may both deſire that which is evill, and hate and deteſt that which is good.

Bellarmine anſwereth: Firſt, Auguſtine in his theft loved the ſin, but under the ſhew of ſome delectable good, becauſe he rejoyced to deceive his neighbour with the reſt of his companions. Secondly, the devill loveth our ſin, but under the ſhew of ſome good to himſelfe, thinking it profitable to himſelfe, that many periſh. Thirdly, the wicked hate God, but under the ſhew or colour of evill, becauſe they hold him a ſevere Judge, Bellarm. cap. 12. reſponſ. ad 2. 4. argum.

Contra. Firſt, Auguſtine ſaith, Nihil amavi: I loved nothing but the theft it ſelfe. Hee could beſt expreſſe his owne meaning, wherefore he ſimply loved and deſired that which was evill: if he made a ſport to deceive his neighbours; this was no morall good thing, but a carnall and ſenſuall delight only: and ſo we denie not, but even in ſin there is a ſhew of ſenſuall delight and pleaſure, but not of any morall or true vertue.

Wiſd. 2. 24.

Secondly: Firſt, the devill procureth our evill, not for hope of any eaſe to himſelfe, for hee is paſt all hope of eaſe or releaſe, but to doe us hurt. It is ſaid, that death came into the world through the envie of the devill unto us, not through ſelfe-love to himſelfe. Secondly, this were to extenuate the malice of Sathan, as though hee ſought not our deſtruction ſo much to doe us hurt, as to benefit himſelfe. Thirdly, this good which Sathan is ſaid to ayme at, is not any morall good, or true vertue, but a malicious and Sathanicall delight. Fourthly, but if in our evill Sathan pretend good, what good can hee imagine in his owne deſperate ſinne? The Scripture ſaith, he is a lyar, and the father thereof. Then as the father in his child, ſo he delighteth in ſinne as his owne, and deſireth it, even as it is evill.

Ioh. 8. 44.

Prov. 29. 27.
Matth. 20. 15.

Thirdly: firſt, the wickedeſt man that liveth, is by nature perſwaded, that God is good, and therefore cannot hate him, as evill: but their wicked nature abhorreth God, as good. So the Scripture ſaith, that the juſt man is an abomination to the wicked: hee hateth him for his vertue ſake: And the Lord himſelfe thus ſaith to the wicked: Is thine eye evill, becauſe I am good? Here goodneſſe it ſelfe is hated of the wicked.

Saint Ambroſe ſaith: Homo niſi donatum non habet bonum velle: Man cannot deſire that is good, unleſſe it be given him: de vocat. Gent. lib. 2. cap. 9. Nulla ſpecies cujuſquam virtutis occurrit, quæ ſine dono divina gratia, &c. There is no ſhew of any vertue occurrent, which is deſired without the gift of the divine grace, ibid. Therefore morall goodneſſe is not the proper object of the will by nature.

Homil. 8. in 3. c. 1. ad Timoth.

1 Chryſoſtome ſaith, Mala omnia ex noſtra tantummodo voluntate fiunt: All evill things are only done by our will.

Cont. 2. Epiſt. Pelag. lib. 1. c. 18.

2 Auguſtine ſaith, that man, Deo deſerente pro meritis ire in malum, & Deo adjuvante ſine meritis converti ad bonum: God forſaking him, by his deſerts goeth to evill, & God helping him, without deſert is converted to good, &c. Then mans will, being not rectified by grace, doth of it ſelfe run into evill.

Harm. ſect. 3. pag. 62.

3 Helvetia the latter, c. 9. It is evident, that the minde or underſtanding is the guide of the will, and ſeeing the guide is blind, it is eaſie to be ſeene, how farre will can reach: therefore man not as yet regenerate hath not free-will to doe good, &c.

4 Peter Lombard: Eſt libertas non vera, &c. There is a libertie not good, to doe evill, when reaſon diſſenteth from the will, judging that not to bee done, which the will deſireth: lib. 2. diſt. 25. liter. k. How can that ſeeme good to the will, which reaſon judgeth to be evill?

Guliel. Ockam (one of their ſchoolemen) affirmeth with us, that the will may bee carried to deſire evill, ſub ratione mali, as it is evill: in lib. 3. ſenten. qu. 13. diſt. 3.

An appendix, whether the end it ſelfe be the object of the will, and whence the will is moved to deſire the end.

The Papiſts.

33. Error.

First, Bellarmine affirmeth, that the end, as eternall life, is not properly the object of the will, but the meanes tending to the end. His beſt reaſon is out of Ariſtotle his Ethiks, lib. 3. cap. 2. No man conſulteth to be happy, but of the meanes how he may be happy, lib. 3. de grat. c. 14. §. quod autem.

34. Error.

Secondly, the love or deſire to the end (he ſaith) is a naturall act of the will, not infuſed or inſpired of God, but naturally imprinted in the will. His reaſon is this, becauſe if this deſire bee an act of the will, then it muſt proceed actively: but if it ſhould be inſpired or added beſide the naturall inclination, it ſhould be paſſive: Bellarm. lib. 3. de grat. cap. 14. §. jam vero primam, &c.

The Proteſtants.

Philip. 1. 23.

First, 1 Wee ſay that the end is the firſt and chiefeſt thing in the deſire and intention. 2 There is difference betweene the deſire and deliberation, betweene will and counſell. Conſultation is of the meanes to effect that which the will intendeth, or deſireth: and ſo your Philoſopher is to be underſtood. 3 The Scripture teſtifieth with us: S. Paul ſaith, I deſire to bee diſſolved, and to be with Chriſt, which is beſt of all. What is the end, but that which is beſt of all, to be with Chriſt, which here is the object of the Apoſtles deſire? Your owne Scripture alſo ſaith, Eccleſiaſtic. 15. 14. Before man is life and death, good and evill, what him liketh ſhall be given him. Life and death are ſet before man, as the object of his will: which are the very ends themſelves. 4 We reade in the Goſpell, how Thomas ſaid unto our Saviour: We know not whither thou goeſt, how then can we know the way? Wee ſee then, that firſt the end is to bee known and deſired, and then the way. Our Saviour anſwereth, I am the way, the truth, and the life: whereby is ſignified, that Chriſt is to be deſired, not only as the way, but as the end, which is life. As Ambroſe upon theſe words, Sequimur te Domine, ſed ut ſequamur accerſi, &c. Wee follow thee Lord, but fetch us, that we may follow thee: no man doth aſcend without thee, thou art the way, the truth, the life, the poſſibilitie, faith, reward: de bon. mort. c. 12. Chriſt then is to bee followed, as the way and the life, as both the truth, and faith, and reward.

John 14. 5.
Iohn 14.

Iohn 6. 44.

Secondly, 1 The will is active in reſpect of his proper object: but it is paſſive, as it is moved and ſtirred of God. 2 The Scripture is evident, that the deſire of comming to, and being with Chriſt, both of the way and end, is not naturall, but above nature, from God. No man commeth to me, unleſſe the father draw him: The love of Chriſts appearing is rewarded with a crowne of glory, but no naturall gift is ſo rewarded. 3 Saint Ambroſe: Nulla ſpecies cujuſquam virtutis occurrit, quæ ſine dono divinæ gratiæ habetur: There is no ſhew of any vertue, which is had or deſired without the gift of the heavenly grace: Ergo, the end, which is ſalvation, which is not without a ſhew of vertue, is not deſired without grace.

2 Tim. 4. 8.

1 And further Chryſoſtome ſaith: Agit Deus in nobis, ut quod vult & velimus & agamus: God worketh in us, that what he willeth, we ſhould both will and doe, &c.

Homil. de Adam & Eva.

2 Auguſtine ſaith, Ut velimus, ſine nobis operatur, cum autem volumus, &c. That we will, God worketh without us, and after we will, that we may doe he worketh together with us, &c. The deſire then and willing of the end is of God by grace ſupernaturall, not naturall in our ſelves.

De grat. & liber. arbitr. c. 17.

3 Former confeſſ. of Helvetia: We find by experience, that of our owne accord we may doe evill, but we can neither embrace, nor follow any good thing, except being illuminated by the grace of Chriſt, wee bee ſtirred up and effectually moved thereunto.

Har. ſſ. 4. p. 65.

4 Capreolus, one of their Schoolemen thinketh, that this deſire of the will is wrought only by God, and is altogether paſſive in that reſpect.

The third part, of the quality and condition of free-will, whether it bee active or paſſive.

The Papiſts.

Bellarmine affirmeth, that the will of man is neither paſſive only, nor partly active, and partly paſſive: ſed ſimpliciter & abſolutè activum: but ſimply and abſolutely active. Of the ſame opinion are divers of the Schoolemen, as Thomas Aquinas, Scotus, Henricus, Capreolus, Ferrarienſ. as they are cited and alleaged by Bellarmine, lib. 3. de grat. cap. 10.

35. Error.

Argum. If free-will ſhould be paſſive, and not active, that is, if it be not a perpetuall agent and working cauſe, but ſhould it ſelfe ſuffer, and receive, and bee wrought upon by other cauſes; then can it not bee free, for it is not in the power of the patient, or of that which ſuffereth, to doe this, or that, but in the power of the agent, Bellarm. ibid.

Anſw. Firſt, wee grant, that in what things ſoever the will of man naturally is free, there it worketh freely, and ſo actively, as namely in all evill actions: But unto good things, it hath naturally no freedome at all, but is made free only by grace: and therefore wee denie, that in this caſe, it is either free by nature, or of any active power. Secondly, not only grace worketh upon the will of man, but naturally alſo the underſtanding moveth the will actively, unleſſe (contrary to nature) the will rebell againſt the reaſon and underſtanding.

The Proteſtants.

The will of man we cannot abſolutely determine to bee either active or paſſive in working: for as the object of the will is, and the thing that is willed, ſo is the will it ſelfe affected: for in every thing which is willed or deſired, we are to reſpect two things: the generall power of willing and deſiring, without any reſpect unto good, or evill; and the quality of the object, the goodneſſe, or evilneſſe thereof. If we conſider the generall power, whereby we thinke, we will, we deſire this, or that; ſo is the will of man free and active, whether it be good or evill, that is ſo willed: if we reſpect the qualitie of the object, as if it be evill, which is deſired, here alſo is the will of man both free, and active: But if it be good, the will is only paſſive in the firſt moving and preparing of it unto good: and being then prepared, that by grace it alſo worketh actively, but not of it ſelfe: it hath no naturall inclination unto good things, unleſſe it be drawne by the ſpirit of God working in us. So then, velle in nobis eſt, to will is in our owne power, bene velle à Deo, to will as we ſhould, is of God.

Argum. If the Son make you free, then are you free indeed: It is God which worketh in you both the will and the deed. The will of man then in good things worketh not, but is wrought; it maketh not it ſelfe free, but is made free: Ergo, it is not in this caſe active, but only paſſive, receiving power from another cauſe.

Philip. 2. 13.

1 Auguſtine ſaith: Voluntas humana non libertate conſequitur gratiam, ſed gratia potius libertatem: The will of man doth not by the freeneſſe thereof obtaine grace, but by grace obtaineth freedome: de correption. & grat. c. 8. The freedome then of the will, is the worke and effect of grace: Ergo, it is paſſive, for the effect, or the thing wrought or cauſed, doth ſuffer in reſpect of the efficient & working cauſe.

2 Damaſcene ſaith, all things are thine, thou requireſt nothing of us, (then to be ſaved.)

ἢ τὸ σώζεσθαι, Lib. 4. de fid. orthodox. c. 4.

3 Latter confeſſ. of Helvetia, c. 4. The regenerate in the choice and working of that which is good, doe not only worke paſſively, but actively: for they are moved of God, that themſelves may doe that which they doe.

Harm. ſſ. 3. pag. 63.

4 Bellarmine produceth divers Schoolemen: ſome of opinion, that the will is only paſſive, as Gotfridus, Ægidius: ſome that it is partly active, partly paſſive, as Gabriel, Paladanus, Cajetan, &c.

Lib. 3. de liber. arbit. c. 10.

Petrus Lombard, compareth free-will to the ground, grace unto raine: Terra mentis noſtra, i. libero arbitrio voluntatis, infunditur pluvia divinæ benedictionis: The raine of the heavenly bleſſing is infuſed into the ground of the mind, that is, free-will: &c. But the earth in reſpect of the raine that falleth, is paſſive, and not active.

Eſpenc.in 2. ad Timoth.p.40. b. Paſſiva promiſſi expectatio hominum eſt: The paſſive expectation of the promiſe is of men. Faith then, which is the act of the will and underſtanding, is paſſive.

An appendix, whether the underſtanding or intelligence doe worke actively upon the will of man.

The Papiſts.

36. Error.

BEllarmine to maintaine his owne conceit, that the will of man is only active, not paſſive, doubteth not to denie, voluntatem moveri à ratione, that the will is moved by reaſon: or that the intelligent part doth actum voluntatis effective producere, produce and effect the act of the will: lib. 3. *de grat.cap.*10.

Argum. The intelligent part worketh neceſſarily, or is a neceſſary cauſe, then it would follow, that to will is neceſſary, not free, if the underſtanding move the will neceſſarily, as it doth: Bellarm. ibid.

Anſw. Firſt, the underſtanding doth not alwayes worke neceſſarily: for the will and deſire many times rebelleth againſt reaſon, and is not alwayes moved or perſwaded by the underſtanding. Secondly, though it ſhould worke neceſſarily, yet the will may retaine the freedome ſtill: for not neceſſitie, but coaction and compulſion take away libertie: as grace worketh neceſſarily upon the will, that is, ſurely, effectually, yet grace taketh not away free-will.

The Proteſtants.

THat the underſtanding or intelligent part mooveth the will of man actively, it is evident.

Argum. That which is the life of man is the agent and active worker in mans will: for all actions proceed from the life: but the reaſon and underſtanding is the life, becauſe it is the light: for the life is the light of man, Iohn 1. 4. Ergo.

Iohn 1.4.

Againe, that wherein Gods image properly conſiſteth, is the cheefe agent and mover: but the image of God is in the mind, the ſeat of knowledge: and the renewing of the mind is in knowledge after the image of him that created him. Ergo, the underſtanding is the mover of the will.

Coloſſ. 3. 10.

1 Auguſtine reſembleth the underſtanding to the man, the will to the woman: Atq́, ita fieri quaſi maſculum & fœminam illa parte conſulente hac obtemperante, and ſo, (in the inner man) there is as the male and female, one counſelling, the other obeying. lib. 2. de Geneſ. ad liter. cap. 21. The mind then worketh actively upon the will, which is the ſenſuall part.

Qu. 20. in Geneſ.

2 Theodoret affirmeth, that man was created according to Gods image, ſecundum partem animæ intellectivam, in reſpect of the intellective part of the ſoule, &c. that then which is Gods image muſt have a commanding power over all the other faculties.

Harm. ſect. 3. pag. 62.

3 Helvetia, latter confeſſ. c. 4. It is evident, that the mind or underſtanding is the guide of the will, and ſeeing the guid is blind it is eaſie to be ſeene, how farre the will can reach.

4 Divers of the Schoolemen hold the will to bee paſſive in reſpect of the underſtanding that mooveth it, though it be active in reſpect of the object which is wiſhed or deſired: ſic Gabriel. in 2. ſent. diſt. 25. qu. unic. Petrus Paludan, in 4. ſent. diſt. 49. qu. 3.

Lib. 3. de lib. arbit. c. 8. ſect. ſexta.

And what elſe can be Bellarmines meaning, maintaining this poſition, that the election of the will, pendet neceſſariò, &c. doth depend neceſſarily of the finall judgement of practicall reaſon; but that the judgement of reaſon ſwayeth and commandeth the will, and that the will is moved by reaſon.

The fourth part, of the ſubject of free-will.

The Papiſts.

37. Error.

BEllarmine affirmeth, that free-will is incident only to reaſonable creatures, which no man denieth, and he confeſſeth that there is free-will in God and in the Angels: and to this purpoſe alleageth theſe places, Pſalm. 135. 6. Whatſoever pleaſed the Lord, that did he in heaven and earth. Which worketh all things, according to the councell of his owne will: cap. 16. Hence he concludeth, that the will of God is moſt free not only from coaction and compulſion, but from all kind of neceſſitie: and hee blameth Bucer and Calvin for aſcribing a neceſſitie to the will or works of God: lib. 3. de grat. cap. 15. 16.

Pſal. 135. 6.
Epheſ. 1. 11.

Anſwer. Firſt, we willingly affirme, that Gods will worketh moſt freely, that is, without any conſtraint, and this out of theſe places is concluded, but not that Gods will is free from all neceſſitie: for it is neceſſarie that God ſhould not will any thing that is evill. Secondly, Bellarmine alloweth Lombards definition of free-will: Liberum eſt ad utrum libet: It is free to either part, cap. 5. And in the ſame place he proveth, that it is not ſufficient for the will to be free from coaction, but from neceſſity alſo: then it muſt follow in their ſenſe, that Gods will muſt bee free to either part, both to good and evill, which were blaſphemie to affirme.

The Proteſtants.

VVE neither tie God to a fatall neceſſitie, as the Heathen Philoſophers did : neither doe wee affirme, as he ſlandereth Calvin to ſay, that God can doe no more, than hee doth : for as Iohn ſaith, he could of ſtones raiſe up children to Abraham. Neither doe we denie, that God hath a free-will, Matth. 3. 9. but not ſuch a free-will as the Papiſts define : which is free to either part, free both from coaction, and from all neceſſitie : free to good and evill.

Argum. That which is impoſſible to God is neceſſary, It is impoſſible for God to lye, Ergo, it is neceſſary Heb. 6. 18. that he ſhould not lye. That which God doth not, neither can doe, he willeth not : God tempteth no man to evill, hee neither doth nor can : Ergo, his will here is not libera ad utrum libet, free unto each Iam. 1. 13. part. From this neceſſitie of not willing or doing evill, Gods will then is not free. Wherefore let them chuſe which they will, that either God hath no free-will, or that free-will is not free from neceſſitie, though it be from compulſion or coaction.

Auguſtine ſaith, Si illa definitur neceſſitas, &c. If we define that to be neceſſitie, as when we ſay it is neceſſary, that this thing ſhould bee ſo, wee need not feare leaſt this neceſſitie ſhould take away the freedome of will : for neither doe we put Gods foreknowledge under neceſſitie, when we ſay, it is neceſſary God ſhould alway like and know all things afore: lib. 5. de civitat. Dei cap. 10. Auguſtine denieth not, but that there is a kind of neceſſity in God; a neceſſity determined, not conſtrained; implied, not enforced. So the fathers, when they exclude neceſſitie from God, they meane a fatall and preſcribed or naturall neceſſitie, not otherwiſe : as Gregor. Nyſſen. lib. de fat. cap. ult. Omnipotens neque natura neceſſitate, neq; legis praſcripto operatur: The Omnipotent worketh neither by neceſſitie of nature, nor preſcript of law. Ambr. Operatur pro libero voluntatis arbitrio, non pro neceſſitatis obſequio : Hee worketh according to the freedome of will, not thraldome of neceſſitie.

Pet. Lombard. in the ſame ſenſe ſaith : Deus non neceſſitate, ſed libera voluntate omnia facit, &c. God not of neceſſitie, but of his free-will worketh all things. By neceſſitie he underſtandeth coaction. Liberum arbitrium dicitur, quia ſine coactione & neceſſitate : It is called free-will, becauſe without coaction and neceſſitie it willeth : lib. 2. diſt. 25. Wherefore ſeeing God truly hath free-will, and the elect Angels have free-will; as in the ſame place Lombar. Multo liberius erit arbitrium, quod non poteſt ſervire peccato; Will ſhall be much more free, when it cannot ſerve ſin, &c. It followeth, that neceſſitie only, where no coaction or compulſion is, doth not take away the libertie and freedome of the will.

The ſecond queſtion, of the power of free-will.

THere are three kinds of humane actions : Some are naturall, and civill, as to walke, to ſit, to ſow, to plant, to make warre and ſuch like : Some are morall, ſuch are the actions which appertaine to vertue, or vice ; as to give almes, to live chaſtly, contrarie to the which are theſe, to ſteale, to commit adulterie ; with the like : Some are divine and ſupernaturall, as to beleeve, to hope, to love, &c. This queſtion then hath according to this diviſion three parts: firſt, of the power of free-will in naturall and civill actions : ſecondly, in morall : thirdly, in divine and ſupernaturall.

The firſt part, of the power of free-will in naturall things.

THis part of the queſtion is divided into other particulars : as firſt, whether the deitie and power of God may bee knowne by the light of nature. Secondly, whether man have free-will in naturall things.

The firſt point, whether the God-head may be knowne by the light of nature.

The Papiſts.

BEllarmine not contented with Calvin his judgement of this matter, who granteth that by the 38. Error. light of nature generally the Godhead may be knowne, addeth further, Verum & unum Deum naturaliter poſſe cognoſci, & non ſolum Deum in communi, &c. That the true and only God naturally may be knowne, and not only after a common and generall manner. And likewiſe he ſaith yet furthermore, that to this naturall knowledge and demonſtration of God, a man may nullo labore aſſentiri, give his aſſent without any labour; and need not, auxilio gratia ſpeciali, any ſpeciall help or aſſiſtance of grace thereunto, Bellarm. lib. 4. de grat. cap. 2.

Argum. S. Paul ſaith, that the Gentiles even by the light of nature might have groped after God, and found him. Acts 17. 28. The knowledge of God is ſo eaſie, and readie at hand, to bee found even in the creatures, as a thing that may be groped, and felt: Alſo the ſame Apoſtle ſaith, that the inviſible things of God, as Rom. 1. 20. his power, eternitie, are ſeene by the creation of the world: Ergo, God is known by his creatures, to be juſt, good, almightie, &c. Bellarm. ibid.

Anſwer. Theſe places prove a generall and confuſed knowledge of God by the creatures, which we grant, but ſuch a particular, and manifeſt light of knowledge, which the Jeſuite ſtriveth for, they prove not: they might (ſaith the Apoſtle) have groped after God: but men uſe to grope and feele in the night, and in the darke: and this naturall light ſerveth only to make men without excuſe. Rom. 1. 20. Ad hoc, ſaith the Apoſtle, ut ſint ipſi inexcuſabiles: It cannot bring them to any cleere or perfect knowledge of God. So we read in the booke of Iob 36. 25. Iob: All men ſee it, and behold it a farre off: that is, the light of nature is but a dimme and obſcure light, as when a man beholdeth a thing a farre off.

The Proteſtants.

I Marvell much, that the Jeſuite here dealeth againſt us, as enemies to the light of nature; ſeeing they themſelves, if they be conſtant in their doctrine, and agree in judgement one with another in this matter have been more ſtrait-laced than wee. This queſtion is at large diſcourſed betweene D. Harding, and that reverend learned father Biſhop Iewel: who having affirmed, That men, even by the light of nature, though they are not able to be led thereby to the perfection of faith, yet may diſcerne oftentimes betweene truth and falſhood in religion. Harding thereupon openeth his mouth wide, and crieth aloud, Defenſ. Apol. pag. 42. This is his heatheniſh heart, what could Porphyrie, or Iulian, or Celſus ſay more? But Biſhop Iewel in defence of the light of nature, alleageth that place of the Apoſtle, Rom. 1. 20. which the Jeſuite objected, How that the power of God is knowne by the creatures: And the Heathen, that have not the law, Rom. 2. 14. yet by nature know the things that pertaine to the law: He alſo citeth the teſtimonie of Hierome to the ſame purpoſe: Homo naturaliter poteſt ſcire de Deo, & quod ſit, & quod juſtus ſit: Man may naturally know of God, both that he is, and that he is juſt.

This then is our opinion, that by the light of nature it may be knowne, both that God is, and that he is almightie, juſt, eternall, &c. For otherwiſe he ſhould not be knowne to be God: See the judgement of Beza, annot. Rom. 1. 20. With what face then can the Jeſuite open his mouth againſt us, as though we condemned the light of nature, and knowledge of the creatures?

But ſuch a naturall knowledge, that is, a particular, ſpeciall, manifeſt, direct knowledge of God, which the Jeſuite urgeth, we cannot approve, nor yet that a man, without ſpeciall grace, can give his aſſent unto ſuch naturall knowledge, and come to know his Creator thereby.

Argum. 1. Firſt, that the light of nature is not ſo full, cleere, and perfect, that it is able to bring us to the true knowledge of God, we learne out of the Scripture: Our Saviour Chriſt ſaith, No man commeth to the Father but by me: Joh. 14. 6. The true knowledge of God is not revealed unto us, but by Chriſt: the light of nature leadeth us not to Chriſt, therefore not to the true knowledge of God.

Argum. 2. Secondly, that man of himſelfe, without Gods ſpeciall gift, cannot make uſe of this naturall knowledge of God, and ſubſcribe to the ſame, and give aſſent in his heart, it is cleere alſo out of Ioh. 1. 10. the word of God: he was in the world, and the world was made by him, and the world knew him not.

Bellarmine anſwereth: 1 This place is underſtood of the Son of God the ſecond perſon of the Trinitie: which myſterie of the Trinitie, we grant, cannot be knowne by the light of nature. Bellarm. cap. 3.

Contra. The Evangeliſt ſpeaketh here of the creation of the world: The world was made by him: and yet they knew not their Creator: this notwithſtanding is a point of naturall knowledge, to confeſſe God to bee the Creator and Governour of the world: Rom. 1. 20. for the power of God is ſeene by the creation of the world.

Bellarm. 2. The light appeared in darkneſſe, that is, the wiſdome of God is ſeene even in the ſenſeleſſe creatures, as in trees and ſtones, which are called darkneſſe, becauſe they want reaſon: and therefore it is true of theſe creatures, that they comprehended not the light.

Contra. The Evangeliſt in very direct tearmes ſpeaketh of that light of nature which is in men: The life was the light of men, and, This is the true light that lightneth every man that commeth into Ioh. 1. 4. 9. the world, verſ. 9. The Jeſuite then doth ſtrangely abuſe this place, in applying it unto unreaſonable creatures.

Bellarm. 3. Laſt of all, the Jeſuite thus playeth the interpreter, by the darkneſſe wee underſtand, Homines ignorantes, & peccatores, ſinfull and ignorant men, which perceived not this light, not becauſe they could not, but becauſe they would not.

Contra. Neither can this expoſition hold: for the Evangeliſt ſheweth the condition of all men, what they are by nature, even full of darkneſſe and ignorance, as it may appeare by comparing the ninth verſe, This is the light that lightneth every man: he meaneth then not ſome, but all. Secondly, not to comprehend, noteth a want of power, not of will; as to comprehend, ſheweth a preſence of a- Epheſ. 3. 18. bilitie or power: That yee may be able to comprehend: ut poſſitis, ſaith the Apoſtle, that yee may; not, ut velitis, that you will. Laſtly, wee grant alſo that it is true, noluerunt comprehendere, they would not comprehend: but that is not all: for the Evangeliſt declareth two things, wherein the miſerable ſtate of man by nature is ſeene; both that men are unable (though they would) to comprehend, and unwilling though they could, to receive the light: for the firſt, he ſaith, οὐ κατέλαβον, non comprehenderunt, They comprehended not, that is, they could not, verſ. 5. and for the other, οὐ παρέλαβον, non receperunt, Ioh. 1. 5. 11. they received not, that is, they would not, verſ. 11. As not to comprehend ſheweth a defect of power; ſo not to receive, importeth a want of will. Thus, notwithſtanding this ſmoake and miſt, which the Jeſuite raiſeth, this place remaineth cleare both againſt the ſufficiencie of naturall light in it ſelfe, and the voluntary aſſenting thereunto on mans behalfe.

Auguſtine

1 Auguſtine thus writeth upon theſe words in the Goſpell: No man knoweth the Son, but the Father, neither knoweth any man the Father, but the Son, and he to whom the Son will reveale him. Which muſt not be ſo underſtood, as though no man knew the Son but the Father; but the Father was both known of the Son, and of thoſe to whom the Son revealeth him, becauſe it is not ſaid of the Father concerning his Son, To whom the Father will reveale him: as it is ſaid of the Son, concerning the Father, To whom the Son ſhall reveale him: then it followeth, Sic potius dictum eſt, ut intelligamus, & Patrem & ipſum Filium per Filium revelari, quia ipſe eſt mentis noſtræ lumen: But it is ſet downe in this manner, that we ſhould underſtand, that both the Father and the Son are revealed by the Son, becauſe he is the light of our mindes: Auguſtin, ſerm. de tempor. 48. We ſee then that God is knowne only by Chriſt he is ſhadowed forth in the creatures, rather than known: And that Chriſt is that naturall light whereby every man is lightned comming into the world; that is, the light of nature is to ſmall uſe or purpoſe, but to thoſe that receive grace by Chriſt.

Harm. ſect. 3. p. 57.

4 Petrus de Alliaco holdeth, that nothing can bee knowne of God, without the ſpeciall help of grace.

In 1. ſentent. qu. 3.

Eſpencæus a learned popiſh writer, urgeth that place of S. Paul to this purpoſe, The Lord give thee underſtanding in all things: In omnibus humanis rebus ſcilicet, maximis & minimis: In all humane matters great and ſmall. And he further thus alleageth out of Lactantius; Falſum intelligere ſapientia eſt, ſed humana &c. To underſtand that is falſe, is a point of wiſdome, but humane; beyond this degree man cannot proceed: to know the truth is a point of divine wiſdome, to the which a man cannot attaine of himſelfe, unleſſe hee bee taught. The Philoſophers attained that which was the higheſt point of humane wiſdome, to underſtand, what God was not, but yet attained not to ſay, what God was: ex citat. Eſpenc. comment. in 2 Timoth. p. 26. liter. f. Wherefore the knowledge of nature concerning God, is obſcure, doubtfull, imperfect, not able to give direction to the minde, without inſtinct of grace.

2 Tim. 27.

The ſecond point, whether man have free-will in civill and naturall things.

The Papiſts.

THis the Jeſuite affirmeth, and it is the common opinion of that ſide, that in naturall and civill actions man hath a free and abſolute will, whether to good or evill, they reaſon thus.

39. Error.

Argum. 1. It is in mans power to doe ſome things, which he doth not, and againe to leave ſome things undone in civill matters, which he doth: Ergo, there is free-will in ſuch things: God ſaith to Salomon, Becauſe thou haſt asked wiſdome, and haſt not asked long life, &c. So Peter ſaith to Ananias, After it was ſold, was it not in thine owne power? Here wee ſee Salomon might have done that which he did not, that is, asked riches, and long life, and not wiſdome: and Ananias might have left that undone which he did, as to have ſold his poſſeſſions, and to bring the money to the Apoſtles: Bellar. lib. 4. de grat. cap. 7.

1 King. 3. 11.
Acts 5. 4.

Anſw. Firſt, though in civill indifferent matters to will and purpoſe, be in mans power, yet to doe or not to doe, to execute what hee hath purpoſed, is not ſo in his power: for the Wiſeman maketh a manifeſt difference betweene theſe two: The thoughts of the heart are in man, but the anſwer of the tongue is of God. Man purpoſeth, but God diſpoſeth.

Prov. 16. 1.

Secondly, it was not in Salomons power of himſelfe to aske wiſdome of God, rather than any other thing: but his will and deſire was thereto directed of God: for if the Lord put into Salomons minde to aske, who ſaid unto Salomon, appearing to him in a dreame, Aske what I ſhall give thee; much more was it inſpired into him, what he ſhould aske. And concerning the other example; for a man to ſell or not to ſell, being a meere civill and indifferent action, it is freely in his power: but to ſell to good and godly uſes, to help the neceſſitie of others, as the brethren did in the Apoſtles time, was in them a worke of grace: All that beleeved were in one place, and had all things common. They were beleevers that did ſo, faith wrought it in them. And againe, Great grace was upon them all, neither was there any among them that lacked. It was a worke of grace then, that men ſold their lands, to releeve the wants of others.

1 King. 3. 5.
Acts 2. 44.
Acts 4. 33.

Argum. 2. The Scripture giveth unto man free election & choice of things, which cannot be without free-will. Firſt, Ioſh. 24. 15. Chuſe you this day whom yee will ſerve. Secondly, 2 Sam. 24. 12. I offer three things unto thee, chuſe of them, which I ſhall doe unto thee. Thirdly, If thou wilt enter into life, keep the commandements, Luke 9. If any man will follow me, let him denie himſelfe.

Ioſh. 24. 15.
2 Sam. 24. 12.
Math. 19. 17.
Luke 9. 23.

Anſw. Firſt, 1 The people had not power of themſelves to chuſe the way of the Lord: but God had firſt choſen them, Deut. 4.37. Becauſe he loved the fathers he choſe their ſeed: and here the people anſwer, We will ſerve the Lord, for he is our God, verſ. 18. Firſt, he was their God in chuſing them, and giving grace; and then they choſe the Lord. Secondly, this place otherwiſe would enforce an abſolute election in divine matters, and not in civill only, which were a groſſe error: for this choice of the people was of the ſervice and religion of God.

Deut. 4. 37.

Secondly, Davids will is directed by faith to make choice to fall into Gods hands: for (ſaith hee) his mercies are great, verſ. 14. His faith and confidence in Gods mercies directeth his choice.

2 Sam. 24. 14.

Thirdly, 1. Thoſe places are unproperly alleaged to prove free-will in civill matters: to enter into life, and to follow Chriſt, are not civill, but ſpirituall and divine: will he then conclude that a man hath power of himſelfe to follow Chriſt, and enter into heaven? blaſphemous is the mouth, that ſo affirmeth. 2 Why the precepts of Scripture are thus ſet forth unto man, Saint Ambroſe excellently ſheweth: Non ob aliud unquam datur præceptum, niſi ut quæratur præcipientis auxilium; voces docentium, literæ paginarum Deo ſerviunt, non carent ejus virtute cui ſerviunt: & quando id quod jubetur ab obediente perficitur, tunc effectus divini operis declaratur: The precept is given, that the help of the precept giver may bee ſought; the voyce of the teacher, the letters of Scripture doe miniſter unto God; neither doe they want his vertue, whom they ſerve: and when that is fulfilled, which is commanded, the operation of the divine worke is declared, epiſt. 84. The precepts then of Scripture prove not a free-will in man, but only ſtirre us up to ſeeke for his help to performe the precept, that giveth it.

Argum. 3. Here a great troupe of both Greeke and Latine fathers is brought in for the proofe of free-will. I anſwer: firſt, it is certaine that ſome of the Greeke fathers aſcribed too much to free-will, more I thinke than the Papiſts dare acknowledge: as in the Homilie under Chryſoſtomes name upon the ſtorie of Zacheus: In te eſt ut poſſis, quia in te eſt ut velis, &c. It is in thy ſelfe to bee able to doe, becauſe it is in thee to will to doe. If it bee in us, what need grace? Secondly, the fathers extoll free-will, having to deale with the contrary hereſie of Manichees, who imputed ſinne unto nature, and not to mans will. Thirdly, the fathers affirming free-will, either ſpeake of the ſtate of man in his firſt creation: as Baſil alleaged ſaith, Anima voluntariam adepta vitam, &c. The ſoule having obtained a voluntary life, was created according to the image of God. Or elſe they meane the freedome of will by grace: as Epiphan. hæreſ. 16. Liberum arbitrium exhibuit nobis Deus, &c. God hath given unto us a free-will, ſaying, If yee will obey and heare, yee ſhall eat the good things of the land. This libertie or freedome, as I ſhewed before out of Ambroſe, is wrought in us by grace. Or laſtly, they ſpeake of a libertie of will free from compulſion or violence, as Chryſoſtome ſerm. 2. de fato: Dæmon dicit, Non eſt in te, quod extendas manum, ſed neceſſitate & vi id agis: The devill ſaith, It is not in thee to extend thy hand, but thou doeſt it of neceſſity and force. And S. Hierome cited in 26. Ierem. Liberum homini ſervatur arbitrium ne ex praſcientia ejus, quaſi ex neceſſitate cogatur, &c. Mans free-will is reſerved, ſo that hee is not conſtrained as of neceſſitie by Gods preſcience to doe this or that. In any of theſe three ſenſes if the fathers bee underſtood, according to their owne minde, wee doe willingly conſent: that man in his creation had free-will; that by grace now alſo mans will is made free, and that by nature mans will is free from compulſion or conſtraint.

The Proteſtants.

WE here diſſent from our adverſaries in two points: Firſt, we grant, that in civill matters, being in themſelves indifferent, there is a free-will in man, as to eat, to labour, to ſit, to go, to plant, to build: but to doe any of theſe to any good, or godly end, as to labour, thereby to avoid ſtealing, to goe unto prayer, to build houſes for poore people onely of charity, without opinion of merit, theſe godly actions are not of our ſerves, but wrought in us by the ſpirit.

Secondly, we affirme, that although in ſuch things mens thoughts or devices are free; yet ſo are not their actions: it is not as free for men to doe, or not to doe, as to will, or not to will.

Prov. 16. 8.
Prov. 19. 21.
Jerem. 10. 23.
Jam. 4. 14.

Argum. 1. The heart of man purpoſeth his way, but the Lord doth direct his ſteps. Many devices are in mans heart, but the counſell of the Lord ſhall ſtand. I know, that the way of man is not in himſelfe, neither is it in man to direct his ſteps. S. Iames alſo reproveth them which ſay, to morrow I will goe into the citie: Ye ought to ſay, if the Lord will, I will doe this or that. By theſe places we gather, that it is not in mans power to doe what himſelfe willeth, or purpoſeth, and therefore he hath not a free and abſolute will in theſe things.

Anſw. It is one thing to have liberam electionem, a free choice of things, another to have liberam exequutionem, freely to execute that which a man willeth: theſe places ſhew, that man hath not power freely to execute his will: his will or purpoſe may bee free notwithſtanding in it ſelfe, Bellarm, cap. 11.

Contra. The Jeſuite hath made here an anſwer contrary to himſelfe: for before hee thus defined, liberum hominem, a free-man, or a man of free-will, qui pro arbitrio facit, vel non facit, which doth or not doth, this or that, according to his owne pleaſure, cap. 7. argum. 2. But here forgetting what hee ſaid before, he limiteth free-will within the compaſſe of the minde and purpoſe, not extending it to the action or execution: ſaying to this effect, that the purpoſe of man is free; but to accompliſh or execute his purpoſe he hath not free or abſolute power: which is the very ſame, that wee affirmed before:

fore : that howſoever mens thoughts in meere civill and naturall things are left unto them free, yet ſo are not their actions.

Argum. 2. Thou haſt wrought all our works for us. Of him, through him, and for him are all things. God worketh all in all: Ergo, the diſpoſition of the will is of God. Iſay. 26. 12. Rom. 11. 36. 1 Cor. 12. 6.

Bellarmine: Mans free-will, and Gods grace doe worke together : like as without the light a man cannot ſee, yet the light being preſent, it is in a mans power to open his eyes and ſee, or to ſhut his eyes and not ſee : ſo the grace of God preſuppoſed, yet it is in mans will to chuſe or refuſe : Bellarm. cap. 11. obſerv. 2.

Contra. Firſt, this gloſſe is contrary to the text : for if God worke all our works for us, if he worke all in all, then our will worketh nothing : how worketh God all, if he worke not all, but with a fellow-helper? Secondly, the reaſon is not alike betweene the gifts of nature, and the gifts of grace : for the power to ſee, to heare, is once given in the nature of man, and to the execution thereof, there need no ſpeciall direction, but the generall aſſiſtance of Gods providence : but in the works of grace, as in the diſpoſing of the will to good, the ſpeciall aſſiſtance of Gods ſpirit is neceſſary: a man may ſhut his eyes againſt the light, but a man cannot ſhut his heart againſt the effectuall working of grace. Thirdly, this was the hereſie of the Pelagians : Ita Dei gratiam ponunt ut non per ſingula opera ejus nitamur auxilio: They did ſo affirme the grace of God, that we need not for every worke Gods aſſiſtance : but referred themſelves to free-will, which was once given them. Their ſentence was this, that it was the grace and gift of God, that they had free-will : but after this gift once given, the execution and diſpoſition of it was in themſelves: Hieron. epiſt. ad Cteſiphont. Bellarmine ſeemeth not to be farre off from this hereſie, that matcheth the naturall faculties of the ſenſe, and the ſpirituall diſpoſition of the will together : as though a generall aſſiſtance of Gods power and providence ſufficed to the one, as well as to the other.

1 Auguſtine ſaith : Fatemur quidem liberum eſſe in omnibus hominibus arbitrium, habens quidem judicium rationis, non per quod ſit idoneum, quæ ad Deum pertinent, ſine Deo aut inchoare, aut perficere; ſed tantum in operibus vitæ præſentis, tam bonis, quam malis; bonis dico, quæ de bono naturæ oriuntur, ut velle manducare, laborare, domum fabricare, &c. Wee confeſſe a kind of free-will to be in all men, which hath the judgement of reaſon, not by the which it is fit either to begin, or to finiſh without Gods help, things appertaining to God, but only in the works of this life preſent, both good and evill; ſuch good things I meane, as have a naturall or civill goodnes, as to will or purpoſe to eat, to labour, to build an houſe, &c. With this teſtimonie, both theſe points are confirmed, which we have now alreadie ſufficiently proved out of Scripture. First, Auguſtine granteth a free-will in naturall things, ſo far only as they are naturally or civilly good, not as they are referred unto God or any godly worke. Secondly, the execution of theſe naturall actions he doth not attribute to mans free-will, but the purpoſe only and deſire, as velle laborare, manducare, to will to labour, to will to eat, and ſo of the reſt. Artic. 3. contr. Pelag.

Saint Hierome epiſt. ad Cteſiphont. ſheweth what the power of mans will is in naturall things : the Pelagian objected thus: Si voluero curvare digitum, ſtare, ſedere, &c. ſemper mihi Dei auxilium neceſſarium eſt? If I will bow my finger, ſtand, ſit, &c. is the help of God alwayes neceſſary? Hee anſwereth thus : Audi ingrate, imo ſacrilege, Apoſtolum prædicantem: Heare thou ungratefull man, &c. the Apoſtle thus preaching, Whether we eat or drinke, or whatſoever we doe elſe, let all be done to the glory of God. So then even in theſe civill works, Gods aſſiſtance is neceſſary.

Ambroſe alſo thus teſtifieth, epiſt. 84. Quaſi homo auxilio Dei in quadam actionum ſuarum parte egeat, in quadam non egeat, &c. As though man needed Gods help in ſome part of his actions, in ſome not : or that there were any time, or moment, wherein it were not pernicious and hurtfull to him, if the ſpirit of God were wanting : Ergo, even in the direction of civill actions the preſence of the ſpirit is neceſſary, if in no action, nor any time he can be wanting.

2 Chryſoſtome confeſſeth, Omnium bonorum effectuum & operum—Deum authorem, that God is the author of all good arts, and works, &c. then whatſoever is well done even in civill works, is from God, not of our ſelves. Homil. de Adam & Eva.

3 Later confeſſ. of Helvetia. c. 9. There is ſome underſtanding of earthly things remaining in man after his fall: for God hath of mercy left him wit,—yet it is a cleare caſe, that we can profit very little in arts without the bleſſing of God : the ſcripture referreth all arts to God : yea, and the Ethniks did referre the beginning of arts to the Gods, &c. then even in theſe civill things nothing can be well done without Gods ſpeciall aſſiſtance. Harm. ſect. 3. pag. 63.

4 One of the Popiſh writers doth confeſſe, that whereas the Divine writings doe teſtifie, that God hath wrought all our works, and that he worketh all in us, both the will and deed. Deum concurrere ad omnem actum poſitivum, that God concurreth to every poſitive act, &c. Bennius de grat. efficac. cap. 20.

An appendix, as touching the name and difference of free-will before mans fall and after.

The Papiſts.

First, concerning the name of free-will, Bellarmine greatly complaineth, that ſome have very boldly changed the name of free-will, calling it ſervum arbitrium, bondwill : his reaſon is, becauſe 40. Error.

cauſe the Fathers have alwayes uſed the name of free-will in the defence of the faith : but it is not like, that the Church would have uſed it, if it had been an offenſive and unfit name, Bellarmin: lib. 4. cap. 6.

41. Error. Secondly, he doubteth not to affirme, Poſt lapſum hominem eſſe liberi arbitrii ſi fuit ante lapſum: That man hath free-will after the fall, if he had it before. His reaſon is this, becauſe the providence of God is alleaged by Calvin to bee the only impediment of free-will: but Gods providence was as well before mans fall as after: Bellar. lib. 4. cap. 7. ſſ. poſtrema. Thus in Bellarmines opinion, man hath free-will as well after his fall, as before.

The Proteſtants.

First, 1 That the name of free-will was very much uſed of ancient time by the Fathers, wee grant, for they had to deale with the wicked Manichees, and other hereticks, who made the beginning of ſin in the evilneſſe of nature, not in the corruption of mans will; therfore againſt them they maintained the name and nature of free-will; ſo long this name had not only a tolerable, but a neceſſary uſe: but now ſeeing it is abuſed to ſignifie an aptneſſe and libertie in mans will by nature to do good, we may deale with it, as Hezekiah did with the braſen Serpent, which though it had a good beginning, yet becauſe in proceſſe of time it was abuſed to ſuperſtition, hee cauſed it to bee broken downe. By the ſame example we may leave and change the uſe of this name of free-will.

Rom. 6. 20. 2 The Scripture doth call mans will and man himſelfe by nature bond, and ſpeaketh of no freedome or libertie but by grace: Yee were the ſervants of ſin, Servi peccati: What is this elſe but to ſay, ſervum arbitrium, your will was bond, or ſervant to ſin.

3 Concil. Arauſican. 2. c. 13. Quod amiſſum eſt, &c. That which is loſt cannot be reſtored, but by John 8. 36. him that firſt gave it, as the truth ſaith: If the Son make you free, yee are free indeed. The Scripture acknowledgeth no libertie of the will but by grace: wherefore the name of free-will by nature, is contrary both to the ſenſe and phraſe of Scripture, and in that underſtanding may bee refrained, and diſcontinued.

Secondly, 1 That man after his fall enjoyeth free-will as he did before, is contrary to the Scripture:

Ecclеſ. 7. 31. God hath made man righteous, but hee hath added many inventions. And the image of God, after the Coloſſ. 3. 18. which man was created, whereof his holy and free-will was a part, is by Adams fall decayed, and renewed in Chriſt.

2 Neither doth Calvin or any other ſay, that Gods preſcience or providence is an hinderance to the libertie of mans will: but we confeſſe with Ambroſe: Æterna Dei, & ſemper tranquilla cognitio nulla nos urget neceſſitate peccandi, nec inde manat iniquitas, unde juſtitia: Gods eternall and ſtayed knowledge doth not urge us with any neceſſity to ſin, neither doth iniquity proceed from whence juſtice commeth, lib. 2. de vocat. Gent. cap. 10. It is not then Gods preſcience, but mans owne corruption, that hath ſpoyled him of the libertie of will given in the creation: that which God fore-knoweth, muſt neceſſarily come to paſſe, for otherwiſe it ſhould not have been foreknowne: but his foreknowledge is not the cauſe thereof.

3 That Adams free-will by his fall is loſt, and that man hath not the ſame liberty of will before and after his fall, it is plentifully teſtified by Councels and Fathers. Arauſican. 2. c. 8. Liberum arbitrium per peccatum primi hominis infirmatum & laſum: Free-will by the ſin of the firſt man is weakned and wounded. Can. 25. Per peccatum primi hominis ita inclinatum & attenuatum fuit liberum arbitrium: Free-will is ſo attenuate & degenerate by the ſin of the firſt man, that no man can love God, or beleeve in God, as he ought, unleſſe grace prevent him. S. Ambroſe in Luc. 15. Prodigus vivendo luxurioſè conſumpſit omnia ornamenta natura: The prodigall child by living riotouſly hath conſumed all the ornaments of nature. Peter Lombard rehearſeth this ſentence out of Auguſtine, and giveth conſent to it: Libero arbitrio malè utens homo, & ſe perdidit & ipſum: Man uſing evill free-will, hath loſt both it and himſelfe: lib. 2. diſt. 25. liter. H. Wherefore it is untrue, that man after his fall may have free-will as well as before.

Ser. 5. de orat. Domini. Gregory Nyſſen ſaith, that man by his fall, libertatem mutavit cum noxia ſervitute peccati, hath changed his libertie with the noxious ſervitude of ſin. Chryſoſtome ſaith, that man after his fall by ſin, ſicut navis fracto gubernaculo, &c. is as a ſhip the rudder being broken, which is caried whither the tempeſt will: there is not then the like reaſon of the freedome of mans will before and after his fall.

Harm. ſſ. 3. c. 61. Latter confeſſ. of Helvetia, c. 9. Theſe things are ſo altred in man, that they are not able to doe that now, which they would before his fall: for his underſtanding is darkned, and his will, which was free before, is now become a ſervile will, for it ſerveth ſin, &c.

The ſecond part, of the power of the mind naturally in morall duties.

First, of the underſtanding and knowledge, which man hath by nature of theſe things: ſecondly, of the power of his will.

The

The firſt point, whether man naturally doth underſtand what is true or falſe, good or evill, in morall duties.

The Papiſts.

THe Jeſuite affirmeth, that a man by his naturall ſtrength may know, underſtand and judge, aliquod verum morale, what is true, at ſome times, in morall duties, and to be followed, and that not only generally, but in particular, as when and how to doe juſtly, how to give almes: And further hee addeth, Actio voluntatis ei vero conformis, erit actio virtutis: That if the will doe follow the underſtanding, in this naturall judgement of the truth, it will bring forth a vertuous action. This then is his opinion, that naturally the mind of man underſtandeth, which are true vertuous actions. lib. 5. de grat. c. 4. 42. Error.

Argum. 1. The Apoſtle ſaith, When they knew God, they did not glorifie him as God: Ergo, the Gentiles had the knowledge of God naturally by the creatures, and might thereby have been preſerved from idolatrie, Bellarm. ibid. Rom. 1. 21.

Anſw. Firſt, a knowledge of the Creator by the creatures, we grant, but an obſcure, imperfect, a generall and confuſed knowledge only, ſerving to make men inexcuſable, as the Apoſtle ſaith, verſ. 20. but not able to bring them to the right worſhip of God, as the Jeſuite ſuppoſeth; for the Goſpell only, as S. Paul defineth, is the power of God to ſalvation: that is, the only effectuall meanes to bring us to know God unto ſalvation. This naturall knowledge of God, though the Gentiles had conſented to it, could never of it ſelfe have brought forth a vertuous act. Rom. 1. 16.

2 Bellarmine confeſſeth himſelfe, that a man cannot beleeve in God, ſine ſpeciali gratiæ auxilio, without ſpeciall aſſiſtance of grace: lib. 6. cap. 1. nor yet ſo much as thinke, much leſſe doe of himſelfe any thing, quod ad pietatem pertinet, which belongeth to godlineſſe, cap. 3. lib. 5. reſponſ. ad arg. 1. but ſo to know God, as thereby to bee able to abſtaine from Idolatrie, belongeth to godlineſſe, and is a fruit iſſuing from beleefe: therefore it is not in mans power: And yet the contrary is here affirmed by the Jeſuite, Potuiſſe Gentiles per cognitionem unius Dei ex creaturis acceptam abſtinere à cultu Idolorum: That the Gentiles by the naturall knowledge of God in the creatures, might have abſtained from the worſhip of Images. Bellarmine againſt himſelfe.

Arg. 2. The Gentiles which have not the law, doe by nature the things contained in the law, they having not the law, are a law to themſelves, which ſhew the effect of the law written in their hearts, their conſcience alſo bearing witneſſe, &c. Here the Apoſtle ſheweth, that the Gentiles, having not the law written, yet by the naturall light of reaſon did know ſome things, which appertained to honeſt living, Bellarm. ibid. Rom. 2. 14. 15.

Anſw. Firſt, we deny not, as wee have already declared, but that the Gentiles naturally had ſome knowledge of right and wrong, of good and evill, and did naturally ſuch things: but this knowledge and practice of theirs was farre from bringing forth any vertuous action, or good acceptable worke (which is the thing the Jeſuite ſhould have proved) becauſe they had no faith, without the which it is not poſſible to doe any acceptable worke. Heb. 11. 6.

Secondly, this place as well ſheweth, that the Gentiles had power naturally as well to doe, as to know ſuch things: but it is impoſſible to performe the works of the law naturally, as Bellarmine himſelfe ſheweth: Non poſſe ſolis naturæ viribus adimpleri præcepta moralia omnia, ſecundum ſubſtantiam operis: That by the power only of nature, the morall precepts cannot bee kept, as touching the ſubſtantiall, that is, the externall worke, cap. 5. Ergo, neither the knowledge of morall precepts is obtained only by the inſtinct of nature.

The Proteſtants.

A Light of nature wee acknowledge, whereby naturally men, after a darke and obſcure manner, may underſtand, in morall actions, ſome reſemblance and likelihood of equitie and truth: And the Gentiles directed by theſe naturall principles, were able to provide by their lawes againſt adulterie, murther, theft, and ſuch notorious diſhoneſtie of life: But that there is any ſuch naturall diſtinct or effectuall power or knowledge in man, whereby he is able to bring forth any good or vertuous act, we hold it as a great untruth.

Argum. 1. The Apoſtle ſaith, We are not ſufficient of our ſelves to thinke any thing, but our ſufficiency is of God. Therefore it is not in mans power naturally to thinke or conceive that which is good. 2 Cor. 3. 5.

Anſw. Saint Paul ſpeaketh of ſuch thoughts as concerne godlineſſe, and appertaine to life eternall, which we grant, are not in mans power: not of morall duties, Bellarm. cap. 3.

Contra. 1. Saint Paul underſtandeth all good thoughts whatſoever are in man, that they are of God; for elſe-where he ſaith, that every thought muſt be brought into captivity to the obedience of Chriſt. But if man had any good thought of himſelfe, what need it bee ſubdued to the obedience of Chriſt? In ſaying (every thought) hee ſheweth, that without Chriſt, all our thoughts and motions are rebellious. 2 Cor. 10. 5.

2 As though morall duties doe not appertaine alſo to godlineſſe of life: as the Apoſtle ſaith, Godlineſſe is great gaine, if a man bee content, &c. Contentment of mind, and avoiding of covetouſneſſe, 1 Tim. 6. 6.

which the Apoſtle treateth of here, is a morall vertue, yet Saint Paul calleth it godlineſſe.

3 What if we grant, that godly works, and morall duties are two diſtinct things: yet they are both James 1.17. of God: for every good giving is from above. And Paul among the fruits of the ſpirit, reckoneth up Galath. 5. 22. goodneſſe as well as faith: that is, the goodneſſe and honeſtie of life, in thought, will or deed, is as well wrought in us by the ſpirit, as faith in religion.

Argum. 2. The imaginations of the thoughts of mens hearts, are only evill continually: Ergo, man Gen. 6.5. hath by nature no good thoughts.

Anſw. The thoughts of mens hearts are ſaid to be evill, becauſe ut plurimum ſunt mala, they are for the moſt part evill, Bellarm. cap. 3.

Contra. 1. If it had been written in generall termes thus; the thoughts of mans heart are evill, the Jeſuites anſwer would have ſeemed more probable: but ſeeing the Scripture ſaith, they are only evill, and that continually, they cannot be partly good and partly evill, or good at one time, and evil at another, but wholly and only evill, and alwayes. Wherefore if this ſcripture bee true, then is his anſwer falſe, and impertinent to this place.

Eccleſ. 7.31. 2 We have other teſtimonies of Scripture, that doe witneſſe with this text, which wee have alleaged: God hath made man righteous, but they have ſought many inventions. All righteouſneſſe then is of God, the inventions which man followeth are vaine. The Goſpell ſaith, The light ſhineth in darkneſſe, John 1. 5. and the darkneſſe comprehended it not. The truth is the light, the minde of man by nature is darkneſſe: if the minde naturally underſtandeth the truth, then ſhould darkneſſe comprehend the light.

Pſal. 14. 2. Laſtly, the Pſalme ſaith, There is none that would underſtand and ſeeke God: Ergo, man hath no underſtanding of good things by nature.

Auguſtine ſaith: Non haberet homo, ſapientiam, intellectum, niſi acceperit ſpiritum ſapientiæ & intellectus: No man can have wiſdome, underſtanding, unleſſe hee have received the ſpirit of wiſdome, and underſtanding, Epiſt. 105. Therefore true and right underſtanding is not ingraft by nature, but wrought by grace.

S. Ambroſe, ſerm. 10. in Pſal. 119. upon theſe words, Give me underſtanding, that I may learne thy commandements: Si Propheta intellectum ſibi dari poſtulat, quis tam arrogans, qui profiteatur in ſua poteſtate eſſe intelligentiam? &c. If the Prophet deſire underſtanding to bee given him, who is ſo arrogant, as to profeſſe that intelligence or underſtanding is in his owne power?

In 6. ad Roman. ſerm. 11. And yet further, 1 Chryſoſtome ſaith: Like as a drunken man knoweth not the inconvenience of wine: ſo he that is given over unto ſin, Hoc ipſum ignorat, quod mordibus: as one that is beſotted with drunkennes, knoweth not that he is diſeaſed, &c. how then can man ſinfull by nature, judge of that which is good?

2 Concil. Milevitan. c. 4. Domini donum eſt, & ſcire quid facere debeamus, & diligere ut faciamus: It is the gift of God, both to know what we ſhould doe, and to love it, that we may doe it.

Harm. ſect. 3. pag. 62. 3 Later confeſſ. of Helvetia. c. 4. Now it is evident, that the mind and underſtanding is the guide of the will, and ſeeing the guide is blind, it is eaſie to be ſeene, how farre the will can reach.

4 Many of the Schoolemen are of this judgement, that no morall truth can be knowne of humane underſtanding now in the ſtate of nature corrupted, without Gods ſpeciall help: ſic Gregor. Ariminenſ. in 2. ſen. diſt. 26. qu. 1. art. 1. concluſ. 2. Capreol. in 2. diſtinct. 28. qu. unic. artic. 3. Gaſpar Caſſalius, lib. 1. de quadripar. juſtitia, c. 32. So that for this truth wee want not evidence from our adverſaries themſelves.

The ſecond part, of the power of free-will in morall duties, two Queſtions.

The firſt queſtion, whether a man without faith and ſpeciall help from God may performe any thing morally good, if no tentation aſſault him.

The Papiſts.

63. Error. Bellarmine doubteth not ſo to affirme, that a man naturally without faith, both with ſpeciall aſſiſtance from God, and without it, can performe ſome morall good worke, if no tentation let: for a man by nature alone without Gods help cannot reſiſt tentation. c. 9.

1. Exod. 1. 21. Argum. 1. God doth reward morall works done without faith; as the Ægyptian Midwives are rewarded for ſaving the male children of the Hebrewes, Nabuchadnezzar is recompenſed for his ſervice done unto God, in the beſieging and overthrow of Tyrus, 2. Ezech. 29. 20. I have given him the land of Egypt for his labour, becauſe he wrought for me. 3. Dan. 4. 24. Dan. 4. 24. Redeeme thy ſinnes by mercie to the poore: Here the almes of an Infidell doth avert the temporall puniſhment: Ergo, it was a good worke. 3. Rom. 2, 14. The Gentiles having not the Law, do by nature the things contained in the law: the Gentiles by the light of nature did the works of the law: Ergo, without faith, ſome morall works of the law may bee performed, Bellar. lib. 5. de grat. c. 9.

1. *Anſw.*Firſt,1. They were not the Ægyptian Midwives,but the Midwives of the Hebrew women, *verſ.*15. Bellarmine therefore is herein deceived. 2 This worke of theirs was not without faith, *verſ.*21. They feared God: wherefore it is impertinently alleaged, for the probation of morall good works without faith. Exod. 2.21.

2. Secondly, 1. It may well be, that Nebuchadnezzar went againſt Tyrus, by the ſecret inſtinct of God, as Necho King of Egypt, (whom Ioſias unadviſedly went againſt) going up againſt Carchamis, was commanded of God to make haſte. Then this example is unfitly alleaged for morall works done by nature. 2 It followeth not, that becauſe he wrought for God,that it was a good ſervice: ſo Satan did execute Gods will upon Iob,and the Jewes in putting Chriſt to death,yet neither I truſt did well. 3 Neither doth the temporall reward prove it to bee a good worke: ſeeing that the wicked are temporally recompenſed without deſert,with raine and Sunſhine;and Ahab by his temporary and worldly repentance deferred Gods wrath: but it was no good worke, being but a worldly ſorrow, riſing rather from the feare of Gods judgements upon his houſe, than from the deteſtation of ſinne: and worldly ſorrow (ſaith the Apoſtle) cauſeth death, that is, helpeth not to ſalvation, but tendeth rather unto periſhing. 4 Such a ſervice, ſuch a reward; a bloudie ſervice in ſacking of Tyre, is rewarded with a bloudie victorie in overcomming Ægypt. 5 Auguſtine ſaith, Non officiis ſed finibus virtutes à vitiis diſcernenda ſunt — ſi enim non propter hoc facit homo bonum, &c. Vertue is to be diſcerned from vice, not by the officious act, but by the vertuous end: if then a man doth good not for that end hee ſhould, he ſinneth, cont. Iulian. 4. 3. Therefore unleſſe it can be proved, that Nebuchadnezzar ſacked Tyrus for obedience to Gods will, not for revenge of his owne malice, or of an ambitious deſire to inlarge his Kingdome, it was no good worke. 2 Chron.35.21. Math. 5.45. 1 King. 21.19. 2 Cor. 7.10.

3. Thirdly, 1. The text is to be read, breake off, not redeeme, for ſo is the Hebrew word פרק parach taken, where Iſaac ſaith to Eſau, Thou ſhalt breake his yoke from thy necke. 2 We confeſſe, that in the Infidels, their almes,and ſuch like good works in ſhew,were much better than their manifeſt ſins, and that to breake off ſuch ſins, by ſuch works, it was commendable; yet it followeth not, that they were good. 3 Theſe almes-deeds, in that Daniel by the ſpirit of God gave this counſell, ſhould alſo have proceeded, not from his naturall inclination, but from the inſtinct of the ſpirit: as Auguſtine well ſaith, Colligitur ipſa bona opera, quæ faciunt infideles, non ipſorum eſſe, ſed illius, qui bene utitur malis; ipſorum eſſe peccata, quibus bona male faciunt: It is gathered, that good works,which Infidels do, are not theirs, but his, which well uſeth that which is evill, but the ſin is theirs, whereby they doe good things evill, *cont. Iulian. lib.*4. *cap.*3. 4 He ſaith againe, Reperitur & miſericordia mala,—propter quam meruit Saul à Domino miſericorde damnari: There is found mercie or almes not alwayes good, for the which Saul deſerved of the mercifull Lord to be damned, *ibid. c.*4. 5 The averting of a temporall puniſhment, doth not prove it ſimplie to be good: as Auguſtine ſaith, Cui non datur ſemper vivere, quid prodeſt bene vivere? What doth it profit a man to live well, if he live not ever? in Iohan. 45. Wherefore theſe temporall works profited not Infidels, and conſequently were not good, becauſe they availed not to everlaſting life. Geneſ. 27.40.

4. Fourthly, 1. Some of the fathers expound that place of the Apoſtle,of ſuch of the Gentiles as were converted to the faith: As Origen, Si videris Gentes ad Ieſum venire & credere ei, &c. If thou ſeeſt the Gentiles come unto Chriſt and beleeve in him, and fulfill the worke of the law, &c. doubt not to ſay that Jeſus hath written the Law in theſe ſtones, hom.9. in Ioſua. So alſo Auguſtine anſwereth the Pelagians; they are ſaid to doe the things of the Law, Quia ex Gentibus venerunt ad Evangelium: Becauſe they came from among the Gentiles to the Goſpell, cont. Iulian. 4. 3. But I doe not greatly urge this interpretation. 2 We ſay, that they among the Gentiles, that followed the light of nature, wanted not ſome ſpeciall helpe,though they had not faith, which helpe others among them had not: So S. Ambroſe ſaith, Quod illuminante gratia invenerunt, obcæcante ſuperbia perdiderunt: That which they found by illuminating grace,they loſt by blind pride, de vocat. Gent. lib. 2. c. 2. The better ſort then among them, had a certaine meaſure of illumination, which all had not, which they by the pride of their hearts corrupted. 3 But our more full anſwer is this,that it followeth not, becauſe the Gentiles did by nature ſome things agreeable to the Law, as appertaining to juſtice, temperance, mercie, therefore their works were good: they did things that had a ſhew of goodneſſe,but not with a good minde: they were not then good works,no more than the almes, faſting,prayer of the Phariſees,were good works; which were not done of conſcience, but for the praiſe of men: and as Auguſtine ſaith, Tolerabilius in die judicii punientur, &c. They ſhall be more eaſily puniſhed in the day of judgement, becauſe naturally,they did the things of the Law: cont. Iulian. lib. 4. c. 3. And this is that the Apoſtle ſaith, Rom. 2. 15. Their thoughts accuſing one another or excuſing: not excuſing from the whole puniſhment, but in making their puniſhment leſſe or more eaſie, as Auguſtine expoundeth. Rom. 2.15.

The Proteſtants.

THat a man without faith and grace, by the inſtinct of nature onely, cannot doe any thing that is good before God, whether he be aſſaulted by any ſpeciall temptation or not: it is thus evident out of Scripture.

Argum. 1. Prov. 15.8. The ſacrifice of the wicked is an abomination to the Lord. 1.

2. 2 The imaginations of the thoughts of mans heart are onely evill continually.

3. 3 *Pſal.*13.3. All are gone out of the way, there is none that doth good, no not one.

4. 4 Ierem. 17.9. The heart is wicked and deceitfull above all things.

5. 5 Matth. 7.18. A corrupt tree cannot bring forth good fruit: but every man by nature is a corrupt tree. Likewiſe Luke 6.45.

6. 6 Iohn 3.6. That which is borne of the fleſh is fleſh.

7. 7 Iohn 15.5. Without me yee can doe nothing.

8. 8 Rom. 14.23. Whatſoever is not of faith, is ſinne.

9. 9 Heb. 11.6. Without faith it is impoſſible to pleaſe God.

10. 10 Tit. 1.15. To the unbeleeving nothing is pure. 1 Iohn 2.16. All that is in the world, is the luſt of the fleſh, the luſt of the eyes, the pride of life. All theſe places doe ſtrongly conclude, that man by nature without faith, is apt to doe nothing but evill: I will examine Bellarmines anſwer to theſe Scriptures.

1. 1 Bellarm. The argument followeth not, The ſacrifices of the wicked are an obamination: Ergo, their morall works: For there is great difference betweene the one and the other. Sacrifices muſt be offered with a pure conſcience, and to this end, to pleaſe God; but to morall works neither is required: not the puritie of conſcience; neither in their almes is there any other end, but to helpe the needie: Bellarm. c. 10. reſp. ad loc. 1.

Contra. 1. Betweene ſacrifices and almes-deeds, there is no difference in this behalfe, for the Apo-
Heb. 13. 16. ſtle calleth diſtribution to the poore a Sacrifice. 2 He ſaith, to doe good and diſtribute forget not, for with ſuch ſacrifices God is pleaſed: wherefore ſuch almes-deeds as God is not pleaſed with, as was the almes of the Phariſees, are no good works: for, if they doe good, they are acceptable to God. 3 Neither
Tit. 1. 15. can the worke be good, where the conſcience is defiled: as S. Paul ſheweth, Tit. 1.15. that nothing is pure to unbeleevers, becauſe their conſcience is defiled.

2. 2 Bellarm. The meaning of the place is, that the moſt part of their thoughts were evill, not all: for it followeth, verſ. 9. that Noe was a juſt and upright man, reſp. ad loc. 2.

Contra. 1. The text is, all the imaginations of mans heart are evill; how then is he not aſhamed to Pſalm. 14. 3. contradict Scripture, and ſay, not all? 2 This place may be expounded by that, Pſal. 14. 3. There is none that doth good, no not one: Here I truſt there is no exception of any, as they are by nature. 3 Noe was juſt, but not by nature, verſ. 8. Noah found grace in the eyes of the Lord: he was by nature the ſame that others, but changed by grace. 4 So notwithſtanding this, all the imaginations of mans heart are Geneſ. 8. 21. evill by nature, as it is ſo expounded, c. 8.21. Mans thoughts are evill from his youth.

3. 3 Bellarm. This place concludeth not, that there is no man that doth any good morall worke; but none, that is juſt: for one or two good works make not a juſt man, that hath many ſins beſide, reſponſ. ad loc. 3.

Contra. 1. The words are very direct, there is none that doth good, and with a repetition, no not one:
doth he not now apertly contradict Scripture, in ſaying; Yes, ſome doe good by nature? 2 If they be not juſt nor righteous, how can they bring forth any righteous or good worke? for an evill or corrupt tree cannot ſend forth any good fruit. 3 S. Paul is the beſt expounder of this place, they are become Matth. 7. 18. altogether unprofitable, ἀμα ἠχρειώθησαν, if they be wholly or altogether unprofitable, how can
Rom. 3. 12. they bring forth any good or profitable worke?

4. 4 Bellar. Mans heart is ſaid to be evill or wicked, not becauſe it can doe no good morall worke,
Matth. 15. 19. but for that it is the fountaine and originall of evill: as Chriſt ſaith; Out of the heart come evill thoughts, murders, &c. reſponſ. ad argum. 6.

Job. 14. 4. Contra. 1. If the heart be the fountaine of evill, it can bring forth no good: Who can bring a cleane James 3. 12. thing out of filthineſſe, no not one. The ſame fountaine cannot bring forth bitter water and ſweet: but if mans heart being the fountaine of evill, as he confeſſeth ſhould worke any good thing, the ſame fountaine, contrarie to the Apoſtle, ſhould ſend out bitter and ſweet water. 2 In the ſame place our Saviour ſaith, These are the things which defile a man: if then an evill heart defile a man, how can that Matth. 23. 16. be cleane which commeth from him? Our Saviour ſaith againe, Cleanſe firſt the inſide of the cup, that the outſide may be cleane. The inſide is the heart, the outſide are the works, which cannot be cleane, as Acts 15. 9. long as the heart is uncleane: and the heart is not cleanſed or purified, but by faith.

5. 5 Bellar, 1. Chriſts meaning is, not that an evill tree can bring forth no good fruit at all, but for the moſt part and ordinarily it bringeth forth evill fruit. 2 The evill tree is the evilneſſe of nature, the good tree is the goodneſſe of nature: When a naturall man doth good, it is not of the concupiſcence or corruption of nature which is the evill tree, but ex bono natura, of the goodneſſe of nature, which is the good tree. 3 An evill tree can bring forth no good fruit, that is, an evill man can doe no good worke meritorious of life and ſalvation, Bellar. reſp. ad arg. 7.

Contra. Firſt, Chriſts meaning is that an evill tree, that is, an evill man, can bring forth no good Matt, 12. 33. 39. fruit at all: Firſt, Make the tree good, and his fruit good: the tree then muſt firſt be made good, before the fruit can be good. Secondly, How can ye ſpeake good things (ſaith Chriſt) when ye are evill?
Luke 6. 44. If an evill man can ſpeake any good things, our Saviour had not reaſoned well. Thirdly, Neither of thornes gather men figs, nor of buſhes grapes. Like as then a thorne doth not ordinarily, but not at all bring forth figs, nor a buſh grapes: ſo an evill heart cannot move any thing that is good.

good. Fourthly, thus Auguſtine expoundeth: When Iulian the Pelagian, had propounded this example, whether it be ſinne in an Infidell to clothe the naked? Auguſtine anſwereth thus: Utrum hoc male facit, vel bene? &c. Whether doth he this well or evill? If you ſay evill, you cannot denie, but he ſinneth: if well, then an evill tree bringeth forth good fruit: cont. Iulian. 4. 3. In Auguſtines judgement then an evill tree cannot bring forth any good fruit at all.

Secondly, 1. It is a moſt groſſe anſwer and contrarie to Scripture, that a mans will or heart by nature is both a good and evill tree: for the good tree is expounded to be the good treaſure of the heart. And S. Paul ſaith, that this good treaſure, which we carrie in earthen veſſels, is the light of the knowledge of God in Chriſt. Say if you dare alſo that this treaſure of knowledge is in man by nature. 2 That the good tree is not by nature, but planted by grace, the Scripture every where teſtifieth. Every plant which God hath not planted, ſhall be rooted out. God pulleth not up good trees, but he pulleth up whatſoever is not planted by grace: for that is Gods planting: Ergo, the plant of nature is not a good plant. You are cleane, that is, good branches by the word, Ergo, not by nature: verſ. 16. I have ordained, that ye goe and bring forth fruit: Ergo, they are not ſo ordained by nature.

Matth. 12. 35.
2 Cor. 4. 6.
Matth. 15. 13.
Iohn 15. 3.

Thirdly, no good worke is meritorious of life and ſalvation, yet every good worke is rewarded everlaſtingly. He that giveth a cup of cold water in the name of a diſciple, ſhall not looſe his reward. I have ordained, that you goe and bring forth fruit, and that your fruit remaine. The fruit then that remaineth not, and ſhall not be rewarded of Chriſt, is no good fruit.

Matth. 10. 42.
Iohn 15. 16.

6 Bellarmine: A naturall man doth not alwayes in every worke obey the fleſh, but hee may doe ſomething of his naturall propenſion to good, not of his vitious concupiſcence: reſp. ad arg. 8. 6.

Contra. Firſt, whatſoever is in man, is either of the fleſh, or of the ſpirit, the carnall part or regenerate: I aske then, whether a naturall man can worke by the ſpirit? I thinke they are not ſo abſurd: for then, if a man be by nature borne of the ſpirit, regeneration or ſecond birth were not neceſſarie, contrarie to our Saviour; Except a man be borne againe, &c. Then it followeth, that a naturall man working by the fleſh, doth nothing but that which is carnall and evill: for the fleſh luſteth againſt the ſpirit, the ſpirit againſt the fleſh, and theſe are contrarie one to the other, but good is not contrarie to good: therefore of the fleſh there is nothing good. 2 Saint Paul ſaith, that in the fleſh there dwelleth nothing that is good: and every man doth either ſow to his fleſh, or ſow to the ſpirit: but he that ſoweth to the fleſh ſhall of the fleſh reape corruption: a naturall man cannot ſow to the ſpirit; therefore ſowing onely to the fleſh, he reapeth nothing but corruption.

Iohn 3. 3.
Galath. 5. 17.
Rom. 7. 18.
Galath. 6. 8.

7 Bellar. Without Chriſt we can doe no good worke tending to ſalvation; but morall good works we can, reſponſ. ad loc. 9. 7.

Contra. This anſwer S. Paul quite overthroweth, in the place even now alleaged, He that ſoweth to the fleſh, ſhall of the fleſh reape corruption; he that ſoweth to the ſpirit, ſhall of the ſpirit reape life everlaſting. The works then of nature, if they be of the ſpirit, are tending to everlaſting life; if of the fleſh, they are tending to corruption: but a good worke is not a corrupt worke, or tending to corruption; therefore the works of the fleſh, are no good works; neither are there any good fruits, which remaine not unto life.

Galath. 6. 8.
Iohn 15. 16.

8 Bellarm. The Apoſtle by faith, underſtandeth not here the faith, whereby we beleeve in Chriſt, but a perſwaſion of the conſcience, whereby we are perſwaded a thing to bee lawfull, reſp. ad argum. 10. 8.

Contra, Auguſtine anſwereth; for after this manner the Pelagians objected, Si hoc de cibis intelligendum putes, &c. If you thinke this is to bee underſtood of meats, &c. yet the Apoſtle by this generall ſentence, would prove this ſpeciall ſinne concerning meats, as it is elſewhere written, without faith it is impoſſible to pleaſe God: cont. Iulian. 4. 3.

Heb. 11. 6.

9 Bellarm. Without faith it is impoſſible to pleaſe God to eternall ſalvation; but yet the goodneſſe of mans nature, and the works proceeding from it, doe alſo pleaſe God, reſponſ. ad argument. 15. 9.

Contra. 1. He is contrarie to himſelfe, for he granted before, reſponſ. ad 1. argum. that the ſacrifice and other morall works of a naturall man, Deo non placeant, do not pleaſe God, and yet here he ſaith; God by them may be pleaſed. 2 That God is not any way pleaſed with us, without Chriſt, the Scripture is evident, We ſhall be ſaved from wrath by him: We were by nature the children of wrath: Can the children of wrath pleaſe God? 3 If he ſpeake of the naturall goodneſſe of the creature, as it is created of God, I anſwer with Auguſtine, that if in this ſenſe man is good, ſo the devill alſo, as he is an Angell is good, and conſequently doth pleaſe God.

Rom. 5. 9.

10 Bellarm. 1. The Apoſtle ſpeaketh of meats which are uncleane to thoſe that have an uncleane conſcience, and are not well perſwaded of them. 2 Or if it be taken generally, then this is the ſenſe, that all the works of Infidels are uncleane, namely, ſuch which proceed from their infidelitie. 3 S. Iohn ſpeaketh of man, not as hee is Gods creature, but as hee is a ſinner and lover of the world; for in man as hee is Gods creature, there be many good things, as his will, underſtanding, reſponſ. ad loc. 14. 16. 10.

Contra. 1. The Apoſtle ſpeaketh generally of all the works of Infidels. They are abominable, diſobedient, to every good worke reprobate. 2 All the works of Infidels muſt needs proceed from their infidelitie, ſeeing their minds and conſciences are defiled, which is the reaſon the Apoſtle giveth, that nothing is pure unto the impure. 3 We ſpeake not of the ſubſtance of nature and naturall faculties, which are good as created of God, not onely in men, but in devils; therefore this anſwer is not to the purpoſe: the Apoſtles argument is very firme and ſtrong: That every man is either a lover of Galath. 5. 22. the world, or a lover of God; a naturall man cannot love God, which is the fruit of the ſpirit, and hee that loveth the world, loveth that which is in it, and nothing elſe, as the concupiſcence of the eye, of the fleſh, the pride of life: Ergo, a naturall man neither loveth, nor followeth any thing elſe. Thus notwithſtanding all theſe popiſh gloſſes, and hereticall ſhifts, the truth confirmed by Scripture remaineth, that a man by nature hath no inclination to good, neither without faith can performe any thing acceptable to God.

Auguſtins judgement, I have diſperſedly ſhewed in theſe ſeverall anſwers: S. Ambroſe thus teſti- Act. 3. 16. fieth upon theſe words. Faith which is by him, hath given this man, ὁλοκληρίαν, integram ſanitatem, perfit health: Totum ergo, ſive palam per cooperatorem gratia, ſive occultè per ſubminiſtrationem ſpiritus, &c. The whole therefore, whether outwardly by the fellow-worker of grace, or ſecretly by the miniſtration of the ſpirit, he beginneth, increaſeth, finiſheth, whoſe husbandrie and building we are, de vocat. Gent. lib. 1. c. 8. If Chriſt then worke all in us by faith, then nature is able to worke no good thing at all.

Hierom. dialog. 3. adverſ. Pelagian. upon theſe words, I am the vine: Like as the branches doe wither, being cut off from the root: Ita omnis fortitudo marceſcit, ſi à Dei auxilio deſeratur: So all mans ſtrength withereth and periſheth, if it be forſaken of Gods helpe: Ergo, nature (without Gods helpe) can doe nothing.

Super illa verba Pſal. 142. Enter not into judgement. And further, 1. Chryſoſtome upon theſe words, He that rejoyceth, let him rejoyce in the Lord, ſaith; Ergo de meritis ſuis nihil aſſignare ſibi debet, niſi peccata, qua ſunt propria noſtra, &c. caeterum virtutes dona ſunt Dei, &c. Therefore man muſt aſſigne nothing to himſelfe of his merits, but onely ſins, which are his owne, but vertues are the gift of God.

In Joann. tractat. 83. 2 Auguſtine ſaith: Quod eſt boni operis ante fidem? &c. What good worke can there bee before faith? ſeeing the Apoſtle ſaith, Whatſoever is not of faith is ſinne, &c.

Harm. ſſ. 4. p. 69. 3 Former confeſſ. of Helvetia, artic. 9. We find by experience, that of our owne accord we may doe evill, but we can neither embrace nor follow any good thing, except being illuminated by the grace of Chriſt, we be ſtirred up, and effectually moved thereunto, &c.

4 Their owne Canons thus teſtifie: Cauſ. 1. qu. 1. c. 26. Ubi Chriſtus non eſt fundamentum, nullum boni operis eſt ſuper adificium: Where Chriſt is not the foundation, there is no building of any good worke.

Pet. Lombard agreeth: Qua ſine fide fiunt, bona non ſunt, quia omne bonum placet Deo: Things done without faith are not good, becauſe every good thing pleaſeth God: but without faith God is not pleaſed, lib. 2. diſt. 41. liter. A.

The ſecond queſtion, of the power of freewill in morall duties.

The Papiſts.

44 Hæreſ. MAn, even as it now ſtandeth with him in the ſtate of corruption, hath freewill in morall duties, to chuſe the good, and refuſe the evill, that is, to embrace the vertue, and eſchue vice, Bellarm. lib. 5. cap. 14. We will firſt examine their arguments, whereby they urge certaine abſurdities and impoſſibilities, which would follow, as they thinke, if there ſhould be no freewill, and then we will anſwer their allegations out of Scripture.

Argum. 1. Sinne is either neceſſarie or voluntarie: if the firſt, it cannot be avoyded, and ſo conſequently is no ſinne: if the ſecond, it may be avoyded: Ergo, man hath freewill, he may avoyd ſinne if he will, Bellarm. cap. 14.

Anſw. This was the very ſame objection, which the Pelagians, and freewill-men urged Auguſtine withall many yeeres agoe: Si peccata caveri non poſſunt, peccata non ſunt: If ſins cannot be avoyded, they are no ſins. And againe, Injuſtè judicarentur homines, ſi ea non faciunt, qua jubentur impoſſibilia: Men ſhould be unjuſtly condemned, if they doe not theſe things which are commanded being impoſſible. To this objection, we need no better anſwer, than Auguſtine himſelfe maketh.

1 Non reſpicis poſſibile & facile praceptum fuiſſe datum in paradiſo, quo contempto omnes ex uno homine--peccatum habere: You conſider not that both an eaſie and poſſible commandement was given in paradiſe, by the contempt and violating whereof, all by one man -- are become ſinners: cont. Iulian. 3. 18. And againe he ſaith, Libertas non periſſet ſi bona permanſiſſet voluntas, ſed quia peccavit voluntas, ſequuta eſt peccantem, peccatum habendi neceſſitas: The libertie (of the will) had not periſhed, if the will had remained good, but becauſe he ſinned willingly, there followed as a reward of his ſin, a neceſſity of ſinning, cont. Celeſt. de perf. juſtit. reſp. ad rat. 10. Auguſtine therefore teacheth us to deny this conſequent: Sin is neceſſarie: Ergo, it is no ſin. Becauſe that this neceſſitie of ſin is not by creation, but commeth by the corruption of nature, and proceedeth from Adams voluntarie tranſgreſſion.

2 Poteſt caveri peccatum, poteſt reſiſti, ſed opitulante illo, qui non poteſt falli: Sinne may be reſiſted, it may be avoyded, but by his helpe and aſſiſtance, who cannot be deceived. Duobus modis cavetur in corpore morbi malum, ut non accidat, & ſi acciderit, cito ſanetur: ſic ut non accidat caveamus dicendo, ne nos inferas in tentationem; ut cito ſanetur caveamus dicendo, dimitte nobis: Two wayes we take heed of the bodily diſeaſes, that neither we fall into them; and if we doe, eft-ſoone to be healed: ſo that we fall not into ſinne, we take heed in ſaying, lead us not into temptation; that we may be healed from our ſinne, we take heed in ſaying, forgive us our ſinnes, &c. de natur. & grat. cap. 67. Thus alſo we learne out of Auguſtine to denie this other conſequent, ſinne may be avoyded: Ergo, we have free will: for ſinne is ſhunned by grace working in us, not by our owne power.

3 A third conſequent alſo in this argument faileth: Sin is voluntarie, therefore it is not neceſſary; ſay they, it may be avoyded. It followeth not: for our will is free, not à neceſſitate, from neceſſitie, but à coactione, from conſtraint or compulſion: Men ſinne voluntarily, that is, willingly of their owne accord, not ſo voluntarily as that they may chuſe whether they will ſinne or no.

4 The devils and damned ſpirits cannot but doe evill and wickedly, it is therefore in them of neceſſitie, yet they doe verily and truly ſinne: It is then no good conſequent, if men doe evill of neceſſitie, they in ſo doing ſinne not, becauſe they can no otherwiſe chuſe. To this Bellarmine anſwereth, that it is true in generall, that the devils doe evill neceſſarily; it is falſe in particular, becauſe all the evill which they doe, they doe not of neceſſitie: for it is in their power not to do many things which they doe, Bellarm. cap. 14.

Contra. Firſt, if it be not true in particular, that devils doe evill of neceſſitie, neither is it true of men, for they have greater power to leave ſome ſinne undone, which they doe, than the evill ſpirits have, becauſe their nature is not ſo corrupt, neither are they ſo voyd of all goodneſſe as the devils are. Secondly, if it be true but in generall, that the devill ſinneth of neceſſitie, and yet is properly ſayd to ſinne, it is ſufficient for our purpoſe; for then that propoſition is not true in generall, Si neceſſarium eſt, non eſt peccatum, If it be neceſſarie, it is no ſinne: for it may be neceſſarie in generall ſaith the Jeſuite, and yet ſhall be ſinne.

Bellarmine further would make us beleeſe, that in defending of free will they are farre off notwithſtanding from the hereſie of the Pelagians: I pray you let us ſee how?

The Pelagians affirmed, that a man by free will might, vitare omnia peccata, avoyd and eſchew all ſinnes: but they hold, vitari poſſe ſingula peccata, non omnia, that not all ſinnes, but that every ſinne may be avoyded.

Contra. I pray you, what great difference is there now betweene theſe two? The Pelagians ſay, that all ſinnes in all men by free will may be avoyded: the Papiſts hold, that every ſinne in every man, may by free will be avoyded? Every man hath not all ſinnes, but every man hath ſome ſinnes: which ſome notwithſtanding to him, that hath no more, are all his ſinnes. If every man then may by his free will take heed of every his owne ſins, then of all his ſins: for if there be any one ſinne, which it is not in his power to eſchew, by the Jeſuits rule it is no ſinne. Therefore untill the Jeſuite can better diſcharge himſelfe, we muſt needs tell him, that there is not one haires breadth betweene the Pelagian and popiſh hereſie about free will.

Argum. 2. If there were not in man free will, there ſhould be no place left for reward or puniſhment: for if a man doe evill of neceſſitie, he deſerveth no puniſhment, and if he doe well unwillingly, he is worthie no reward: Bellarm. cap. 15.

Anſw. The very ſame objection was moved to Auguſtine: Ubi neceſſitas, ibi non eſt corona: Where there is neceſſitie, there is no crowne or reward. He anſwereth: 1. In recte faciendo ideo nullum eſt vinculum neceſſitatis, quia libertas eſt charitatis, quæ diffuſa eſt in cordibus noſtris per ſpiritum ſanctum: In well doing there is no bond of neceſſitie, becauſe freedome or libertie commeth of love, which is ſhed abroad in our hearts by the holy Ghoſt: Aug. de atur. & grat. cap. 65. that is, God of unwilling maketh us willing, and inſpireth a love and deſire of good things into our hearts: and thus the reward is given to thoſe that worke willingly, yet of grace. 2 Alſo puniſhment is due unto ſinne, though men by nature cannot chuſe but ſinne: the Apoſtle ſheweth the reaſon: By one man ſinne entred into the world, and death by ſinne: Adams ſinne was voluntarie, and therefore worthie of puniſhment: the ſame ſinne, with death, the reward thereof, Adam hath propagated to his poſteritie: ſo that we are both partakers of the ſinne and the puniſhment.

Rom. 5.12.

Argum. 3. If there be no free will, then all men ſhould either be good or evill; and if they bee good, none ſhould be better than other; if they be evill, none ſhould be worſe than other: whereof then is this difference that ſome are good, ſome evill; and ſome are evill in the meane, ſome in the extreame, but from the libertie of mans will. Gods election is not the cauſe: for without free will election maketh none good; for then infants and mad men might be good by election without free will, Bellarm. c. 16.

Anſwer. Firſt, the difference and ſeparation of men, the Apoſtle ſheweth to proceed onely from God, and not from the will of man: Who ſeparateth thee, what haſt thou which thou haſt not received? Secondly, it is true that election requireth free will to make men good: but then will is firſt made free by grace; as Ambroſ. Virtus nolentium nulla eſt, ipſa gratia hoc agit, ut in eo, quem vocat primam ſibi famulam preparet voluntatem; Indeed vertue in thoſe that are unwilling there is none, but grace firſt of all maketh the will an obedient ſervant in them which are called : lib.2.de vocat.gent.c.9. Thirdly, and in that infants having no free will yet are ſaved by election, it ſheweth, that not free will maketh the difference, but election. Fourthly, the cauſe then why ſome are good, ſome evill, is becauſe all have not grace, the reaſon why ſome are better than others, is, that all have not the ſame meaſure of grace, as Ambroſe excellently ſaith, Prater illam generalem gratiam partiùs & occultiùs hominum corda pulſantem, excellentiore opere, largiore munerè, potentiore virtute vocatio ſpecialis exeritur : Beſide that generall calling, more ſparingly beating upon mens hearts, the ſpeciall calling ſheweth it ſelfe by a more excellent operation, a larger gift, a ſtronger power, lib. 2. de vocat. gent. c. 8. There is then a generall calling and a ſpeciall, a more excellent worke of the ſpirit, and a leſſe excellent, a larger gift, and a ſmaller: as is the difference of the grace that worketh, ſo is the difference in them upon whom it worketh. Now let us ſee what places of Scripture they object againſt us.

Argum. 1. The law ſaith, Thou ſhalt not take the name of the Lord thy God in vaine : Honour thy father and mother, &c. and many other precepts there are in the word of God, which were given in vaine, if man had not free will to chuſe or refuſe them, Bellarm. cap. 18.

Gal. 3. 24.

De grat. & liber. arbit. c. 6.

Anſw. First, the precepts of the law are not given in vaine, though it lye not in mans power to keepe them : for the uſe and end of the law is a Schoolemaſter to bring us to Chriſt : So Auguſtine ſaith, Ad hoc lex pracipit iſta, ut cum in his implendis homo deficeret, non ſe extollat ſuperbia tumidus, ſed ad gratiam confugiat fatigatus : For this cauſe did the law command theſe things, that man ſeeing him ſelfe to faile in the fulfilling thereof, ſhould have no cauſe to ſwell in pride, but being wearied in himſelfe, to flye to grace for ſuccour : cont. Celeſt. de perfect. juſtit. Secondly, againe he ſaith, Homo gratia juvatur, ne ſine cauſa voluntati ejus jubeatur : Man is aſſiſted by grace, leſt his will ſhould bee commanded in vaine. Man hath not free will of himſelfe, but is enabled by grace to doe that is commanded.

Iſay 1. 19.
Matth. 19. 17.

Argum. 2. The Scripture offereth divers promiſes under certaine conditions : as, If ye conſent and obey, ye ſhall eat the good things of the land : If thou wilt enter into life, keepe the commandements. If it be in our power to performe theſe conditions, then have we free will : if not, to what end are they propounded ? Bellarm. cap. 19.

Galath. 3. 10.

Anſw. First, if theſe conditions be poſſible, then it is poſſible to keepe the commandements, which the Apoſtle denieth : for therefore is every one that is of the works of the law under the curſe, becauſe they cannot keepe it. Secondly, by this argument a mans free will is ſufficient to performe theſe conditions without grace : for if man cannot performe them of himſelfe, the ſame queſtion remaineth, why they are propounded to him that cannot keepe them. Thirdly, Auguſtine ſheweth why the Law was given : Ut te ad faciendam legem vires de tuo non habere monſtraret, ut ſic inops--ad gratiam confugeres : To ſhew thee not to have ſtrength of thy ſelfe to doe, that being poore thou ſhouldeſt flee unto grace : *in Pſal.*118.*con.*27. Fourthly, againe, whereas the Pelagians objected this very place urged, Iſay 1.19. Saint Auguſtine maketh this anſwer : Quaſi ob aliud ſuperbis data iſta pracepta ſunt, --quam ut pracepta acciperet homo ſuperbè de viribus ſuis confidens, in quibus deficiens liberatorem requireret : Theſe precepts were for no other cauſe given to the proud, than that man failing in his owne ſtrength, wherein he truſted, ſhould ſeeke for an helper or deliverer, Cont. Celeſtium de perfect. juſtit. ad finem.

Argum. 3. The Lord ſaid to Cain : Unto thee his deſire ſhall be ſubject, and thou ſhalt rule over him, Geneſ. 4. 7. This the Jeſuite ſaith muſt bee underſtood of ſinne, that it ſhould bee in his power, and if he would, he might ſubdue and overcome it : Ergo, there is free will in man, cap. 22. Bellarm.

Anſw. First, this place cannot in any good ſenſe be applied to ſinne, but is more fitly and properly referred to Abel, over whom the Lord giveth unto Cain the dominion of the birth-right : for firſt, the text is, his deſire, &c. which very improperly ſhould be ſpoken of ſinne, which is a thing deſired, it hath no deſire : ſecondly, becauſe this promiſe made to Cain (if we underſtand it of ſinne) was never accompliſhed, Thou ſhalt rule over it : and ſo God ſhould bee found untrue of his promiſe. Secondly, if we ſhould admit the Jeſuites expoſition, that the Lord here meaneth ſinne, Auguſtines interpretation commeth neerer the truth, who readeth thus : Ad te converſio ejus, i. nulli alii ſciat tribuere peccatum, quam ſibi & tum quiſque dominatur peccato, cum id ſibi non defendendo praposuerit, ſed pœnitendo ſubjecerit : The converſion or the turning thereof, ſhall be towards thee : that is, let him attribute his ſinne to none elſe, but to himſelfe : and then every man ruleth over ſinne, when he doth not preferre it, by defending it, but by repentance doth bring it under : *De civitat. Dei, lib.*15.*cap.*7.

Ierem. 32. 23.
Matth. 23. 37.
Act. 7. 51.
Deut. 30. 14.

Argum. 4. Every where in the Scripture God complaineth of the ſtubbornneſſe and wickedneſſe of men : *They obeyed not thy voyce, nor hearkned to thy law, Matth.*23.37. How often would I have gathered thy children together, and thou wouldeſt not ? O ye of uncircumciſed hearts and eares. If it be in a mans power not to ſinne, then hath he free will ; if it be not, God complaineth in vaine, ſeeing man cannot otherwiſe chuſe. 2 Againe, This commandement is not hid from thee, neither farre off, it is in thy mouth and in thy heart to doe it : Ergo, man hath free will to keepe Gods commandements, Bellarm. lib. 5. *de grat. cap.*20.

Anſwer. First, God juſtly complaineth of the wickedneſſe of men, becauſe, though it bee not in their power to beleeve without grace, yet it is in their power to reſiſt grace: as Ambroſe ſaith, Qui veniunt Dei auxilio diriguntur; qui non veniunt, ſua poteſtate reluctantur: They that come, are directed by Gods helpe; they that come not, reſiſt by their owne power, lib.2 de vocat. Gent.cap.9. Secondly, though now Adams poſteritie be yoked with a neceſſarie bondage of ſinne, yet in him that firſt tranſgreſſed it was voluntarie, and therefore they are juſtly blamed. So Bernard ſaith, Serm. 81. in Cantic. Neſcio quo miro modo ipſa ſibi voluntas in deterius mutata neceſſitatem faciat, &c. I cannot tell how it commeth to paſſe, that the will being corrupted by ſinne, doth make a neceſſitie to it ſelfe, that neither neceſſitie, ſeeing it is voluntarie, can excuſe the will, nor the will being enticed, can exclude neceſſitie. And S. Auguſtine ſaith, Convenientiſſ. eſt, ut malum meritum prioris eſſet natura ſequentis, &c. It is moſt convenient, that the evill merit of the firſt ſhould be the nature of the next: de liber. arbit. lib.3. cap.20. So then it is a voluntarie neceſſitie wherewith Adams ſeed is enwrapped: and therefore is juſtly blamed. Thirdly, Saint Paul expoundeth that place in Deuter. of the word of faith: This is the word of faith, which we preach: If then obedience of the law be by faith, it is of grace, and not of mans free will. Rom. 10. 8.

*Argum.*5. First, *Deuter.*30.19. *I have ſet before you life and death, therefore chuſe life, &c. Ioſh.*24. verſ. 15. Chuſe you this day whom ye will ſerve. Secondly, 2 *Cor.*9.7. As every man purpoſeth in his heart, let him give not grudgingly, or as of neceſſitie: Almes then proceedeth from a mans free will. Thirdly, 1 *Corinth.*7.37. He that ſtandeth firme in his heart, that he hath no need, but hath power over his owne will, and hath ſo decreed in his heart, that he will keepe his virgin, &c. Ergo, it is in a mans power to keepe his virginitie, *Bellarm. cap.*23.

3.

Anſw. Firſt, this choiſe and election was not in their owne power: 1 But as the Apoſtle expoundeth this place, The word is in thy heart: that is, the word of faith, *Rom.*10. 8. By the word of faith then they made this choiſe. 2 The people alſo anſwer, God forbid, or farre be it from us, *that wee ſhould forſake the Lord, verſ.*16. which is a ſecret invocation, and a calling for grace to be directed in their choiſe. 3 If Abrahams ſervant prayeth to be directed to make a good choiſe of a wife for his Maſters ſonne, *Gen.*24. how much more have we need to be directed by grace in the heavenly choiſe? 4 How elſe ſhould that Scripture be true, *It is not in man to direct his way, Ierem.*10. verſ 23. if the choiſe were in a mans free will.

Ioſ. 24. 16
Deut 30. 16.
Gen. 24 12.
Ierem. 10 23.

Secondly, almes muſt proceed from a willing and cheerefull heart: but it is God which firſt maketh the heart willing by his grace: as the Apoſtle ſheweth in the ſame place, verſ. 8. God is able to make all grace abound towards you: *Verſ.*25. Thanks be unto God for his unſpeakable gift: which he expoundeth, verſ. 13. to be their liberall diſtribution. 2 Cor. 9. 25 13.

This very anſwer S. Auguſtine made to the Pelagians, urging that place to Philemon, verſ. 14. That it be not as it were of neceſſitie, but willingly: Quaſi aliter ſit voluntarium, &c. As though it is otherwiſe become willing or voluntarie, but that God doth worke in us the will and deed, according to his good pleaſure: cont. Celeſtin. de perfect. juſtit. ad finem. Philem. 14.

Thirdly, 1. The place is not to be underſtood of keeping or not keeping a mans virginitie: but the Apoſtle giveth a rule for parents, when to keepe their virgins and daughters unmarried, when to beſtow them in marriage. Thus Auguſtine expoundeth this place, ſhewing that it is unuſuall in the Scripture to take a virgin for virginitie, 57. quæſt. ſuper Numer. So alſo Theophylact. Primaſius, Sedulius, with others, expound it; as Eſpenc. ſheweth, *de cland. matrim.cap.*7.

2 The circumſtance of the place giveth this ſenſe: firſt, If it be uncomly that his virgin paſſe the flower of her age, 36. this ſhould be improperly ſpoken of a mans virginitie, which is not ſo limited to the flower of age. Secondly, the Syriake tranſlation readeth, Si non tradiderit eam viro, If he hath not given her to a husband: But how can a mans virginitie be given to a husband? Thirdly, the Arabian tranſlation, verſ. 37. readeth in ſtead of virgin daughter, to put all out of doubt.

3 If it ſhould be ſo underſtood of a mans virginitie, it maketh more againſt free will, than for it: for every man hath his proper gift, *verſ.*7. and here his will dependeth upon his owne need or neceſſitie: *verſ.*36. If need ſo require, let them be married: *verſ.*37. If he hath no need, but hath power over his owne will, he may keepe his virgin. So then, whether it be referred to the need of his virgin, that is, daughter, or to his owne neceſſitie, his will is not abſolutely to diſpoſe, but as his occaſion and need is. This text then is improperly alleaged for free will.

4 Thus alſo Auguſtine anſwereth the Pelagians, objecting the very ſame place, 1 Cor, 7.36. Quod vult faciat, Let him doe what he will, 1 Quaſi pro magno habendum ſit velle nubere, &c. As though it were ſo great a matter to have a will to marrie, where the queſtion is of the aſſiſtance of the divine mercie. 2 Aut prodeſt aliquid velle, &c. Or as though it profited any thing here to will, unleſſe God by his providence, whereby he governeth all things, doe joyne the man and the woman: cont. Celeſtinum de perfect. juſtit. ad finem. 1 Cor. 7. 36.

Laſtly, Bellarmine heapeth up a great companie of fathers as witneſſes for free will: to whom I make this generall anſwer: Firſt, that ſome of them are counterfeit authors, as Clemens, alleaged c. 25. 3. Secondly, ſome had their notable errors, as Origen, Tertullian. Thirdly, ſome were led with the error of their time, as Chryſoſtom, and ſome other Greeke fathers, which attributed too much to mans free will. And hereof Eſpencæus a learned Papiſt doth well admoniſh us: Hic & pene ubique Græci: περὶ τοῦ αὐτεξουσίου caute legendi: Here and almoſt every where the Greeks of free will muſt be cauteloſly read, that it is no marveile, that in their catalogues of hereſie Pelagius is not reckoned. Fourthly, ſome of them extoll free will, having to deale with the contrarie hereſie of the Manichees, who altogether tooke away the uſe of mans will, imputing ſinne to the neceſſitie of nature. Thus Auguſtine is to be taken in his books againſt the Manichees: as he confeſſeth himſelfe, lib. 1. retract. c. 22. that in his booke againſt Adamantius he affirmed, In hominis eſſe poteſtate, That it is in mans power to change his will: whereas (ſaith he) this power is of God: So Hierome excuſeth himſelfe for invighing ſo much againſt mariage in his booke againſt Iovinian. Aliud eſt γυμναστικῶς ſcribere, aliud δογματικῶς, aliud docere diſcipulum, aliud vincere adverſarium; It is one thing to write of ſtrife, another for inſtruction; one thing to teach a learner, another to confute a gaine-ſayer, apolog. ad Pammach. Fifthly, ſome have retracted afterward, which before they had written of free will: as Auguſtine retracteth that ſaying in his books ad Simplician. Quamvis ſit in unuſcujuſq; poteſtate ut velit, non tamen ut poſſit: Though it be in every mans power to will, yet not to doe, or be able: for (ſaith he) the will alſo muſt be prepared of God, lib. 2. retract. Sixthly, the reſt of the fathers ſpeake of free will: firſt, either as it was given to Adam in the creation. Secondly, or as it is made free by grace. Thirdly, or as it is free onely from compulſion and conſtraint: all which we grant.

Geneſ. 6. 3. Our Doway Students doe thus reaſon for free will, Geneſ. 6. 3. The Lord ſaith, Mans dayes ſhall be an hundred and twentie yeeres: Whereupon they give this marginall note: This warning and expectation of repentance ſheweth free will in man: Againe, upon that expoſtulation which God maketh with Cain, Geneſ. 4. they inferre; that Cain had free will, for otherwiſe he might have excuſed himſelfe, that he was forced to doe as he did. Annot. in Geneſ. p. 33.

Contra. Firſt, 1. Gods patience and longanimitie in expecting mens repentance, proveth not that they have free will, but it ſheweth their hardnes of heart, that abuſe the long ſuffering of God. 2 And ſuch admonitions and exhortations to repentance, are the meanes whereby God worketh repentance in them, that have grace to repent. 3 But ſimply rempentance is not in mans power, the wicked have an heart, that cannot repent, Rom. 2. 5. they cannot be renewed by repentance. Rom. 2. 5. Heb. 6. 6.

Secondly. 1. If the want of free will altogether might excuſe Cain, then the want of it in part might have the ſame pretenſe, for the Romaniſts grant, that free will without grace is not ſufficient. 2 But Cain had free will to evill, hee was not forced unto it, he willingly embraced it, and therefore hee is without excuſe. 3 The neceſſitie of ſinning laid upon man as a puniſhment, came in by the voluntarie tranſgreſſion of Adam, and his abuſe of free will.

The Proteſtants.

THat man hath no free will of himſelfe in morall duties, to chuſe the good, and refuſe the evill, to embrace vertue, and decline from vice, but as he is wholy directed and governed by the ſpirit of God: and that not onely the beginning of our calling is of God, but that the drawing and enclining of the will and conſent thereunto, is a worke alſo of the ſpirit: thus we make it evident by the word of God.

Pſal. 119. 36. Argum. 1. Pſal. 119. 36. Incline mine heart unto thy teſtimonies, and not to covetouſneſſe: Ergo, it is God that inclineth the heart.

Anſwer. 1. God inclineth the heart by inward perſwaſion and inviting, ſo that notwithſtanding it is left in the power of the will to conſent unto Gods calling: Bellarm. cap. 29. reſponſ. ad teſtim. 3.

Contra 1. The Prophet David in the ſame place ſaith, Deduc me in ſemita: Lead me in the path of thy commandements, verſ. 35. And our Saviour ſaith, that his Father muſt draw us, or elſe we cannot come unto him. Theſe phraſes of Scripture, to incline, to lead, to draw, doe ſignifie a more forcible and powerfull calling than is found in the bare act of perſwading, inviting, alluring, &c. 2 If God ſhould onely call us by perſwaſion, he ſhould have no greater power in moving unto good, than Satan hath in tempting to evill: for Satan alſo dealeth by perſwaſion; Non diabolus cogendo, ſed ſuadendo nocet, nec extorquet à nobis conſenſum, ſed petit: The devill doth hurt us, not by forcing, but perſwading us: he doth not extort or wring from us our conſent, but craveth it: Auguſt. homil. 12. 3 If God onely move the heart by entiſing and alluring it, not by an actuall drawing and enforcing, then man ſhould have greater power over his will than God hath: for many times the will of man without perſwaſion, of it voluntarie motion is enclined to evill: but God is greater than the heart. And Auguſtine ſaith, Deus magis habet in ſua poteſtate hominum voluntates, quam ipſi ſuas: God hath greater power over the wils of men, than they have themſelves: de corrept. & grat. cap. 14. Ergo, God worketh otherwiſe in the will than by perſwaſion. John 6. 44.

Anſwer. 2. God indeed doth worke in us by his grace to give our conſent to his calling: Sed hoc facit adjuvando infirmitatem, non tollendo libertatem: But in thus doing, he helpeth our infirmitie, he taketh not away our freedome or libertie, Bellarm. ibid. So his opinion is, that grace and our free will worke together.

Contra. 1. One of the Jeſuits anſwers overthroweth the other: for before he ſaid, Inclinat Deus corda noſtra non regendo, ſed ſuadendo: God inclineth the heart not by enforcing it, but by perſwading: but here he ſaith, Quid aliud facit Deus, cum nos inclinat, quam operari ut conſentiamus? What elſe doth God, what he inclineth us, than ſo worke, that we give our conſent? To worke then and to doe, is more than to move and perſwade. 2 Our Saviour Chriſt ſaith, Without me you can doe nothing:

thing: as a branch cut off from the ſtocke withereth, and is altogether fruitleſſe. And S. Paul ſaith, Ioh. 15.5,6. That in his fleſh dwelleth no good thing: that is, in the naturall man: Ergo, there is no good motion in Rom. 7.18. the will of it ſelfe, but all goodneſſe is wrought in us wholly by grace: it is not then partly of our ſelves, and partly of grace. So Auguſtine ſaith, Laborant homines invenire in voluntate, quid boni ſit noſtrum, quod non ſit ex Deo; quod quomodo inveniri poſſit ignoro: Men doe labour to finde ſome goodneſſe in the will, that ſhould be of our ſelves, and not of God, but I am altogether ignorant how any ſuch thing ſhould bee found: de peccator. merit. & remiſſ. 2. 18. And againe, The deſire of good ſhould not be given unto man of God, if it were not good, ſi autem bonum eſt, non niſi ab illo nobis eſt: quid eſt boni cupiditas niſi charitas,-- & ſi charitas ex Deo, tota nobis ex Deo: but if it be good, wee have it not, but from God: and what is the deſire of good, but charitie? -- if charitie then be of God, then it is wholly of God: cont. 2. epiſt. Pelag. 2. 9.

Argum.* 2. The ſervants of ſinne are not free, but by nature we are all the ſervants of ſinne: Ergo, we Rom. 6.17. are not free, and ſo conſequently by nature have no free will.

Bellarmine: The ſervice of ſinne is contrarie to the libertie from ſinne, but it taketh not away the libertie of nature, but that notwithſtanding a man by his free will, aſſiſted by Gods helpe, may ſhake off the ſervitude of ſinne: reſponſ. ad 4. teſtim. cap. 29.

Anſw.* 1. Neither doe we conclude from this place, that the libertie of nature is taken away from free will: for as your Maſter diſtinguiſheth, there is libertas gratiæ à peccato, libertas naturæ à neceſſitate: lib. 2. diſt. 25. q. There is a libertie of grace from ſinne, and a libertie of nature from neceſſitie, coaction or conſtraint, &c. We grant that mans will worketh freely, that is, without conſtraint, but not freely, that is, without ſinne.

2 That mans will is a ſervant to ſinne the Apoſtle ſheweth, verſ. 19. becauſe all our members were Rom. 6.19.20. ſervants to iniquitie: if all then, the will alſo which is a member and facultie of the ſoule. And verſ. 20. When ye were ſervants to ſinne, ye were freed from righteouſneſſe: If then the mans will by nature be ſinfull and ſo voyd of righteouſneſſe, how can it have any inclination at all unto it?

3 If the will cannot riſe from ſin unleſſe it be aided by grace, then is it not free. A priſoner, though he be not fettered, yet if the priſon doores be ſhut, ſo that he cannot come forth, unleſſe the doores be opened, is notwithſtanding a priſoner ſtill.

Argum.* 3. Ioh. 15. 3. As the branch cannot beare fruit of it ſelfe, unleſſe it abide in the vine, no more Ioh. 15.3. can ye, except ye abide in me: Ergo, without the grace of Chriſt, mans will can doe nothing.

Bellarm. This place ſheweth the neceſſitie of grace, that mans will can doe nothing without it, but it excludeth not free will: reſponſ. ad argum. 5.

Anſw. Firſt, if the branch can bring forth no fruit at all without the vine, nor mans will doe nothing without Chriſt, as he ſaith, verſ. 5. Without me ye can doe nothing; then the wole activitie of our will is of grace. Secondly, the branch indeed is as a trunke, wherein the juyce of the vine runneth; it hath of it ſelfe rine and barke, but no life or growth without the ſappe of the ſtocke: ſo man hath power by nature to will, to move, to affect, deſire, but a diſpoſition to goodneſſe it hath none at all without grace. This place taketh not away the naturall power of mans will, but the activitie thereof unto goodneſſe it utterly excludeth.

Argum.* 4. S. Paul ſaith, What haſt thou that thou haſt not received? We have then no good thing 1 Cor. 4.7. of our ſelves: Ergo, neither have we any free will or inclination to that is good.

Anſw. Habemus dono Dei liberum arbitrium, ſed hoc dono accepto Domini ſumus actionum, &c. We have free will by the gift of God, and having received this gift, then we worke freely, and are Lords and commanders of our actions: Bellarm. ibid. reſp. ad ſextum teſtimon.

Contra. The Jeſuits anſwer in effect is this, that to have a deſire and inclination to good things, is of God, becauſe free will, from whence commeth this deſire, is the gift of God: ſo that this receiving, which the Apoſtle ſpeaketh of, he would have referred to the creation, when God beſtowed this gift of free will generally upon all. This anſwer is eaſily overthrowne: firſt, S. Paul ſpeaketh of ſuch gifts as are received by grace, and not ſuch as were beſtowed in the creation: for the benefits of creation are generall, and indifferently diſtributed to all: but the Apoſtle ſpeaketh of ſuch graces, as were diverſly beſtowed upon men, wherein one excelled another, one ſwelled againſt another, verſ. 6. one was diſcerned, that is, preferred before another. Therefore the Apoſtle cannot underſtand the gift of free will, as it was conferred upon all in the creation, but as it is given unto ſome by grace.

Secondly, the Pelagians did expound this place alſo, even as the Jeſuite doth, de bonis naturæ, of the gift of nature: whom Auguſtine confuteth thus: Nunquid per hæc dona quæ omnibus hominibus communia ſunt, homines diſcernuntur ab hominibus? Men are not ſeparated or diſcerned one from another by theſe common gifts of nature: but the Apoſtle ſaith, Who hath ſeparated thee? Againe, Non dicit Apoſtolus, quid potes habere, quod non accepiſti ut poſſis habere, ſed nunquid habes? illa natura igitur in qua nobis data eſt, &c. poſſibilitas habendi fidem non diſcernit, &c. The Apoſtle ſaith not, what canſt thou have, which thou didſt not receive a poſſibilitie by nature to have? but what haſt thou alreadie? for it is not the poſſibilitie to have faith, or any other grace, which doth diſcerne men, but the having of faith it ſelfe: de prædeſtinat. lib. 1. cap. 5. This place then cannot be underſtood of the poſſibilitie of free will, which ſhould be in every man by nature: but of thoſe good things that are really and actually in us: all which we doe receive of God.

Thirdly, the Jeſuite is driven to borrow an anſwer from the old hereticks the Pelagians: for thus they ſaid: Non contra gratiam diſputo, (inquit Pelagianus) quia liberum arbitrium defendo: ſi enim hominem creavit Deus, & illi liberum arbitrium donavit, quicquid homo poteſt de libero arbitrio, cujus gratia debetur, niſi ejus, qui eum condidit cum libero arbitrio? I doe not reaſon againſt grace (ſaith the Pelagian) while I defend free will: for if God created man, and gave him free will, whatſoever a man is able to doe by his free will, to whoſe grace is he indebted, but to his, who made him with free will? The very ſame anſwer doth the Jeſuite give us here, that whatſoever a man doth by vertue of his free will, it is by the gift of God, becauſe free will is his gift. Et nos iſtam, qua conditi ſumus, quanquam hoc nomine appellatam minime legerimus, tamen quia gratis data eſt gratiam fatemur, ſed oſtendimus majorem eſſe iſtam, qua Chriſtiani ſumus: And we alſo doe acknowledge the grace of creation, whereby we were made, becauſe it is freely given, though we finde it no where called by the name of grace, but yet there is a greater grace, and more properly ſo called, by the which grace we are made Chriſtians: Auguſt. de verbis Apoſtol. ſerm. 11.

Celeſtin. epiſtol. decretal. 1. cap. 9. Ita Deus in cordibus hominum, atque in ipſo libero operatur arbitrio, ut ſancta cogitatio, pium conſilium omniſque motus bonæ voluntatis ex Deo ſit, quia per illum aliquid boni poſſumus, ſine quo nihil poſſumus: quod igitur tempus intervenit, in quo ejus non egeamus auxilio: So God worketh in the hearts of men, and in free will, that every holy thought, godly counſell, good motion of the will is of God: ſo by him wee are able to doe ſome good, without whom we can doe nothing: there can be therefore no time, when we ſtand not in need of his helpe.

Further, Saint Auguſtine thus teſtifieth: Liberum arbitrium & ad malum & bonum nos habere confitendum eſt, &c. We muſt confeſſe that we have free will both to good and evill: but in doing of evill every man is free from righteouſneſſe, and the ſervant of ſinne; but in doing of good no man is free, unleſſe he be freed by him, that ſaid, If the ſonne make you free, then are you free indeed, lib. de corrept. & grat. cap. 1.

Againe. Voluntas humana non libertate conſequitur gratiam, ſed gratia potius libertatem: Mans will by libertie obtaineth not grace, but by grace libertie or freedome, cap. 8. Ergo, the libertie of the will is wholly of grace.

To this purpoſe, Auguſt. fitly compareth liberum arbitrium jumento, gratiam ſeſſori: free will to the beaſt, grace to the rider: like as the beaſt is guided by the riders hand to goe ſtraight in the way; ſo free will, non ſine gratia dirigente & gubernante, &c. finiſheth the journey of faith,--but not without grace directing and governing, &c. cont. Pelagian. Hypognoſt. artic. 3. Like as the rider then giveth all the direction and regiment to the beaſt; which indeed goeth and travelleth, but cannot goe right in the way without the rider: ſo mans will hath no inclination to the right way, without the illumination of grace.

Bernard uſeth this ſimilitude: Quis cum ad ignem venerit algens, &c. Like as a man comming frozen and cold to the fire, doubteth not, but he had his heat from the fire: ſic ſpiritus in nobis operatur omnia: ſo the ſpirit worketh all in us: in die Pentecoſt. ſerm. 1. Like as then there is no heat but from the fire, when a man is ſtarke with cold; ſo there is no goodneſſe in mans will, but from grace.

1 Cor. 2. 12. Saint Ambroſe upon theſe words, We have received, not the ſpirit of the world, but the ſpirit of God, that we might know the things that are given us of God: Unde ſiquis eſt, qui aliqua ſe exiſtimat habere bona, quorum non Deus largitor eſt, &c. If therefore there be any man, which thinketh he hath any good thing, whereof God is not the giver, but himſelfe the author, he hath not the ſpirit of God, but of the world, epiſt. 84. The Papiſts then have not the ſpirit of God, who aſcribe part of the good worke unto grace, part unto free will, but not all unto grace.

Saint Hierome upon theſe words, Ioh. 6. No man can come unto me, except my father draw him: Qui trahitur, non ſponte currit, &c. He that is drawne, doth not run of himſelfe, ſed aut tardus, aut invitus adducitur, but is brought either ſlowly, or unwillingly: lib. 3. adverſ. Pelagian. Mans will then hath no aptneſſe or inclination of it ſelfe at all to come unto God.

Serm. in 1. Dominic. Advent. Chryſoſtome ſaith: Sicut navis fracto gubernaculo illuc ducimur quo tempeſtas voluerit, &c. As the helme of the ſhip being broken, we are carried whither the tempeſt will, &c. ſo is man being under ſinne, carried whither the devill will, &c. What is now become of mans free will?

Harm. ſect. 4. p. 68. Confeſſion of Bohemia, chap. 4. The will of man, albeit it fell willingly, and of it owne accord, yet by it ſelfe, and of it owne ſtrength it could not riſe againe, or recover that fall, neither to this day, without the mercifull helpe of God, is it able to doe any thing at all. Wittemberg, chap. 4. As a man being corporally

Ibid. pag. 82. dead, is not able by his owne ſtrength to prepare or convert himſelfe to receive corporall life; ſo he which is ſpiritually dead, is not able by his owne power to convert himſelfe, &c.

Peter Lombard out of Auguſtine alleageth, Iuſtitiam in homine Deus ſolus operatur: God onely worketh vertue and righteouſneſſe in man, lib. 2. diſtinct. 28. a. Ibid. liter. d. It is in mans power to change his will to the better: ſed ea poteſtas nulla eſt, niſi à Deo detur: but that is no power at all, unleſſe it be given of God: Ergo, in mans will, without grace, there is no power at all.

James 1. 17, 18. Laſtly, this doctrine, that man hath no free will by nature to doe that which is good, hath beene ſealed by the bloud of Martyrs: Richard Woodman Martyr, againſt mans free will, alleaged theſe places of Scripture: Every good gift commeth from above. Of his owne will begate he us: Ibid. verſ. 18. It is

Philip. 2. 13. God which worketh in us the will and the deed, Philip. 2. 13. Ergo, mans owne will in good things is little worth, Fox pag.1995. For this truth, agreeable to the Scripture, ſuffered alſo Thomas Spicer, Iohn Deny, Edmund Poole, becauſe they affirmed no mortall man to have free will in himſelfe to doe good or evill : Fox pag.1912. artic. 7.

The third part, of the power of free will in divine and ſupernaturall things.

HEre we are to handle theſe two ſeverall points : firſt, whether the ſtrength of free will be utterly loſt by the tranſgreſſion of Adam. Secondly, what power it hath in ſpirituall matters.

The Papiſts.

FRee will, they ſay, is not utterly extinguiſhed, but onely abated in ſtrength, and attenuated : 45. Error. Bellarm. de grat. lib. 5. cap. 30. Concil. Tridentin. ſeſſ. 6. cap. 1.

Further, Bellarmine thus explaineth his minde, that Adams free will in two things was ſtronger than ours : firſt, Adam was free not only in the very act of willing, but in the execution alſo, ſo are not we : for though we have libertie to will, yet we are hindred by the corruption of nature from executing our will. Secondly, wee have need of Gods ſpeciall aſſiſtance againſt temptation, ſo had not Adam, but was able by the ſtrength of his free will, without further helpe, to reſiſt temptation, lib. 5. de grat. cap. 27. So his opinion is, that in the act of willing good or evill, we are as free as Adam was.

Argum. The Rhemiſts gather by the parable of the man in the Goſpell, that fell among theeves, and was left for halfe dead, that neither underſtanding, nor free will, nor other powers of the ſoule, Luke 10. 30. are utterly extinguiſhed and taken away, but only wounded by the ſinne of Adam.

Anſw. 1. It is but a feeble collection, and of ſmall force, which they doe draw from this allegorie : for allegories and ſimilitudes doe not hold in all things, but wherein onely they are compared : for our Saviour Chriſt alleaged not this parable to any ſuch end, but onely to ſhew, that we ought to do good unto all, and that they are our neighbours which doe us good, though they bee ſtrangers and unknowne unto us.

2 We denie not, that the powers of the ſoule, yea and free will alſo in ſubſtance remaine ſtill, but that the propertie and qualitie of them is extinguiſhed, that they have now no naturall inclination unto good. Auguſtine ſaith well of this matter : Semper eſt in nobis voluntas libera, ſed non eſt ſemper bona : gratia autem Dei ſemper eſt bona, & per hanc fit, ut homo ſit bonæ voluntatis, qui prius fuit malæ : There is alwayes in us free will, but it is not alwayes good : but the grace of God is alwayes good, and by this grace it commeth to paſſe, that man, who had before an evill will, hath now a good will : de grat. & liber. arbit. cap. 15.

The Papiſts.

THat the ſtrength of free will in good things is utterly decaied in man, not wounded and maimed only, but wholly loſt till it be reſtored by grace : and that we have not the like libertie in the act of willing as Adam had in his creation, thus we ſhew it.

Argum. S. Paul ſaith, When we were dead by our ſins, he hath quickned us in Chriſt. Ye which were dead in your ſins, hath he quickned together with him. Epheſ. 2. 1. 5. Coloſſ. 2. 13. He ſaith not, as in the Parable, ἡμιθανῆ, they left him for halfe dead, but νεκρὺς, plaine dead men indeed: As Auguſtine alſo ſaith, Ut homo redeat ad juſtitiam opus habet medico, quia ſanus non eſt ; opus habet vivificatore, quia mortuus eſt : Man before he can returne to doe righteouſly, hath need of a Phyſitian, becauſe hee is ſicke, had need of a quickner and reviver, becauſe he is dead : de natur. grat. cap. 23. Man then is not onely ſicke and wounded, but plaine dead, and voyd of all life, quickneſſe or agilitie in good things.

1 Auguſtine ſaith yet more plainly : Cum peccavit primus homo, non in parte aliqua, ſed in tota, qua conditus eſt natura deliquit : When the firſt man ſinned, he did not offend in any one part, but wholly in that nature wherein he was created : Contr. Pelag. Hypognoſt. articul. 3. And in another place, Natura tota fuit per liberum arbitrium in ipſa radice vitiata : Our nature was wholly corrupted by free will, in the very root or originall, that is in Adam : in Iohan. tract. 87. Ergo, all the powers both of body and ſoule, are wholly corrupt and decaied in ſpirituall things.

2 Gregorie Nyſſene, ſaith, that in mans fall, abolitio imaginis facta eſt, there was an aboliſhing of the image of God. Serm. 5. de Orat. Domin.

3 Confeſſion of Belgia, artic. 14. Man being made wicked, perverſe and corrupt in all his wayes, loſt thoſe excellent gifts, wherewith the Lord had adorned him, ſo that there were but a few little ſparks, and ſmall ſteps of thoſe graces left in him, the which notwithſtanding are ſufficient to leave men without excuſe : -- See the confeſſion of Wittemberg, in the queſtion next before. Harm. ſect. 4. ſect. 72.

4 Maldonate the Jeſuite confeſſeth, that divers of the fathers, as Auguſtine, Enthymius, Beda, Bernard doe underſtand the ſubſtance which the prodigall child waſted, of free will, which man loſt. Comment. in Luc. 15. ver. 13

Innocentius epiſtol. decretal. 25. Liberum arbitrium Adam perpeſſus, dum ſuis inconſultius utitur bonis, in pravaricationis profundo demerſus eſt, & nihil quomodo inde ſurgere poſſit, invenit : Adam ſuffering his free will, while he unadviſedly uſeth his gifts, was drowned in tranſgreſſion, and found (nothing) in himſelfe whereby to riſe from thence againe : Ergo, there remaineth in our free will by nature no abilitie at all to that which is good.

Concil. Arauſican. 2. cap. 25. Per peccatum primi hominis ita inclinatum & attenuatum fuit liberum arbitrium, ut nullus poſtea aut diligere Deum ſicut oportuit, aut credere in Deum, aut operari propter Deum poſſit; niſi gratia eum pravenerit: By the ſin of the firſt man free will is ſo turned and empaired, that none ſince can love God as they ought, beleeve in God, or worke according to God, unleſſe grace prevent them.

Bernard hath this ſaying: Homo non omnino amiſit arbitrium, i. judicium rationis, & judicando & diſcernendo, quanquam libertatem ſuam amiſerit, in eligendo, & agendo, &c. Man hath not altogether loſt his will, that is, judgement of reaſon in judging and diſcerning, although he hath loſt his libertie in chuſing and working: for a puniſhment of his ſinne, and a teſtimonie of his naturall dignitie loſt, his will is ſet for a ſigne, but captived: de vit. ſolitar. So his ſentence is, that man hath altogether loſt the libertie of his will, though the facultie of his will doe ſtill remaine.

The ſecond point, or article, of the ſtrength and power of free will in ſpirituall things.

The Papiſts.

46. Error. THey ſay not, that a man by his free will onely is able to live well, or to obtaine eternall life: for Bellarmine proveth at large, that a man hath no power of himſelfe, without the ſpeciall aſſiſtance of grace, either to beleeve, lib.6.cap.2. or to prepare himſelfe to receive grace, cap. 5. or to love God, cap.7. or to will any thing appertaining to ſalvation, without the helpe of Gods grace, cap.4. This then is their opinion, that though the will of man be not able of it ſelfe onely to doe any thing in ſpirituall actions, yet being aided and aſſiſted by grace, it may: ſo that they attribute part to grace, part to free will: the firſt motion and ſtirring of the heart, they ſay, is only of God: and here the will worketh nothing at all: then it is the part of free will to apprehend grace offered, to give conſent unto it, and to worke together with it: Trident.Concil. ſeſſ.6.cap.5.can.4. The Rhemiſts alſo thus define the matter: Though our election, calling, firſt comming to God, be not wholly or principally upon our will or works, yet our willing and working of any good to our ſalvation, is the ſecondarie cauſe: Gods ſpeciall motion, grace, aſſiſtance is the principall, Rom. 9. ſect. 4. This then is their meaning, that Gods grace and mans free will doe worke actively together: as the Rhemiſts note, The Gentiles, though they beleeved ſpecially by Gods grace and preordination, yet they beleeved alſo by their owne free will: Rhem. Act. 13. ſect. 2.

Bellarmine more particularly doth thus determine: firſt the grace, whereby men are firſt ſtirred and moved unto any good thing, worketh alone without the helpe of our will: Nihil omnino in hoc genere ex ſe facere homo poteſt: Man in this caſe worketh nothing of himſelfe, Lib.6.cap.15. propoſ. 3. Secondly, that we may give our aſſent, gratia excitanti, to grace moving and ſtirring of us, requiritur neceſſario gratia adjuvans, the helping or aſſiſting grace is requiſite and neceſſarie: Ibid. propoſ. 7. ſo here grace worketh, and mans will worketh. Thirdly, this grace that helpeth mans will to give aſſent, doth onely deale by perſwaſion, it inforceth not, nor draweth it: but it remaineth for all this in mans power freely to give or withhold his conſent: propoſ.8. And hereupon it commeth, that by the ſame grace and inward motion, one is converted, and another is not, becauſe it is in mans power to reject grace: propoſ. 9. And ſo he concludeth: Poteſt homo abſolutè per liberum arbitrium benefacere, ſi velit; & non facere, ſi non velit: That a man, notwithſtanding the firſt ſtirring, as alſo the helping and aſſiſting grace, abſolutely by his free will may doe well if he will, and not doe well, if he will not: Lib.5. cap.29. reſponſ. ad teſtimon.2. Thus the Jeſuite maketh the will of man the principall, not the ſecondarie cauſe, (wherein the Rhemiſts are more reaſonable, as we have ſeene, that make it onely the inferiour cauſe:) for the will of man may make grace fruſtrate, but grace cannot make free will fruſtrate, by the Jeſuites doctrine: Let us ſee ſome of their arguments, whereby they would prove the fellow-working of grace and free will together.

Epheſ.4.22. Philip.2.12. Argum. 1. Caſt off the old man, put on the new. Worke out your ſalvation with feare and trembling: Ergo, man together with God worketh his ſalvation: Bellarm.lib.6. de grat.cap.10.

Anſw. The Scripture thus uſeth to ſpeake unto men, becauſe they are not as ſtocks and ſtones voyd of ſenſe, but reaſonable creatures, indued with naturall gifts of will and underſtanding: not becauſe men have power to will or worke any good thing of themſelves. Worke your ſalvation, ſaith the Apoſtle: then it followeth; for it is God that worketh in you the will and the deed. So then man worketh, and God worketh: Man hath a naturall power generally to worke, to will: but to will or worke that which is good, is onely of God. Certum eſt, ſaith Auguſtine, nos velle, cum volumus, ſed ille facit, ut velimus bonum; certum eſt, nos facere, cum facimus, ſed ille facit, ut faciamus: It is certaine that it is man which willeth, whatſoever is willed, but God is the cauſe that hee willeth that which is good: it is certaine that we worke whatſoever is wrought, but God is the cauſe that we doe that is good: De bono perſeverant. cap.16. God onely then is the agent and working cauſe, man is the inſtrument.

Pſal.70.1. Rom.8.26. Argum. 2. The Prophet David ſaith, Make haſte to helpe me, O Lord. He helpeth our infirmities. But how can man be ſaid properly to be helped, unleſſe he laboured? Bellarm. ibid.

Anſw. 1. Bellarmine himſelfe doth here furniſh us with an anſwer: a better wee cannot deſire:

Opus pium, quatenus opus, à libero arbitrio eſt tantum, non tamen ſecluſo auxilio generali; quatenus pium, à ſola gratia eſt; quatenus opus pium, à libero arbitrio, & gratia ſimul: Everie godly worke, as it is a worke, proceedeth onely from free will, with the generall help of Gods providence; as it is good and godly, it is onely of grace: as it joyntly is a good worke, it is of grace and free will together: *Lib.6. de grat. cap.15. propoſ.*10. This is the ſame thing that we ſaid from the beginning, that we deny not a naturall power in man ſimply to will this or that, but to will that is good, wee hold it a worke onely of grace: and herein Bellarmine agreeth with us in this place, howſoever elſewhere hee diſſent from himſelfe in this point and us. By this poſition of his, wee may eaſily anſwer the argument: for if the good worke bee joyntly conſidered, as it is a worke, and beſides that good; ſo grace onely helpeth the will: both of them joyne together, the will to worke, and grace to make it good: but as the work is good, it is onely of grace, and ſo grace helpeth not onely, but doth alone make the worke good. 2 So where the Apoſtle ſaith, The ſpirit helpeth our infirmities: we are to underſtand that in the godly action of prayer, the ſpirit and our ſoule worke together: wee worke as it is an action proceeding from the will, the ſpirit as it is a godly action: and in this reſpect as the prayer is a godly and holy action, the ſpirit worketh onely, our infirmities nothing at all: And therefore the Apoſtle ſaith, The ſpirit it ſelfe maketh requeſt for us: for we know not what to pray as we ought: that is, the goodneſſe of the action, and the gift to pray aright, is only of the ſpirit. Having now examined ſuch places of Scripture as are alleaged by our adverſaries: let us ſee ſome other of their objections.

Object. 1. If that man by his free will hath no inclination unto that which is good and godly, then belike men are compelled againſt their wils to the Kingdome of God: Sic Rhemiſt. Iohn 6. ſect. 3.

Anſw. Indeed man by nature is unwilling to any good thing, but God reformeth our wils, and giveth us grace moſt gladly to embrace Chriſt. Thus Auguſtine ſaith, Trahit Deus miris modis, ut homo velit, non ut homines, quod fieri non poteſt, nolentes credant, ſed ut volentes ex nolentibus fiant: God draweth a man divers wayes to make him willing: for men, which were impoſſible, doe not beleeve againſt their will, but of unwilling are made willing: *Cont. 2. epiſtol. Pelag. lib.1. cap.*20.

Object. 2. If man have no good motion of himſelfe, nor no deſire or will to doe good things: what is hee better than a ſtone, or a peece of clay, being altogether deſtitute of free will? Rhemiſt. Rom. 9. ſect. 7.

Anſw. We ſay with Auguſtine: Non ſicut in lapidibus inſenſatis, aut in iis in quorum natura rationem aut voluntatem non condidit Deus ſalutem noſtram operatur: God worketh not our ſalvation in us, as in ſenſleſſe ſtones, or unreaſonable creatures, &c. So wee doe not take away mans proper motions and thoughts, as the Rhemiſts accuſe us: 2 *Corinth.3. ſect.*2. God giveth not a new minde, ſoule, will, or underſtanding to the regenerate, but onely altereth and changeth it: Man by nature hath power to will, to thinke, to underſtand: ſo cannot a ſtone or a peece of clay, or any brutiſh creature: but to will, or thinke that which is good, is onely a worke of grace.

Contr. Pelag. de peccator. merit. & remiſſ. lib.2. c.5.

Object. 3. If God worke all, then man worketh nothing; what then can good works profit him ſeeing he worketh not?

Anſw. God by his ſpeciall grace worketh onely that which is good in man: man himſelfe alſo by nature hath a generall power to will and worke, yet not any good thing, but of grace: ſo God worketh not without man, but in man and by man, as his inſtrument, which receiveth the whole activitie in good things from the firſt mover and principall efficient. Auguſtine alſo thus anſwereth the like objection: Ergo agimur (inquies) non agimus: Thou wilt ſay then, that we our ſelves are wrought to good things, we worke not: Immo & agis, & ageris, & tum bene agis, ſi à bono ageris: Yea rather, thou art both wrought thy ſelfe, and workeſt: and then thou workeſt well, and that which is good, when thou art firſt wrought and made good: De verb. Apoſtol. ſerm. 13.

Object. 4. Thus alſo the Pelagians and free will men objected: if man have no free will in good things: Tale ergo hominibus datum eſt arbitrium, quale in dæmonibus, quod nihil aliud poſſit, vel velit, quam malum: Then ſuch a will is given to men as Devils have, which neither can nor will doe any thing but evill.

Anſw. Auguſtine anſwereth: Firſt, Talis eſt multorum malitia, qualis dæmonum, ut Dominus, vos ex patre diabolo eſtis: The like malice is in many wicked men, as is in the Devils themſelves, otherwiſe our Saviour Chriſt would not have ſaid to ſome, you are of your father the Devill. Secondly, Sed hoc inter homines malos & diabolum diſtat, quod hominibus etiam valde malis, supereſt etiam, ſi Deus voluerit, reconciliatio: dæmonibus nulla ſervata eſt converſio: But this difference there is betweene wicked men and the Devill, that there remaineth hope of reconciliation, if God will, even for the moſt wicked men: but no converſion or amendment is kept in ſtore for the damned ſpirits: Lib. articul. falſ. impoſit. articul. 6. The ſame difference there is betweene the corrupt will of men, and the malice of Devils: that the will of men, though it be preſently evill, by grace may be made good: but the malice of the Devill can never be changed to the better.

The Proteſtants.

There are two things to bee conſidered in our will and thoughts, the naturall power of willing and thinking, and the goodneſſe and holineſſe of our thoughts: the firſt is in us, and is properly ours by the generall gift of God, but the other commeth onely of God by his grace. The will, the underſtanding, the thoughts are ours, but the goodneſſe is meerely and entirely wrought by the ſpirit of God: So that in reſpect of the goodneſſe inſpired into our mindes, our wils are altogether paſſive: in reſpect of the generall power, and naturall facultie, of willing, thinking, underſtanding, they are alſo active.

One verie fitly compareth mans free will in good actions, unto materia; the grace working, unto forma: that as the ſaid materia without forma, the matter without the forme is rude and ſhapeleſſe; ſo free will is a thing altogether rude and deformed, if it bee not framed and faſhioned by grace comming thereunto: Ex epiſtol. Voluſian. Epiſcop. Carthag. ad Nicolaum Papam.

Auguſtine ſaith, Rectè comparari arbitror liberum arbitrium jumento, — gratiam ſeſſori: I thinke mans free will may verie fitly be compared to the beaſt which a man rideth upon, grace to the rider or ſitter: Sicut jumentum illud dum in via dirigitur, ſeſſoris manu regitur, ut iter rectum—ſecundum ſedentis in ſe voluntatem poſſit incedere; ſic liberum arbitrium gratia regimine regitur, ut poſſit in ſemitis Domini recto corde—ambulare: And as the beaſt is guided by the hand of the rider, that it may goe right in the way, according to the riders pleaſure: ſo free will is governed by grace, to walke aright in the wayes of God: Cont Pelag. Hypognoſtic. articul. 3. Mans free will therefore is no more able without grace, to doe any good thing, than the horſe is to goe the right way without a guide.

Pſalm. 51. 10. Argum. 1. The Prophet David ſaith, Create in me a cleane heart, O God. Mans will therefore doth no more worke with grace, than the creature doth with the Creator when it is created. And therefore the Prophet elſewhere ſaith: He hath created us, and not we our ſelves; Pſalm. 100. 4. which is ſpoken of the regeneration of men, rather than of the firſt creation; becauſe it followeth, Wee are his people, and the ſheepe of his paſture.

Anſw. There is not a new ſubſtance of the heart created in our regeneration: ſed ipſa mundities efficitur: but the pureneſſe or cleanneſſe of the heart is only wrought, the ſame ſubſtance remaineth, which worketh together with grace: Bellar. cap. 13. reſponſ. ad loc. 2.

Contra. The Jeſuite by thus anſwering, confirmeth our argument rather than refuteth it: for wee alſo affirme and grant, that the naturall power of the will and affections remaine ſtill, and worke together in the naturall action of willing, or thinking: but the ſupernaturall goodneſſe and pureneſſe of our heart, our will, our thoughts, we hold only to be wrought by grace, and that the will of man doth not help any thing thereunto. And thus much the Jeſuite granteth, and ſo he confeſſeth againſt himſelfe, that the ſupernaturall pureneſſe of mans will is onely wrought by grace, though the naturall ſubſtance of the will remaine ſtill.

Philip. 2. 13, 14. Argum. 2. God worketh in us both the will and the deed: he helpeth not onely, but wholly worketh himſelfe.

Anſw. God indeed worketh our will, but not without us: for the Apoſtle in the ſame place ſaith, Worke your ſalvation with feare and trembling, verſ. 14. Ergo, Man worketh together with God: Bellarm. ibid.

Contra. Gods working is the cauſe why man worketh: Worke out your ſalvation, ſaith the Apoſtle: and then he rendreth the reaſon or cauſe thereof; For it is God which worketh, &c. So that man worketh not any thing of himſelfe, but as his will is moved and wrought by the ſpirit of God: for if all were not of God, how then ſaith the Apoſtle, 1 Cor. 15. 28. That God may be all in all: and that everie good gift is of God. Iam. 1. 17. Auguſtine ſaith, Sicut homo ſedens in jumento dicit, feci hodie, ut puta 30. millia, cum jumentum illo ſedente cucurrerit, —ſed ſeſſor dicitur facere, quia jumentum facere fecit: ſic liberum arbitrium fidei iter peragit,—ſed non ſine gratia dirigente & gubernante: As a man ſitting upon his beaſt, ſaith, I have gone to day thirtie miles, or thereabout, when as not he, but his beaſt hath gone it; but the rider is ſaid to doe it, becauſe hee maketh his beaſt to doe it: ſo it is free will that runneth the race of faith, but grace directeth and governeth it: Com. Pelagian. Hypognoſtic. articul. 3. Man then as Gods inſtrument worketh, but God giveth the whole activitie and power to worke.

1 Cor. 15. 10. Argum. 3. S. Paul ſaith: I laboured more abundantly than they all; yet not I, but the grace of God which is with me. By this correction of his ſpeech the Apoſtle ſheweth, that of himſelfe hee was not able to worke any good thing, but it was the grace of God in him.

Anſw. He ſaith, Gratia Dei mecum, The grace of God with him: ſo that the Apoſtle wrought not alone, but he and grace together. Bellarm. cap. 10.

Contra. Nay, the Apoſtle aſcribeth all to grace: and by ſaying, The grace of God with mee, hee meaneth the grace that wrought in him, and was preſent with him: Galath. 2. 20. As elſewhere he ſaith, Thus I live, not I now, but Chriſt liveth in me. So that whether hee ſay, Grace with mee, or in me, it is all one: his meaning is, that grace onely worketh in him, and he by grace. And ſo Auguſtine expoundeth it: Quicquid vult bonum, quicquid poteſt, à Domino eſt, qui ſine me, ait Dominus, nihil poteſtis facere: What good ſoever a man either willeth, or is able to doe, it is of God; becauſe the Lord ſaith in the Goſpell, Without mee you can doe nothing: Hypognoſt. cont. Pelagian. articul. 3. Beſide the places of Scripture, which are manifeſt againſt the popiſh error of free will, we have alſo certaine objections to appoſe them with.

Object. 1. If the ſpirit of God doe not draw and enforce the will of man, but onely move it by perſwaſion, then ſhould we have no more forcible meanes to lead us to good, than we have to ſeduce us goe in the way of righteouſneſſe: But everie good deſire, will, and thought, is wrought in us by grace. Thus, I truſt, we have requited our adverſaries, and anſwered their objections; and repayed them againe with as many in number, but in waight greater.

Now laſtly, the holy Martyrs have ſealed this doctrine with their bloud: That bleſſed man Maſter Bradford confeſſeth beleefe onely to be Gods gift: whereas Frier Alphonſo diſputing with him, held on the other ſide, that the act of beleeving is in mans power: Fox. pag. 1619. There were divers perſons to the number of twentie perſecuted in the townes of Winſon and Mendleſam in Suffolke, anno 1556. for maintaining this article with others, That man had no free will of himſelfe unto good, Fox, pag. 1913.

See alſo for this matter, Arauſican. Concil. 2. can. 7. Si quis per natura vigorem bonum aliquod, quod ad ſalutem pertinet vitæ æternæ, cogitare, eligere, prædicationi ſalutari conſentire poſſe dicit abſque illuminatione ſpiritus, hæretico fallitur ſpiritu; cum Dominus ait, Sine me nihil poteſtis facere: If any man ſay, that by the ſtrength of nature man can thinke or chuſe any thing that appertaineth to eternall life, or conſent unto the preaching of ſalvation, without the illumination of the Spirit, hee is ſeduced with the ſpirit of hereſie: for Chriſt ſaith, Without me ye can doe nothing.

S. Ambroſe: Voluntas nihil habet in ſuis viribus, niſi periculi facilitatem: The will of man hath no power in it ſelfe, but onely a facilitie of ſinning: de vocat. Gent. lib 2. c. 2. epiſtol. 84. Gratia tota repellitur, niſi tota ſuſcipitur: Grace is wholly refuſed, if it be not wholly received. Grace then worketh wholly, not grace and mans will together.

Homil. de Adam. & Eva. Chryſoſtome confeſſeth, Deum omnium bonorum effectuum & operum authorem, That God is the author of all good works and effects—ab ipſius gratia omnia hominis merita provenire: that all mans merits proceed from his grace:—agit in nobis, ut quod vult & velimus & agamus: hee worketh in us, that we both will and doe what he willeth, &c.

Harm. ſect. 4. pag. 70. French Confeſſ. artic. 9. Mans nature is become altogether defiled, and being blinde in ſpirit, corrupt in heart, hath utterly loſt all that integritie. Confeſſ. of Wittenberg. c. 4. As a man being corporally dead is not able by his owne ſtrength to prepare or convert himſelfe to receive corporall life; ſo hee which is ſpiritually dead, is not able by his owne power to convert himſelfe to receive ſpirituall life.

Ibid. p. 81. Decret. p. 2. cauſ. 33. diſtinct. 1. c. 35. Reſuſcitatus corpore vivit, abſente ſuſcitatore, non autem ſic reſuſcitatus in anima: He that is raiſed in his body liveth, though hee be abſent that raiſed him; but hee that is raiſed in his ſoule cannot: Ergo, without grace the ſoule can doe nothing.

Pet. Lombard. upon theſe words: It is not in him that runneth, or willeth, but in God that ſheweth mercie, &c. reproveth their interpretation that ſay, It is not in mans will only: and further reaſoneth thus, That if it be not onely in the will, nor onely of mercie, the Apoſtles words might be turned thus, It is not in him that ſheweth mercie, but in him that willeth, &c. ſo hee concludeth, Ideo rectè dictum intelligatur, ut totum detur Deo; Therefore this is ſo to bee underſtood, that the whole may bee given unto God: lib. 2. diſt. 26. liter. b. Ergo, if all bee of grace, nothing remaineth by mans will to bee performed.

An Appendix of Auguſtines judgement, thorowly diſcuſſed concerning Free will.

BEcauſe this learned Father, and in his time the moſt zealous defender of the grace of God againſt the power of free will, and the mightieſt impugner of the hereſie of the Pelagians, hath written at large of this matter; and more without all queſtion than any of the Fathers beſide: I will therefore produce the teſtimonies alleaged on both ſides, that in the end it may appeare which way the judgement of this Father enclined.

The Papiſts.

47. Error. THe places of Auguſtine urged by Bellarmine for the proofe of free will are theſe.

1 Lib. de quantit. animæ, cap. 36. Datum eſt animæ liberum arbitrium, &c. There is given to the ſoule of man free will, &c. which they that deny are ſo blinde, &c. The ſame is repeated by Bellarmine lib. 5. de grat. c. 27.

2 Lib. 5. de civitat. Dei, cap. 10. Nullo modo cogimur, &c. We are not conſtrained, retaining Gods preſcience, to take away voluntatis arbitrium, the judgement of the will.

3 Hypognoſtic. lib. 3. Quiſquis negaverit liberum arbitrium, &c. Whoſoever denyeth free will, is no Catholike: Bellarm. lib. 4. de grat. c. 9.

Anſw. 1 Auguſtine underſtandeth free will from coaction or compulſion: as lib. 5. de civitat. Dei, c. 10. Nec ideo peccat homo, &c. Man doth not ſinne, becauſe God foreſaw he ſhould ſinne, &c. Gods preſcience doth not force or compell mans will to doe any thing. 2 Likewiſe elſewhere Auguſtine ſaith, Liberum arbitrium nos habere, &c. It muſt be confeſſed, that we have free will to do both good and evill, &c. Sed in bono faciendo, liber nullus eſſe poteſt, but in doing of good no man is free, except he be freed by him, that ſaith; If the Sonne make you free, then are you free indeed, lib. de corrept. & grat. c. 1. In this ſenſe we confeſſe free will with Auguſtine, free to evill without conſtraint, free alſo unto good, but by grace.

4 Lib. 4. contr. Iulian. c. 3. Tolerabilius illas, quas in impiis dicis eſſe virtutes, &c. More tolerably us to evill: for Satan dealeth onely by inticement and perſwaſion: Everie man is tempted when hee is withdrawne by his concupiſcence, and entiſed. Auguſtine ſaith: Satanas non cogit invitum: Satan compelleth none againſt his will: In Pſalm. 91. But it is certaine that the ſpirit of God worketh more ſtrongly in us unto life, than the tempter doth unto deſtruction: for our Saviour Chriſt ſaith, The kingdome of God ſuffereth violence, and the violent take it by force. This ſpirituall violence and force is not wrought only by perſwaſion: But Hell ſuffereth not violence, many there be that goe in thereat, that is, willingly, and of their owne accord. Auguſtine ſaith well: Nullus vitioſus animus virtute armatum animum ſuperat: No vitious minde overcommeth a minde armed with vertue: vertue then is mightier than vice, and a vertuous minde ſtronger than a vitious: De liber. arbitr. cap. 12. This ſtrength is wrought by more effectuall meanes than by perſwaſion: for the will of man naturally is more prone to evill than to good. And if it were on the one ſide entiſed to evill, on the other but perſwaded and moved onely to good, it would more eaſily be ſwayed that way than this.

James 1.14.

Matth.11.12

Matth.7.13.

Object. 2. Bellarmine ſaith: Habemus dono Dei liberum arbitrium, & hoc dono accepto Domini ſumus actionum: Free will is the gift of God, and by this gift once received, we are made Lords of our owne actions: ſo that it is in our power to doe well or no: Bellarm. lib. 5. de grat. cap. 29. reſponſ. ad argum. 6. So belike free will is from God, but man himſelfe maketh it good: for then is the will of man good, when it willeth good things: but it is in mans power, as they ſay, to incline his will to good: Ergo, alſo to make the will it ſelfe. Marke then what followeth hereupon: as Auguſtine verie well gathereth: Si libera voluntas à Deo eſt, quæ adhuc poteſt bona eſſe vel mala, bona autem ex nobis, melius eſt id, quod à nobis, quam quod à Deo; quod ſi abſurdiſſimum ſit dicere, oportet fateamur, & bonam voluntatem nos à Deo adipiſci: If free will bee of God which may be yet either good or evill, and a good will of our ſelves, that is better which is of us, than that which is of God; which if it bee moſt abſurd to ſay, we muſt needs confeſſe that our good will is alſo of God: De merit. & remiſſion. cont. Pelag. lib. 1. cap. 18.

Object. 3. Bellarmine againe thus writeth, that God inclineth our hearts, Non cogendo, ſed ſuadendo, & invitando, not by enforcing, but by moving and inviting it: Ita ut in poteſtate voluntatis relinquatur conſentire vocanti: So that it is left in the power of the will to conſent to him that moveth, and calleth: Lib. 5. cap. 29. reſponſ. ad teſtimon. 3. And againe hee ſaith, it is in a mans power, whether hee will bee perſwaded or not, poteſt non perſuaderi: Lib. 6. cap. 13. reſponſ. ad loc. 4.

Who ſeeth not now how neere the Jeſuite commeth to that old Pelagian hereſie: Hominem tantum à Deo adjuvari, revelando tantum, quod fieri debeat: That man is helped only of God, by revealing only what is to be done. Which hereſie Auguſtine confuteth thus: Nos eam gratiam volumus, —quæ non ſolum revelatur ſapientia, ſed amatur: nec ſuadetur ſolum omne bonum, ſed perſuadetur: We underſtand ſuch a grace, whereby wiſdome is not onely revealed, but loved; not propounded, but perſwaded: lib. 1. de grat. Chriſti, cap. 14. He then that confeſſeth not ſuch a grace of God, whereby we are made to love that is good, and are thorowly perſwaded thereunto, thinketh not as Auguſtine thought, but as the old Pelagians: But thus doth Bellarmine: he ſaith, that Gratia ſuadendo inclinat, Grace doth onely move; but, homo poteſt non perſuaderi, it is in mans power whether hee will be perſwaded: So then gratia doth ſuadere, non perſuadere, move, but not perſwade, by his opinion: which is the verie poſition of the Pelagians.

Object. 4. It was another hereſie of the Pelagians: that God to this end gave grace to men, Ut quod facere jubentur per liberum arbitrium, facilius implere poſſint per gratiam: That what they are commanded to doe by their free will, they may more eaſily accompliſh by grace. What elſe now doe the Rhemiſts ſay giving this note: That although the Gentiles do eſpecially beleeve by Gods grace, yet they doe beleeve by their free will: annot. Act. 13.2. And againe, Man was never without free will, but it is made more free by grace: Rhemiſt. Iohn 8. ſect. 2. So then grace in their judgement helpeth man only more eſpecially, fully, freely, that is, more eaſily to beleeve: Whereupon it followeth, that they may beleeve without grace, though not ſo eſpecially.

This hereſie Auguſtine confuteth thus: Velo facilius, remo difficilius, tamen & remo itur: jumento facilius, pedibus difficilius, ſed tamen & pedibus pervenitur: Non eſt ſic, (verus magiſter ait) —ſine me nihil poteſtis facere: As if you ſhould ſay, the veſſell goeth more eaſily with the ſaile, more hardly with the oares, yet it goeth with the oares: A man travelleth better by horſe, not ſo eaſily a foot, yet hee travelleth: It is nothing ſo (ſaith Auguſtine) as our Maſter witneſſeth, who is true, and cannot lye, Without me you can doe nothing: De verb. Apoſt. ſerm. 13.

Thus was it alſo concluded, Concil. Milevitan. cap. 5. Quicunque dixerit ideo nobis gratiam juſtificationis dari, ut quod facere per liberum jubemur arbitrium, facilius impleamus per gratiam; tanquam etſi gratia non daretur, non quidem facile, ſed tamen poſſemus ſine illa implere divina mandata, anathema ſit: Dixit enim Chriſtus, ſine me nihil poteſtis facere, non dixit, ſine me difficilius poteſtis facere: Whoſoever ſaith that the grace of juſtification is therefore given us, that what wee are commanded to doe by free will, we may more eaſily doe by grace: as though if grace were not given, we might, though not eaſily, keepe the Commandements, let him be accurſed: for Chriſt ſaid, Without mee you can doe nothing: he ſaid not, without me you can hardly doe.

Man therefore of himſelfe is unable, not onely to ſaile, but to row; not onely to ride, but to bly thoſe vertues, which you ſay are in the wicked, you ſhould rather aſcribe divino muneri, to the divine gift, than to their will, though they know it not, Bellarm. lib. 5. de grat. c. 9.

Anſw. This place maketh againſt Bellarmine, for Auguſtine would have the vertues even in Infidels aſcribed in ſome ſort to the gift of God, rather than to their owne will.

5 Lib. de perfect. inſtit. contr. Caleſtin. That place being objected out of S. Paul, Quod vult faciat, Let him doe what he will: Auguſtine anſwereth thus: Quaſi pro magno habendum ſit, velle nubere: As though it were ſuch a great matter, to have a will to marrie: where we reaſon of the aſſiſtance of Gods mercie; hence Bellarmine concludeth a free will in morall works without grace. Object.

Anſw. This place alſo maketh againſt him: for to have a will to marrie is naturall, neither good nor evill: but to marrie to ſuch end as God hath appointed marriage, is a good worke, and is not in mans will without Gods help: as it followeth in the ſame place, Quaſi prodeſt aliquid velle, &c. As though in this caſe it availed to will, unleſſe God by his providence doe joyne the man and the woman.

6 Hypognoſtic. lib. 3. Eſſe fatemur liberum arbitrium, &c. We confeſſe a free will, not by the which it is fit to begin or finiſh things appertaining to God, ſed tantum in operibus vitæ præſentis, tam bonis quam malis, but onely in the works of this preſent life, either good or evill: Bonis dico, quæ de bono naturæ oriuntur, &c. I call thoſe good things, which doe come of the goodneſſe of nature, as to worke in the field, to eat, to drinke, &c. Bellarm. ibid.

Anſw. All this we grant, that naturall and civill works are in mans power, as to worke, to eat, to drinke: but to doe theſe things well, and to referre them to the glorie of God, which is the morall goodneſſe of theſe actions, is from God, and not from mans will.

7 Auguſtin. lib. 1. de liber. arbitrio, c. 12. Vides in voluntate noſtra eſſe conſtitutum, &c. You ſee it is in our will, whether we enjoy ſo great a good, or want it, &c. Againe, Quis peccat in eo quod nullo modo caveri poteſt? &c. Who ſinneth in that which cannot be ſhunned? but we ſinne, Ergo, it may be ſhunned, Bellarm. lib. 5. c. 27.

8 Lib. 2. de animab. 12. Peccatorum reum quenquam: For a man to be held guiltie of ſin, becauſe he did not that which he could not doe, ſumma inſania eſt, is great madneſſe: wherefore the ſoules, that which they doe, if they doe it of nature, not of will, if they want a free motion to doe or not to doe, &c. they cannot be held guiltie of ſinne, Bellarm. ibid.

9 Lib. 2. actor. cum Felice. Manich. c. 3. Eſſe liberum arbitrium, & inde peccare quemque ſi velit, &c. That there is a free will, and thereby everie one may ſinne if he will, and not ſinne if he will not, is evident in the Scripture: Againe, Habet unuſquiſque in voluntate, aut eligere, quæ bona ſunt, &c. Everie man hath in his will, either to chuſe the good, and ſo to be a good tree, or to chuſe the evill, and to be an evill tree, ibid.

Anſw. 1 I anſwer here for Auguſtine, as Hierome for himſelfe, who diſputing againſt Iovinian, who ſeemed to extenuate Virginitie, falleth into the other extreme to be thought to condemne Marriage; ſaith he, Debuerat prudens lector, ea quæ videntur duriora, æſtimare de cæteris, &c. The diſcreet Reader ſhould eſteeme and meaſure the hard ſayings by the reſt, and not to accuſe me, in one and the ſame booke to bring forth contrarie ſentences: Quis enim ita hebes? &c. Who is ſo blockiſh to praiſe and condemne the ſame thing? Againe, Aliud eſt docere diſcipulum, aliud adverſarium vincere. It is one thing to teach a diſciple, another to confute an adverſarie: are yee angrie with me, quia Iovinianum non docuerim, ſed vicerim? becauſe I did not teach Iovinian, but confute him? Apolog. ad Pammach. The like may be ſaid for Auguſtine: Doe we thinke he was ſo forgetfull or unskilfull, as one while to extoll free will, another to deprave and impare it? we muſt conſider againſt whom hee writeth, namely the Manichees, who imputed ſin to the neceſſitie of nature: Auguſtine dealing againſt them, when he ſpeaketh of free will, doth convince rather than teach them.

2 Let us give Auguſtine leave to expound himſelfe: who Lib. 1. retract. c. 9. thus ſaith, Cùm de libera voluntate rectè faciendi loquimur, de illa, in qua homo factus eſt loquimur: When we ſpeake of the free will of doing well, we ſpeake of that will wherein man was made: Thus if wee underſtand Auguſtine ſpeaking of free will, we willingly grant all. Bellarmines exception is a meere cavill, that Auguſtine ſhould affirme the ſame will to chuſe good or evill to be in us that was in Adam, but not the ſame power of execution. Contra. 1. He ſpeaketh directly, de voluntate, non poteſtate rectè faciendi, of the will, not the power of doing well, which he ſaith was in Adam, and not in us. Secondly, he elſewhere ſaith, Vitiato libero arbitrio, totus homo vitiatus eſt: That free will being corrupt, man wholly was corrupted. Hypognoſtic. c. 3. If a man wholly, then his will alſo wholly was corrupt; then conſequently the freedome of his will to good and evill was corrupted.

3 Auguſtine further expoundeth himſelfe, and lib. 1. retract. c. 9. treating of his bookes De libero arbitrio, he retracteth or rather explaneth this verie ſentence urged before, loc. 7. as that ſinne may be ſhunned, that a man may live well if he will: he thus explaineth himſelfe, Voluntatem bene non velle, niſi à Deo liberetur, That the will cannot will well, unleſſe God make it free: Et nihil poſſe ſentienti, intelligenti bonum occurrere, &c. And that nothing that is good can come into the ſenſe or underſtanding, but from God: thus if we will give Auguſtine leave to expound himſelfe; where he treateth of free will to doe good, he muſt be underſtood to include a neceſſarie ſenſe of Gods grace, whereby it is made free, and not by nature.

10 Lib. de ver. religion. c. 14. Non dubitandum video, &c. It is not to be doubted that the minde hath free will: for God would have his ſervants to ſerve him freely, which cannot be, ſi non voluntate ſed neceſſitate ſervirent, if they ſhould ſerve him not willingly, but of neceſſitie, Bellarm. ibid.

Anſw. 1. By neceſſitie Auguſtine underſtandeth the forcing and conſtraining of the will: as before *loc.*2. Nullo modo cogimur tollere: We are not compelled to take away free will, becauſe of Gods preſcience: likewiſe ſuch a neceſſitie as the Heathen aſcribed to the ſtarres, and fatall deſtiny, in free will he denieth, *Lib. de incarnat. verbi, c.*2. but ſuch a voluntarie neceſſitie, whereby the will cannot now chuſe, but willingly ſinne, Auguſtine affirmeth, *Lib.*1. retract. c. 9. treating of his bookes de libero arbitrio, &c. That man cannot now refraine from luſtfull concupiſcence, Non natura eſt primò inſtituti hominis, ſed pœna damnati, it is not the nature of the man firſt created, but the puniſhment of him being condemned: if homo non poteſt, if a man cannot abſtaine, how is there not a neceſſitie laid upon him? 2 God indeed will have us to ſerve him willingly and freely, but as Auguſtine elſewhere ſaith, Ex nolentibus, volentes facit, of nilling he maketh us willing: and as S. Ambroſe; Virtus nulla nolentium eſt, ſed ipſa gratia hoc agit: There is no vertue, where unwillingneſſe; but grace it ſelfe worketh this: that is, that wee are willing, lib. 2. de vocat. Gent. c. 9. Hitherto then Auguſtines ſenſe is maintained to be ſound and good.

11 *Lib. de grat. & liber. arbit. c.*1. Revelavit Deus per Scripturas, eſſe in homine liberum arbitrium: God hath revealed by the Scriptures, that there is a free will in man, *Bellarm. c.*28.

12 *Epiſtol.*47. Catholica fides neque negat liberum arbitrium: The Catholike faith neither denieth free will in man, neque tantum ei tribuit, ut ſine gratia valeat aliquid, neither doth it attribute ſo much unto it, as though it could doe any thing without grace, *Bellarm. c.*28.

13 *Lib.*2. de nupt. & concupiſc. Non negamus liberum arbitrium: We deny not free will: lib. 1. *ad Bonif. c.*2. Quis noſtrum dicit? Which of us ſaith? That by the ſin of the firſt man free will is loſt from mankinde, Bellarm. ibid.

Anſw. 1. Auguſtine expoundeth himſelfe, loc. 12. how he underſtandeth free will, that it cannot doe any thing at all that is good, without grace: and elſewhere he calleth it liberam voluntatem, propter gratiam Dei, a free will becauſe of Gods grace, which doth free it from the law of ſinne, *act. cont. Fortunat. diſput.*2. 2 In that he ſaith, the free will which Adam had is not loſt, hee underſtandeth a libertie from coaction and forcing: 1 As thus he defineth the will, Voluntas eſt motus ad aliquid faciendum nullo cogente: The will is a motion to doe any thing without forcing: this libertie of will remaineth ſtill. 2 Yet Auguſtine acknowledgeth that our will by nature is not free from neceſſitie: Poſtquam ille libera voluntate peccavit, nos in neceſſitatem præcipitati ſumus: After Adam had ſinned by his free will, we were precipitate into neceſſitie; and he giveth this example: as before a man is accuſtomed to a thing, he hath free will to doe it, or not to doe it; but afterward, conſuetudine ſic implicatur ut poſtea vincere non poteſt, quod ſua libertate fabricata eſt: When the will is entangled with cuſtome, it cannot overcome that which firſt it willingly deviſed: As many would not ſweare, yet by cuſtome they cannot forbeare: act. 2. diei cont. Fortunat. Such a voluntarie neceſſitie Adam by his ſinne hath brought upon his poſteritie. 3 Auguſtine ſaith, Primum liberum arbitrium poſſe non peccare, noviſſimum non poſſe peccare: The firſt free will was to be able not to ſin, the laſt (in Heaven) not to have abilitie to ſin, *lib.*22. *de civitat. Dei, c.*30. As they ſhall have a free will with a neceſſitie of not ſinning, ſo we by nature have a free will with neceſſitie of ſinning.

14 *Auguſtine lib. de grat. & liber. arbit. c.*2. Illa præcepta divina homini non prodeſſent, &c. The divine precepts ſhould not profit a man, unleſſe he had free will: quomodo jubet? how doth God command, if there be no free will? Bellarm. ibid.

Anſw. Auguſtine ſhall expound himſelfe, who thus anſwereth the like objection of the Pelagians, taken from the precepts of Scripture: Spiritu Dei aguntur filii Dei, ut agant, non ut ipſi nihil agant, & hoc eis oſtenditur quid agere debeant: The children of God are wrought by the Spirit, that they ſhould worke, not that they ſhould doe nothing, and therefore it is ſhewed them what they ſhould doe: And againe, O homo in præceptione cognoſce, quid debeas habere, in correptione cognoſce tuo te vitio non habere; in oratione cognoſce, undè accipias, quod vis habere: O man, in the precept know what thou oughteſt to have; in the rebuke, that by thine owne fault thou haſt it not; in prayer acknowledge, whence thou muſt receive that thou wouldeſt have: de cor. & grat. c. 3. Wherefore then the precepts of Scripture are to this end, to ſhew man what he ſhould doe, and to drive him to ſeeke that at Gods hands, which is commanded; they demonſtate a free will in man, but to be wrought and directed by the Spirit.

15 *Auguſt. Epiſt.*89. *qu.*2. Neque voluntatis arbitrium ideo tollitur, quia juvatur, &c. Neither is free will taken away, becauſe it is helped; but therefore it is helped, becauſe it is not taken away, Bellarm. ibid. That is not helped that is not; therefore there is free will in man, becauſe it is helped, *Bellarm. rurſus, lib.*6. *c.*11. *tit.*2.

Anſw. Auguſtine ſhall here alſo expound himſelfe: Adjutor noſter Deus eſt, nec adjuvari poteſt, niſi qui ſponte aliquid conatur: God is our helper, neither can a man be helped, unleſſe he doe ſomewhat of himſelfe: then it followeth, Quia non ſicut in lapidibus inſenſatis, &c. Becauſe God worketh not ſalvation in us as in ſenſeleſſe ſtones, or in unreaſonable creatures, *de peccator. merit. & remiſſion. cont. Pelag. lib.*2. *c.*5. His opinion then is, that God is ſaid to help our will, in reſpect of the naturall facultie of willing, becauſe man hath reaſon, will, and underſtanding by nature: but to will that which is good, man is not only helped, but altogether guided and directed by grace: as he ſaith in another place, Laborant homines invenire in voluntate, quid boni ſit noſtrum, &c. Men do labour to finde in the will ſome goodneſſe, which is not of God, which how it can be found, I am utterly ignorant, *ibid.c.*18.

Bernard hath the like ſaying, Liberum arbitrium nos facit volentes, gratia bene volentes, ex ipſo nobis eſt velle, ex ipſa bonum velle: Freewill maketh us willing, grace well willing; from that we have power to will, from the other power to will that is good, lib. de liber. arbitr. Thus then mans will and grace work together, man by nature willeth, by grace he willeth that is good.

16 *Auguſt. in Pſal.*7. Diabolo non conſentire in poteſtate noſtra eſſe voluit: Not to conſent to the devill God would have it in our power, *de ſpirit. & liter. c.*34. Conſentire vocationi Dei, vel ab ea diſſentire propriæ voluntatis eſt: To conſent to Gods calling, or diſſent from it, it is in mans owne will, *Bellarm. ibid. cap.*28. *& lib.*6. *cap.*11. *Tom.*3.

Anſ. Auguſtine ſaith, that it is in the will of man to conſent, &c. but this will muſt be prepared, and wrought of God: firſt, thus he expoundeth himſelfe, *lib.*1. *retractat. c.*22. making mention of his book againſt Adimantius, he had affirmed, that it was in mans power to change his will: Sed poteſtas iſta nulla eſt, niſi à Deo datur: But this is no power, unleſſe it be given of God. And againe, lib. 2. cap. 1. he correcteth that ſaying in his book ad Simplician. that it is in uniuſcujuſque poteſtate, ut velit, in every mans power to will: à Deo voluntas præparatur, the will alſo muſt be prepared of God. Secondly, he further thus explaineth himſelfe: Sive iniquitas, ſive juſtitia: Whether iniquitie or righteouſneſſe, unleſſe they were in our will, they could not be in our power, being not in our power, there ſhould be neither juſt reward, nor puniſhment: Ignorantia verò & infirmitas, &c. But this ignorance and infirmitie, that either man knoweth not what he ought to will, or cannot doe that which he willeth, ex occulto pœnarum ordine venit, proceedeth from the ſecret order of puniſhment: *cont. Fauſt. lib.*22. *ca.*78. Here he affirmeth, that both good and evill is in mans will and power, and yet that mans will by nature is ſo blinde and weake, as that it can neither will, nor worke that which it ought: wherefore the power of the will to good is not of it ſelfe, but of grace. Thirdly, ſo then as Bernard ſaith, Nec bonus nec malus eſt quiſpiam niſi volens: No man is either good or evill againſt his will: but (ſaith he) Deus facit voluntarios, ut non ſalvet invitos, God maketh them willing, that they be not ſaved unwilling, lib. de liber. arbit. Wherefore it is mans will that conſenteth to God, and conſenteth not to the Devill, but his will reformed and made free or willing by grace. Thoſe places are alleaged by Bellarmine, to prove the power of mans will in morall duties: theſe following are produced to ſet forth the cooperation or joynt working of Gods grace, and mans will in ſpirituall works.

17 *Auguſt. lib.*1. *retract. cap.*22. In noſtra poteſtate poſitum, &c. It is in our owne power to change our will, &c. ſed ea poteſtas nulla eſt niſi detur à Deo: but that is no power, unleſſe it be given of God: Præparetur voluntas à Deo, The will is prepared of God: *Bellarm. lib.*6. *cap.*11. The will then being prepared of God, obeyeth, &c.

Anſw. Auguſtine ſaith in direct termes, Poteſtas nulla eſt, &c. That mans will hath no power at all, unleſſe it be given of God: Ergo, if all the power be of God, there is no power in mans will.

18 Many other places are heaped up to the like purpoſe: *Tom.*4. *lib.*1. ad Simplician. Ut velimus ſuum eſſe voluit & noſtrum: To will he would have it both his and ours; his in calling, ours in obeying, Bellarm. ibid.

19 *Tom.*5. *lib.*5. *de civitat. cap.*10. Multa facimus, quæ ſi nollemus, non faceremus: We doe many things, which if we would not, we ſhould not doe them.

20 *Tom.*6. *lib.*2. actor. contr. Felicem: Habet unuſquiſque in voluntate: Everie man hath it in his owne will to chuſe the good, and ſo become a good tree; or the evill, and ſo be made an evill tree; Nemo niſi Deus facere arbores poteſt: None but God can make trees.

21 *Tom.*7. *lib.*2. *de remiſſ. peccat. cap.*5. Adjutor Deus, &c. God is the helper, neither can he be helped, which doth not ſomewhat of himſelfe, Bellarm. ibid.

22 *Lib. de natur. grat. cap.*32. Illo operante cooperamur: He working we work together, becauſe his mercy doth prevent us.

23 *Lib. de prædeſt. cap.*3. Vtrumque noſtrum eſt: Both are ours, to love and beleeve, becauſe of free will, and both are given by the ſpirit of faith.

24 *De grat. & liber. arbit. cap.*15. Ne autem putetur, nihil ibi facere homines per liberum, &c. Leſt it ſhould be thought, that man doth nothing by his freewill, it is ſaid, Harden not your hearts.

25 *Lib. de grat. c.*14. Arbitrium niſi adjutum, &c. No man commeth, unleſſe his will be helped, Lib. 2. cont. 2. *epiſt. Pelag. c.*8. Niſi adjuvante illo: Unleſſe he helpe, we can doe nothing.

26 *Tom.*8. *in titul. Pſal.*71. Non erat in poteſtate tua, &c. It was not in thy power to be borne of Adam, it is in thy power to beleeve in Chriſt.

27 *Tom.*9. *tract.*72. in Ioann. Credere in Chriſtum, &c. To beleeve in Chriſt is the work of Chriſt: this he worketh in us, but not without us: With Chriſt working juſtification, man worketh together.

28 Tom. 10. ſerm. 15. de verb. Apoſtol. Totum ex Deo, &c. All is of God: but we muſt not be as aſleepe to doe nothing, to will nothing: Sine voluntate tua non erit in te juſtitia Dei: Without thy will the righteouſneſſe of God ſhall not be in thee: he that made thee without thee, doth not juſtifie thee without thee, *Bellarm. lib.*6. *cap.*11.

Anſw. Firſt, in all theſe places, where we are ſaid to work together with grace, and to be helped by grace, *loc.*20.21.24. and that God doth not juſtifie us without us, 28. Auguſtine underſtandeth onely the naturall power and activity of the will, which as it willeth, ſo it is active, and worketh together with grace, and is helped and aſſiſted: but as it willeth that which is good, it is altogether paſſive, and worketh not, but is wrought upon: 1 How elſe ſhould all be of God, as he ſaith? loc. 28. and we muſt onely not be as men aſleepe: and as elſewhere he ſaith; Neq; ſic templum ſuum de vobis ædificat Deus, quaſi de lapidibus, qui non habent motum ſuum: Neither doth God ſo build his temple of you, as of ſtones, that have no motion, *Serm.*13. de tempore. Mans naturall power then of willing, muſt be added to Gods grace that maketh it to will well. 2 This is further teſtified by Auguſtine, that our activity to goodneſſe is altogether of Gods grace, and the moving of his ſpirit: Ergo agimur (inquies) non agimus: therefore you will ſay we are done to, we doe not. The anſwer followeth, Immo & agis & ageris, & tum bene agis, cùm à bono agaris: Yea thou art both done to, and thou doeſt, and then thou doeſt well, when thou art done to, and art driven of that which is good, *ſerm.*13. de tempor. The will then cannot doe well, but as it is driven: See our anſwer before, *ad loc.*14.15.

Secondly, concerning the precepts in Scripture, whereby Auguſtine inſinuateth freewill, *loc.*23. his further judgment of that matter is this: Ad hoc lex præcepit iſta, ut cum in his implendis homo deficeret, non ſe extollat ſuperbia tumidus, ſed ad gratiam confugiat fatigatus: To this end hath the law commanded theſe things, that when man ſeeth himſelfe to faile in the fulfilling thereof, he ſhould not by pride be lifted up: but being wearied in himſelfe, have recourſe to grace, cont. Celeſtin. de perfect. juſtit. reſponſ. ad ration. 11. We ſee he confeſſeth, that without grace man hath no power to performe the precepts enjoyned.

Thirdly, where Auguſtine ſaith, it is in a mans will to chuſe good or evill, *loc.*19. to *beleeve in Chriſt, loc.*25.26. he before expounded himſelfe, *loc.*19. Deus ſolum facit arbores, &c. God only maketh good trees: The will then of man hath this power, but not from it ſelfe, but from God: Poteſtas nulla eſt, &c. It is no power, unleſſe it be given of God: as before I alleaged out of Auguſtine in our anſwer *ad loc.*16. And that this is the reſolute judgement of Auguſtine, that man hath no power of will by nature to any good thing, it every where appeareth in his works: Libertas non periiſſet ſi bona permanſiſſet voluntas: ſed quia peccavit voluntas, ſequuta eſt peccantem peccatum habendi dura neceſſitas: Liberty of will had not periſhed if the will had remained good; but becauſe his will ſinned, there followed and fell upon the ſinner an hard neceſſity of ſinning, cont. Celeſtin. de perfect. juſtit. reſp. ad ration. 9. Here Auguſtine ſaith, that there is in the will by nature a neceſſity to ſin; how then can it have any inclination to good.

Againe, Vt homo in peccatum iret, &c. For a man to run into ſin his owne freewill ſufficeth, whereby he corrupted himſelfe; ut autem redeat ad juſtitiam; but to returne to righteouſneſſe, he had need of a Phyſician, becauſe he is not ſound, opus habet vivificatore, quia mortuus, he had need of a reviver, becauſe he is dead, *lib. de natur. et grat. cont. Pelag. cap.*23. If mans will then be dead by nature, it hath no life nor activity at all.

And to conclude, he teſtifieth thus, *lib. de prædeſtinat. et grat, cap.*9. Liberum quod à Deo habemus arbitrium, &c. The freewill, which we have of God, is prone to wickedneſſe. Et cum ad virtutis indolem Deo deſerente nihil poſſit, ad genus omne peccati idonea fultum virtute ſubſiſtit: and having no power, or being able to doe nothing unto vertue, it hath ſufficient ſtrength of it ſelfe to all kinde of ſin. Here is an evident teſtimony, that the will, nihil poſſit, can doe nothing of it ſelfe to attaine unto vertue.

Thus (I truſt) I have ſufficiently anſwered the objections out of Auguſtine, now I will proceed to alleage ſuch evident and cleere teſtimonies out of his works, whereby it may appeare, that he was an utter enemy to the naturall power of freewill to good.

The Proteſtants.

THe teſtimonies out of Auguſtine againſt the power or ability of freewill naturally unto good, are theſe.

1 *Epiſtol.*106. Sine gratia ad non peccandum nihil voluntatis arbitrium valere: The will without grace hath no power at all not to ſin.

Anſ. Firſt, his meaning is, that the will without grace hath no power to live altogether without ſin, not to abſtaine from ſome one ſin: for Auguſtine ſaith, Si ita eſt, nullus locus adjutorio gratiæ reſervatur: If it be ſo, there is no place left for the helpe of grace. Grace is not excluded, if ſomething be left to the will, but if all be aſcribed to it. Secondly, by not ſinning he may underſtand, the reſiſting of tentation, which the will cannot doe without grace, Bellarm. lib. 5. cap. 11. *reſponſ. ad argum.*2.

Contra. Firſt, if ad non peccandum, not to ſin, were ad vivendum ſine peccato, all one, as to live without ſin, Auguſtine had ſaid juſt nothing: for even with grace the will of man hath no power to live altogether without ſin: He ſpeaketh then of that which is poſſible in this life, to abſtaine from ſome ſin, not of that which is impoſſible to live without any ſin.

Secondly, the conſequent is good, that grace muſt be either wholly admitted, or wholly refuſed: Rom.11.6. S. Paul ſo reaſoneth, If of grace, it is no more of work: for grace were no grace, &c. the grace then of God and the work of mans will cannot ſtand together. Ambroſe likewiſe ſaith, epiſt. 84. Gratia Dei tota repellitur, niſi tota recipitur: Grace is wholly refuſed, if it be not wholly received.

Thirdly, it is well you confeſſe, that a mans will without grace cannot reſiſt temptation: for thus you confeſſe the cauſe, that ſin cannot be avoided without grace: for there is no ſin, which commeth not by temptation. Every man is tempted, when he is drawne by his owne concupiſcence: therefore if the will cannot reſiſt temptation without grace, it cannot reſiſt ſin, and conſequently not doe any good without grace.

Iam. 1.14.

2 Enchirid. cap. 30. Qui boni operari poteſt perditus, niſi in quantum à perditione liberatus? What good can a man of perdition doe, but as he is freed from perdition? Now every one by nature is the childe of wrath and perdition: therefore by nature no good can be done.

Anſw. Auguſtine ſpeaketh of ſuch good works as tend to ſalvation, which indeed cannot be done without grace, ibid. reſp. ad 3. loc.

Contra. Firſt, the Scripture counteth no works good, but corrupt and evill, which are not reaped of the ſpirit to life everlaſting: Galath. 6. 8. He that ſoweth to the fleſh, ſhall of the fleſh reape corruption, and nothing elſe: He that ſoweth to the ſpirit, ſhall of the ſpirit reape life everlaſting. Secondly, Auguſtine ſaith directly: Scito nos illum bonum hominem dicere, illam voluntatem bonam, illud opus bonum, —per quod ſolum homo poteſt ad æternum Dei regnum perduci: Know this, that I call him a good man, and that a good will, and that a good work, by the which onely a man may be brought to Gods everlaſting kingdome, lib. 4. cont. Iulian. c. 3. Ergo, in Auguſtines judgement thoſe are not to be counted good works at all, which tend not to ſalvation. Thirdly, Auguſtine affirmeth, Etiam ipſa bona opera, quæ faciunt Infideles non ipſorum eſſe, ſed illius qui bene utitur malis: Even the good works of Infidels, are not theirs, but his, who uſeth evill things well, cont. Iulian. lib. 4. cap. 3. Even theſe works, though they be not perfectly good, are of the divine gift rather, than of mans will.

Galath. 6.8.

Loc. 3. Auguſt. lib. 2. de remiſſ. peccat. cap. 18. Si voluntas aut bona eſt aut mala, & utiq; malam non habemus ex Deo, reſtat ut bonam voluntatem habeamus ex Deo: If the will be either good, or evill, and we have not an evill will from God; it remaineth, that we have a good will from God.

Anſw. By a good will here is underſtood the power of the will, and not the act: for a will that is not good may bring forth ſome good act, as the good will of a righteous man may bring forth ſin, Bellar. ibid. reſp. ad arg. 4.

Contra. Firſt, that a good act can proceed from a will that is not good, is contrary to the Scripture: A corrupt tree cannot bring forth good fruit. Secondly, if a righteous man bring forth an evill work, it commeth not from his regenerate will, but from his ſinfull and corrupt will. It is not I, but the ſin that dwelleth in me. Thirdly, whereas he ſaith, the good act of the evill will, is ex bono naturæ, of the naturall goodneſſe: he ſpeaketh contraries: for how can there be any good thing in an evill will or minde? As Auguſtine ſaith, Laborant homines invenire in ipſa voluntate, quod boni ſit noſtrum, &c. Men doe labour to finde ſomewhat in the will that is good, which is not of God; which how it can be found, or ſhewed, I am utterly ignorant: de peccator. merit. & remiſſ. contr. Pelag. cap. 18.

Matth. 7.18.

Rom. 7.20.

Loc. 4. 5. Auguſtine lib. 1. cont. 2. epiſt. Pelag. cap. ultim. affirmeth, Bonum uſum liberi arbitrii eſſe ex Deo: That the good uſe of the freewill is of God. Lib. 3. cont. 2. epiſt. Pelag. cap. 8. Liberum arbitrium captivatum non niſi ad peccatum valet: Freewill being captivated by ſin, cannot doe any thing but ſin.

Anſw. He is ſaid to uſe freewill well, not that doth one or two good morall works, but that liveth well, and this is of grace; as he is not ſaid to write well, that can make two or three letters well: ſo the freewill by nature is ſaid to have no power but to ſin, becauſe for the moſt part it ſinneth, Bellarm. ibid. reſp. ad loc. 5. 6.

Contra. Firſt, yet he that can make two or three letters well, can write ſomewhat well; but the will of it ſelfe can do nothing well: as our Saviour ſaith, Without me you can doe nothing. And Aug. before, loc. 1. Nihil valet: The will can doe nothing at all. And lib. de prædeſt. & grat. c. 9. Ad virtutis indolem Deo deſerente nihil poteſt: If God doe leave, that is, not aſſiſt the will, it can doe nothing to the attaining of vertue. And againe, Nulla poteſtas niſi ex Deo data: There is no power at all, but given of God, lib. 1. retract. cap. 22. If there be no power in the will, then at no time, neither to doe any good thing: wherefore Bellarmine doth very fondly wreſt Auguſtines words againſt his owne ſenſe.

Ioh. 15.5.

Loc. 6. Enchirid. c. 30. Libero arbitrio malè utens homo, & ſe perdidit & ipſum, &c. Man uſing freewill evill, loſt himſelfe, and it. Victore peccato, amiſſum eſt liberum arbitrium: Sin being conqueror, freewill was loſt.

Anſ. He meaneth not, that freewill is utterly extinct, as man himſelfe is not but only made worſe; as things are not periſhed, but loſt, that are taken by the enemy in battell: ſo the liberty of grace onely is loſt, not the liberty of nature, Bellarm. c. 30. lib. 5. reſponſ. ad loc. 1.

Contra. 1. Neither doe we ſay, that freewill or the nature of man is wholly extinct, but there remaineth a freeneſſe in the will ſtill, a freedome from coaction or conſtraint, which is the liberty of nature, but there is no freedome to good without Gods aſſiſtance, which is the liberty of grace: ſo Auguſtine ſaith; Natura tota fuit per liberum arbitrium in ipſa radice vitiata: The whole nature of man was corrupted in the root by freewill, tract. 87. in Ioan. If the whole be corrupted, then no part thereof remaineth uncorrupt. 2 This the ſimilitude of captivity ſheweth: for like as he that is a priſoner, or taken captive, walketh not whither he would,but is led whither he would not; as Chriſt ſaith to Peter: ſo the will of man being captived to ſin,becommeth wholly the ſervant thereof. Know ye not, that to whomſoever you give yourſelves as ſervants to obey,his ſervants ye are, to whom ye obey? Ioh.21 18. Rom 6.16.

Loc.7. Epiſt. 144. Sine gratia Dei non poteſt libera eſſe voluntas,&c. Without grace the will cannot be free,being ſubject to the concupiſcence overcomming it.

Loc.8. de ſpirit.& liter. c. 30. Per gratiam ſanatio animæ à vitio peccati, per animæ ſanitatem libertas arbitrii, per arbitrii libertatem dilectio juſtitia: By grace, the healing of the ſoule commeth from the corruption of ſin; by the health of the ſoule,the liberty of the will; by the liberty of the will,the love of righteouſneſſe.

*Loc.9. Lib. de corrept.& grat. c.*13. Peccant per liberum arbitrium,non liberatum: They ſin by freewill,but not yet freed,that is,by grace: Ergò,there is no liberty or freedome of the will to good,without grace.

Anſw. Bellarmine anſwereth to all theſe places; that Auguſtine ſpeaketh of the liberty of grace,not of the liberty of nature: for although the will be the ſervant of ſin without grace,yet it is free à naturali neceſſitate,from naturall neceſſity: as the eye, though it cannot exerciſe the ſight without light; yet ſimply it can ſee of it ſelfe,ibid. reſponſ.ad 4.5.7.loc.

Contra. He hath granted as much as we deſire: for like as there is in the eye a poſſibility of ſeeing; but yet without the light it cannot diſcerne this or that: ſo we ſay that it is in mans power by nature to will without conſtraint; but it cannot will any thing that is good, without the illumination of grace: as Bernard ſaith, Ex ipſo nobis eſt velle,ex ipſa bonum velle: Of the will it is that we doe will; of grace, that we will that is good. A liberty then of the will ſimply and abſolutely we grant by nature; but to will that which is good, proceedeth from the liberty of grace: All this ſeemeth by Bellarmine to be acknowledged,which we willingly condeſcend unto.

*Loc.*10. *Lib.*1.*retract.c.*15. Qui cogenti cupiditati bona voluntate reſiſtere non poteſt.jam hoc ita peccatum eſt,ut ſit etiam pœna peccati: He that cannot reſiſt his forcing concupiſcence by a good will,it is ſo ſin in him,that it is alſo the puniſhment of ſin.

*Loc.*11.Lib.de corrept.& grat. c. 12. Si relinqueretur ipſis ſua voluntas, ut in adjutorio Dei manerent ſi vellent,&c. If they ſhould be left to their own will,to continue in Gods help,if they would,through ſo many and great temptations, their will through infirmity would give place: Et ideo perſeverare non poſſent, quia deficientes infirmitate nec vellent: And therefore they cannot perſevere or continue, becauſe failing by infirmity,they will not.

Loc. 12. Ex libro de perfect.juſtit.reſponſ. 9. Quia peccavit voluntas, ſequuta eſt peccantem peccatum habendi dura neceſſitas: Becauſe the will ſinned, there followed upon the party ſinning, a neceſſity of having ſin,&c. Here it is confeſſed by Auguſtine,that by nature the will cannot otherwiſe doe but ſin, and therefore hath no power of it ſelfe to doe any thing that is good.

Anſw. The ſumme of Bellarmines anſwer to all theſe places is this; that this neceſſity or impotencie of the will, is conditionall, not abſolute, quia poteſt auxilium Dei implorare, becauſe man may ſue for Gods help; which if he doe not, it is his owne fault: ſo then there is no ſuch neceſſity affirmed by Auguſtine,in any of theſe places,that taketh away the liberty of the will,Bellarm.ibid. reſp.ad 3. 6. 8.teſtim.

Contra. 1. Thus Bellarmine fighteth with himſelfe,affirming,that without the invocation of Gods helpe, the will hath no power to reſiſt the concupiſcence, and conſequently not to doe any thing that is good: if it be then of grace, how can it be of nature? 2 We affirme that this neceſſity of nature is not ſo abſolute, but by the condition of Gods grace and aſſiſtance it may be looſed: but it is not in every mans power by nature, to receive this condition, and to ſue unto God for his helpe. 1 The Apoſtle ſaith, We know not what to pray as we ought, but the ſpirit helpeth our infirmities: it is then of the ſpirit, that we have a minde to pray, not by nature. 2 Auguſtine ſaith, Quantum eſt quod valet voluntas ſub dominante cupiditate, niſi fortè ſi pia eſt, ut oret auxilium? What is it, that the will can doe being ſubject unto luſt, unleſſe it being godly, doe pray for helpe? lib. 1.*retract.c.*15. It muſt firſt then be godly, before it can ſue for grace; but godlineſſe is not by nature: and againe, Sine Deo bonum opus—nec incipere,nec perficere poſſit: Without God,it can neither begin, nor finiſh a good work: *Hypognoſtic.lib.*3. Ergo,without grace a man cannot pray. Rom.8.26.

3 This neceſſity of nature,which cannot but ſin,taketh not away the liberty of the will: as Bernard ſaith, Nemo nec malus nec bonus eſt, niſi volens: No man is either good or evill againſt his will: ſo he that doth that which is good willingly, is made willing by grace; and he that doth evill, is thereto made willing by the corruption of his owne nature.

*Loc.*13. *Lib.*2. *de peccat. remiſſ. c.*18. Laborant homines invenire in noſtra voluntate,quid boni ſit noſtrum, quod non ſit ex Deo: Men doe labour to finde ſome good thing in the will, which is ours, and not of God, which I am utterly ignorant, how it can be found.

Anſw. Auguſtines meaning is, that freewill of it ſelfe doth not worke together with God,but by the gift of preventing grace,*Bellarm.lib.6.cap.*14.*reſp.ad argum.*1.

Contra. 1. If it be by the gift and working of grace, that the will worketh with grace, it is that which we affirme, that the will worketh not unto good, but by the efficacie of grace. 2 If he ſay, that grace doth but give the hint, as it were, and the beginning, and the will followeth them of it owne accord, then is there ſome good to be found in the will, which is not of grace, which Auguſtine here denieth. Thus then we inforce this teſtimonie: If will worke any thing of it ſelfe without grace, then Auguſtine is deceived, which he denieth; if it doe not, that is confeſſed, which we conclude.

Loc.14.Lib.de grat.Chriſt.c.14. Arbitrium ſic adjuvatur,ut non ſolum quid faciendum ſciat,ſed quod ſcieret,etiam faciat,&c. The will is ſo helped,that it only doth not know,what is to be done,but doth alſo that which it knoweth: and when God teacheth, he ſo teacheth by the grace of his Spirit, that what any man learneth,he doth not onely ſee it by knowing,but doth deſire it by willing, and perfect it by doing.

Anſw. This place maketh for us,for if the will be helped in knowing and doing, then conſequently there is a freewill in theſe things,which is helped,Bellarm.ibid.reſponſ.ad argum.2.

Contra. 1. Mans will worketh together with grace, in reſpect of the naturall activity and power thereof to will, and ſo in this ſenſe it may be ſaid to be helped onely; but as it willeth that which is good,it is not in part helped,but wholly directed. 2 Yet it is no unuſuall phraſe to ſay,one is helped, when he can doe nothing of himſelfe: as,Lord I beleeve,helpe my unbeleefe: will he therefore inferre Mark.9.24. that a man is but helped in part to faith? and that part is of himſelfe contrary to the Scriptures which ſaith,that faith is Gods work,that is,only and wholly his. 3 As the will is helped to know,ſo it is hel- Ioh.6.29. ped to doe, but God onely doth illuminate the ſoule, it cannot lighten it ſelfe; for Chriſt is the light Ioh.1.9. *that lighteth every man. Ergo,*he only helpeth the will to work. 4 The ſimilitude of the teacher ſheweth the ſame; for how doth he that is taught help toward his teaching, but only in the uſe of his naturall wit; but the forme and qualifying of the wit and the inſtruction is only of the teacher: ſo when God teacheth, the naturall willing is in man by gift of his creation; but the ſpirituall inſtruction, direction,inclination to grace,is only of God.

Loc.15.De bon.perſeveran.c.13.Hoc nobis expedit credere,dicere,&c. ut totum detur Deo: It behoveth us to beleeve,and ſay; that the whole may be given to God.

Anſw. Nos damus totum Deo, &c. We doe aſcribe all unto God, neither doe we part works with him,neither doe we attribute any thing to our ſelves,which is not of God, Bellarm.c.14.reſponſ.ad 3. teſtim.

Contra. 1. If you in truth aſcribe the whole work of the will to the grace of God,there is no queſtion betweene us: for this is that, which we urge according to the Scripture, that God worketh in us Philip.2.13. both the will and deed of his good pleaſure. 2 But if you uſe this evaſion; that all is of God and of grace, becauſe he firſt gave us freewill, and ſo by grace underſtand a gift of creation; this is but an old ſhift of the Pelagians, who alſo did affirme freewill to be of grace, quia nos tales condiderit Deus, becauſe God made us ſuch,&c. *Hieron.ad Cteſiphont.*But we underſtand by grace,not the ſtanding gifts of the creation; but the continuall influence of the ſpirit in our regeneration.

Loc.16.De corrept.& grat.c.14.Volenti ſalvum facere nullum hominum reſiſtit arbitrium: Mans will cannot reſiſt God being willing to ſave us: Ergo, mans will is not free, as he will himſelfe, to good or evill.

Anſw. Effectuall grace doth no more induce a neceſſity, or take away the liberty of the will, than preſcience: and whereas it is ſaid that effectuall grace cannot be reſiſted: it is not to be underſtood abſolutely, but by way of an hypotheſis, or ſuppoſition, that it is impoſſible that a man ſhould not follow or obey God calling in that manner,&c. reſp.ad argum.4.

Contra. 1. Neither doe we affirme,that effectuall grace doth prejudice freewill: for as Auguſtine ſaith, Deus ex nolentibus volentes facit, God of nilling maketh us willing, and ſo willing, that when God draweth, we cannot chuſe but obey. 2 Neither doe we make an abſolute neceſſity, as though mans will of it ſelfe could not reſiſt Gods calling,being of it ſelfe mutable and flexible,but Gods grace preſuppoſed, whereby it is made firme and ſtable.

Loc.17.De grat.& liber.arbitr.c.17.Ut velimus,ſine nobis operatur; cum autem ſic volumus ut operemur,nobiſcum cooperatur: That we will he worketh without us; but when we ſo will, that we work, he worketh with us.

Loc.18.Totum Deo dandum eſt,qui hominis voluntatem bonam & praeparat adjuvandum, & adjuvat praeparatam: All is to be given to God, which doth prepare mans good will to be helped, and doth helpe it being prepared.

Anſw. God one way worketh the will without us, that is, by perſwaſion: but we alſo work by conſenting: and therefore here he ſaith, we doe cooperari, we doe work together with God in the outward act,Bellar.ad loc.5.

Contra. Firſt, God doth not onely perſwade, but cauſeth the will alſo to conſent: for otherwiſe God ſhould doe more, than man doth who may miniſter counſell and perſwaſion, but cannot work the heart: ſo the Scripture ſaith, that God draweth us: but to draw is more than to perſwade. Ioh.6.44. And Auguſtine ſaid before, that mans will cannot reſiſt Gods calling: therefore it is not in mans will to conſent or not to conſent. Secondly, we grant, that mans will worketh with God, ut naturale inſtrumentum ab alio motum, as a naturall inſtrument moved or ſtirred by another, which are Bellarmines owne words: then like as the inſtrument in the workmans hand hath no cunning in it ſelfe to faſhion or frame the work, but is directed by the workman; ſo the will is but as a naturall inſtrument working naturally to will: but to will that which is good, it is directed by grace, as the workmaſter unto it.

Thus notwithſtanding theſe cavillous and ſophiſticall anſwers, I truſt it is evident to any indifferent eye, not obſcured with wilfull darkneſſe, that Auguſtine is a reſolute Patron of Gods grace againſt mans free will, as it is now by nature ſubject and ſubdued unto ſin.

Beſide theſe places alleaged, many other alſo may bee produced out of Auguſtine: as theſe that follow.

*Loc.*19. *De corrept. & grat. c.*8. Voluntas humana non libertate conſequitur gratiam, ſed gratia libertatem: Mans will doth not by it freeneſſe obtaine grace, but by grace freedome.

20 *Ibid. c.*11. Liberum arbitrium ad malum ſufficit, ad bonum parum eſt, niſi adjuvetur, &c. Free will is ſufficient to evill: but little or of ſmall force to doe good, unleſſe it be helped.

21 *Artic.*3. contr. Pelag. Non eſt idoneum, quæ ad Deum pertinent, ſine Deo, &c. It is not fit without God to begin any thing that appertaineth to God.

22 Ibid. Homo eſt tanquam ovis perdita, errat libero arbitrio in operibus Diaboli, &c. Man is as a ſheepe going aſtray by free will in the works of the Devill, whom Chriſt taketh upon his ſhoulders, &c. Like as a ſtray ſheepe cannot returne, unleſſe he be carried: ſo free will is drawne unto that which is good by grace; it hath no power of it ſelfe thereunto.

23 *In Pſal.*26. Dic illi, voluntatem liberam mihi dediſti, ſed ſine te nihil eſt mihi conatus meus: Say unto God, thou haſt given me free will: but without thee mine endevour is nothing.

24 In Pſal. 134. Tu in teipſo non facis, quod vis, — ſed ipſe tibi dat gratiam, ut facias in teipſo, quod vis: Thou canſt not doe in thy ſelfe what thou wouldeſt, but he giveth thee grace to doe in thy ſelfe as thou wouldeſt.

25 Epiſt. 89. ex Sapient. 8. 21. Scivi quod nemo eſt continens, niſi Deus det; I know that none can have continencie, unleſſe God give it. Hence he inferreth that it is not of free will, but by the gift of God: Deus jubet continentiam, & dat continentiam: God biddeth continencie, and giveth continencie.

26 *De civitat. Dei, lib.*13. *cap.*15. Ad malum hominis prior eſt voluntas, ad bonum prior eſt voluntas Creatoris, ſive ut eam faceret, quæ nulla erat, ſive ut lapſam reficiat, quæ perierat: To evill mans will is firſt, to good the Creators will is firſt, either to make the will, which was not; or to reſtore it, which was loſt.

27 De civitat. lib. 14. *cap.*11. Arbitrium voluntatis — proprio vitio amiſſum, niſi à quo dari potuit, reddi non poteſt: The judgement of the will cannot be reſtored, but by him that firſt gave it, &c. Like as then we wrought not with God in the firſt creation of the will, ſo neither in the reparation thereof, but all is of God.

28 De peccator. merit. & remiſſ. cont. Pelag. 2. 5. Vt oculus corporis — ut videat, adjuvatur à luce, neque hoc omnino niſi illa adjuverit, poteſt, &c. As the eye that it may ſee is helped of the light, neither can it ſee any thing at all, unleſſe it be ſo helped: ſo God which is the light of the inward man, doth help the ſight of the minde, that not according to ours, but his righteouſneſſe, boni aliquid operemur, we may worke ſome good thing, &c. Thus then as the eye without the light ſeeth nothing at all: ſo the will without grace willeth no good thing at all.

29 De peccator. merit. & remiſſ. cont. Pelag. 2. *cap.*18. Si libera voluntas à Deo eſt, — bona ex nobis, melius eſt id, quod ex nobis, quam quod à Deo, &c. If free will be of God, a good will of our ſelves, then that is better which is of us, than that which is of God: which if it be moſt abſurd, oportet fateamur & bonam voluntatem nos à Deo adipiſci: we muſt confeſſe that we have our good will from God.

30 *Lib.*8. *de Geneſ. cap.*10. The queſtion being propounded, why Adam is ſaid to labour in Paradiſe, Auguſtine maketh this anſwer: That God which created him to bee a man: Ipſe etiam operatur & cuſtodit hominem, ut bonus ſit: He doth worke and keepe man to be good.

31 *Soliloqu. tom.*8. *c.*15. Credebam me aliquid fore ex me, exiſtimabam me ſufficere per me, nec percipiebam, quoniam tu regebas me, &c. I beleeved that I was ſomewhat of my ſelfe, I thought I ſufficed by my ſelfe, neither did I perceive that thou diddeſt governe me: Si quid boni eſt, magni vel parvi, donum tuum eſt, noſtrum non eſt niſi malum; — ſi quid boni unquam habui, à te recepi; ſiquando ſteti, per te ſteti, ſiquando cecidi, per me cecidi: If there bee any good in mee, great or little, it is thy gift, ours is nothing but evill: if ever I had any good thing, I received it of thee; if I ſtand, I ſtand by thee; if I fall, I fall by me, &c. He proceedeth, Tentator defuit, & ut deeſſet tu feciſti, &c. The temptor was wanting, and that it ſhould ſo bee, thou waſt the cauſe: place and time were wanting, thou alſo diddeſt cauſe it: Affuit tentator, non defuit locus, &c. There was a temptor, and there wanted neither place nor time, ſed ut non conſentirem, tu me tenuiſti, that I ſhould not conſent, the cauſe was in thee, &c. *Ibid. cap.*16. Thus Auguſtine leaveth no power at all to the will of man without grace, no not where temptation is wanting.

32 *Soliloqu. c.*25. Non eſt hominis velle, quod poſſit; aut poſſe quod velit, vel ſcire quid poſſit & velit; ſed potius à te greſſus hominis diriguntur: It is not in mans power to will that he can, or to can that he will, or to know what he can or will, but mans wayes are directed by thee.

33 *In Matth. ſerm.*7. Totum reputa, quod juſtus es pietati, quod autem peccator es, tuæ iniquitati aſcribe: omne enim crimen, facinus, vel peccatum noſtra eſt negligentia; omnis virtus, ſanctitas, Dei indulgentia: Aſcribe the whole that thou art juſt, to pietie; that thou art a ſinner, to iniquitie: everie crime and ſinne is of our negligence; every vertue, of the divine indulgence, &c. Here all is aſcribed to grace.

34 Tom. 10. de verb. Apoſtol. ſerm. 6. Ideò mens humana ne tibi tribuas, ne multum ſuperbias, immò, ne omnino ſuperbias, &c. Wherefore O thou mind of man, attribute nothing to thy ſelfe, be not over proud, nay be not proud at all: for that thou doſt not conſent to the deſires of the fleſh, the law of the ſpirit of life in Jeſus Chriſt doth free thee.

35 In Pſal. 91. Vt cum lapidem calori ſubtraxeris, frigeſcet, &c. ſic tu, ſi à Deo receſſeris frigeſces: As when thou takeſt a ſtone from the heate of the fire or Sun, it waxeth cold: ſo thou, if thou departeſt from God, &c. the will then of man hath no more goodneſſe of it ſelfe without God, than a ſtone hath heate.

36 De patient. c. 22. Homo non poteſt eligere aut diligere, niſi prius electus dilectuſque curetur, qui cæcitate eligenda non cernit, & languore diligenda faſtidit: Man cannot elect, or affect, unleſſe hee be elected, and affected of God, and ſo healed: who by his blindnes ſeeth not things to bee elected, and by his weaknes doth lothe things to be deſired and affected.

37 Noſtrum eſt velle, ſed voluntas ipſa movetur, ut ſurgat, ſanatur, ut valeat, dilatatur, ut capiat, & impletur, ut habeat: To will is ours, but the will is ſtirred, that it may riſe; it is healed, that it may have ſtrength; it is enlarged, to receive; and filled, that it may retaine or have, &c. Thus the will can doe nothing of it ſelfe.

De bon. viduitat. c. 17. tom. 4.

38 Epiſt. 107. Neque fideles fiunt ſine libero arbitrio, & tamen illius gratia fideles fiunt, qui illorum à poteſtate tenebrarum liberavit arbitrium: They are not made beleevers without free-will, and yet by his grace they are become beleevers, which hath delivered their free-will from the power of darknes, &c. God only then delivereth our will from the power of darknes and captivity of ſin.

39 De natur. & grat. cap. 67. Cum de libera rectè faciendi voluntate loquimur, de illa ſcilicet, in qua homo factus eſt loquimur: and a little before, ſunt omni animæ peccanti duo iſta pœnalia, ignorantia, difficultas, &c. When we ſpeake of mans free-will, we ſpeake of that, wherein he was made: but now theſe two penall things are laid upon every ſoule that ſinneth, ignorance and difficultie: ignorance bringeth error, difficultie ſorrow, &c.

40 De bon. perſeverant. 2. 13. Cogitantes credimus, cogitantes loquimur, &c. We thinking beleeve, we thinke, when we ſpeake, and when we doe any other thing: ſed tamen quod attinet ad pietatis viam, —non ſumus idonei cogitare aliquid ex nobis, &c. But as touching the way of godlines, wee are not fit to thinke any thing of our ſelves but our ſufficiencie is of God, &c. Wee are not able to thinke any thing, how much leſſe to will that is good?

Many ſuch like places beſide might be alleaged out of Auguſtine: but theſe (I truſt) may ſuffice to cleare this point, that this learned father aſcribed no power at all to mans wil unto that which is good, by nature, but referred all to grace. In other controverſies the like might be ſhewed: but that it were neither convenient at large on both ſides to diſcuſſe the ſentences of the fathers, whereby this volume might grow to bee too large; nor yet ſo profitable in this worke, which is intended chiefly for their uſe that are not profeſſed in theſe ſtudies; nor yet ſo agreable to my purpoſe and ſcope in this treatiſe, which have chiefly propounded to my ſelfe to decide theſe controverſies by Scriptures.

The fourth part of this controverſie, concerning Iuſtification.

THe ſeverall queſtions that are handled are theſe: firſt of faith: ſecondly, of juſtification it ſelfe.

The firſt queſtion, of Faith.

THe parts of this queſtion: firſt, what faith is. Secondly, of the divers kinds of faith. Thirdly, whether faith may be ſeparated from charity. Fourthly, of the validity of faith. Firſt, after what manner faith juſtifieth. Secondly, whether faith only juſtifie.

The firſt part, of the nature and definition of Faith.

WE define juſtifying faith, to be an undoubted confidence, joyned with a certaine knowledge, whereby wee both underſtand, and are perſwaded, every man in, and for himſelfe, that the promiſes of God made unto us in Chriſt, are verily ours, and we made partakes of them in him.

The Jeſuite taketh exception againſt three points of this definition: firſt, hee denieth faith to bee a confident or ſure perſwaſion. Secondly, that it is not neceſſarily joyned with knowledge. Thirdly, hee affirmeth, that the promiſes of God in Chriſt, are not the proper object of faith: Of theſe then in their order.

The firſt point, whether Faith, whereby wee are juſtified, be a ſure confidence of the heart.

The Papiſts.

48. Error. B*Ellarmine* holdeth, that faith hath the proper ſeate and place only in the underſtanding, not in the heart or affections; and therefore denieth, that it is any ſuch aſſurance or confidence: lib. 1. de juſtificat. cap. 6. The Councell of Trent likewiſe determineth, that juſtifying faith, is no confidence of the heart: ſeſſ. 6. can. 13. The Rhemiſts affirme it to bee an act only of underſtanding: Annot. 2. Cor. 13. ſect. 1.

Epheſ. 3. 12. Argum. 1. Confidence is the effect of faith, and faith the cauſe thereof: We have entrance with confidence by faith in him, faith worketh confidence: Ergo, it is no confidence, Bellarm. ibid.

1 Iohn 4. 8. Rom. 5. 5. Anſw. 1. Saint Iohn ſaith, God is love, yet it is no good conſequent, that God therefore worketh not love in us: for Saint Paul ſaith, That the love of God is ſhed abroad in our hearts by the holy Ghoſt. God is love one way, that is, eſſentially, and originally; and hee worketh love another way in us, or rather another kind of love, which is an image, and effect of his love: So faith worketh confidence, and it ſelfe nevertheleſſe, is a kind of confidence. 2 As the effect is, ſo is the cauſe: can the waters be ſweet, if the fountaine bee bitter? It is the propertie of fire to give heate, therefore it muſt it ſelfe alſo bee hot: ſo faith worketh confidence; therefore it muſt needs bee much more confident it ſelfe. 3 We ſay not, that fides, and fiducia, faith and fiduce, or confidence, are all one: for this confidence is a common quality both to faith and hope: but this wee ſay, that faith is alwayes joyned with confidence. Now betweene this confidence, that accompanieth faith, and that confidence, which is wrought by faith, we make this difference: faith hath a generall confidence and aſſurance of all the promiſes of God, and it is the fountaine and ſtorehouſe from whence iſſueth out all our aſſurance and confidence in particular: Iam. 1. 6. As faith maketh us to pray confidently, Aske in faith, and waver not: Epheſ. 3. 12. which is the ſame which the Apoſtle ſaith here, We have entrance with confidence. Rom. 5. 3. Faith alſo worketh confidence, and rejoycing in tribulation. This confidence and aſſurance in theſe Chriſtian exerciſes, is nothing elſe but the particular uſe and application of that generall confidence in the promiſes of God, which wee ſay is neceſſarily required in faith.

1 Cor. 13. 13. 2 Cor. 10. 5. Argum. 2. Firſt, faith and hope are two divers things. Now abideth faith, hope & love, theſe three: but hope is nothing elſe but confidence: Ergo, faith is not. Secondly, againe: Bringing into captivity every thought to the obedience of Chriſt, ſaith the Apoſtle: faith then doth captivate the underſtanding, and ſubdueth it to Chriſt: Ergo, not the will: Bellarm. lib. 1. de juſtificat. cap. 6.

Anſw. Firſt, fiduce or confidence is a common quality both to faith and hope, and as the genus to them both: therefore it is abſurdly reaſoned, hope hath confidence: Ergo, faith not: as if hee ſhould have argued thus: A beaſt hath ſenſe: Ergo, man hath not. Who would not hiſſe ſuch a diſputer out of the ſchooles?

Secondly, 1 It followeth not, faith doth captivate the underſtanding: Ergo, not the will: it doth not captivate the thoughts only, but every high thing that is exalted againſt the knowledge of God; and ſo alſo the rebellious will of man. 2 Obedience is properly in the will, and not in the underſtanding, therefore it working obedience to Chriſt, worketh alſo upon the will and affections of man: and ſo Act. 15. 9. the Scripture ſpeaketh directly, that the heart, which is the ſeate of the affections, is purified by faith.

The Proteſtants.

Heb. 11. 6. W*E* affirme not, that faith only is an aſſurance of the heart, but that the light of underſtanding, and knowledge of the mind, is requiſite thereunto. As faith is deſcribed, Hee that commeth unto God, muſt beleeve that God is: Here is the certaine knowledge, that God is, and that hee is holy, juſt and true: And that hee is a rewarder of thoſe that ſeeke him: Here is the aſſured perſwaſion and confidence of the heart. That faith then is inſeparably joyned with this aſſured confidence, it is thus warranted by the word of God.

Argum. 1. Abraham was not weake in faith, &c. neither did hee doubt of the promiſe of God through unbeleefe, but was ſtrengthened in faith, being fully aſſured, &c. Here firſt the Apoſtle ſaith, hee doubted not through unbeleefe: As unbeleefe then is joyned with doubting, ſo faith hath confidence: and this it is to be ſtrong, and not weake in faith. Secondly, being fully aſſured: therefore the aſſured perſwaſion of the heart doth perpetually accompany faith.

Rom. 4. 19. 20. Anſw. The text is rather thus to be read, after the Latine tranſlation, pleniſſimè ſciens, moſt fully knowing, not fully perſwaded. And by this the Jeſuite would proove, that faith conſiſteth rather in knowledge, than perſwaſion, Bellarm. cap. 6. loc. 1.

Contra. The word in the originall is, πληροφορηθεὶς, which muſt be tranſlated perſuaſus, or perſuaſum habens, being perſwaded, or aſſured, not pleniſſimè ſciens, fully knowing. Firſt, it being a participle of the paſſive, cannot properly be tranſlated by an active. Secondly, there is not a letter or ſillable in this word included, whereby knowledge is ſignified or expreſſed in the Greeke tongue. Thirdly, the vulgar tranſlator doth reade otherwiſe in other places, tranſlating this word πληροφορεῖν, and the derivatives thereof by theſe Latine words, implere, complere, to fill, or fulfill: as Luke 1. 1. 2 Tim. 4. 5. In Luke 1. 1. which places, though the tranſlator expreſſe not the full meaning of the word, as we will now prove, 1 Tim. 4. 5. yet he varieth from his reading in this place: which ſheweth the imperfection of the tranſlation agreeing not with it ſelfe. Fourtly, this tranſlation, pleniſſime ſciens, fully knowing, which ſeemeth to define faith by the fulneſſe of knowledge, impugneth the Jeſuites opinion, who denieth, as well that fides, is notitia, faith is a knowledge, as that it is fiducia, fiduce or aſſurance: therefore he ſhould not gaine much by this reading Fifthly, that this word πληροφορεῖν, ſignifieth, as we reade, to perſwade, plenam fidem facere, to make a thing certaine or aſſured, it may appeare by comparing other places of Scripture, where this word is uſed: as Luke 1. 1. the Evangeliſt ſaith, He hath taken in hand to write the ſtorie of thoſe things, whereof we are fully perſwaded: the word is πεπληροφορημένων: the vulgar tranſlateth, of things, quæ in nobis completa ſunt, which are fulfilled in us; very ignorantly, not diſtinguiſhing betweene the Greeke words, πληροφορεῖν, and πληροῦν, the firſt ſignifieth, to certifie or perſwade; the ſecond, to fill: And πεπληροφορημένα πράγματα, are ſuch things which are ſo evidently proved, that there remaineth no more doubting: as Maſter Beza ſheweth out of Ulpianus. So the world πληροφορία, is truly tranſlated, aſſurance, 1 Theſ. 1. 5. Our Goſpell was not in word only unto you, but in power and much 1 Theſſ. 1. 5. aſſurance, certa perſuaſione, not plenitudine multa, much fulneſſe: but the Scripture uſeth another word to expreſſe fulneſſe, and that is πλήρωμα. Epheſ. 1. 23. 3. 19. not πληροφορία. Sixthly, Eſpenc. a learned Epheſ. 1. 23. Papiſt alſo approveth this interpretation of the word, and to that purpoſe hee alleageth theſe places: & 3. 19. Rom. 4. 14. Coloſſ. 2. 2. Heb. 6. 10. in the which places πληροφορία, is taken for a certaine faith and per- Rom. 4. 14. ſwaſion: πληροφορηθεὶς, being perſwaded, &c. in 2 Tim pag. 149. liter. d. Seventhly, this is proved by the Coloſſ. 2. 2. Etymologie or denomination of the word: for πληροφορῶ, is as if we ſhould ſay, πλήρη πίστιν φέρω, plenam Heb. 6. 10. fidem affero, I bring or give certaintie or aſſurance to a thing. Eightly, that it is ſo to be taken in this place, for a full aſſurance, the words before going declare: He doubted not of the promiſe: what is that elſe, but to be aſſured?

Argum. 2. S. Paul ſaith, I am perſwaded, that neither death, nor life, &c. ſhall ſeparate us from the Rom. 8. 38. love of God, &c. the word is πέπεισμαι, from whence the word πίστις, faith, is known to be derived. The vulgar text hath certus ſum, I am certaine, which is as much as confido, I truſt, that neither death nor life: Ergo, faith hath a fiduce, confidence, or certaine perſwaſion.

Bellarmine here diſtinguiſheth, that there are two kinds of fiduce or confidence, one in the underſtanding, the other in the will, the firſt faith hath, the ſecond hope: Bellar. c. 6.

Contra. Firſt, Bellarmine forgetteth his owne argument uſed before: hope hath confidence: Ergo, not faith: for if there be two kinds of confidence, as he ſaith, he hath made a ſimple argument. Secondly, Bellarmine propoundeth the queſtion generally, Fidem juſtificantem non eſſe fiduciam, that juſtifying faith is no fiduce, or confidence at all, cap. 6. and therefore it is ſufficient for us that he granteth it to be any confidence. Thirdly, yet that the Apoſtle here meaneth a perſwaſion of the heart and affection it is evident, becauſe he ſpeaketh of love, which is in the heart: If it be taken actively for our love toward God, as Origen underſtandeth it, writing upon theſe words: Love doth never fall away: Ex 1 Cor. 13. 8. charitate nunquam excidente erant illæ voces, confido, &c. From this charity never falling away proceeded thoſe words of the Apoſtle, I am perſwaded, that neither life nor death, &c. can ſeparate us from the love of God, Hom. 23. in Matth. But if we take it paſſively for Gods love to us, which is the better ſenſe, it commeth all to one: for the Apoſtle ſaith, verſ. 35. That tribulation and anguiſh cannot ſeparate us from this love, that is, from the aſſurance thereof. Now tribulation, &c. worketh not upon the underſtanding, but the affection: this perſwaſion then of the Apoſtle was not only in his underſtanding, but in his heart and affection.

1 Auguſtine ſaith: Si nunc tempus eſt fidei, ſalus autem animarum merces eſt fidei, quis dubitet in fide, quæ per dilectionem operatur, peragendum diem ultimum, atque in fine diei, recipiendam eſſe mercedem, non ſolum redemptionem corporis,—verumetiam ſalutem animarum? If now it be the ſeaſon of faith, and the ſalvation of the ſoule be the reward of faith, who doubteth, but that a man ſhall die in this faith, that worketh by love, and afterward receive the reward, both the redemption of the body, and ſalvation of the ſoule? Tractat. in Iohan. 86. Quis dubitet? Who can doubt? ſaith Auguſtine: Ergo, faith expelleth doubting. Decret. 11. Iulii. 1. Qui dubius in fide, infidelis: He that is doubfull in faith, is an Infidell.

Harm. ſect. 4. pag. 244. Ibid. 249. Sect. 9. p. 250. Ibid. pag. 258. 3 Latter confeſſ. of Helvetia c. 16. Chriſtian faith is not an opinion or human perſwaſion, but a ſure truſt, and an evident, and ſtedfaſt aſſent of the minde, a moſt ſure comprehenſion of the truth of God ſet forth in Scripture, &c. Confeſſ. of Baſil. Wee doe not attribute righteouſneſſe to works— but to a true confidence and faith in the blood of the Lambe of God ſhed for us. Bohemia c. 6. This faith alone, and thus inward confidence of the heart in Ieſus Chriſt our Lord doth juſtifie, &c. French confeſſ. artic. 13. We can find no reſt to our ſelves—till we be certainely perſwaded, that we are loved in Ieſus Chriſt.

4 Peter Lombard agreeth: Fidem in corde, &c. That a man ſeeth his faith in his heart. And he alleageth thus out of Auguſtine: Credimus ut cognoſcamus, non cognoſcimus ut credamus: We beleeve to underſtand, we underſtand not to beleeve. But if faith were only in the underſtanding, we ſhould firſt underſtand, then beleeve: lib. 3. diſt. 25. liter. g.

The holy Martyrs thus judged of the Chriſtian faith, that it brought a moſt certaine aſſurance with it: Maſter Bradford holy Martyr did no more doubt, that by dying for the faith of Chriſt, hee ſhould pleaſe the Lord, than that the Sun did ſhine, which at that time did ſhine in at the window, Fox pag. 1614.

Maſter Philpot bleſſed Martyr, when a popiſh Biſhop had ſaid unto him, thus, theſe heretiks take upon them to be ſure of all things they ſtand in: you ſhould rather ſay, I truſt I know Chriſt, than that I am ſure of it: the holy Martyr thus anſwered: Let him doubt of his faith that liſteth; God give mee grace alwaies to beleeve, that I am ſure of true faith, and favour in Chriſt, Fox pag. 1825.

The ſecond point, whether knowledge bee neceſſary unto faith.

The Papiſts.

49. Error. BEllarmine ſaith, fidem non eſſe notitiam, ſed aſſenſum, that faith is no knowledge, but a bare aſſent of the mind, without knowledge or underſtanding of that whereunto it aſſenteth. Thus alſo the Rhemiſts note, there is a kind of faith called fides implicita, the faith of ſimple men, and Idiots, who although they are not able to give a reaſon of their beleefe, yet it is enough for them to ſay, they are Catholike men, and that they will live and dye in that faith which the Catholike Church doth teach, Rhemiſt, annot. Luke 12. ſect. 3.

This implicite faith, which they ſay is ſufficient for common Catholiks, is nothing elſe, but to beleeve, as the Church beleeveth, though they know nothing themſelves particularly: that faith is ſufficient without knowledge, thus they reaſon.

1 Cor. 13. 2. Argum. Though I know all ſecrets, and all knowledge (ſaith he Apoſtle) yea if I had all faith, &c. The Apoſtle diſtinguiſheth knowledge, and faith, as being two ſundry things, Bellarm. cap. 7.

Anſw. 1. Though the Apoſtle reckon up here divers particular gifts, yet doth hee not ſo ſeparate and divide them, but that one may communicate with another: for if this bee a good conſequent, becauſe S. Paul ſaith, all knowledge, and all faith, making two ſundry gifts of them, therefore faith hath no fellowſhip with knowledge: then by the ſame reaſon, becauſe he alſo ſaith, if I could propheſie, and know all ſecrets, therefore he that propheſieth hath no knowledge of ſecrets.

Galath. 5. 6. 2 S. Paul ſpeaketh not here of juſtifying faith, but of the faith of miracles, If that I had faith wherby I could remove mountaines, &c. which faith may be ſeparated from love: but juſtifying faith cannot: faith working by love, ſaith the Apoſtle: this place therfore concludeth nothing againſt juſtifying faith.

The Proteſtants.

AS before they ſpoyled faith of the better part therof, which is a ſtable and certaine perſwaſion of the heart: ſo now alſo they rob it of the other part, which is an evident and light of ſpirituall knowledge: for faith cannot ſtand with ignorance, but neceſſarily bringeth with it, an illumination of the minde, as it worketh ſtableneſſe in the heart.

1 Cor. 2. 9. 1 Cor. 13. 12. Neither doe we affirme, that we doe perfectly underſtand with the mind, thoſe things which by faith we beleeve: for the Apoſtle ſaith, that neither the eye hath ſeene, nor the eare heard, neither came into mans heart, the things that God hath prepared for thoſe that love him. And now wee ſee through a glaſſe darkely, then ſhall we ſee face to face. We ſhall never therefore be able perfectly to underſtand in this life ſo much, as we beleeve: yet we do know & underſtand them after a ſort: for as M. Latimer ſaith; there is great difference betweene certaine knowledge, and cleere knowledge, for that may be of things abſent that appeare not; this requireth the preſence of the object: A man therefore may certainely and ſurely know the thing which he perfectly beleeveth, though he do not cleerely and evidently know it.

Againe, concerning this diſtinction of implicita, and explicita fides, our judgement is this: we doe not abſolutely condemne or refuſe it; but with two conditions are content to receive it: firſt, if they underſtand that to be the explicita fides, when as a man by ſufficient knowledge and learning is able to maintaine every point of his faith: that to bee implicita fides, not when a man is utterly ignorant to give a reaſon of his faith, but when his knowledge and inſtruction is not ſo full, as is to be found in the learned ſort: So then the explicite faith, is not that which only hath skill and knowledge; the implicite, that which hath none: but they differ onely in degree, the one hath a greater meaſure of know ledge than the othe.

The ſecond condition is this, that we underſtand the implicite faith, to be that, not which is grounded upon the determination of the Church, but upon the truth of the holy Scriptures: As if a man ſhould thus profeſſe, this is my faith, and thus doe I beleeve, becauſe I am ſo taught by the Scriptures, though otherwiſe I bee not able to give an exact account of my faith. With theſe reſpects and conditions we will admit of this diſtinction: as we find it to have been admitted by that holy Martyr, Maſter Saunders, whoſe words I will ſet downe: Albeit I cannot explicita fide, as they call it, conceive all that is to be conceived, neither can diſcuſſe all that is to be diſcuſſed, in the doctrine of this moſt true religion: yet I doe bind my ſelfe, as by my humble ſimplicity, ſo by my fidem implicitam, that is, by faith in generality, to wrap my beleefe in the credit of the ſame, that no authority of the Romiſh religion, repugnant thereunto, ſhall by any meanes remove mee from the ſame, Fox pag. 1495. ex epiſt. Saunder. Wintonienſ. This holy Martyr confeſſeth this implicite faith, and modeſtly acknowledgeth his faith to bee ſuch, not that hee was altogether rude and ignorant, but not yet attained to the depth of Chriſtian knowledge: ſecondly, he groundeth his faith not upon the determination of the Romiſh Church, but upon the truth of his religion warranted by the Scriptures. Such an implicite faith doe wee alſo grant. But a Popiſh implicite faith altogether void of knowledge, when men utterly ignorant content themſelves to beleeve as the Church beleeveth, wee doe deteſt and abhorre: Such a faith, as the Biſhop of Cavaillon in France, commended ſometimes to the Chriſtians of Merindol, in theſe words: It was not neceſſary or requiſite to ſalvation, that they ſhould bee ſo cunning, as to expound or underſtand the articles of their faith, but that it was ſufficient that they knew it in Latine: for there were many Biſhops, Curates, yea & Doctors of Divinity, whom it would trouble to expound the Pater Noſter, or the Creed, Fox pag. 949. Againſt this blind, popiſh, and unſavory faith, we reaſon thus.

Argum. 1. S. Peter ſaith, We muſt be ready to give account to every one that asketh, of that hope, which is in us: Ergo, it is not ſufficient for a Chriſtian to ſay he beleeveth, as the Church beleeveth: but hee muſt be able to give account of his beleefe. 1 Pet. 3. 15.

Argum. 2. Maſter Lambert holy Martyr, againſt this Popiſh implicite faith which indeed is no faith, but a blockiſh ignorance, alleadgeth theſe teſtimonies of Scripture: Brethren, be not children in wit and underſtanding but as concerning malicionſneſſe be you children: Be not like the horſe & mule, which have no underſtanding: Trie all things, and keep that which is good: Ergo, Chriſtians ought to have knowledge to diſcerne good from evill, &c. Fox pag. 1103. 1 Cor. 14. 20. Pſal. 32. 9. 1 Theſſ. 5. 21.

Maſter George Wiſehart holy Martyr, condemned for this truth, becauſe he ſaid, that it was neceſſary to every man to know and underſtand his baptiſme, Fox pag. 1269.

1 And further, Auguſtine writeth thus; Ita apud omnes vulgatam & confirmatam eſſe Catholicam fidem, ut nec notitiam poſſit fugere popularem, neceſſe quippe fuit—quod attinet ad myſteria Chriſtiana, omnes noſſe Chriſtianos: That the Catholike faith was ſo common and ſo plaine, that it could not bee hid, no not from the popular ſort: for it was neceſſary—that what belonged to the myſteries of Chriſtianitie, all Chriſtians ſhould know: cont. Iulian. lib. 8. c. 4. for now ought the propheſie of Ieremy to be fulfilled, They ſhall all know me from the leaſt to the greateſt. Heb. 8. 11.

Tertullian ſaith: Hac erit fides, qua contulerat intellectum, &c. This is faith which giveth underſtanding: And againe, ſpeaking of the Valentinian heretiks, he ſaith, Habent artificium, quo prius perſuadeant, quam edoceant, veritas autem docendo perſuadet, non ſuadendo docet: They have a certaine cunning, to perſwade before they teach, but the truth doth perſwade by teaching, not by perſwading teach, &c. faith then is not grounded upon a bare perſwaſion, but joyned with underſtanding. Lib. 4. adverſ. Marcionem. Lib. adverſ. Valentinian.

2 Chryſoſtome ſaith, Per fidem eſt cognitio Dei, & ſine fide cognoſci nequit: The knowledge of God is by faith, and hee cannot be knowne without faith, &c. the like ſentence is rehearſed out of Chryſoſtome by Ieremy the late Patriarke of Conſtantinople: This firſt is evident ex fide cognitionem Chriſtianam provenire, That Chriſtian knowledge commeth of faith, and without it none can know Chriſt. 3 Confeſſ. of Belgia. art. 22. We beleeve that the holy Ghoſt—doth beſtow upon us true faith, that we may attaine to the knowledge of this ſo great a myſtery, &c. Auſpurg. Faith doth not only ſignify knowledge of the hiſtory of Chriſt, but alſo to beleeve & aſſent to that promiſe, &c. Faith then is both a knowledge and aſſent. Harm. ſect. 9. pag. 260. Ibid. pag. 262.

4 Our Doway Divines doe give this marginall note: Ignorance of that we are bound to know, is ſin: but every one is bound to know that which he beleeveth: therefore herein to bee ignorant, is ſin by their owne confeſſion. Annot. in Levitic. c. 4. v. 2.

Ex appendice Concilii Baſil. ex oration. præſidentis ad Bohemos: Certiores de fide mea & doctrina eſtote, quam ſi quid propriis conſpiciatis oculis: Be yee more certaine of my faith and doctrine, than when you ſee any thing with your owne eyes, &c. ſo the Church is brought in ſpeaking, Every member of the Church muſt bee thus ſure of the doctrine of the Church: but how can they bee ſure thereof unleſſe they know it?

Peter Lombard to this purpoſe alleageth thus out of Auguſtine, that faith cannot be without knowledge: Lib. 3. diſt. 24. C. Nemo poteſt credere in Deum, niſi aliquid intelligatur, &c. No man can beleeve in God, unleſſe ſomewhat be underſtood, becauſe faith is of hearing. Againe, Nec ea quæ creduntur prius, quam intelliguntur, penitus ignorantur, &c. Neither the things, that are beleeved before they are underſtood, are altogether unknowne, ſeeing faith commeth of hearing, &c. By this text Auguſtine proveth, that faith is joyned with knowledge: for how can a man beleeve by hearing that he knoweth not?

The third point, of the object of faith.

The Papiſts.

50. Error. BEllarmine* affirmeth, that it is not the propertie of faith, ſpecially to apply to every beleever the promiſes of God in Chriſt, for this he boldly calleth preſumption, but generally to beleeve whatſoever is contained in the word of God to be true, Bellarm. lib. 1. de juſtificat. cap. 4. The Chapter alſo of Trent, thus decreeth, that juſtifying faith is not that aſſured beleefe, and confidence of the heart, whereby we are perſwaded, that our ſins are forgiven us in Chriſt, ſeſſ. can 6. 13. Our Rhemiſts alſo thus deliver their ſentence, that faith which juſtifieth, is a generall, or univerſall beleeving of the articles of Chriſts death, and reſurrection, nor any fond ſpeciall faith, fiducia, or confidence of each mans owne ſalvation, Rhemiſt. annot. Rom. 4. ſect. 9.

Math. 16. 16. Argum. 1. That faith, which Peter confeſſed when he ſaid to our Saviour, Thou art the Chriſt, the Son of the living God, was the ſame faith that juſtifieth: But this faith was a confeſſion only of the Divinity of Chriſt, no ſpeciall application of his merits: Ergo, faith is no ſuch thing, Bellarmine lib. 1. de juſtificat. cap. 8.

Anſw. 1. By our adverſaries owne confeſſion, this was not the whole juſtifying faith, which Peter here profeſſeth: for they affirme, that faith is an univerſall beleefe of the articles of Chriſts death and reſurrection, &c. But at this time, though Peter confeſſed thus of the Son of God, yet hee neither beleeved that Chriſt ſhould die, for therefore he deſerved to be called Sathan, verſ. 23. becauſe he went about to perſwade Chriſt not to dye: and as for the reſurrection of Chriſt, the Apoſtles doubted of it Luke 24. 11. even when Chriſt was riſen againe: how then could this be the juſtifying faith in reſpect of Peter that confeſſed it?

2 This faith which Peter confeſſed, though it were not the whole juſtifying faith, yet it was a principall part thereof: for there is in faith the matter and ſubſtance thereof, which is the beleefe of the articles of the faith, and the forme, which is the particular uſe and application thereof to every man ſeverally: to confeſſe therefore, that Chriſt is the Son of God, (which doth comprehend both the natures of his Godhead and humanity, and the offices of Chriſt, whereunto hee was annointed, his kingdome, propheſie and prieſthood) belongeth to juſtifying faith, as the matter and ſubſtance thereof.

3 Though ſimply to confeſſe Jeſus to be the Son of God, bee not that faith that juſtifieth, becauſe Marke 5. 7. the devils have made ſuch a confeſſion, yet this confeſſion may ſo proceed from a man, and was ſo uttered by Peter in this place, that it may declare a right juſtifying faith: that is, ſo to confeſſe Chriſt to be the Son of God, and to be the annointed Meſſiah, to take away the ſins of the world, that he which ſo confeſſeth, beleeveth it with comfort, and that Chriſt is ſo even to him: Therefore S. Paul ſaith, 1 Cor. 12. 3. that no man can ſay that Ieſus is the Lord, but by the holy Ghoſt, 1 Cor. 12. 3. And our Saviour ſaith to Peter, after he had made this confeſſion, that fleſh and blood had not revealed it unto him, but his father in heaven. Wherefore it is certaine, that he uttered more than a generall beleefe of this article, which may be in devils: unleſſe your will ſay, that the devils alſo made the ſame confeſſion by the holy Ghoſt, and by revelation from God.

Argum. 2. Abrahams faith was nothing elſe, but his beleefe of a certaine article revealed unto him from God, and credit given to Gods ſpeeches, that hee ſhould bee the father of many nations, by his Son, which was yet unborne, whom his wife Sara, both barren and now old, was to beare unto him: But Abrahams faith was a juſtifyng faith: Ergo. Rhemiſt. annot. Rom. 4. ſect. 9. Bellarm. lib. 1. de juſtificat. cap. 8.

Anſw. 1. The object of Abrahams faith, or the thing which Abraham beleeved, was not only concerning the birth of his ſonne Iſaac, and the multiplying of his ſeed by him: but the promiſe which Galath. 3. 16. Abraham gave credit unto, was ſpirituall concerning Chriſt: As the Apoſtle noteth, he ſaith not, and Rom. 4. 11. to the ſeeds, as ſpeaking of many, but, and to thy ſeed, as of one, which is Chriſt. And Abraham was promiſed not ſo much to be the father of many nations, as to be the father of all them that beleeve: therefore it was not a temporall, but a ſpirituall promiſe, which was made unto Abraham. 2 Neither was Abrahams faith only a generall or hiſtoricall beleefe, that this promiſe was true: but a ſure confidence and truſt in God that this promiſe pertained to him, and that he himſelfe ſhould be bleſſed in that proJohn 8. 56. miſed ſeed: as our Saviour teſtifieth: Abraham deſired to ſee my day, and ſaw it, and rejoyced: for whereof ſprang that exceeding joy in Abraham, but upon that certaine hope and perſwaſion, which he had of his owne ſalvation in Chriſt?

Argum. 3. That faith, which Chriſt required, and confirmed by miracles, was a juſtifying faith: but that was no certaine fiduce or particular perſwaſion, but only a generall beleefe in the power and omnipotency of Chriſt.

Ergo, a juſtifying faith requireth no ſuch particular perſwaſion, &c.

The aſſumption Bellarmine proveth by divers places of Scripture.

Math. 9. 28. 1 Math. 9. 28. Chriſt ſaith to the blind, Beleeve yee that I am able to doe this? According to your faith be it unto you.

2 Such was the faith of the Centurion, which Chriſt ſo commended, ſaying, hee found not ſo great faith in Iſrael: Say the word only, and my ſervant ſhall be whole. Luke 7. 9.

3 Such was Nathanaels faith, Becauſe I ſaid I ſaw thee under the Figge-tree, beleeveſt thou? Iohn 1. 50.

4 Iohn 11. 27. I beleeve that thou art Chriſt the Sonne of God, which ſhould come into the world.

5 Iohn 20. Chriſt ſaith to Thomas; Thou haſt ſeene and beleeved, &c. Hee beleeved only the truth of this article, That Chriſt was riſen from the dead.

6 Mark. 1. 40. The Leaper doubted of Chriſts mercy; If thou wilt, thou canſt make me cleane; hee beleeved only his power.

7 The Phariſee had confidence that hee was juſt and righteous, yet was hee not for all that juſtified. Luke 18. 11, 12.

8 The Evnuch had no aſſurance of Gods mercy, but ſaid only, I beleeve Jeſus Chriſt to bee the Son of God.

9 Rom. 10. 9. If thou confeſſe with thy mouth the Lord Ieſus, and ſhalt beleeve in thy heart, that God raiſed him from the dead, thou ſhalt be ſaved: juſtifying faith is nothing elſe, but the beleefe of the reſurrection of Chriſt.

10 Whoſoever beleeveth, that Ieſus is the Chriſt, is borne of God: Here is no perſwaſion or particular confidence required, Bellarm. lib. 1. de juſtificat. c. 8. 1 Iohn 5. 1.

Anſw. Firſt, 1 To the propoſition I anſwer, that indeed, that faith which Chriſt required and preached, was the true juſtifying faith, which included a certaine aſſurance of forgiveneſſe of ſins: as Chriſt ſaith of the penitent woman, Many ſins are forgiven her, for ſhee loved much: ſhee by her love unto Chriſt, teſtified her inward feeling and aſſurance of forgiveneſſe. 2 Though this faith Chriſt required, yet in his mercie he refuſed not the leaſt beginning of faith, which was to beleeve his power, that hee was able to worke miracles upon their bodies, which was the faith of miracles, yet an introduction to the true juſtifying faith: and therefore it was written of Chriſt, A bruiſed reed ſhall he not breake, and ſmoaking flax ſhall hee not quench: that is, hee ſhall beare with the infirme and weake, and not reject their ſmall meaſure of faith. Luke 7. 47. Matth. 12. 20.

First, our particular anſwer to the places objected, is this: 1 Thoſe blind men beleeved not only that Chriſt was able to help them, but were perſwaded of his mercy, in ſaying, O Son of David have mercy upon us. 2 To the receiving of a temporall benefit in recovering of their ſight, a temporary faith (which we call the faith of miracles) might ſuffice. 1.

Secondly, 1 The Centurions faith is ſhewed in beleeving Chriſt to be able to heale his ſervants bodily ſickneſſe: but there remiſſion of ſinnes is the object of juſtifying faith, and therefore it is improperly alleaged. 2 Yet this Centurion had as well confidence in Chriſts mercie, as beleefe of his power, Chriſt having ſaid to him, verſ. 7. I will come and heale him. 3 The Centurions faith was for another; but the juſtifying faith is the aſſurance that every man hath for himſelfe. 2.

Thirdly, 1 Nathanael is commended for this good beginning of faith, which Chriſt promiſeth to encreaſe: thou ſhalt ſee greater things than theſe. 2 And his faith is not without particular confidence, acknowledging Chriſt to be King of Iſrael: of which number he was, being affirmed by Chriſt to bee a true Iſraelite, verſ. 47. 3. Iohn 1. 47.

4 The faith of Martha, was not onely a generall confeſſion of the reſurrection, which ſhee had made before, but a particular beleefe, whereby every one is by Chriſt ſaved from the death of ſin: as ſhee, being asked, Beleeveſt thou this? anſwered, Yea: that is, that whoſoever beleeveth in Chriſt ſhall never die. This is the particular aſſurance of faith, to be preſerved from everlaſting death. Iohn 11. 24. 26.

5 Thomas faith alſo was particular, in ſaying to Chriſt, Thou art my Lord and my God: It was not a generall apprehenſion only, that he was riſen againe. Iohn 20. 28.

6 Firſt, the Leapers requeſt was for the cleanſing of his body; what is this to the remiſſion of ſins, which is the proper object of juſtifying faith? 2 Neither doth hee doubt of Chriſts will and mercy, becauſe hee ſaith, If thou wilt: will yee ſay that Chriſt doubted of his Fathers good will, becauſe hee thus prayed? Father, if thou wilt, take away this cup: that is, Thou canſt take it away, if thou wilt: but a man is thus to pray for things temporall, namely with a condition not that God faileth in mercy, when hee with-holdeth them, but becauſe it is not alwayes good for us to receive them. 3 The Leapers confidence appeareth in his earneſt prayer: Hee beſought him, and kneeled downe, &c. And Chriſt had compaſſion upon him: By the effect then it appeareth, hee prayed with confidence, as our Saviour ſaith: Whatſoever yee deſire when yee pray, beleeve that you ſhall have it, and it ſhall be done unto you. Luke 22. 42. Marke 1. 40. Marke 11. 24.

7 The Phariſee doth boaſt of his owne worthineſſe, and hath a vaine confidence in himſelfe, which was no confidence at all: though hee ſay, God I thanke thee; hee doth it in hypocriſie, acknowledging herein a gift from God, but procured by his owne worthineſſe.

8 The Evnuches faith wanted not a particular apprehenſion and application of Chriſts death: What letteth me (ſaith hee) to be baptized? that he was in his fleſh ſprinkled with water; ſo he beleeved, that in his ſoule he was waſhed in Chriſts blood from his ſins. Act. 8. 36.

9 The faith and confeſſion which the Apoſtle ſpeaketh of, is not without a particular perſwaſion and aſſurance of the heart. 1 So hee ſaith, If wee bee dead with Chriſt, wee beleeve wee ſhall live with him: The beleefe then of Chriſts death and reſurrection worketh in us aſſurance of life. 2 It followeth Rom. 6. 8.

Rom.10.11. loweth in the next verſe: Whoſoever beleeveth in him, ſhall not be aſhamed: but it is the hope and aſſu-
Rom.5.5. rance of the heart, that maketh not aſhamed, not a generall apprehenſion only. 3 How ſhall they call
Rom.10.14. upon him, upon whom they have not beleeved? Invocation is a fruit of this faith: but true invocation or Marke 11.24. prayer is not without aſſurance to be heard.

1 Iohn 5.1. 10 Ever the Apoſtle in that faith requireth particular confidence; for it followeth, Every one that loveth him; Every one that beleeveth, that Jeſus is Chriſt, loveth him: but love caſteth out feare and

The Proteſtants.

A Juſtifying faith is not only a generall beleefe of the articles of faith, that Chriſt was dead, borne, roſe againe for them that beleeve: but it is an aſſured and ſtedfaſt confidence, whereby every man particularly doth apply to himſelfe the generall promiſes of God, for the hope of remiſſion of his ſins in Chriſt, that Chriſt died, roſe againe, and did all the reſt even for him.

Iam.1.19. Argum. 1. S. Iames ſaith, The devils alſo doe beleeve that God is, and doe tremble; yea no doubt but they beleeve that the word of God is true, and confeſſe the articles of the faith: for they acknowledge Marke 5.7. Chriſt to be the Son of the living God: But the faith of devils is no juſtifying faith: Ergo, neither this hiſtoricall and generall faith. Thus Maſter Tyndal holy Martyr witneſſeth, who ſaith, that the devill beleeveth that there is a God, and life everlaſting, and that there is an hell, yea hee beleeveth that the Father, the Son, and the holy Ghoſt are but one God, yet he is nothing the better for this beleefe, vid. plur. Fox p. 1255. artic. 5.

Argum. 2. S. Paul was ſaved by no other faith, but the common juſtifying faith of all Chriſtians; but this faith wrought a particular perſwaſion in him; From henceforth is layd up for mee a crowne of
2 Tim.4.8. righteouſneſſe. And againe: I live by the faith of the Son of God, who hath loved me and given himſelfe
Galath.2.20. for me: Ergo, ſuch ought the faith of all Chriſtians to be.

Bellarmine would here ſeeme to ſay ſomewhat, but hee confirmeth our argument rather by his anſwer, than overthroweth it: Rectè dicunt poſſe unumquemq́; generales promiſſiones ſibi applicare per fidem: They ſay right, that every man by faith, may apply the generall promiſes to himſelfe, for as I beleeve by the Catholike faith, that Chriſt died for all, Ita eadem fide, credo mortuum eſſe pro me, ſo by the ſame faith, I beleeve he died for me, Bellar. cap. 11. reſponſ. ad object. 5. Doth not the Jeſuite now confeſſe againſt himſelfe, that the ſpeciall mercy of God is the object of faith, which he before denied? And if a man by faith may apply to himſelfe the generall promiſes of God, why did he ſay before, Certam promiſſionem ſpecialis miſericordiæ, ad præſumptionem, non ad fidem pertinere: That for a man to promiſe to himſelfe ſpeciall mercy, it belongeth to preſumption, rather than to faith, Bellarm. cap. 4. What need now any other confutation, ſeeing the Jeſuite confuteth himſelfe?

Argum. 3. Juſtifying faith bringeth tranquillity and peace of conſcience, but the promiſes of God generally apprehended, doe not worke the peace of conſcience, unleſſe they be particularly applyed: Ergo, they are not the object of juſtifying faith. Bellarmine here in flat tearmes denieth, that faith breedeth the ſecurity and peace of minde, but rather pavores anget, it breedeth feare and terror in the minde, Bellarm. reſp. ad object. 5. wherein he doth contradict of purpoſe the holy Apoſtle, which ſaith, Rom.5.1. being juſtified by faith, we have peace toward God: Ergo, juſtifying faith worketh peace.

Argum. 4. That faith doth not generally only apprehend, but particularly apply, and worke a ſpeciall aſſurance thereof in the heart, theſe places of Scripture further doe teſtifie.

1 Mark. 11.24. Whatſoever yee deſire, when you pray, beleeve that yee ſhall have it, and it ſhall bee given unto you.

2 Iam. 1.6. Let him aske in faith, and waver not.

3 2 Chron. 20. Put your truſt in the Lord your God, and yee ſhall be aſſured.

4 Therefore the Scripture reproveth fearefulneſſe and doubtfulneſſe, as ſhewing a want of faith. Matth. 8.26. Why are yee fearefull. O yee of little faith! Matth. 14.31. Chriſt ſaith to Peter, O thou of little faith, wherfore didſt thou doubt? If want of faith bring doubtfulnes, then faith worketh aſſurance.

5 Rom. 4.14. It is by faith, that the promiſe may be ſure to all the ſeed: Ergo, faith bringeth aſſurance.

1 Anſw. Bellarmine. It is true we muſt beleeve, that we ſhall receive, but yet conditionally, if we aske aright: reſp. ad object. 2.

Contra. Wee grant this condition, if a man aske aright, that is in faith, hee is ſure to be heard, as S. Iames ſaith, 5.15. The prayer of faith ſhall ſave the ſicke. Ergo, the condition of faith bringeth aſſurance; which is the ſame thing we affirme: thus he hath yeelded the cauſe.

2 Anſw. The Apoſtles meaning is that we ſhould not doubt of Gods power, Bellarm. ibid.

Contra. No nor yet of Gods mercy and good will: for before he had ſaid, Iam. 1.5. which giveth to all men liberally, and reproacheth no man: to be a liberall giver without reproach, ſheweth Gods will and mercy, not his power only. Againe, let him aske in faith, nihil hæſitans, doubting nothing at all: Ergo; he muſt not doubt either of Gods power or mercie.

3 Anſw. It followeth in the ſame verſe, credite Prophetis ejus, beleeve his Prophets, and all things ſhall fall out well: 2 Chron. 20.20. But we muſt not put our truſt in the Prophets, Bellarm.

Contra. Firſt, is it all one to ſay credite in Deum, &c. beleeve in God, as the text is, and credite Prophetis, beleeve the Prophets? To beleeve the Prophets, is to acknowledge they ſpeake the truth; to beleeve in God, is to put our truſt in him. Secondly, it is a groſſe conſequent, we muſt not put our truſt in the Prophets, Ergo not in God. Thirdly, the text is, truſt in God, & ſecuri eritis, yee ſhall be aſſured: but where there is any doubtfulneſſe, there is no aſſurance.

4 Anſw. Chriſt reprooveth his Diſciples becauſe they doubted of his power: for if they had beleeved Chriſt to be omnipotent, &c. they would not have doubted the danger of ſhipwracke, Bellarm. reſp. ad object. 3.

Contra. Firſt, will yee make the Apoſtles of leſſe faith, than the poore Leper? If thou wilt thou canſt make me cleane; he doubted not of Chriſts power. Secondly, neither did the Apoſtles make queſtion of Chriſts power at this time, ſaying, verſ. 25. Save us or elſe we periſh: they doubted not in thus praying, but that he was able to ſave them. Thirdly, to beleeve Chriſt to be able, belongeth to the intelligence; to bee aſſured thereof, is of the heart and affections: but feare or doubtfulneſſe is not in the intelligence or underſtanding part, but in the heart: Ergo, this feare or boubt was not of Chriſts power: but they failed in their confidence and aſſurance.

Matth. 8. 2.

5 Anſw. The promiſe made to Abraham was not of remiſſion of ſins, but of the calling of the Gentiles: and it was only an hiſtoricall or dogmaticall faith, in the power and omnipotencie of God, Bellarm. c. 11. reſp. ad object. 4.

Contra. Firſt, the promiſe indeed was made of the calling of the Gentiles, and conſequently of remiſſion of ſins: for the promiſe was, that in his ſeed (which is Chriſt, Gal. 3. 16.) all the kinreds of the earth ſhould be bleſſed, Gen. 12. 3. but bleſſedneſſe conſiſteth in the forgivenes of ſins: Bleſſed are they, whoſe iniquities are forgiven, Rom. 4. 7. Secondly, Abraham was not only reſolved in his judgement of Gods power, but aſſured in his heart of his love: for he both ſaw the day of his Chriſt in his ſpirit, and rejoyced in his heart. Abraham rejoyced to ſee my day, he ſaw it and was glad.

Geneſ. 12. 3.
Rom. 4. 7.
Iohn 8. 56.

Let us heare the judgement of holy martyrs and confeſſors: That honourable Earle the Lord Cromwell, who now doth ſhine in heaven, who was ſometime famous upon earth, whoſe godly memorie ſhall never die: He in that ſweet prayer which he made at the houre of his death, ſaid thus: Thou mercifull Lord wa'ſt borne for my ſake, thou didſt ſuffer both hunger & thirſt for my ſake; thou didſt teach, faſt and pray for my ſake; all thy holy actions and works, thou wroughteſt for my ſake; thou ſuffer edſt moſt grievous paines and torments for my ſake; finally thou gaveſt thy moſt precious blood to be ſhed upon the croſſe for my ſake: now moſt mercifull Saviour, let all theſe things profit me, which thou haſt done freely for me, which haſt alſo given thy ſelfe for me, &c. Fox 1190. Faith, we ſee, wrought in this true noble breſt a particular perſwaſion of Gods mercy, with a ſweet application of the merits of Chriſt.

M. Bradford thus writeth in a certaine letter of his to a godly Gentlewoman: What profit ſhould it be to you, to beleeve this to be true (I am the Lord thy God) to others, if you ſhould not beleeve that it is true to your ſelfe, Fox pag. 1639.

Further 1. Auguſtine ſaith in Pſal. 106. Quicquid cum loquor, agnoveris in te, quiſquis expertus es, noli cogitando remanere in te, & putare, quod in ſolo te contigit, crede contingere omnibus qui de manu inimicorum pretioſo ſanguine redimuntur: That which I ſay, thou that haſt experience thereof in thy ſelfe do not thinke that it is wrought only in thee, know that it is common to all, That are redeemed by that precious blood: Ergo, every man muſt have a particular feeling of his redemption in himſelfe.

Origen hath this excellent ſaying: Si Chriſtus vivit in Paulo, & non vivit in me, quid mihi proderit, cum autem & ad me venerit, &c. If Chriſt live in Paul, and live not in me, what ſhall it profit me? but when he is come to me, and I enjoy him, as Paul did, then may I ſay, as Paul did, Now I live, yet not I, but Chriſt in me.

Homil. 12. in Luc.

2 Epiphanius in Anchorato: Redemptor eſt ſanguis ipſius, dum precium redemptionis pro me ſeipſum tradidit, &c. The redemption is his blood, when he gave himſelfe for me the price of redemption, &c. Thus thoſe Fathers held faith to be a ſpeciall application of the benefits of Chriſts death, to themſelves in particular.

3 Latter confeſſ. of Helvetia, act. 14. Men muſt be taught diligently to ſeeke remiſſion of ſins in the blood of Chriſt, and that every one is to be put in mind, that remiſſion of ſins doth belong unto him: Saxonie artic. 16. The Goſpell doth require this true faith, which is an aſſurance of the mercy of God, promiſed for the Son of God his ſake—which faith, I beleeve that remiſſion of ſins is given unto me alſo, &c. Bohemia c. 6. All holy men doe receive remiſſion of ſins by faith in the moſt comfortable promiſe of the Goſpell and doe apply and appropriate it, as peculiar to themſelves, &c.

Harm. ſect. 8. pag 215.

Interrelig. Caſarean. cap. 3. Qui pretioſo Chriſti ſanguine redemitur & cui meritum paſſionis Chriſti applicatur, is continuò juſtificatur, i. invenit remiſſionem peccatorum: He that is redeemed by the blood of Chriſt and to whom the merit of Chriſt is applied, he is forthwith juſtified, and findeth remiſſion of ſin. Thus the elder Papiſts confeſſed a particular application of Chriſts redemption to be neceſſary in juſtification, and not a generall beleeving only of the truth thereof to be ſufficient.

Peter Lombard alleageth thus out of Auguſt. lib. 3. dict. 23. g. Fidem ipſam videt quiſq; in corde ſuo eſſe ſi credit: Every man ſeeth faith in his owne heart, if he beleeve: but a man cannot ſee his faith that is not ſure of his faith: that he ſeeth only in his heart, which is firme, fixed, and ſetled in his heart.

The ſecond part, of the divers kinds of Faith.

The Papiſts.

51. Error. 1 Cor. 12. 9.

WHereas we affirme, that there are divers kinds of faith: as firſt, fides hiſtorica, an hiſtoricall faith, which is to beleeve the truth of whatſoever is contained in Scripture: there is alſo, fides miraculorum, the faith or gift working miracles, whereof Saint Paul ſpeaketh, the third kind is, fides juſtificans, that faith which juſtifieth, which is an aſſured beleefe of Gods promiſes made unto us in Chriſt: the Jeſuite and the Rhemiſt affirme all theſe kinds of faith in ſubſtance to bee all one: the faith of myracles differeth only from juſtifying faith, in an accidentall quality, of more fervor, devotion, and confident truſt, Rhem. annot. 1 Cor. 12. 9. Bellarm. de juſtificat. lib. 1. cap. 4. Yea our Rhemiſts are yet more abſurd: that faith (ſay they) which S. Iames calleth a dead faith, is notwithſtanding a true faith, and the ſame which is called the Catholike faith, and which the Apoſtle defineth, and in ſubſtance all one with that which juſtifieth, Rhem. an. Iam. 2. ſect. 11.

Heb. 11. 1.

Argum. 1. That faith which Saint Paul defineth, Heb. 11. 1. is the ſame faith which juſtifieth: but that faith alſo, is the hiſtoricall faith: thorough faith wee underſtand that the world was ordained, &c. verſ. 2. it is the ſame alſo with the faith of miracles: thorough faith, they ſtopped the mouths of Lions, quenched the violence of the fire, verſ. 33. 34. And all this while the Apoſtle diſcourſeth of that faith which he deſcribed in the beginning of the chapter, Bellarm. cap. 5.

Anſw. We grant that theſe three kinds of faith may ſometime be found in one man: for the hiſtoricall, and the faith of miracles do as handmaids accompany the juſtifying faith: the true faith is never disjoyned from the hiſtoricall faith, that is, the beleefe of all things contained in Scripture, and the faith of miracles, ſo oft as is neceſſary, doth waite upon the ſame: all theſe three were together, in thoſe holy Patriarches, whoſe faith the Apoſtle commendeth: Yet it followeth not, that they made all one faith: for the hiſtoricall faith may be, where juſtifying faith is not, as in Devils, they beleeve, that there is one God: the faith of miracles alſo may bee in falſe Prophets, which have no part in Chriſt. But if they were all one and the ſame, they could not be ſeparated, but where one is, there of neceſſity ſhould be the other.

Iam. 2. 19. Matth. 7. 22.

Marke 16. 17.

Argum. 2. Marke 16. 17. Theſe tokens ſhall follow them that beleeve: in my name they ſhall caſt out devils, and ſhall ſpeake with new tongues, and take away ſerpents: hence it appeareth, that the faith of miracles and juſtifying faith is all one, Bellarm. lib. 1. de juſtific. c. 8.

Contra. 1. The argument followeth not: he that beleeveth in Chriſt, and hath juſtifying faith, may worke myracles: Ergo. juſtifying faith is all one with the faith of miracles: as it followeth not, he that hath faith, hath alſo love and hope. Ergo, theſe three are all one. 2 The contrary rather appeareth out of this text: for he that beleeveth, ſhall be ſaved, verſ. 16. but a man may worke myracles and caſt out devils, and yet not be ſaved. Againe, the faith of miracles is now ceaſed: but juſtifying faith remaineth: but if the faith of miracles, and that whereby we are juſtifyed were all one, then hee that hath the one ſhould have the other alſo: and where and when the one is, then and there ſhould be the other alſo.

Matth. 7. 22.

The Proteſtants.

THat the faith of miracles, and the hiſtoricall faith are not of the ſame nature with juſtifying faith: nor yet that a dead faith, and a true faith, are all one, we ſhew it thus.

Matth. 7. 23. Marke 16. 16. 1 Cor. 13. 3. Galath. 5. 6.

Argum. 1. The faith of miracles may be in wicked men, Matth. 7. 23. the juſtifying faith can bee in none but thoſe which ſhall be ſaved: They that beleeve ſhall be ſaved: Ergo, they are not all one. Againe, the faith of miracles may be ſeparated from love, 1 Cor. 13. 3. but juſtifying faith cannot, Galat. 5. 6. Faith working by love: Ergo, what intollerable boldneſſe then is this, to aſcribe greater confidence and truſt to that faith of wicked men, than to the true juſtifying faith in the elect?

Hebr. 11. 6.

Argum. 2. That the dead faith which Saint Iames ſpeaketh of, is not of the ſame nature with the juſtifying faith; nor with that faith which is handled, Heb. 11. it may thus appeare: firſt, by that faith there deſcribed, the Patriarches pleaſed God, and beleeved that he was a rewarder of thoſe that ſought him, verſ. 6. but this dead faith hath no ſuch operation. Secondly, as a dead man cannot be ſaid properly to be a man, no more can a dead faith be properly called a faith. Nay further, the faith of devils and the faith of Saints cannot bee of one nature and ſubſtance: but this dead ſpeculative faith may bee in devils, Iam. 2. 19. Ergo, it is a blaſphemous aſſertion, that theſe two faiths are all one.

Iam. 2. 19.

Further, 1 Auguſtine ſaith, Diſcerne fidem tuam quia & dæmones credunt, & contremiſcunt quod oderunt: diſtinguit Apoſtolus,—fides, qua operatur per dilectionem: Diſcerne thy faith from the faith of devils, the devils beleeve and tremble at that which they hate: the Apoſtle doth diſtinguiſh them, faith, which worketh by love: de verb. Apoſtol. ſerm. 16. Ergo, a dead faith, which is fruitleſſe, and worketh not by love, is the faith of devils, and ſo not of one nature with a true juſtifying faith.

δογματικὸν δεύτερον ἐστιν εἶδος. Catech. 5. Hom. 8. in 2. Tim. c. 3.

2 Cyril of Jeruſalem divideth faith thus: there is one kind which he calleth dogmaticall, which is the right faith, by the which we beleeve in Chriſt to ſalvation: the other kind he calleth energeticall: he calleth it the ſecond kind, he meaneth the faith to work miracles by: he maketh theſe two divers kinds of faith. Chryſoſtome compareth faith without works unto a picture: as then a body, and the picture of a body are not of one and the ſame kind, no more are a true juſtifying faith, which is alwayes lively and working, and a dead faith without works.

3 Confeſſ. of Auſpurg. loc. of faith: whereas S. Iames ſaith, The devils beleeve and tremble, hee ſpeaketh of an hiſtoricall faith, now this faith doth not juſtifie, for the wicked and the devill are cunning in the hiſtory, but Paul when he ſaith, faith is reckoned for righteouſneſſe, he ſpeaketh of a truſt and confidence of mercy promiſed for Chriſts ſake, &c. Harm. ſect. 9. pag. 270.

4 Synod. Treverenſ. ſub Iohanne cap. 4. Populo perſuadeant non quamlibet fidem, qua in Deum creditur, ſed eam demum ſalutiferam fore, quæ per dilectionem operatur: Let them perſwade the people, that not every faith, whereby men beleeve in God, but that only bringeth ſalvation which worketh by love, &c. By this diſtinction (not this, but that) wee doe gather that faith effectuall by love, which is the true lively juſtifying faith, is in the judgement of this Councell, of another kind and nature, than other generall and common faithes are.

Decret. cauſ. 33. diſtinct. 2. c. 11. In fide, ſpe, charitate, &c. Spiritus perfectorum corda non deſerit; in Prophetiæ virtute, miraculorum exhibitione, electis ſuis aliquando adeſt, aliquando ſe ſubtrahit: In faith, hope, charity, and other gifts, &c. the ſpirit forſaketh not the hearts of the perfect: but in the power of prophecy, exhibiting of miracles, ſometime the ſpirit is preſent with the elect, ſometime he withdraweth himſelfe, &c. If then faith joyned with charity remaineth, faith of miracles alwaies doth not remaine; then are they not one and the ſame kind of faith.

Peter Lombard. lib. 3. diſt. 23. liter. d. Fides ſine charitate informis qualitas mentis: Faith without charity, ſuch as the devils have, is a deformed quality of the minde: Say if you dare, that faith, which juſtifieth, is a deformed quality: Fides una dicitur, non quia ſit una manens in omnibus ſed genere, i. ſimilitudine: Faith is ſaid to be one, not becauſe the ſame particular faith is in all, but in generall the ſame, that is, by a certaine ſimilitude, ibid. liter. f. Faith which juſtifieth, and faith without charity are the ſame not in nature and truth, but in ſimilitude only.

The third part, whether Faith may be ſeparated from charity.

The Papiſts.

THat true juſtifying faith, may be ſeparated from love and other Chriſtian vertues: Bellarmine endeavoureth thus to prove it. 52. Error.

Argum.* 1. S. Paul ſaith, If I had all faith, ſo that I could remove mountaines, and had no love, I were nothing. Ergo, there may be a divorce and ſeparation betweene faith and love. 1 Cor. 13.2.

Anſw.* 1. The Apoſtle thus ſpeaketh, ex hypotheſi, by way of ſuppoſition, that if it were poſſible for faith to be without love, faith were nothing, as before he ſaid, though I ſpeake with tongues of men and Angels; not as though he could ſpeake as the Angels, but if he could, and had no love, &c.

Bellarm. Thus much then we have gained by this anſwer, that faith profiteth not without charity, therefore it cannot juſtifie without charity: for to what purpoſe elſe hath faith ſuch need of charity, that it cannot be ſeparated from it. Bellarm. lib. 1. de juſtific. cap. 15.

Contra. Charity is never ſevered from faith, not becauſe faith needeth charity, or that it cannot juſtifie without charity: but becauſe charity doth alwaies accompany faith, as a principall fruit, and effect thereof: as the fire is never without the heate, which is no part notwithſtanding of the eſſence or nature thereof, but a native quality iſſuing from thence: And like as a good tree is never void of good fruit; which good fruit make not the tree good; but the tree being firſt good, it maketh alſo the fruit good.

Anſw.* 2. Or we anſwer rather that S. Paul ſpeaketh here of the faith of miracles, which we grant may bee ſeparated from love, and may bee found in the wicked, Matth. 7. 23. for he meaneth ſuch a faith, whereby mountaines are removed. Matth. 7. 23.

Bellarmine: Saint Paul ſpeaketh as well of that faith, which juſtifieth, as of this faith of miracles. 1 He ſaith, if I had all faith, verſ. 2. he ſpeaketh generally of all. 2 He meaneth that faith, which is joyned with hope and love, now abideth faith, hope and love, theſe three, verſ. 13. but this is a juſtifying faith: Ergo.

Contra.* 1. Saint Paul in ſaying all faith, meaneth not univerſally every kinde of faith: but that whole faith or generall power, whereby all miracles may be wrought, whereof he giveth one particular inſtance, of removing mountaines. Secondly, in the laſt verſe he ſpeaketh of another kinde of faith then in this place: for there hee underſtandeth ſuch a faith as abideth ſtill; and is in all ages neceſſary for all Chriſtians: but this faith whereby mountaines are removed, now abideth not, the gift is ceaſed, therefore he meaneth not that faith.

Argum.* 2. Ioh. 12. 42. Many of the chiefe beleeved in him, but becauſe of the Phariſees, they did not confeſſe him, leſt they ſhould be caſt out of the Synagogue, for they loved the praiſe of men, more than the prayſe of God Here we ſee there was faith without charity: Bellarm. ibid. argum. 1. John 12. 42.

Anſw.* 1. We muſt either underſtand here a common and ſuperficiall faith, not a true faith indeed: as our Saviour ſaith, Iohn 5. 44. How can yee beleeve, when yee receive honour one of another? If theſe therefore were ſuch, as altogether neglected Gods honour, and only loved the prayſe of John 5. 44.

men, they had not a true faith, and therefore it is no marvell, if they wanted charity. 2 Or if we underſtand this place of ſuch chiefe men, as Nicodemus, and Ioſeph of Arimathea, who beleeved in Chriſt indeed, but were letted by their owne carnall weakeneſſe and infirmity: then had they a true faith, though imperfect, and a love alſo unto Chriſt, though ſomewhat overſhadowed and obſcured with the love of the world, and feare of men.

Iam. 2. 14. Argum. 3. Iam. 2. 14. What availeth it my brethren, though a man ſay he hath faith, when he hath no works? Ergo, faith may be without the works of charity: and the Apoſtle meaneth not a ſhadow of faith, but a true faith indeed. 1 The Apoſtle ſaith in the ſame place, that Abrahams faith wrought with his works: but Abrahams faith was a true faith. 2 Verſ. 24. the Apoſtle ſaith, that a man of works is juſtified, and not of faith only: but the ſhadow of a faith juſtifieth not. 3 He compareth a faith without works to a body without a ſoule; but a dead body is a true body: Ergo, a dead faith is a true faith.

Anſw. Firſt, 1. Abrahams faith was a true faith, becauſe it was a working faith; doth it follow therefore that faith not working by love is a true faith? nay, the contrary rather is inferred. 2 A faith, which is effectuall by works, juſtifieth: Ergo, a true faith: but a faith without works cannot ſave, verſ. 14. Ergo, it is not a true faith. 3 A dead body is in part a true body, in reſpect of the terrene and materiall part, but ſimply it is not a true body, nor the ſame body, which it was before in all points, wanting life, activity and motion: ſo a faith that worketh not, hath ſome of the materials of a true faith, as knowledge, underſtanding; but it is not the ſame, wanting conſcience, and charity, and true confidence, which is the life and ſoule of faith.

Iam. 2. 19. 17. Secondly, that a faith not working, is not a right or true faith, is evident by the Apoſtle: 1 Becauſe hee compareth it to the faith of Devils, verſ. 19. which is no right faith. 2 A faith without works helpeth not, neither ſaveth, verſ. 14. but a working and effectuall faith, juſtifieth, verſ. 24. Ergo, they are not the ſame; for the ſame faith will have the ſame effect. 3 A dead faith and a lively faith are not the ſame: but a faith not working is a dead faith, verſ. 17. Faith if it have no works, is dead in it ſelfe: but as a dead man is not a man, no more is a dead faith a right faith.

The Proteſtants.

Faith and charity, as they are two dives gifts and graces of the ſpirit, ſo in nature and propertie they may be diſtinguiſhed: but in uſe they can never be ſeparated: for where a true lively faith is, there is charity; and where true love and charity is, it is an infallible ſigne of the preſence of faith: no faith then no charity: and againe, * no love, no faith.

* Object. Then David and Peter had no faith when the one ſinned, the other denied Chriſt: for they had then no love. Anſ. Their faith indeed then failed, and their love abated, but neither was utterly loſt. See this objection anſwered more at large, Retect. p. 124.

Argum. 1. Faith without works is dead, Iam. 2. 26. and no better than the faith of devils, verſ. 19. but a dead faith, and the faith of devils is no true faith: Ergo, there is no true faith, without the works of charity.

Bellarm. 1. Fides dæmonum, ex parte objecti vera eſt: The faith of devils is a true faith, in reſpect of the object.

Iam. 2. 19. Marke 5. 7. Anſw. Firſt, this ſpeech cannot by any ſound Divinity be juſtified, that the devils have in any reſpect a true faith. Secondly, if in this reſpect the wicked ſpirits have a true faith, then they have every way a true and perfect popiſh faith. For thus they define their faith: It is an act of the underſtanding, Rhemiſt. 2. Cor. 13. ſect. 1. whereby we doe univerſally beleeve the articles of Chriſts death and reſurrection, &c. Rhemiſt. annot. Rom. 4. ſect. 9. But the deuill hath this act of underſtanding, whereby he doth univerſally beleeve, &c. Iam. 2. 19. Marke 5. 7. Ergo, he hath a true popiſh faith, and is a right popiſh Catholike.

Bellarm. 2. A dead faith may notwithſtanding be a true faith: as a dead body, is a body; and as ſtanding water, and a running water, are the ſame in ſubſtance: Bellarm. c. 15.

Anſw. Though a dead faith may be compared to a dead body, becauſe it is altogether void of ſpirituall quickening, as the body is without naturall life: yet a lively faith is not fitly reſembled to a living body, but rather to the life of the body; becauſe faith is not that which is quikened, but that which quickeneth and giveth life: for it is written, The juſt ſhall live by faith, Rom. 1. 17. As therfore a dead man is no man properly, no more is a dead faith a true faith. Rom. 1. 17.

2 Againe, as a dead body hath the ſame terrene ſubſtance, which a living body hath, but not the ſame ſpirituall ſubſtance, which is the ſoule; and as a ſtanding puddle hath part of the ſame matter, which is in a running water, but yet groſſe, muddie, ſtinking and putrifying, ſo that it cannot be called the ſame water: ſo a dead faith hath ſome part of that which a true faith hath, as namely ſome light of knowledge and underſtanding; but yet not having the ſubſtance and livelihood of faith, it cannot be a right and a true faith.

1 Iohn 4. 7. 16. 1 Iohn 5. 1. Argum. 2. He that is borne of God hath love: Every one that loveth is borne of God: He that dwelleth in love, dwelleth in God, and God in him. But he that beleeveth, that Jeſus is Chriſt, is borne of God: Ergo, he that beleeveth hath love.

Bellarm. We grant, that fides formata, formed or perfect faith, hath alwayes love annexed.

Anſw. As though we ſpeake not all this while of a lively, perfect, and juſtifying faith, which wee call a formed faith: for a faith without forme, is no faith: If hee thus underſtand a formed faith, hee ſaith the ſame now that wee affirme, and is contrary to himſelfe, who tooke upon him in the beginning of this chapter to prove, that fides vera, quæ juſtificat impium, a true faith, and ſuch an one as juſtifieth the ungodly, may be ſeparated from love: If he have found out a formed faith beſide this true lively and juſtifying faith, he is contrarie to the Apoſtle here, who knoweth no other true faith, than to beleeve in Jeſus Chriſt.

Argum. 3. 1 He that hath no charitie denieth the faith: He that provideth not for his owne, denieth the faith. 2 Hee that ſaith hee knoweth God, and keepeth not his commandements, is a lyar; Ergo, the true knowledge of God is not ſevered from charitie. 3 The juſt ſhall live by faith: but without charitie, faith is dead, and can give no life: Ergo, a true faith is not divided from charitie.

1 Tim. 5. 8.
1 Iohn 2. 4.
Rom. 1. 17.

Anſw. 1 Bellarmine anſwereth out of Gregor. Hom. 29. in Evangel. Non habere veram fidem, qui non bene operantur; That they have not a true faith, that doe not worke well: that is, they denie the faith in the worke, not in the heart.

Contra. First, Gregories teſtimonie is very direct for us, that there can be no true faith, where is no right worke. Secondly, the faith denied in worke, is denied alſo in the heart: as the Apoſtle ſaith, Whoſoever ſinneth, (that is in worke) hath neither ſeene nor knowne him, (in his heart.) Thirdly, as Saint Paul ſaith, Having a ſhew of godlineſſe, but have denied the power thereof: ſo where the power of faith is denied, what elſe remaineth but onely a ſhew and ſhadow of faith?

1 Iohn 3. 6.
2 Tim. 3. 5.

Anſw. 2. The Apoſtle ſpeaketh of a knowledge joyned with love and friendſhip, Bellar. c. 15. reſp. ad arg. 3.

Contra. Such is that knowledge, which accompanieth faith: as the Apoſtle ſaith, Wee have knowne and beleeved the love, that God hath in us: Ergo, the knowledge of faith is not without love.

3 It muſt be underſtood of faith formed with charitie, Bellarm. reſp. ad arg. 6.

Contra. Hee unskilfully giveth an inſtance in the cauſe: this formed faith, is the faith which wee meane, a right and perfect faith, not a deformed and unſhapen faith. Thus then by his owne confeſſion, a true faith, which he calleth a formed faith, is not without charitie.

1 Iohn 4. 16.

1 Auguſtine ſaith, Si dilectio patris in te non manet, non es natus ex Deo: quando ergo gloriaris te eſſe Chriſtianum, nomen habes, & facta non habes: -- ſi factis te non oſtendis Chriſtianum, -- quid prodeſt nomen, ubi res non invenitur? If the love of the father be not in thee, thou art not borne of God: how then doeſt thou boaſt thy ſelfe to be a Chriſtian? thou haſt the name but not the deeds: if thou doeſt not ſhew thy ſelfe a Chriſtian, what good doth the name, where the thing is not found? Tract. 5. in Epiſtol. Iohan. If he be not borne of God, that hath no love, then hath he not faith: for he that hath faith and beleeveth, is borne of God.

Againe, he ſaith, Omnes negant Chriſtum in carne veniſſe, qui violant charitatem: All they which violate charitie, denie Chriſt to be come in the fleſh, Tractat. 7. But they which denie Chriſt to bee come, &c. are void of faith: Ergo, alſo of charitie: hee that wanteth the one, wanteth the other.

1 Iohn 5. 1.

Tertullian ſaith, dilectio ſummum fidei ſacramentum; that love is the chiefe or higheſt myſterie of faith, &c. how then can faith be without love?

Lib. de patient.

2 Chryſoſtome ſaith upon theſe words, Iohn 6. This is the worke of God, that ye beleeve: See how he calleth faith a worke; therefore as ſoone as thou beleeveſt, thou art furniſhed with works, not that works are wanting: Sed per ſe ipſum fides plena eſt operibus bonis; but faith of it ſelfe is full of good works: faith then cannot be without works.

Serm. de fid. & leg.

Ieremie the Patriarke ſaith, the Catholike Church requireth faith, firſt of all, Tamen non quamcunque fidem, ſed illam qua viva ſit qua teſtimonium a bonis operibus habeat; Yet not every faith, but that which is lively, which hath teſtimonie of good works, &c. then a lively juſtifying faith cannot be ſevered from good works: and to this end he alleageth Baſil: Superna gratia in eum, qui ſerio & ſtudioſe veritatem complexus non ſit, deſcendere non poteſt; The grace from above cannot deſcend to him who doth not ſeriouſly and ſtudiouſly embrace vertue, &c.

Cenſur. oriental, c. 4.

3 Confeſſion of Belgia, artic. 22. It cannot be, that this holy faith ſhould be idle in a man, neither doe wee ſpeake of a vaine and dead faith, but onely of that, which in the Scripture is ſaid to worke by love, &c.

Harm. ſect. 4. pag. 260.

Saxonie, artic. of juſtification: Wee doe not ſpeake of an idle faith, and the unskilfull are deceived whileſt they thinke, that remiſſion of ſins doth happen to ſuch as are idle, &c.

Ibid. pag. 289.

4 We want not teſtimonie from themſelves, Cauſ. 33. diſt. 2. c. 14. gloſſ. In Chriſtum credere eſt amando in ipſum credere; To beleeve in Chriſt is by loving him to beleeve in him. This is that faith, which the Apoſtle defineth working by love, Galath. 5. 6.

Peter Lombard. lib. 3. diſt. 23. liter. d. Credere in Deum, eſt credendo amare, credendo in eum ire; To beleeve in God, is in beleeving to love him; in beleeving to come unto him. Diſt. 25. liter. c. Quantum credimus, tantum amamus; As much as we beleeve, ſo much we love: Pia fides non eſt ſine charitate: A godly faith is not without charitie.

Eſpenc. Sine charitate fidei veritas, immo vanitas non prodeſt; Without charitie the veritie, or rather vanitie of faith profiteth not, in 2 Tim. p. 65. Faith then is vaine, that is no true faith without charitie.

Let the holy Martyrs ſpeake. Thus Maſter Tindall writeth: If thy faith induce thee not to good works, then haſt thou not the right faith, thou doeſt but onely thinke that thou haſt it: for S. Iames ſaith, that faith without works is dead in it ſelfe: he ſaith not that it is little or feeble, but that it is dead, and that is dead, is not, Fox. p. 1255.

Matth. 7. Maſter Bradford holy Martyr: when Harpsfield had thus ſaid, That all which beleeve in Chriſt, ſhall not be ſaved, alleaging that place, Matth. 7. how many ſhall ſay to Chriſt in the day of judgement, Lord, Lord, have we not in thy name caſt out devils? &c. the holy Martyr maketh this anſwer: You muſt make a difference betwixt beleeving, and ſaying, I beleeve: As for example, if one ſhould ſay and ſweare he loveth you, for all his ſaying you will not beleeve him, when you ſee he goeth about to doe all the evill he can againſt you, Fox. p. 1613. Ergo, by the teſtimonie of thoſe moſt bleſſed and holy Martyrs, true faith cannot be ſeparated from charitie: for that which hath no love, is no faith.

The fourth part, of the validitie of faith.

FIrſt, after what manner faith juſtifieth, whether as a proper efficient cauſe of juſtification, or as an inſtrument onely. Secondly, whether we are onely juſtified by faith.

The firſt article, after what manner faith juſtifieth.

The Papiſts.

53. Error. FAith doth not juſtifie as an inſtrument in apprehending the juſtice or righteouſneſſe of Chriſt, but as a proper and true cauſe it actually juſtifieth, by the dignitie, worthineſſe, and meritorious worke thereof, Bellarm. lib. 1. de juſtificat. cap. 17. Rhemiſt. annot. Rom. 3. ſect. 3.

Galath. 3. 8. Rom. 3. 30. Argum. 1. Theſe phraſes uſed in Scripture: juſtificari ex fide, & per fidem, to bee juſtified of, or through faith, doe betoken an actuall force and power in faith to juſtifie: for theſe propoſitions, ex, & per, of and through, are not attributed to the inſtrumentall, but to the proper efficient and working cauſe: As Rom. 3. 20. ex operibus legis, of the works of the law no fleſh is juſtified, no man is juſtified, per legem, by or through the law: he meaneth not by the law, that is, by the apprehenſion of the juſtice thereof, but by the actuall working and juſtice indeed: as therefore he denieth, that we are juſtified by the law, that is, the actuall working thereof, ſo he affirmeth, that we are juſtified by faith, that is, actually, by the very worke. So the Apoſtle ſaith, per fidem vicerunt regna, through faith they obtained Kingdomes: that is, verily and indeed, not reſpectively onely: And by faith Abel offered a greater ſacrifice, &c. Faith wrought not this inſtrumentally, but verily and effectually, Bellarm. ibid. (Rom. 3. 20. Galath. 3. 11. Heb. 11. 4.)

Anſw. 1. Bellarmines argument is grounded wholly upon his Logicke quiddities: as becauſe this prepoſition, ex, is a note of the materiall cauſe; and per, of the formall cauſe: therefore when the Scripture ſaith, ex fide, or, per fidem, we muſt underſtand faith to be more than the inſtrumentall cauſe. But let him know this, that the ſpirit of God is not bound to the rules of Logicke, neither yet will learne to ſpeake of men, but hath a proper ſpeaking of it ſelfe.

2 We are able to ſhew, that theſe prepoſitions, ex, and per, of, and through, are in Scripture attributed to the inſtrument. Fides ex auditu, Faith commeth of hearing: The Gentiles are made partakers of the promiſe of God in Chriſt, per Evangelium, by the Goſpell, that is, the preaching thereof. But the outward miniſtrie, or hearing of the word, doth not actually worke or beget faith, but onely inſtrumentally, the ſpirit of God working by it. (Rom. 10. 17. Epheſ. 3. 6.)

3 It followeth not, becauſe the Apoſtle denieth that we are juſtified by the law, that is, verily and actually, that he ſhould affirme the ſame of faith: for unto this negative, neminem juſtificari per legem, vel ex operibus legis, that no man is juſtified by the law, or the works thereof; this affirmative anſwereth, juſtificari per fidem Chriſti; to be juſtified not ſimply by faith; but by faith in Chriſt: and by the redemption that is in Chriſt, verſ. 24. by faith in his bloud, verſ. 25. the ſame thing then is affirmed of Chriſt which is denied of the law, though not after the ſame manner: the juſtice of Chriſt is the actuall and very cauſe indeed of our juſtification, yet not actually in us, but inſtrumentally applied unto us by faith. It is Chriſt then, not faith, that properly effecteth that which the law cannot: faith effecteth it not, but onely reſpectively, and as it hath relation to Chriſt. (Rom. 3. 22. 24, 25.)

4 Through faith they ſubdued Kingdomes, ſtopped the mouths of Lions, &c. Faith was not the proper efficient cauſe hereof: but faith apprehendeth Chriſt: Chriſt apprehended worketh all good things: If God have given us his Son, how ſhall he not together with him give us all things? Theſe great works were verily done by them through faith, not as by the proper power and efficacie thereof, but by the power of Chriſt dwelling in them, and being preſent by faith. So Abels ſacrifice was preferred before Cains, not for the worthineſſe of his faith, but by Gods gracious acceptation, to whom he was joyned by faith. Laſtly, we make a great difference betweene juſtification and ſanctification: faith juſtifieth onely inſtrumentally, but of the works of ſanctification it is a proper efficient cauſe, though not the principall: for there is a twofold righteouſneſſe, a perfect righteouſneſſe, whereby we are made righteous before God; and that is the righteouſneſſe onely of Chriſt: and of this righteouſneſſe, faith onely is an inſtrument, no efficient cauſe. There is an imperfect righteouſneſſe, that is, (Rom. 8. 32.)

ſanctification, whereby every faithfull man is made righteous in himſelfe, not ſufficient to juſtifie him before God, but yet availeable to lead an holy and upright life in ſome meaſure. And of this righteouſneſſe faith is a proper efficient cauſe: for as the tree is the cauſe of good fruit, ſo is faith the root and beginning of godly works: faith ſtirreth a man up to pray, Iam. 5. 15. it worketh peace of conſcience, Iam. 5. 15.
Rom. 5. 1. and it hath other proper effects: but it makth us not righteous before God by it Rom. 5. 1.
owne act, but as it apprehendeth, and laieth hold of Chriſt.

Argum. 2. Faith is a worke, we are juſtified by faith: Ergo, by a worke, and ſo conſequently, by John 6. 29.
merit: faith then is meritorious.

Anſw. Faith indeed is a worke, but not any of our owne works: it is called the worke of God, Ioh. 6. 29. God doth wholly worke it in us: Ergo, we cannot merit by it: Faith juſtifieth not then, as it is the worke of God in us: for by this reaſon all other gifts and graces, which are wrought in us by the ſpirit of God, ſhould in like manner juſtifie us: But as it hath relation unto the object Jeſus Chriſt, in apprehending his righteouſneſſe, which is the office only of faith, and not of any other ſpirituall grace.

Argum. 3. Firſt, faith is our juſtice it ſelfe: Ergo, not the apprehenſion only of juſtice: the firſt 1. is proved: To him that beleeveth in him that juſtifieth the ungodly, faith is counted for righteouſneſſe. Rom. 4. 5.
So, Other foundation can no man lay, than that which is laid, Ieſus Chriſt: Faith then is the foundation: 1 Cor. 3. 11. and the foundation is part of the building. Faith purifieth the heart, the puritie of the heart is our juſtice, Act. 15. 9. faith then is our juſtice, and not the apprehenſion of juſtice onely, Bellarm. c. 17. arg. 2.

Secondly, Luk. 7. 50. Thy faith hath ſaved thee: Ergo, it doth more than apprehend ſalvation. 2.
The ſicke mans hand, that apprehendeth or reacheth the medicine, is improperly ſaid to heale Luke 7. 50.
him.

Thirdly, How ſhall they call upon him, upon whom they have not beleeved? how ſhall they beleeve 3.
without a Preacher? As the cauſe of faith is preaching; ſo faith cauſeth invocation, invocation obtaineth Rom. 10. 14.
juſtification: faith therefore not reſpectively onely, but effectively worketh juſtification, Bellar. ibid.

Anſw. Firſt, 1 It followeth not, faith apprehendeth juſtice: Ergo, it is not our juſtice. The eye 1.
apprehendeth, or receiveth the light of the day, and yet it is it ſelfe the light of the body. But like as the Math. 6. 22.
eye is but inſtrumentally the light of the bodie, by conveying and applying the outward light: ſo faith is our juſtice inſtrumentally, in that we beleeve in him that juſtifieth, as the Apoſtle there ſaith. 2 Chriſt is properly the foundation: and yet faith alſo is the rocke and foundation. Chriſt then and faith make but one foundation: Chriſt poſitively, and effectively; faith inſtrumentally, by applying and laying the foundation. 3 Faith is not ſaid to purifie the heart, but God by faith; God as the principall agent, or efficient; faith as the inſtrument.

Secondly, 1 It is no rare thing in Scripture to attribute the effect to the inſtrument: as, By thy 2.
ſword thou ſhalt live: yet is the ſword but the inſtrument: ſo the juſt man liveth by his faith, being the Geneſ. 27. 40.
lively and effectuall inſtrument of the ſpirituall life. 2 As Chriſt here ſaith, thy faith hath ſaved thee: ſo elſewhere: according to your faith be it unto you. So that faith is but the meane or meaſure of the worke: Chriſt is the worker: as in the ſame place, verſ. 28. Beleeve ye that I am able to doe this? Math. 9. 29.

Thirdly, 1 As preaching is the cauſe of faith, ſo I grant faith is of juſtification: but the preaching 3. of the word is but the inſtrument, the ſpirit working by the word is the efficient. 2 But faith doth not ſo worke juſtification as invocation: for as I ſhewed before, faith efficiently produceth the works of ſanctification, whereof invocation is a principall, but it inſtrumentally onely cauſeth juſtification.

The Proteſtants.

FAith doth not juſtifie us by the worthineſſe and dignitie thereof, or as it is a qualitie inherent in man, by any meritorious act, or by the worke of beleeving, or as a proper efficient cauſe; but by way of an inſtrument onely, being as it were the hand of the ſoule, whereby wee doe apprehend the righteouſneſſe of Chriſt.

Argum. 1. Saint Paul ſaith, By grace are you ſaved through faith, not of your ſelves, for it is the gift of God; not of works, leſt any man ſhould boaſt himſelfe. Out of this place we gather theſe arguments: Epheſ. 2. 8.
firſt, grace and faith may ſtand together towards the attaining of our ſalvation: for the grace of God offered in Chriſt is the principall cauſe, faith apprehending grace the inſtrumentall: but grace and worke cannot ſtand together: Ergo, faith and works cannot be matched together: faith then juſtifieth not, as a worke. Rom. 11. 6.

Secondly, they that merit, muſt merit of themſelves, faith is not of our ſelves; it is the gift of God: Ergo, by faith we merit not.

Argum. 2. Faith as it is commanded in the law, juſtifieth not: for the Apoſtle ſaith, that a man is Rom. 3. 28.
juſtified by faith, without the works of the law: but faith, as it comprehendeth onely the act of beleeving, is a commandement contained in the law: for we are commanded to beleeve in God: Ergo, as it is an act of beleeving onely, it juſtifieth not.

Argum. 3. Maſter Bradford holy Martyr reaſoneth thus: As the Iſraelites were healed by beholding the braſen Serpent, ſo are we ſaved by beleeving in Chriſt: but the looking up of it ſelfe did not procure health unto the Iſraelites, but the promiſe made in the object, which was the braſen Serpent, whereupon they looked, gave them health by their looking up: Ergo, after the ſame manner we are ſaved by our faith, and ſpirituall looking up to the bodie of Chriſt crucified: not that the action it ſelfe of beleeving, as it is a qualitie in man, doth ſo deſerve; but becauſe it taketh that dignitie and vertue from the object Jeſus Chriſt, Fox pag. 1659.

Further, 1 Auguſtine ſaith, Nemo juſtè vivit, niſi juſtificatus, id eſt, juſtus effectus: ab illo autem fit homo juſtus, qui nunquam poteſt eſſe injuſtus: ſicut lucerna à ſeipſo non accenditur, ita nec anima humana ſibi præſtat lucem, ſed clamat ad Deum, tu illuminabis lucernam; No man liveth juſtly, unleſſe he be juſtified, that is, made juſt before: and man is made juſt by him that can never be unjuſt: for as the lanterne doth not fetch light from it ſelfe, ſo neither doth the ſoule of man give light to it ſelfe, but crieth unto God, Thou ſhalt lighten my lanterne, Pſal. 109. Faith then is the lanterne that giveth light to the ſoule, that is, juſtifieth: but as the lanterne giveth not light of it ſelfe, but as it is lighted it ſelfe: ſo faith by it owne act doth not juſtifie, but as it hath reſpect unto Chriſt who is the true light; Per fidem locum damus in corde Deo, qui in nobis & per nos bona operatur; It is the office of faith, to make roome for God in our heart, who in us and by us worketh that which is good, in Pſal. 144. Faith it ſelfe therefore properly worketh not our juſtification; but onely prepareth a way for the Lord, to come unto our hearts: God then is the worker, faith is the way whereby he worketh.

Likewiſe ex epiſtol. 95. Auguſtin. & 5. Epiſcopor. ad Innocentium: Non per legem juſtitia, &c. ſed ex fide & dono Dei per Ieſum Chriſtum; Righteouſneſſe is not by the law, but by faith, and the gift of God by Jeſus Chriſt, &c. Faith then doth not juſtifie by the worke and merit thereof: for merit and gift cannot ſtand together, yet faith and gift may: becauſe faith it ſelfe is the gift of God. Againe, in the ſame Epiſtle, Iuſtos patres & ex fide viventes, non poſſibilitas naturæ,-- ſed Dei gratia per fidem juſtificavit; The righteous fathers which lived by faith, not the poſſibilitie of nature, but Gods grace by faith did juſtifie, &c. But grace and works cannot ſtand together, therefore faith doth not juſtifie by the merit of the worke. And yet Auguſtine more directly, moving this queſtion; Vtrum fides mereatur hominis juſtificationem; Whether faith merit mans juſtification: reſolveth, that it doth not, concluding thus, Miſericors Deus vocat, nullis hoc vel fidei meritis largiens; The mercifull God calleth, not giving any thing to the merits of faith, ad Simplician. lib. 1.

Lib. 7. de ſacrificiis.

2 Theodoret ſaith: Neque enim operibus noſtris, ſed per ſolam fidem myſtica bona conſecuti ſumus: for not by our works; but by faith alone we have obtained the myſticall good things, &c. then faith muſt not be conſidered as a worke in the matter of juſtification.

Harm. ſſ. 4. pag. 243.

3 Latter confeſſe of Helvetia, c. 11. Becauſe faith doth apprehend Chriſt our righteouſneſſe, and doth attribute all to the praiſe of God in Chriſt, in this reſpect juſtification is attributed to faith chiefly becauſe of Chriſt, whom it receiveth, and not becauſe it is a worke of ours: Belgia, artic. 22. Wee doe juſtly ſay with Saint Paul, wee are juſtified by faith without the works of the law: yet to ſpeake properly we doe not meane that faith by it ſelfe and of it ſelfe doth juſtifie us, which is but onely as an inſtrument, whereby we apprehend Chriſt, which is our juſtice, &c.

Ibid. p. 260.

Rom. 6. 14.

4 Peter Lombard rehearſeth and approveth this ſentence out of Auguſtine upon theſe words of S. Paul, We are juſtified freely by grace. Hoc ideo dixit, ne fides ipſa ſuperba ſit, ne dicat ſibi; Therefore he ſo ſaid, leſt faith it ſelfe be proud and ſay, how freely? for that which faith meriteth, is reſtored rather, than given: Non dicat homo iſta fidelis, quia cum dixerit, habeo fidem, ut merear juſtificationem, reſpondetur ei, quid habes, quod non accepiſti? Let not a faithfull man ſay ſo, becauſe if he ſay, I have faith to merit juſtification, it will be anſwered, What haſt thou, that thou haſt not received? &c. lib. 2. diſt. 26. liter. d. Thus then faith is excluded from meriting or working of juſtification.

Againe, lib. 3. diſt. 19. liter. a. Vt olim aſpicientes, &c. As in time paſt, they which looked upon the braſen Serpent were healed from the biting of Serpents; Si rectè ergo fidei intuitu in illum reſpicimus, qui pro nobis pependit in ligno; So if by the beholding of faith, we looke upon him that hung upon the tree, we are looſed from our ſins, &c. Thus faith then by the beholding onely and ſpirituall apprehending of Chriſt doth juſtifie, even by the ſentence of their Maſter.

The ſecond Article, whether faith onely juſtifieth.

The Papiſts.

54. Error.

Faith is not the onely cauſe of our juſtification: but there are other alſo, as hope, charitie, almes deeds, and other vertues, Rhemiſt. annot. Rom. 8. ſect. 6. Bellar. lib. 1. de juſtificat. cap. 13. Yea works are more principall than faith, in the matter of juſtification, Rhem. Iam. 2. ſect. 7. Whoſoever therefore ſaith, that a man is juſtified onely by faith, and that nothing elſe is required to juſtification, wee pronounce him accurſed. Trident. Concil. ſeſſ. 6. can. 9.

Rom. 8. 24.

Argum. 1. Wee are ſaved by hope, Rom. 8. 24. Ergo, not onely by faith, Rhemiſt. annot. in hunc locum.

Anſw. The Apoſtle here expoundeth himſelfe: for (ſaith he verſ. 25) If we hope for that we ſee not, we doe with patience abide for it: Wee are ſaid then to be ſaved by hope, not becauſe we are thereby juſtified, but becauſe by hope wee doe expect and waite for our ſalvation, which is not yet accompliſhed: ſo then juſtification is the proper object of faith, which is now preſent; ſalvation which is the end of our faith, and followeth juſtification, is the proper object of hope. And therefore the Apoſtle ſaith, that faith is the ground of things hoped for, the thing hoped for, is the ſalvation of our ſoules, the ground is juſtification by faith in Chriſt. So wee are ſaved by hope, not that we are juſtified by hope, which the Scripture no where affirmeth, but becauſe hope worketh in us a patient abiding and expectation, till the promiſed reward come.

Heb. 11. 1.

Argum. 2. Charitie juſtifieth: Ergo, not faith onely. The antecedent is thus proved, Many ſins are forgiven her, for ſhe loved much: her love is the cauſe, that her ſins are forgiven. So ſaith S. John, We know we are tranſlated from death to life, becauſe we love the brethren. Love then is the cauſe why we are tranſlated from death to life, Bellar. ibid.

Luke 7. 47. 50.
1 John 3. 14.

Anſw. 1. To the firſt place we anſwer: that the womans love is not rendred as a cauſe, that her ſins were forgiven her by Chriſt: but by her exceeding love, which was an evident ſigne and effect of her faith, whereby her ſins were forgiven her, our Saviour Chriſt confuteth the Phariſies who reputed her as a ſinner, verſ. 39. and ſheweth, that ſhee was not now in her ſins, but they were alreadie remitted; as it might appeare by her great love: for ſhee having received ſo great a benefit, as the remiſſion of her ſins, doth hold her ſelfe much bound to Chriſt. It followeth therefore, to whom a little is forgiven, he loveth a little: but to this woman much was forgiven, therefore ſhe loved much. Her love then followed the remiſſion of ſins, as an effect, it went not before as a cauſe: for in this reſpect our Saviour telleth her, it was her faith that ſaved her, verſ. 50. not her love.

2 To the other place wee likewiſe anſwer: the Apoſtle ſaith not, we are tranſlated from death to life, &c. but, we know we are, becauſe we love the brethren: that is, love as a ſpeciall fruit of faith, is a certaine ſigne unto us of our regeneration: as verſ. 19. Thereby we know that we are of the truth. By love iſſuing from faith, we are aſſured our faith is not in vaine, not that thereby we are juſtified: yet love it ſelfe is no cauſe of our juſtification, but onely a ſigne and badge thereof: for it is impoſſible, that we ſhould love God firſt: But herein is love, not that we loved God, but he loved us. God then ſheweth his love firſt, in reconciling us by his Son whom we apprehend by faith, and then after our reconciliation by Chriſt, and juſtification by faith, love alſo is wrought in us toward God. If our love then ſhould goe before our reconciliation, wherein Gods love appeareth toward us, then ſhould we love God firſt, contrarie to the Apoſtle.

1 John 4. 10.

Argum. 3. Feare doth juſtifie as well as faith: as Prov. 1. 7. The feare of the Lord is the beginning of knowledge. Prov. 14. 27. The feare of the Lord is a well-ſpring of life: Ergo, faith onely doth not juſtifie, or give life, Bellarm. c. 13. diſpoſ. 2.

Prov. 1. 7.
Prov. 14. 27.

Anſw. Firſt, by feare here may be underſtood in generall the whole ſpirituall ſtate of man, as it alſo comprehendeth faith: as Pſal. 128. 1. Bleſſed is the man that feareth the Lord: but true bleſſedneſſe is by faith: therefore faith cannot be here excluded. In this ſenſe we doubt not to grant, that the feare of the Lord, that is, being joyned with faith, is the beginning of wiſedome. Secondly, if we take feare more ſpecially, for a particular gift of the ſpirit; in this ſenſe juſtification is not aſcribed to it: for in the firſt place, it is ſaid to bring knowledge; in the ſecond, it is called the fountaine of life: which in the ſame place is expounded, verſ. 26. In the feare of the Lord is aſſured ſtrength. Theſe are the gifts and graces of ſanctification, knowledge, aſſurance, ſtrength, they are not juſtification it ſelfe, but the fruits thereof, to the which the feare of God is the readie way.

Pſalm. 128. 1.

Argum. 4. If faith alone doe juſtifie, and the other vertues, as of hope, charitie, doe not helpe any thing to juſtification, then faith may as well juſtifie, when thoſe vertues are abſent, as when they are preſent: But faith ſeparated from hope and charitie, juſtifieth not: Ergo, faith alone doth not juſtifie, Bellarm. cap. 14.

Anſw. It followeth not, faith alone doth juſtifie: Ergo, it is, or may be alone. In the Sun, there is both heat and light: It is the heat onely that heateth the earth, not the light; and yet the heat cannot be ſeparated from the light: the tongue both toucheth and taſteth; by the taſte only it diſcerneth the ſavour of meats, not by touching or feeling; yet there can be no taſte without feeling: ſo faith alone juſtifieth, yet it is not alone: faith and charitie are inſeparable, yet charitie helpeth not faith to juſtifie. The good tree is never without good fruit, yet the good fruit doth not helpe to make the tree good; the tree is good firſt it ſelfe, before it can bring forth good fruit: So charitie doth not helpe to juſtifie, that is, to make men good; but firſt he is made righteous by faith, and then he bringeth forth good fruits, as the works of charitie.

The Proteſtant.

Faith whereby we are juſtified, is to be conſidered, partly as it is paſſive, partly as it is active: It is paſſive in apprehending the promiſes of God in Chriſt, and applying Chriſt with all his benefits, in which reſpect faith onely juſtifieth. It is alſo active in bringing forth good fruits, and quickening of us to every good worke; but ſo it juſtifieth not. Faith then is inſeparably joyned with hope and love, and neceſſarily yeeldeth in us good fruit; but none of all theſe doe concurre with faith, in the act of our juſtification: but it is the office onely of faith, to applie unto us the righteouſneſſe of Chriſt, whereby onely we are made righteous before God.

Argum. 1. If men are juſtified without works, then juſtification is onely by faith. But the firſt is true, as it may appeare by theſe teſtimonies of Scripture: Wee conclude, that a man is juſtified by faith, Rom. 3. 28. Rom. 4. 2. Epheſ. 2. 9. Phil. 3. 9. faith, without the works of the law, Rom. 3. 28. If Abraham were juſtified by works, he hath whereln to rejoyce, but not with God, Rom. 4. 2. By grace are ye ſaved through faith, not of works, Epheſ. 2. 9. That I might be found in him, not having mine owne righteouſneſſe which is of the law, but that which is through the faith of Chriſt, Philip. 3. 9. Ergo, faith onely juſtifieth.

Bellarmine anſwereth, that the Apoſtle excludeth not all works, for then faith it ſelfe ſhould bee excluded from juſtification, becauſe it is a worke: And if juſtifying faith do except every law, then the law of faith alſo ſhould be excepted, Bellarm. cap. 16. Such works therefore only are excluded, which goe before faith, which are done, ſola cognitione legis, vel ſolis viribus liberi arbitrii, ſine gratia, by the knowledge onely of the law, or by the ſtrength onely of free will, without grace: not ſuch works as are of faith, and proceed of grace, cap. 19.

Epheſ. 2. 10. Tit. 3. 5. Rom. 11. 6. Contra. 1. The Apoſtle excludeth even the works alſo of grace: for when he had ſaid, we are ſaved by grace through faith, not of works: he afterward ſheweth what works; even ſuch as the Lord had ordained for us to walke in, Epheſ. 2. 10. Againe, in another place he ſaith, Not by the works of righteouſneſſe which we had done, but according to his mercie he ſaved us, Tit. 3. 5. The works of righteouſneſſe are excluded: but no man by nature without the helpe of grace, can do the works of righteouſneſſe. Further, the Apoſtle ſheweth, that grace and works cannot be matched together; If it bee of grace, it is no more of works, or elſe were grace no more grace: if of works, it is no more grace, for then worke were no more worke, Rom. 11. 6. Grace and works cannot therefore juſtifie together, becauſe the one deſtroyeth the other. Even works of grace cannot juſtifie together with grace: for I aske them, the works of grace, are they not works? But if they ſhould juſtifie together with grace, they ſhould be no more works: or elſe (ſaith the Apoſtle) worke were no more worke.

Geneſ. 12. 1. Heb. 11. 8. Geneſ. 12. 17. Geneſ. 13 18. Geneſ. 14. 20. Geneſ. 15. 6. 2 Even at this time, when Abrahams faith was imputed to him for righteouſneſſe, and his works were refuſed in reſpect of his juſtification; Abraham had done many excellent works by his faith: As he obeyed God, to goe from his fathers houſe unto a ſtrange countrey, which he knew not, Gen. 12. 1. which was a worke of faith, Heb. 11. 8. He built altars, and called upon the name of God, Gen. 12. 7. & 13. 18. Before this time alſo Abraham was bleſſed of Melchiſedech, Gen. 14. 20. And then after all theſe works of faith, the Scripture ſaith, That Abraham beleeved the Lord, and it was counted to him for righteouſneſſe, Geneſ. 15. 6. Wherefore even Abrahams godly works, iſſuing from his faith, are excluded from his juſtification.

Bellarmine anſwereth, that although Abraham at this time wrought many works by his faith, yet the Apoſtle taketh not exception againſt ſuch works, but thoſe onely that Abraham did without faith: for even the faithfull, that have faith, aliquando operantur non ex fide, ſometime doe worke, but not of faith; as when they ſinne, or doe any pure morall works, without relation to God: Bellarm. ibid.

Contra. 1. As for the ſinfull works of faithfull men, which wee denie not, but they may ſometime fall into, it is abſurd to thinke, that the Apoſtle excludeth any ſuch works: as though any man were ſo blind to thinke, that by his ſins or evill works, hee might be juſtified. What meaneth the Jeſuite, to give an inſtance of the ſinfull works of Abraham, or any other faithfull man, as though they ever came in queſtion, in the matter of juſtification?

Rom. 14. 23. 2 As for other works of faithfull men, if they be good and vertuous, they are of faith: for whatſoever is not of faith is ſin, Rom. 14. 23. but faith alwayes hath reſpect and relation to God: therefore whatſoever faithfull men doe well, it commeth of faith, and a good conſcience. All, whatſoever elſe in them, is ſin, and ſo commeth not within the compaſſe of this queſtion.

Philip. 3. 8. 3 Saint Paul, when hee ſaith, That I may bee found, not having mine owne righteouſneſſe, &c. doth not ſpeake onely of ſuch works, as hee did before hee was called, but even of thoſe which hee did ſince hee was an Apoſtle: For whom I have counted all things loſſe, and doe judge them to bee dung, that I might win Chriſt. Hee ſaith not onely, I have counted, as ſpeaking of the time paſt, but I doe.

2 Tim. 4. 8. Bellarmine anſwereth, that the Apoſtle could in no wiſe underſtand his works done after his calling, to judge them as dung, becauſe he ſaith, that for ſuch works, there was laid up a crowne of righteouſneſſe, Nunquid Deus coronaret ſtercora? Should God crowne dung? Bellarm. cap. 19.

Rom. 6. 23. Contra. Firſt, Saint Paul doth not ſimplie call theſe works dung, or loſſe, but in compariſon: I count all things loſſe, for the excellent knowledge ſake of Chriſt. Secondly, God crowneth the works of his Saints, not for the worthineſſe of them, which indeed are but as dung, in reſpect of the excellencie of reward: but we with our works are crowned for the worthineſſe of Chriſt, Life eternall is the gift of God, through Ieſus Chriſt our Lord.

John 6. 29. Rom. 3. 27. 4 Now where the Jeſuite objecteth, that faith is a worke, and that there is a law alſo of faith: Ergo, every worke, and every law is not excluded from juſtification. We anſwer: Firſt, that faith is indeed a worke, but not any of our works, it is the worke of God wrought in us onely by his ſpirit: This is the worke of God, that ye beleeve in him, &c. Secondly, faith juſtifieth not as it is a worke, but in reſpect of that propertie, which it hath to apprehend and applie the juſtice of Chriſt: it juſtifieth not by it owne worthineſſe and dignitie, but by the worthineſſe of the object. Thirdly, we exclude not every law, but legem operum, the law of works: but the law of faith is not the law of works: for the Apoſtle doth diſtinguiſh them.

Argum. 2. The Scripture aſcribeth juſtification to faith and beleefe: Whoſoever beleeveth in him Ioh. 3.16.
ſhall have everlaſting life. Thy faith hath ſaved thee. Wee are ſaved through faith: Ergo, faith onely Luk. 7.50.
juſtifieth. Epheſ. 2.8.

Anſw. Though faith onely be named, yet faith onely doth not juſtifie: for by the ſame reaſon, becauſe other vertues ſometimes are onely named, as, Many ſins are forgiven her, for ſhe loved much, And, Luk. 7.47.
We are ſaved by hope; As notwithſtanding, we cannot gather, that love or hope doe juſtifie without Rom. 8.24.
faith, although they bee named alone: ſo the contrarie cannot be concluded, by the ſole naming of faith, Bellarm. cap. 20.

Contra. Firſt, that neither hope, nor charitie do juſtifie in whole, or in part, neither that it can be gathered by theſe places, wee have ſhewed before in our anſwer to their ſecond and third argument againſt juſtification by faith. Secondly, wee are able to bring forth a place of Scripture, where faith onely is required. Chriſt ſaid unto the ruler of the Synagogue, whoſe daughter was now dead: Crede Luk. 8.50.
tantum, Beleeve onely, and ſhe ſhall be made whole.

Bellarmine anſwereth: That Chriſt ſpeaketh not here of juſtification or remiſſion of ſins, but onely of doing a miracle, in raiſing up one which was dead: and faith alone is able to obtaine a miracle, though it be not to juſtifie, Bellarm.

Contra. 1. Our adverſaries affirme juſtifying faith, and the faith of miracles in ſubſtance to bee all one, and that it is one and the ſelfe ſame faith, whereby miracles are wrought, and the ſoules of men juſtified, Bellarm. cap. 5. Yea, the Rhemiſts confeſſe, that the faith of miracles have more fervour, devotion, and confident truſt, than the juſtifying faith, Annot. 1 Cor. 13.9. If then faith onely be ſufficient to worke miracles, why not alſo to juſtifie, ſeeing, in their opinion, they are operations of the ſame faith? Nay, if to worke miracles, as they ſay, be the more worthie thing: if faith onely ſuffice for the greater worke, much more for the leſſe.

2 Our Saviour Chriſt requireth no other faith of Iairus here, than hee doth of the father, whoſe ſon was poſſeſſed with a dumbe ſpirit, Mark. 9. Chriſt requireth of him to beleeve, that he was able Mark. 9.23. to caſt out the evill ſpirit; and of this man, to beleeve, that hee was able to raiſe his daughter: But that faith was not ſufficient onely for miracles, but for all other purpoſes: If thou canſt beleeve, all things are poſſible to him that beleeveth, If all things, then not onely the health of the bodie, but the ſalvation of the ſoule: Ergo, this onely faith here required, where our Saviour ſaith: Crede tantum, Beleeve onely, is ſufficient to obtaine all things.

3 This, crede tantum, beleeve onely, was no other faith, than that which was in the woman, healed of the bloudie iſſue: for ſhee beleeved onely that Chriſt was able to doe it. But Chriſt ſaith unto her: Fides tua te ſalvam fecit, Thy faith hath ſaved thee, which the Jeſuite himſelfe confeſſeth to be Luk. 1.48.
underſtood of the health both of her bodie and ſoule: Fides tribuit utramque ſanitatem; He aſcribeth to faith both kinds of health. And in the ſame forme of words our Saviour ſaith to the woman, whoſe ſins were forgiven, Thy faith hath ſaved thee, Bellar. cap. 17. If all theſe places ſpeake of the ſame faith, Luk. 7.50.
which Chriſt commandeth, in ſaying, crede tantum, beleeve onely; then this faith, to beleeve onely, is ſufficient to procure both bodily and ghoſtly health.

Argum. 3. We are juſtified freely by grace, therefore not of works, but by faith: By grace are yee Rom. 3.24.
ſaved through faith. To him that worketh not, but beleeveth in him that juſtifieth the ungodly, his faith Epheſ. 2.8.
is counted for righteouſneſſe; We are then juſtified freely by faith and beleefe without works: Ergo, Rom. 4.5.
by faith onely.

Anſw. 1. Juſtification freely by grace, excludeth not all works or merits, but thoſe works onely which doe properly merit, ex condigno, of condignitie and worthineſſe, not thoſe which doe merit ex congruo, of congruitie: there are other diſpoſitions then beſide faith which goe before juſtification, which doe not merit of condignitie, that is, for their worthineſſe abſolutely, yet of congruitie, in ſome ſort they doe merit: And yet for all this kinde of meriting, our juſtification ſhall bee free by grace, Bellar. cap. 21.

Contra. 1. Before we have faith, there is no place at all for merits: for without faith it is impoſſible to pleaſe God, where God is not pleaſed, there is no meriting: Ergo, without faith no man can merit. Hebr. 11.6.
Thoſe diſpoſitions then, which goe before faith and juſtification, cannot merit any thing at all, and therefore not ſo much, as, de congruo, of congruitie. 2 The leaſt degree of meriting in the world, taketh away the freeneſſe of the gift: if juſtification come freely by grace, it cannot be any way merited: for to him that worketh (ſaith the Apoſtle) the wages is not counted by favour, but by debt, and Rom. 4.5. that we might know, that our juſtification is altogether of Gods meere mercie, the Apoſtle uſeth two words expreſſing the ſame thing: hee ſaith; we are juſtified by grace, yea and that freely: gratis per gratiam, freely by grace.

Anſw. 2. Juſtification freely by grace excludeth not all works and merits, but thoſe onely which are of our ſelves, thoſe merits which wee worke by grace, and are of God, may ſtand very well with grace: for as juſtification by grace excludeth not faith, becauſe faith alſo is of grace, ſo it excludeth not other works, becauſe they alſo are of grace, Bellar. ibid.

Contra. 1. Not onely the works, which men are able to doe by their owne ſtrength, are excluded from juſtification, but even the works of grace: Not by the works of righteouſneſſe, but according to his mercie hee ſaved us; Mercie then ſhutteth out all works, even holy and righteous works. Tit. 3.5.

We are ſaved by grace,&c. not of works, yea good works, which God hath prepared for us to walke in. Grace Epheſ. 2. 8, 10. therefore admitteth not ſo much as good works, in the matter of juſtification. See more of this before, *reſponſ. ad argum.*1. 2 Though faith be wrought in us by grace, yet it ſtandeth together with grace, in the benefit of juſtification, the one as the efficient, the other as the inſtrument thereof: faith meriteth not or deſerveth any thing towards juſtification, but onely applieth Chriſt crucified: which office of applying is proper onely to faith; it is not common either unto works or any other gift beſide: therefore they are excluded. And againe, the Scripture joyneth grace and faith together: By Epheſ. 2. 8. grace are ye ſaved by faith, but no where doe we find grace and works coupled together, in our juſtification. And this may be a ſufficient cauſe why works are excluded, and not faith.

Anſw. 3. The Rhemiſts grant, that the beginning of our juſtification, which they call the firſt juſtification, is meerely of Gods grace, neither can wee have any acceptable works, before wee are juſtified: but in the ſecond juſtification, which is the increaſe of the former juſtice, a man may merit by good works, *Annot. Rom.*2. 3. Saint Paul in this place ſpeaketh of the firſt juſtification, not of the ſecond.

Contra. This is but a late and new deviſe, of the firſt and ſecond juſtification, as afterward wee will ſhew in the proper place. The Scripture teacheth us, that not onely the beginning of our righte- Epheſ. 2. 5. 6. ouſneſſe, but the finiſhing, and perfecting of it, is onely by grace in Chriſt: When wee were dead in our ſins, he hath quickned us together in Chriſt, by whoſe grace yee are ſaved, and hath raiſed us up, and made us ſit together in heavenly places. Wee ſee that this ſalvation by grace bringeth us up to heaven: Ergo, both the firſt and ſecond juſtification are of grace, for they can bring us no further than to heaven.

Argum. 4. The Scripture teſtifieth, that all which beleeve are juſtified and ſaved; which ſhould John 3. 16. not be infallibly true, if faith onely did not juſtifie: as, That whoſoever beleeveth in him ſhould not pe- Act. 10. 43. riſh: Through his name, all that beleeve in him ſhall receive remiſſion of ſins: By him every one, that be- Act. 13. 39. leeveth, is juſtified.

Anſw. 1. The meaning of theſe places may be this: Every one that beleeveth ſhall be ſaved, that is, none without faith can be ſaved: and none is juſtified, except he beleeve, Bellar. c. 22.

Contra. 1. You are a goodly interpreter to expound an affirmative by a negative: as to ſay, every one that beleeveth ſhall be ſaved: that is, he that beleeveth not, ſhall not be ſaved. This is rather a conſe- Mark. 16. 16. quence, than the ſenſe of the former: as Mark. 16. 16. Chriſt placeth them together, having firſt ſaid, he that beleeveth ſhall be ſaved, he addeth, he that beleeveth not ſhall be damned. This is not the expo- Iohn 5. ſition of the former, but a concluſion inferred upon it. 2 Where Chriſt ſaith, Iohn 5. Hee that beleeveth, &c. hath paſſed from death to life: will you expound it thus, he that beleeveth not, hath not paſſed, &c. thus in your ſenſe, hath not paſſed, and hath paſſed, ſhall one expound the other: Such kinde of interpreting is moſt groſſe.

Anſw. 2. By all, which beleeve, are underſtood all ſorts of people, whether Jewes or Gentiles, that they are all ſaved by faith, Bellarm. ibid.

Contra. 1. If this ſenſe be admitted, all that beleeve, that is, all ſorts of men that beleeve ſhall bee ſaved: the ſame concluſion ſtill remaineth, that faith to all ſorts of men both Jewes and Gentiles is ſufficient to ſalvation. 2 How all is to bee expounded, our Saviour ſheweth, Preach the Goſpell to Mark. 16. 15. 16. every creature, he that ſhall beleeve and be baptized, ſhall be ſaved: but the Goſpell is not preached onely in generall to all ſorts nor yet Baptiſme miniſtred, but in particular alſo: Ergo, every particular man that beleeveth is ſaved. 3 And as hee that beleeveth not is damned, ſo he that beleeveth is ſaved: but every man in particular not beleeving is damned, Ergo.

Anſw. 3. Theſe Scriptures doe prove that faith doth juſtifie, if other things be not wanting, it ſufficeth not alone, but doth juſtifie for the part thereof; as likewiſe hope, charitie, for their part, Bellarm. ibid.

Contra. 1. The want or abſence of faith onely condemneth, he that beleeveth not is damned, Ergo, Mark. 16. 16. the preſence of faith onely ſaveth: He that beleeveth and is baptized ſhall be ſaved. 2 Baptiſme is the Rom. 4. 11. ſeale of the righteouſneſſe of faith, as Saint Paul ſaith of circumciſion, Ergo, faith onely ſealed in Act. 10. 43. Baptiſme ſufficeth. 3 Whereas it is ſaid, through his name and by him every one that beleeveth, ſhall be Act. 13. 39. ſaved, we reaſon thus, Chriſts name onely juſtifieth us; but faith onely, neither hope nor charitie, applieth Chriſt: Ergo, faith in Chriſt onely ſufficeth.

Auguſtine ſaith, Intelligenda eſt gratia Dei per Jeſum Chriſtum Dominum noſtrum, qua liberantur homines à malo; Wee muſt underſtand the grace of God by Jeſus Chriſt, by which men are onely delivered from evill: *De corrept. & grat. cap.*2. If all be of grace, then nothing is of works. That alſo is a knowne ſaying of Auguſtine: Opera non praecedunt juſtificandum, ſed ſequuntur juſtificatum; Works goe not before unto juſtification, but follow in him that is alreadie juſtified. If a man therefore be juſtified, before works come, then works helpe not at all toward his juſtification. Againe he ſaith, Quantalibet fuiſſe virtutis antiquos juſtos praedices, non eos ſalvos fecit, niſi fides Mediatoris; How vertuous ſoever you report the ancient righteous perſons to have beene, they were not ſaved but by the faith of the Mediator, Lib. 1. cont. 2. *epiſt. Pelag. cap.*21. Likewiſe, Ex epiſtol. Auguſtin. & 5. Epiſcoporum ad Innocentium: Fide evacuata, quae hominis juſtitia remaneat? -- Chriſtus manens Deus, homo factus, refecit ipſe, quod fecit; Faith being evacuated, what righteouſneſſe remaineth in man?

Chriſt remaining ſtill God, being made man, did make againe, that is, reſtore what he had made. If no righteouſneſſe remaine where there is no faith, then all mans righteouſneſſe before God, is by faith in Chriſt.

The fathers are plentifull witneſſes for juſtification onely by faith.

1 Origen in c. 3. epiſt. ad Roman. Dicit Apoſtolus ſufficere ſolius fidei juſtificationem: The Apoſtle ſaith, that the juſtification onely of faith ſufficeth.

2 Hilar. can. 8. in Matth. Fides ſola juſtificat; Faith onely doth juſtifie.

3 Baſil. homil. de humilitat. Novit ſe ſola fide in Chriſtum juſtificatum; He doth know himſelfe onely juſtified by faith.

4 Ambroſ. in c. 3. ad Roman. Sola fide juſtificati ſunt dono Dei; They are juſtified by faith alone by the gift of God: in cap. 9. Sola fides poſita eſt ad ſalutem; Onely faith is appointed to ſalvation.

5 Chryſoſt. homil. de fide. Si credis fidei, cur alia infers, quaſi fides juſtificare non ſufficiat ſola? If you beleeve faith, why doe you bring in other things, as though faith onely ſufficed not to juſtifie?

6 Cyril. lib. 10. in Ioan. c. 18. Hominem per ſolam fidem inhærere Chriſto; That a man by faith only doth cleave to Chriſt.

7 Bernard. ſerm. 22. in Cantic. Solam juſtificatus per fidem pacem habebit apud te; Being juſtified only by faith he ſhall have peace with thee.

Anſw. Bellarmine to all theſe places anſwereth, that the fathers, in ſaying, Faith onely juſtifieth, exclude not all other things beſide; but either externall works onely, as Origen. 1. Chryſoſt. 5. or the works of the law without faith, as Hilar. 2. Baſil. 3. or the ceremonies of the law, as Ambroſe loc. 4. For otherwiſe Chryſoſtome ſaith, Non ſolum fide opus eſt, ſed charitate; Wee have not need onely of faith but of charitie, hom. 1. in 1 Timoth. Bellarm. c. 25.

Contra. Firſt, that charitie is neceſſarie, and other graces of the ſpirit beſide, we grant, but yet faith onely hath this propertie to juſtifie: for Saint Paul having taught, that we are juſtified by grace, not by the works of righteouſneſſe, yet exhorteth, that they which have beleeved in God, ſhould be carefull to ſhew forth good works; theſe things are good and profitable to men: though he aſcribe juſtification onely to faith, yet he urgeth works as neceſſarie and profitable. Tit. 3. 5. 7.

Secondly, that the fathers excluded all other things whatſoever, from the worke of juſtification, imputing it onely to faith, it is evident.

1 Chryſoſtome ſaid before, Cur alia infers? Why doe ye bring in any other thing to juſtifie beſide faith?

2 Auguſtine before alleaged, Fide evacuata, qua hominis juſtitia remanet? Faith being evacuate, what other juſtice of man remaineth? epiſt. 95.

3 Cyprian: Fidem tantum prodeſſe, & tantum nos poſſe, quantum credimus; That faith onely profiteth; (to ſalvation) and that we onely can doe ſo much, as we beleeve, lib. 3. ad Quirin. c. 42.

4 But Saint Ambroſe of all other is moſt plentifull: Firſt, in Luc. 13. Fides regnum cœlorum eſt: itaq; qui habet fidem, habet & regnum; Faith is the Kingdome of heaven; he then that hath faith, hath the Kingdome. Secondly, in 3. ad Roman. Beatos dicit, de quibus hoc ſanxit Deus, ut ſine labore & aliqua obſervatione ſola fide juſtificentur apud Deum; Hee calleth them bleſſed, of whom God hath decreed, that without any labour or obſervation, they ſhould be juſtified onely by faith. And againe, Manifeſtè beati ſunt, quibus ſine labore, vel opere aliquo remittuntur iniquitates, nulla ab his requiſita pœnitentiæ opera, niſi tantum ut credant; They are manifeſtly bleſſed, whoſe ſins are remitted without their labour, no worke of repentance being required, but onely that they ſhould beleeve, &c. Here Ambroſe excludeth even the godly and religious works of repentance from juſtification. Thirdly, in 9. ad Roman. Convenit, ut in ſolo nomine Domini conditoris conſequatur ſalutem creatura, hoc eſt, per fidem; It is convenient, that the creature onely ſhould obtaine ſalvation in the name of the Creator, that is, by faith, &c. I reaſon from hence thus; as the name onely of the Creator juſtifieth; ſo faith onely in his name: but his Name alone, without any other thing whatſoever juſtifieth: Ergo, Faith onely in his name, all other things excluded. Fourthly, Ibid. Nullum opus dicit legis, ſed ſolam fidem dandam in cauſa Chriſti; He ſaith no worke of the law, but onely faith is to bee given in the cauſe of Chriſt, &c. If faith onely is to be exhibited in the cauſe of Chriſt, what elſe is required, I ſee not. Fifthly, in 2 Cor. 3. Lex ſpiritus dat libertatem, ſolam fidem poſcens; The law of the ſpirit doth give libertie, requiring faith alone, &c. If the ſpirit require onely faith, who is it that ſhall require any thing elſe? Sixthly, in Epheſ. 6. Arma Dei fides ſtabilis, per quam ſolam ſemper victus Sathanas; The armour of God is a ſtable faith, by the which onely Sathan alwayes hath beene overcome, &c. As by faith alone wee eſcape the condemnation of Sathan, ſo by faith alone wee obtaine juſtification by Chriſt. Seventhly, in 2 Timoth. 2. Fundamentum Dei fides quæ continet, quæ promiſit Deus; The foundation of God is faith, which containeth all that God hath promiſed, &c. one foundation may ſuffice for one houſe; if faith be this foundation, who dare take upon him to lay another? Eighthly, in 3. ad Galath. Sciunt Abraham ſine operibus legis per ſolam fidem juſtificatum; They know that Abraham without the works of the law was juſtified onely by faith, &c. and by works of the law are underſtood all good works and graces, and not the law of Moſes onely; as Hierome expoundeth, upon theſe words; No fleſh is juſtified by the works of the law; Quod ne de lege Moſis tantum dictum putes, &c. Which leſt you ſhould thinke is ſpoken only of the law of Moſes, and not of all Gods commandements, the ſame Apoſtle writeth, ſaying, I conſent to the law of God in the inward man, &c. ad Cteſiphont. Thus then have we the moſt cleere teſtimonies of the fathers, for juſtification by faith alone, delivered from this popiſh writers corrupt gloſſes.

And for further evidence. 1 this was the ancient faith of the Greeke Church. Baſilius : this is true glorying in God -- when one acknowledgeth that he is deſtitute of true juſtice, verum ſola in Chriſtum fide juſtificatum eſſe; but is juſtified by faith alone in Chriſt, Epiphan. Ex fide juſtitia citra opera legis; Righteouſneſſe is of faith beſide the works of the law.

Fourthly, we want not teſtimonie here from themſelves, *decret. part. 3. diſt. 4. c. 99. If Chriſt onely bee the foundation, and faith holdeth this foundation, then faith ſufficeth, (not onely without Baptiſme, but all other things beſide excluded) to juſtification.

Peter Lombard. lib. 2. diſt. 26. d. Hic aperte oſtenditur, quod fides eſt cauſa juſtificationis; Here it is evidently ſhewed, that faith is the cauſe of juſtification: lib. 3. diſt. 19. a. Nemo liberatur à damnatione quæ per Adam facta eſt, niſi per fidem Ieſu Chriſti; No man is delivered from damnation wrought by Adam, but by faith of Jeſus Chriſt, &c. If not otherwiſe than by faith; then faith alone doth it.

Ulenberg. Cauſ. 14. p. 462. Colon. 1589.

There is one Ulenbergius a Pariſh-Prieſt of Colen, who ſaith, he found a booke in a Chappell, ſuppoſed to be written by Anſelme, preſcribing a forme of viſiting the ſicke, ending with this exhortation: In hac ſola morte fiduciam tuam conſtitue, in nulla alia refiduciam habe, &c. Place thy confidence onely in this death, and in nothing elſe, with this onely protect thy ſelfe, &c. Thus, whatſoever their Schoole doctrine is, they teach at the houre of death, to cleave onely unto Chriſt by faith.

Laſtly, for this holy truth, that wee are juſtified by faith onely in Chriſt, have many holy Martyrs ſuffered perſecution and death: Patrick Hamelton condemned for affirming that a man is onely juſtified by faith in Chriſt: Fox. pag. 974. col. 2. artic. 2. Iohn Tewkesbury, for the ſame article with others, put to death, pag. 1026. col. 1. articul. 5. Alſo Iohn Lambert holy Martyr, pag. 1117. artic. 31. Likewiſe R. Farar ſuffered holy Martyrdome, for holding, that we are juſtified before God by faith onely, and that hope and charitie are not neceſſarily required to juſtification, pag. 1554. col. 2 articul. 5.

articul. 5. with many holy Martyrs, who confirmed and ſealed this truth with their bloud : Which evidence our adverſaries ſhall never be able to ſhew for the contrarie doctrine.

An appendix to this article, whether faith be the beginning onely of juſtification.

The Papiſts.

WE are ſaid to bee juſtified by faith, becauſe faith is the beginning onely, the foundation and root of juſtification, Concil. Trident. ſeſſ. 6. cap. 8. The ſame alſo is the opinion of Bellarmine, Fidem eſſe initium juſtificationis; That faith is the beginning of our juſtification, *Lib. 1. de juſtificat. cap.*13.

55. Error.

Argum. 1. The Apoſtle ſaith, He that commeth to God, muſt beleeve that God is, &c. Ergo, faith is but a beginning and preparation to juſtification : for he muſt have it, that is, in comming to God, Bellarm. ibid.

Hebr. 11.6.

Anſw. Firſt, it followeth not, faith is the beginning of juſtification : Ergo, it is onely the beginning: he that commeth to God muſt have faith, and he that is come alreadie, muſt have faith alſo. In a commer and beginner, there is required a comming and beginning faith : and his faith muſt grow up, and increaſe with him : Lord I beleeve, ſaith the carefull parent in the Goſpell, here is the beginning of his faith; helpe my unbeleefe, here is the increaſe : Secondly, neither is it neceſſarie to underſtand, this comming unto God onely for the beginning of our calling, but for the whole vocation of a Chriſtian : as is evident by theſe places : Come unto me all ye that are wearie, and I will refreſh you, He that commeth unto me ſhall not hunger, Hee that commeth to me, I caſt not away, Hee that is taught of God, and hath learned of the Father, commeth to me. But theſe are not fruits onely of the beginning of our calling, namely, to be refreſhed, not to hunger, not to be caſt off, to be taught of God : but they proceed from the very perfection of our vocation and juſtification : Ergo.

Mark. 9.24.

John 6. 35.37.
verſ. 45.

Argum. 2. To as many as received him he gave them power to be the ſons of God, even to them that beleeve in his name : Ergo, they that beleeve in Chriſt, are not yet the ſons of God, but have a power and poſſibilitie onely to be : faith then is a preparation to juſtification, rather than the thing it ſelfe, Bellarm. ibid.

John 1. 12.

Anſw. Firſt, they that beleeve in Chriſt are alreadie the ſons of God, as it followeth in the next verſe, which are borne of God : and, Whoſoever beleeveth that Ieſus is the Chriſt, is borne of God : He ſaith not, ſhall be borne, or may be borne, but is borne : but he that is borne of God, is alreadie the ſon of God. Secondly, He that beleeveth hath everlaſting life, and hath paſſed from death to life, But none are heires of life, but children : If ye be children, then heires alſo, &c. Ergo, he that beleeveth, is really and actually already the child of God. Thirdly, As many as are led by the Spirit of God, are the ſons of God, But they which beleeve are led by the Spirit of God, for the Father draweth them, and they are borne not of bloud, nor of the will of fleſh, nor of the will of man, but of God. And he that is not borne of the fleſh, is borne of the ſpirit; Wherefore he that beleeveth, is the childe of God, he hath not onely poſſibilitie to be. Fourthly, this place then cannot carrie any ſuch ſenſe, as the Jeſuite inferreth upon it, for then the Scripture ſhould be contrarie to it ſelfe; that God giveth a facultie and abilitie onely to them that beleeve, to bee the ſons of God : but this place declareth rather, from whence faith receiveth this high dignitie, power and vertue, to make us the ſons of God : that it commeth not of our ſelves, nor of the worthineſſe of faith, but of the grace and free gift of God : as Saint Paul elſe where ſheweth, We are ſaved by grace through faith, not of our ſelves, &c.

The Proteſtants.

FAith is not onely the beginning and foundation of our juſtification, but both the increaſe, and perfection, and full accompliſhment thereof.

Argum. 1. Saint Paul ſaith, The Goſpell is the power of God to ſalvation, &c. for by it, the righteouſneſſe of God is revealed from faith to faith. Faith then leadeth us to faith : It is not then onely the beginning, but the increaſe of righteouſneſſe. The Scripture alſo ſaith, The juſt ſhall live by faith : But we live not by juſtification begun onely, but perfected and finiſhed : Ergo, our full juſtification is by faith.

Rom. 1. 17.

Anſw. We live by faith, that is, faith perfected, and formed by charitie : And we are led from faith to faith, that is, from an imperfect to a perfect faith, which is perfected by charitie, Bellarm. lib. 1. de juſtificat. cap. 20.

Contra. That there are degrees of faith we grant : there is a beginning and increaſe of faith : I beleeve, helpe my unbeleefe : There is a great faith, There is a little or ſmall faith, as a graine of Muſtard ſeed. But that faith is formed or perfected by charitie, we utterly deny it, as an untruth contrarie to Scripture, as ſhall be ſhewed more at large in the proper place : Faith indeed worketh by charitie, but the ſubſtance of faith is one thing, the working another : love concurreth with faith in working, it is no part of the eſſence, or being of faith : love is an effect of faith : That Chriſt may dwell in your hearts by faith, that being grounded and rooted in love, &c. The dwelling of Chriſt by faith in us, maketh us

Mark. 9. 24.
Matth. 15. 28.
Matth. 17. 20.
Galath. 5. 6.
Epheſ. 3. 17.

to be grounded in love: If love then be an effect, and follow faith, it is rather perfected by faith than a perfector of faith.

Argum. 2. Abraham beleeved God, and it was counted to him for righteouſneſſe: But Abraham at this time was no novice, or young beginner in faith, but a perfect righteous man: Ergo, of faith is not onely the beginning, but perfection of our righteouſneſſe.

Rom. 4. 3. Anſw. We ſay not, that faith is ſuch a beginning of juſtification, as that it goeth away, when perfection commeth: but it is ſuch a beginning and foundation, as the groundworke of the houſe which though it be the beginning of the building, yet it remaineth, when the building is perfected and finiſhed. Therefore Abrahams juſtice was both begun, increaſed and perfected by faith: but not only by faith: this we ſay, that faith is not able alone perfectly to juſtifie the beleever, Bellarm. ibid.

Contra. 1. We take this kindly at the Jeſuites hands, that he will grant us thus much, that faith is the foundation of juſtification: the foundation is the principall part of the houſe, and ſo by his confeſſion, faith is the principall in our juſtification: yet the Rhemiſts flatly denie it: for they ſay in theſe very words, That works are more principall than faith in the matter of juſtification, Annot. Iam. 2. ſect. 7. It were good for them firſt to bee agreed, before they deale againſt us, leſt they have worke enough among themſelves. 2 Bellarmine in aſcribing to faith the beginning, increaſe and perfection of righteouſneſſe, though not to faith alone, herein diſſenteth from his ghoſtly fathers of the Tridentine Chapter, which as he ſaith, Nihil amplius fidei dederit, quam ut eſſet initium juſtificationis; Did give no more unto faith, than to be the beginning onely of juſtification, Bellarmin. cap. 13. initio cap. 3. That faith doth perfectly juſtifie, we have proved at large before, and it may appeare further thus: He that is at peace with God, is fully and perfectly juſtified, his conſcience cleered, and his ſins remitted, but by faith we have peace of conſcience: Being juſtified by faith, we have peace toward God, Ergo, by faith we are fully and perfectly juſtified.

Rom. 5. 1. Ioh. 6. 29. And further, firſt Auguſtine upon theſe words: This is the worke of God, that ye beleeve, &c. writeth thus: Si juſtitia eſt opus Dei, quomodo erit opus Dei, ut credatur in eum, niſi ipſa ſit juſtitia, credere in eum? If juſtice or righteouſneſſe be the worke of God, how is it the worke of God to beleeve in him, unleſſe it be righteouſneſſe it ſelfe to beleeve in him? ſerm. de tempor. 237. See then, it is not initium juſtitia credere, ſed ipſa juſtitia, not the beginning of juſtice to beleeve, but juſtice and righteouſneſſe it ſelfe.

56. Error. THey deny inſtantly, that men are juſtified by the onely imputation of the righteouſneſſe of Chriſt, or by the remiſſion of ſins: Trident. Concil. ſeſſ.6. can. 11. or that wee are formally made juſt by the righteouſneſſe of Chriſt: *can.*10. but hold them accurſed that ſo affirme and teach. This then is their ſentence, that Vnica formalis cauſa, eſt juſtitia Dei, qua nos juſtos facit, quam quiſque in ſe recipit: The onely formall cauſe of our juſtification is the juſtice of God, whereby wee are not reputed juſt, but are made juſt indeed. This is that juſtice which everie man hath within himſelfe, and is inherent in him: ſeſſ.6. cap.7. Sic Rhemiſt. annot. Rom.2. ſect. 4. Bellarmine alſo conſenteth: Lib. 2. *de juſtificat. cap.*2. Firſt, let us ſee their arguments for inherent juſtice: Secondly, againſt the imputative juſtice of Chriſt.

Rom.5.19. *Argum.*1. As by one mans diſobedience many were made ſinners: ſo by the obedience of one ſhall many be made righteous: At Adami inobedientia verè non imputative nobis peccatum impreſſit: But Adams diſobedience did truly print ſin in our nature, not imputatively only: Ergo, we are truly made righteous by Chriſt, not by imputation only: *Bellar.cap.*3.*arg.*1. This argument Bellarmine taketh to be ſo firme, that he ſaith: Videtur nullam reſponſionem admittere: It cannot be anſwered. And therefore he doth inculcate the ſame argument often, even thrice together in this one queſtion: Once, *cap.*3.*arg.*1. Againe, *cap.*7. *arg.*2. And againe, *arg.*6. Where he reaſoneth thus: Chriſt reſtoreth that to us which we loſt in Adam, but we loſt true inherent juſtice in Adam: Ergo, we recover true inherent juſtice by Chriſt.

Anſw. 1. This argument concludeth nothing, unleſſe hee will have the Apoſtles compariſon betweene the diſobedience of Adam. and the obedience of Chriſt; our fall by the one, and our reſtitution by the other, to agree in all things: but that cannot be, for all men in the world are borne in Adams ſin, yet all men are not made righteous by Chriſt. Againe, Adams diſobedience brought us from Paradiſe, Chriſts obedience ſhall not bring us to Paradiſe, but to Heaven: Ergo, this compariſon holdeth not in everie reſpect.

Verſ.15,16. 2 The Apoſtle himſelfe, in this ſimilitude, ſheweth ſome difference and diſſimilitude: The gift is not ſo as the offence; the fault came of one offence to condemnation, the gift is of many offences to juſtification. verſ. 16. And againe, The gift is not ſo as the offence, verſ. 15. For, if through the offence of one many be dead, much more the grace of God, &c. That is, Chriſt is much more able to ſave many by his righteouſneſſe, than Adam was to condemne many by his diſobedience. We ſee then that this compariſon, As by one mans diſobedience, &c. ſo by the obedience of one, &c. is not to be urged in everie part, but wherein onely the compariſon ſtandeth. And if it hold not in theſe points, which the Apoſtle himſelfe ſetteth downe, why ſhould it hold in this which the Jeſuite urgeth, ſeeing it is not that point wherein the Apoſtle compareth them?

3 The Apoſtle then compareth them together, in reſpect of the worke or the thing done, many are made ſinners by one, and many are made righteous by one, but not in reſpect of the manner: that righteouſneſſe ſhould be conveyed from Chriſt after the ſame manner, as ſinne was propagated from Adam: for the Apoſtle ſaith, that in Adam all ſinned, that is, verily and indeed in him they are ſinners: But ſpeaking of the righteouſneſſe of Chriſt, he ſaith, *It is a gift, and of the abundance of grace, verſ.*17. Rom 3.22. And how this gift is conveyed, he ſheweth where he ſaith, The righteouſneſſe of God by the faith of Ieſus Chriſt unto all, and upon all that beleeve: This gift of righteouſneſſe is by faith in Chriſt.

4 If yet notwithſtanding the Jeſuite will ſtand ſtill ſtrictly upon the equalitie and likeneſſe of this compariſon in all points: let him remember that he defineth originall ſin to be nothing elſe, but privatio & carentia juſtitia originalis, to bee a privation or wanting of originall juſtice: *De remiſſ. grat. lib.*5. *cap.*19. Then by the ſame reaſon it may bee inferred by this compariſon, that as Adams ſinne brought nothing but a privation of juſtice: ſo Chriſts righteouſneſſe ſhould bring nothing to us, but a privation of originall ſin and unrighteouſneſſe. But Chriſt doth not onely free us from ſin, but alſo maketh us righteous: as Auguſtine ſaith, Non ſolum peccata per Chriſtum interfecta ſunt, ſed juſtitia tributa: Our ſins are not onely ſlaine by Chriſt, but righteouſneſſe alſo is given.

5 Yet ſomewhat better to content the Jeſuite, wee grant alſo a ſimilitude even in this reſpect betweene Chriſt and Adam, in the manner of transferring ſinne on the one ſide, and righteouſneſſe on the other: for as there are two parts of originall ſinne, the guilt of Adams ſinne propagated to his poſteritie, and the depravation of our nature: ſo there is a two-fold juſtice: there is a juſtice imputed unto us by faith, which is the juſtice of Chriſt; there is a juſtice inherent and abiding in us, which is our owne juſtice: And as Adams ſin entring into his poſteritie made them ſubject to death and condemnation, demnation,and wholly corrupted and depraved their nature;ſo it is the righteouſneſſe only of Chriſt which freeth us from condemnation, which worketh in us an imperfect inherent righteouſneſſe, whereby we lead an holy life, but are not thereby juſtified before God: And as Adams ſin is propagated by the naturall and carnall generation, ſo Chriſts juſtice is ſpiritually derived unto us by the ſpirituall birth which is by faith.

Contra Iulian. lib.1.

6 Wherein this compariſon holdeth betweene Adam and Chriſt, in what reſpect Adam is ſaid to be a forme of him that was to come, that is, of Chriſt; Auguſtine verie well ſheweth in theſe words: Adam forma eſt futuri, i. Chriſti, quoniam ſicut ille ex ſemetipſo naſcentibus licet non manducaverint de ligno, factus eſt cauſa mortis, quæ per cibum inducta eſt; ita Chriſtus, qui ex ipſo ſunt, tametſi nihil juſte egerunt, factus eſt proviſor juſtitiæ quam per crucem nobis omnibus condonavit: Adam is the figure of him that was to come, namely Chriſt, becauſe as he became the cauſe of death, which came in by the forbidden meat, to thoſe which were borne of him, although they did not eat of the tree: ſo Chriſt to thoſe which are of him, although they had done no righteouſneſſe, yet provided for them righteouſneſſe,which he purchaſed by his croſſe, and gave unto them, &c. Adam then may be a figure of Chriſt, and the compariſon may hold without inherent juſtice: for the juſtice given to us, is the juſtice of Chriſts croſſe, and we are made juſt without doing juſtly,that is, without our owne juſtice: as Auguſtine here ſaith.

7 Now laſtly, whereas Bellarmine would have Chriſt to reſtore whatſoever is loſt in Adam: by the ſame reaſon, by Chriſt men ſhould be exempted in this life from ſin and death: for Adam before his fall was ſubject to neither. Our anſwer then is this: that indeed we finde more in Chriſt than we loſt in Adam: he doth reſtore us to a far more excellent eſtate than man was created in: But this our happineſſe is but begun in this life, the perfection and accompliſhment of it, is reſerved for the life to come. And thus, I truſt, this unanſwerable argument is anſwered: our ſtout champion then was ſomewhat too forward in triumphing before the victorie.

1. Argum. 2. Firſt, Abel by faith obtained to be righteous: and Noah likewiſe, verſ. 7. theſe were juſt by their inherent juſtice, becauſe they did righteous works: as Abel did offer ſacrifice; Noah prepared the Arke, &c. *Bellarm. arg.*5.

2. Secondly, *Rom.*8.29. He hath predeſtinate them to be made like the image of his Sonne: but Chriſt is juſt, not by an imputative, but an inherent juſtice: Ergo, ſo are his members.

3. Thirdly, *Rom.*6.5. We are graft in the ſimilitude of Chriſts death and reſurrection: but he truly died, and not putatively, or in opinion: Ergo, we alſo truly not putatively muſt dye unto ſin, &c.

4. Fourthly, S. Paul ſpeaketh of the ſpirit of adoption now preſent, and of the adoption by the redemption of our bodies, *Rom.*8.15,23. but the adoption or redemption of our bodies ſhall bee true, and not putative, or in opinion: Ergo, ſo is our adoption now. *Bellar. arg.*7.8.

1. Anſw. Firſt, Abel & Noah we grant had juſt and righteous works,which were fruits of their faith: but they were not by them juſtified before God, but it was the righteouſneſſe of faith, whereby they were juſt before God: the Apoſtle ſaith, Noe was made heire of the righteouſneſſe which is by faith.

2. Secondly,the conformitie between Chriſt and us ſtandeth not in our juſtification: for the juſtice of Chriſt was in him originall, but in us it is derived from him: but it conſiſteth in our ſanctification, as the Apoſtle ſheweth: Arme your ſelves with the ſame minde,that he which hath ſuffered in the fleſh,hath ceaſed from ſin. We muſt then be conformable unto Chriſt in dying unto ſin, and riſing to newneſſe of life.

3. Thirdly, to dye unto ſin is part of our ſanctification, not of our juſtification, which we grant muſt verily and truly be in us.

Revel.7.14.
2 Cor.5.7.

4. Fourthly: firſt, an adopted ſon is a reputed ſon: and therefore ſeeing wee are Gods ſons by adoption in Chriſt, wee are ſo by reputation or imputation. Secondly, it followeth not, our adoption is true, therefore not by imputation: for the righteouſneſſe of Chriſt is as verily ours through imputation by faith, as if it were actually in our ſelves. Thirdly, the argument followeth not from the ſtate of the next life,to our condition now: for then we ſhall ſee Chriſt face to face,we ſhall need no faith, nor imputative juſtice, but ſhall verily and perfectly be made juſt by Chriſt: our roabes ſhall be made white in the bloud of the Lamb: but in this life we walke by faith, and not by ſight, and therefore are juſt onely by the juſtice of faith.

Argum. 3. The Apoſtle ſaith, *According to his mercie he ſaved us by the waſhing of the new birth or regeneration, and the renewing of the Holy Ghoſt, which he ſhed on us abundantly, through Ieſus Chriſt our Saviour, that we being juſtified by his grace, &c. ad Tit.*3.7. To be juſtified then is nothing elſe but to be regenerate and renewed by the Holy Ghoſt: but our regeneration is inherent in us: Ergo, ſo is our juſtification: Bellarm. cap. 13. *argum.*4.

Heb.11.7.
Rom.8.30.

Anſw. 1. The Apoſtle in this place uſeth this word (to be juſtified) in the largeſt ſenſe, as comprehending both the juſtice of Chriſt imputed unto us by Chriſt,as alſo that juſtice and holineſſe which is wrought in us by his ſpirit: for ſeeing the Scripture doth call men juſt both theſe wayes; juſt by the righteouſneſſe or juſtice of faith,as Noe: juſt alſo, though imperfectly by the righteouſneſſe wrought in them, as Lot is called juſt, 2 *Pet.*2.7. not unfitly both theſe kindes of juſtice are comprehended under the word juſtification. Againe,this word the Apoſtle in this ſenſe uſeth in other places, as, Whom he juſtifieth, he glorifieth; where juſtification alſo comprehendeth ſanctification,which goeth before glorification. Likewiſe the Apoſtle calleth the whole worke of our redemption, including alſo our ſalvation, which muſt anſwer in that place to condemnation, the juſtification of life: yet at other times ſpeaking more diſtinctly, he maketh theſe three degrees, being freed from ſin, here is our redemption, Ye have your fruit in holineſſe, this is ſanctification, and the end everlaſting life, here is ſalvation: ſo in this place the Apoſtle confoundeth theſe two words to be ſaved, and juſtified: and ſo hee doth. At other times he diſtinguiſheth betweene them: as, Being juſtified by his bloud, we ſhall be ſaved through him: and in the next verſe alſo he putteth difference betweene theſe two, to be reconciled and ſaved: for ſalvation, to ſpeake properly, is of the end, juſtification is the meane that leadeth to the end. Laſtly, the Apoſtle himſelfe doth diſtinguiſh this generall kinde of juſtification into parts: They which beleeve in God (ſaith he, *verſ.*8.) this is the juſtification by faith, ought to be carefull to ſhew forth good works: this is the juſtice which is in us.

2 The Apoſtle here ſaith, That the Holy Ghoſt is ſhed on us abundantly through Ieſus Chriſt: But faith is the meane and way whereby it is applyed: Wee receive the promiſe of the ſpirit through faith. He nameth alſo here the waſhing of the new birth, which new birth is by beleeving in Chriſt: Whoſoever beleeveth that Ieſus is the Chriſt, is borne of God: So that the Apoſtle neceſſarily underſtandeth in this place juſtification by faith, though hee alſo ſpeake of regeneration and renovation: ſo farre is the Apoſtle from making them all one: though he name them together, becauſe they muſt goe together, and are both neceſſarie towards the attaining of everlaſting life.

Theſe and the like arguments our adverſaries have deviſed for their inherent juſtice: Now let us ſee what they can object againſt the imputation of the juſtice of Chriſt.

57. Error.

Argum. 1. If the juſtice of Chriſt be truly imputed unto us, ſo that thereby wee are verily and truly counted juſt, as if it were our owne proper righteouſneſſe, wee ſhould then bee counted no leſſe juſt and righteous than Chriſt himſelfe, and ſo conſequently be counted Redeemers and Saviours of the world as well as he: *Bellarm. cap.7. argum.*5.

Anſw. Firſt, it followeth not, Chriſts juſtice is verily made ours, as if it were properly our owne: Ergo, we are as juſt as Chriſt: for Chriſts juſtice was originally in him, it is ours but by imputation: his juſtice was truly meritorious, and not of grace, our juſtice by him is of grace: Neither is the whole juſtice that was in Chriſt imputed to us, for hee was not juſt onely, as he was man, but juſt alſo as God. Secondly, we muſt diſtinguiſh betweene juſtice it ſelfe and the communication thereof, betweene the proprietie and poſſeſſion of a thing, and the uſe. A thing may be common in uſe, yet proper in poſſeſſion: ſo Chriſts juſtice is communicated to us, that is, the vertue, power, and efficacie thereof, yet Chriſts perſonall juſtice ſtill remaineth in himſelfe. The two Olive branches did continually emptie themſelves into the golden pipes: The pipes or conduits had no oyle, but from the branches; yet the fountaine of oyle remained in the Olive tree ſtill: It cannot be ſaid now, that the pipes were as full of oyle as the branches. By theſe Olive branches the Prophet underſtandeth Chriſt, from whom wee receive all the oyle of grace which we have, in as ample manner as if this oyle ſprang of our ſelves, yet farre inferiour (for all this) are the pipes to the Olive tree.

Zach.4.12.

Argum. 2. If we by the righteouſneſſe of Chriſt imputed to us, are truly counted juſt before God, and are become the ſonnes of God, by the ſame reaſon Chriſt by the imputation of our ſinnes may be truly counted a ſinner, and ſo alſo the child of the Devill, which were a moſt horrible blaſphemy. But if Chriſt, notwithſtanding the imputation of our ſins, be righteous and juſt ſtill, we alſo, though the righteouſneſſe of Chriſt bee imputed, ſhould remaine unrighteous and unjuſt ſtill, and therefore not thereby juſtified: Bellarm. ibid.

Anſw. 1. That our ſinnes were imputed to Chriſt, and that he tooke them upon himſelfe, and ſuffered for them, being now counted his by imputation, wee have evident teſtimonies out of Scripture to prove it: *The Lord hath laid upon him the iniquitie of us all: He ſhall beare their iniquities: verſ.*11. *He was counted with the tranſgreſſors, and bare the ſin of many, verſ.*12. This alſo was evidently prefigured by the ſcape goat, which was a type and figure of Chriſt: the ſinnes of the people were put upon the head of the goat, and the goat did beare their iniquities into the wildernſſe: And the goat by this imputation of the peoples ſin was counted uncleane, the beaſt yet by nature being uncapable of ſin; inſomuch that hee which carried the goat, was commanded to waſh his cloathes and fleſh with water, as polluted with touching the goat: So S. Paul ſaith, that Chriſt was accurſed, yea made a curſe for us: And that hee was made ſinne for us, which knew no ſinne, not onely a ſacrifice for ſinne, but even ſo ſin for us, that is, by imputation, as we are made his righteouſneſſe: for ſeeing this is the perpetuall rule of Gods juſtice, that the ſame ſoule that ſinneth ſhould dye, how can it ſtand with Gods juſtice, that Chriſt ſhould ſuffer for our ſinnes, if they were not in ſome ſort now annexed unto him? Seeing then the Scripture ſaith, that Chriſt bare our iniquitie, was accurſed, made ſinne for us, counted among ſinners and tranſgreſſors: why ſhould wee doubt to ſpeake, as the Scripture doth, that Chriſt was for us counted a ſinner and a tranſgreſſor, yet in himſelfe remained holy, juſt, and righteous ſtill? So wee in Chriſt are verily reputed righteous, though by nature we are unjuſt and unrighteous.

Ezech.18.20.

2 Now concerning theſe conſequents which Bellarmine inferreth hereupon: as firſt, Si Chriſtus poterit dici verè peccator, tum etiam filius diaboli: If Chriſt may verily be counted or called a ſinner, then alſo the childe or ſonne of the Devill, which is an horrible thing to be thought. We anſwer: not

1 Iohn 3.8. everie ſinner is the childe of the Devill: He that committeth ſin is of the Devill: But Chriſt never committed ſin: In him is no ſin, ibid. verſ.5. ſin is laid upon him onely by imputation: Ergo. Againe, even amongſt men everie one that hath ſin is not of the Devill: for there is no man living but hath ſin: 1 John 1.8. If we ſay we have no ſin, we deceive our ſelves: And yet it is true which the ſame Apoſtle ſaith, 1 Iohn 3.9. Whoſoever is borne of God ſinneth not: for there is great difference betweene theſe two, to commit ſin, and to have ſin, as Auguſtine diſtinguiſheth: Aliud non peccare, aliud non habere peccatum, nam in quo peccatum non regnat, non peccat, &c. It is one thing not to ſin, another not to have ſin: for hee ſinneth not, in whom ſin reigneth not, to obey the deſires therof: in 5. cap. ad Galat. And againe, Quamvis diabolus (ſaith he) ſit princeps omnium peccatorum & author, non tamen filios diaboli faciunt quacunque peccata, --filios autem diaboli infidelitas facit: Although the Devill be the prince and author of all ſins, yet all ſinnes make not the children of the Devill, infidelitie onely maketh a man the ſonne of the Devill, Auguſt. cont. epiſt. Pelag. lib.3. cap.2. He then that committeth ſin, that is, in whom ſin reigneth, or in whom there is infidelitie, is the childe of the Devill; not he which hath ſin, but obeyeth it not, or is a beleever: much leſſe can it bee inferred, that Chriſt is of the Devill, though hee were for us counted among ſinners, becauſe hee neither hath, nor doth ſin, but it was onely imputed unto him; into whoſe heart never any ſparke of infidelitie entred.

Secondly, the Jeſuite inferreth, that if our ſins were imputed to Chriſt, as his righteouſneſſe is to us, then as Chriſt for all the imputation of our ſins, remaineth juſt and holy; ſo we, notwithſtanding the imputation of his righteouſneſſe, ſhould be unholy and unrighteous ſtill.

Anſw.* 1. True it is, that as Chriſt in his owne nature remaineth righteous and juſt, though our ſins were imputed, the imputation of our ſins doth not pollute the pureneſſe of his nature: ſo, if wee ſhould ſet apart the righteouſneſſe of Chriſt, by the imputation whereof we are juſtified; in us by nature there is nothing elſe but ſin and corruption: Rom.7.18. as S. Paul ſaith, I know that in me, that is, in my fleſh dwelleth no good thing. 2 There is nothing the like reaſon, that the imputation of our ſin ſhould leave any ſtaine or blot in the holy nature of Chriſt, as that the imputation of his righteouſneſſe ſhould worke holineſſe in us: whereupon it is, that we are holy and juſt by his righteouſneſſe imputed, but he notwithſtanding the imputation of our ſin, is neither unjuſt nor unholy: firſt, becauſe it is impoſſible that Chriſt ſhould be unjuſt, his holy nature is not capable of ſin, but it is poſſible that man ſhould become righteous: the humane nature is capable of righteouſneſſe, wherein it was once created, and ſhall be againe reſtored unto it in Chriſt. Secondly, ſin is not ſo forcible to defile and deſtroy nature, Rom.5.15. as the grace of God is to preſerve and ſanctifie: as S. Paul reaſoneth: If through the offence of one many be dead, much more the grace of God, and the gift by grace. If grace even in men, whoſe nature is ſubject to ſin and death, be more able to ſave, than ſin is to deſtroy: much leſſe can ſin prevaile more, or ſo much, being but imputed in the nature of Chriſt to pollution, which cannot ſin, as grace and righteouſneſſe doth in us to ſanctification: And thus far of their arguments.

Argum.* 3. If this imputation were neceſſarie, it ſhould be neceſſarie chiefly for this cauſe, for that a man after the commiſſion of his ſin, might be held to be a ſinner ſtill, as though his ſin were covered onely, and not cleane taken away; but our ſins are verily and truly taken away, as the Scripture evi- John 1.19. dently teſtifieth: 1 Iohn 1.7. Behold the Lamb of God that taketh away the ſins of the world: the bloud of Ieſus Chriſt doth cleanſe us from all ſin: Hebr.1.31. by himſelfe purging our ſins: therefore there is no need of ſuch imputation: Bellarm. lib.2. de juſtif. c.7. argum.2.

Contra.* 1. The conſequent is denied, that which is ſuppoſed is not the cauſe of the neceſſitie of imputation: and Bellarmine himſelfe ſhall be judge, who giveth this as a reaſon, why juſtification conſiſteth not onely in remiſſion of ſins, becauſe we are not onely by juſtification freed from Hell, but doe obtaine the reward of Heaven: and are not onely not enemies, but are alſo made Gods friends, cap.6. ſect. deinde: The remiſſion of ſins procureth the one, there muſt be ſomewhat to purchaſe the other, and that is the imputation of Chriſts righteouſneſſe.

2 Our ſins are truly forgiven us, both in reſpect of the guilt and puniſhment: but there remaineth a ſtaine and a blot of ſin ſtill, which yet ſhall not hinder our juſtification in Chriſt.

Argum.* 4. If ſuch imputation of juſtice be requiſite, it is for that our inherent juſtice is imperfect, which conſiſteth in faith, hope and charitie: but this is perfect, as namely, faith may be perfect in this 1 Pet.1.7. life: as S. Peter ſaith, The triall of your faith, which is more precious than gold; Rom.4.19. and S. Paul ſaith, that Abraham was not weake in faith: 1 Iohn 5.4. and S. Iohn ſaith, this is the victorie, which overcommeth the world, even your faith; Bellarm. ibid. argum.3.

Contra.* 1. Our juſtification conſiſteth not at all in hope and charitie, but in faith only as the inſtrument, whereby Chriſt with all his benefits is applied unto us. 2 Faith juſtifieth not as an inherent qualitie and gift in us by any worthineſſe thereof, but as it apprehendeth Chriſts righteouſneſſe, and this imputative juſtice, and juſtification by faith are all one, for by faith in Chriſt is his juſtice imputed unto us: the one then hindreth not the other, as Bellarmine inferreth. 3 Neither is any mans faith perfect in this life: a true faith, though not abſolute and perfect, is accepted of God in Chriſt, and though it be not perfect in it ſelfe, yet it may apply Chriſt, whoſe perfection by faith is made ours: the places given in inſtance prove no abſolute perfection of faith, but either in reſpect of others, as Abrahams faith, or in the regard of the effects which faith worketh, becauſe of the worthineſſe and perfection of Chriſt, whom it apprehendeth.

These

Contra.* 1. Faith, ſaith the Jeſuite, which is reputed for righteouſneſſe, is not the righteouſneſſe of Chriſt but our owne: and therefore it is not all one to ſay, faith is reputed for righteouſneſſe, and righteouſneſſe is imputed.

Anſw.* 1. The Apoſtle here by faith underſtandeth alſo the object apprehended by faith: as more Rom.3.22. plainly in theſe words, The righteouſneſſe of God by the faith of Ieſus Chriſt, Rom.3.22. So that in faith here reputed for righteouſneſſe, we are not to reſpect the worthineſſe of the act of beleeving in it ſelfe, but in reſpect of the object: the faith (ſaith the Apoſtle) of Jeſus Chriſt.

2 Againe, the Jeſuite elſewhere ſaith, that faith, in his meaning, underſtanding ſtill the dignitie of faith in it ſelfe, is but the beginning of righteouſneſſe: but the Apoſtle ſaith, that faith it ſelfe, not naming any thing elſe is righteouſneſſe, that is, more than the beginning.

3 And if faith as it is a worke and act in us doth juſtifie; how can it bee true, which the Apoſtle Rom.4.5,6. ſaith? To him that worketh not, faith is counted for righteouſneſſe, and God imputeth righteouſneſſe without works.

2 We ſay not, that to be reputed juſt, is to be juſt onely in opinion, but verily and indeed: for ſeeing the Apoſtle uſeth the ſame word, ſpeaking of the reputing of the reward of debt, as well as of favour: we ſay that of grace and favour a man is as verily reputed righteous, as if he were righteous indeed by his owne deſerts: for that which is reputed of favour, is verily and indeed, as that which is reputed of debt, though not after the ſame manner.

1 Cor.1.30. Argum.* 2. Chriſt is our wiſdome, righteouſneſſe, ſanctification, and redemption, Ergo, Chriſt only is our righteouſneſſe, whereby we are juſtified.

Anſw. Chriſt is ſaid to be our righteouſneſſe, becauſe he hath ſatisfied God for us, and this ſatisfaction is imparted to us, when we are juſtified in ſuch ſort, that it may be called our ſatisfaction and our righteouſneſſe: for although we are truly juſt, by our inherent juſtice, yet thereby we cannot ſatisfie God for our ſinnes, and the puniſhment thereof: but it is an effect of Chriſts ſatisfaction, which is conferred and applyed to us in our juſtification: And ſo wee may ſafely ſay, that Chriſts righteouſneſſe, and his merits are imputed to us, when they are ſo applyed unto us, as if we our ſelves had ſatisfied: ſo that we confeſſe alſo an inherent juſtice, whereby we are truly juſt: Bellarm. cap.10. reſponſ. ad argum. 1.

Contra.* 1. It is verie abſurd, as the Jeſuite here ſetteth it downe, that we ſhould be juſtified by our inherent juſtice, and yet thereby are not able to ſatisfie for our ſins: that onely hath power to juſtifie Rom.5.24. us, that is able to redeeme us, and ſatisfie for us. We are juſtified freely by his grace, through the redemption that is in Chriſt, Our inherent juſtice is not able to ſatisfie for us by the Jeſuites confeſſion: Ergo, not to juſtifie us. 2 Wee may thus reaſon alſo out of the Jeſuites words: That cannot bee a cauſe of our juſtification, which is an effect thereof: but our inherent juſtice is an effect of the ſatisfaction of Chriſt applyed unto us, which is nothing elſe but our juſtification: Ergo. 3 That righteouſneſſe, whereby being applyed unto us wee as juſt, as if in our owne perſon wee had ſatisfied for our ſins, is that righteouſneſſe whereby we are juſtified: but this doth the righteouſneſſe and merits of Chriſt applyed and imputed to us, as the Jeſuite here acknowledgeth: Ergo. 4 Bellarmine ſpeaketh contradictories, and joyneth together impoſſibilities: hee ſaith, that the juſtice of God is imputed to us in as effectuall manner, as if we had ſatisfied our ſelves; and yet he ſaith beſides, Iuſtitiam inhærentem veram eſſe & abſolutam juſtitiam: That juſtice inherent is a true and abſolute juſtice: How can this be an abſolute juſtice, and that together which is imputed? There cannot be a double abſolute juſtice: for that is abſolute, which is perfect and entire of it ſelfe: but Chriſts juſtice imputed is an abſolute juſtice, which hath ſatisfied for us as fully, as if we our ſelves had done, but the inherent juſtice doth not ſatisfie for us: all this is by the Jeſuite confeſſed: Ergo, it is not an abſolute juſtice. 5 Doth not the Jeſuite now, in joyning the juſtice of Chriſt and our juſtice together, make two formall cauſes of our juſtification? which notwithſtanding he inſtantly denied before, affirming this to be the judgement of the Tridentine Chapter, that wee are not juſtified not onely, but not at all by the juſtice of Chriſt, cap.2. But here he ſaith, that by Chriſts juſtice applyed, we doe ſatisfie the wrath of God: what now is this elſe but by the juſtice of Chriſt truly to be juſtified? For to be juſtified is nothing elſe, but to Rom.5.9,10. be reconciled to God, and ſaved from his wrath. How is it now poſſible that Bellarmine ſhould agree with others, ſeeing he ſo ſhamefully diſagreeth from himſelfe?

2 Cor.5.21. Argum.* 3. S. Paul ſaith, He hath made him to be ſin for us, that knew no ſin, that wee ſhould be made the righteouſneſſe of God in him. Out of this place wee reaſon thus: As Chriſt was made ſin for us, ſo wee are righteous in him: But our ſins were onely imputed to him, they were not actually in him: Ergo, ſo is his righteouſneſſe whereby we are juſtified, onely imputed to us.

Anſw.* 1. Chriſt is ſaid to be made ſin for us, not that our ſins are imputed to him, otherwiſe than for that he ſatisfied for our ſins, and was an offering for our ſin: ſo the juſtice of Chriſt is imputed to us, in reſpect of his ſatisfaction: by the which notwithſtanding we cannot be counted juſt: Bellarm. cap.10. reſp. ad argum.3.

Contra.* 1. If ſinne bee here taken only for the ſuffering for ſinne, becauſe Chriſt bare the puniſhment of our ſinne; then where the Apoſtle ſaith, we are righteouſneſſe in him, we muſt underſtand, not righteouſneſſe it ſelfe, but only the reward of righteouſneſſe: for theſe two members or parts do anſwer one the other: as Chriſt was ſin for us, ſo we are righteouſneſſe in him: but Chriſt only bare the puniſhment

Theſe and ſuch like arguments are produced by Bellarmine, againſt all imputation of Chriſts righteouſneſſe. Now becauſe there is ſprung up another opinion, which findeth entertainment among ſome Proteſtants, who though they deny not all imputation of Chriſts righteouſneſſe, yet their opinion is, that chiefly obedience in part is imputed unto us, namely his paſſive obedience in his death and paſſion, in part it is not, namely his active obedience is not neceſſarie to be imputed: but whatſoever was neceſſarie to our juſtification, was performed onely by his death and paſſion; I will produce ſome of their arguments.

Whether we be not juſtified as well by the active as paſſive obedience of Chriſt.

Argum. 2. Thoſe places of Scripture are urged: *Act.*20.28. *Chriſt hath purchaſed his Church by his bloud: the Sonne of man came to give his life a ranſome for many: his bloud is ſhed for many for remiſſion of ſins: Heb.*10.19. by the bloud of Ieſus wee may be bold to enter into the holy place: Hence is inferred, that not onely remiſſion of ſins, but eternall life is purchaſed for us by the death of Chriſt: Piſcator. annot. in 4. ad Roman. Adde hereunto, that they are pronounced bleſſed, to whom the Lord imputeth not ſin: and to the like effect other places are heaped up, where the whole worke of our redemption is aſcribed to the moſt precious death and paſſion of Chriſt.

Act.20.28.
Matth 10.28.
Matth.26.28.
Rom.4.9.

Anſwer. 1. Theſe places which aſcribe remiſſion of ſins to the death and paſſion of Chriſt, and the effuſion of his bloud upon the Croſſe, have no difficultie at all in them: for we affirme that two things belong to juſtification, the taking away of ſin, which is obtained by faith in Chriſts death, and the enduing of us with perfect righteouſneſſe which is conferred by the imputation of the righteouſneſſe and obedience of Chriſt.

2 Touching the other places: which aſcribe beatitude and the entring into Heaven unto the redemption purchaſed by Chriſts bloud: our anſwer is, 1 That it is the manner of Scripture by one meritorious act of Chriſt, to underſtand all the reſt, becauſe the one is the perfection and conſummation of the other: as our juſtification and ſalvation is ſometime aſcribed to the reſurrection of Chriſt, as where the Apoſtle ſaith: It ſhall be imputed to us for righteouſneſſe, which beleeve in him that raiſed up Ieſus from the dead: ſo alſo in other places: ſometime to the obedience of Chriſt: by the obedience of one ſhall many bee made righteous: yet in all thoſe places muſt the death of Chriſt be alſo included by the ſame reaſon, where mention is made onely of Chriſts death to the fulfilling of our juſtification, his holy life, reſurrection, aſcenſion; and other his vertuous and powerfull works muſt bee comprehended: as in that place, *Heb.*10.19. where our entrance into the holy place is attributed to the bloud of Chriſt, hee ſaith, verſ. 10. by the which will wee are ſanctified: where our ſanctification is aſcribed to Chriſts holy and obedient will, not onely in ſubmitting himſelfe unto death, but in obedience to the whole Law of God: as it is ſaid in the Pſalme, from whence this place is taken; Thy Law is within my heart. 2 By the like figure, called Synecdoche, when one part is taken for the reſt under remiſſion of ſins, the other benefits and effects annexed, and accompanying the ſame are underſtood: as juſtification, ſanctification: for all bleſſedneſſe conſiſteth not ſimply in remiſſion of ſins: ſeeing our Saviour alſo ſaith: bleſſed are they which mourne, bleſſed are the meeke, bleſſed are the pure in heart.

Rom.5.19.
Pſal.41.8.
Matth.5.4.5.8.

Argum. 2. Wee are here borne in hand that there can bee no place found in the Scriptures or Fathers, which affirme Chriſts righteouſneſſe, imputari nobis ad juſtitiam, to be imputed unto us for righteouſneſſe: ſo Bellarmine, lib. 2. de juſtific. c. 7. ſect. primam: the ſame objection is made by others, which deny the imputation of Chriſts active righteouſneſſe and obedience.

Anſwer. It ſhall appeare among other arguments, which ſhall bee even now produced, that the Scriptures and Fathers, doe with full conſent approve this veritie of the imputation of Chriſts righteouſneſſe.

The Proteſtants.

WE acknowledge an inherent juſtice in all faithfull men, wrought in them by the ſpirit of God, being now juſtified by faith in Chriſt: but it is imperfect, not able to juſtifie them before God; it is no other than ſanctification, which is a fruit of juſtification: But that juſtice whereby we are juſt before God not falſly accounted, but made truly juſt, is by the righteouſneſſe of Chriſt onely, which we apprehend by faith. And of this our juſtification by Chriſt there are two parts, the cleere remiſſion of our ſins and puniſhment due thereunto: for in Chriſt wee are freed from the law of ſin and death. The other part is the imputation of the righteouſneſſe of Chriſt: By the juſtifying of one, the benefit abounded toward all men to the juſtification of life: And that this is our righteouſneſſe before God and no other, it remaineth now to be proved by Scripture.

Rom.8.2.

Argum. 1. Abraham beleeved God, and it was counted to him for righteouſneſſe: And, Bleſſed are they whoſe iniquities are forgiven, and whoſe ſins are covered, and to whom the Lord imputeth no ſin, verſ. 7, 8. Ergo, the righteouſneſſe of man conſiſteth not in any actuall inherent juſtice in himſelfe, but in that his ſins are forgiven him, and the righteouſneſſe of Chriſt applyed to him by faith.

Rom.5.18.
Rom.4.2.7.8.

Anſw. 1. We grant that Abraham was reputed righteous by his faith, yet it followeth not, that to have faith reputed or counted for righteouſneſſe, is to have the righteouſneſſe of Chriſt imputed by faith: for faith which is imputed for righteouſneſſe, is not the righteouſneſſe of Chriſt, but our owne righteouſneſſe. And to be reputed for righteous here, ſignifieth not a bare opinion of righteouſneſſe, but ſuch an opinion as the truth of the matter anſwereth: for the Apoſtle uſing the ſame word, ſaith, that to him that worketh, the wages is counted, or reputed not by favour, but by debt, ver. 4. But the wages is not given to him that worketh in opinion, or account only, but verily and in deed, Bellarm. cap. 9.

puniſhment for ſin: Ergo, we obtaine only the reward of righteouſneſſe by him. 2 How could the puniſhment of ſin in the juſtice of God be laid upon Chriſt, if the ſins were not in ſome ſort annexed to the ſufferer: ſeeing it is the perpetuall rule of Gods juſtice, that the ſame ſoule that ſinneth, ſhould die? Ezech. 18. 20. And how can we obtaine the reward of righteouſneſſe, if firſt we be not made righteous? 3 The Scripture alſo evidently affirmeth, that Chriſt bare not only the puniſhment of our ſins, but our ſins alſo: He hath borne our infirmities: He was counted among tranſgreſſours, and bare the ſin of many. What aileth then the Jeſuite ſo boldly to deny, that our ſins were imputed to Chriſt? Auguſtine ſaith, that Chriſt, pro nobis—peccatum ſuſcepit: unde nec erubuit Apoſtolus dicere, peccatum eum feciſſe pro nobis: Chriſt took ſin for us, whereupon the Apoſtle was not aſhamed to ſay, he made him ſin for us, in 3. ad Galat. 4. Whereas he granteth, that the juſtice of Chriſt is imputed, quoad ſatisfactionem, in reſpect of his ſatisfaction, but we are not thereby juſt: firſt, it is one thing for Chriſts ſatisfaction to be imputed unto us, and reputed for ours; another, for Chriſts righteouſneſſe to be made ours: Bellarmine will have the firſt only imputed, we affirme alſo the ſecond by the warrant of the Apoſtles words, that we ſhould be made the righteouſneſſe of God, &c. Secondly, upon the imputation of Chriſts ſatisfaction, muſt of neceſſity alſo follow the imputation of juſtice: the one is an inſeparable and immediate conſequent of the other: as Bellarmine himſelfe confeſſeth, that there can be no remiſſion of ſins, niſi juſtitia infundatur, unleſſe righteouſneſſe be infuſed: as he ſheweth by this familiar ſimilitude: The darkneſſe is not chaſed away, unleſſe light ſucceed, cap. 9. ſect. poteſt: It followeth then that by faith in Chriſt, we have both the imputation of his ſatisfaction for our ſins, and of his righteouſneſſe alſo.

Ezech.18.20.
Iſai.53.4.12.

Anſw. 2. Or thus we may underſtand the Apoſtle: As Chriſt is made ſin for us, that is, being the head, he counteth the ſins of his members as his owne, ſo we are the righteouſneſſe of God in him: that is, the divine juſtice which is in Chriſt our head, is communicated to his members, Bellar. ibid.

Contra. 1. In the matter of juſtification, we have not any thing to doe with the divine juſtice of Chriſt, whereby he is juſt as he is God; for that is not communicable to his members: but the Apoſtle meaneth, the righteouſneſſe of God, that is, of the grace of God through faith: but the divine and eſſentiall righteouſneſſe of God, is neither apprehended, nor applied by faith.

Rom.3.22,24.

2 If our ſins agree unto Chriſt, as he is our head; then they doe more than by imputation, yea properly and verily agree unto him: becauſe there is a reall conjunction and communication betweene the head and the body: he ſaid to Saul, why perſecuteſt thou me? not becauſe our afflictions are imputed to Chriſt, but that the head and members make but one myſticall body: by denying imputation of ſin, they fall into a greater gulſe, even to appropriate ſin unto Chriſt.

Acts 9.

3 The Jeſuite hath made a very good argument for us: Chriſt is the head, we are the members, both make but one body: one and the ſame body, hath one and the ſame forme: Ergo, Chriſt and his Church are both formally juſt by the ſame righteouſneſſe, and that is the righteouſneſſe of Chriſt. The Apoſtle alſo ſaith, that the body of Chriſt, that is, his Church, is the fulneſſe of him that filleth all in all things: our fulneſſe then is the fulneſſe of Chriſt, our righteouſneſſe is our fulneſſe: Ergo, and if Chriſt fill all in all, then Chriſt onely juſtifieth: not Chriſts juſtice in part, and our owne juſtice in part.

Epheſ.1.23.

Anſw. 3. Chriſt was made ſin for us, that is, he tooke upon him the ſimilitude of ſinfull fleſh, and we are righteouſneſſe, that is, doe take the ſimilitude of the juſtice of God. As Chriſt then verily, not imputatively, tooke our fleſh, and was a ſacrifice for ſin; ſo we verily, not imputatively, are partakers of his juſtice: Bellarm. ibid.

Rom.8.3.

Contra. 1. This may ſeeme a ſtrange expoſition, by ſin to underſtand the ſimilitude of ſinfull fleſh: this were to adde trope to trope, and figure to figure: for to take ſin for ſinfull fleſh, is one far fetcht figure, and to take ſinfull fleſh for the ſimilitude of ſinfull fleſh, is another. 2 And in that place the Apoſtle doth directly diſtinguiſh betweene the ſimilitude of ſinfull fleſh, and ſin: how then doth hee here confound them? 3 Againe, the Apoſtle ſaith, he was made ſin that knew no ſin: in both clauſes ſin is to be taken and underſtood alike: if then to be made ſin, be to take fleſh, then not to know ſin, is not to know fleſh, which is to deſtroy Chriſts humanitie. 4 As Chriſt was made ſin, ſo we are made righteouſneſſe: if Chriſt be ſaid here to take our humane nature, then wee alſo may be ſaid to take the divine nature. But I thinke they will not ſay, that the divine nature is ſo appropriated to us, as the humane nature is to Chriſt. Wherefore ſetting apart all ſuch vaine gloſſes and idle ſhifts, which wee ſee doe vaniſh as the miſt, the ſenſe of this place appeareth evidently and plainly to be this: that as our ſins by imputation were annexed to Chriſt in his paſſion, ſo his righteouſneſſe is appropriate to us by faith in our juſtification.

Argum. 4. Through this man is preached unto you forgiveneſſe of ſins, &c. and by him everie one that beleeveth is juſtified: Ergo, our juſtification in the remiſſion of ſins is by the preaching of Chriſt apprehended by faith, and ſo conſequently not inherent in us. Likewiſe the Publican is ſaid to be juſtified, ſaying, God be mercifull to me a ſinner: Our juſtification then is in the forgiveneſſe of ſin, grounded upon Gods mercie, who in his mercie counteth us no ſinners, but as juſt in Chriſt: Ergo, we are not juſtified by any inherent juſtice.

Luke 18.13.

Anſw. Firſt, by preaching of remiſſion of ſins, is not onely underſtood the condonation of the fault, but the ſucceeding alſo of inward juſtice, whereof Chriſt is the efficient cauſe, but yet Chriſts juſtice is not the formall cauſe thereof. Secondly, the Publican prayeth not onely for forgiveneſſe, but for perfect reconciliation, which requireth alſo an infuſion of juſtice, *Bellarm. cap.*12.

1. Contra. Firſt, 1 Wee grant that remiſſion of ſins once obtained in Chriſt, wee are conſequently reputed as juſt in Chriſt, for the remiſſion of ſins, and imputation of Chriſts righteouſneſſe doe alwayes concurre in act: but inherent juſtice cannot ſtand together with remiſſion of ſins: the one being of grace and mercie, the other of worke; but grace and works cannot agree together; if of grace, it is no more of worke. 2 As Chriſt is the efficient cauſe by his ſpirit of our juſtifying faith: ſo is his juſtice the verie formall cauſe of our juſtification: for it is not our owne righteouſneſſe, but the righteouſneſſe of God by the faith of Ieſus Chriſt unto all that beleeve, whereby we are juſtified.

Rom.11.6.
Rom.3.22.

Secondly, 1 The Publican ſueth for perfect reconciliation, which is by Gods mercie in the free forgiveneſſe of our ſins in Chriſt: as the Apoſtle ſaith, Being juſtified by faith, wee are at peace with God, and ſo are perfectly reconciled. 2 But hee ſtandeth not upon any inherent juſtice of his owne; the Phariſie did ſo, and was refuſed; but onely appealeth to Gods mercie.

Rom.5.1.

*Argum.*5. Now in the laſt place we will conclude with that excellently ſaying of the Apoſtle: That I might be found in him, not having mine owne righteouſnes, which is of the law, but that which is through the faith of Chriſt, even the righteouſneſſe, which is of God through faith: S. Paul here denieth his owne righteouſneſſe: but he that hath inherent righteouſnes, hath ſome righteouſnes of his owne. Againe, he commendeth the righteouſneſſe of God through faith: that is, apprehended by faith, not conſiſting in the meritorious act or worthineſſe of faith: for if faith in it ſelfe ſhould be this righteouſneſſe, how can it alſo bee the righteouſneſſe of God? the righteouſneſſe of God is not faith, for Chriſt hath no ſuch faith: it is the righteouſneſſe then of God apprehended by faith, which is our righteouſneſſe before God, not any inherent juſtice in us. Auguſtine ſaith well, Iuſtificatio ex fide impetratur: Juſtification is obtained by faith: *De ſpirit & liter. c.*29. juſtitia noſtra per fidem eſt—nos juſti credendo, in quem non videmus: We are juſt by beleeving in him whom we ſee not. *tract.*4. in epiſtol. Ioan. Iuſtitia noſtra in hac vita potius peccatorum remiſſione conſtat quam perfectione virtutum: Our juſtice in this life conſiſteth rather in the remiſſion of ſins, than perfection of vertue: *lib.*20. *de civitat. Dei, c.*27 Againe, he ſaith, Si dixerimus, quod nihil juſtitia habemus, adverſum Dei dona mentimur: ſi enim juſtitia nihil habemus, nec fidem habemus: ſi autem fidem habemus, jam aliquid habemus juſtitia: If wee ſay, wee have no juſtice at all, we doe bely the good gifts of God; for if we have no juſtice, we have no faith: but if we have faith, then have we ſome juſtice in us, *de verb. Apoſt. ſer.*16. In theſe places Auguſtine acknowledgeth no inherent juſtice, but the juſtice onely of faith. If it ſhall bee anſwered, that even the juſtice of faith is an inherent juſtice, becauſe it juſtifieth by the worthineſſe and merit thereof: Auguſtine ſaith againe, writing upon theſe words of our Saviour, No man commeth unto me, &c. Vt doceret nos, ipſum credere, doni eſſe non meriti, To teach us that to beleeve is of the gift of God, not of merit: *de verbis Apoſt. ſerm.*2. To conclude, he ſaith yet more plainly: Totum reputa, quod juſtus es pietati; quod autem peccator es, tuæ iniquitati aſcribe: Omne crimen, facinus, vel peccatum, noſtra eſt negligentia: Omnis virtus & ſanctitas Dei eſt indulgentia: That thou art juſt, repute it wholly to godlineſſe; that thou art a ſinner, aſcribe it to thine owne iniquitie: everie ſin and offence is of our owne negligence: all holineſſe and vertue in us is of Gods mercie, *in Mat. ſerm.*7. All our juſtice then, whereby wee are juſt, dependeth of our godlineſſe, which is our faith, beleefe, and confidence in God.

Philip.3.9.

Now ſhall follow ſome other arguments taken out of Scripture, to prove the imputation as well of Chriſts active as paſſive obedience.

That not only Chriſts ſatiſfaction for our ſinnes, but his righteouſneſſe and all his merits are imputed to us by faith.

Argum. 1. The Apoſtle ſaith, which was delivered to death for our ſins, and roſe againe for our juſtification: Here remiſſion of ſins and juſtification are made two diſtinct things, though in uſe and fruition never ſevered, and both of them are imputed unto us by faith in Chriſt: and though it bee here anſwered, that we have both theſe by the death of Chriſt, but the perfiting and manifeſtation thereof is referred to Chriſts reſurrection: yet it remaineth ſtill, that there is more in juſtification than remiſſion of ſinnes, for otherwiſe the Apoſtle ſhould commit a tautologie, a verball repetition of the ſame thing: and if the reſurrection of Chriſt muſt concurre to our juſtification, then more is required than his paſſion onely: ſee the more full explication of this place elſewhere.

Hexapl. in Roman. c.4. qu.41.

Argum. 2. Rom.5.19. As by one mans diſobedience many were made ſinners, ſo by the obedience of one ſhall many be made righteous: Here many are directly ſaid to be conſtituted juſt by Chriſts obedience: It will be anſwered, that the paſſive obedience of Chriſt is underſtood, in being obedient unto death.

Rom.5.19.

Contra. Yea, the whole obedience of Chriſt in his life and death, is here inſinuated, as may thus appeare. 1 Chriſts obedience is ſet againſt Adams diſobedience, which was a tranſgreſſion of the whole Law, therefore Chriſts obedience muſt be underſtood to be generall. 2 The Apoſtle ſpeaketh of the gift of righteouſneſſe, *verſ.*17. but donum juſtitiæ, the gift of righteouſneſſe is more than the taking away of ſins. 3 And the reigning of righteouſneſſe is ſet againſt the reigne of ſin: but for ſin not to reigne, and for righteouſneſſe to reigne, though one neceſſarily followeth the other, yet they are in themſelves diverſe and different. 4 The Apoſtle uſeth the word κατασταθήσονται, conſtituentur, ſhall be conſtituted righteous, therefore juſtification is a ſetling or conſtituting of man in the ſtate of righteouſneſſe before God, which is more than the remiſſion of ſins, which ſheweth a privation onely acquitall or riddance of evill and ſin.

Argum. 3. Adde hereunto the place before urged againſt inherent juſtice, that Chriſt is our righteouſneſſe, ſanctification, redemption: which place is thus well interpreted by Maſter Calvine: by juſtice or righteouſneſſe he underſtandeth that both Chriſt doth expiate our ſins by his death, & ejus obedientia nobis in juſtitiam imputatur, and his obedience is imputed to us for righteouſneſſe: for ſeeing the juſtice of faith conſiſteth in the remiſſion of ſins, and our gracious acceptance, utrunque per Chriſtum conſequimur, we obtaine both by Chriſt, &c. Beſide then the remiſſion of ſins, there is the imputation of Chriſts righteouſneſſe, that maketh us accepted with God.

1 Cor.1.30.

Argum. 4. Even reaſon it ſelfe ſheweth, that in juſtification there is a gift of righteouſneſſe, beſide remiſſion of ſins: for in every change and alteration, there are two things to be conſidered, from what we are changed, and into what, which are called, terminus à quo, & terminus ad quem: as when a thing is turned from black to white, there is the privation of blacknes, and the ſucceeding of whiteneſſe: as when in the aire darkneſſe is expelled, and light received: ſo to make a man juſt, there muſt be a remiſſion of ſin, and a conferring of righteouſneſſe: And unto ſalvation belongeth deliverance from hell, and the poſſeſſion of heaven: the one we are freed from by the redemption from our ſins, the other is given us for the acceptation of Chriſts righteouſneſſe. We are not onely freed from condemnation, but we alſo are made heires with God: the offender being abſolved from the ſentence of the Judge, is not upon that honoured and rewarded: ſo that it ſtandeth with the law of naturall reaſon, and courſe of civill juſtice, that two things muſt concurre unto juſtification, and ablation of ſin, and collation of righteouſneſſe.

Argum. 5. To the perfecting of our redemption and ſetting us in poſſeſſion of heaven, it was requiſite, that both the Law ſhould be fulfilled, which man had tranſgreſſed, and the puniſhment of the Law ſatisfied, that man by his tranſgreſſion had deſerved: the one Chriſt did by his death, the other he wrought by his life: and therefore the imputation of both is neceſſarie: ſo S. Paul ſheweth this to be one of the ends for the which Chriſt took upon him our fleſh, that the righteouſneſſe of the law might be fulfilled in us. But it will be here ſaid, that both are not requiſite in Gods juſtice, to keep the Law, and to pay the puniſhment: Gods juſtice is ſatisfied, in that the puniſhment is anſwered for tranſgreſſing the Law. Anſw. True it is, if we expected to receive no more in Chriſt, than we loſt in Adam, which was the loſſe of a terreſtriall Paradiſe: to reſtore us to that we were in Adam, ſatisfaction for the puniſhment had ſufficed; but to bring us to heaven, a new merit by Chriſts perfect obedience was to be procured, by the which heaven is purchaſed.

Rom.8.4.

Argum. 6. If Chriſts actuall obedience be not a part of our juſtification, then ſome of Chriſts works had beene ſuperfluous, and not neceſſarie: for being unſpotted in his birth and conception, if he had preſently ſhed his bloud for us in his infancie, among the reſt of the babes, that Herod for Chriſts cauſe put to death, it had ſufficed for our redemption: But whatſoever Chriſt did, he wrought all for us, as tending to our juſtification: his holy birth and life doe all conferre to that end: as our bleſſed Saviour himſelfe ſaith: for this cauſe was I borne, and for this cauſe came I into the world, that I ſhould beare witneſſe to the truth.

Ioh.18.37.

But it will here be ſaid, that after Chriſt became man, it was requiſite, that he as man, ſhould keep the Law, and as man he was bound thereunto. Anſw. Chriſt muſt not be conſidered, as a particular or private man, working for himſelfe, but in the perſon of a Redeemer, doing all he did for us: he ſaith, indeed, thus it becommeth us to fulfill all righteouſneſſe: but why did it thus become him, as our Redeemer, to finiſh the work of our redemption, for the which he was ſent: as S. Paul directly ſaith: He was made under the Law, to redeeme them which were under the Law: He was to be obedient to the Law, and bound unto it, but for our ſakes, to redeeme us. This matter may be thus reſembled, like as a Prince reſolving to goe himſelfe into captivity, to redeeme his ſubjects that are taken captives, when he commeth to deliver them, will carry himſelfe decently as it becommeth a Prince, yet all this was firſt undertaken for his ſubjects: ſo Chriſt the Prince of glory, comming into the world to redeeme man, being come, walketh in all vertue and holineſſe, as it became the perſon of the Redeemer; yet all this was undertaken for us: ſo that προηγουμένως, originally Chriſt became obedient to the Law for us, ἑπομένως, conſequently, he ſo was obedient in reſpect of his perſon.

Matth.3.15.

Galath.4.4.

Argum. 7. The death and paſſion of Chriſt was available, becauſe of the holineſſe of his perſon: we were redeemed with the precious blood of Chriſt, as of a lambe undefiled: Chriſt could not have redeemed us, if he had not been moſt holy and innocent: Chriſts perſon cannot be ſevered then from his obedience, from whence it taketh the value and force, the one then being imputed unto us, the other muſt alſo. It will be anſwered here, that the holineſſe and obedience of Chriſt was a preparation, and diſpoſition unto his paſſion, but it followeth not, that the one ſhould be imputed as well as the other. Anſw. It followeth neceſſarily: Like as a Prince ſhould accept of an unſpotted lambe for a captive: if he bring one that is blemiſhed, and ſpotted, it will not be accepted: the captive then is delivered, becauſe of the ſpotleſſe lambe, which is offered: the priſoner then is accepted, becauſe of the ſpotleſſe gift: and ſo are we accepted of God, for the undefiled Lambes ſake: it is then his innocencie which maketh his death, and us in his death accepted.

1 Pet.1.19.

Argum. 8. The Papiſts themſelves grant ſo much, juſtitia Chriſti imputatur quoad ſatisfactionem, that Chriſts juſtice is imputed in reſpect of his ſatisfaction: but they utterly refuſe imputative juſtice: ſhall then Proteſtants joyne with Papiſts in overthrowing one of the greateſt points and articles, wherein wherein we diſſent from the Church of Rome, concerning juſtification, by the imputative juſtice of Chriſt. 2. Chron.19.2. We may here ſay, as Iehu the Prophet to Iehoſhaphat, that joyned with Ahab in battell, Wouldeſt thou helpe the wicked, and love them that hate the Lord?

Argum. 9. Now becauſe it is objected, that this doctrine of imputed juſtice hath no teſtimonie from the ancient fathers, I will ſhew how their judgement herein inclined.

ἑνὸς δικαιοσύνη, &c. epiſt. ad Diognet. Iuſtinus Martyr: What other thing could cover our ſins, (than this juſtice) the juſtice of one hath made many unrighteous, juſt, &c.

Orat. de baptiſm. Baſil: Ex redemptione Chriſti eſt libertas à morte,—reconciliatio cum Deo, juſtitiæ donum,—regni cœlorum hæreditas: From the redemption of Chriſt there is freedome from death, reconciliation with God, the gift of righteouſneſſe, the inheritance of the kingdome of heaven, &c. We have then from our Redeemer, not onely freedome from death and ſin, but the gift of righteouſneſſe.

In 20.c. Ioan. tit.1. Cyrillus: De plenitudine filii, quaſi jugi fonte gratiarum donum ſcaturiens, in ſingulas animas defluit, &c. From the fulneſſe of the Son, as a continuall fountaine, the gift of grace ſpringing, doth flow downe into every ſoule that is meet.

In 3. c. Ioann. homil.27. Chryſoſtome: Deus per regenerationis lavacrum ab omnibus peccatis nos abſolvit, & juſtitiam & ſanctificationem largitur: God by the lavacre of regeneration doth abſolve us from all our ſins, and doth give us righteouſneſſe and ſanctification.

In 3. cap. ad Roman. Sedulius: Iuſtitia Dei eſt ſanctificatio per fidem, & remiſſio peccatorum, &c. The righteouſneſſe of God is ſanctification by faith, and remiſſion of ſins, &c. The ſanctification then of our nature, and the remiſſion of our ſins, are two divers things.

In 7. cap. ad Hebreos. Primaſius: Chriſt, naſcendo, moriendo, reſurgendo, aſcendendo pacem attulit mundo: Chriſt by being borne, by dying, riſing againe, aſcending brought peace into the world, &c. All then was not wrought onely by his death.

In 8.c. ad Roman. Theodulus ſaith: Hæc Chriſtus fecit, ut ſcopus legis (hæc enim juſtificatio eſt) impleatur in nobis, &c. Chriſt did theſe things, that the ſcope of the law, that is, juſtification, may be fulfilled in us, &c. Againe, In 13. cap. ad Roman. Quiſquis Chriſtum induerit, habet univerſam virtutem: Whoſoever putteth on Chriſt, hath all vertue, &c. Againe, In 5. cap. ad Roman. The grace and gift of God ſo abounded, ut deleret omnia omnium peccata, nec id tantum effecit, verum ad juſtificationem, id eſt, ad juſtitiam omnes, &c. that it blotted out all mens ſins, and not only that, but it brought them to juſtification, that is, to righteouſneſſe, &c.

In Pſalm.70. Auguſtine: Cum ero juſtus, tua erit juſtitia, quia juſtitia mihi abs te data juſtus ero,— in eum enim credo, qui juſtificat impium, ut deputetur fides mea ad juſtitiam: When I ſhall be juſt, it is thy juſtice, becauſe I am juſt by that juſtice which is given me of thee, for I beleeve in him that juſtifieth the wicked, that my faith may be deputed for righteouſneſſe.

Libr. de Baptiſ. Tertullian: Nec mors noſtra diſſolvi poſſet, niſi Domine paſſione, nec vita reſtitui ſine ſurrectione ipſius: Neither could our death bee diſſolved without Chriſts paſſion, nor our life reſtored without his reſurrection, &c. Here are two benefits purchaſed by Chriſt, the diſſolving of death, and conferring of life.

Libr. 3. de virginib. Ambroſe: Si ſanari vis, medicus eſt; ſi febribus æſtuas, fons eſt; ſi gravaris iniquitate, juſtitia eſt; ſi mortem times, vita eſt; ſi cœlum deſideras, via eſt, &c. If thou wouldeſt be healed, he is thy Phyſician; if thou burneſt with feavers, he is a fountaine to coole thee; if thou art preſſed downe with iniquity, he is thy righteouſneſſe; if thou feareſt death, he is life; if thou deſireſt heaven, he is the way, &c. Here is conferred juſtice, life, the kingdome of heaven, which is more than remiſſion of ſins.

τοῖς πᾶσι γίνεται πάντα, Catecheſ.10. So alſo Cyril: If thou wanteſt a refreſhing and comfort, he is a vineyard; to them that would enter, he is a doore; to them that will offer up their prayers, a Mediator; to them that have ſin, he is a ſheepe to be ſlaine for them: and (he is become all to all:) If Chriſt be all to all, then he is our redemption, our juſtice, righteouſneſſe, and what not?

Serm.2. de Pentecoſt. Bernard bringeth in Chriſt thus ſpeaking: Conceptio mea mundet tuam, vita mea inſtruat tuam, mors mea deſtruat tuam, reſurrectio mea præcedat tuam: Let my conception cleanſe thine, my life inſtruct thine, my death deſtroy thine, my reſurrection goe before thine, &c.

Theſe teſtimonies of the Fathers may ſuffice to ſhew that the doctrine of the Church was then, that not only by the death of Chriſt, we have remiſſion of ſins, but life alſo and righteouſneſſe by beleeving in him.

I will adde hereunto the teſtimony of Ieremie the Greek Patriark, that it may appeare how this doctrine of the imputation of Chriſts active righteouſneſſe is imbraced generally of the Church.

Singulis vitæ ſuæ & converſationis partibus, ſingulos illicitos animi noſtri motus Salvator confutat & perimit, &c. By the ſeverall parts of his life and converſation our Saviour doth confute and deſtroy the ſeverall unlawfull motions of our ſoule, — by his humility our pride, by his dejection our deſire of vaine glory, by his poverty our covetouſneſſe, by his faſting our gluttony and drunkenneſſe, by his chaſtity our incontinencie; by his perſeverance our inconſtancie, by his patience our wrath, &c. Cenſur. Orient. c.2.

Argum. 10 Now I will adjoyne the conſent of the reformed Churches, and of ſome of their beſt writers.

Harm. ſect. 9. pag 243. Confeſſion of Helvetia the latter, chap. 15. God is mercifull to our ſins for Chriſt alone, that ſuffered and roſe againe, and doth not impute them unto us, but he imputeth the juſtice of Chriſt to us for our owne, owne, ſo that wee are not onely cleanſed from ſinne but alſo indued with the righteouſneſſe of Chriſt.

Confeſſion of Bohemia, chap. 6. This righteouſneſſe or juſtification is the remiſſion of ſins, &c. and to be clothed with Chriſts righteouſneſſe and the imputation thereof. Harm.ſect.9. pag 251.

French confeſſion, artic. 13. We doe altogether reſt in the onely obedience of Chriſt, which is imputed unto us, both that all our ſins may be covered, and alſo that we may obtaine grace before God, &c. Ibid.p.258.

Confeſſion of Belgia, artic.22. Chriſt himſelfe is our righteouſneſſe, which imputeth all his merits unto us, faith is the inſtrument, &c. Ibid.p.260.

Confeſſion of Saxonie: Seeing that the minde is raiſed up by this faith, it is certaine, that remiſſion of ſins, reconciliation, imputation of righteouſneſſe is given for the merit of Chriſt alone. Ibid. p.289. loc.of juſtific.

Maſter Calvine ſaith, Chriſtus morte ſua peccata expiavit, & ejus obedientia nobis in juſtitiam imputatur: He directly affirmeth both remiſſion of ſins by Chriſts death, and imputation of his righteouſneſſe. In 1 Cor. 1. 30.

But Maſter Beza more diſtinctly maketh three parts of imputative juſtice: for beſide the eſſentiall juſtice of Chriſt, which is not communicable unto us; there is his habituall juſtice, whereby from his very conception he ſanctified our nature, and his actuall juſtice in his perfect obedience to the Law, and his paſſive obedience in ſuffering the puniſhment: all theſe three are imputed to us by faith. Annot.in 5. ad Rom.v.17. and cap.8.v.1.3.

Argum. 12. We want not here the teſtimony of one of the popiſh ſpeciall champions: Non alia juſtitia niti nos poſſe, quam illa quam imputat nobis abſque operibus noſtris: That we cannot reſt upon any other juſtice, than that which he imputeth unto us without works, &c. Herein alſo conſent the author of Antididag. Colonienſ. as Bellarmine confeſſeth. Vatablus giveth this marginall note in Pſal. 18. verſ. 23. Puritas Chriſti quæ & noſtra facta eſt: This is the purity of Chriſt, which is made ours by faith, &c. Pighius de fid. & juſtific.cont. 2.p.45. Bellarm.lib.2. de juſtific.cap. 1 ſec. in condem.

The ſecond Queſtion, Of the certaintie of juſtification by faith.

The Papiſts.

THe Rhemiſts call it a faithleſſe perſwaſion of ſalvation to be confident of Gods grace and ſalvation, and fides dæmoniorum, non Apoſtolorum, the faith of devils, not of Apoſtles, *annot.*8. 1 Cor. 9. ſect. 9. So the Tridentine Councell, call certitudinem remiſſionis peccatorum vanam, & ab omni pietate remotam fiduciam: The certainty of remiſſion of ſins, a vaine and faithleſſe perſwaſion: And therfore every man, de gratia timere & formidare poteſt, may ſtand in doubt and be afraid whether he be in the ſtate of grace, ſeſſ.6.c.9. This is alſo affirmed by Bellarmine, that a man without ſpeciall revelation, cannot be aſſured by his faith, that his ſins are forgiven him, lib.3. de juſtif.cap.2. 58. Error.

Argum. 1. Prov. 20. 9. Who can ſay, my heart is cleane, I am pure from ſin? which is not ſo to be underſtood, as though no man could have a cleane heart: for our Saviour Chriſt ſaith, Bleſſed are the pure in heart. But the wiſe man thus ſpeaketh, becauſe no man can know whether his heart be cleane: ſic Bellarm.cap.4. Prov.20.9. Matth.5.8.

Anſ. 1. The words are thus to be read according to the Hebrew, Who can ſay I have made my heart cleane? not after the vulgar Latine, Who can ſay my heart is cleane? So that the wiſe man here doth repreſſe the inſolencie of thoſe, which think to be juſtified by their owne ſtrength. And thus anſwereth Catharinus a Papiſt. 2 We ſay, that the meaning of the wiſe man is this, that no man can be cleane from ſin in this life: In many things, we ſin all, *Iam.*3.2. which if the Jeſuite will deny, as indeed he ſeemeth to doe, he contradicteth the holy Apoſtle, and commeth neere to the old Pelagian hereſie, Poſſe hominem eſſe ſine peccato: That a man may be without ſin, yea they added alſo, per gratiam, by grace, *Aug. de nat.& grat.*1.11. 3 To be pure in heart, betokeneth not abſolute pureneſſe in the ſight of God: for ſo neither the Angels nor the heavens are cleane. But to be pure in heart, is as much as to be upright in heart, to be without deceit, as it is expounded, *Pſalm.*24.4. Not to have a double heart, *Pſal.*12.2. As our Saviour ſaid of Nathaniel, this is a true Iſraelite, in whom is no guile. This it is to be pure or undefiled in heart. Auguſtine ſaith, Ingredi ſine macula dicitur, non qui jam perfectus eſt, ſed qui ad perfectionem irreprehenſibiliter currit. He is ſaid to walk without ſpot, not which is already perfect, but who doth walk on forward towards perfection without reprehenſion: Auguſt.cont. Celeſt. de perfect. juſtit. This pureneſſe of heart, a faithfull man may ſee and know in himſelfe, as David ſaith, I have cleanſed my heart in vaine, and waſhed mine hands in innocencie. Iam 3.2. Iob 15.15. Pſal.24.4. Pſal.12.2. Ioh.1.47. Pſal.73.13.

Argum. 2. *Eccleſ.*9.1. No man knoweth whether he be worthy love or hatred: Ergo, a man cannot be certaine of his juſtification, Bellarm.ibid. Eccleſ.9.1.11.

Anſw. The wiſe man meaneth not, that a man cannot any way at all know, whether he be in favour with God: but that it cannot be diſcerned, by the outward chances and accidents of this life: as he ſheweth in the next verſe, that there is the ſame outward condition to the juſt and wicked. Nay it many times fareth better with the wicked, than with the righteous in this life: I ſaw, ſaith he, *under the Sun, that riches are not for men of underſtanding, nor yet bread for the wiſe, nor favour for men of knowledge, verſ.*11.

Bellarmine replieth: The Preacher ſpeaketh onely of the juſt and wiſe, and of their works, verſ. 1. he compareth not the wicked and the righteous together, ibid.

Contra. In the next verſe the wiſe man expoundeth himſelfe, all things fall out alike to all, the ſame condition is to the juſt and to the wicked, &c. as is the good, ſo is the ſinner, he that ſweareth, as he that feareth an oath, verſ. 2. It is evident therefore, that the wiſe man compareth here the righteous and wicked both together: and that he meaneth, that it cannot be diſcerned by the outward events of mans life, which of them is in favour with God. And that this is the meaning, it may appeare by the Eccleſ.3.21,19. like place, Who knoweth whether the ſpirit of man aſcend upward, and the ſpirit of the beaſt deſcend downeward? Not that we are altogether ignorant of the end of mans ſoule: but it cannot be diſcerned by the outward and corporall death, what difference is betweene the ſpirit of man, and of beaſts: for as the one dieth, ſo dieth the other, verſ. 19. So in this place, the wiſe man, ſaying, that no man knoweth hatred, or love; doth not meane, that this is impoſſible to be knowne, but that it cannot by the externall things of this life be diſcerned: *Sie Calvin.lib.3.inſtitut.cap.2.ſect.*38.

Bellarmine anſwereth that Salomon in the third chapter ſpeaketh in the perſon of the unwiſe, and worldly ſenſuall man, who knoweth no difference betweene the ſpirits of men, and bruit beaſts, *Bellarm.cap.*4.

Contra. So alſo doth the Preacher utter many things in this chapter, in the perſon of the Epicure: as that, verſ. 4. better is a living dog, than a dead lion: Goe eat thy bread, and drink thy wine: Eccleſ.9.7,8. At all times let thy garments be white, and let no oyle be wanting upon thine head, verſ. 7, 8. Theſe are the very ſpeeches of carnall and ſenſuall men, that place their whole happineſſe and felicity in this life. Such alſo there were among the Corinthians, that ſaid, Let us eat and drink, for to morrow wee 1 Cor.15.33. ſhall die: concerning whom the Apoſtle ſaith, Evill words corrupt good manners: for any thing then, that the Jeſuite hath yet ſaid, or is able to ſay, the meaning of the Preacher in this place is ſuch as we have ſaid.

1 Cor.4.4. Argum. 3. S. Paul ſaith, I know nothing by my ſelfe, yet am I not thereby juſtified. Though the Apoſtle had the teſtimony of a good conſcience, yet he durſt not aſſure himſelfe, whether he were thereby juſtified, *Rhemiſt.in eum locum. Bellarm.lib.3.de juſtificat.cap.*5.

Rom.8.30. Anſw. Firſt, the Apoſtle ſaith not, I know not my ſelfe to be juſtified, but I am not thereby juſtified: therefore by this example it cannot be gathered, that we have no knowledge of our juſtification. Secondly, this place rather maketh againſt popiſh inherent juſtice: for the Apoſtle ſaith, he is not juſtified by his good conſcience, and ſo conſequently not by any good thing that was in him. Thirdly, Paul was moſt ſure of Gods grace, and of his juſtification through faith, *Rom.*8.30. Therefore it is too great boldneſſe, to ſay, the Apoſtle was not ſure of his juſtification. Fourthly, this then is the Apoſtles meaning, that although he were cleere in conſcience, that he walked moſt painfully in his calling, yet 1 Ioh.3.20. this was not ſufficient to cleere him, and pronounce him moſt juſt before God: for, as S. Iohn ſaith, If our owne heart or conſcience condemne us not, God is greater than our heart, and can eſpie what is amiſſe in us, though we our ſelves ſee it not.

Bellarmine replieth, where the Apoſtle ſaith, Nihil mihi conſcius ſum: I know nothing by my ſelfe. Firſt, either he ſpeaketh of himſelfe in his owne judgement, that he knew no ſin in himſelfe, and then it is not true, that the Apoſtle was not juſt, having no ſin. Secondly, or that hee knew his ſins to be forgiven in Chriſt, and then alſo in their owne opinion, Paul was juſtified, but now he ſaith, I am not thereby juſtified. Thirdly, either they muſt ſay, that he ſpeaketh of the judgement of others, but that cannot be: for he ſpeaketh of his owne judgement, I judge not my ſelfe, it remaineth then, that the Apoſtle ſheweth that notwithſtanding his conſcience that accuſed him not, he was not ſure of juſtification, *Bellarm.c.*5.

Contra. Firſt, the Apoſtle ſpeaketh not in generall of his owne ſtate, as though hee knew no ſin by himſelfe: the contrary is confeſſed by him, that Chriſt came into the world to ſave ſinners, of the 1 Tim.1.15. which, ſaith he, I am chiefe. Secondly, neither doth the Apoſtle ſpeak of himſelfe, as now acquited of his ſins by faith in Chriſt: for ſo every where he confeſſeth he was juſtified by Chriſt. We have be- Galat.2.16,20. leeved in Chriſt, that we might be juſtified, &c. I live by the faith of the Son of God. That I might win Philip.3.8,9. Chriſt, and might be found in him, not having mine owne righteouſneſſe, but that which is through faith, &c. Thirdly, he ſpeaketh then of his outward diſpenſation and Apoſtleſhip, wherein his owne conſcience bare him record, he had beene faithfull, and therefore he paſſed in that behalfe, very little to be judged of them, becauſe I doe not judge my ſelfe: that is, as faulty or negligent in my calling, wherein I am judged of others.

Philip.2.12. Argum. 4. Work your ſalvation with feare and trembling: Ergo, men muſt not be ſecure, neither 2 Pet.1.10. can be ſure of their ſalvation. Againe, Make your election and calling ſure by good works. But this certainty that dependeth of good works, is but conjecturall: and if it doe ariſe from good works, then faith only certifieth us not of our juſtification, *Bellarm.cap.*6.

Anſw. Firſt, the working of our ſalvation with feare, excludeth onely preſumption and careleſſe ſecurity, not faithfull boldneſſe and confidence: As it may appeare in the verſe following, where the Apoſtle giveth a reaſon of this feare: For it is God which worketh, &c. We ought then to finiſh our ſalvation not doubtfully, becauſe God worketh it, and therefore we may be moſt ſure of his promiſe: but yet with feare and reverence, as it becommeth children, for it is the Lord, with whom we have to deale: thus we ſee confidence and the feare of God may very well ſtand together. Tertullian excellently ſheweth, how a reverent feare and care, and a faithfull confidence and ſecurity may ſtand together:

gether: Securi ſimus de noſtra conſcientia, optantes id perſeverare in nobis, non tamen præſumere, nam qui præſumit, minus veretur—timor fundamentum ſalutis, præſumptio impedimentum timoris—qui ſecurus agit non eſt ſollicitus—at qui ſollicitus, is vere poterit eſſe ſecurus: Let us bee ſecure of our conſcience, wiſhing to perſevere, not to preſume: he that preſumeth, feareth not: feare is the foundation of ſalvation, preſumption is an impediment of feare: hee that goeth on ſecure, is not carefull, but hee that is carefull, may very well bee ſecure. Secondly, S. Peter maketh not mention only of good works, but faith, joyne vertue and other ſpirituall graces to your faith, verſ. 5. Good works then only doe not make our vocation ſure, but faith and good works, that is, faith working by love: good works then are a certaine demonſtration of our faith: and by faith we underſtand our vocation, and juſtification. Againe, neither is it an uncertaine demonſtration that is made by works, though it bee not ſo perfect, as that which ſheweth the cauſe: for the heat doth evidently ſhew the fire, and a good tree is certainly knowne by good fruit: Neither did our Saviour give a conjecturall ſigne to know falſe Prophets by, but a ſure and infallible marke, when he ſaid, by their fruits you ſhall know them. Laſtly, we muſt underſtand, that there is a double aſſurance of our vocation, and juſtification: One which is more perfect, by the cauſe ſhewing the effect, and that is the inward teſtimonie of the ſpirit: And this is for thoſe that are wholly ſpirituall. There is another not ſo perfect, by the effects demonſtrating the cauſe, and that is by the works and fruits of the ſpirit, whereof S. Peter ſpeaketh: And this is for thoſe which are not yet able to comprehend the other.

Matth. 7. 20.

Rom. 8. 16.

The Proteſtants.

THat by a lively faith we may be aſſured, that our ſins are forgiven us, and that we be fully juſtified in Chriſt, reconciled to God, and are remaining in the ſtate of grace: we have moſt cleare and evident teſtimonies of Scripture to prove it.

Argum. 1. Rom. 8.15, Yee have received the ſpirit of adoption, whereby we crie, Abba, father; the ſame ſpirit beareth witneſſe with our ſpirit, that we are children of God: But the teſtimonie of the ſpirit is moſt certaine, for the ſpirit cannot be deceived, neither doth deceive any: Ergo, we may be certaine of our adoption, that we are the Sons of God.

Anſw. This teſtimony of the ſpirit, whereby we are moved to crie Abba father, is not knowne unto us by faith, or any other expreſſe meanes, but only by certaine conjectures which may deceive us, as by the inward peace, and taſte of ſome ſweetneſſe in the ſoule: for there bee many that call God their father, as the Jewes, Iohn 8.41. and many ſay in the Lords prayer, Our father, who are not aſſured that they are the Sons of God, Bellarm. reſponſ. ad 6. teſtimon. cap. 9.

Contra. Firſt, to beleeve that God is our father, is of faith: for to beleeve that God is, and that hee is a rewarder, &c. is of faith, Heb. 11.6. but it is more to beleeve that God is our father: how then ſaith the Jeſuite. Non conſtat nobis ex fide divina: It is not knowne unto us by faith, that it is the ſpirit which moveth us to crie Abba father?

Heb. 11.6.

Secondly, and ſay you that the inward peace of conſcience is but a conjecturall & deceitfull meanes; yet S. Iohn ſaith, If our owne heart condemne us not, we have boldneſſe toward God: is that uncertaine and barely conjecturall, which worketh boldneſſe in us? The inward taſte alſo, and ſweetneſſe of the ſpirit, doth the Jeſuite make ſo ſmall account of it? hee that hath a true taſte of the mercie of God, ſeeth God: Taſte and ſee how gracious the Lord is: But he that ſeeth the Son, and beleeveth in him, is ſure to have everlaſting life, Iohn 6.40.

1 Ioh. 3. 21.

Pſal 34. 8.
Iohn 6. 40.

Thirdly, and what if many ſay with their mouth, Abba father, and yet are not ſure they are the children of God? the Apoſtle ſpeaketh not of a crying with the mouth, but a crying in the heart: He hath ſent the ſpirit of his Son into our hearts, which crieth Abba father: for though all utter the ſame voyce, yet is it not the ſame crying: The uncleane ſpirit made the ſame confeſſion outwardly of Chriſt, Mark. 5. 7. acknowledging him to be the Son of God, which Peter did make, Matth. 16. yet were not both one kinde of confeſſion: the beleefe of the heart, which was in Peter, and not in the others, did diſcerne their confeſſion.

Gal. 4. 6.

Now that the ſpirit of God, by his inward teſtimonie, doth not conjecturally but undoubtedly aſſure us, that we are the Sons of God, we ſhew it thus; the ſpirit of adoption expelleth all feare: for the Apoſtle ſaith, you have not received the ſpirit of bondage to feare againe: And where no feare is, there love is perfect, 1 Ioh. 4. 18. And where no feare is, there is no painefulneſſe: therefore neither doubtfulneſſe, nor miſtruſt. Secondly, they to whom the ſpirit of God teſtifieth, that they are ſo the Sonnes of God, that they be alſo heires with Chriſt, doe certainely knowne that they are the ſons of God: for how could they be heires, unleſſe they were ſonnes? But the ſpirit of God doth certifie us that we are heires annexed with Chriſt: And our Saviour ſaith, Hee that beleeveth, is already paſſed from death to life: Ergo, much more are we ſure that we are Sons. Thirdly, hee that hath the ſpirit of the Son, is ſure he is alſo a ſon: Becauſe yee are ſons, he hath ſent the ſpirit of his ſon into your hearts: But hee that hath the ſpirit of adoption, hath the ſpirit of the ſon: Ergo, he is undoubtedly ſure he is a ſon. Many ſuch arguments may bee gathered out of the text it ſelfe: whereby the Jeſuites groſſe and corrupt cavils and gloſſes, may eaſily be avoyded: I wonder they are not aſhamed, thus to obſcure the evident light of Gods truth againſt their owne conſcience.

Rom. 8. 15.
1 Ioh. 4. 18.

Rom. 8. 17.
Iohn 6. 24.

Gal. 4. 6.

Argum. 2. I am certaine, ſaith S. Paul, or I am perſwaded, that neither life, nor death, &c. ſhall ſeparate us from the love of God in Chriſt: The Apoſtle was fully perſwaded of his ſalvation in Chriſt.

Rom. 8. 38.

Anſw. Firſt, the Apoſtle ſpeaketh only in generall, as if he ſhould have ſaid: So many as are elected cannot certainly periſh, Rhemiſt. ibid. Bellarm. cap. 9. reſponſ. ad teſtimon. 7.

Contra. The Apoſtle ſpeaketh not only in generall, but pronounceth particularly of himſelfe, I am
2 Tim. 4. 8. certaine: As more plainely: from hence forth is laid up for me a crowne of righteouſneſſe.

Anſw. Secondly S. Paul might have this perſwaſion, by ſome ſpeciall revelation, Rhem. ibid.

Contra. The ground of the Apoſtles perſwaſion is none other, but that which is common to all the faithfull, even the love of God in Chriſt: And ſo Auguſtine interpreteth this place, writing thus: Iſti
2 Tim. 2. 19. ſignificati ſunt ad Timotheum, &c. Thoſe of whom the Apoſtle ſpeaketh, are ſignified in another place
De corrept. & to Timothie: The foundation of God remaineth ſure, the Lord knoweth who are his. And againe in ano-grat. cap. 7. ther place: when the Apoſtle had ſhewed his own confidence, There is laid up for me a crowne of righte-ouſneſſe, he declareth that this privilege was not proper to him, but common to all the faithfull: And 2 Tim. 4. 8. not to me only, but unto them alſo that love his appearing: Ergo, this aſſurance and confidence is common, though not in the like meaſure, to all faithfull Chriſtians.

Anſw. Thirdly, the word which the Apoſtle uſeth, ſignifieth not a certaine and infallible perſwaſion, but ſuch an one as ariſeth of conjecture and geſſe: As elſe-where he ſaith, I am perſwaded of you
Rom. 15. 14. brethren, that you are full of goodneſſe, &c. And I am perſwaded the ſame faith dwelleth in thee: But the 2 Tim. 1. 5. Apoſtle did not certainely know this, but only by conjecture, Bellarm. ibid.

Contra. Firſt, we grant, that this word πέπεισμαι, doth not alwaies ſignifie an undoubted and infallible knowledge, and perſwaſion: yet I ſee no reaſon why it may not ſo ſignifie in thoſe places alleaged:
1 Cor. 12. 10. for the Apoſtles had the gift of diſcerning of ſpirits, whereof we reade, 1 Cor. 12. 10. though this gift be ceaſed now: by the which gift they might certainly be perſwaded, of the graces that were in the faithfull.

Secondly, howſoever this word may other where be taken, it is certaine that S. Paul ſpeaketh here of a full and perfect perſwaſion and aſſurance that he had of his ſalvation, unleſſe they will ſay that S. Paul ſtood in doubt, or was not ſure of his ſalvation; which is a blaſphemous untruth, ſeeing the Apoſtle doth in ſo many places proteſt and teſtifie his aſſured hope and confidence: As hee doubted not, but after his diſſolution to be with Chriſt, Phil. 1. 23. That there is a crowne of glory laid up for him, 2 Tim. 4. 8. Who hath loved me and given himſelfe for me, Galath. 2. 20. But whom Chriſt loveth, he loveth to the end, Iohn 13. 1.

Thirdly, this word that ſignifieth, to truſt to be ſure, or perſwaded, is no where uſed, where mention is made of heavenly things, but it ſheweth an infallible truſt and confidence: as Epheſ. 3. 12. by whom we have boldneſſe and entrance with confidence, by faith in him: the word here tranſlated confidence, is, πεποίθησις, which is derived from the ſame word, which S. Paul uſeth in this place, Rom. 8. 38. And it betokeneth a full and ſtedfaſt perſwaſion, being joyned with two other very ſignificant and effectuall words, παῤῥησία, boldneſſe, and πίστις, faith.
